What say you to it? will you again unknit
This churlish knot of all-abhorred war?
And move in that obedient orb again
Where you did give a fair and natural light,
And be no more an exhaled meteor,
A prodigy of fear and a portent
Of broached mischief to the unborn times?
Wor. Hear me, my liege.
For my own part, I could be well content
To entertain the lag-end of my life
With quiet hours: for I do protest,
I have not sought the day of this dislike.
[Then?
King. You have not sought it? how comes it
For it Lord Percy thrive not, ere the king
Dismiss his power, he means to visit us,
For he hath heard of our contemperary,
And 'tis but wisdom to make strong against him:
Therefore make haste. I must go write again
To other friends; and so farewell, Sir Michael.
[Exeunt.]

334
That brought you home and boldly did outbear
The dangers of the time. You swore to us,
And you did swear that oath at Doncaster,
That you did purpose nothing 'gainst the state;
Nor claim no further than your new-fall’n right,
The seat of Gaunt, dukedom of Lancaster:
To this we swore our aid. But in short space
It rain’d badly in your face and on your head;
And such a flood of greatness fell on you,
What with our help, what with the absent king,
What with the injuries of a wanton time,
The seeming sufferances that you had borne,
And the contrarious winds that hild the king
So long as his uncle was on the throne.
That all in England did repute him dead:
And from this swarm of fair advantages
You took occasion to be quickly wold
To grieve the general sway into your hand;
Forgot your oath to us at Doncaster;
And being feil by us you used us so
As that ungentle guil, the cuckoo’s bird,
Usest the sparrow; did oppress our nest;
Grew by our feeding to so great a bulk
That even our love durst not come near your sight
For fear of swallowing; but with nimble wing
We were enforced, for safety, to fly
Out of our sight and off our lord’s head;
Whereby we stand opposed by such means
As you yourself have forged against yourself
By unkind usage, dangerous countenance,
And violation of all faith and troth.
Sworn to us in your younger enterprise:
King. These things indeed you have articulat’d,
Proclaim’d at market-crosses, read in churches,
To face the garment of rebellion.
With some fine colour that may please the eye
Of fickle changelings and poor discontented,
Which gape and rub the elbow at the news
Of hungrily innovation;
And never yet did insurrection want
Such water-colours to impart his cause;
Nor moody beggars, starving for a time
Of yellmell havoc and confusion.
Prince. In both your armies there is many a soul
Shall pay full dearly for this encounter.
If once they join in trial. Tell your nephew,
The Prince of Wales doth join with all the world
In praise of Henry Percy: by my hopes,
This present enterprise set off his head,
I do not think a Braver gentleman
Mongst all his valiant, no; but yet young,
More daring or more bold, is now alive.
To grace this latter age with noble deeds.
For my part, I may speak it to my shame,
I have a truant been to chivalry,
And so I hear he doth account me too;
Yet this before my father’s majesty
I am content that he should take the odds
Of his great name and estimation,
And will, to save the blood on either side,
Try fortune with him in a single fight.
[Thee.
King. And, Prince of Wales; so dare we venture
Albeit considerations infinite
Do make against it. No, good Worcester, no,
We love our people well; even those we love
That are misled upon your cousin’s part;
And, will they take the offer of our grace,
Both he and they and you, yea, every man
Shall be my friend again and I’ll be his:
So tell them of this to some my messenger.
What he will do: but if he will not yield,
Rebuke and dread correction wait on us
And they shall do their office. So, be gone;
We will not now be troubled with reply;
We offer fair; take it advisedly.
[Exit Worcester and Vernon.
Prince. It will not be accepted, on my life:
The Douglas and the Hotspur both together
Are confident against the world in arms.
King. Hence, therefore, every leader to his charge;
For, on their answer, will we set on them:
And God befriend us, as our cause is just!
[Exeunt all but the Prince of Wales and Falstaff.
Fal. Hal, if thou see me down in the battle
And play the most active valiant part,
I trust thou wilt take particular care
With me, and do me no wrong.
Prince. Nothing but a colossus can do thee that friendship.
Say thy prayers, and farewelle.
Fal. I would ’t were bed-time, Hal, and all well.
Fal. ’Tis not due yet; I would be loath to pay him
Before this has come to full consumption.
That all in England did repute him dead:

Prince. It will not be accepted, on my life:

SCENE II.—The rebel camp.

Enter Worcester and Vernon.
Wor. O, no, my nephew must not know, Sir
Richard.
The liberal and kind offer of the king.
Ver. ’T were best he did,
Wor. Then are we all undone.
It is not possible, it cannot be.
The king should keep his word in loving us;
He will suspect us still and find a time
To punish this offence in other faults:
Suspicion all our lives shall be stuck full of eyes;
For treason is but trusted like the fox,
Who, ne’er so tame, so cherish’d and lock’d up,
Will have a wild trick of his ancestors.
Look how we can, or sad or merry,
Interpretation will misquote our looks,
And we shall feed like oxen at a stall.
The better cherish’d, still the nearer death.
My nephew’s trespass may be well forgot;
It hath the excuse of youth and heat of blood,
And an adopted name of privilege.
A bare-brain’d Hotspur, govern’d by a spleen;
All his offences live upon my head,
And on his father’s; we did train him on,
And, his corruption being ta’en from us,
We, as the spring of all, shall pay for all.
Therefore, give him counsel, let not Harry know,
In any case, the offer of the king.
Ver. Deliver what you will; I’ll say ‘tis so.
Here comes your cousin.

Enter Hotspur and Douglas.
Hot. My uncle is return’d;
Deliver up my Lord of Westmoreland.
Uncle, what news?
Wor. The king will bid you battle presently.
Dou. Defy him by the Lord of Westmoreland.
Hot. Lord Douglas, go you and tell him so.
Dou. MLongitude, Harry, and I am willing. [Exit.
Wor. There is no seeming mercy in the king.
Hot. Did you beg any? God forbid!
Wor. I told him gently of our grievances,
Of his oath-breaking; which he mended thus,
By now forswearing that he is forsworn;
He calls us rebels, traitors; and will scourge
With naughty arms this hateful name in us.
And I do haunt thee in the battle thus
Because some tell me that thou art a king.

Blunt. They tell thee true.

[ Bought
Doug. The Lord of Stafford dear to-day hath Thy likeness, for instead of thee, King Harry,
This sword hath ended him: so shalt it thee,
Unless thou yield thee as my prisoner.

Blunt. I was not born a yielder, thou proud Scot;
And thou shalt find a king that will revenge
Lord Stafford's death. [They fight. Douglas kills Blunt.

Enter Hotspur.

Hot. O Douglas, hadst thou fought at Holmedon
I never had triumph'd upon a Scot.
[thus,
Doug. All's done, all's won; here breathless lies
Hot. Where? [the king,
Doug. Here.
Hot. This, Douglas? no! I know this face full well:
A gallant knight he was; his name was Blunt;
Scornfully furnish'd like the king himself.
Doug. A fool go with thy soul, whither it goes!
A borrow'd title hast thou bought too dear;
Why didst thou tell me that thou wert a king?
Hot. The king hath many marching in his coats.
Doug. Now, by my sword, I will kill all his coats;
I'll murder off his wardrobe, piece by piece,
Untill I meet the king.

Up, and away!

Our soldiers stand full fairly for the day. [Excunat.

Alarum. Enter Falstaff, solus.

Fal. Though I could 'scape shot free at London,
I fear the shot here; here's no scoring but upon the pate.
Soft! who are you? Sir Walter Blunt; there's honour for you! here's no vanity; I am as hot as molten lead, and as heavy too; God keep head out of me!
I need no more weight than mine own bowels,
I have led my regiment where they are peppered,
there's not three of my hundred and fifty left alive;
and they are for the town's end, to beg during life.
But who comes here?

Enter the Prince.

Prince. What, stand'st thou idle here? lend me thy
Many a nobleman lies stark and stiff [sword;
Under the hoots of vaunting enemies,
Whose deaths are yet unreavenged? I prithee, lend me thy sword.

Fal. O Hal, I prithee, give me leave to breathe awhile.
Turk Gregory never did such deeds in arms
As I have done this day. I have paid Percy, I have made him sure.

Prince. He is, indeed; and living to kill thee. I prithee, lend me thy sword.

Fal. Nay, before God, Hal; if Percy be alive, thou get'st not my sword; but take my pistol, if thou wilt.
Prince. Give it me: what is it in the case?

Fal. Ay, Hal: 'tis hot, 'tis hot; there's that will such a city. [The Prince draws it out, and finds it to be a bottle of sack.

Prince. What, is it a time to jest and daily now?
[He throws the bottle at him. [Exit.

Fal. Well, if Percy be alive, I'll pierce him. If he do come in my way, so; if he do not, if I come in his willingly, let him make a carbouloide of me.
I like not such grining honour as Sir Walter hath;
give me life: which if I can save, so, if not, honour comes unlooked for, and there's an end. [Exit.

SCENE IV. — Another part of the field.

Alarum. Excursions. Enter the King, the Prince,
John of Lancaster, and Earl of Westmorland.

King. I prithee,
Harry, withdraw thyself; thou bless't too much.

[Enter
Lord John of Lancaster, and Earl of Westmorland.

Lan. Not I, my lord, unless I did bleed too.
Prince. I beseech your majesty, make up,
Lest your retirement do amuse your friends.
King. I will do so.

My Lord of Westmoreland, lead him to his tent:
West. Come, my lord, I'll lead you to your tent.

Prince. Lead me, my lord? I do not need your help:
And God forbid a shallow scratch should drive
The Prince of Wales from such a field as this,
Where stains would not likely be brock'd.

And rebels' arms triumph in massacres!
Lan. We breathe too long; come, cousin Westmoreland,
Our duty this way lies; for God's sake, come.

[Exew.]

Enter Douglas.

Doug. Another king! they grow like Hydra's
In the Douglas, fatal to all those heads:
That comb their generous tresses in their colours:
What art thou, That counterfeiter at the person of a king?

King. The king himself; who, Douglas, grieves at
So many of his shadows than hast met
Heart and not the very king. I have two boys
Seek Percy and thyself about the field:
But seeing thou fall'st in fortune so luckily,
I will assay thee: so, defend thyself.

Doug. I fear thou art another counterfeiter;
And yet, in faith, thou be'st one like a king:
But mine I am sure thou art, who'er thou be,
And thus I win thee.

[They fight: the King's life is in danger, re-enter Prince of Wales.]

Prince. Hold up thy head, vide Scot, or thou art
Never to hold it up again! the spirits
Like of villainous Shirley, Stafford, Blunt, are in my arms:
It is the Prince of Wales that threatens thee;
Who never promiseth but he means to pay.

[They fight: Douglas flies.]

Cheerly, my lord: how far we are to give!
Sir Nicholas Gawsey hath for succour sent,
And so hath Clifton: I'll to Clifton straight.

King. Stay, and breathe awhile:
Thou hast redeem'd thy lost opinion,
And shew'd thou makest some tender of my life,
In the most necessary part of the field, to me.

Prince. O God! they did me too much injury
That ever said I hearken'd for your death.
If it were so, I might have left alone
The insulting hand of Douglas over you,
Which would have been as speedy in your end
As all the poisonous potions in the world
And saved the treacherous habour of your son.

[Exit Clifton: I'll to Sir Nicholas Gawsey.]

Enter Hotspur.

Hot. If I mistake not, thou art Harry Monmouth.
Prince. Thou speak'st as if I two had deny my name.
Hot. My name is Harry Percy.

Prince. Why, then I see
A very valiant rebel of the name.
I am the Prince of Wales; and think not, Percy,
To share with me in glory any more:
Two strong hands must form one sphere;
Nor can one England brook a double reign,
Of Harry Percy and the Prince of Wales.

Hot. Nor shall it, Harry; for the hour is come to end the one of us; and would to God
Thy name in arms were now as great as mine!

Prince. I'll make it greater ere I part from thee;
Scene V.—Another part of the field.

The trumpets sound. Enter the King, Prince of Wales, Lord John of Lancaster, Earl of Westmoreland, with Worcester and Vernon prisoners.

King. Thus ever did rebellion find rebuke, Ill-spirited Worcester! did not we send grace, Pardon and terms of love to all of you?

Prince. I did: I saw him dead. [alive? Breathless and bleeding on the ground. Art thou Or is it fantasy that plays upon our eyesight? I prithee, speake: we shall not trust our eyes Without our ears: then art not what thou seem'st.

Fal. No, that's certain: I am not a double man: but if I be not Jack Falstaff, then am I a Jack. There is Percy [throwing the body down]; if your father will do me any honour, so: if not, let him kill the next Percy himself. I look to be either earl or duke, I can assure you. [dead.

Prince. Why, Percy I killed myself and saw thee [Exeunt Prince of Wales and Lancaster.]

Fal. I'll follow, as they say, for reward. 'Ft' that rewards me, God reward him! If I do grow great, I'll grow less; for I'll purge, and leave sack, and live cleanly as a nobleman should do. [Exit.

Prince. This is the strangest tale that ever I heard.

Prince. The noble Scot, Lord Douglas, when he [Exeunt and Vernon, guarded.]

King. With all my heart. [Exeunt.]

Prince. Then, brother John of Lancaster, to you [Exeunt.]

King. This honourable bounty shall belong: go to the Douglas, and deliver him [Exeunt.]

Prince. To meet Northumberland and the pretate Scroop, Who, as we hear, are busily in arms:

Myself and you, son Henry, will towards Wales, To fight with Gloucester and the Earl of March. Rebellion in this land shall lose his sway, Meeting the check of such another day: And since this business so fair is done, Let us not leave till all our own be won. [Exeunt.

[For an Analysis of the Plot of this Play, see Page liw.]

Workworth. Before the castle.

Enter Rumour, painted full of tongues.

Rum. Open your ears; for which of you will stop
The vent of hearing when loud Rumour speaks?
I, from the orient to the drooping west,
Making the wind my post-horse, still unfold
The acts commenced on this ball of earth:
Upon my tongues continual soldiers ride,
The which in every language I pronounce,
Studding the ears of men with false reports.
I speak of peace, while covert enmity
Under the smile of safety wounds the world:
And who but Rumour, who but only I,
Make fearful musters and prepared defence.
While the big year, sown with some other grief,
Is thought with child by the stern tyrant war,
And no such matter? Rumour is a pipe
Blown by surmises, jealousies, conjectures,
And of so easy and so plain a stop
That the blunt monster with uncounted hea ls,
The still-discordant waver ing multitude,

Can play upon it. But what need I thus
My well-known body to anatomize
Among my household? Why is Rumour here?
I run before King Harry's victory;
Who in a bloody field by Shrewsbury
Hath beaten down young Hotspur and his troops,
Quenching the flame of bold rebellion
Even with the rebel's blood. But what mean I
To speak so true at first? my office is
To noise abroad that Harry Monmouth fell
Under the wrath of noble Hotspur's sword,
And that the king before the Douglas' rage
Stoop'd his moistened head as low as death.
This have I rumour'd through the peasant towns
Between that royal field of Shrewsbury
And this worm-eaten hold of ragged stone.
Where Hotspur's father, old Northumberland,
Lies crafty-sick: the posts come firing on,
And not a man of them brings other news
Than they have learn'd of me: from Rumour's tongues.

They bring smooth comforts false, worse than true wrongs.

[Exit.]
SCENE I. — The same.

L. Bard. Who keeps the gate here, ho?

Porter. Where is the earl?

L. Bard. Tell thou the earl that the Lord Bardolph doth attend him here.

Porter. His lordship is walk'd forth to the orchard.

L. Bard. Please it your honour, knock but at the gate, and he himself will answer.

Enter Northumberland.

L. Bard. Here comes the earl.

Edw. Porter. North. What news, Lord Bardolph? Every minute should be the father of some stratagem: how the times are wild; contention, like a horse Full of high feeding, madly hath broke loose And bears down all before him.

L. Bard. Noble earl, I had that certain news from Shrewsbury.

North. Good, an God will! L. Bard. As good as heart can wish: The king is almost wounded to the death; And, in the fortune of my lord your son, Prince Harry slain outright; and both the Blunts Kildy by the hand of Douglas; young Prince John And Westmorland and Stafford died the field; And Harry Monmouth's brawn, the bulk Sir John, Is prisoner to your son: O, such a day, So fought, so follow'd and so fairly won, Came not till now to dignify the times, Since Caesar's fortunes!

North. How is this derived? Saw you the field? came you from Shrewsbury?

L. Bard. I spake with one, my lord, that came from thence, A gentleman well bred and of good name, That freely render'd me these news for true.

North. Here comes my servant Travers, whom I sent On Tuesday last to listen after news.

Enter Travers.

L. Bard. My lord, I over-saw him on the way; And he is furnished with no certainties More than he haply may retail from me.

North. Now, Travers, what good tidings come with you?

Travers. My lord, Sir John Umfreveil turn'd me back With joyful tidings; and, being better housed, Outrove me. After him came spurring hard A gentleman, almost forspent with speed, That stopped by me to breathe his bloodied horse. He ask'd the way to Chester; and of him I did demand what news from Shrewsbury; He told me that rebellion had bad luck And that young Harry Percy's spur was cold. With that, he gave his able horse the head, And bending forward struck his armed heels Against the panting sides of his poor jade Up to the rowel-head, and starting so He seem'd in running to devour the way, Stopping no longer question.

North. Ha! Again: Said he young Harry Percy's spur was cold? Of Hotspur Coldspur? that rebellion Had met ill luck?

L. Bard. My lord, I'll tell you what; If my young lord your son have not the day,
SECOND PART OF KING HENRY IV.  SCENE II.

As men drink potions, that their weapons only
Seem'd on our side; but, for their spirits and souls,
This word, I tell you, brings them up.
As fish are in a pond. But now the bishop
Turns insurrection to religion:
Supposed sincere and holy in his thoughts,
He's followed both with body and with mind;
And doth enliven his rising with the blood
Of other kings by their own ashes set alight:
Derives from heaven his quarrel and his cause;
Tells them he doth bestride a bleeding land,
Gasping for life under great Bolingbroke;
And more and less do flock to follow him.

North. I knew of this before: but, to speak truth,
This is revealed to me, and is wiped from my mind.
Go in with me; and counsel every man
The aptest way for safety and revenge:
Get posts and letters, and make friends with speed:
Never so few, and never yet more need.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—London. A street.

Enter Falstaff, with his Page bearing his sword and buckler.

Fal. Sirrah, you giant, what says the doctor to my water?

Page. He said, sir, the water itself was a good homely water; but, for the party that owed it, he might have more diseases than he knew for.

Fal. Men of all sorts take a pride to gird at me: the brain of this foolish-compounded clay, man, is not able to invent any thing that tends to laughter, more than I invent or is invented on me: I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men. I do here walk before thee like a sow that hath overwhelmed all her litter but one. If the prince put thee into my service for any other reason than to set me off, why then I have no judgment. Thou whoreson mandrake, thou art litter to be worn in my cap than to wait at my heels. I was never manned with an agate till now: but I will insert you neither in gold nor silver, but in vile apparel, and send you back again to your master, for a jewel,—the juvenile, the prince your master, whose chin is not yet fledged. I will sooner have a beard grown in the person of you than he shall get one on his cheek; and yet he will not stick to say his face is a face-royal: God may finish it when he will, 'tis not a hair amiss yet: he may keep it still at a face-royal, for a barber shall never earn sixpence of it out: and yet he'll be crowing as if he had writ nothing, since his father was a bachelor. He must keep his own graces, but 's almost out of mine. I can assure him. What said Master Dumbdellon about the satin for my short cloak and my stopes?

Page. He said, sir, you should procure him better assurance than Bardolph: he would not take his hand and yours; he liked not the security.

Fal. Let him be damned, like the glutton! pray God his tongue be hotter! A whoreson Achitophel! a rascally yea-forswain knife! to bear a gentleman in hand, and then stand upon security! The whoreson smooth-pates do now wear nothing but high shoes, and bunches of hair at their cheeks; and if a man is through with them in honest taking up, then they must stand upon security. I had as lief they would put ratskine in my mouth as offer to stop it with security. I looked a' should have sent me two and twenty yards of satin, as I am a true knight, and one sends not security. Well, let me sleep in security; for he hath the horn of abundance, and the lightness of his wife shines through it: and yet cannot he see, though he have his own lantern to light him. Where's Bardolph?

Act I. Second Part of King Henry IV. Scene II.

Fal. I bought him in Paul's, and he'll buy me a horse in Smithfield; an' I could get me but a wife in the stews, I was married, horded, and wived.

Enter the Lord Chief-Justice and Servant.

Page. Sir, here comes the nobleman that committed the prince for striking him about Bardolph.

Fal. Wait a while; I will not see him.

Ch. Just. What is he that goes there?

Serv. Falstaff, an' I please your lordship.

Ch. Just. He that was in question for the robbery?

Serv. He, my lord: but he hath since done good service at Shrewsbury; and, as I hear, is now going with some charge to the Lord John of Lancaster.

Serv. Ch. Falstaff! Call him back again.

Serv. Sir John Falstaff!

Fal. Boy, tell him I am deaf.

Page. You must speak louder; my master is deaf.

Ch. Just. I am sure he is, to the hearing of anything good. Go, push him by the elbow; I must speak with him.

Serv. Sir John!

Fal. What! a young knave, and begging! Is there not wars? is there not employment? doth not the king lack subjects? doth not the rebels need soldiers? Though it be a shame to be on any side but this, it is worse shame to beg than to be on the worst side. Were it worse than the name of rebellion can tell how to make it.

Serv. You mistake me, sir.

Fal. Why, sir, did I say you were an honest man? setting my knighthood and my soldiership aside, I had laid in my throat, if I had said so.

Serv. I pray you, sir, then set your knighthood and your soldiership aside, and give me leave to tell you, you lie in your throat, if you say I am any other than an honest man.

Fal. I give thee leave to tell me so! I lay aside that which grows to me! If thou gettest any leave of me, hang me; if thou takest leave, thou wilt better be hanged. You hunt counter; hence! avante!

Serv. Sir, my lord would speak with you.

Ch. Just. Sir John Falstaff, a word with you.

Fal. As good as done! God give your lordship good time of day. I am glad to see your lordship abroad! I heard say your lordship was sick; I hope your lordship goes abroad by advice. Your lordship, though not clean past your youth, hath yet some smack of age in you, some relish of the saltiness of time; and I must humbly beseech your lordship to have mercy on your wealth.

Ch. Just. Sir John, I sent for you before your expedition to Shrewsbury.

Fal. An't please your lordship, I hear his majesty is returned with some discomfort from Wales.

Ch. Just. I talk not of his majesty; you would not come when I sent for you.

Fal. And I hear, moreover, his highness is fallen into this same whoreson apoplexy.

Ch. Just. Well, God mend him! I pray you, let me speak with you.

Fal. This apoplexy is, as I take it, a kind of letting in your lordship; a kind of sleeping in the blood, a whoreson tingling.

Ch. Just. What tell you me of it? be it as it is.

Fal. It hath its original from much grief, from study and perturbation of the brain: I have read the cause of his effects in Galen: it is a kind of disease.

Ch. Just. I think you are fallen into the disease; for you hear not what I say to you.

Fal. Very well, my lord, very well: rather, an't please you, it is the disease of not listening, the malady of not marking, that I am troubled with.

Ch. Just. To punish you the heels would amend the attention of your ears; and I care not if I do become your physician.

Fal. I am as poor as Jael, my lord, but not so hardy: my physicians may minister the potion of imprisonment to me in respect of poverty; but how I should be your patient to follow your prescriptions, the wise may make some dram of a scruple, or indeed a scruple itself.

Ch. Just. I sent for you, when there were matters against you by my life, to come speak with me.

Fal. As I was then advised by my learned counsel in the laws of this land-service, I did not come.

Ch. Just. Well, the truth is, Sir John, you live in great infamy.

Fal. He that buckles him in my belt cannot live in ease.

Ch. Just. Your means are very slender, and your waste is great.

Fal. I would it were otherwise; I would my means were greater, and my waist slenderer.

Ch. Just. You have missed the youthful prince.

Fal. The young prince hath missed me; I am the fellow with the great belly, and he the dog.

Ch. Just. Well, I am loath to gaff a new-healed wound: your day's service at Shrewsbury hath a little glibbed over your night's exploit on Gad's-hill: you may thank the unequity for your quiet over-joyning or skimming from him.

Fal. My lord?

Ch. Just. But since all is well, keep it so: wake not a sleeping wolf.

Fal. To wake a wolf is as bad as to smell a fox.

Ch. Just. What! you are as a candle, the better lit burth out.

Fal. A wassail candle, my lord, all tallow: if I did say of wax, my growth would approve the truth.

Ch. Just. There is not a white hair on your face but should have his effect of gravity.

Fal. His effect of gravv, gravv, gravv.

Ch. Just. You follow the young prince up and down, like his ill angel.

Fal. Not so, my lord; your ill angel is light: but I hope he that looks upon me will take me without weighing: and yet, in some respects, I grant, I cannot go: I cannot tell. Virtue is of so little regard in these costermonger times that true valour is tured by a ranker; and, though he be a poor lordship, he hath his quick wit wasted in giving reckonings: all the other gifts appertinent to man, as the malice of this age shapes them, are not worth a gooseberry. You that are old consider not the capacities of us that are young: you do measure the heart of our lives with the bitterness of your galls; and we that are in the vaward of our youth, I must confess, are wags too.

Ch. Just. Do you set down your name in the scroll of youth, that are written down old with all the characters of age? Have you not a moist eye? a dry hand? a yellow cheek? a white beard? a decreasing leg? an increasing belly? Is not your voice broken? your wind short? your chin double? your wit single? and every part about you blasted with antiquity, and will you yet call yourself young? Fire, he, lie, Sir John!

Fal. My lord, I was born about three of the clock in the afternoon, with a white head and something a round belly. For your voice, I have lost it with halloing and singing of anthems. To approve my youth further, I will not; the truth is, I am only old in judgment and understanding: and he that will call age a thousand marks, let him lend me the money, and have at him! For the box of the ear that the prince gave you, he gave it like a rude prince, and you took it like a sensible lord. I have checked him for it, and the young lion repents; marry, not in ashes and sackcloth, but in new silk and old sack.
ACT I.
SECOND PART OF
KING HENRY IV.
SCENE III.

Ch. Just. Well, God send the prince a better companion!
Fal. God send the companion a better prince! I cannot rid my hands of him.
Ch. Just. And I see the bargain th'other day cut with your hand.
Prince Harry: I hear you are going with Lord John of Lancaster against the Archbishop and the Earl of Northumberland.
Fal. Yea; I thank your pretty sweet wit for it.
But look you pray, all you that kiss my lady Peace at home, and that attended the play in a hot day; bid by the Lord, I take but two shirts out with me, and I mean not to sweat extraordinarily: if it be a hot day, and I brandish any thing but a bottle, I would I might never spit white again. There is not a dangerous action can peep out his head but I am thrust upon it: well, I cannot last ever: but it was always yet the trick of our English nation, if they have a good thing, to make it too common. It ye will needs say I am an old man, you should give me rest. I would to God my name were not so terrible to the enemy as it is: I were better to be eaten to death with a rust than to be scour'd to nothing with a splendid motion.
Ch. Just. Well, be honest, be honest; and God bless your expedition!
Fal. Will your lordship lend me a thousand pound to furnish me forth?
Ch. Just. Not a penny, not a penny; you are too impatient to bear crosses. Fare well; commend me to my cousin Westmoreland.
[Exit Chief-Justice and Serjeant.]

Fal. If I do, fillip me with a three-tom-beetle.
A man can no more separate age and covetousness than a can part young limbs and lechery: but the gout galls the one, and the pox pinches the other; and so both the degrees prevent my curses. Boy!
Page. Sir?
Fal. What money is in my purse?
Page. Seven greats and two pence.
Fal. I can get no remedy against this consumption of the purse: borrowing only lingers and lingers it out, but the disease is incurable. Go bear this letter to my Lord of Lancaster; this to the prince; this to the Earl of Westmoreland; and this to old Mistress Ursula, whom I have weekly sworn to marry since I perceived the first white hair on my chin, that our names know where to find me.
[Exit Page.]
A pox of this gout! or, a gout of this pox! for the one or the other plays the rogue with my great toe. "Tis no matter if I do halit: I have the wars for my colour, and my pension shall seem the more reasonable. A good wit will make use of any thing: I will turn diseases to commodity.

SCENE III.—York.
The Archbishop's palace.

Enter the Archbishop, the Lords Hastings, Mowbray, and Bardolph.

Arch. Thus have you heard our cause and known our means;
And, my most noble friends, I pray you all,
Speak plainly your opinions of our hopes;
And first, lord marshal, what say you to it?
Month. I well allow the occasion of our arms;
And gladly would be better satisfied
How in our means we should advance ourselves
To look with forehead bold and big enough
Upon the power and puissance of the king.
Host. Our present masters grow upon the file
To five and twenty thousand men of choice;
And all our strength largely in the hope
Of great Northumberland, whose bosom burns
With an incensed fire of injuries.
[Exit Month.

L. Bard. The question then, Lord Hastings, stand—
Whether our present five and twenty thousand
May hold up head without Northumberland?
Host. With him, we may.
L. Bard. Yea, marry, there's the point:
But if without him we be thought too feeble,
My judgment is, we should not step too far
Till we had business here by sea and land;
For in a theme so bloody-faced as this Conjecture, expectation, and surmise
Of aids incertain should not be admitted.
Arch. 'Tis very true, Lord Bardolph; for indeed
It was young Hotspur's case at Shrewsbury. [Iprue,
L. Bard. It was my lord who bid me myself with Eating the air on promise of supply,
Flattering himself in project of a power
Much smaller than the smallest of his thoughts:
And so, with great imagination
Proper to madness, led his powers to death
And winging hope into execution.
Host. But, by your leave, it never yet did hurt
To lay down likelihoods and forms of hope.
L. Bard. Yes, if this present quality of war,
Indeed the instant action: a cause on foot
Lives so in hope as in an early spring;
And if we see the appearing bud; which to prove fruit,
Hope gives not so much warrant as despair.
That frosts will bite them. When we mean to build,
We first survey the plot, then draw the model;
And when we see the figure of the house,
Then must we rate the cost of the erection;
Which if we find outweighs ability,
What do we do? We lay down the model
In fewer offices, or last desist
To build at all? Much more, in this great work,
Which is almost to pluck a kingdom down
And set another up, should we survey
The plot of situation and the model,
Conjecture upon a sure foundation.
Question surveyors, know our own estate,
How able such a work to undergo,
To weigh against his oppose; or else
We fortify in paper and in figures,
Using the names of men instead of men:
Like one that draws the model of a house
Beyond his power to build it: who, half through,
Gives o'er and leaves his part-created cost
A naked subject to the weeping clouds
And waste for curdish wight's tyranny.
Host. Grant that our hopes, yet likely of fair birth,
Should be still-born, and that our hope possess'd
The utmost man of expectation,
I think we are a body strong enough,
Even as we are, to equal with the king. [thousand?
L. Bard. What, is the king but five and twenty Host. To us no more; may, not so much, Lord Bar-
For his divining forces: which to prove [dolph.
Are in three heads: one power against the French,
And one against Glendower: perforce a third
Must take up us; so is the unform king
In three divided; and his coffers sound
With hollow poverty and emptiness.
[Together
Arch. Then he could draw his several strengths
And come against us in full puissance,
Need not be dreaded.
Host. If he should do so,
He leaves his back unarm'd, the French and Welsh
Baying him at the heels: never fear that. [ahir
L. Bard. Who is it like should lead his forces
Host. The Duke of Lancaster and Westmoreland:
Against the Welsh, himself and Harry Mounmouth:
But who is substituted against the French,
I have no certain notice.
Arch. Let us on,
And publish the occasion of our arms.
The commonwealth is sick of their own choice;
Their over-greedy love hath surfeited:
An habitation giddy and unsure
Hath he that buildeth on the vulgar heart.
O thou fond many, with what loud applause

ACT II.

SECOND PART OF KING HENRY IV. SCENE I.

Didst thou beat heaven with blessing Bolingbroke, Before he was what thou wouldst have him be! And being now trium'd in thine own desires, Thou, beauteous feeder, art so full of him, Thy sword in thy own hand to cut him up. So, so, thou common dog, didst thou disgorge Thy glutton bosom of the royal Richard; And now thou wouldst eat thy dead vomit up, And how'st to find it. What trust is in these times? They that, when Richard lived, would have him die,

Are now become enamour'd on his grave:
Thou, that threw'st dust upon his goodly head When through proud London he came sighing on After the admired heels of Bolingbroke, Creest of thy youth, yield that king again, And take thou this! O thou, thou art not excused! Past and to come seems best: things present worst.

Morb. Shall we go draw our numbers and set on?
Host. We are time's subjects, and time bids he gone.

ACT II.

Enter Hostess, Fang and his Boy with her, and Snare following.

Host. Master Fang, have you entered the action?

Fang. It is entered.

Host. Where's your woman? Is't a lusty yeoman? will a stand to't?

Fang. Sirrah, where's Snare?

Host. O Lord, ay! good Master Snare.
Snare. Here, here.

Host. Fang, we must arrest Sir John Falstaff.

Fang. Ye, good Master Snare; I have entered him and all.

Snare. It may chance cost some of us our lives, for he will stab.

Host. Alas the day! take heed of him; he stabbed me in mine own house, and that most beastly: in good faith, he cares not what mischief he does, if his weapon put out; he will go like any devil; he will spare neither man, woman, nor child.

Fang. If I can close with him, I care not for his thrust.

Host. No, nor I neither: I'll be at your elbow.

Fang. An I but list him once; an a' come but within my vice,—

Host. I am undone by his going: I warrant you, he's an infinitive thing upon my score. Good Master Fang, hold him sure; good Master Snare, let him not escape. A' comes continually to Pincorner—saving your manhoods—to buy a Sunday; and he is indited to dinner to the Lubber's-head in Lubber street, to Master Smooth the silkman: I pray ye, since my exon is entered and my case so openly known to the world, let him be brought in to his answer. A hundred marks is a long one for a poor lone woman to bear: and I have borne, and borne, and borne, and have been furred off, and furred off, from this day to that day, that it is a shame to be thought on. There is no honesty in such dealing; unless a woman should be made an ass and a beast, to bear every knave's wrong. Yonder he comes; and that arrant malmsmen's knife, Bardolph, with him. Do your offices, do your offices; Master Fang and Master Snare, do me, do me, do me your offices.

Enter Falstaff, Page, and Bardolph.

Fal. How now! whose mare's dead? what's the matter?

Fang. Sir John, I arrest you at the suit of Mistress Quickly.

Fal. Away, varlets! Draw, Bardolph: cut me off the villain's head: throw the queen in the channel.

Fal. Keep them off, Bardolph.
ACT II.
SECOND PART OF KING HENRY IV.
SCENE II.

Enter Prince Henry and Poins.

Prince. Before God, I am exceeding weary.

Poins. Is't come to that? I had thought weariness durst not have attached one of so high blood.

Prince. Faith, it doth me; though it discolours the complexion of my greatness to acknowledge it. Dost it not show visibly in me to desire small beer?

Poins. Why, a prince should not be so loosely spoken of as a commoner so weak a composition.

Prince. Belike then my appetite was not princely got: for, by my truth, I do now remember the poor creature, small beer. But, indeed, these humble considerations make me out of love with my greatness. What a disgrace is it to me to remember thy name? To be too familiar? or to know the thy tomorrow? or to take note how many pair of silk stockings thou hast, viz. these, and those that were thy peach-coloured ones! or to bear the inventory of thy shirts, as, one for superfluity, and another for use! But that the tennis-court-keeper knows better than I; for it is a low ebb of linen with thee when thou keepest not racket there; as then hast not done a great while, because the rest of thy low countries have made a shift to cat up thy holland; and God knows, whether those that bawl out the ruins of thy linen shall inherit his kingdom; but the midwives say the children are not in the fault; whereupon the world increases, and kindreds are mightily strengthened.

Poins. How ill it follows, after you have laboured so hard, you should talk so idly! Tell me, how many good young princes would do so, their fathers being so sick as yours at this time is?

Prince. Shall I tell thee one thing, Poins?

Poins. Yes, faith; and let it be an excellent good thing.

Prince. It shall serve among wits of no higher breeding than thine.

Poins. Go to; I stand the push of your one thing that you will tell to that? I had thought weariness durst not have attached one of so high blood.

Prince. Marry, I tell thee, it is not meet that I should be sad, now my father is sick: albeit I could tell to thee, as to one it pleases me, for fault of a better, to call my friend, I could be sad, and sad indeed too.

Poins. Very hard upon such a subject.

Prince. By this hand, thou thinkest me as far in the devil's book as thou and Falstaff for obduracy and persistency: let the end try the man. But I tell thee, my heart bleeds inwardly that my father is so sick; and keeping such vile company as thou art in, in reason taken from me all ostentation of sorrow.

Prince. What wouldst thou think of me, if I should weep?

Poins. I would think thee a most princely hypocrite.

Prince. It would be every man's thought; and thou art a blessed fellow to think as every man thinks; never a man's thought in the world keeps the road-way better than thine: every man would think me an hypocrite indeed. And what accites your most worshipful thought to think so?
ACT II.

SECOND PART OF KING HENRY IV. SCENE III.

Poins. Why, because you have been so lewd and so much engrafted to Falstaff.

Prince. And to thee.

Poins. By this light, I am well spoken on; I can hear to a thousand hairs: the worst that they can say of me is that I am a second brother and that I am a proper fellow of my hands; and those two things, I confess, I cannot help. By the mass, here comes Bardolph.

Enter Bardolph and Page.

Prince. And the boy that I gave Falstaff: a' had him from me Christian; and look, if the fat villain have not transformed him ape.

Bard. God save your grace!

Prince. And yours, most noble Bardolph?

Bard. Come, this villain, you bashful fool, must you be blushing? wherefore blush you now? What a maidenly man-at-arms are you become! Is't such a matter to get a pottle-pot's headmen?

Page. A' calls me e'en now, my lord, through a red lattice, and I could discern no part of his face from the window: last I spied his eyes, and methought he had made two holes in the ale-wife's new petticoat and so peeped through.

Prince. Has the boy profited?

Bard. Away, you whoreson upright ruffian, away!

Prince. Instruct us, boy; what dream, boy?

Bard. Althaea's dream was delivered of a fire-brand; and therefore I call him her dream.

Prince. A crown's worth of good interpretation: there 'tis, boy.

Poins. O, that this good blossom could be kept from cankers! Well, there is suspense to preserve thee.

Bard. An you do not make him hanged among you, the gallows shall have wrong.

Prince. And how doth thy master, Bardolph?

Bard. Well, my lord. He heard of your grace's coming to town: there's a letter for you.

Poins. Delivered with good respect. And how doth the marlinspike, your master?

Bard. In bodily health, sir.

Poins. Marry, the immortal part needs a physician; but that moves not him: though that be sick, it dotes not.

Prince. I do allow this wen to be as familiar with me as my dog; and he holds his place; for look you how he writes.

Poins. [Reads] 'John Falstaff, knight,—every man must know that, as oft as he has occasion to name himself, even like these that are kin to the king; for they never prick their finger but they say, 'There's some of the king's blood spilt.' 'How comes that?' says he, that takes upon him not to conceive. The answer is as ready as a borrower's cap: 'I am the king's poor cousin, sir.'

Prince. Nay, they will be kin to us, or they will fetch it from Japhet. But to the letter:

Poins. [Reads] 'Sir John Falstaff, knight, to the son of the king, nearest his father, Harry Prince of Wales, greetings.' Why, this is a certificate.

Prince. Peace!

Poins. [Reads] 'I will imitate the honourable Romans in brevity: he sure means brevity in breath, short-winded. 'I commend me to thee; I commend thee, and I leave thee. Be not too familiar with Poins; for he misuses thy favours so much, that he swears thou art to marry his sister Nell. Repent at idle time; thou mayest do so, farewell. 'Thine, by yea and no, which is as much as to say, as thou usest him, Jack Falstaff with my familiars, John with my brothers and sisters, and Sir John with all Europe.'

My lord, I'll steep this letter in sack and make him eat it.

Prince. That's to make him eat twenty of his words. But do you use me thus, Ned? must I marry your son?

Poins. God send the wench no worse fortune! But I never said so.

Prince. Well, thus we play the fools with the time, and the spirits of the wise sit in the clouds and mock us. Is your master here in London?

Bard. Ye, my lord.

Prince. Where sups he? doth the old boar feed in the old frank?

Bard. At the old place, my lord, in Eastcheap.

Prince. What company?

Prince. Say, what company with him?

Page. None, my lord, but old Mistress Quickly and Mistress Doll Tearsheet.

Prince. What pagan may that be?

Page. A proper gentlewoman, sir, and a kinswoman of my master's.

Prince. Even such kin as the parish heifers are to the town bull. Shall we steal upon them, Ned, at supper? [you.

Poins. I am your shadow, my lord; I'll follow

Prince. Sirrah, you boy, and Bardolph, no word to your master that I am yet come to town: there's for your tongue.

Bard. I have no tongue, sir.

Page. And for mine, sir, I will govern it.

Prince. Fare you well; go. [Exit Bardolph and Page.] This Doll Tearsheet should be some road.

Poins. I warrant you, as common as the way between Saint Alban's and London.

Prince. How might we see Falstaff bestow himself to-night in his true colours, and not ourselves be seen?

Poins. Put on two leathern jerkins and aprons, and wait upon him at his table as drawers.

Prince. From a God to a bull? a heavy descension! it was Jove's case. From a prince to a prentice! a low transformation! that shall be mine; for in every thing the purpose must weigh with the folly. Follow me, Ned. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. — Warkworth. Before the castle.

Enter Northumberland, Lady Northumberland, and Lady Percy.

North. I pray thee, loving wife, and gentle daughter,
Give even way unto my rough affairs: [ker,
Put not you on the visage of the times
And be like them to Percy troublesome.

Lady X. I have given over, I will speak no more:
Do what you will: your wisdom be your guide.

North. Ahas, sweet wife, my honour is at pawn;
And, but my going, nothing can redeem it. [wars,
Lady P. O yet, for God's sake, go not to these
Time was, father, that you broke your word,
When you were more endear'd to it than now;
When your own Percy, when my heart's dear Harry,
Threw many a northward look to see his father
Bring up his powers; but he did long in vain.
Who then persuaded you to stay at home?
There were two honours lost, yours and your son's.
For yours, the God of heaven brighten it!
For his, it stuck upon him as the sun
In the grey vault of heaven, and by his light
Did all the chivalry of England move
To do bounties; but he was indeed the glass
Wherein the noble youth did dress themselves:
He had no legs that practised not his gait;
And speaking thick, which nature made him blemish,
Became the accents of the valiant;
For those that could speak low and tardily
Would turn their own perfection to abuse,
To seem like him: so that in speech, in gait,
In diet, in affections of delight,
In military rules, honours of blood,
He was the mark and glass, copy and book,
That fashion’d others. And him, O wondrous him!
O miracle of men! him did you leave,
Second to none, unseconed by you,
To look upon the hideous god of war
In disadvantage; to abide a field
Where nothing but the sound of Hotspur’s name
Did seem defensible: so you left him.
Never, O never, do you bless his wrong
To hold your honour more precise and nice
With others than with him! let them alone:
The marshal and the archbishop are strong:
Had my sweet Harry had but half their numbers,
To-day might I, hanging on Hotspur’s neck,
Have talk’d of Monmouth’s grave.

North. Beshrew your heart,
Fair daughter, you do draw my spirits from me
With new lamenting ancient oversights.
But I must go and meet with danger there,
Or it will seek me in another place
And find me worse provided.

Lady N. O, fly to Scotland,
Till that the nobles and the armed commons
Have of their puissance made a little taste. [Exit.

Lady P. If they get ground and vantage of the Then join you with them, like a rib of steel,
To make strength stronger; but, for all our loves,
First let them try themselves. So did your son;
He was so suffer’d: so came I a widow:
And never shall hate length of life enough
To ruin upon remembrance with mine eyes.
That it may grow and sprout as high as heaven,
For recollection to my noble husband.

Mind North. Extraordinarily as heart would desire:
And with my as the tide swell’d up unto his height,
That makes a still-stand, running neither way:
Fair would I go to meet the archbishop,
But many thousand reasons hold me back.
I will resolve for Scotland: there am I,
Till time and vantage crave my company. [Exit.

SCENE IV. — London. The Boar’s-Head Tavern in Eastcheap.

Enter two Drawers.

First Drawe. What the devil hast thou brought there? apple-johns? thou knowest Sir John cannot endure an apple-john.

Sec. Draw. Mass, thou sayest true. The prince once set a dish of apple-johns before him, and told him there were five more Sir John, and, putting off his hat, said, I will now take my leave of these six dry, round, old, withered knights. It angered him to the heart: but he hath forgot that.

First Drawe. Why, then, cover, and set them down;
and see if thou canst find out Sneak’s noise; Miss,
Tresssheet would fain hear some music.
Dispatch: the room where they supped is too hot:
they’ll come in straight.

Sec. Draw. Sirrah, here will be the prince and Master Poins anon: and they will put on two of our jerkins and aprons; and Sir John must not know of it: Bardolph hath brought word.

First Drawe. By the mass, here will be old Uis:
it will be an excellent stroke, and,
Sec. Draw. I’ll see if I can find out Sneak. [Exit.

Enter Hostess and Doll Tresssheet.

Host. I faith, sweetheart, methinks now you are in your excellent good temperaleness: your pulsegale beats as excellent: and if you beat so hard, and your colour, I warrant you, is as red as any rose, in good truth, la! But, I faith, you have drunk too much canaries; and that’s a marvellous searching wine, and it perfumes the blood ere one can say

Dol. Better than I was; hem!

Host. Why, that’s well said: a good heart’s worth gold. Lo, here comes Sir John.

Enter Falstaff.

Fal. [Sing.] When Arthur first in court— Empty the Jordan. [Exit First Drawer.]-[Sing.] And was a worthy king. How now, Mistress Doll?

Host. Sick of a calm; yea, good faith.

Fal. So is all her sect; an they be once in a calm,
they are sick.

Dol. You maddly rascal, is that all the comfort you give me?

Fal. You make fat rascals, Mistress Doll.

Dol. I make them! gluttony and diseases make them; I make them not.

Fal. If the cook help to make the gluttony, you help to make the diseases, Doll: we catch of you, Doll, we catch of you; grant that, my poor virtue,
grant that.

Dol. Yea, joy, our chains and our jewels.

Fal. ‘You brooches, Sir,’ for to serve bravely is to come halting off, you know: to come off the beach with his pike bent bravely, and to surgery bravely; to venture upon the charged chambers bravely.—

Dol. Hang yourself, you maddly conger, hang yourself.

Host. By my troth, this is the old fashion; you two never meet but you fall to some discord; you are both, I see, as rheumatic as two dry toast:
you cannot one bear with another’s confirmities. What the good-year! one must bear, and that must be you: you are the weaker vessel, as they say home; Sir, you would bless me, if, after this, you would have the merest hulk better studded in the hold. Come, I’ll be friends with thee, Jack: thou art going to the wars; and whether I shall ever see thee again or no, there is nobody cares.

Re-enter First Drawer.

First Drawe. Sir, Ancient Pistol’s below, and would speak with you.

Fal. Hang him, swaggering rascal! let him not come thither: it is the tout-mouth’d rogue in England.

Host. If he swagger, let him not come here: no,
by my faith; I must live among my neighbours:
I’ll no swaggerers: I am in good name and fame with the very best; shut the door; there comes no swaggerers here; I have not lived all this while, to have swaggering now; shut the door, I pray you.

Fal. Dost thou hear, hostess?

Host. Pray ye, pacify yourself, Sir John: there comes no swaggerers here.

Fal. Dost thou hear? it is mine ancient.

Host. Tilly-fally, Sir John, we’ll tell you: your ancient swaggerer comes not in my doors. I was before Master Tisick, the deputy, t’other day: and, as he said to me, ’t was no longer ago than Wednesday last, ’I good faith, neighbour Quickly,’ says he; Master Dunbe, our minister, was by them:
‘neighbour Quickly,’ says he, ‘receive those that are civil: for,’ said he, ‘you are in an ill name: ’ now a’ said so, I can tell whereupon; ‘for,’ says he,
you are an honest woman, and well thought on: therefore take heed what guests you receive:
deceive,’ says he, ‘no swaggering companions.’
There comes none, you would bless me to hear what he said: no, I’ll no swaggerers.

Fal. He’s no swagguer, hostess; a taunt cheater, Excit First Drawer.

Host. Cather, call yon him? I will bar no honest church, nor no cather; I tell you, do not have swaggering, by my troth; I am the worse, when one says swagger: feel, masters, how I shake; look you, I warrant you.

Dol. So you do, hostess.

Host. Do I? yea, in very truth, do I, an't were an aspen leaf: I cannot abide swaggerers.

Enter Pistol, Bardolph, and Page.

Pist. God save you, Sir John!

Fal. Welcome, Ancient Pistol. Here, Pistol, I charge you with a cup of sack: do you discharge upon mine hostess.

Pist. I will discharge upon her, Sir John, with two bullets.

Fal. She is pistol-proof, si: you shall hardly offend her.

Host. Come, I'll drink no poors nor no bullets: I think no more then will do me good, for no man's pleasure, I.

Pist. Then to you, Mistress Dorothy; I will charge you.

Dol. Charge me! I shall seom, scravy companion. What poor, base, rascally, cheating, lack-linen mate thou, thou mouldy rogue, away! I am meat for your master.

Pist. I know you, Mistress Dorothy.

Dol. Away, you cut-purse rascal! you filthy bung, away! by this wine, I'll thrust my knife in your mouldy chaps, and you play the swete cuttle with me. Away, you Bottom-rascal! you basket-hilt stick-swinging vagabond! when I pr'y you, sir? God's light, with two points on your shoulde? much!

Pist. God let me not live, but I will murder your ruff for this.

Fal. No more, Pistol: I would not have you go off here: discharge yourself of our company, Pistol.

Host. No, good Captain Pistol; not here, sweet captain.

Dol. Captain! thou abominable damned cather, art thou not ashamed to be called captain? An captains were of my mind, they would truncheon you out, for taking their names upon you before you have earned them. You a captain! you shaffe, for what? for tearning a poor whores ruff in a bawdy-house? He a captain! hang him, rogue! he lives upon mouldy stewed prunes and dried cakes. A captain! God's light, these villains will make the word as odious as the word 'occupy,' which was an excellent good word before it was all sorted: therefore captains had need look to 't.

Bard. Pray thee, go down, good ancient.

Fal. Harke thee listen, Mistress Doll.

Pist. Not 1. I tell thee what, Corporal Bardolph, I could hear her: I'll be revenged of her.

Pist. I'll see her damned first: to Plato's damned lake, by this hand, to the infernal deep, with Erebos and tortures vile also. Hold hook and line, say I. Down, down, dogs! down, f.aiors! Have we not tinned here?

Host. Good Captain Poesel, be quiet: 'tis very late, i' faith: I beseech you now, aggravate your choicer.

Pist. These be good humours, indeed! Shall pack-And hollow prepper'd jades of Asia, horses Which cannot go but thirty mile a day, Compare with Cæsars, and with Cannibals, And Trojan Greeks? nay, rather damn them with King Cæsars: and let the welkin roar. Shall we fall foul for toys?

Host. By my troth, captain, these are very bitter words.

Bard. Be gone, good ancient: this will grow to a brawl.

Pist. They mean like dogs! give crowns like pins! Have we not tinned here?

Host. O' my word, captain, there's none such here. What the good-year! do you think I would deny her? For God's sake, be quiet.

Pist. Then feed, and be fat, my fair Calippolis. Come, give us some sack. If fortune me torment, I spanto me contento. Fear we broadsides? no, let the fiend give fire: Give me some sack: and, sweetness, lie thou there.

Come we to full points here; and are etecters

Fal. Pistol, I would be quiet. Nothing?

Pist. Sweet knight, I kiss thy neft: what! we have seen the seven stars.

Dol. For God's sake, thrust him down stairs: I cannot endure such a fustian rascal.

Pist. Therm him down stairs! know we not Galloway mags?

Fal. Quit him down, Bardolph, like a shovegroat shining: nay, an a' do nothing but speak nothing, a' shall be nothing here.

Bard. Come, get you down stairs.

Pist. What shall we have incision? shall we imbume?

Then doth I rack me asleape, and abide my olden days! Why, then, let grievous, ghastly, gaping wounds Untwine the Sisters Three! Come, Atropos, I say!

Host. Here's goodly stuff toward!

Fal. Give me my rapier, boy.

Dol. I pray thee, Jack, I pray thee, do not draw.

Fal. Get you down stairs.

Host. Here's a goodly tumult! I'll forswear keeping house, afore I'll be in these tiritis and frights. So, murder, I warrant now. Ahs, alas! put up your naked weapons, put up your naked weapons.

Dol. I pray thee, Jack, be quiet; the rascal's gone, Ah, you whoreon little villan villain, you!

Host. Are you not hurt i' the groin? methought a' made a shred thrust at your belly.

Re-enter Bardolph.

Fal. Have you turned him out o' doors?

Bard. Yea, sir. The rascal's drunk: you have hurt him, sir, i' the shoulder.

Fal. A rascal! to brave me!

Dol. Ah, you sweet little rogue, you! Alas, poor ape, how thou sweetest! come, let me wipe thy face; come on, you whorish chaps! all, rogue! i' faith, I love thee: thou art as valorous as Hector of Troy, worthy five of Agamemnon, and ten times better than the Nine Worthies; ah, villain!

Fal. A rascally slave! I will toss the rogue in a blanket.

Dol. Do, an thou darset for thy heart: an thou dost, I'll canvass thee between a pair of sheeets.

Enter Music.

Fal. Let them play. Play, sirs. Sit on my knee, Doll. A rascal braggling slave! the rogue fled from me like quicksilver.

Dol. I faith, and thou followest him like a church. Thou whoreson little tidy Bartholomew four-pig, when wilt thou leave fighting o' days and joining o' nights, and begin to patch up thine old body for heaven?

Enter, behind, Prince Henry and Poids, disguised.

Fal. Peace, good Doll! do not speak like a death's head; do not bid me remember mine end.
Dol. Sirrah, what humour's the prince of?

Fal. A good shallow young fellow; a' would have made a good pantler, a' would ha' chipped bread.

Dol. By heaven, sir, he speaks a good wit.

Fal. He a good wit? hang him, laboon! his wit's as thick as Tewksbury mustard; there's no more conceit in him than is in a maulet.

Why does the prince love him so, then?

Because their legs are both of a bigness, and a' will quit stools well, and eats conger and fennel, and drinks off candles' ends for flag-drags, and rides the wild-mare with the boys, and jumps upon joined-stools, and swears with a good grace, and wears his boots very smooth, like unto the sign of the leg, and breeds no bate with telling of discreet stories; and such other gambol faculties a' has, that show a weak mind and an able body, for which the prince admits him; for the prince himself is such another; the weight of a hair will turn the scales between their avoirdupois.

Prince. Would not this have of a wheel have his ears cut off?

Dol. Let's beat him before his whore.

Prince. Look, whether the withered elder hath not his poll clawed like a parrot.

Poius. Is it not strange that desire should so many years outlive performance?

Fal. Kiss me, Doll.

Prince. Saturn and Venus this year in conjunction! what says the almanac to that?

Poius. And, look, whether the fiery Trigon, his man, be not hising to his master's old tables, his note-book, his counsel-keeper.

Thou dost give me fluttering busses.

By my troth, I kiss thee with a most constant heart.

I am old, I am old.

I love thee better than I love e'er a scurvy young boy of them all.

What stuff wilt have a kittle of? I shall receive money o' Thursday; shall have a cap to-morrow. A merry song, come; it grows late; we'll to bed. Thou'lt forget me when I am gone.

By my troth, thou'lt set me a-weeping, an thou sayest so; prove that ever I dress myself handsome till thy return; well, hearken at the end.

Some sack, Francis.

Prince. Anon, anon, sir. [Coming forward]

Fal. Had a bastard son of the king's? And art not thou Poius his brother?

Prince. Why, thou gibes of sinful continents, while life doth thou lead?

A better than thou: I am a gentleman; thou art a drawer.

Very true, sir; and I come to draw you out by the ears.

Host. O, the Lord preserve thy good grace! by my troth, welcome to London. Now, the Lord bless that sweet face of thine! O Jesu, are you come from Wales?

Fal. Thou whoreson mad compound of majesty, by this light flesh and corrupt blood, thou art well. How, thou fat fool! I scorn you. [Come.

Poius. My lord, he will drive you out of your reveries; he will turn all to a merriment, if you take not the heat.

Prince. You whoreson candle-mine, you, how vilely did you speak of me even now before this honest, virtuous, civil gentlewoman!

Host. God's blessing of your good heart! and so he shall by Poius.

Didst thou hear me?

Yea, and you knew me, as you did when you ran away by God's-hill: you knew I was at your back, and spoke it on purpose to try my patience.
ACT III.

SECOND PART OF KING HENRY IV. SCENE I.

Dol. I cannot speak; if my heart be not ready to burst,—well, sweet Jack, have a care of thyself.

Fad. Farewell, farewell. [Exit Falstaff and Bardolph.]

Host. Well, fare thee well: I have known thee these twenty nine years, come peacod-time; but an honest and true-hearted man,—well, fare thee well.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Westminster. The palace.

Enter the King in his night gown, with a Page.

King. Go call the Earl of Surrey and of Warwick:
But, ere they come, bid them o'er-read these letters, and well consider of them: make good speed.

How many thousand of my poorest subjects
Are at this hour asleep! O sleep, O gentle sleep,
Nature's soft nurse, how have I offended thee,
That thou no more wilt weigh my eyelids down
And steep my senses in forgetfulness?
Why rather, sleep, liest thou in smoky cribs,
Upon uneasy pallets stretching thee
And hasten'st with buzzing nightgirdles to thy slumber, That in the fearful chambers of the great,
Under the canopies of costly state,
And hull'd with sound of sweetest melody?
O thou dull god, why liest thou with the vile
In louthsome beds, and leavest the kingly coach
A watch-case or a common Tarun-bell?
Will thou upon the high and giddy mast
Seal up the ship-boy's eyes, and rock his brains
In cradle of the rude impertinents surge
And in the visitation of the winds,
Who take the ruffian billows by the top,
Curling their monstrous heads and hanging them
With deafening clamours in the slippery clouds,
That, with the hurly, death itself awakes?
Canst thou, O partial sleep, give thy repose
To the wet sea-boy in an hour so rude,
And in the calmest and most silent night,
With all appliances and means to boot,
Deign it to a king?—Then happy low, lie down!
Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown.

Enter Warwick and Surrey.

War. Many good morrows to your majesty!

King. Is it good morrow, lords?—War. 'Tis one o'clock, and past, lords.

King. Why, then, good morrow to you all, my lords:
Have you read o'er the letters that I sent you?

War. We have, my liege.

King. Then you perceive the body of our kingdom
How foul it is: what rank diseases grow,
And with what danger, near the heart of it.

War. It is but as a body yet distemper'd:
Which to his former strength may be restored
With good advice and little medicine:
My Lord Northumberland will soon be cold.

King. O God! that one might read the book of fate,
And see the revolution of the times,
Make mountains level, and the continent,
Weary of solid firmness, melt itself
Into the sea: and, other things, to see
The beathy girdle of the ocean
Too wide for Neptune's ships: how chances mock,
And changes fill the cup of alteration
With divers liquors! O, if this were seen,
The happiest youth, viewing his progress through
What perils past, what crosses to ensue,
Would shut the book, and sit him down and die.

This is not ten years gone
Since Richard and Northumberland, great friends,

Did feast together, and in two years after
Were they at wars: it is but eight years since
This Percy was the man nearest my soul,
Who like a brother toil'd in my affairs
And laid his love and life under my foot,
Yea, for my sake, even to the eyes of Richard Gave him defiance. But which of you was—but
You, cousin Nevil, as I may remember,—
When Richard, with his eye brimful of tears,

[To Warwick]

Did speak these words, now proved a prophecy?
'Northumberland, thou ladder by the which
My cousin Bolingbroke ascends my throne:'

Though then, O God! I knew, I had no such intent,
But that necessity so bow'd the state
That I and greatness were compell'd to kiss:
'The time shall come,' thus did he follow it,
'The time will come, that foul sin, gathering head,
Shall break into corruption:' so went on
For telling this same time's condition
And the division of our unity.

War. There is a history in all men's lives,
Figuring the nature of the times deceased;
The which observed, a man may prophesy,
With a near aim, of the main chance of things
As yet not come to life, which in their seeds
And weak beginnings lie untreasured.
Such things become the hatch and brood of time;
And by the necessary form of this
King Richard might create a perfect guess
That great Northumberland, then false to him,
Would of that seed grow to a greater falseness;
Which should not find a ground to root upon,
Unless on you.

King. Are these things then necessities?
Then let us meet them like necessities:
And that same word even now cries out on us:
They say the bishop and Northumberland
Are fifty thousand strong.

War. It cannot be, my lord;
Rumour doth double, like the voice and echo,
The numbers of the fear'd. Please it your grace
To go to bed. Upon my soul, my lord,
The powers that you already have sent forth
Shall bring this prize in very easily.
To comfort you the more, I have received
A certain instance that Glendower is dead.
Your majesty hath been this fortnight ill,
And these unseason'd hours performe must add
Unto your sickness.

King. I will take your counsel:
And were these inward wars once out of hand,
We would, dear lords, unto the Holy Land. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Gloucestershire. Before Justice Shallow's house.

Enter Shallow and Silence, meeting: Mouldy, Shadow, War,Feeble, Bulcalf, a Servant or two with them.

Shal. Come on, come on, come on, sir; give me your hand, sir, give me your hand, sir; an early stirrer, by the rood! And how doth my good cousin Silence?
Act III.

Second Part of King Henry IV. Scene II.

Sil. Good morrow, good cousin Shallow.

Shal. And how doth my cousin, your belfellow? and your mostest daughter and mine, my goddaughter Ellen?

Sil. Alas, a black osell, cousin Shallow!

Shal. By sea and may, sir, I dare say my cousin William is become a good scholar: he is at Oxford still, is he not?

Sil. Indeed, sir, to my cost.

Shal. A' must, then, to the lim's o' court shortly.

Sil. You were called 'hasil Shallow' then, cousin.

Shal. By the mass, I was called any thing; and I would have done any thing indeed too, and romantely too. There was I, and little John Doit of Staffordshire, and black George Barnes, and Francis Pickbone, and Will Spiele, a Cotswold man: you had not four such swinge-bucklers on all the lims o' court again: and I may say to you, we knew where the bonas-robas were and had the best of them all at commandment. Then was Jack Falstaff, now Sir John, a boy, and page to Thomas Mowbray, Duke of Richmond.

Sil. This Sir John, cousin, that comes hither anon about soldiers?

Shal. The same Sir John, the very same. I see him break Skogian's head at the court-gate, when a' was a crack not thus high: and the very same day did I meet with the Sampson Stockfish, a fruit-water, behind Gray's Inn. Jesu, Jesu, the mad days that I have spent! and to see how many of my old acquaintance are dead!

Sil. We shall all follow, cousin.

Shal. Certain, 'tis certain; very sure, very sure: death, as the Psalmist saith, is certain to all: all shall die. How a good yoke of bullocks at Stanford fair?

Sil. By my troth, I was not there.

Shal. Death is certain. Is old Double of your town living yet?

Sil. Dead, sir.

Shal. Jesu, Jesu, dead! a' drew a good bow: and dead! a' shot a fine shoot: John a Gaunt lived him well, and betted much money on his head. Dead! a' would have clapped i' the clout at twelve score: and carried you a forehand shaft a fourteen and fourteen and a half, that it would have done a man's work to see. How a score of eyes now?

Sil. Thereafter as they be: a score of good eues may be worth ten pounds.

Shal. And is old Double dead? (I think.

Sil. Here come two of Sir John Falstaff's men, as Enter Bardolph and one with him.

Bard. Good morrow, honest gentlemen; I beseech you, which is Justice Shallow?

Shal. I am Robert Shallow, sir; a poor esquire of this county, and one of the king's justices of the peace: what is your good pleasure with me?

Bard. Lord mount, sir, commands him to you: my captain, Sir John Falstaff, a tall gentleman, by heaven, and a most gallant leader.

Shal. He greets me well, sir. I knew him a good wordsword man. How doth the good knight? may I ask how my lady his wife doth?

Bard. Sir, pardon: a soldier is better accommodated than with a wife.

Shal. It is well said, in faith, sir: and it is well said indeed too. Better accommodated: it is good; yea, indeed, is it: good phrases are surely, and ever were, very commendable. Accommodated: it comes of "accommodate"; a good phrase.

Bard. Pardon me, sir; I have heard the word. Call me your name? by this good day, I know not the phrase: but I will maintain the word with my sword to be a soldier-like word, and a word of excelcealing good command, by heaven. Accommodated: that is, when a man is, as they say, accommodated: or when a man is, whereby a' may be thought to be accommodated; which is an excellent thing.

Shal. It is very just.

Enter Falstaff.

Look, here comes good Sir John. Give me your good hand, give me your worship's good hand: by my troth, you look well and bear your years very well: welcome, good Sir John.

Fal. I am glad to see you well, good Master Robert Shallow: Master Surecard, as I think?

Shal. No, Sir John; it is my cousin Silence, in commission with me.

Fal. Good Master Silence, it well befits you should be of the peace.

Sil. Your good worship is welcome.

Fal. Fie! this is hot weather, gentlemen. Have you provided me here half a dozen sufficient men?

Shal. Marry, have we, sir. Will you sit?

Fal. Let me see them, I beseech you.

Shal. Where's the roll? where's the roll? Let me see, let me see, let me see. So, so, so, so, so, ye: marry, sir: Ralph Mouldy! Let them appear as I call: let them do so, let them do so. Let me see: where is Mouldy?

Mord. Here, an't please you.

Fal. Is thy name Mouldy?

Mord. Yea, an't please you.

Fal. 'Tis the more time than worth used.

Shal. Ha, ha, ha! most excellent, I faith! things that are monthly lack use: very singular good! in faith, well said, Sir John, very well said.

Fal. Prick him.

Mord. I was pricked well enough before, an you could have let me alone: my old dame will be undone now for one to do her husbandry and her drudgery: you need not to have pricked me; there are other men fitter to go out than I.

Fal. Goto; peace, Mouldy; you shall go. Mouldy, it is time you were spent.

Mord. Spent!

Shal. Peace, fellow, peace; stand aside: know you where you are? For the other, Sir John: let me see; Simon Shallow?

Fal. Yea, marry, let me have him to sit under: he's like to be a cold soldier.

Shal. Where's Shadow?

Mord. Sir John, whose son art thou?

Shol. My mother's son, sir.

Fal. Thy mother's son! like enough, and thy father's shadow: so the son of the female is the shadow of the male: it is often so, indeed; but much of the father's substance!

Shal. Do you like him, Sir John?

Fal. Shadow's son for summer; prick him, for we have a number of shadows to fill up the murs.

Fal. Where's he?

Wart. Here, sir.

Fal. Is thy name Wart?

Wart. Yes, sir.

Fal. Thou art a very ragged wart.

Wart. Shall I prick him down, Sir John?

Fal. It were superfluous: for his apparel is built upon his back and the whole frame stands upon his pins: prick him no more.

Shal. Ha, ha, ha! that you can do it, sir: you can do it: I commend you well. Francis Feeble!

Fee. Here, sir.

Fal. What trade art thou, Feeble?

Fee. A woman's tailor, sir.

551
ACT III.  SECOND PART OF KING HENRY IV.  SCENE II.

Shal. Shall I prick him, sir?
Fal. You may; but if he had been a man's tailor, he'd ha' pricked you. Will thou make as many holes in an enemy's battle as thou hast done in a woman's waist?—[When he has gone] more.
Fee. I will do my good will, sir; you can have no
Fal. Well said, good woman's tailor! well said, courageous Feeble! thou wilt be as valiant as the wrathful dove or most magnificent mouse. Prick the woman's tailor: well, Master Shallow; deep, Master Shallow.

Fee. I would Wart might have gone, sir.
Fal. I would thou wert a man's tailor, that thou might'st mend him and make him fit to go. I cannot put him to a private soldier that is the leader of so many thousands; let that suffice, most formidable Feeble. It shall suffice, [Feeble.]
Fal. I am bound to thee, reverend Feeble. Who Shal. Peter Bulcalf o' the green! [Is next?]
Fal. Ye, marry, let 's see Bulcalf.
Bull. Here, sir.
Fal. 'Tis Fore God, a likely fellow! Come, prick me Bulcalf till he roar again.

Bull. O Lord! good my lord captain,—
Fal. What, dost thou roar before thou art pricked?
Bull. O Lord, sir! I am a diseased man.

Bull. A whorseon cold, sir, a cough, sir, which I catch with ringing in the king's affairs upon his coronation-day. I say's fore thee's Feeble.
Fal. Come, thou shalt go to the wars in a gown; we will have away thy cold; and I will take such order that thy friends shall ring for thee. Is here all?
Shel. Here is more called than thy number; you must have but four here, sir: and so, I pray you, go in with me to dinner.
Fal. Come, I will go drink with you, but I cannot marry dinner. I am glad to see you, by my troth, Master Shallow.

Shel. O, Sir John, do you remember since we lay all night in the windmill in Saint George's field?
Fal. No more of that, good Master Shallow, no more of that.

Shel. Ha! 't was a merry night. And is Jane Nightwork alive?
Fal. She lives, Master Shallow.
Shel. She never could away with me.
Fal. Nay, she could, sir; she always say she could not abide Master Shallow.

Shel. By the mass, I could anger her to the heart. She was then a bona-rola. Dost she hold her own Fal. Oth, old, Master Shallow. [Well?
Shel. Nay, she must be old; she cannot choose but be old, certain she's old; and had Robin Nightwork by old Nightwork before I came to Clement's.
Sil. That's fifty-five year ago.

Shel. Ha, cousin Silence, that thou hast seen that that this knight and I have seen! Ha, Sir John, said I well?
We have heard the chimes at midnight, Master Shallow.

Shel. That we have, that we have, that we have; in faith, Sir John, we have; our watchword was 'Hem boys!' Come, let's to dinner; come, let's to dinner: Jesus, the days that we have seen! Come, come, come.

[Exeunt Falstaff and the Justices.
Bull. Good Master Corporate Bardolph, stand my friend; and here's four Harry ten shillings in French crowns for you. In very truth, sir, I had as liefe he hanged, sir, as go: and yet, for mine own part, sir, I do not care; but rather, because I am unwilling, and have a part, have a desire to stay with my friends; else, sir, I did not care, for mine own part, so much.

Bard. Go to; stand aside.
Mont. And, good master corporal captain, for my old dame's sake, my stand friend: she has nobody to do any thing about her when I am gone; and she is old, and cannot help herself: you shall have forty,
Bard. Go to, to; stand aside. [Sir.
Fal. By my troth, I care not: a man can die but once; we owe it to him: I'll get her bear her mind: an't be my destiny, so; an't be not, so: no man is too good to serve a prince; and let it go which way it will, that he dies this year is quit for the next.
Bard. Well said; thou 'rt a good fellow.

[Exit. Falstaff.}

Re-enter Falstaff and the Justices.
Fal. Come, sir, which men shall I have?
Shel. Four of which you please.
Bard. Sir, a word with you: I have three pound to free Moudly and Bulcalf.
Fal. Go to; well.
Shel. Come, Sir John, which four will you have?
Fal. Do you choose for me.

Shel. Mardy, then. Moudly, Bulcalf, Feeble and Moudly and Bulcalf: for you, Moudly, stay at home till you are past service: and for your part, Bulcalf, grow till you come unto it: I will none of you.

Shel. Sir John, Sir John, do you not yourself wrong: they are your likeliest men, and I would have you served with the best.

Fal—Will you tell me, Master Shallow, how to choose a man? Care for the limb, the thewes, the stature, the bone, and the parts. Give me the spirit, Master Shallow. Here 's Wart; you see what a ragged appearance it is: a' shall charge you and discharge you with the motion of a pewterer's hammer, come off and on swifter than he that giblets on the brewer's bucket. And this same hath-faced fellow, Shallow; give me this man: he presents no mark to the enemy; the foeman may with as great aim level at the edge of a penknife. And for a retreat; how swiftly will this Feeble the woman's tailor run off! O, give me the spare men, and spare me the great ones. Put me a caliver into Wart's hand, Bardolph.

Bard. Hold, Wart, traverse; thus, thus, thus.

Fal. Come, manage me your caliver. So: very well; go to: very good, exceeding good. O, give me always a little, lean, old, chapt, laid shot. Well said, i' faith, Wart; thou 'rt a good scab; hold, the Shallow, thou hast city for the next.
Shel. He is not his craft's master; he doth not do it right. I remember at Mile-end Green, when I lay at Clement's inn,—I was then Sir Dagonet in Arthur's show,—there was a little quiver fellow, and a' would manage you his piece thus; and a' would do it all about, and come you in and come you in: 'rah, tah, tah,' would a' say: 'bounce' would a' say; and away again would a' go, and again would a' come: I shall ne'er see such a fellow.

Fal. These fellows will do well, Master Shallow. God keep you, Master Silence: I will not use many words with you. Fare you well, gentlemen both: I thank you: I must a dozen mile to-night, Bardolph, give the soldiers cots.

Shel. Sir John, the Lord bless you! God prosper your affairs! God send us peace! At your return visit our house: let our old acquaintance be renewed; perchance I will with ye to the court.
Fal. 'Tis Fore God, I would you would, Master Shallow.

Shel. Goto; I have spoke a word. God keep you.
Fal. Fare you well, gentle gentlemen. [Exit. Justices.] On, Bardolph; lead the men away. [Exit. Bardolph. Recitative, &c.] As I return, I will fetch off these justices: I do see the bottom of Justice Shallow. Lord, Lord, how subject we old men are to this vice of lying! This same starred justice hath done nothing but prate to me of the wildness of his youth, and the feats he hath done about Turnbull Street; and every third word a lie, duer paid to the hearer than the Turk's tribute. I do remember him at Clement's Inn like a man made after supper of a cheese-pie; when a' was naken, he seized the hilts of his sword with an arm, a head fantastically carved upon it with a knife; a' was so forlorn, that his dimensions to any thick sight were invincible: a' was the very genius of famine; yet lecherous as a monkey, and the whores called him mandrake: a' came ever in the rearward of the fortune, and sung three tunes to the over-stung lustwives that he heard the carnal whistle, and sware they were his fancies or his goodnights. And now is this Vice's dagger become a squire, and talks as familiarly of John a Gaunt as if he had been sworn brother to him; and I'll be sworn a' never saw him but once in the Tift-yard; and then he burst his head for crowding among the marshals' men, and said, 'Tis a man I am not he, and told John a Gaunt he beat his own name; for you might have thrust him and all his apparel into an eel-skin; the case of a treble huntboy was a mansion for him, a court: and now has he hand and beves. Well, I'll be acquainted with him, if I return; and it shall go hard but I will make him a profession of two stanzas to me: if the young dace be a lait for the old pike, I see no reason in the law of nature but I may snap at him.

Let time shape, and there an end. [Exit.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Yorkshire. Gaultree Forest.

Enter the Archbishop of York, Mowbray, Hastings, and others.

Archbishop. What is this forest call'd? [grace.

Mowbray. 'T is Gaultree Forest, an' shall please your Grace.

Archbishop. Here stand, my lords; and send discoverers To know the numbers of our enemies. [forth

Mowbray. We have sent forth already.

Archbishop. 'T is well done, My friends and brethren in these great affairs, I must acquaint you that I have received New-dated letters from Northumberland; Their cold intent, tenour and substance, thus: Here doth he wish his person with such powers As might hold sortance with his quality, The which he could not levy; whereupon He is retired, to ride his growing fortunes, To Scotland; and concludes in hearty prayers That your attempts may overlie the hazard And fearful meeting of their opposite. [ground

Mowbray. Thus do the hopes we have in him touch In dash themselves to pieces.

Enter a Messenger.

Messenger. Now, what news? [West

Westmorland. West. Westmoreland. Mess. West of this forest, scarcely off a mile, In goodly form comes on the enemy: And, by the ground they hide, I judge their number Upon or near the rate of thirty thousand.

Mowbray. The just proportion that we gave them out, Let us away on and face them in the field.

Archbishop. What well-appointed leader fronts us here?

Enter Westmoreland.

Archbishop. Say on, my Lord of Westmoreland, in What doth concern your coming? Then, my lord, Unto your grace do I in chief address The substance of my speech. If that rebellion Came like itself, in base and abject routs, Led on by bloody youth, guarded with rags, And comenanced by boys and beggary, I say, if damn'd commotion so appear'd, In his true, native and most proper shape, You, revered father, and these noble lords Had not been here, to dress the ugly form Of leases bloody sacrilege.

Westmorland. With your fair honour's leave, lord archbishop, Whose see is by a civil peace maintaine'd, Whose beard the silver hand of peace hath touch'd, Whose learning and good letters peace hath tutor'd, Whose white investments figure innocence, The dove and very blessed spirit of peace, Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself Out of the speech of peace that bears such grace, Into the harsh and bolstersome tongue of war? Turning your books to graves, your ink to blood, Your pens to lances and your tongue divine To a loud trumpet and a point of war?

Archbishop. Wherefore do I this? so the question stands. Briefly to this end: we are all diseased, And with our infirmities more than hours Have brought ourselves into a burning fever, And we must belee for it; of which disease Our late king, Richard, being infected, died, But, my most noble Lord of Westmoreland, I take not on me here as a physician, Nor do I as his enemy can offer it: Troop in the throns of military men; But rather show awhile like fearful war, To diet rank minds sick of happiness And purge the obstructions which begin to stop Our very veins of life. Hear me more plainly. I have in equal balance justly weigh'd [suffer, What wrongs our arms may do, what wrongs we And find our griefs heavier than our offences. We see which way the stream of time doth run, And are enforced from our most quiet there By the rough torrent of occasion; And have the summary of all our griefs, when time season'd, set forth in articles; Which long ere this we offer'd to the king, And might by no suit gain our audience: When we are wrong'd and would unfold our griefs, We are denied access unto his person Even by those men that most have done us wrong. The dangers of the days but newly gone, Whose memory is written on the earth With yet appearing blood, and the examples Of every minute's instance, present now, Hath put us in these ill-beseeming arms, Not to break peace or any branch of it, But to establish here a peace indeed, Concurring both in name and quality. Westmorland. West. Westmoreland. When ever yet was your appeal denied? Wherein have you been galled by the king? What peer hath been born and to grate on you, Of forged rebellion with a seal divine And consecrate commotion's bitter edge? [Arch. My brother general, the commonwealth, To brother born an household cruelty, I make my quarrel in particular.

West. There is no need of any such redress; Or if there were, it is not wrong for you. Mowbray. Mowbray. Why not to him in part, and to us all That feel the bruises of the days before, And suffer the condition of these times To lay a heavy and unequal hand Upon our honours?
West. O, my good Lord Mowbray,
Construe the times to their necessities,
And you shall say indeed, it is the time,
And not the king, but both you injuries.
Yet for your part, it doth not appear
Either from the king or in the present time
That you should have an inch of any ground
To build a griev on: were you not restored
To all the Duke of Norfolk's signories,
Your peer and right well remember'd father's?
Mowb. What that the king did through the warlike down,
His own life hung upon the staff he threw;
Then threw he down himself and all their lives
That by indiction and by dint of sword
Have since miscarried under Boleingrooke.
West. You speak, Lord Mowbray, now you know
The Earl of Hereford was reputed then
In England the most valiant gentleman:
Who knows on whom fortune would then have
But if your father had been victor there, [smiled]
He never had borne it out of Coventry:
For all the country in a general view
Cried hate upon him; and all their prayers and love
Were set on Hereford, whom they doted on
And bless'd and graced indeed, more than the king,
But this is mere digression from my purpose.
Here come I from our princely general
To know your griefs; to tell you from his grace
That he will give you audience; and wherein
It shall appear that your demands are just,
You shall enjoy them, every thing set off
That might so much as think you enemies.
Mowb. But he hath forced us to compel this offer;
And policy, from policy, take care.
West. Mowbray, you overween to take it so;
This offer comes from mercy, not from fear:
For, lo! within a ken our army lies,
Upon mine honour, all too confident
To give admittance to a thought of fear.
Our bell is more full of names than yours,
Our men more perfect in the use of arms,
Our armour all as strong, our cause the best;
Then reason will our hearts should be as good:
Say you not then our offer is compell'd.
Mowb. Well, by my will we shall admit no parley.
West. That argues but the shame of your offence:
A rotten case abides no handling.
Hast. Hath the Prince John a full commission,
In very ample virtue of his father,
To hear and absolutely to determine
Of what conditions we shall stand upon?
West. That is intended in the general's name;
I muse you make so slight a sudden voice.
Arch. Then take, my Lord of Westmoreland, this
For this contains our general grievances:
Each several article herein redress'd.
All members of our cause, both here and hence,
That is to say, in this Weald, are Acquainted by a true substantial form
And present execution of our wills
To us and to our purposes confined,
We come within our awful banks again
And knit our powers to the arm of peace. [lords, West. This will I show the general. Please you,
In sight of both our battles we may meet;
And either end in peace, which God so frame!
Or to the place of difference call the swords
Which must decide it.
[Exit West. Mowb. There is a thing within my bosom tells me
That no conditions of our peace can stand.
Hast. Fear you not that: if we can make our Upon such large terms and so absolute [peace
As our conditions shall consist upon,
Our peace shall stand as firm as rocky mountains.
Mowb. Yea, but our valuations shall be such
That every slight and false-derived cause,
Yea, every idle, nice and wanton reason
Shall to the king taste of this action;
That, were our royal faiths martyrs in love,
We shall be winnow'd with so rough a wind
That even our corn shall seem as light as chaff
And good from bad find no partition. [weary
Arch. No, no, my lord. Note this; the king is
Of dainty and such picking grievances:
For he hath found to end one doubt by death
Revised we greater in the heirs of life,
And therefore will he wipe his tables clean
And keep no toll-tale to his memory
That may repeat and history his loss
To new remembrance; for full well he knows
He cannot so precisely weed this land
As his doubts present occasion;
His foes are so enrooted with his friends
That, plucking to unmix an enemy,
He doth unfasten so and shake a friend:
So that this hand, like an offensive wife
That hath curaged him on to offer strokes,
As he is striking, holds his infant up
And hangs resolved correction in the arm
That was uprear'd to execution.
Hast. Besides, the king hath wasted all his rods
On late offenders, that he now doth lack
The very instruments of chastisement:
So that his power, like to a fangless lion,
May offer, but not hold.
Arch. 'Tis very true:
And therefore be assured, my good lord marshal,
If we do now make our atonement well,
Our peace will, like a broken limb united,
Grow stronger for the breaking.
Mowb. Be it so,
Here is return'd my Lord of Westmoreland.
Re-enter Westmoreland.
West. The prince is here at hand: pleasure your lordship.
To make his grace just distance 'tween our armies.
Mowb. Your grace of York, in God's name, then, set forward.
Arch. Before, and greet his grace: my lord, we come.
[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Another part of the forest.

Enter, from one side, Mowbray, attended; afterwards the Archbishop, Hastings, and others; from the other side, Prince John of Lancaster, and Westmoreland; Officers, and others with them.

Lan. You are well encounter'd here, my cousin
Mowbray:
Good day to you, gentle lord archbishop;
And so to you, Lord Hastings, and to all.
My Lord of York, it better show'd with you
When that your flock, assembled by the bell,
Enraptured you to hear with reverence
Your exposition on the holy text
Than now to see you here an iron man,
Cheering a rout of rebels with your drum,
Turning the word to sword and life to death.
That man that sits within a monarch's heart,
SECOND PART OF KING HENRY IV. Scene III.

West. Therefore be merry, coz; since sudden sorrow serves to say thus, 'some good thing comes to.'

Arch. Believe me, I am passing light in spirit. Much so much the worse, if your own rule be true.

Lan. The word of peace is render'd: hark, how they shout!

Arch. That had been cheerful after victory. A peace is of the nature of a conquest; For then both parties nobly are subdued, And neither party loser.

Lan. Go, my lord, and let our army be discharged too.

Re-enter Westmorland.

Arch. And, good my lord, so please you, let our trains March by us, that we may peruse the men We should have coped with.

Lan. Go, good Lord Hastings, and, ere they be dismissed, let them march by. [Exit Hastings.

Re-enter Hastings.

Host. My lord, our army is dispersed already: Like youthful steers unyoked, they take their courses.

West. Not so, west, north, south: or, like a school broke Each hurries toward his home and sporting-place.

Westmorland. Good tidings, my Lord Hastings: for the I do assure thee, traitor, of high treason: Which and you, lord archbishop, and you, lord Mowbray, Of capital treason I attach you both.

Arch. Is this proceeding just and honourable? West. Is your assembly so?

Arch. Will you thus break your faith?

Host. I pawn'd thee none: I promised you redress of these same grievances Whereof you did complain; which, by mine honor, I will perform with a most Christian care. [Exit; But for you, rebels, look to taste the due Meet for rebellion and such acts as yours. Most shallowly did you these arms commence, Fondly brought here and foolishly sent hence. Strike up our drums, pursue the scattered stray: God, and roll we, hath safely over-tak'd you, Some guards bear these traitors to the block of death, Treason's true bed and yielder up of breath. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. — Another part of the forest.

A l a r u m. Excursions. Enter Falstaff and Colevile, meeting.

Fal. What's your name, sir? of what condition are you, and of what place, I pray?

Cole. I am a knight, sir; and my name is Colevile of the dale.

Fal. Well, then, Colevile is your name, a knight is your degree, and your place the dale: Colevile shall be still your name, a traitor your degree, and the dungeon your place, a place deep enough; so shall you be still Colevile of the dale.

Cole. Are you not Sir John Falstaff?

Fal. As good a man as he, sir, who'er I am. Do ye yield, sir? or shall I sweat for you? If I do sweat, they are the drops of thy lovers, and they weep for thy death: therefore rouse up fear and trembling, and do observance to my mercy.

Cole. I think you are Sir John Falstaff, and in that thought yield me.
Fal. I have a whole school of tongues in this belly of mine, and not a tongue of them all speaks any other word but my name. An I had but a belly of any indifference, I were simply the most active fellow in Europe: my woub, my woub, my woub, undoes me. Here comes our general.

Enter Prince John of Lancaster, Westmoreland, Blunt, and others.

Lan. The heat is past; follow no further now:
Call in the powers, good cousin Westmoreland.

[Exit Westmoreland.]

Now, Falstaff, where have you been all this while?
When every thing is ended, then you come: That's like to do with those sticks on your life.
One time or other break some gallow's back.

Fal. I would be sorry, my lord, but it should be thus: I never knew yet but rebuke and check was the reward of valour. Do you think me a swallow, an arrow, or a bullet? have I, in my poor and old motion, the expedition of thought? I have speeded hither with the very extremest inch of possibility: I have foundered nine score and odd posts: and here, travel-tainted as I am, have, in my pure and immaculate valour, taken Sir John Colevile of the dale, a most furious knight and valorous enemy. What of that? he saw me, and yielded; that I may say, I have met with the hook-nosed fellow of Rome, 'I came, saw, and overcome.'

Lan. It was more of his courtesy than your delusion.

Fal. I know not: here he is, and here I yield him; and I beseech your grace, let it be booked with the rest of this day's deeds; or, by the Lord, I will have it in a particular ballad also, with mine own picture on the top on 't. Colevile kissing my foot: to the which cause if I be enforced, if you do not all show like galt two-pences to me, and I in the clear sky of fame o'ershine you as much as the full moon doth the chinders of the element, which show like pins' heads to her, believe not the word of the noble: therefore let me have right, and let desert mount.

Lan. Thine's too heavy to mount.

Fal. Let it shine, then.

Lan. Thine's too thick to shine.

Fal. Let it do something, my good lord, that may do me good, and call it what you will.

Lan. Is thy name Colevile?

Cole. It is, my lord.

Lan. A famous rebel art thou, Colevile.

Cole. And a famous true subject took him, my lord, but as true as others are that led me hither: had they been ruled by me, You should have won them dearer than you have.

Fal. I know not how they sold themselves: but thou, like a kind fellow, gavest thyself away gratis; and I thank thee for thee.

Re-enter Westmoreland.

Lan. Now, have you left pursuit?

West. Retreat is made and execution stay'd.

Lan. Send Colevile with his confederates

To York, to present execution:

Blunt, lead him hence and see you guard him sure.

[Execut Bhout and others with Colevile.]

And now dispatch we toward the court, my lords:
I hear the king my father is sore sick;
Our news shall go before us to his majesty,
Which, cousin, you shall bear to comfort him, And other woe of your speed will follow you.

Fal. My lord, I beseech you, give me leave to go Through Gloucestershire: and, when you come to court, Stand my good lord, pray, in your good report.

Lan. Fare you well, Falstaff: I, in my condition, Shall better speak of you than you deserve.

[Execut all but Falstaff.]

Fal. I would you had but the wit: 'twere better than your dukedom. Good faith, this same young scurvy-looked boy doth love me tenderly; and no man cannot make him laugh; but that's no marvel, he drinks no wine. There's never none of these demure boys come to any proof; for thin drink doth so over-cool their blood, and making many fish-meals, that they fall into a kind of male green-sickness. And then, when they are a trifle, they get wenchas: they are generally fools and cowards; which some of us should be too, but for inflammation. A good sherris-sack hath a two-fold operation in it. It ascends me into the brain; dries me there all the foolish and dull and cruddy vapours which environ it: makes it apprehensive, quick, forgetive, full of nimble fiery and delectable shapes; which, delivered o'er the voice, the tongue, which is the birth, becomes excellent wit. The second property of your excellent sherris is, the warming of the blood; which, before cold and settled, let the liver white and pale, which is the badge of passimlimity and cowardice; but the sherris warms it and makes it course from the inwards to the parts extreme: it illumineth the face, which as a beacon gives warming to all the rest of this little kingdom, man, to arm; and then the vital comoners and inland petty spirits muster me all to their captain, the heart, who, great and powerful, plumped up with this retinue, doth any deed of courage; and this valour comes of sherris. So that skill in the weapon is nothing without sack, for that sets it a-work; and learning a mere board of gold kept by a devil, till sack commences it and sets it in act and use. Hereof comes it that Prince Harry is valiant; for the cold blood he did naturally inherit of his father he hath, like lean, sterile and barren land, manured, husbanded and tilled with excellent endeavours of drinking good and good store of fertile sherris, that he is become very hot and valiant. If I had a thousand sons, the first humane principle I would teach them should be, to forswear thin potions and to addict themselves to sack.

Enter Bardolph.

How now, Bardolph?

Lord. The army is discharged all and gone.

Fal. Let them go. I'll through Gloucestershire; and there will I visit Master Robert Shallow, esquire: I have him already tempering between my finger and my thumb, and shortly will I seal with him. Come away.

SCENE IV. Westminster. The Jerusalem Chamber.

Enter the King, the Princes Thomas of Clarence and Humphrey of Gloucester, Warwick, and others.

King. Now, lords, if God doth give successful end To this debate that bleedeth at our doors, We will our youth lead on to higher fields And draw no swords but what are sanctified. Our navy is address'd, our power collected, Our substitutes in absence well invested, And every thing lies level to our wish; Only, we want a little personal strength; And pause us, till these rebels, now afoot, Come underneath the yoke of government. War. Both which we doubt not but your majesty Shall at an end enjoy.

King. Humphrey, my son of Gloucester, Where is the prince your brother? [Windsor. Glou. I think he's gone to my lord, at King. And how accompanied? Glou. I do not know, my lord. King. Is not his brother, Thomas of Clarencce, with him?
ACT IV. SECOND PART OF KING HENRY IV. SCENE V.

Enter Harcourt.

Harcourt. Look, here's more news.

Hov. From enemies heaven keep your majesty; And, when they stand against you, may they fail

As those that I am come to tell you of!

The Earl Northumberland and the Lord Bardolph,

With a great power of English and of Scots,

Are by the sheriff of Yorkshire overthrown:

The manner and true order of the fight

This packet, please it you, contains at large.

King. And wherefore should these good news make me sick?

Will Fortune never come with both hands full,

But write her fair words still in foulest letters?

She either gives a simoniac and no food;

Such are the poor, in health; or else a feast

And takes away the stomach; such are the rich,

That have abundance and enjoy it not.

I should rejoice now at this happy news;

And now my sight fails, and my brain is giddy;

And am I come near to it now; I am much ill.

Glow. Comfort, your majesty!

Clarence. O my royal father!

West. My sovereign lord, cheer up yourself, look up.

War. Be patient, princes; you do know, these fits Are with his highness very ordinary.

Stand from him, give him air; 'twill straight be well.

Clarence. No, no; he cannot long hold out these pangs:

The incessant care and labour of his mind

Hath wrought the more that should confine it in;

So thin that life looks through and will break out.

Glow. The people fear me: for they do observe Unfather'd heirs and leathly births of nature:

The seasons change their manners, as the year

Had found some months asleep and leapt them over.

Clarence. The river hath thrice flowed and ebbed between;

And the old folk, time's doating chronicles, Say it did so. If it be a sign before That our great-grand sire, Edward, sick'd and died.

War. Speak lower, princes, for the king recovers.

Glow. This apoplexy will certainly be his end.

King. I pray you, take me up, and bear me hence Into some other chamber: softly, pray.

SCENE V.—Another chamber.

The King lying on a bed: Clarence, Gloucester, Warwick, and others in attendance.

King. Let there be no noise made, my gentle

Upon some dull and favoring hand; friends; Will whisper music to my weary spirit.

War. Call for the music in the other room.

King. Set me the crown upon my pillow here.

Clarence. His eye is hollow, and he changes much.

War. Less noise, less noise!

Enter Prince Henry.

Prince. Who saw the Duke of Clarence?

Clarence. I am here, brother, full of heaviness.

Prince. How now! rain within doors, and none

How doth the king?

[abroad]

Prince. Exceeding ill.

Clarence. Heard he the good news yet?

Tell it him.

Glow. He alter'd much upon the hearing it.

Prince. If he be sick with joy, he'll recover with-out [spoke low; War. Not so much noise, my lords; sweet prince, The king your father is disposed to sleep.

Clar. Let us withdraw into the other room.
War. Will 't please your grace to go along with us?
Princ. No; I will sit and watch here by the king.
[Exit all but the Prince.
Why doth the crown lie there upon his pillow,
Being so troublesome a bedfellow?
O polish'd perturbation! golden care!
That keep'st the ports of shamber open wide
To many a watchful night! 'tis fresh with it now!
Yet not so sound and half so deeply sweet
As he whose brow with homely bigbun bound
Shores out the watch of night. O majesty!
When thou dost pinch thy bearer, thou dost sit
Like a rich armour worn in heat of day,
That world with safety. By his gates of breath
There lies a downy feather which stirs not:
Did he suspect, that light and weightless down
Perforce must move. My gracious lord! my father!
This sleep is sound indeed; this is a sleep
That from this golden rigid hath divorced
So many English kings. Thy due from me
Is tears and heavy sorrers of the blood,
Which nature, love, and filial tenderness,
Shall, O dear father, pay thee plentifully:
My due from thee is this imperial crown,
Which, as immediate from thy place and blood,
Derives its strength from them, which strength
Which God shall guard: and put the world's whole
Into one giant arm, it shall not force
This lined honour from me: this from thee
Will I to mine leave, as 'tis left to me. [Exit.
King. Warwick! Gloucester! Clarence! [Exit.
Re-enter Warwick, Gloucester, Clarence, and the rest.
Clar. Doth the king call? [Grace?
War. What would your majesty? How fares your Princ. Why did you leave me here alone, my lords?
War. We left the prince my brother here, my
Who undertook to sit and watch by you. [liege.
King. The Prince of Wales! Where is he? let me
He is not here. [see him:
War. This door is open; he is gone this way.
Glo. He came not through the chamber where we stay'd.
King. Who is the crown? who took it from my War. When we withdrew, my liege, we left it here. [him out.
King. The prince hath ta'en it hence: go, seek
Is he so hasty that he doth suppose
My sleep my death?
Find him, my Lord of Warwick; chide him hither.
[Exit Warwick.
This part of his conjoins with my disease,
And helps to end me. See, sons, what things you
Now quickly nature falls into revolt [are!
When gold becomes her object.
For this the foolish over-curious fathers
Have broke their sleep with thoughts, their brains with care,
Their bones with industry;
For this they have engrossed and piled up
The careless heaps of strange-achieved gold;
For this they have been thoughtful to invest
Their sons with arts and martial exercises:
When, like the bee, culling from every flower
The virtuous sweets, [honey,
Our thighs pack'd with wax, our mouths with
We bring it to the hive, and, like the bees,
Are murdered for our pains. This bitter taste
Yield his engrossments to the ending father.
Re-enter Warwick.
Now, where is he that will not stay so long
Till his friend sickness hath determined me?
War. My lord, I found the prince in the next room
Washing with kindly tears his gentle cheeks,
With such a deep demeanour in great sorrow.
That is his grace, whose skills are to be Wound, by beholding him, have wash'd his knife
With gentle eye-drops. He is coming hither.
King. But wherefore did he take away the crown?
Re-enter Prince Henry.
Lo, where he comes. Come hither to me, Harry.
Depart the chamber, leave us here alone.
Prince. I never thought to hear you speak again.
King. Thy wish was father, Harry, to that
I stay too long by thee, I weare thee. [thought:
Doth the argument not argue itself
That thou wilt needs invest thee with my honors
Before thy hour be ripe? O foolish youth!
Thee seek'st the greatness that will overwhelm thee,
Stay but a little; for my cloud of dignity
Is held from falling with so weak a wind
That it will quickly drop; my day is dim.
Thou hast stolen that which after some few hours
Were thine without offence; and at my death
Thou hast seal'd up my expectation:
Thy life did manifest thou lovedst me not,
And thou wilt have me die assured of it...
Thou hast of thyself to bring thy thoughts,
Which thou hast whetted on thy stony heart,
To stab at half an hour of my life.
What! canst thou not foresee me half an hour?
Then get thee gone and dig my grave thyself,
And bid the merry bells ring to thine ear
That thou art crowned, not that I am dead.
Let all the tears that should heave my heare
Be drops of balm to sanctify thy head:
Only compound me with forgotten dust;
Give that which gave thee life into the worms.
Pluck down my officers, break my decrees;
For now a time is come to mock at form:
Harry the Fifth is crown'd: up, you ruffian!
Down, royal state! all you sage counsellors, hence;
And to the English court assemble now,
From every region, apes of idleness!
Now, neighbour continuance, purge you of your scam:
Have you a ruffian that will swear, drink, dance,
Revel the night, rob, murder, and commit
The oldest sins the newest kind of ways?
Be happy, he will trouble you no more;
England shall double gild his treble guilt,
England shall give him office, honour, might;
For the fifth Harry from curb'd license plucks
The muzzle of restraint, and his misdeeds
Shall feed his teeth on every innocent.
O my poor kingdom, sick with civil blows!
When that my care could not withhold thy riots,
What wilt thou do when riot is thy care?
O, thou wilt be a wilderness again,
Peopled with thy erring habitants!
Prince. O, pardon me, my liege! but for my tears,
The most impediments unto my speech,
I had forestall'd this dear and deep rebuke
Ere you with grief had spoke and I had heard
The course of it so far. There is your crown;
And He that wears the crown immortally
Long guard it yours! If I affect it more
Than as your honour and as your renown,
Let me no more from this obedience rise,
Which my most inward true and duteous spirit
Teacheth, this prostrate and exterior bending,
God witness with my name, I am in,
And found no course of breath within your majesty,
How cold it struck my heart! If I do feign,
O, let me in my present wildness die
And never live to show the incredulous world
The noble change that I have purposed.
Come, let us sit down on you, the queen is dead,
And dead almost, my liege, to think you were,
ACT V.

SECOND PART OF KING HENRY IV.

SCENE I. — Gloucestershire. Shallow’s house.

Enter Shallow, Falstaff, Bardolph, and Page.

Shal. By cock and pie, sir, you shall not away tonight. What, Davy, I say! [low.

Fal. You must excuse me, Master Robert Shal.

Shal. I will not excuse you; you shall not be excused; excuses shall not be admitted; there is no excuse shall serve; you shall not be excused. Why, Davy! [Enter Davy.

Davy. Here, sir.

Shal. Davy, Davy, Davy, Davy, let me see, Davy; let me see, Davy; let me see, yes, marry, William cook, bid him come hither. Sir John, you shall not be excused, it by their assistance; Which daily grew to quarrel and to bloodshed, Wounding supposed peace; all these bold bears Thou see’st with peril I have answered; For all my reign hath been but as a scene Acting that argument; and now my death Changes the mode; for what in me was purchased, Falls upon thee in a more fairer sort; So thou the garland wear’st successively, [do, Yet, though thou stand’st more sure than I could

Thou art not firm enough, since griefs are green: And all my friends, which thou must make thy friends, Have but their struts and teeth newly ta’en out; By whose fell working I was first advanced And by whose power I well might lodge a fear To be again displaced: which to avoid, I cut them off: and had a purpose now To lead out many to the Holy Land, Last rest and lying still might make them look Too near unto my state. Therefore, my Harry, Be it thy course to busy giddy minds With foreign quarrels; that action, hence borne out, May waste the memory of the former days. More would I, but my lungs are wasted so That strength of speech is utterly denied me. How I came by the crown, O God forgive; And grant it may with thee in true peace live! Prince. My gracious liege, you won it, wore it, kept it, gave it me; Then plain and right must my possession be: Which I with more than with a common pain Gainst all the world will rightfully maintain.

Enter Lord John of Lancaster.

King. Look, look, here comes my John of Lancaster. [father!

Lan. Health, peace, and happiness to my royal King. Thou bring’st me happiness and peace, son John. But health, alack, with youthful wings is flown From this bare wither’d trunk: upon thy sight My worldly business makes a period. Where is my Lord of Warwick?

Prince. My Lord of Warwick!

Enter Warwick, and others.

King. Doth any name particular belong Unto the lodging where I first did swoon? War. ’Tis call’d Jerusalem, my noble lord. King. Land be to God! even there my life must It hath been prophesied to me many, [end. I should not die but in Jerusalem; Which vainly I supposed the Holy Land; But bear me to that chamber; there I’ll lie; In that Jerusalem shall Harry die. [Exeunt.

Davy. Now, sir, a new link to the bucket must needs be had: and, sir, do you mean to stop any of William’s wagers, about the sack he lost the other day at Hinckley fair?

Shal. A! shall answer it. Some pigeons, Davy, a couple of short-legged hens, a joint of mutton, and any pretty little tiny kickshaws, tell William cook.

Davy. Doth the man of war stay all night, sir? Shal. Yes, Davy. I will use him well: a friend the court is better than a penny in use. Use his men well, Davy; for they are arrant knaves, and will backbite.

Davy. No worse than they are backbitten, sir; for they have marvellous foul linen.

Shal. Well contented, Davy: about thy business, Davy.

Davy. I beseech you, sir, to countenance William Visor of Womacot against Clement Perkes of the hill.

Shal. There is many complaints, Davy, against that Visor: that Visor is an arrant knave, on my knowledge.

Davy. I grant your worship that he is a knave, sir; but yet, God forbid, sir, but a knave should have some countenance at his friend’s request. An honest man, sir, is able to speak for himself, when a knife is not. I have served your worship truly, sir, this eight years; and if I cannot once or twice in a quarter bear out a knife against an honest man, I have but a very little credit with your worship. The knife is mine honest friend, sir; therefore, I beseech your worship, let him be countenanced.

Sold. I say he shall have no wrong. Look about, Davy. [Exit Davy.] Where are you, Sir John? Come, come, come, off with your boots. Give me your hand, Master Bardolph.

Bard. I am glad to see your worship.

Sold. I thank thee with all my heart, kind Master Bardolph: and though I come, my tall fellow [to the Page]. Come, Sir John.

Page. I'll follow you, good Master Robert Shallow. [Exit Shallow.] Bardolph, look to our horses. [Exit Bardolph and Page.] If I were sawed into quantities, I should make four dozen of such bearded hermits' staves as Master Shallow. It is a wonderful thing to see the semblance coherence of his men's spirits and his: they, by observing of him, do bear themselves like foolish justices; he, by conversing with them, is turned into a justice-like serving-man: their spirits are so married in conjunction with the participation of society that they stick together in consent, like so many wild-geese. It I had a suit to Master Shallow, I would humour his men with the imputation of being near their master: if to his men, I would curry with Master Shallow that no man could better command his servants. It is certain that either wise bearing or ignorant carriage is caught, as men take diseases, one of another: therefore let men take heed of their company. I will devise matter enough out of this Shallow to keep Prince Harry in continual laughter the wearing out of six fashions, which is four terms, or two actions, and a shall laugh without intervals. O, it is much that a lie with a slight oath and a jest with a sad brow will do with a fellow that never had the ache in his shoulders! O, you shall see him laugh till his face be like a wet cloak till laid up!

Sold. [Within] Sir John!

Page. I come, Master Shallow; I come, Master Shallow.

SCENE II.—Westminster. The palace.

Enter Warwick and the Lord Chief-Justice, meeting.

War. How now, my lord chief-justice! whither Ch. Just. How doth the king? [away?] War. Exceeding well; his cares are now all ended.

Ch. Just. I hope, not dead.

War. He's walk'd the way of nature; And to our purposes he lives no more. [him] Ch. Just. I would his majesty had call'd me with The service that I truly did his life Hath left me open to all injuries.

War. Indeed I think the young king loves you not. Ch. Just. I know he doth not, and do arm myself To the best condition of adversity, Which cannot look more hideously upon me Than I have drawn it in my fancy.

Enter Lancaster, Clarence, Gloucester, Westmoreland, and others.

War. Here come the heavy issue of dead Harry! O that the living Harry had the temper Of him, the worst of these three gentlemen! How many nobles then should hold their places, That must strike sail to spirits of vile sort! Ch. Just. O God, I fear all will be overturn'd! Good morrow, cousin Warwick, good morrow.

Glou. Good morrow, cousin.

Clare. Good morrow, cousin.

Lan. We meet like men that had forgot to speak.

War. We do remember; but our argument Is all too heavy to admit much talk. [heavy! Lan. Well, peace be with him that hath made us Ch. Just. Peace be with us, lest we be heavier! Glou. O, good my lord, you have lost a friend in— And I dare swear you borrow not that face [deed] Of seeming sorrow, it is sure your own.

War. Oh, my lord, you may not know what grace to find, You stand in coldest expectation: I am the sorrier: would 't were otherwise. [fair; Clare. Well, you must now speak Sir John Falstaff Which swims against your stream of quality. Ch. Just. Sweet princes, what I did, I did in hon- our by the impartial censure of my soul; [our, And never shall you see that I will beg A ragged and forestall'd remission. If truth and upright innocency fail me, I'll to the king my master that is dead, And tell him who hath sent me after him. War. Here comes the prince.

Enter King Henry the Fifth, attended.

Ch. Just. Good morrow; and God save your majesty!

King. This new and gorgeous garment, majesty, Sits not unnatural on you as you think. Brothers, you mix your sadness with some fear: This is the English, not the Turkish court; Not Amurath an Amurath succeeds, but Harry Harry. Yet be sad, good brothers, For, by my faith, it very well becomes you: Sorrow so royally in you appears That I will deeply put the fashion on And wear it in my heart: why then, be sad; But entertain no more of it, good brothers, Than a joint burden laid upon us all. For me, by Heaven, I bid you be assured, I'll be your father and your brother too; Let me but bear your love, I'll bear your cares: Yet weep that Harry's dead; and so will I; But Harry lives, that shall convert those tears By number into hours of happiness. Princes, We hope no other from your majesty. King. You all look strangely on me: and you most; You are, I think, assured I love you not. Ch. Just. I am assured, if I be measured rightly, Your majesty hath no just cause to hate me. King. No! How might a prince of my great hopes forget So great an obligation you laid upon me? What! rate, rebuke, and roughly send to prison The immediate heir of England! Was this easy? May this be washed in Lethe, and forgotten? Ch. Just. I then did use the person of your father; The image of his power lay then in me: And, in the administration of his law, While I was busy for the commonwealth, Your highness pleased to forget my place, The majesty and power of law and justice, The image of the king whom I presented, And struck me in my very seat of judgment; Whereas I was a father in your person, I gave bold way to my authority And did commit you. If the deed were ill, Be you contented, wearing now the garland, To have a son set your decrees at nought, To pluck down justice from your awful bench, To trip the course of law and blunt the sword That guards the peace and safety of your person; Nay, more, to spurn at your most royal image And mock your workings in a second body. Question your royal thoughts, make the case yours; Be now the father and propose a son, Hear ye your own dignity so far so disgraced, See your most dreadful laws so loosely slighted, Behold yourself so by a son disdain'd; And then imagine me taking your part ACT V.  SECOND PART OF KING HENRY IV. SCENE III.

And in your power soft silencing your son;
After this cold consideration, sentence me;
And, as you are a king, speak in your state
What I have done that misbecame my place,
My personal body.

King. You are right, justice, and you weigh this Therefore still bear the balance and the sword:
And I do wish your honours may increase,
Till you do live to see a son of mine
Offend you and obey you, as I did.
So shall I live to speak my father's words:
"Happy am I, that have a man so bold,
That dares do justice on my proper son;
And not less happy, having such a son,
That would deliver up his greatness so
Into the hands of justice. You did commit me:
For which, I do commit into your hand
The unstrained sword that you have used to bear;
With this remembrance, that you use the same
With the like bold, just and impartial spirit
As you have done 'gainst me. There is my hand.
You shall be as a father to my youth:
My voice shall sound as you do prompt mine ear,
And I will sleep and have my intents
To your well-practised wise directions.
And, princes all, believe me, I beseech you;
My father is gone wild into his grave,
For in his tomb lie my affections:
And with his spirit sadly I survive.
To mock the expectation of the world,
To frustrate prophecies and to raze out
Rotten opinion, who hath writ me down
After my seeming. The tide of blood in me
Hath proudly flow'd in vanity till now:
Now doth it turn and ebb back to the sea,
Where it shall mingle with the state of floods
And flow henceforth in formal majesty.
Now call we our high court of parliament:
And let us choose such limbs of noble counsel,
That the great body of our state may go
In equal rank with the best governed nation;
That war, or peace, or both at once, may be
As things acquainted and familiar to us:
In which you, father, shall have foremost hand.
Our coronation done, we will accite,
As I before remember'd, all our state:
And, God conspiring to my good intents,
No prince or near blood have just cause to say,
To short en'tart Henry's happy life one day! [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Gloucestershire. Shallow's orchard.

Enter Falstaff, Shallow, Silence, Davy, Bardolph, and the Page.

Shal. Nay, you shall see my orchard, where, in an arbour, we will eat a last year's pippin of my own grafting, with a dish of caraways, and so forth: come, cousin Silence: and then to bed.

Fal. Fore God, you have here a goodly dwelling and a ru.

Shal. Barren, barren, barren: beggars all, beggars all, Sir John: marry, good air. Spread, Davy; spread, Davy; well said, Davy.

Fal. This Davy serves you for good uses; he is your serving-man and your husband.

Shal. A good varlet, a good varlet, a very good varlet, Sir John: by his mass, I have drunk too much sack at supper: a good varlet. Now sit down, now sit down: come cousin.

Sil. Ah, sirrah! quoth-a, we shall
Do nothing but eat, and make good cheer.

And praise God for the merry year;
When flesh is cheap and females victual,
And lusty lads roam here and there
So merrily,
And ever among so merrily.

Fal. There's a merry heart! Good Master Silence, I'll give you a health for that anon.

Shal. Give Master Bardolph some wine, Davy.

Davy. Sweet sir, sit; I'll be with you anon; most sweet sir, sit. Master page, must master page, sit.

Proface! What you want in meat, we'll have in drink: but you must bear: the heart's all. [Exit.

Shal. Be merry, Master Bardolph; and, my little soldier there, be merry.

Sil. Be merry, be merry, my wife has all; [Singing.

For women are shrews, both short and tall:
'Tis merry in hall when beards wag all,
And welcome merry Shrovetide.

Be merry, be merry.

Fal. I did not think Master Silence had been a man of this mett. [Exit.

Sil. Who, I? I have been merry twice and once ere now.

Re-enter Davy.

Davy. There's a dish of leather-coats for you. [To Bardolph.

Shal. Davy! Davy. Your worship! I'll be with you straight [to Bardolph]. A cup of wine, sir? Sil. A cup of wine that's brisk and fine. [Singing.

And drink unto the lemon wine;
And a merry heart lives long-a.

Fal. Well said, Master Silence.

Shal. An we shall be merry, now comes in the sweet o'the night.

Fal. Health and long life to you, Master Silence.

Sil. Fill the cup, and let it come: [Singing.

I'll pledge you a mile to the bottom.

Shal. Honest Bardolph, welcome: if thou wouldst have anything, and will not call, beshrew thy heart.

Welcome, my little tiny thief [to the Page], and welcome indeed too. I'll drink to Master Bardolph, and to all the cavaliers about London.

Davy. I hope to see London once ere I die.

Fal. An I might see you there, Davy—

Shal. By the mass, you'll crack a quart together, ha! will you not, Master Bardolph?

Bard. Yea, sir, in a pottle-pot.

Shal. By God's liggens, I thank thee: the knife will stick by thee, I can assure thee that. A' will not out; he is true bred.

Bard. And I'll stick by him, sir.

Shal. Why, there spoke a king. Lack nothing: be merry. [Knocking within.] Look who's at door there, ho! who knocks?

Fal. Why, now you have done me right. [To Silence, seeing him take off a bumper.

Sil. Do me right. [Singing.

And dub me knight:

Samingo.

Is't not so?

Fal. 'Tis so. [somewhat.

Sil. Is 't so? Why then, say an old man can do

Re-enter Davy.

Davy. An't please your worship, there's one Pistol come from the court with news.

Fal. From the court! let him come in.

Enter Pistol.

How now, Pistol?

Pist. Sir John, God save you! Fal. What wind blew you hither, Pistol?

Pist. Not the ill wind which blows no man to good. Sweet knighthood, thou art now one of the greatest men in this realm.

Sil. By 'r lady, I think a' be, but goodman Puff of Barson.

Pist. Puff! Puff!

Puff in thy teeth, most recreant coward base! 361
Sir John, I am thy Pistol and thy friend, And heller-skelter have I rode to thee, And golden times and happy news of price.

Pist. I pray thee now, deliver them like a man of this world.

Pist. A foure for the world and worldlings base! I speak of Africa and golden joys.

Pist. It is my knighthood that is thy news? Let King Cophetua know the truth thereof.

Sir. And Robin Hood, Scarlet, and John.

[Singing.]

Pist. Shall dunghill curs confront the Helicons? And shall good news be buffled? Then, Pistol, lay it head in Falstaff's lap.

Sir. Honest gentleman, I know not your breeding

Pist. Why then, lamen, therefore.

Sal. Give me pardon, sir; if, sir, you come with news from the court, I take it there's but two ways, either to utter them, or to conceal them. I am, sir, under the king, in some authority.

Pist. Under which king, Besouian? speak, or die.

Sal. Under King Harry.

Pist. I'll Harry the Fourth? or Fifth?

Sal. Harry the Fourth.

Pist. A foure for thine office!

Sir John, thy tender lambkin may be:

Harry the Fifth 's the man. I speak the truth: When Pistol lies, do this; and fig me, like

The bragging Spanish.

Pist. What, is the old king dead?

Pist. As nail in door; the things I speak are just.

Bard. O joyful day!

I would not take a Knighthood for my fortune.

Pist. What! I do bring good news.

Pist. Carry Master Silence to bed. Master Shallow, my Lord Shallow, and what thou wilt; I am fortune's steward — get on thy boots: we'll ride all night. O sweet Pistol! Away, Bardolph! [Exit Bard.] Come, Pistol, utter more to me; and withal devise something to do thyself good. Boot, boot, Master Shallow: I know the young king is sick for me. Let us take any man's horses; the laws of England are at my commandment. Blessed are they that have seen my friends; and woe to my lord chief-justice!

Pist. Let vultures vile seize on his lungs also! Where is the life that late I read t' say they: Why, here it is; welcome these pleasant days!

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—London. A street.

Enter Beadles, draying in Hostess Quickly and Doll Tearsheet.

Host. No, thou arrant knave; I would to God that I might die, that I might have thee hanged: thou hast drawn my shoulder out of joint.

First Bead. The constables have delivered her over to me; and she shall have whipping-cheer enough, I warrant her; there hath been a man or two lately killed about her.

Doll. Nut-hook, nut-hook, you lie. Come on: I'll tell thee what, thou dammed trip-visaged rascal, an she child I now go with do miscarry, thou wert better thou hadst struck thy mother, thou pap-sweated wench.

Host. O the Lord, that Sir John were come! he would make this a bloody day to somebody. But I pray God the fruit of her womb miscarry!

First Bead. If it do, you shall have a dozen of qush; Pistage lay thy have but seven now. Come, I charge you both go with me; for the man is dead whom you and Pistol beat amongst you.

Doll. I'll tell you what, thou thin man in a canoe, I will have you as soundly swung for this — you be in bottle rogue, you geth finished correctioner, if you be not swung, I'll foreswear kirtles. [Come.

First Bead. Come, come, you she knight-errant, Host. O God, that right should thus overcome might; Well, of suffrance comes ease. [Tice.

Doll. Come, you rogue, come: bring me to a just-

Host. Ay, come, you starved blood-hound.

Doll. Goodman death, Goodman bones!

Host. Thou atone, thou!

Doll. Come, you thin thing: come, you rascal;

First Bead. Very well. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—A public place near Westminster Abbey.

Enter two Grooms, strewing rushes.

First Groom. More rushes, more rushes.

Sec. Groom. The trumpets have sounded twice. First Groom. 'Twill be two o'clock ere they come from the coronation: dispatch, dispatch. [Exeunt.

Enter Falstaff, Shallow, Pistol, Bardolph, and Page.

Fal. Stand here by me, Master Robert Shallow; I will make the king do you grace: I will leer upon him as 'a comes by; and do but mark the countenance that he will give me.

Pist. God bless thy lungs, good knight.

Fal. Come here, Pistol; stand behind me. O, if I had had time to have made new livers, I would have bestowed the thousand pound I borrowed of you. But 'tis no matter; this poor show doth better: this doth infer the zeal I had to see him.

Sal. It doth so.

Fal. It shows thy earnestness of affection,—

Sal. It doth so.

Fal. My devotion.—

Sal. It doth, it doth, it doth.

Fal. As it were, to ride day and night; and not to deliberate, not to remember, not to have patience to shift me,—

Sal. It is best, certain.

Fal. But to stand stained with travel, and sweating with desire to see him; thinking of nothing else, putting all affairs else in oblivion, as if there were nothing else to be done but to see him.

Pist. 'Tis 'semper idem,' for 'obscure hoc nihil est:' 't is all in every part.

Sal. 'Tis so, indeed.

Fal. My knight, I will inflame thy noble liver, And make thee rage.

Thy Doll, and Helen of thy noble thoughts, Is in base durance and contagious prison; Haled thither With so much fanciful and dirty hand: [smoke, Rouse up revenge from ebon den with fell Aiceto's For Doll is in. Pistol speaks nought but truth.

Fal. I will deliver her,

Pist. There roar'd the sea, and trumpet-clanger sounds.

Enter the King and his train, the Lord Chief-Jus- tice among them.

Fal. God save thy grace, King Hal! my royal Hi.

Fal. The heavens keep and guard, keep, most royal imp of fame!

Fal. 'Tis you speak?

Fal. My king! my Jove! I speak to thee, my heart!
King. I know thee not, old man: fall to thy prayers; How ill white hairs become a fool and jester! I have long dream'd of such a kind of man, So surfeit-swell'd, so old and so profane; But, being awaked, I do despise my dream, Make less thy body hence, and more thy grace; Leave gomandizing: know the grave doth gape For thee thrice wider than for other men. Reply not to me with a fool-born jest: Presume not that I am the thing I was; For God doth know, so shall the world perceive, That I have turned away my former self; So will I those that kept me company, When thou dost hear I am as I have been, Approach me, and thou shalt be as thou wast, The tuto and the feeder of my riots: Till then, I banish thee, on pain of death, As I have done the rest of my misleaders, Not to come near our person by ten mile. For competence of life I will allow you, That lack of means enforce you not to evil: And, as we hear you do reform yourselves, We will, according to your strengths and qualities, Give you advancement. Be it your charge, my lord, To see perform'd the tenour of our word. Set on. [Exeunt King, &c.] Fal. Master Shallow, I love you a thousand pound. Shal. Yea, marry, Sir John; which I beseech you to let me have home with me. Fal. That can hardly be, Master Shallow. Do not you grieve at this: I shall be sent for in private to him: look you, he must seem thus to the world: fear not your advancements; I will be the man yet that shall make you great. Shal. I cannot well perceive how, unless you should give me your doublet and stuff me out with straw. I beseech you, good Sir John, let me have five hundred of my thousand. Fal. Sir, I will be as good as my word: this that you heard was but a colour. [John. Shal. A colour that I fear you will die in, Sir Fal. Fear no colours; go with me to dinner: come, Lieutenant Pistol; come, Bardolph: I shall be sent for soon at night. Re-enter Prince John, the Lord Chief-Justice; Officers with them. Ch. Just. Go, carry Sir John Falstaff to the Fleet: Take all his company along with him. Fal. My lord, my lord, — [soon. Ch. Just. I cannot now speak: I will hear you Take them away.

Falstaff.—Yea, marry, let's see Bulleaff. Bulleaff.—Here, sir. Falstaff.—Forte God, a likely fellow! Come, prick me Bulleaff till he roar again. Act III. Scene ii.

Pist. Si fortuna me tormenta, spero contenta. [Exeunt all but Prince John and the Chief-Justice. Ll. I like this fair proceeding of the king's: He hath intent his wonted followers Shall be all very well provided for; But all are banish'd till their conversations Appear more wise and modest to the world. Ch. Just. And so they are. Ll. The king hath call'd his parliament, my lord. Ch. Just. He hath. Ll. I will lay odds that, ere this year expire, We bear our civil swords and native fire As far as France: I heard a bird so sing, Whose music, to my thinking, pleased the king. Come, will you hence? [Exeunt.

EPILOGUE.

Spoken by a Dancer.

First my fear; then my courtesy; last my speech. My fear is, your displeasure; my courtesy, my duty; and my speech, to beg your pardons. If you look for a good speech now, you undo me: for what I have to say is of mine own making; and what indeed I should say will, I doubt, prove mine own marring. But to the purpose, and so to the venture. Be it known to you, as it is very well, I was lately here in the end of a dispensing play, to pray your patience for it and to promise you a better. I meant indeed to pay you with this; which, if like an ill venture it come unluckily home, I break, and you, my gentle creditors, lose. Here I promised you I would be and here I commit my body to your mercies: hate me some and I will pay you some and, as most debtors do, promise you infinitely.

• If my tongue cannot entertain you to acquit me, will you command me to use my legs? and yet that were but light payment, to dance out of your debt. But a good conscience will make any possible satisfaction, and so would I. All the gentlewomen here have forgiven me: if the gentlemen will not, then the gentlemen do not agree with the gentlewomen, which was never seen before in such an assembly.

One word more, I beseech you. If you be not too much choyed with fat meat, our humble author will more than once, with Sir John in it, and make you merry with fair Katharine of France: where, for anything I know, Falstaff shall die of a sweat, unless already a be killed with your hard opinions; for Oldeastle died a martyr, and this is not the man. My tongue is weary: when my legs are too, I will bid you good night: and so kneel down before you; but, indeed, to pray for the queen.

PROLOGUE.

Enter Chorus.

Chor. O for a Muse of fire, that would ascend
The brightest heaven of invention,
A kingdom for a stage, princes to act
And monarchs to behold the swelling scene!
Then should the warlike Harry, like himself,
Assume the port of Mars; and at his heels, [fire
Leash'd in like hounds, should famine, sword and Crouch for employment. But pardon, gentles all,
The flat unraised spirits that have dared
On this unworthy scaffold to bring forth
So great an object: can this cockpit hold
The vasty fields of France? or may we cram
Within this wooden O the very casques
That did affright the air at Agincourt?
O, pardon! since a crooked figure may
Attest in little place a million;

And let us, ciphers to this great account,
On your imaginary forces work.
Suppose within the girdle of these walls
Are now confined two mighty monarchies,
Whose high upraised and abutting fronts
The perilous narrow ocean parts asunder:
Piece out our imperfections with your thoughts;
Into a thousand parts divide one man,
And make imaginary puissance;
Think, when we talk of horses, that you see them
Printing their proud hoofs i' the receiving earth;
For 'tis your thoughts that now must deck our kings,
Carry them here and there; jumping o'er times,
Turning the accomplishment of many years
Into an hour-glass: for the which supply,
Admit me Chorus to this history;
Who prologue-like your humble patience pray,
Gently to hear, kindly to judge, our play. [Exit.

ACT I.

SCENE I. — London. An ante-chamber in the King's palace.

Enter the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Bishop of Ely.

Cant. My lord, I'll tell you; that self bill is urged,
Which in the eleventh year of the last king's reign
Was like, and had indeed against us pass'd,
But that the scabbling and unquiet time
Did push it out of farther question.

Ely. But how, my lord, shall we resist it now?

Cant. It must be thought on. If it pass against us,

We lose the better half of our possession:
For all the temporal lands which men devote
By testament have given to the church.
Would they strip from us: being valued thus:
As much as would maintain, to the king's honour,
Full fifteen ealls and fifteen hundred knights,
Six thousand and two hundred good esquires;
And, to relief of lazes and weak age,
Of indigent faint souls past corporeal toil,
A hundred almshouses right well supplied;
And to the coffers of the king beside,
A thousand pounds by the year: thus runs the bill.
ACT I.

KING HENRY V.

SCENE I. [Enter Ely, Gloucester, Exeter, Warwick, Westmorland, and Attendants.]

Ely. This would drink deep.

Cont. 'T would drink the cup and all.

Ely. But what prevention?

Cont. The grace and fair regard.

Ely. And a true lover of the holy church.

Cont. The courses of his youth promised it not.

The breath no sooner left his father's body,

But that his wildness, mortified in him,

Scried to die too; yea, at that very moment

Consideration, like an angel, came

And wept the offending Adam out of him,

Leaving his body as a paradise,

To envelope and contain celestial spirits.

Never was such a sudden scholar made;

Never came reformation in a flood,

With such a heady current, scoriing faults;

Nor never Hydra-headed wildness

So soon did lose his seat and all at once

As in this king.

Ely. We are blessed in the change.

Cont. Hear him but reason in divinity,

And all-admiring with an inward wish

You would desire the king's death made a prelate:

Hear him debate of commonwealth affairs,

You would say it had been all in all his study:

List his discourse of war, and you shall hear

A fearful battle render'd you in music:

Turn him to any cause of policy,

The thread of civil state to loose,

Familiar as his garter: that, when he speaks,

The air, a charter'd libertine, is still,

And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,

To steal his sweet and honey'd sentences;

So that the art and practic part of life

Must be the mistress to this theoretic:

Which is a wonder how his grace should glean it.

Since his addiction was to courses vain,

His companies unletter'd, rude and shallow,

His hours fill'd up with riots, banquetts, sports,

And never noted in him any study,

Any retirement, any sequesteration

From open haunts and popularity.

Ely. The strawberry grows underneath the nettle

And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best

Neighbour'd by fruit of baser quality:

And so the prince obscured his contemplation

Under the veil of wildness, no doubt,

Grew like the summer grass, fastest by night,

Unseen, yet creasive in his faculty.

Cont. It must be so; for miracles are ceased;

And therefore we must needs admit the means

How things are perfected.

Ely. But, my good lord,

Now for mitigation of this bill

Urged by the commons? Doth his majesty

Incline to it, or no?

Cont. He seems indifferent,

Or rather swaying more upon our part

Than cherishing the exhibitors against us;

For I have made an offer to his majesty,

Upon our spiritual convocation

And in regard of causes now in hand,

Which I have open'd to his grace at large,

As touching France, to give a greater sum

Than ever at one time the clergy yet

Did to his predecessors part withal.

Ely. How did this offer seem received, my lord?

Save that there was not time enough to hear,

As I perceived his grace would fain have done,

The several and unhallowed exchanges

Of his true titles to some certain dukedoms

And generally to the crown and seat of France

Derived from Edward, his great-grandfather.

Ely. What was the impediment that broke this off?

Cont. The French ambassador upon that instant

Craved audience; and the hour, I think, is come

To give him hearing: is it four o'clock?

Ely. 'Tis.

Cont. Thus we go in, to know his embassy;

Which I could with a ready guess declare,

Before the Frenchman speak a word of it.

Ely. I'll wait upon you, and I long to hear it.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. — The same. The Presence chamber.

Enter King Henry, Gloucester, Bedford, Exeter, Warwick, Westmorland, and Attendants.

K. Hen. Where is my gracious Lord of Canterbury?

Exc. Not here in presence.

K. Hen. Send for him, good uncle. We'll

Shall we call in the ambassador, my liege?

K. Hen. Not yet, my cousin; we would be resolved,

Before we hear him, of some things of weight

That task our thoughts, concerning us and France.

Enter the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Bishop of Ely.

Cont. God and his angels guard your sacred throne

And make you long become it!

K. Hen. Sure, we thank you.

My learned lord, we pray you to proceed

And justly and religiously unto

Why the English man knows the things have in France

Or should, or should not, bar us in our claim:

And God forbid, my dear and faithful lord, [ng,

That you should fashion, wret, or bow your head:

Or nicely charge your understanding soul

With opening titles misereate, whose right

Suits not in native colours with the truth;

For God doth know how many now in health

Shall drop their blood in approbation

Of what your reverence shall incite us to.

Therefore take heed how you impawn our person,

How you awake our sleeping sword of war:

We charge you, in the name of God, take heed;

For never two such kingdoms did contend

Without much fall of blood; whose guiltless drops

Are every one a woe, a sore complaint

Gainst him whose wrong givensedge unto the swords

That make such waste in brief mortality.

Under this our present emergency,

For we will hear, note and believe in heart

That what you speak is in your conscience wash'd

As pure as sin with baptism.

Ely. Cont. Then hear me, gracious sovereign, and you

That owe yourselves, your lives and services

To this imperial throne. There is no bar

To make against your highness' claim to France

But this, which they produce from Pharamond,

'In terram Salicam mulieres ne succedant';

'No woman shall succeed in Salique land;

Which Salique land the French unjustly gloze

To be the realm of France, and Pharamond

The founder of this law and female bar.

Yet their own authors faithfully affirm

That the land Salique is in Germany,

Between the floods of Sala and of Elbe; [ons,

Where Charles the Great, having subdued the sax-

There left behind and settled certain French

Who, holding in disdain the German women

For some dishonest manners of their life,

Establish'd then this law: to wit, no female

Should be inherifrix in Salique land:

Which Salique, as I said, 'twixt Elbe and Sala,

Is at this day in Germany called Meissen. Then doth it well appear the Salique law

Was not devised for the realm of France;

Nor did the French possess the Salique land

Until four hundred one and twenty years

After defenition of King Pharamond;

I'dy supposed the founder of this law;
Who died within the year of our redemption
Four hundred and sixty-six; and Charles the Great Subdued the Saxons, and did seat the French
Beyond the river Sala. In the year
Eighteen thousand, two hundred and eighty-four of the writers say
King Pepin, which deposed Childeric,
Did, as his heir general, being descended
Of Blithild, which was daughter to King Clothair,
Make claim and title to the crown of France.
Hugh Capet also, who usurp'd the crown
Of Charles the duke of Lorraine, sole heir male
Of the true line and stock of Charles the Great,
To find his title with some shows of truth,
Though, in pure truth, it was corrupt and naught,
Conveyed himself as heir to the Lady Lingare,
Daughter to Charlemain, who was the son
To Lewis the emperor, and son with the son
Of Charles the Great. Also King Lewis the Tenth,
Who was sole heir to the usurper Capet,
Could not keep quiet in his conscience,
Wearing the crown of France, till satisfied
That fair Queen Isabel, his grandmother,
Was at last publish'd and proclaimed by Daughter to Charles the foro(aid duke of Lorraine:
By the which marriage the line of Charles the Great
Was re-united to the crown of France,
So that, as clear as is the summer's sun,
King Pepin's title and Hugh Capet's claim,
King Lewis the Tenth, hold in right and title of the female
To hold in right and title of the female:
So do the kings of France unto this day,
Now they would hold up this Salique Law
To bar your highness claiming from the female,
And rather choose to have them in a net
Than amply to imbark their crooked titles
Usurp'd from you and your progenitors. [claim?]

K. Hen. I will right and conscience make this
Cont. The sin upon my head, dread sovereign!
For in the book of Numbers is it writ,
When the man dies, let the inheritance
Descend unto the daughter. Gracious lord,
Stand for your own: unwind your bloody flag;
Look back into your mighty ancestors;
Go, my dread lord, to your great-grand'sire's tomb,
From whom you claim; invoke his warlike spirit,
And your great-uncle's. Edward the Black Prince,
Who from the French ground the play of tragedy,
Making defeat on the full power of France,
While his most mighty father on a hill
Stood smiling to behold his lion's whelp
Forage in blood of French nobility,
O noble English, that could entertain
With their forces the full tide of France
And let another half stand blushing by,
All out of work and cold for action!
Ely. Awake remembrance of these valiant dead
And with your puissant arm renew their feats:
You are their heir; you sit upon their throne;
The blood and courage that renowned them
Runs in your veins; and my thrice-puissant liege
Is in the very May-morn of his youth,
Ripe for exploits and mighty enterprises. [earth
Ecc. Your brother kings and monarchs of the
Do all expect that you should rouse yourself,
As did the former lions of your blood.
West. They know your grace hath cause and means and might;
So hath your highness; never king of England
Had nobles richer and more loyal subjects,
Whose hearts have left their bodies here in England
And lie planted in the living bowels of France.
Cont. O, let their bodies follow, my dear liege,
With blood and sword and fire to win your right;
In aid whereof we of the spiritually
Will raise your highness such a mighty sum
As never did the clergy at one time
Bring in to any of your ancestors.

K. Hen. We must not only arm to invade the
But lay down our proportions to defend [French,
Against the Scot, who will make road upon us
With all advantages.

Cat. We shall find these marches, gracious sovereign,
Shall be a wall sufficient to defend
Our inland from the pilling borderers. [only,

K. Hen. We do not mean the courting snatchers
But fear the main intendment of the Scot,
Who hath been still a giddy neighbour to us;
For some time it shall read that the great-grandfather
Never went with his forces into France
But that the Scot on his unfurnished kingdom
 Came pouring, like the tide into a breach,
With ample and brim fullness of his force,
Galling the gleaned land with hot assays,
And curtaining the lands around the towns;
That England, being empty of defence,
Hath shook and trembled at the ill neighbourhood.

Cat. She hath been then more fear'd than harm'd, my liege;
For her heur but exempl'd by herself;
When all her soldiers hath been in France
And she a mourning widow of her nobles,
She hath herself not only well defended
But taken and impounded as a stray
The King of Scots: whom she did send to France,
To fill King Edward's fame with prisoner kings
And make his name a subject of so much praise
As is the coze and bottom of the sea
With smoken wreck and sunless treasures.

West. But there's a saying very old and true,
That if you will France win
Then with Scotland first begin:
For once the eagle England being in pray
To her unguarded nest the weasel Sets;
Comes sneaking and so sucks her princely eggs,
Playing the mouse in absence of the cat,
To tear and havoc more than she can eat.

Ecc. It follows then the cat must stay at home;
Yet that is but a crush'd necessity,
Since we have locks to safeguard necessaries,
And pretty traps to catch the petty thieves.
While that the armed hand doth fight abroad,
The advised head defends itself at home;
For government, though high and low and lower,
Put into parts, doth keep in one consent,
Congregating in a full and natural close,
Like music.

Cont. Therefore doth heaven divide
The state of man in divers functions,
Setting endeavour in continual motion;
To which is fixed, as an aim or butt,
Obedience; for so many the honey bees,
Creatures that by a rule in nature teach
The act of order to a peopled kingdom.
They have a king and officers of sorts;
Where some, like magistrates, correct at home,
Others, like merchants, venture trade abroad,
Others, like soldiers, armed their settings,
Make boot upon the summer's velvet buds,
Which pillage they with merry march bring home
To the tent-royal of their emperor;
Who, busied in his majesty, surveys
Cont. Of the singing masons building roofs of gold,
The civic citizens knecking up the honey,
The poor mechanic porters crowding in
Their heavy burdens at his narrow gate,
The sad-eyed justice, with his surly hum,
Delivering o'er to executors pale
The lazy yawning drone, I thisffer,
That many things, having due reference
To one consent, may work contrariously:
As many arrows, loosed several ways,
Come to one mark; as many ways meet in one town;
As many fresh streams meet in one salt sea;
As many lines close in the dial's centre;
KING HENRY V.

PROLOGUE.

Enter Ambassadors of France.

Now are we well resolved: and, by God's help,
And yours, the noble sinews of our power,
France being ours, we'll bend it to our awe,
Or break it all to pieces: or there we'll sit,
Ruling in large and ample empery.
Our France and all her almost kingily dukedoms,
Or lay these bones in an unworthy urn,
Tombless, with no remembrance over them:
Either our history shall with full mouth
Speak freely of our acts, or else our grave,
Like Turkish mutts, shall have a tongueless mouth,
Not worshipp'd with a waken epitaph.

Enter Chorus.

Chor. Now all the youth of England are on fire,
And stilette down the wardrobe lies;
Now thrive the armourers, and honour's thought
Reigns solely in the breast of every man:
They sell the pasture now to buy the horse,
Following the mirror of all Christian kings,
With winged heels, as English Mercureys.
For now sits Expectation in the air,
And hides a sword from hills unto the point
With crowns imperial, crowns and coronets,
Promised to Harry and his followers.
The French, advised by good Intelligence
Of this most dreadful preparation,
Shake in their fear and with pale policy
Seek to divert the English purposes.
O England! model to thy inward greatness,
Like little body with a mighty heart,
What mightst thou do, that honour would thee do,
Were all thy children kind and natural?
But see thy fault! France hath in thee found out
A nest of hollow bosoms, which he fills
With treacherous crowns; and three corrupt men,
Our Richard Earl of Cambridge, the first;
Henry Lord Scroop of Masham, and the third,
Sir Thomas Grey, knight, of Northumberland.
Have, for the gift of France.—O guilt indeed!—
Confirm'd conspiracy with fearful France:
And by their hands this grace of kings must die,
If hell and treason hold their promises,
Er e he take ship for France, and in Southampton.

Linger your patience on; and we'll digest

The abuse of distance; force a play;

The一方面是 agreed;

The king is set from London: and the scene

Is now transported, gentle, to Southampton;

There is the playhouse now, there must you sit;

And thence to France shall we convey you safe,

And bring you back, charming the narrow seas

To give you gentle pass; for, if we may,

We'll not offend one stomach with our play.

But, till the king come forth, and not till then.

Unto Southampton do we shift our scene. [Exit.

Enter Corporal Nym and Lieutenant Bardolph.

Bardolph. Well met, Corporation.

Nym. Good morrow, Lieutenant Bardolph.

Bardolph. What, are Ancient Pistol and you friends yon?

Nym. For my part, I care not; I say little; but when time shall serve, there shall be smiles, but that shall be as it may. I dare not fight; but I will wink and hold out mine iron; it is a simple one;

but what though? it will toast cheese, and it will endure cold as another man's sword will; and there's an end.

Bardolph. I will bestow a breakfast to make you friends; and we'll be all three sworn brothers to France: let it be so, good Corporation Nym.

Nym. Faith, I will live so long as may, that's the certain of it; and when I cannot live any longer, I will do as I may; that is my rest, that is the rendezvous of it.

Bardolph. It is certain, corporal, that he is married to Nell Quickly; and certainly she did you wrong; for you were troth-plight to her.

Nym. I cannot tell; things must be as they may: men may sleep, and they may have their throats about them at that time; and some say knives have edges. It must be as it may; though patience be a tired mare, yet she will plod. There must be conclusions. Well, I cannot tell.

Enter Pistol and Hostess.

Bardolph. Here comes Ancient Pistol and his wife:

good corporal, be patient here. How now, mine host!

Pistol. Base talk, call'st thou me host? [Pistol: Now, by this hand, I swear, I scorn the term;

Nor shall my Nell keep lodgers.

Nym. No, by the troth, not long; for we cannot lodger and lodge a dozen or fourteen gentlewomen that live honestly by the prick of their needles, but it will be thought we keep a bawdy house straight.

[Pistol and Nym draw. O well a day, Lady, if he be not drawn now! we shall see willful adultery and murder committed.

Bardolph. Good lieutenant! good corporal! offer nothing here.

Nym. Pistol!

Pistol. Dish for thee, Iceland dog! thou prick-car’d cur of Iceland!

Hostess. Good Corporal Nym, show thy valour, and put up your sword.

Nym. Will you shog off? I would have you solus.

Pistol. 'Solus,' egregious dog? O viper vile!

The 'solus' in thy most nerval face;

The 'solus' in thy teeth, and in thy throat,

Have no mercy to knock, in thy man, perdy,

And, which is worse, within thy nasty mouth!

I do rector the 'solus' in thy bowels:

For I can take, and Pistol's cock is up,

And flashing fire will follow.

Nym. I am not Barbazon; you cannot conjure me.

I have a lady by my knock, I manage differently well.

If you grow foule with me, Pistol, I will scour you with my rapier, as I may, in fair terms; if you would walk off, I would prick your guts a little, in good terms, as I may: and that's the humour of it.

Pistol. O braggar却又 magnificent wights!

The grave doth gape, and dotting death is near;

Therefore exhale.

Bardolph. Hear me, hear me what I say: he that strikes the first stroke, I'll run him up to the hilts,

as I am a soldier. [Drums.

Pistol. An oath of nickle might; and fury shall Give me thy list, thy fore-foot to me give: [abate. Thy spirits are most tall.

Nym. I will cut thy throat, one time or other, in fair terms, that is the humour of it.

Pistol. 'Couple a gore!'

That is the word; I thee defy again.

O hound of Crete, think'st thou my spouse to get?

No: to the spital go,

And from the powdering-tub of infamy

Fetch forth the hazar kite of Cressid's kind,

Doll Tear-sheet she by name, and her espouse:

I have, and I will hold, the quandam Quickly

For the only she; and — pauce, there's enough.

Go to.

Enter the Boy.

Boy. Mine host Pistol, you must come to my master, and you, hostess: he is very sick, and would to God Bardolph, put thy face between his sheets, and do the office of a warming-man. Faith, he's very Bardolph. Away, you rogue! [pil.

Host. By my troth, he'll yield the crow a puddling one of these days. The king has killed his heart.

Good husband, come home presently.

BARDOLPH. Come, shall I make you two friends? We must to France together: why the devil should we keep knives to cut one another's throats?

Pistol. Let floods o'erswell, and rains for food howl!

Nym. You'll pay me the eight shillings I won of you at better time.

Pistol. Base is the slave that pays. [of it.

Nym. That now I will have: that's the humour

Pistol. As manhood shall compound: push home. [They draw.

Bardolph. By this sword, he that makes the first thrust, I'll kill him; by this sword, I will.

Pistol. Sword is an oath, and oaths must have their course.

Bardolph. Corporation Nym, an thou wilt be friends, be friends: an thou wilt not, why, then, be enemies with me too. Prithee, put up.

Hostess. I shall have my eight shillings I won of you at better time.

Pistol. A noble shalt thou have, and present pay;

And honor likewise will I give to thee,

And friendship shall combine, and brotherhood:

I'll live by Nym, and Nym shall live by me;

Is not this just? for I shall sutter be

Unto the camp, and profits will accrue.

Give me thy hand.

Nym. I shall have my noble?

Pistol. In cash most justly paid.

Nym. Well, then, that's the humour of t.'

Enter Hostess.

Hostess. As ever you came of women, come in quickly to Sir John. Ah, poor heart! he is so shaken of a burning quotidian tertian, that it is most lamentable to behold. Sweet men, come to him.

Nym. Hostess, you shall hath run bad humours on the knight; that's the even of it.

Pistol. Nym, thou hast spoke the right;

His heart is fracted and corroboree.

Nym. The king is a good king: but it must be as it may; he passes some humours and cares.

Pistol. Let us condole the knight; for, wabkins

we will live,
KING HENRY THE FIFTH.—Act II., Scene 1.
Grey of Northumberland, this same is yours:
Read them; and know, I know your worthiness.
My Lord of Westmoreland, and uncle Exeter,
We will aboard to-night. Why, how now, gentle:
What see you in those papers that you lose
[men:]
So much complexion? Look ye, how they change!
Their checks are fair. Why, what read you there,
That hath so cowardly and chased your blood
Out of appearance?
Can.
I do confess my fault;
And do submit me to your highness' mercy.
Grey.
[To which we all appeal.]
Scroop.
K. Hen. The mercy that was quick in us but late,
By your own counsel is suppress'd and kill'd:
You must not dare, for shame, to talk of mercy;
For your own reasons turn into your bosoms,
As dogs upon their masters, worrying you.
See you, my princes and my noble peers, [here,]
These English monsters! [here,]
You know how apt our love was to accord
To furnish him with all apperiments
Belonging to his honour; and this man
Hath, for a few light crowns, lightly conspired,
And sworn unto the practices of France,
With whom he hath been known. Now, in what wise
This knight, no less for bounty bound to us
Than Cambridge is, hath likewise sworn. But, O,
What shall I say to thee, Lord Scroop? thou cruel,
Ingrateful, savage, and inhuman creature!
Thou that didst bear the key of all my counsels,
That knew'st the very bottom of my soul,
That almost mightst have coin'd me into gold,
Wouldst thou have practised on me for thy use,
May it be possible, that foreign hire
Could out of thee extract one spark of evil
That might annoy my finger? 't is so strange,
That these wounds, and this is so strange,
As black and white, my eye will scarcely see it.
Treason and murder ever kept together;
As two yoke-devils sworn to either's purpose,
Working so grossly in a natural cause.
That admiration did not whoop at them:
But thou, against all proportion, didst bring in Wonder to wait on treason and on murder:
And whatsoever cunning hand it was
That wrought upon thee so posteroerously
Hath got the voice in hell for excellence:
All other devils that suggest by treason
Do but only deserve their breeding up done.
With patches, colours, and with forms being fetched
From glistering semblances of piety:
But he that temper'd thee bade thee stand up,
Gave thee no instance why thou shouldst do treason,
Unless to durb thee with the name of traitor.
If that same demon that hath gull'd thee thus
Should with his lion gait walk the whole world,
He might return to vastly Tartar back,
And tell the legions: 'I can never win
A soul so easy as that Englishman's,'
O, how hast thou with jealousy infected
The sweetness of affiance! How so unfaithful?
Why, so didst thou: seem they grave and learned?
Why, so didst thou: come they of noble family?
Why, so didst thou: seem they religious?
Why, so didst thou: or are they spare in diet,
Free from gross passion or of mirth or anger,
Constant in spirit, not swerving with the blood,
Carnish'd and deck'd with all the lust,
Not working with the eye without the ear,
And but in purged judgment trusting neither?
Such and so finely bolst'd didst thou seem:
And thus thy fall hath left a kind of blot
To mark the fuller fraught; and so inclined
With some suspicion, I will weep for thee;
For this revolt of thine, methinks, is like
Another fall of man. Their faults are open:

{369}
Arrest them to the answer of the law:
And God acqnit them of their practices!”

_Exc._ I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of Richard Earl of Cambridge.

I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of Henry Lord Scroop of Masham.

I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of Thomas Grey, Knight of Dacre and Cumberland.

Scroop, Our purposes God justly hath discover’d:
And I repent my fault more than my death;
Which I beseech your highness to forgive,
Although my body pay the price of it.

_Cam._ For me, the gold of France did not seduce;
Although I did admit it as a motive,
The sooner to effect what I intended:
But God be thanked for prevention;
Which I in sufferance heartily will rejoice,
Beseeching God and you to pardon me.

Greg. Never did faithful subject more rejoice
At the discovery of most dangerous treason
Than I do at this hour joy o’er myself,
Prevented from a damned enterprise:
My fault, but not my body, pardon, sovereign. [_tense._

_Ken._ God quit you in my mercy! Hear yourself;
You have conspired against our royal person,
Join’d them, and your expos’d land from his coffers
Received the golden earnest of our death;
Wherein you would have sold your king to slaughter,
His princes and his peers to servitude,
His subjects to oppression and contempt
And his whole kingdom into desolation.
Tainting our person seek we no revenge;
But we our kingdom’s safety must so tender,
Whose ruin you have sought, that to her laws
We do deliver you. Get you therefore hence,
Poor miserable wretches, to your death:
The taste whereof, God of his mercy give
You patience to endure, and the experience
Of him that made thee! Depart hence!
[Exeunt Cambridge, Scroop and Grey, guarded.

Now, lords, for France; the enterprise whereof
Shall be to you, as us, like glorious.
We doubt not of a fair and lucky war,
Since God so graciously hath brought to light
This dangerous treason lurking in our way
To hinder our beginnings. We doubt not now
But every rub is smoothed on our way.
Then forth, dear countrymen: let us deliver
Our puissance into the hand of God,
Putting it straight in expedition.
Cheerful to our adventure:
No king of England, if not king of France.  _Exc."

SCENE III. — London. Before a tavern.

Enter Pistol, Hostess, Nym, Bardolph, and Boy.

_Host._ Prifthee, honey-sweet husband, let me bring thee to Staines.

_Pist._ No: for my manly heart doth yearn
Bardolph, be blithe: Nym, rouse thy vaunting veins:
Boy, bristle thy courage up: for Falstaff he is dead,
And we must yearn therefore.

_Bard._ Would I were with him, whoseomever he is, either in heaven or in hell!

_Host._ Nay, sure, he’s not in hell: he’s in Arthur’s bosom, if ever man went to Arthur’s bosom. A’ made a finer end and went away an it had been any christom child; a’d parted even just between twelve and one o’clock at the turning of the tide: for after I saw him tumble with the sheets and play with flowers and smile upon his fingers’ ends, I knew there was but one way: for his nose was as sharp as a pen; and a’ babled of green fields. ‘How now, Sir John?’ quoth I; ‘what, man! be o’ good cheer! So am I cried out: God, God!’ three or four times. Now I, to comfort him, bid him a’ should not think of God: I hoped there was no need to trouble himself with any such thoughts yet. So a’ bade me lay more clothes on his feet: I put my hand into the bed and felt them, and they were as cold as any stone; then I felt to his knees, and they were as cold as any stone, and so upward and upward, and all was as cold as any stone.

_Nym._ They say he cried out of sack.

_Tom._ Yes, a’ cried out of sack.

_Bard._ And of women.

_Host._ Nay, that a’ did not. [incarnate

_Bog._ Yes, that a’ did; and said they were devils

_Host._ A’ could never abide carnation; ‘t was a colour he never liked. [women.

_Bog._ Yes, he said about the devil.

_Host._ A’ did in some sort, indeed, handle women: but then he was rheumatic, and talked of the whore of Babylon.

_Bog._ Do you not remember, a’ saw a flea stick upon Bardolph’s nose, and a’ said it was a black soul burning in hell-fire.

_Bard._ Well, the fuel is gone that maintained that fire: that’s all the riches I got in his service.

_Nym._ Shall we shog? the king will be gone from Southampton.

_Pist._ Come, let’s away. My love, give me thy lock to my rambles and my rovings;

_Let senses rule; the word is ‘Pitch and Pay’: Trust none;

For oaths are straws, men’s faiths are wafer-cakes,
And hold-fast is the only dog, my duck:
Therefore, Caveto be thy counsellor,
Go, clear thy crystals, Yoke-fellows in arms,
Let us to France; like horse-reeches, my boys,
To suck, to suck, the very blood to suck!

_Bog._ And that’s but unmowished some food, some food,

_Pist._ Touch her soft mouth, and march.

_Bard._ Farewell, hostess. [Kissing her.

Boy, and thou cannot kiss, that is the humour of it,
but, adieu, all the dear offspring of command.

_Pist._ Let homewifery appear: keep close, I thee

Host Farewell; adieu.  _Exc._

SCENE IV. — France. The King’s palace.

Flourish. Enter the French King, the Dauphin, the Dukes of Berri and Bretagne, the Constable, and others.

_Kin._ Thus comes the English with full power
And more than carefully it us concerns [upon us;
To answer fairly in our defences
Therein the Dukes of Berri and of Bretagne,
Of Brabant and of Orleans, shall make forth,
And you, Prince Dauphin, with all swift dispatch,
To line and new repair our towns of war
With men of courage and with means defendant;
For England his approaches makes as fierce
As waters to the sucking of a gulf.
It fits us then to be as provident
As fear may teach us out of late examples
Left by the fatal and neglected English
Upon our fields.

_Bog._ Do.

_Mys._ My most beloved father,
It is most meet we arm us against the foe;
For peace itself should not so dull a kingdom,
Though war nor known quarrel were in question,
But that defences, munitions, preparations,
Should be maintain’d, assembled and collected,
As were a war in expectation.
Therefore, I say 3’s meet we all go forth
To view the sick and feeble parts of France;
And let us do it with no show of fear;
No, with no more than if we heard that England
Were busied with a Whitson morris-dance.

_Fog._ For, my good liege, she is so idly king’d,
That safety她说 fantastically home
By a vain, giddy, shallow, humorous youth,
That fear attends her not.
ACT III.

KING HENRY V.

PROLOGUE.

Con. O peace, Prince Dauphin! You are too much mistaken in this king; Question your grace the late ambassadors, With what great state he heard their embassy, How well supplied with noble counsellors, How modest in exception, and withal How terrible in constant resolution, And you shall find his vanities forespent Were but the outside of the Roman Brutus, Covering discretion with a coat of folly; As gardeners do with orudge hide those roots That shall first spring and be most delicate.

Dua. Well, it is not so, my lord high constable; But though we think it so, it is no matter:
In cases of defence 'tis best to weigh The enemy more mightily than he seems: So the proportions of defence are ill'd: Which of a weak and niggardly projection Doth, like a miser, spoil his coat with scanting A little cloth.

Fr. King. Think we King Henry strong:
And, princes, look you strongly arm to meet him. The kindred of him hath been fleshed upon us; And he is bred out of that bloody strain That haunted us in our familiar paths: Witness our too much memorable shame When Creasy battle fatally was struck, And all our princes captivated by the hand. Of that black name, Edward, Black Prince of Wales; Whiles that his mountain sire, on mountain stand'sUp in the air, crown'd with the golden sun, [ing, Saw his herculean head, and smiled to see him, Mangie the work of nature and defend The patterns that by God and by French fathers Had twenty years been made. This is a stem Of that victorious stock; and let us fear The native mightiness and fate of him.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Ambassadors from Harry King of England Do crave admittance to your majesty.

Fr. King. We'll give them present audience. Go, and bring them.

[Exit Messenger and certain Lords.

Dua. You see this chase is hotly follow'd, friends. [dogs

Fr. King. From our brother England? [dues

Dua. Turn head, and stop pursuit; for coward Most spend their mouths when what they seem to threaten Runs far before them. Good my sovereign, Take up the English short, and let them know Of what a monarchy you are the head; Self-love, my liege, is not so vile a sin As self-neglecting.

Re-enter Lords, with Exeunt and train.

Fr. King. From our brother England? [dues

Exe. From him: and thus he grieves your majesty. He wills you, in the name of God Almighty, That you divest yourself, and lay apart The borrow'd glories that by gift of heaven, By law of nature and of nations, long To him and to his heirs; namely, the crown And all wide-stretched honours that pertain By custom and the ordinance of times Unto the crown of France. That you may know

The well-appointed king at Hampton pier Embark his royalty: and his brave fleet With silken streamers the young Phoebus fanning: Play with your fancies, and in them behold Upon the hempen tackle ship-boys climbing; Hear the shrill whistle which doth order give

Tis no sinister nor an awkward claim, Pick'd from the worm-holes of long-vanish'd days, Nor from the dust of old oblivion raised, He sends you this most memorable line, In every branch truly demonstrative; Willing you overlook this pedigree: And when you find him evenly derived From his most famed of famous ancestors, Edward the Third, he bids you then resign Your crown and kingdom, indirectly held From him the native and true challenger.

Fr. King. Or else what follows? [dues

Exe. Bloody constraint: for if you hide the crown Even in your hearts, there will he take for it: Therefore in fiercest bloody contention, In thunder and in earthquake, like a wave, That, if requiring fail, he will compel; And bids you, in the bowels of the Lord, Deliver up the crown, and to take mercy On the poor souls for whom this hungry war Opens his vasty jaws; and on your head Turning the widows' tears, the orphans' cries, The dead men's blood, the pinning maidens' groans, For husbands, fathers, and betrothed lovers, That shall be swallowed in this controversy. This is his claim, his threatening and my message; Unless the Dauphin be in presence here, To whom expressly I bring greeting too.

Fr. King. For us, we will consider of this further: To-morrow shall you bear our true intent Back to our brother England.

Dua. For the Dauphin, I stand here for him: what to him from England?

Exe. Soren and defiance; slight regard, contempt, And any thing that may not misbecome The mighty sender, doth he prize you at. Thus says my king: an if your father's highness Do not, in grant of all demands at large, Sweeten the bitter mock you sent his majesty, He'll call you to so hot an answer of it, That caves and wonly vantages of France Shall chide your trespass and return your neck In second accent of his ordinance.

Dua. Say, if my father render fair return, It is against my will: for I desire Nothing but odds with England: to that end, As matching to his youth and vanity, I did present him with the Paris balls. Exe. He'll make your Paris Louvre shake for it, Were it the mistres-court of mighty Europe: And, be assured, you'll find a difference, As we his subjects have in wonder found, Between the promise of his greener days And these he masters now: now he weights time Even to the utmost grain: that you shall read In your own losses, if he stay in France. [at full.

Fr. King. To-morrow shall you know our mind [dues

Exe. Dispatch us with all speed, lest that our Come here himself to question our delay; [king For he is footed in this land already. Fr. King. You shall be soon dispatch'd with fair conditions: A night is but small breath and little pause To answer matters of this consequence. [Flourish.—Exeunt.
To sounds confused; behold the threaden sails,
Borne with the invisible and creeping wind,
Draw the huge bottoms through the furrow'd sea,
Brest with the mighty cushions of the swell;
D眾: O, do but think
You stand upon theivyage and behold
A city on the insectant billows dancing;
For so appears this fleet majestical,
Holding due course to Harleian. Follow, follow:
Grapple your minds to sternage of this navy,
And leave your land, as solemºinight still,
Guarded with grandisires, babies and old women,
Either past or not arrived to pith and puissance;
For who is he, whose chin is but enrich'd
With one appearing hair, that will not follow
These call'd and choice-drawn cabaliers to France?
Work, work your thoughts, and therein see a siege;
Behold the ordnance on their carriages,
With fatal mouths gaping on girded Harleian.
Suppose the ambassador from the French comes
Tells Harry that the king doth offer him [back;
Katharine his daughter, and with her, to dowry,
Some petty and unprofitable dukedoms.
The offer like not: and the nimble gunner
With linastre now the devillish cannon touches.
[Alarum, and chambers go off.
And down goes all before them. Still be kind,
And eke out our performance with your mind.

SCENE I.—France. Before Harleian.
Alarum. Enter King Henry, Exeter, Bedford, Gloucester, and Soldiers, with scaling-ladders.
K. Hen. Once more unto the breach, dear friends, once more;
Or close the wall up with our English dead.
In peace there's nothing so becomes a man
As modest stillness and humility:
But when the blast of war blows in our ears,
Then imitate the action of the tiger;
Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood,
Disguise fair nature with hard-favour'd rage;
Then lend the eye a terrible aspect:
Let it try through the portage of the head
Like the brass cannon; let the brow overwelm it
As fearfully as doth a galloping rock.
O'erHonk and jutty his confounded base,
Swall'd with the wild and waspish showers.
Now set the teeth and stretch the nostril wide,
Hold hard the breath and bend up every spirit
To his full height. On, on, you noblest English,
Whose blood is fet from fathers of war-proof!
Fathers that, like so many Alexanders,
Have in their parts from fear till even fought
And sheathed their swords for lack of argument:
Dishonour not your mothers; now attest
That those whom you call'd fathers did beget you.
Be copy now to men of grosser blood,
And teach them how to war. And you, good yeo-
men,
Whose limbs were made in England, show us here
The mettle of your posture; let us swear [not;
That you are worth your breeding: which I doubt
For there is none of you so mean and base,
That hath not noble lustre in your eyes.
I see you stand like greyhounds in the slips,
Straining upon the start. The game's afoot;
Follow your spirit, and upon this charge
Cry 'God for Harry, England, and Saint George!'
[Exit. Alarum, and chambers go off.

SCENE II.—The same.
Enter Nym, Bardolph, Pistol, and Boy.
Bard. On, on, on, on! to the breach, to the breach!
Nym. Pray thee, corporal, stay: the knacks are too hot; and, I, for mine own part, I have not a case of lives: the humour of it is too hot, that is the very plain-song of it.
Pist. The plain-song is most just; for humour
Knocks go and come; God's vassals drop and die:
And sword and shield,
In bloody field,
Doth win immortal fame.
Boy. Would I were in an alehouse in London! I would give any fame for a pot of ale and safety.
Pist. And I:
If wishes would prevail with me,
My purpose should not fail with me,
But thither would I lie.
Boy. As duly, but not as truly,
As bird doth sing on bough.

Enter Fluellen.
Flu. Up to the breach, you dogs! avantage, you cullions! [Driving them forward.
Pist. Be merciful, great duke, to men of mould.
Alate thy rage, alate thy manly rage,
Alate thy rage, great duke! [shuck! Good lawcock, late thy rage; use lenity, sweet
Nym. These be good humours! your honour wins bad humours.
[Exit all but Boy.
Boy. As young as I am, I have observed these men:
I am among them all three; look all they three, though they would serve me, could not be man to me: for indeed three such antics do not amount to a man. For Bardolph, he is white-livered and red-faced; by the means whereof a' faces it out, but fights not. For Pistol, he hath a killing tongue and a quiet sword; by the means whereof a' breaks words, and keeps whole weapons. For Nym, he hath heard that men of few words are the best men; and therefore he scorns to say his prayers, lest a' should be thought a coward: but his few bad words are matched with as few good deeds; for a' never broke any man's head but his own, and that was against a post when he was drunk. They will steal any thing, and call it purchase. Bardolph stole a lute-case, bore it twelve leagues, and sold it for three half-peece. Nyn and Bardolph are sworn brothers in nailing, and in Calais they stole a fire-schoel: I know the man of service the men would carry coals. They would have me as familiar with men's pockets as their gloves or their handkerchiefs: which makes much against my manhood, if I should take from another's pocket to put into mine; for it is plain pocketing up of wrongs. I must leave them, and seek some better service: their villainy goes against my weak stomach, and therefore I must cast it up.

Gow. Captain Fluellen, you must come presently to the mines; the Duke of Gloucester would speak with you.

Flu. To the mines! tell you the duke, it is not so good to come to the mines; for, look you, the mines is not according to the disciplines of the war: the concavities of it is not sufficient; for, look you, you'athversary, you may discuss unto the duke, look you, is digst himself four yard under the counter-ines: by Chesil, I think a' will plow up all, if there is not better directions.

Gow. The Duke of Gloucester, to whom the order of the siege is given, is altogether directed by an Irishman; a very valiant gentleman, I' faith.

Flu. It is Captain Macmorris, is it not?
Gow. I think it be.

Flu. By Chesil, he is an ass, as in the world: I will verify as much in his beard: he has no more directions in the true disciplines of the wars, look you, of the Roman disciplines, than is a puppy-dog.
Enter Macmorris and Captain Jamy.

Goe. Here a’ cometh; and the Scots captain, Captain Jamy, with him.

Flu. Captain Jamy is a marvellous furious gentleman, that is certain; and of great expedition and knowledge in the ancient wars, upon my particular knowledge of his directions: by Chesun, he will make a point out of the turnament as well as any military man in the world, in the disciplines of the prouest wars of the Romans.

Jamy. I say, gud-day, Captain Fluellen.

Flu. God-den to your worship, good Captain James.

Goe. How now, Captain Macmorris! have you quit the mines? have the pioneers given o’er?

Mac. By Christ, la! tis ill done; the work is done; it ish give over, the trumpet sound the retreat. By my hand, I swear, and my father’s soul, the work is ill done; it ish give over; I would have blown up the town, so Christ save me, la! in an hour: O, tish ill done, tish ill done; by my hand, tish ill done! Flu. Captain Macmorris, I beseech you now, will you voutsafe me, look you, a few disputations with you, as partly touching or concerning the disciplines of the war; the Roman wars, in the way of argument, look you, and friendly communication; partly to amuse me for my patience’s sake, and partly to satisfy me of the satisfaction, look you, of my mind, as touching the direction of the military discipline; that is the point.

Jamy. It shall be vary gud, gud feith, gud captains bath: and I shall quit you with gud leve, as I may pick occasion; that shall I, marry.

Mac. It is no time to discourse, so Christ save me: the day is hot, and the weather, and the wars, and the king, and the dukers: it is no time to discourse. The town is beseeched, and the trumpet call us to the breach: and we talk, and be, Christ, do nothing; tis shame for us all: so Christ sa’ me, tis shame to stand still; it is shame, by my hand; and there is throns to be cut, and works to be done; and there ish nothing done, so Christ sa’ me, la!

Jamy. By the mess, are these eyes of mine take themselves to slumber, ay’ll de gud service, or ay’ll lig’ the grund for it; ay’, or go to death; and ay’l pay for it. We yield our all I surely do, that is the bryff and the long. Marry, I had full fain hear some question ‘tween you tway.

Flu. Captain Macmorris, I think, look you, under your correction, there is not many of your nation—Mac. Of my nation! What ish my nation? Ish a villain, and a bastard, and a knave, and a rascal. With my correction, and for the satisfaction.

Flu. Look you, if you take the matter otherwise than is meant, Captain Macmorris, perdadventure I shall think you do not use me with that affinity as in discretion you ought to use me, look you; being as good a man as yourself, both in the disciplines of war, and in the derivation of my birth, and in other particularities.

Mac. I do not know you so good a man as myself: so Christ save me, I will cut off your head.

Goe. Gentlemen both, you will mistake each Jimy. A! that’s a foul fault. [other.

Goe. The town sounds a parley.

Flu. Captain Macmorris, when there is more better opportunity to be required, look you, I will be so bold as to tell you I know the disciplines of war; and there is an end.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same. Before the gates.

The Governor and some Citizens on the walls; the English forces below. Enter King Henry and train.

K. Hen. How yet resolves the governor of the This is the latest parle we will admit: [town? Therefore to our best mercy give yourselves; Or like to men proud of destruction Defy us to our worst; for as I am a soldier, A name that in my thoughts becomes me best, If I begin the battery once again, I will not leave the half-achieved Harleur Till in her ashes she lie buried. The gates of mercy shall be all shut up, And the flesh of the brave and valiant kind, In liberty of bloody hand shall range With conscience wide as hell, mourning like grass Your fresh-fair virgins and your flowering infants, What is it then to me, if moving war, Array’d in flames like to the prince of fiends, Do, with my hand, and all his backers, all fell feasts Enlink’d to waste and desolation? What is ‘t to me, when you yourselves are cause, If your pure maidens fall into the hand Of hot and forcing violation? What rein can hold licentious wickedness When down the hill he holds his fierce career? We may as bootless spend our vain command Upon the enraged soldiers in their spoil As send precepts to the levittian To come ashore. Therefore, you men of Harleur, Take pity of your town and of your people, Whiles yet my soldiers are in my command; Whiles yet the town and gates with sound of grace O’erblows the filthy and contagious clouds Of heady murder, spoil and villany. If not, why, in a moment look to see The blind and bloody soldier with foul hand Denile the locks of your shrill-shrieking daughters; Your fathers taken by the silver beards, And their most reverend heads dast’d to the walls, Your naked infants spitted upon pikes, Whiles the mad mothers with their bowels confused Do break the clouds, as did the wives of Jewry At Hero’s bloody-hunting slaughtermen. What say you? will you yield, and this avoid, Or, guilty in defence, be thus destroy’d?

Goe. Our expectation hath this day an end; The Dauphin, whom of succours we entreated, Returns us that his powers are yet not ready To raise so great a siege. Therefore, great king, We yield our town and lives to thy soft mercy. Enter our gates; dispose of us and ours; For we no longer are defensible.

K. Hen. Open your gates. Come, uncle Exeter, Go you and enter Harleur; there remain, And fortify it strongly against the French; Use mercy to them all. For us, dear uncle, The winter evening is growing on. Upon our soldiers, we will retire to Calais, To-morrow in Harleur we will be your guest, To-morrow for the march are we address’d. [Flourish. The King and his train enter the town.

SCENE IV.—The French King’s palace.

Enter Katharine and Alice.

Kath. Alice, tu as été en Angletterre, et tu parles bien le langage.

Alice. Un peu, madame. J’entends bien, mais je ne sais pas exprimer ce que je pense.

Kath. Je te ferai, ma seinguez; il faut que j’imprime à parler. Comment appelez-vous la main en Anglais ?

Alice. La main ? elle est appelée de hand.

Kath. De hand. Et les doigts ?

Alice. Les doigts ? ma foi, j’oublie les doigts; mais je ne me souviens pas d’un doigt ? je pense qu’ils sont appelés de fingers; oui, de fingers.

Kath. La main, de hand; les doigts, de fingers. Je pense que je suis le bon écuyer; j’ai gagné deux mots d’Anglais vitément. Comment appelez-vous les ongles ?

Alice. Les ongles ? nous les appelons de nails.

Alice. C'est bien dit, madame; il est fort bon Anglois.

Alice. De arm, madame.

Kath. Et le coude?

Alice. De elbow.

Kath. De elbow. Je m'en fais la répétition de tous les mots que vous m'avez appris à présent.

Alice. Il est trop difficile, madame, comme je pense.

Kath. Écoutez-moi. Alice; écoutz: de hand, de fingres, de nails, de arm, de billow.

Alice. De elbow, madame.

Kath. Charde Seigneur Dieu, je m'en oubli! de elbow. Comment appelez-vous le col?

Alice. De neck, madame.

Kath. De neck. Et le menton?

Alice. De chin.

Kath. De sin. Le col, de neck; de menton, de sin.

Alice. Oui. Sauf vôtre honoré, en vérité, vous prononcez les mots aussi droict que les natifs d'Angleterre.

Kath. Je ne doute point d'apprendre, par la grace de Dieu, et en peu de temps.

Alice. N'ayez vous pas déjà oublié ce que je vous appris au commencement?

Kath. Non, je reiterai à vous promptement: de hand, de fingres, de nails—

Alice. De nails, madame.

Kath. De nails, de arm, de billow.

Alice. Sauf vôtre honoré, de elbow.

Kath. Ainsi dis-je; de elbow, de neck, et de sin.

Alice. Comment appelez-vous le pied et la robe?

Kath. De foot, madame; et de cown.

Kath. De foot et de cown! O Seigneur Dieu! ce sont mots de son manuais, corruptible, gros, et impudique, et non pour les dames d'honoré d'user: je ne voulrais prononcer ces mots devant les seigneurs de France pour tout le monde. Foh! le foot et le cown! N'aimmoins, je reiterai une autre fois ma leçon ensemble: de hand, de fingres, de nails, de arm, de elbow, de neck, de sin, de foot, de cown.

Alice. Excellent, madame!

Kath. C'est assez pour une fois; allons-nous à dîner.

SCENE V.—The same.

Enter the King of France, the Dauphin, the Duke of Bourbon, the Constable of France, and others.

Fr. King. Tis certain he hath pass'd the river

Kath. By faith and honour,

Our maidens mock at us; and plainly say our men shrieve out and they will give

Their bodies to the lust of English youth

To new-store France with bastard warriors.

Bour. They bid us to the English dancing-schools,

And teach havoc high and swift corantos;

Saying our grace is only in our heels,

And that we are most lofty runaway.

Fr. King. Where is Monjoy the herald? speed him hence:

Let him greet Englands with our sharp defiance,

Up, princes! and, with spirit of honour edged

More sharper than your swords, hie to the field

Charles Seigneur Dieu, high comrade of France!

You Dukes of Orleans, Bourbon, and of Berri,

Alencon, Brabant, Bar, and Burgundy;

Jaques Chatillon, Ramures, Vaudemont,

Beaumont, Grandpré, Rousi, and Fauconberg,

Fois, Lestrade, Bouicq, and Charlois;

High dukes, great princes, barons, lords and knights.

For your great seats now quit you of great shames.

Bar Harry England, that sweeps through our land

With penions painted in the blood of Harfeur:

Rush on his host, as doth the melted snow

Upon the valleys, whose low vessel seat

The Alps doth slit and void his rheum upon;

Go do as thou heldest, thou have power enough,

And in a captive charriot into Rouen

Bring him our prisoner.

Con. This becomes the great.

Sorry am I his numbers are so few;

His soldiers—ick and famish'd in their march,

For I am sure, when he shall see our army,

He'll drop his heart into the sink of fear

And for achievement offer us his ransum.

Fr. King. Therefore, lord constable, haste on

Monjoy,

And let him say to England that we send

To know what willing ransom he will give,

Prince Dauphin, you shall stay with us in Rouen.

Don. Not so, I do beseech your majesty.

Fr. King. Be patient, for you shall remain with us till

Now forth, lord constable and princes all,

And quickly bring us word of England's fall.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—The English camp in Picardy.

Enter Gower and Fluellen, meeting.

Gower. How now, Captain Fluellen! come you from the bridge?

Flu. I assure you, there is very excellent services committed at the bridge.

Gower. Is the Duke of Exeter safe?

Flu. The Duke of Exeter is as immaginous as Azanememon; and a man that I love and honour with my soul; my heart, and my duty, and my life, and my living, and my utmost power: he is not—God be praised and blessed!—any hurt in the world; but keeps the prude most valiantly, with excellent discipline. There is an amachant lieutenant there at the prude, I think in my very conscience he is as valiant a man as Mark Antony; and he is a man of no estimation in the world; but I did see him do as gallant service.

Gower. What do you call him?

Flu. He is called Aunchient Pistol.

Gower. I know him not.

Enter Pistol.

Flu. Here is the man.

Pistol. Captain, I thee beseech to do me favours: The Duke of Exeter doth love thee well.

Flu. Ay, I praise God; and I have merits some love at his hands.

Pistol. Bardolph, a soldier, firm and sound of heart,
And of luxurion valour, hath, by cruel fate,  think the world for; yet lost my heart, but on that is like to be executed for robbing a church, one Bardolph, if your majesty know the man: his face is all bubblkes, and wheelaks, and knobs, and flames o' fire; and his lips blows at his nose, and it is like a coal of fire, sometimes plane and sometimes red; but his heart is very fair.  The Duke of Exeter is the master of the pride: I can tell your majesty, the duke is a prave man.

K. Hen. What men have you lost, Fluellen?  Flu. The perdilion of th' atthesery hath been very great, reasonable great: marry, for my part, I think the world for hath lost many men, but one that is like to be executed for robbing a church, one Bardolph, if your majesty know the man: his face is all bubblkes, and wheelaks, and knobs, and flames o' fire; and his lips blows at his nose, and it is like a coal of fire, sometimes plane and sometimes red; but his heart is very fair.  The Duke of Exeter is the master of the pride: I can tell your majesty, the duke is a prave man.

Mont. You know me by my habit.  K. Hen. Well then I know thee: what shall I know of thee?  Mont. My master's mind.  K. Hen. Unfold it.  Mont. Thus says my king: Say thou to Harry of England: Though we seemed dead, we did but sleep: advantage is a better soldier than rashness.  Tell him we could have rucked him at Harleam, but that we were too wise to bruise an injury till it were full ripe: now we speak upon our cue, and our voice is imperial: England shall repent his folly, see his weakness, and admire our sufferance.  Bid him therefore consider of his ransome; which must proportion the losses we have borne, the subjects we have lost, the disgrace we have digested; which in weight to re-answer, his pettiness would bow under.  For our losses, his exchequer is too poor; for the effusion of our blood, the muster of his kingdom too faint a number; and for our disgrace, his own person, kneeling at our feet, but a weak and worthless satisfaction.  To this add defiance: and tell him, for conclusion, he hath betray'd his followers, whose condemnation is pronounced.  So far my king and master: so much my office.

K. Hen. What is thy name?  I know thy quality.  Mont. Your majesty.  K. Hen. Sir, be dott thy office fairly. Tura thee And tell thy king I do not seek him now: But could be willing to march on to Calais Without impecchience: for, to say the sooth, Though 'tis no wisdom to confess so much Unto an enemy of craft and vantage: My people are with sickness much enflamed, My numbers lessened, and those few I have Almost no better than so many French: Who when they were in health, I tell thee, quail, I thought upon one pair of English legs Did march three Frenchmen. Yet, forgive me, God, That I do brag thus! This thy air of France Hath blown that vice in me: I must repent. Go therefore, tell thy master here I am. My ransome is this frail and worthless trunk, My army but a weak and sickly guard; Yet, God before, tell him we will come on, Though France herself and such another neighbour Sected in our lives. There's for thy labour, Montjoy. Go, bid thy master well advise himself: It we may pass, we will; if we be hinder'd, We shall your tawny ground with your red blood Discourse: and so, Montjoy, fare you well. The sum of all our answer is but this: We would not seek a battle, as we are; Nor, as we are, we say we will not shun it: So tell your master.  Mont. I shall deliver so. Thanks to your high- ness.

End.  Glo. I hope they will not come upon us now.
SCENE VII.—The French camp, near Agincourt.

Enter the Constable of France, the Lord Bam-bures, Orleans, Dauphin, with others.

Con. Tut! I have the best armour of the world.
Would it were day!
Orl. You have an excellent armour; but let my horse have his due.
Con. It is the best horse of Europe.
Orl. Will it never be morning?
Dau. My Lord of Orleans, and my Lord high constable, you talk of horse and armour?
Orl. You are as well provided of both as any prince in the world.
Dau. What a long night is this! I will not change my horse with any that treads but on four pasteras. Ca, ha! he bounds from the earth, as if his entrails were hairs; le cheval volant, the Pegasus, chez les norman de fen'.

When I bestride him, I soar; I am a hawk; he spots the air; the earth shans when he touches it; the basest horn of his hoof is more musical than the pipe of Hermes.

Orl. He's of the colour of the nutmeg.
Dau. And of the heart of the ginger. It is a beast for Perseus: he is pure air and fire; and the dull elements of earth and water never appear in him, but only in patient stillness while his rider mounts him: he is indeed a horse; and all other jades you may call beasts.

Con. Indeed, my lord, it is a most absolute and excellent horse.
Dau. It is the prince of palfreys: his neck is like the boding of a monarch and his countenance enforces homage.

Orl. No more, cousin.
Dau. Nay, the man hath no wit that cannot, from the rising of the lark to the lodging of the lamb, vary deserved praise on my palfrey: it is a theme as fluent as the sea: turn the sands into eloquent tongues, and my horse is argument for them all: 'tis a subject for a sovereign to reason on, and for a sovereign's sovereign to ride on; and for the world, familiar to us and unknown, to lay apart their particular detections and wonder at him. I once write a sonnet in his praise and began thus: 'Wonder of nature,'— [tress.

Orl. I have heard a sonnet begin so to one's mis-Dau. Then did they imitate that which I compounded to mycourser, for my horse is my mistress.
Orl. Your mistress bears well.
Dau. Me well; which is the prescript praise and perfection of a good and particular mistress.

Con. Nay, for methought yesterday your mistress shrewdly shook your back.
Dau. So perhaps did yours.
Con. Mine was not bridled.
Dau. O then belike my lord is old and gentle; and you rode, like a kern of Ireland, your French hose off, and in your strait crossers.

Con. You have good judgment in horsemanship.
Dau. Be warned by me, then: they that ride so and ride not warily, fall into foul bogs. I had rather be laughed at by my mistress,
Con. I had as lief have my mistress a jade.
Dau. I tell thee, constable, my mistress wears his own hair.
Con. I could make as true a boast as that, if I had a son to praise.
Dau. Le chien est retourné à son propre vomissement, et la truie lavée au bourbier: 'tis thou makest use of any thing.

Con. Yet do I not use my horse for my mistress, or any such proverb so little kin to the purpose.

Rim. My lord constable, the armour that I saw in your tent to-night, are those stars or suns upon it?
Con. Stars, my lord.
Dau. Some of them I will fall to-morrow, I hope.
Con. Yet my sky shall not want.
Dau. That may be, for you bear a many superfusiously, and 't were more honour some were away.
Con. Even as your horse bears your praises; who would trot as well, were some of your brags dismanted.

Dau. Would I were able to load him with his desert! Will it never be day? I will trot to-morrow a mile, and my way shall be paved with English faces.

Con. I will not say so, for fear I should be faced out of my way: but I would it were morning; for I would fain be about the ears of the English.

Rim. Who will go to hazard with me for twenty prisoners?

Con. You must first go yourself to hazard, ere you have them.

Dau. 'Tis midnight; I'll go arm myself. [Exit.]
Orl. The Dauphin longs for morning.
Rim. He longs to eat the English.
Con. I think he will eat all he kills. [prince.
Orl. By the white hand of my lady, he's a gallant
Con. Swear by her foot, that she may tread out the oath,

Orl. He is simply the most active gentleman of France.

Con. Doing is activity; and he will still be doing.
Orl. He never did harm, that I heard of.
Con. Nor will do none to-morrow: he will keep that good name still.
Orl. I know him to be valiant.
Con. I was told that by one that knows him better than you.
Orl. What's he?
Con. Marry, he told me so himself; and he said he cared not who knew it.

Orl. He needs not: it is no hidden virtue in him.
Con. By my faith, sir, but it is: never anybody saw it but his lackey: 'tis a hooded valour; and when it appears, it will late.
Orl. 'Til will never said well.

Con. I will cap that proverb with 'There is flattery in friendship,'— [his due.
Orl. And I will take up that with 'Give the devil
Con. Well placed: there stands your friend for the devil: have at the very eye of that proverb with 'A pox of the devil.'

Orl. You are the better at proverbs, by how much 'A fool's bolt is soon shot.'

Con. Yon have shot over.
Orl. 'Tis not the first time you were overshot.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord high constable, the English lie within fifteen hundred paces of your tents.
Con. Who hath measured the ground?
Mess. The Lord Grandpré.
Con. A valiant and most expert gentleman. Would it were day! Alas, poor Harry of England! he longs not for the dawning as we do.

Orl. What a wretched and peevish fellow is this king of England, to mope with his fat-brained fol-
Con. If the English had any apprehension, they would run away.
Orl. That they lack; for if their heads had any intellectual armour, they could never wear such heavy head-gears.

Rim. That island of England breeds very valiant creatures; their mastiffs are of unmatchable cour-

Page 376
Orl. Foolish curs, that run winking into the mouth of a Russian bear and have their heads crushed like rotten apples! You may as well say, that’s a vaianl beast that dare eat his breakfast on the lip of a lion.

Chor. Now entertain conjecture of a time
When creeping murrain and the poring dark
Fills the wide vessel of the universe.
From camp to camp through the foul womb of night
The hum of either army softly sounds,
That the fixed sentinels almost receive
The secret whispers of each other’s watch:
Fire answers fire, and through their paly flames
Each battle sees the other’sumber’d face:
Steel threatens steel, in high and boastful neighs
Piercing the night’s dull ear, and from the tents
The armourers, accomplishing the knights,
With busy hammers closing rivets up,
Give dreadful note of preparation:—
The country cooks do crow, the clocks do toll,
And the third hour of drowsy morning name.

Proudf of their numbers and secure in soul,
The confident and over-lusty French
Do the low-rated English play at dice;
And chide the cradle tardy-gaited night
Who, like a fool and ugly witch, doth limp
So tedious away. The poor condemned English,
Like sacrifices, by their watchful fires
Sit patiently and hourly ruminate
The morning’s danger, and their gesture sad
Investing lanx-lean cheeks and war-worn coats
Presenteth them unto the gazing moon
So many horrid ghosts. O now, who will behold
The royal captain of this ruin’d band
Walking from watch to watch, from tent to tent,
Let him cry ‘Praise and glory on his head!’
For forth he goes and visits all his host,
Buls them good morrow with a modest smile
And calls them brothers, friends and countrymen.
Upon his royal face there is no note
How dread an army hath enwrapped him;
Nor doth he dedicate one jot of colour
Unto the weary and all-watch’d night,
But freshely looks and over-lears attain
With cheerful semblance and sweet majesty;
That every wretch, pinching and pale before,
Beholding him, plucks comfort from his looks:
A largess universal like the sun
His liberal eye doth give to every one,
Thawing cold fear, that mean and gentle all,
Behold, as may unworthiness define,
A little touch of Harry in the night.
And so our scene must to the battle fly;
Where — O for pity! — we shall much disgrace
With four or five most vile and ragged foils,
Right ill disposed in bayr and cuiss.
The name of Agincourt. Yet sit and see,
Minding true things by what their mockery be.
[Exit.

SCENE I. — The English camp at Agincourt.

Enter King Henry, Bedford, and Gloucester.

K. Hen. Gloucester, ’tis true that we are in great danger;

The greater therefore should our courage be.
Good morrow, brother Bedford. God Almighty!
There is some soul of goodness in things evil,
Would men observingly distil it out.
For our bad neighbour makes us early stirrers,
Which is both healthful and goodhusbandry:
Besides, they are our outward consciences,
And preachers to us all, admonishing
That we should dress us fairly for our end.
Thus may we gather honey from the weed,
And make a moral of the devil himself.

Enter Erpingham.

Good morrow, old Sir Thomas Erpingham: A good soft pillow for that good white head
Were better than a chairful turf of France. [ter.

Erp. Not the my liege: this lodging likes me beter—
Since I may say ‘Now lie I like a king.’ [pains

K. Hen. ’Tis good for men to love their present
Upon example; so the spirit is eased:
And when the mind is quicken’d, out of doubt,
The organs, though defunct and dead before,
Break up their drowsy grave and newly move,
With ciested slings and fresh legersy.
Lend me thy cloak, Sir Thomas. Brothers both,
Commend me to the princes in our camp;
Do my good morrow to them, and anon —
Desire them all to my pavilion.

Glo. We shall, my liege.

Erp. Shall I attend your grace?

K. Hen. No, my good knight;
Go with my brothers to my lords of England:
I and my bosom must debate a while,
And then I would no other company.

Erp. The Lord in heaven bless thee, noble Harry!

[Exit all but King.

K. Hen. God-a-mercy, old heart! thou speakest cheerfully.

Enter Pistol.

Pist. Qui va là?

K. Hen. A friend.

Pist. Discusses unto me; art thou officer?
Or art thou base, common and popular?

K. Hen. I am a gentleman of a company.

Pist. Trai’st thou the puissant pike?

K. Hen. Even so. What are you?

Pist. As good a gentleman as the emperor.

K. Hen. Then you are a better than the king.

Pist. The king’s a bawcock, and a heart of gold,
A lad of life, an imp of fame;
Of parents good, of first most valiant.
I kiss his dirty shoe, and from heart-string
I love the lovely bully. What is thy name?

K. Hen. Harry is my name.

Pist. Le Roy ! a Cornish name; art thou of a Cornish crew?

K. Hen. No, I am a Welshman.

Pist. Know’st thou Fluellen?

K. Hen. Yes.

Pist. Tell him, I’ll knock his leek about his pate.

Upon Saint Davy’s day.

K. Hen. Do not you wear your dagger in your pate that day, lest he knock that about yours.

KING HENRY V.

ACT IV. SCENE I.

Pist. Art thou his friend?
K. HEN. And his kinsman too.
Pist. The figo for thee, then!
K. HEN. I thank you; God be with you!
Pist. My name is Pistol call'd.
[Exit.
K. HEN. It sorts well with your fierceness.

Enter Fluellen and Gower.

Gower. Captain Fluellen!
Fle. So! in the name of Jesu Christ, speak lower. It is the greatest admiration in the universal world, when the true and amissent prerogatives and laws of the wars is not kept; if you would take the pains but to eating of Pompey the Great, you shall find, I warrant you, that there is no idle tattle nor pibble pabble in Pompey's camp; I warrant you, you shall find the ceremonies of the wars, and the cares of it, and the forms of it, and the sobriety of it, and the modesty of it, to be otherwise.

Gower. Why, the enemy is loud; you hear him all night.
Pist. If the enemy is an ass and a fool and a prating coxcomb, is it meet, think you, that we should also, look you, be an ass and a fool and a prating coxcomb in your own conscience, now?
Gower. I will speak lower.
Pist. I pray you and beseech you that you will.
[Exit Gower and Fluellen.

K. HEN. Though it appear a little out of fashion, there is much care and valour in this Welshman.

Enter three soldiers, John Bates, Alexander Court, and Michael Williams.

Court. Brother John Bates, is not that the morning which breaks yonder?
Bates. I think it be: but we have no great cause to desire the approach of day.
Will. We see yonder the beginning of the day, but I think we shall never see the end of it. Who goes there?
K. HEN. A friend.
Will. Under what captain serve you?
K. HEN. Under Sir Thomas Erpingham.
Will. A good old commander and a most kind gentleman: I pray you, what thinks he of our estate?
K. HEN. Even as men wrecked upon a sand, that look to be washed off the next tide.
Bates. Mr. Hain hath not told his thought to the king?
K. HEN. No; nor if I may tell that should. For though I speak it to you, I think the king is but a man, as I am: the violet smells to him as it doth to me; the element shows to him as it doth to me; all his senses have but human conditions: his ceremonies laid by, in his nakedness he appears but a man; and though his affections are higher mounted than ours, yet, when they stoop, they stoop with the like wing. Therefore when he sees reason of fears, as we do, his fears, out of doubt, be of the same relish as ours are: Yet, in reason, no man should possess him with any appearance of fear, lest he, by showing it, should dishearten his army.
Bates. He may show what outward courage he will; but I believe, as cold a night as 'tis, he could wish himself in Thames up to the neck; and so I would he were, and I by him, at all adventures, so we were quit here.
K. HEN. By my troth, I will speak my conscience of the king: I think he would not wish himself any where but where he is.
Bates. Then I would he were here alone: so should he be sure to be ransomed, and a many poor men's lives saved.
K. HEN. I dare say you love him not so ill, to wish him here alone, however you speak this to feel other men's minds: methinks I could not die any where so contented as in the king's company; his cause being just and his quarrel honourable.
Will. That's more than we know.
Bates. Ay, or more than we should seek after; for we know enough, if we know we are the king's subjects: if his cause be wrong, our obedience to the king, could we have any guilt of it.
Will. But if the cause be not good, the king himself hath a heavy reckoning to make, when all those legs and arms and heads, chopped off in a battle, shall join together at the latter day and cry all, 'We died at such a place;' some swearing, some crying for a surgeon, some upon their wives left poor behind them, and some upon their children left without their parents children young. I am afraid there are few die well that die in a battle; for how can they charitably dispose of anything, when blood is their argument? Now, if these men do not die well, it will be a black matter for the king that led them to it; whom to disobey were against all proportion of subjection.
K. HEN. So, if a son that is by his father sent about merchandise do sinfully misarry upon the sea, the imputation of his wickedness, by your rule, should be imposed upon his father that sent him: or if a servant, under his master's command, transporting a sum of money, be assailed by robbers and die in many irreconcilable iniquities, you may call the business of the master the author of the servant's damnation: but this is not so: the king is not bound to answer the particular endings of his soldiers, the father of his son, or the master of his servant; for they purpose not their death, when they purpose their services. Besides, there is no king, be his cause never so spotless, if it come to the arbitrement of swords, can try it out with all unsotted soldiers; some peradventure have on them the spirit of premeditated and envenomed justice; some, of beguiling virgins with the broken seals of perjury; some, making the wars their bulwark, that have before gored the gentle bosom of peace with pillage and robbery. Now, if these men have defeated the law and outrun native punishment, though they can outstrip men, they have no wings to fly from God: war is his head, war is his vengeance; so that here men are punished for before-breach of the king's laws in now the king's quarrel: where they feared the death, they have borne life away; and where they would be safe, they perish: then if they die unpardoned, no more is it the fault of the prince, nor of the soldiers, than if they before guilty of those impieties for which they are now visited. Every subject's duty is the king's; but every subject's soul is his own. Therefore should every soldier in the wars do as every sick man in his bed, wash every mote out of his conscience; and dying so, death is to him advantage; or not dying, the time was blessedly lost wherein such preparation was gained; and in him that escapes, it were not sin to think that, making God so free an offer, He let him outlive that day to see His greatness and to teach others how they should prepare.
Will. 'Tis certain, every man that dies ill, the ill upon his own head, the king is not to answer it.
Bates. I do not desire he should answer for me; and yet I determine to fight lustily for him.
K. HEN. I myself heard the king say he would not be a traitor.
Will. Ay, he said so, to make us fight cheerfully; but when our throats are cut, he may be ransomed, and we never the wiser.
K. HEN. If I live to see it, I will never trust his words.

Will. You pay him then. That's a perilous shot out of an elder-gun, that a poor and private displeasure can do against a monarch! You may as well go about to turn the sun to ice with fuming in his face with a peacock’s feather. You’ll never trust his word after! come, ’tis a foolish saying.

K. Hen. Your reproof is something too round: I should be angry with you, if the time were convenient.

Will. Let it be a quarrel between us, if you live.

K. Hen. I embrace it.

Will. How shall I know thee again?

K. Hen. Give me any glove of thine, and I will wear it in my bonnet; then, if ever thou darest acknowledge it, I will make it my quarrel.

Will. Here’s my glove: give me another of thine.

K. Hen. There.

Will. This will I also wear in my cap: if ever thou come to me and say, after to-morrow, ’This is my glove,’ by this hand, I will take thee a box on the ear.

K. Hen. If ever I live to see it, I will challenge it.

Will. Thou dar’st as well be hanged.

K. Hen. Well, I will do it, though I take thee in the king’s company.

Will. Keep thy word: fare thee well,

Enter French friends, you English fools, be friends: we have French quarrels now, if you could tell how to reckon.

K. Hen. Indeed, the French may lay twenty French crowns to one, they will beat us; for they bear them on their shoulders: but it is no English custom to French geniuses, and to-morrow the king himself will be a clipper.

Upon the king! let us all our lives, our souls, Our debts, our careful wives, Our children and our sins lay on the king! We must bear all. O hard condition, Twin-born with greatness, subject to the breath Of every fool, whose sense no more can feel. But his own wrangling! What infinite heart’s ease Must kings neglect, that private men enjoy! And what have kings, that privates have not too, Save ceremony, save general ceremony? And what art thou, than idol ceremony? What kind of god art thou, that suffer’st more Of mortal griefs than do thy worshippers? What are thy rents? what are thy comings in? O ceremony, show me but thy worth! What is thy soul of adoration? Art thou equal but place, degree and form, Creating awe and fear in men? Wherein thou art less happy being fear’d Than they in fearing.

What drink’st thou oft, instead of homage sweet, But poison’d backet? 0, be sick, great greatness; And bid thy ceremony give thee cure!

Think’st thou the fiery fever will go out With titles blown from adulation? Will it give place to luxurie and low bending? [knee, Canst thou, when thou command’st the beggar’s Command the health of it? No, thou proud dream. That play’st so subtly with a king’s repose; I am a king that feed thee, and thy blood? ’Tis not the balm, the sceptre and the ball, The sword, the mace, the crown imperial, The intertissued robe of gold and pearl, The farced title running fore the king, The throne he sits on, nor the title of pomp That beats upon the high siree of this world, No, not all these, thrice-gorgeous ceremony, Not all these, laid in bed majestical, Can sleep so soundly as the wretched slave, Who with a body hill’d and vacant mind Gets him to rest, cramm’d with distressful bread; Never was wearied night, the child of hell, But, like a lackey, from the rise to set Sweats in the eye of Phoebus and all night Sleeps in Elysium; next day after dawn, Doth rise and help Hyperion to his horse, And follows so the ever-running year, With profitable labour, to his grave: And, but for ceremony, such a wretch, Winding up days with toil and nights with sleep, Had the fore-hand and vantage of a king.

The slave, a member of the country’s peace, Enjoys it; but in gross brain little wots What watch the king keeps to maintain the peace, Whose hours the peasant best advantages.

Enter Erpingham.

Erp. My lord, your nobles, jealous of your absence, Seek through your camp to find you.

K. Hen. Good old knight, Collect them all together at my tent: I’ll be before thee.

Erp. I shall do, my lord. [Exit.

K. Hen. O God of battles! steel my soldiers’ hearts; Possess them not with fear; take from them now The sense of reckoning, if the opposed numbers Pluck their hearts from them. Not to-day, O Lord, O, not to-day, think not upon the fault My father made in compassing the crown! I Richard’s body lay; and my Liege, I And on it have bestowed more contrite tears Than from it issued forced drops of blood: Five hundred poor I have in yearly pay, Who twice a-day their wither’d hands hold up Toward heaven, to pardon blood; and I have built Two chancies, where the sad and solemn priests Sing still for Richard’s soul. More will I do; Though all that I can do is nothing worth, Since that my penitence comes after all, Imploring pardon.

Enter Gloucester.

Glou. My liege!
K. Hen. My brother Gloucester’s voice? Ay; I know thy errand. I will go with thee: The day, my friends and all things stay for me. [Exit.

SCENE II.—The French camp.

Enter the Dauphin, Orleã\ns, Rambures, and others.

Orl. The sun doth gild our armour; up, my lords! Dav. Montez a cheval! My horse! varlet! la-

Enter Constable.

Now, my lord constable!

Con. Hark, how our steeds for present service neigh! [hides Dav. Mount them, and make incision in their That their hot blood may spin in English eyes, And dot them with superluous courage, ha!

Rou. What, will you have them weep our horses’ Blood? How shall we, then, behold their natural tears?

Enter Messenger.

Mess. The English are embattled, you French peers. [horse! Con. To horse, you gallant princes! straight to Do but behold you poor and starved band, And your fair show shall suck away their souls, Leaving them but the shades and husks of men. There is not work enough for all our hands; Savage blood enough in all their sickly veins To give each naked curtal-axe a stain. That our French gallants shall to-day draw out, And sheathe for lack of sport; let us but blow them, The vapour of our valour will o’erturn them. ’Tis positive against all exceptions, lords
That our superfluous lackeys and our peasants,
Who in unnecessary action swarm
About our squares of battle, were enow
To purge this field of such a hindering foe,
Though we upon this mountain's basis by
Took stand for idle speculation:
But that our honour burns not. What's to say?
A very little little let us do,
And all is done. Then let the trumpets sound
The truculent sonance and the note to mount;
For our approach shall so much durance the field
That England shall cough down in fear and yield.

Enter Grandpré.

Gravey. Why do you stay so long, my lords of France?
You island carriers, desperate of their bones,
Ill-favouredly become the morning field:
Their ragged curtains poorly are let loose,
And our air shakes them passing scornfully:
Big Mars seems bankrupt in their bagged host
And faintly through a rusty beaver peeps:
The horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks, [jades
With torch-staves in their hand, and their poor
Lob down their heads, dropping the hides and hipe,
The gun down-bowing from their pale-dead eyes,
And in their pale dull mouths the gimmel bit
Lies foul with chew'dgrass, still and motionless;
And their executors, the knavish crows,
Fly o'er them, all impatient for their hour.
Description cannot suit itself in words
To demonstrate the life of such a battle
In life so lifeless as it shows itself.

Con. They have said their prayers, and they stay for death. [suits

Daw. Shall we go send them dinners and fresh
And give their lasting horses provender,
And after fight with them? [Con. I stay but for my guidon: to the field!
I will the banner from a trumpet take,
And use it for my haste. Come, come, away;
The sun is high, and we outwear the day.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III. — The English camp.

Enter Gloucester, Bedford, Exeter, Erpingham, with all his host: Salisbury and Westmoreland.

Glo. Where is the king?

Bed. The king himself is rode to view their battle.

Exe. Of all the men they have full three thousand.

Exc. There's five to one: besides, they all are
Sal. God's arm strike with us! 'Tis a fearful odds.
God be wi' you, princes all: I'll to my charge:
If we no more meet till we meet in heaven,
Then, joyfully, my noble Lord of Exeter,
My dear Lord Gloucester; and my good Lord Exeter,
And my kind kinsman, warriors all, adieu! [Bed.
Lad. Farewell, good Salisbury; and good luck go with thee!

Exc. Farewell, kind lord; fight valiantly to-day:
And may God do thee wrong to mind thee of it.
For thou art framed of the firm truth of valour.

[Exit Salisbury.

Bed. He is as full of valour as of kindness;
Princely in both. [Enter the King.

West. O that we now had here
But one ten thousand of those men in England
That do no work to-day!

K. Hen. What's he that wishes so?
My cousin Westmoreland? No, my fair cousin:
If we are mark'd to die, we are now
To do our country's work; and if to live,
The fewer men, the greater share of honour.
God's will! I pray thee, wish not one man more.
By Jove, I am not covetous for gold,
Nor care I who doth feed upon my cost;
It yawns not if it men's garments wear;
Such outward things dwell not in my desires:
But if it be a sin to covet honour,
I am the most offending soul alive.
No, faith, my coz, wish not a man from England:
God's peace! I would not lose great an honour
As one man more, methinks, would share from me
For the best hope I have. O, do not wish one more!
Rather proclaim it, Westmoreland, through my host,
That he which hath no stomach to this fight,
Let him depart; his passport shall be made
And crowned for convey but into his purse.
We would not die in that man's company
That fears his fellowship to die with us.
This day is call'd the feast of Crispian:
He that outlives this day, and comes safe home,
Will stand a tip-toe when this day is named,
And none him at the name of Crispian.
He that shall live this day, and see old age,
Will yearly on the vigil feast his neighbours,
And say: 'To-morrow is Saint Crispian.'
Then will he strip his sleeve and show his scars,
And say: 'These wounds I had on Crispian's day.'
Yet live to say that sheds his blood with me
Shall be my brother: be he ne'er so vile,
This day shall gentle his condition;
And gentlemen in England now a-bed
Shall think themselves accurs'd they were not here,
And hold their hands askance whiles any speaks
That fought with us upon Saint Crispin's day.

Re-enter Salisbury.

Sal. My sovereign lord, bestow yourself with
The French are bravely in their battles set, [speed,
And will with all expediency charge on us.

K. Hen. All things are ready, if our hands be so.

West. O, may the man whose mind is backward now!

K. Hen. Thou dost not wish more help from West. God's will! my liege, would you and I

Without more help, could fight this royal battle?

K. Hen. Why, now thou hast wish'd five thousand
men:
Which likes me better than to wish us one,
You know your places: God be with you all!

Tucket. Enter Montjoy.

Mont. Once more I come to know of thee, King Harry.
If for thy ransom them wilt now compound,
Before thy most assured overthrow:
For certainly thou art so near the gulf,
Thou needs must be exalted. Besides, in mercy,
The counsel desires thou wilt mind
Thy followers of repentance; that their souls
May make a peaceful and a sweet retire [body.
From off these fields, where, wretches, their poor
Must lie and fester.

K. Hen. Who hath sent thee now?

Mont. The Constable of France.

K. Hen. I pray thee, bear my former answer back:
Bid them achieve me and then sell my bones.
Good God! why should they mock poor fellows thus?
ACT IV.  KING HENRY V.  SCENE V.

The man that once did sell the lion's skin
While the beast lived, was killed with hunting him.
A many of our bodies shall no doubt
Find native graves: on which, I trust,
Shall witness live in brass of this day's work;
And those that leave their valiant bones in France,
Dying like men, though buried in your dunghills,
They shall be famed; for there the sun shall greet them
And give their honours recking up to heaven:
Leaving their earthly parts to choke your elime,
The smell whereof shall breed a plague in France.
Mark then abounding valour in our English,
That being dead, like to the bullet's grazing,
Break out into a second course of mischief,
Killing in relapse of mortality.
Let me speak proudly: tell the constable
We are but warriors for the working-day;
Our gai ness and our gait are all besmirch'd
With rainy marching in the painful field;
There's not a piece of feather in our host —
Good argument, I hope we will not fly —
And time hath worn us into slovenly
But, by the mass, our hearts are in the trim;
And my poor soldiers tell me, yet ere night
They'll be in fresher robes, or they will pluck
The gay new coats o'er the French soldiers' heads
And turn them out of service. If they do this —
As, if God please, they shall — my ransom then
Will soon be levied. Herald, save thou thy labour;
Come thou no more for ransom, gentle herald;
They shall have none, I swear, but these my joints;
Which if they have as I will leave 'em then,
Shall yield them little, tell the constable. [well:
'Would I shall, King Harry. And so fare thee
Then never shall herald hear any more. [Exit.
K. Hen. I fear thou 'lt once more come again for ransom.

Enter York.
York. My lord, must humbly on my knee I beg
The leading of the vaward.
K. Hen. Take it, brave York. Now, soldiers, march away:
And how thou pleasest, God, dispose the day! [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The field of battle.

Fr. Sol. O Signieur Dieu! Pist. O Signeur Dieu should be a gentleman:
Perpend my words, O Signeur D ew, and mark;
O Signeur Dev., thou diest on point of fox,
Except, O signeur thou give to me
Egregious ransom.
Fr. Sol. O, prenez miséricorde! ayez pitié de moi!
Pist. Moy shall not serve; I will have forty moys;
Or I will fetch thy rim out at thy throat
In drops of crimson blood.
Fr. Sol. Est-il impossible de chapper la force de
Pist. Brass, cur! [ton brass
Thou dammed and luxurious mountain goat,
Offer'st me brass?
Fr. Sol. O pardonnez moi! Pist. Say'st thou me so? is that a ton of moys?
Come hither, boy; ask me this slave in French
What is his name.
Boy. Exeutez: comment êtes-vous appelé?
Fr. Sol. Monsieur le Fer.
Boy. He says his name is Master Fer.
Pist. Master Fer! I'll fer him, and lirk him, and ferret him: discuss the same in French unto him.

Boy. I do not know the French for fer, and ferret, and lirk.
Pist. Bid him prepare: for I will cut his throat.
Fr. Sol. Do le dit-il, monsieur?
Boy. Il me commande de vous dire que vous faites vous prét; car ce soldat ici est disposé tout à cette heure de couper votre gorge.
Pist. Owy, cuppege gore, permafouy,
Peasant, unless thou give me crowns, brave crowns;
Or chandle, and thou mayst thus my word:
Fr. Sol. O, je vous appelle, pour l'amour de Dicen, je pardonne! Je suis gentilhomme de bonne maison: gardez ma vie, et je vous donnerai deux cents ecus.
Pist. What are his words?
Boy. He prays you to save his life: he is a gentleman of a good house: and for his ransom he will give you two hundred crowns.
Pist. Tell him my fury shall abate, and I
The crowns will take.
Fr. Sol. Petit monsieur, que dit-il?
Boy. Encore qu'il est contre son jurement de pardonnez aucun prisonnier, mécanomus, pour les eucus que vous l'a vez promis, il est content de vous donner la liberté, le franchissement.
Fr. Sol. Sur mes genoux je vous donne mille remercicmens; et je m'estime heureux que je suis tombé entre les mains d'un chevalier, je pense, le plus brave, le plus brillant, et trés distingué seigneur d'
Pist. Expound unto me, boy. [Angletore.
Boy. He gives you, upon his knees, a thousand thanks; and he esteems himself happy that he hath fallen into the hands of one, as he thinks, the most brave, valorous, and thro-worthy signeur of England.
(Please me!
Pist. As I suck blood, I will some mercy show.
Boy. Suivez-vous le grand capitaine. [Exeunt
Pistol, and French Soldier.] I did never know so full a voice issue from so empty a heart: but the saying is true. The empty vessel makes the greatest sound! Bardolph and Xvn had ten times more value than this roaring devil i' the old play, that every one may pare his nails with a wooden dagger; and they are both hanged; and so would this be, if he durst steal any thing adventurously.
I must stay with the lackeys, with the baggage of our camp:
the French might have a good jury of us,
if he knew of it; for there is none to guard it but boys.

SCENE V.—Another part of the field.

Enter Constable, Orleans, Bourbon, Dauphin, and Rambures.

Con. O diable! Orel. O signeur! je le jour est perdud, tout est perdud!
Dau. Mort de ma vie! all is confounded, all!

Reproach and everlasting shame
Sits mocking in our plumes. O méchante fortune! O ransom is not run away. [I short alarum.
Con.

Why, all our ranks are broke.
Dau. O perturbable shame! let's stab ourselves.
Be these the wretches that we play'd at dice for?
Orl. Is this the king we sent to for his ransom?
Dau. Shame and eternal shame, nothing but shame!

Let us die in honour: once more back again;
And he that will not follow Bourbon now,
Let him go hence, and with his cap in hand,
Like a base pander, hold the chamber-door
Whilst by a slave, much might than my dog,
His fairest daughter is contaminated.
Con. Disorder, that hath spoil'd us, friend us now!
Let us on heaps go offer up our lives.
Orl. We are no woe yet living in the field
To smoother up the English in our throats,
If any order might be thought upon.
Bour. The devil take order now! I'll to the throng:
Let life be short; else shame will be too long.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—Another part of the field.

Alarums. Enter King Henry and forces, Exeter, and others.

K. Hen. Well have we done, thrice valiant countrymen.
But all's not done; yet keep the French the field.

Exe. The Duke of York commends him to your majesty.

K. Hen. Lives he, good uncle? thrice within
I saw him down; time up again, and fighting;
From helmet to the spur all blood he was.

Exe. In which array, brave soldier, doth he lie,
Lording the plain; and by his bloody side,
Yoke-fellow to his honour-owning wounds,
The noble Earl of Suffolk also lies.
Suffolk first died: and York, all haggled over,
Oft the cowardly rascal in gore he lay instead,
And takes him by the beard; kisses the gashes
That bloody did yawn upon his face;
And cries aloud 'Tarry, dear cousin Suffolk!
My soul shall thine keep company to heaven;
Tarry, sweet soul, for mine, then fly abreast,
As in this glorious and well-foughten field
We kept together in our chivalry!'
Upon these words I came and cheer'd him up;
He smiled me in the face, rauht me his hand,
And, with a feeble gripe, says 'Dear my lord,
Commend my service to my sovereign.'
So did he turn and over Suffolk's neck
He threw his wounded arm and kiss'd his lips;
And so espoused to death, with blood he seal'd
A testament of noble-keeping love.

The pretty and sweet manner of it forced
These waters from me which I would have stopp'd;
But I had not so much of man in me,
And all my mother came into mine eyes
And gave me up to tears.

K. Hen. I blame you not;
For, hearing this, I must perforce compound
With mostiful eyes, or they will issue too. [Alarums.
But, bark! what new alarum is this same?
The French have reinforced their scatter'd men:
Then every soldier kill his prisoners:
Give the word through.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VII.—Another part of the field.

Enter Fluellen and Gower.

Flu. Kill the poys and the luggage! 'tis expressly against the law of arms: 'tis as arrant a piece of knavery, mark you now, as can be offer't; in your conscience, now, is it not?

Gow. 'Tis certain there's not a boy left alive;
and the cowardly rascal that ran from the battle hath done this slaughter: besides, they have burned and carried away all that was in the king's tent;
wherefore the king, most worthy, hath caused every soldier to cut his prisoner's throat.
O, 'tis a gallant king!

Flu. Ay, he was born at Monmouth, Captain
Gower. What call you the town's name where Alexander the Pig was born?

Gow. Alexander the Great.

Flu. Why, I pray you, is not pig great? the pig, or the great, or the mighty, or the huge, or the large,
all one reckoning, save the phrase is a little variations.

Gow. I think Alexander the Great was born in Macedon; his father was called Philip of Macedon, as I take it.

Flu. I think it is in Macedon where Alexander is born. I tell you, captain, if you look in the maps of the 'ird, I warrant you sall find, in the comparisons between Macedon and Monmouth, that the situations, look you, is both alike. There is a river in Macedon; and there is also moreover a river at Monmouth: it is called Wye at Monmouth;
but it is out of my prains what is the name of the other river; but 'tis all one, 'tis alike as my fingers is to my fingers, and there is salmons in both. 'If you mark Alexander's life well, Harry of Monmouth's life is come after it indifferent well;
for there is figures in all things, Alexander, God knows, and you know, in his rages, and his furies, and his wrathes, and his chilers, and his moods,
and his displeasures, and his indignations, and also being a little intoxicated in his prains, did, in his ales and his angers, look you, kill his best friend, Cleitus.

Gow. Our king is not like him in that: he never killed any of his friends.

Flu. It is not well done, mark you now, to take the tales out of my mouth, ere it is made and finished, I speak but the figures and comparions of it: as Alexander killed his friend Cleitus, being in his ales and his cups: so also Harry Monmouth, being in his right wits and his good judgments, turned away the fat knight with the great belly-doublet; he was full of jests, and gipes, and knaverings and rascals: I have forgot his name.

Gow. Sir John Falstaff.

Flu. That is he: I'll tell you there is good men born at Monmouth.

Gow. Here comes his majesty.

Alarum. Enter King Henry and forces: Warwick,
Gloucester, Exeter, and others.

K. Hen. I was not angry since I came to France
Until this instant. Take a trumpet: herald;
Ride thou unto the horsemen on yon hill:
If they will fight with us, bid them come down,
Or void the field; they do offend our sight:
If they 'll do neither, we will come to them,
And make them skirr away, as swift as stones
Enforced from the old Assyrian slings:
Besides, we'll cut the throats of those we have,
And not a man of them that we shall take
Shall taste our mercy. Go and tell them so.

Enter Montjoy.

Exe. Here comes the herald of the French, my liege.

Gow. His eyes are humbler than they used to be.

K. Hen. How now! what means this, herald?
Clear the way to the king, and tell him not
That I have fined these bones of mine for ransom?
Comest thou again for ransom?

Mont. No, great king: I come to thee for charitable license,
That we may wander o'er this bloody field
To look our dead, and then to bury them;
To sort our nobles from our common men.
For many of our princes — woe the while! —
Lie drowned and soak'd in mercenary blood;
So do our vulgar drench their peasant limbs
In blood of princes; and their wounded steeds
Frette down deep in gore and with wild rage
Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters,
Killing them twice. O, give us leave, great king,
To view the field in safety and dispose
Of their dead bodies!

K. Hen. I tell thee truly, herald, I
Know not if the day be ours; or no:
For yet many of your horsemen peer
And gallop o'er the field.

Mont. The day is yours.

K. Hen. Pray be God praised, and not our strength,
For is this castle call'd that stands hard by? [it!
Mont. They call it Aiguierne.
ACT IV.

KING HENRY V.

SCENE VIII.

K. Hen. Then call we this the field of Agincourt, Fought on the day of Crispin Crispianus.

Flu. Your grandfather of famous memory, an't please your majesty, and your great-uncle Edward the Black Prince of Wales, as I have read in the chronicles, was borne there in the field of Agincourt in France.

K. Hen. They did, Fluellen.

Flu. Your majesty says very true: if your majesties is remembered of it, the Welshmen did good service in a garden where leeks did grow, wearing leeks in their Monmouth caps; which, your majesty know, to this hour is an honourable badge of this service; and I do believe your majesty takes no scorn to wear the leek upon Saint Tavy's day.

K. Hen. I wear it for a memorable honour; For I am Welsh, you know, good countryman.

Flu. All the water in Wye cannot wash your majesty's Welsh blood out of your pride, I can tell you that: God bless it and preserve it, as long as it pleases his grace, and his majesty too!

K. Hen. Thanks, good my countryman.

Flu. By Jesu, I am your majesty's countryman, I care not who know it: I will confess it to all the 'orld: I need not to be ashamed of your majesty, praised be God! Majesty is an honest man.

K. Hen. God keep me so! Our heralds go with Bring me just notice of the numbers dead [him]: On both our parts. Call yonder fellow hither.

[Points to Williams. Exeunt Heralds with Montjoy.]

Eee. Soldier, you must come to the king: [cap?]

K. Hen. Soldier thou art the world's worstest that glove in thy life. Will. An't please your majesty, 'tis the gage of one that I should fight withal, if he be alive.

K. Hen. An Englishman?

Will. An't please your majesty, a rascal that swaggered with me last night; who, it alive and ever dare to challenge this glove, I have sworn to take him a box o' th' ear: or if I can see my glove in his cap, which he swore, as he was a soldier, he would wear if alive, I will strike it out soundly.

K. Hen. What think you, Captain Fluellen? is it fit this soldier keep his oath?

Flu. He is a craven and a villain else, an't please your majesty, in my conscience.

K. Hen. It may be his enemy is a gentleman of great sort, quite from the answer of his degree.

Flu. Though he be as good a gentleman as the devil is, as Lucifer and Belzebub himself; it is necessary, look you, that he keep his vow and his oath: if he be perfurged, see you now, his reputation is as arrant a villain and a Jackass, as ever his black shoe trod upon God's ground and his earth, in my conscience, is!

K. Hen. Then keep thy vow, sirrah, when thou meet'st the fellow.

Will. So I will, my liege, as I live.

K. Hen. Who servest thou under?

Will. Under Captain Gower, my liege.

Flu. Gower is a good captain, and is good knowledge and literature in the wars. K. Hen. Call him hither to me, soldier.

Will. I will, my lord.

[Exit.]

K. Hen. Here, Fluellen; wear thou this favour for me and stick it in thy cap: when Alencon and myself were down together, I plucked this glove from his helm: if any man challenge this, he is a friend to Alencon, and an enemy to our person; if they encounter any such, apprehend him, an thou dost me love.

Flu. Your grace dree's me as great honours as can be desired in the hearts of his subjects: I would fain see the man, that has but two legs, that shall find himself aggrieved at this glove; that is all; but I would fain see it once, an please God of his grace that I might see.

K. Hen. Knowest thou Gower?

Flu. He is my dear friend, an please you.

K. Hen. Pray thee, go seek him, and bring him to my tent.

Flu. I will fetch him.

[Exit.]

K. Hen. My Lord of Warwick, and my brother

Follow Fluellen closely at the heels: [Gower,] The glove which was given him for a favour

May haply purchase him a box o' th' ear;

It is the soldier's; I by bargain should

Wear it myself. Follow, good cousin Warwick;

If that the soldier strike him, as I judge

By his blunt bearing he will keep his word,

Some sudden mischief may arise of it;

For I do know Fluellen valiantly

And, touched with choler, hot as gunpowder,

And quickly will return an injury;

Follow, and see there be no harm between them.

Go you with me, uncle of Exeter.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VIII.—Before King Henry's pavilion.

Enter Gower and Williams.

Will. I warrant it is to knight you, captain.

Enter Fluellen.

Flu. God's will and his pleasure, captain, I see you now, come apace to the king: there is more good toward you peradventure than is in your knowledge to dream of.

Will. Sir, know you this glove? [glove.]

Flu. Know the glove! I know the glove is a

Will. I know this; and thus I challenge it. [Strikes him.]

Flu. 'Shood! an arrant traitor as any is in the universal world, or in France, or in England! God. How now, sir! you villain!

Will. Do you think I'll be forsworn?

Flu. Stand away, Captain Gower: I will give treason his payment into plows, I warrant you.

Will. I am no traitor.

Flu. That's a lie in thy throat. I charge you in his majesty's name, apprehend him: he's a friend of the Duke Alencon's.

Enter Warwick and Gloucester.

War. How now, how now! what's the matter?

Flu. My Lord of Warwick, here is—praised be God for it—a most contagious treason come to light, look you, as you shall desire in a summer's day. Here is his majesty.

Enter King Henry and Exeter.

K. Hen. How now! what's the matter?

Flu. My liege, here is a villain and a traitor, that, look your grace, has struck the glove which your majesty is take out of the helmet of Alencon.

Will. My liege, this was my glove; here is the fellow of it; and he that I gave it to in change promised to wear it in his cap: I promised to strike him, if he did: I met this man with my glove in his cap, and I have been as good as my word.

Flu. Your majesty hear now, saving your majesty's manhood, what an arrant, rascally, beggarly, lousy knave is: I hope your majesty is near me testimony and witness, and will avouchment, that this is the glove of Alencon, that your majesty is give me; in your conscience, now?

K. Hen. Give me thy glove, soldier: look, here is the fellow of it.

T'was I, indeed, thou promised'st to strike;

And thou hast given me most bitter terms.

Flu. An please your majesty, let his neck answer for it, if there is any martial law in the world.

K. Hen. How canst thou make me satisfaction?

Will. All offences, my lord, come from the heart:

never came any from mine that might offend your

K. Hen. It was ourself thou didst abuse. [majesty.]

Will. Your majesty came not like yourself: you appeared to me but as a common man; witness the night, your garments, your lowliness; and all your highness suffered under that shape, I beseech you take it for your own fault and not mine: for had you been as I took you for, I made no offence; therefore, I beseech your highness, pardon me. [crowns.

K. Hen. Here, uncle Exeter, fill this glove with
And give it to this fellow. Keep it, fellow;
And wear it for an honour in thy cap
Till I do challenge it. Give him the crowns:
And, captain, you must needs be friends with him.

Flu. By this day and this light, the fellow has mettle enough in his belly. Hold, there is twelve pence for you; and I pray you to serve God, and keep you out of pravels, and prattles, and quarrels, and, I warrant you, it is the better for you.

Will, I will none of your money.

Flu. It is with a good will: I can tell you, it will serve you to mend your shoes: come, wherefore should you be so pushful? your shoes is not so good:
it is a good silling, I warrant you, or I will change it.

Enter an English Herald.

K. Hen. Now, herald, are the dead number'd?

Herald. Here is the number of the slaughtered
French [unclu?]

K. Hen. What prisoners of good sort are taken.

Exe. Charles Duke of Orleans, nephew to the king;
John Duke of Bourbon, and Lord Boncon quaint:
Of other lords and barons, knights and squires,
Full fifteen hundred, besides common men.

K. Hen. This note doth tell me of ten thousand
French
That in the field lie slain: of princes, in this number,
And nobles bearing banners, there lie dead
One hundred twenty-six: added to these,
Of knights, esquires, and gallant gentlemen.
Eight thousand and four hundred: of the which,
Five hundred were but yesterday daird knights;
So that, in these ten thousand they have lost,
There are but sixteen hundred mercenaries;
The rest are princes, barons, lords, knights, squires,
And gentle sort of blood and quality.
The name of those their nobles that lie dead:
Charles Delabreth, high constable of France;
Jacques de Chatillon, admiral of France;
The master of the cross-bows, Lord Ramnubres;
Great Master of France, the brave Sir Guichard
Dolphin;
John Duke of Aletun, Anthony Duke of Brabant,
The brother to the Duke of Burgundy,
And Edward Duke of Bar: of lusty ears,
Grandpré and Roussi, Fauconberg and Foix.
Beaumont and Marie, Vandemont and Lestrade.
Here was a royal fellowship of death!
Where is the number of our English dead?

[Herarcl shows him another paper.
Edward the Duke of York, the Earl of Suffolk,
Sir Richard Ketley, Davy Gam, esquire:
None else of name; and of all other men
But five and twenty. O God, thy arm was here;
And not to us, but to thy arm alone,
Ascribe we all! When, without stratagem,
But in plain shock and even play of battle,
Was ever known so great and little loss
On one part and on the other? Take it, God,
For it is none but thine! [Exe.

Flu. 'Tis wonderful! Our King, the other paper.
Come, go we in procession to the village:
And be it death proclaimed through our host
To boast of this or take that praise from God
Which is his only.

Flu. Is it not lawful, an please your majesty, to tell how many is killed?

K. Hen. Yes, captain; but with this acknowledgment
That God fought for us. [Exeunt.

Flu. Yes, my conscience, he did us great good.

K. Hen. Do we all holy rites;
Let there be sung 'Non nobis' and 'Te Deum';
The dead with charity enclouded in clay;
And then to Calais: and to England then;
Where ner from France arrived more happy men.

[Exeunt.

ACT V.

PROLOGUE.

Enter Chorus.

Chor. Vouchsafe to those that have not read the story,
That I may prompt them: and of such as have,
I humbly pray them to admit the excuse
Of time, of numbers and due course of things;
Which cannot in their large and proper life
Be here presented. Now we bear the king
Toward Calais: grant him there: there seen,
Have him away upon your winged thoughts
Atheyart the sea. Behold, the English beach
Pales in the flood with men, with wives and boys,
Whose shouts and claps out-voice the deep-mouth'd
Which like a mighty whirler 'for the king' [sea.
Seems to prepare his way: so let him land,
And solemnly see him set on to London,
So swift a pace hath thought that even now
You may imagine him upon Blackheath;
Where that his lords desire him to have borne
Hiss brained helmet and his bended sword
Before him through the city: he forbids it,
Being free from vainness and self-glorious pride;
Giving full trophy, signal and ostent
Quite from himself to God. But now behold,
The quick forge and working-house of thought,
How London doth pour out her delight:
The mayor and all his brethren in best sort,

Like to the senators of the antique Rome,
With the plebeians swarming at their heels,
Go forth and fetch their conquering Caesar in:
As by a lower but loving likelihood.
We were now the general of our gracious empress,
As in good time he may, from Ireland coming,
Bringing rebellion broached on his sword,
How many would the peaceful city quit,
To welcome him! much more, and much more cause,
Did they think to. Now in London place him;
As yet the lamentation of the French
Invites the King of England’s stay at home;
The emperor’s coming in behalf of France,
To order peace between them; and omit
All the occurrences, whatever chanced,
Till Harry’s back-return again to France;
There must we bring him; and myself have play’d
The interim, by remembering you ‘tis past.
Then brook abridgment, and your eyes advance,
After your thoughts, straight back again to France.

SCENE I.—France. The English camp.

Enter Fluellen and Gower.

Gower. Nay, that’s right; but why wear you your leak to-day? Saint Davy’s day is past.

Flu. There is occasions and causes why and wherefor in bad things: I will tell you, asse my friend,
Captain Gower: the rascally, scald, beggarly, lousy, praguing knave, Pistol, which you and yourself and all the world know to be no better than a fellow, look you now, of no merit, he is come to me and beseeches me to let him eat my leek; I bid him eat my leek; it was in a place where I could not breed no contention with him: but I will be so bold as to wear it in my cap till I see him once again, and then will I tell him a little piece of my desires.

Enter Pistol.

Gost. Why, here he comes, swelling like a turkey-cock.

Flu. 'Tis no matter for his swellings nor his turkey-cocks. God bless you, Aunchieth Pistol! you scurry, lousy knave, God bless you!

Pist. Ha! art thou belam'd? dost thou thurst, base Trojan.

To have me fold up Paris's fatal web?

Hence! I am qualmish at the smell of leek.

Flu. I peseche you heartily, scurvy, lousy knave, at my desires, and my requests, and my petitions, to eat, look you, this leek: because, look you, you do not love it, nor your affections and your appetites and your digestions do not agree with it, I would desire you to eat it.

Pist. Not for Cadwallader and all his goats.

Flu. There is one goat for you. [Strikes him.] Will you have good, scald knave, as eat it? [Pistol Base Trojan, thought die.

Flu. You say very true, scald knave, when God's will is: I will desire you to live in the mean time, and eat your victuals: come, there is sauce for it. [Strikes him.] You called me yesterday mountainsquire; but I will make you to-day a square of low degree.

I pray you, fall to: if you can mock a leek, you can eat a leek.

Gost. Enough, captain; you have astonished him.

Flu. I say, I will make him eat some part of my leek; or I will beat his pate four days. Bite, I pray you; it is good for your green wound and your bloody coxcomb.

Pist. Must I bite?

Flu. Yes, certainly, and out of doubt and out of question too, and ambigities.

I eat and eat, I swear—

Flu. Eat you? I pray you; will you have some more sauce to your leek? there is not enough leek to swear by.

Pist. Quiet thy cudgel; thou dost see I eat.

Flu. Much good do you, scald knave, heartily.

Nay, pray you, throw none away; the skin is good for your brother coxcomb. When you take occasions to see leeks hereafter, I pray you, mock at 'em; that is all.

Pist. Good.

Flu. Ay, leeks is good: hold you, there is a great to heal your pate.

Pist. Mea gout.

Flu. Yes, verily and in truth, you shall take it; or have another leek in my pocket, which you shall eat.

Pist. I take thy gout in earnest of revenue.

Flu. If I owe you anything, I will pay you in cudgels: you shall be a woodchopper, and buy nothing of me but cudgels. God b' w' th' you, and keep you, and heal your pate. [Exit.

Pist. All hell shall stir for this.

Gost. Go, go; you are a counterfeit cowardly knave. Will you mock at an ancient tradition, begun upon an honourable respect, and worn as a noble trophy of predeceased valour and dare not avouch in your deeds any of your words? I have seen you gleaning and gallling at this gentleman twice or thrice. You thought, because he could not speak English in the native garb, he could not therefore handle an English cudgel: you find it otherwise; and henceforth let a Welsh correction teach you a good English condition. Fare ye well.

[Exit.

Pist. Doth Fortune play the huswife with me now?

News have I, that my Neil is dead i' the spatial

Of malady of France;

And there my rendezvous is quite cut off.

Old I do wax: and from my weary limbs

Is roistered and swept:

Well, bawd I'll turn,

And something lean to outpurse of quick hand.

To England will I steal, and there I'll steal:

And patches will I get unto these enguel'd scars,

And swear I got them in the Gallia wars. [Exit.

SCENE II.—France. A royal palace.

Enter, at one door, King Henry, Exeter, Bedford, Gloucester, Warwick, Westmoreland, and other Lords; at another, the French King, Queen Isabel, the Princess Katharine, Alice and other Ladies; the Duke of Burgundy, and his train.

K. Hen. Peace to this meeting, wherefore we are Unto our brother France, and to our sister, [met] Health and fair time of day: joy and good wishes To our most fair and princely cousin Katharine; And, as a branch and member of this royalty, To princely Alice, her dear youth and comfort, We do salute you, Duke of Burgundy; And, princes French, and peers, health to you all! Fr. King. Right joyous are we to behold your Most worthy brother England; fairly met: [face, So are you, princes English, every one.

Q. Isa. So happy be the issue, brother England, Of this good day and of this gracious meeting, As we are now glad to behold your eyes; Your eyes, which hitherto have borne in them Against the French, that met them in their bent,

The fatal balls of murdering bashfuls:

The venom of such looks, we fear alike,

Have lost their quality, and that this day Shall change all griefs and quarrels into love.

K. Hen. To cry amen to that, thus we appear.

Q. Isa. You English princes all, I do salute you.

Bar. My duty to you both, on equal love,

Great Kings of France and England! That I have a labour'd.

With all my wits, my pains and strong endeavours,

To bring your most imperial majesties Unto this bar and royal interview,

Your mightiness on both parts best can witness.

Since then my office hath so far prevai'd That, face to face, you and as royal eye to eye,

You have congregated, let it not disgrace me,

If I demand, before this royal view,

What rub or what impediment there is,

Why that the naked, poor and mangled Peace,
Dear nurse of arts, plenties and joyful births,
Should not in this best garden of the world
Our fertile France, put up her lovely visage?

Alas, she hath from France too long been chased,
And all her husbandry doth lie on heaps,
Corrupting in its own fertility.

Her vine, the merry cashier of the heart,
Unpruned dies; her hedges even plein'd,
Like prisoners wildly overgrown with hair,
Put forth disorder'd twigs; her hollow laces
The darnel, hemlock and rank funiture
Both root upon, while that the cloaker rusts
That should deracinate such savagery:

The even morn that now so swiftly forth
The freckled cowslip, burnet and green clover,
Wanting the skye, all uncorrected, rank,
Conceiveth sullenness and nothing tears
But hateful docks, rough thistles, keckses, bars,
 Losing both beauty and utility.
And as our vineyards, fallows, meads and hedges,
Defective in their natures, grow to wildness,
Even so our houses and ourselves and children
Have lost, or do not learn for want of time,
That you that should become our country;
But grow like savages,—as soldiers will
That nothing do but meditate on blood.—
To swearing and stern looks, diffused attire
And everything that seems unnatural.
Which to reduce into our former favour
You have offered, in the name of our sake. Kate, why you used me for the one, I have neither words nor measure, and for the other, I have no strength in measure, yet a reasonable measure in strength. If I could win a lady at leap-frog, or by vaulting into my saddle with my armour on my back, under the correction of being spoken to, I should not like to be a wife. Or if I might buffet for my love, or bound my horse for her favours, I could lay on like a butcher and sit like a jack-an-apes, never off. But, before God, Kate, I cannot look greenly nor grasp out my eloquence, nor have no cunning in protestation: only downright oaths, which I never use till urged, nor never break for urging. If thou canst love a fellow of this temper, Kate, whose face is not worth sun-burning, that never looks in his glass for love of anything he sees there, let thine eye be thy cook. I speak to thee plain soldier: if thou canst say me for this, take me; if not, to say thee that I shall die, is true; but for thine love, by the Lord, no; yet I love thee too. And while thou livest, dear Kate, take a fellow of plain and uncoined constancy; for he performe must do thee right, because he hath not the gift to woo in other places: for these fellows of infinite tongue, that can rhyme themselves into ladies' favours, they do always reason themselves out again. What! a speaker is but a prater; a rhyme is but a ballad. A good leg will fall; a straight back will stoop; a black beard will turn white; a curled pate will grow bald; a fair face will wither; a full eye will wax hollow; but a good heart, Kate, is the sun and the moon; or rather the sun and not the moon; for it shines bright and never changes, but keeps his course truly. If thou would have such a one, take me: and take me, take a soldier; take a soldier, take a king. And what sayest thou then to my love? My love is fair, and my love is Mine.

Kath. Is it possible dat I should love de enemy of France?

K. Hen. No; it is not possible you should love the enemy of France, Kate: but, in loving me, you should love the friend of France; for I love France so well that I will not only with a village of it; I will have it all mine: and, Kate, when France is mine and I am yours, then yours is France and you are mine.

Kath. I cannot tell vat is dat.

K. Hen. No, Kate? I will tell thee in French, which I am sure will hang upon my tongue like a new-married wife about her husband's neck, hardly to be shook off. Je quiens sur le possession de France, et quand vous avez le possession de moi,—let me see, what then? Saint Deus be my speed!—done votre est France et vous es mie. It is as easy for me, Kate, to conquer the kingdom as to speak so much more French: I shall never move thee in French, unless it be to laugh at me.

Kath. Sain your honnour, le Francois que vous pariez, il est meilleur que l'Anglois lequel je parle.

K. Hen. No, faith, is't not, Kate: but thy speaking of my tongue, and I thine, most truly falsely, must needs be granted to be much at one. But, Kate, dost thou understand thus much English, canst thou love me?

Kath. I cannot tell.

K. Hen. Can any of your neighbours tell, Kate? I'll ask them. Come, I know thou lovest me: and at night, when you come into your closet, you'll question this gentleman about me; and i know, kate, if you will to her dispraise those parts in me you love with your heart: but, good kate, mock me mercifully; the rather, gentle princess, because i love thee cruelly. if ever thou beest mine, kate, as i have a saving faith within me tells me thou shalt, i get thee with scolding, and thou must that i will to her dispose those parts in me, that i love with my heart: but, good kate, mock me mercifully; the rather, gentle princess, because i love thee cruelly.

kath. your majesty axe lasse french. therefore to deceive de most sage demoiselle dat is en france.

k. hen. now, i am upon my false french! by mine honour, in true english, i love thee, kate: by which honour i dare not swear thou lovest me; yet my blood begins to flatter me that thou dost, by laboring the poor and untimely effect of my visage. now, brevish my father's ambition! he was thinking of civil wars when he got me: therefore was i created with a stubborn outside, with an aspect of iron, that, when i come to woo ladies, i fright them. but, in faith, kate, the latter way, the better i shall appear; my comfort is, that old age, that ill layer upon beauty, can do no more spoil upon my face: thou hast me, if thou hast me, at the worst; and thou shalt wear me, if thou wear me, better and better: and therefore tell me, most fair katharine, will you have me? put your maiden blushes; avouch the thongs of your heart with the looks of an empress; take me by the hand, and say "harry of england, i am thine;" which word thou shalt no sooner bless mine ear withal, but i will tell thee anon: "england is thine, ireland is thine, scotland is thine, and henry but a dauphin to thee!" i speak it before his face, if he be not tellow with the best king, thou shalt find the best king of good fellows. come, your answer in broken music; for thy voice is music and thy english broken; therefore, queen of all, katharine, beak thy mind to me in broken english: thou sayest i am a bachelor.

kath. but is it so? it shall please de roi mon père.

k. hen. nay, it will please him well, kate; it shall please him, kate.

kath. den it sall also content me.

k. hen. upon that i kiss your hand, and i call you my queen.

kath. laissez, mon seigneur, laissez, laissez; ma foi, je ne veux point que vous abaissez votre grandeur en faisant la main d'une de votre seigneurie indigne serviteur; excusez-nou, je vous supplie, mon tres-puissant seigneur.

k. hen. then i will kiss your lips, kate. kath. les dames de demoiselles pour briser davantage leurs veines; il n'est pas la coutume de france.

k. hen. madam my interpreter, what says she? alice. but it is not de fashion pour les dames de france; i cannot tell vatt es baiser en anglais.

k. hen. to kiss.

kath. les demoiselles entendre bettre que mo. k. hen. it is not a fashion for the maids in france to kiss before they are married, would she say? alice. oui, vraiment.

k. hen. o kate, nice customs court to great kings. dear kate, you and i cannot be confined within the weak list of a country's fashion: we are the makers of manners, kate; and the liberty that follows our places stops the mouth of all fault. as i will do yours, for upholding the nice fashion of your country in denying me a kiss; therefore, patiently and yielding. [kissing her.] you have witchcraft in your lips, kate; there is more eloquence in a sugar touch of them than in the tongues of the french council; and they should sooner persuade harry of england than a general petition of monarchs. here comes your father.

re-enter the french king and his queen, burgundy, and other lords.

bur. god save your majesty! my royal cousin, teach you our dutie.

k. hen. i would have her learn, my fair cousin, how perfectly i love her; and that is good english.

bur. is she not apt?

k. hen. our tongue is rough, coz, and my condition is not smooth: so that, having neither the voice nor the heart of that way about me, i cannot so conjure up the spirit of love in her, that he will appear in his true likeness.

bur. pardon the frankness of my mirth, if i answer you for that. if you would conjure in her, you must make a circle; if conjure up love in her in his true likeness, he must appear naked and blind. can you blame her, then, being a maid yet rossed over with the virgin crimson of modesty, if she deny the appearance of a naked blind boy in her naked seeing self? it were, my lord, a hard condition for a maid to consign to.

k. hen. yet they do wink and yield, as love is for love and enforces.

bur. they are then excused, my lord, when they see not what they do.

k. hen. then, good my lord, teach your cousin to consent winking.

bur. i will wink on her to consent! my lord, if you will teach her to know my meaning: for maidens, well summered and warm kept, are like flies at bartholomew-tide, blind, though they have their eyes; and then they will endure handling, which before would not abide looking on.

k. hen. this moral tiles me over to time and a hot summer; and i will, i tell thee, speak it before his face, if he be not fellow with the best king, thou shalt find the best king of good fellows. come, your answer in broken music; for thy voice is music and thy english broken; therefore, queen of all, katharine, break thy mind to me in broken english: thou sayest i am a bachelor.

fr. king. yes, my lord, you see them perspectively, the cities turned into a maid: for they are all girdled with maiden whips that war hath never entered.

k. hen. shall kate be my wife? fr. king. so please you.

k. hen. i am content; so the maiden cities you talk of may wait on her: so the maid that stood in the way for my wish shall show me the way to my will. [son.

fr. king. we have consented to all terms of reason.

k. hen. is it so, my lord of england?

west. the king hath granted every article:

his daughter first, and then in sequel all.

according to their firm proposed nature.

sez. only he hath not yet subscribed this:

where your majesty demands, that the king of france, having any thing to write for matter of grant, shall make his highness in this form and with this addition, in french, notre tréscher fils henri, roi d'angleterre, hérif et de france; and thus in latin, præclarissimns filius nostro henricus rex anglia, et heres francie.

fr. king. nor this i have not, brother, so denied, but your request shall make me let it pass.
K. Hen. I pray you then, in love and dear alliance,
Let that one article rank with the rest;
And thereupon give me your daughter.
Fr. King. Take her, fair son, and from her blood
Raise up
Issue to me; that the contending kingdoms
Of France and England, whose very shores look pale
With envy of each other’s happiness,
May cease their hatred, and this dear conjunction Plant neighbourhood and Christian-like accord
In their sweet bosoms, that never war advance
His bleeding sword ’twixt England and fair France.
All. Amen!
K. Hen. Now, welcome, Kate; and bear me witness all,
That here I kiss her as my sovereign queen.
[Flourish.
Q. Ist. God, the best maker of all marriages,
Combine your hearts in one, your realms in one!
As man and wife, being two, are one in love,
So be there ’twixt your kingdoms such a spousal,
That never may ill office, or fell jealousy,
Which troubles off the bed of blessed marriage,
Thrust in between the paction of these kingdoms,
To make divorce of their incorporate league:
That English may as French, French Englishmen,
Receive each other. God speak this Amen!

All. Amen!
K. Hen. Prepare we for our marriage: on which day,
My Lord of Burgundy, we’ll take your oath,
And all the peers’, for surety of our leagues.
Then shall I swear to Kate, and you to me;
And may our oaths well kept and prosperons be!
[Senriet.—Exeunt.

EPILOGUE.

Chor. Thus far, with rough and all-unable pen,
Our bending author hath pursued the story,
In little room confining mighty men,
Mangling by starts the full course of their glory.
Small time, but in that small most greatly lived
This star of England: Fortune made his sword;
By which the world’s best garden he achieved,
And of it left his son imperial lord.
Henry the Sixth, in infant hands crown’d King
Of France and England, did this king succeed;
Whose state so many had the managing,
That they lost France and made his England bleed:
Which oft our stage hath shown: and, for their sake,
In your fair minds let this acceptance take. [Exit.

King Henry.—O God, thy arm was here;
And not to us, but to thy arm alone,
Assist us all! When, without stratagem,
But in plain shock and even play of battle,
Was ever known so great and little loss
On one part and on the other? Take it, God,
For it is none but thine!—Act IV., Scene vii.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Westminster Abbey.

Dead March. Enter the Funeral of King Henry the Fifth, attended on by the Duke of Bedford, Regent of France; the Duke of Gloucester, Protector; the Duke of Exeter, the Earl of Warwick, the Bishop of Winchester, Heralds, &c.

Bed. Hung be the heavens with black, yield day to night! Comets, importing change of times and states, Brumalize your crystal tresses in the sky, And with them scourge the hot revolted stars That have consented unto Henry's death! King Henry the Fifth, too famous to live long! England ne'er lost a king of so much worth. Glou. England ne'er had a king until his time. Virtue he had, deserving to command: His martial sword did blind men with his beams; His arms spread wider than a dragon's wings; His sparkling eyes, replete with wrathful fire, More dazzled and drove back his enemies Than mid-day sun fierce bent against their faces. What should I say? his deeds exceed all speech: He ne'er lift up his hand but conquered. [blood? Exe. We mourn in black; why mourn we not in Henry is dead and never shall revive: Upon a wooden coffin we attend, And death's dishonourable victory We with our stately presence glorify, Like captives bound to a triumphant car. What! shall we curse the planets of mishap

That plotted thus our glory's overthrow? Or shall we think the subtle-witted French Conjurers and sorcerers, that afraid of him By magic verses have contrived his end? [Win. He was a king bless'd of the King of kings. Unto the French the dreadful judgment-day So dreadful will not be as was his sight. The battles of the Lord of hosts he fought: The church's prayers made him so prosperous. Glou. The church! where is it? Had not churchmen pray'd, His thread of life had not so soon decay'd: None do you like but an effeminate prince, Whom, like a school-boy, you may over-awe. [for Win. Gloucester, what' re we like, thou art protector, And lookest to command the prince and realm. Thy wife is proud: she holdeth thee in awe, More than God or religious churchmen may. Glou. Name not religion, for thou lovest the flesh, And ne'er throughout the year to church thou go'st Except it be to pray against thy foes. [peace: Bed. Cease, cease these jars and rest your minds in Let's to the altar: heralds, wait on us. Instead of gold, we'll offer up our arms; Since arms avail not now that Henry's dead. Posterity, await for wretched years, When at their mothers' moist eyes babies shall suck, Our isle be made a nourish of salt tears. And none but women left to wail the dead. Henry the Fifth, thy ghost I invocate: Prosper this realm, keep it from civil broils, ACT I. FIRST PART OF KING HENRY VI. SCENE II.

Combat with adverse planets in the heavens!
A far more glorious star thy soul will make
Than Julius Caesar or bright —

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My honourable lords, health to you all!
Sad tidings bring to you out of France, —
Of loss, of slaughter and desolation:
Guineau, Champagne, Rheims, Orleans,
Paris, Gisors, Poitiers, and all quite lost, I fear?

Bet. What say'st thou, man, before dead Henry's
Speak softly, or the loss of those great towns
Will make him burst his lead and rise from death.

Glo. Is Paris lost? Is Rouen yielded up?

If Henry were recall'd to life again,
These news would climb another one more yield
The Eec. How were they lost? what treachery was used?

Mess. No treachery: but want of men and money.
Amongst the soldiers this is muttered,
That here you maintain several factions,
And whilst a field should be dispatch'd and fought,
You are disputing of your generals:
One would have lingering wars with little cost;
Another would fly swift, but wanteth wings;
A third thinks, without expense at all,
By guileful fair words peace may be obtain'd.

Awake, awake, English nobility! Let not your horses be new-born;
Crop'd are the flower-de-luces in your arms;
Of England's coat one half is cut away.

Eec. Were our tears wanting to this funeral,
These tidings would call forth their flowing tidies.

Bed. Me they concern; Regent I am of France.
Give me my steel'd count. I'll fight for France.
Away with these disgraceful waiting roles!
Wounds will I load the French instead of eyes,
To weep their interminable miseries.

Enter to them another Messenger.

Mess. Lords, view these letters full of bad mis
France is revolted from the English quite, [chance.
Except some petty towns of no import:
The Dauphin Charles is crowned king in Rheims;
The Bastard of Orleans with him is join'd;
Reignier, Duke of Anjou, doth take his part;
The Duke of Bourbon, with him he declare.

Bet. The Dauphin crowned king! all fly to him! O, whither shall we fly from this reproach?

Glo. We will not fly, but to our enemies' throats,
Bedford, if thou be slack, I'll fight it out. [mess.

Bed. Gloucester, why doubt'st thou of my forward
An army have I muster'd in my thoughts,
With wherewith already France is overrun.

Enter another Messenger.

Mess. My gracious lords, to add to your laments,
Wherewith you now bedew King Henry's hearse,
I must inform you of a dismal sight
Betwixt the stont Lord Talbot and the French.

Win. What! wherein Talbot overcame? is 't so?

Mess. O, no; wherein Lord Talbot was overthrown:
The circumstance I'll tell you more at large.
The tenth of August last this dreadful lord,
Retiring from the siege of Orleans,
Having full scarce six thousand in his troop,
By three and twenty thousand of the French
Was round encompassed and set upon.
No leisure had he to enrank his men;
He wanted pikes to set before his archers;
Instead of them, which he could draw out of hedges
They pitched in the ground confusedly,
To keep the horsemen off from breaking in.
More than three hours the fight continued;
Where valiant Talbot above human thought
Enacted wonders with his sword and lance;
Here break the sentry wall, there none pursu'd stand him;
Here, there, and every where, enraged he drove;

The French exclaim'd, the devil was in arms;
All the whole army stood agazed on him:
His soldiers spying his undaunted spirit
A 'Talbot and Talbot' cried they again,
And rush'd into the bowels of the battle.

Here had the conquest fully been seal'd up,
If Sir John Fastolfe had not play'd the coward:
He, being in the vaward, placed behind
With purpose to relieve and follow them.

Cowardly fled, not having struck one stroke,
Hence grew the general wreck and massacre;
Enclosed were they with their enemies:
A base Walloon, to win the Dauphin's grace,
Thrust Talbot with a spear into the back,
Whom all France with their chief assembl'd strength
Durst not approach to the talon.

Bed. Is Talbot slain? then I will slay myself,
For living idly here in pomp and ease,
Whilst such a worthy leader, wanting aid,
Unto his dastard foes is betray'd.

Mess. O, no, he livest but is taken prisoner,
And Lord Scales with him and Lord Hungerford:
Most of the rest slaughter'd or took likewise.

Bed. His ransom there is none but I shall pay:
I'll take the Dauphin headlong from his throne;
His crown shall be the ransom of my friend;
Four of their lords I'll change for one of ours.
Farewell, my masters: to my task will I;

Bonfires in France forthwith I am to make,
To keep our great Saint George's feast withal:
Ten thousand soldiers with me I will take,
Whose bloody deeds shall make all Europe quake.

Mess. So you had need; for Orleans is besieged;
The English army is grown weak and faint:
The Earl of Salisbury craveth supply,
And hardly keeps his men from mutiny,
Since they, so few, watch such a multitude.

Eec. Remember, lords, your oaths to Henry sworn;
Either to quell the Dauphin utterly,
Or bring him in obedience to your state.
Bed. I do remember it; and here take my leave,
To go about my preparation. [Exit.

Glo. I'll to the Tower with all the haste I can,
To view the artillery and munition;
And then I will proclaim young Henry king. [Exit.

Bed. That is, all England, if the young king is,
Being order'd his special governor,
And for his safety there 'll best devise. [Exit.

Win. Each hath his place and function to attend:
I am left out; for me nothing remains.
But long I will not be Jack out of office:
The king from Etham I intend to steal
And sit at chiefest stern of public weal. [Exit.

SCENE II.—France. Before Orleans.

Sound a flourish, Enter Charles, Alencon, and Reignier, marching with drum and soldiers.

Char. Mars his true moving, even as in the
So in the earth, to this day is not known: [heavens
Late did he shine upon the English side;
Now we are victors; upon us he smiles.

What towns of any moment but we have?
At pleasure here we lie near Orleans;
Otherwhiles the faintish English, like pale ghosts,
Faintly besiege us one hour in a month.

Men. They want their porridge and their fat bail-beves:
Either they must be dieted like mules,
Tread hard and hard with their ponder tied to their mouths,
Or piteous they will look, like drowned mice.

Reig. Let's raise the siege: why live we idly here?
Talbot is taken, whom we wont to fear;
Remaineth none but mad-brain'd Salisbury;
And he may well in fretting spend his gall,
Nor men nor money hath he to match with war.

Char. Sound, sound alarum! we will rush on them.
Now for the honour of the forlorn French!
Him I forgive my death that killeth me
When he sees me go back one foot or fly.

Here alarum; they are beaten back by the English with great loss.
Re-enter Charles, Alençon, and Reig.

Char. Who ever saw the like? what men have I!
Dogs! cursed neutrality! I would ne'er have fled,
But that they left me midst my enemies.

Reig. Salisbury is a desperate homicide;
He fighteth as one weary of his life.
The other lords, like lions wanting food,
Do rush upon us as their hungry prey.

Alen. A Frenchman, a countryman of ours, reports,
England and all Oliver's forces had
During the time Edward the Third did reign.
More truly now may this be verified;
For none but Samsons and Goliases
It sendeth forth to skirmish.  One to ten!

Lean raw-boned rascals! who would e'er suppose
They had such courage and audacity?

Char. Let's leave this town; for they are hair-brain'd slaves,
And hunger will enforce them to be more eager:
Of old I know them; rather with their teeth
The walls they'll tear down than forsake the siege.

Reig. I think, by some odd grumors or device
Their arms are set like clocks, still to strike on;
Else ne'er could they hold out so as they do.

By my consent, we'll even let them alone.

Alen. Be it so.

Enter the Bastard of Orleans.

Bast. Where's the Prince Dauphin? I have news for him.

Char. Bastard of Orleans, thrice welcome to us.

Bast. Methinks your looks are sad, your cheer appell'd:
Hath the late overthrow wrought this offence?
Be not dismay'd; for succor is at hand:
A holy maid wither from me I bring,
Which by a vision sent to her from heaven
Ordained is to raise this tedious siege
And drive the English forth the bounds of France.
The spright of deep piety she hath,
Exceeding the nine sibyls of old Rome:
What's past and what's to come she can descry.
Speak, shall I call her in?  Believe my words,
For they are certain and unfallable.

Char. Go, call her in.  [Exit Bastard.] But first,

Reig. Re-enter the Bastard of Orleans, with Joan La Pucelle.

Reig. Fair maid, is 't thou that wilt do these wondrous feats?

Puc. Reig. Reig, is 't thou that thinkest to beguile
Where is the Dauphin?  Come, come from behind;
I know thee well, though never seen before.
Be not amazed, there's nothing hid from me:
In private will I talk with thee apart;
Stand back, you lords, and give us leave awhile.

Reig. She takes upon her bravely at first dash.

Puc. Dauphin, I am by birth a shepherd's daughter,
My wit untrained in any kind of art,
Heaven and my Lady gracious hath it pleased
To shine on me, on this noble estate:
Lo, whilst I waited on my tender lambs,
And to sun's parching heat display'd my cheeks,
God's mother deigned to appear to me
And in a vision full of majesty
Will'd me to leave my base vocation
And fly my country from calamity:
Her aid she promised and assured success:
In complete glory she reveal'd herself;
And, whereas I was black and swart before,
With those lights which she placed on me
That beauty am I bless'd with which you see.
Ask me what question thou canst possibly,
And I will answer unpromeditated:
My courage try by combat, if thou darest,
And thou shalt find that I exceed my sex.
Resolve on this: if thou canst not vanquish,
It thou receive me for thy warlike mate.

Bast. Thou hast astonish'd me with thy high
Only this proof I'll of thy valour make,
In single combat thou shalt buckle with me,
And if thou vanquish'st, thy words are true;
Or otherwise I pronounce all confidence.

Puc. I am prepared: here is my keen-edged sword,
Deck'd with five flower-de-luces on each side.
The which at Touraine, in Saint Katharine's churchyard,
Out of a great deal of old iron I chose forth.

Char. Then come, o God's name; I fear no woman.

Puc. And while I live, I'll ne'er fly from a man.

Char. Stay, stay thy hands! thou art an Amazon
And mightiest with the sword of Deborah.

Bast. Thy sword, Christ's mother helps me, else I were too

Char. Whoe'er helps thee, 'tis thou that must help me:

Alen. Impatiently I burn with thy desire:
My heart and hands hast hast at once subdued.

Excell. Puclle, if thy name be so,
Let me thy servant and not thy sovereign be:
'Tis the French Dauphin suiteth thee thus.

Puc. I must not yield to every rite of love,
For my profession's sacred from above:
When I have chased all thy foes from hence,
Then will I think upon a recompense.

Char. Methinks I see courage and thy prostrate Reig. My lord, methinks, is very long in talk.

Alen. Doubtless he shews this woman to her smock;
Else ne'er could he so long protract his speech.

Bast. Shall we disturb him, since he keeps no mean time?

Alen.  He may mean more than we poor men do
These women are shrewd tempters with their tongues.

Char. My lord, where are you? what devise you
Shall we give over Orleans, or no?

Bast. Why, no, I say, distrustful recreants!
Fight till the last gasp; I am your guardian.  [out.

Char. What she says I'll confirm: we'll fight it

Puc. Assign'd am I to be the English scourge.

This night the siege assuredly I'll raise:
Expect Saint Martin's summer, halcyon days,
Since I have entered into these wars.
Glory is like a circle in the water,
Which never ceaseth to enlarge itself
Till by broad spreading it dispere to nought.
With Henry's death the English circle ends;
Dispersed are the glories it included.
Now am I like that proud insulting ship
Which Caesar and his fortunate bare at once.

Char. Was Mahomet inspired with a dove?
Thou with an eagle art inspired then.

Helen, the mother of great Constantine,
Nor yet Saint Philip's daughters, were like thee.
Bright star of Venus, fall'n down on the earth,
How may I reverently worship thee enough?

Alen. Leave off delays, and let us raise the siege.

Reig. Woman, do what thou canst to save our honours;

Drive them from Orleans and be immortalized.  [it:

Char. Presently we'll try: come, let's away about
No prophet will I trust, if she prove false.  [Exit.

ACT I.

FIRST PART OF KING HENRY VI.

SCENE III.—London. Before the Tower.

Enter the Duke of Gloucester, with his Serving-men in blue coats.

Glou. I am come to survey the Tower this day:

Since Henry's death, I fear, there is conveyance.

Where be these warders, that they wait not here?

Open the gates; 'tis Gloucester that calls.

First Warder. [Within] Who's there that knocks so imperiously?

First Serv. It is the noble Duke of Gloucester.

Second Warder. [Within] Who'er he be, you may not be let in.

First Serv. Villains, answer you so the lord protector?

First Warder. [Within] The Lord protect him! so we answer him:

We do no otherwise than we are will'd. [spare?]

Glou. Who willed you? or whose will stands but There's none protector of the realm but I.

Break up the gates, I'll be your warrantize;

Shall I be flouted thus by dunghill groans;

[Gloucester's men rush at the Tower Gates, and

Woo. The what noise is this? what traitors have we here?

Glou. Lieutenant, is it you whose voice I hear?

Open the gates; here's Gloucester that would enter.

Woo. Have patience, noble duke; I may not

The Cardinal of Winchester open;

From him I have express commandment

That thou nor none of thine shall be let in.

Glou. Faint-hearted Woodville, prizest bim fore me?

Arrogant Winchester, that haughty prelate,

Who in our late sovereign, ne'er could brook;

Thou art no friend to God or to the king;

Open the gates, or I'll shut thee out shortly.

Serving-men. Open the gates unto the lord protector,

Or we'll burst them open, if that you come not quickly.

Enter to the Protector at the Tower Gates Winchester and his men in tawny coats.

Win. How now, ambitious Humphrey! what means this?

Glou. Ped'd priest, dost thou command me to be shut out?

Win. I do, thou most usurping profitor.

And not protector, of the king or realm.

Glou. Stand back, thou manifest conspirator,

Thou that contrevisted to murder our dead lord;

Thou that givest whores indulgences to sin:

I'll canvass thee in thy broad cardinal's hat,

If thou proceed in this thy insolence. [foot:

Win. Nay, stand thou back; I will not budge a

This be Damascus, be thou cursed Cain,

To slay thy brother Abel, if thou wilt.

Glou. I will not slay thee, but I'll drive thee back:

Thy scarlet robes as a child's bearing-cloth

I'll use to carry thee out of this place.

Win. Do what thou darest; I heard thee to thy face.

Glou. What! am I darest, and bearded to my face?

Draw, men, for all this privileged place:

Blue coats to tawny coats. Priest, beware your head;

I mean to tug it and to cuff you soundly;

Under my feet I stamp thy cardinal's hat:

In spite of pope or dignities of church,

Here by the cheeks I'll drag thee up and down.

Win. Gloucester, thou wilt answer this before the pope.

Glou. Winchester goose, I cry, a rope! a rope!

Now beat them hence; why do you let them stay?

Thou I'll chase hence, thou wolf in sheepe's array.

Out, tawny coats! out, scarlet hypocrite!

Here Gloucester's men beat out the Cardinal's men, and enter in the hurls-burlly the Mayor of London and his Officers.

May. Fie, lords! that you, being supreme magis-

Thus contumeliously should break the peace!

Glou. Peace, mayor! thou know'st little of my

Here's Beaufort, that regards nor God nor king,

Hath here disdain'd the Tower to his use.

Win. Here's Gloucester, a foe to citizens,

One that still motions war and never peace,

O'ercharging your free purses with large fines,

That seeks to overthrow religion,

Because he is protector of the realm,

And would have armour here out of the Tower,

To crown himself king and suppress the prince.

Glou. I will not answer thee with words, but

May. I ought rests for me in this tumultuous

But to make open proclamation: [strike

Come, officer; as loud as e'er thou canst.

Cry. Off. All manner of men assembled here in arms

This day against God's peace and the king's, we and command you, in his highness' name, to repair to your several dwelling-places; and not to wear, handle, or use any sword, weapon, or dagger, henceforward, upon pain of death.

Glou. Cardinal, I'll be no breaker of the law:

But we shall meet, and break our minds at large.

Win. Gloucester, we will meet; to thy cost, be sure:

Thy heart-blood I will have for this day's work.

May. I'll call for clubs, if you will not away.

This cardinal's more haughty than the devil.

Glou. Cardinal, farewell: thou dost but what thou

May. Abominable Gloucester, guard thy head;

For I intend to have it ere long.

[Exeunt, severally, Gloucester and Winchester

with their Serving-men.

May. See the coast clear'd, and then we will depart.

Good God, these nobles should such stomachs bear!

I myself fight not once in forty year.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Orleans.

Enter, on the walls, a Master-Gunner and his Boy.

M. Gun. Sirrah, thou know'st how Orleans is besieged,

And how the English have the suburbs won.

Boy. Father, I know; and oft have shot at them,

How'er unfortunate I miss'd my aim.

M. Gun. But now thou shalt not. Be thou ruled

Chief master-gunner am I of this town:

[by me: Something I must do to procure me grace.

The prince's espials have informed me

How the English, in the suburbs close intrench'd,

Went through a secret gate of iron bars

Thou couldst not tower to overpeer the city

And thence discover how with most advantage

They may vex us with shot or with assault.

To intercept this inconvenience,

A piece of ordnance 'gainsit it I have placed;

And even these three days have I watch'd,

If I could see them.

Now do thou watch, for I can stay no longer.

If thou spy'st any, run and bring me word;

And thou shalt find me at the governor's.

[Exit.

Boy. Father, I warrant you: take you no care;

I'll never trouble you, if I may spy them.

[Exit.

Enter, on the turrets, the Lords Salisbury and Talbot,

Sir William Glansdale, Sir Thomas Gargrave, and

others.

Sęd. Talbot, my life, my joy, again return'd!

How wert thou handled being prisoner?

392
ACT I. FIRST PART OF KING HENRY VI. SCENE V.

Or by what means got'st thou to be released?
Discourse, I prithee, on this turret's top.
Tal. The Duke of Bedford had a prisoner
Cal'd the brave Lord Ponton de Sautraillies;
For him was I exchanged and ransomed.
But with a baser man of arms by far
Once in contempt they would have barter'd me:
Which I would have disdained to have done
Rather than I would be so vile-estem'd.
In fine, redeem'd I was as I desired.
But, O! the treacherous Fastolfo wounds my heart,
Whom with my rare fists I would execute,
If I now had him brought into my power.
Sir, I tell thee, I have little to partake entrent'd,
Tal. With scoffs and scoruses and contumelious
In open market-place produced they me, [A laims. To be a public spectacle to all:
Here, said they, is the terror of the French,
The scarecrow that affrights our children so.
Then broke I from the officers that led me,
And with my nails dugg'd stones out of the ground,
To hurl at the beholders of my shame:
My grisy countenance made others fly;
None durst come near for fear of sudden death.
In iron walls they deign'd me not secure;
So great fear amongst me was spread
That they supposed I could rend bars of steel
And spurn in pieces posts of adamant:
Wherefore a guard of chosen shot I had
That walked about me every minute while
And if I did but stir out of my bed,
Ready they were to shoot me to the heart.

Enter the Boy with a linstock.
Sal. I grieve to hear what torments you endured,
But we will be revenged sufficiently.
Now it is supper-time in Orleans;
Here I will speak to each one
And view the Frenchmen how they fortify:
Let us look in: the sight will much delight thee.
Sir Thomas Gargrave, and Sir William Glansdale,
Let me have your express opinions
Where is best place to make our battery next.
Gar. I think, at the north gate; for there stand Lords.
Glas. And, I here, at the bulwark of the bridge.
Tal. For aught I see, this city must be famish'd,
Or with light skirmishes enfeebled.
[Here they shoot. Salisbury and Gargrave fall.
Sal. O Lord, have mercy on us, wretched sinners!
Gar. O, cursed traitor! accursed fatal hand
That hath contriv'd this woful tragedy!
In thirteen battles Salisbury o'ercame;
Henry the Fifth he first train'd to the wars;
Whilst all the trump did sound, or drum struck up,
His sword did never leave striking in the field.
Yet liveth thou, Salisbury? though thy speech doth fail,
One eye thou hast, to look to heaven for grace:
The sun with one eye vieweth all the world.
Heaven, be thou gracious to none alive,
If Salisbury wants mercy at thy hands!
Bear hence his body: I will help to bury it.
Sir Thomas Gargrave, hast thou any life?
Speak unto Talbot; nay, look up to him.
Salisbury, cheer thy spirt with this comfort:
Thou shalt not die but—
He beckons with his hand and smiles on me,
As who should say—When I am dead and gone,
Remember to avenge me on the French.3
Plantagenet, I will; and like thee, Nero,
Play on the lute, beholding the towns burn;
Wretched shall France be only in my name.
[Here an alarm, and it thunders and lightens.
What stir is this? what tumult's in the heavens?
Whence cometh this alarm and the noise?

Enter a Messenger.
Mess. My lord, my lord, the French have gather'd head:
The Dauphin, with one Joan la Pucelle join'd,
A holy prophetess new risen up,
Is come with a great power to raise the siege.
[Here Salisbury lifteth himself up and growns.
Tal. Here, hear, hear, he hath la Pucelle both round.
If irks his heart he cannot be reveng'd.
Frenchmen, I'll be a Salisbury to you:
Pucelle or puzzel, dolphin or dogfish,
Your hearts I'll stamp out with my horse's heels,
And make a quagmire of your mangled brains.
Convey me Salisbury into his tent,
And then we'll try what these dastard Frenchmen dare.
[Arraun. Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The same.
Here, here she comes, I' ll have a bout with thee;
Devil or devil's dam, I'll conjure thee:
Bleded will I to thy nostrils then
Why draw thy sword, Talbot with such a gash.
And straightway give thy soul to him thou servest.
Puc. Come, come, 'tis only I that must disgrace thee.
[Here they fight. Tal. Heavens, can you suffer hell so to prevail?
My breast I'll burst with straining of my courage
And from my shoulders crack my arms asunder,
But I will chastise this high-minded strumpet.
[They fight again. Puc. Talbot, farewell; thy hour is not yet come:
I must go victual Orleans forthwith.
[Short alarm:] then enter the town with soldiers.
O'ertake me, if thou canst: I scorn thy strength.
Go, go, cheer up thy hungry-starved men;
Help Salisbury to make his testament:
This day is ours, as many more shall be.
[Exit. Tal. My thoughts are whirled like a potter's
I know not where I am, nor what I do: [wheel;
A witch, by fear, not force, like Hannibal,
Drives back our troops and conquerors as she lists:
So bees with smoke and doves with noisome stench
Are from their hives and houses driven away.
They call'd us for our fierce English dogs;
Now, like to whelps, we crying run away.
[Short alarm.] Hark, countrymen! either renew the fight,
Or tear the lions out of England's coat:
Renounce your soil, give sheep in lions' stead;
Sheep run not half so treacherous from the wolf,
Or horse or oxen from the leopard,
As you fly from your oft-subdued slaves.
[Alarum. Here another skirmish.
It will not be: retire into your trenches:
You all consented unto Salisbury's death,
For none would strike a stroke in his revenge.
Pucelle is enter'd into Orleans,
In spite of us or aught that we could do.
O, would I were to die with Salisbury!
The shame hereof will make me hide my head.

393
SCENE VI.—The same.

Enter, on the walls, La Pucelle, Charles, Regnier, Alençon, and Soldiers.

Puc. Advance our waving colours on the walls; Rescued is Orleans from the English:
Thus Joan la Pucelle hath performed her word.
Char. Divinest creature, Astraëa's daughter,
How shall I honour thee for this success?
Thy promises are like Adonis' gardens
That one day bloomed and fruitful were the next.
France, triumph in thy glorious prophetess!
Recover'd is the town of Orleans:
More blessed hap did ne'er befall our state.
Reg. Why ring not out the bells aloud throughout
Orleans and the gates and doors:
Dauphin, command the citizens make bonfires
And feast and banquet in the open streets,
To celebrate the joy that God hath given us.

[Flourish. Exeunt.

ALLEN. All France will be replete with mirth and joy.
When they shall hear how we have play'd the men,
Charles, in Joan, not we, by whom the day is won;
For which I will divide the spoil with her,
And all the priests and friars in my realm
Shall in procession sing her endless praise.
A statelyfe pyramids to her I'll rear
Than Rhodope's or Memphis' ever was:
In memory of her when she is dead,
Her ashes, in an urn more precious
Than the rich jewel'd coffer of Darius,
Transported shall be at high festivals
Before the kings and queens of France.
No longer on Saint Denis will we cry,
But Joan la Pucelle shall be France's saint.
Come in, and let us banquet royally,
After this golden day of victory.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Before Orleans.

Enter a Sergeant of a band, with two Sentinels.

Serg. Sirs, take your places and be vigilant:
If any noise or soldier you perceive
Near to the walls, by some apparent sign
Let us have knowledge at the court of guard.
First Sent. Sergeant, you shall. [Exit Sergeant.]
Thus are poor sentinels,
When others sleep upon their quiet beds,
Constrain'd to watch in darkness, rain and cold.

Enter Talbot, Bedford, Burgundy, and forces, with scaling-ladders, their drums beating a dead march.

Tal. Lord Regent, and redoubled Burgundy,
By whose approach the regions of Artois,
Wallon and Picardy are friends to us.
This happy night the Frenchmen are secure,
Having all day caroused and banqueted:
Embrace we then this opportunity
As fitting best to quittance their deceit
Contrived by art and bailful sorcery.
Bed. Coward of France! how much he wrongs
his name,
Despairing of his own arm's fortitude,
To join with witches and the help of hell!
Bar. Traitors have never other company.
But what's that Pucelle whom they term so pure?
Tal. A maid, they say.
Bed. A maid! and be so martial!
Bar. Pray God she prove not masculine ere long.
If underneath the standard of the French
She carry armour as she hath begun.
Tal. Well, let them practise and converse with spirits:
God is our fortress, in whose conquering name
Let us resolve to scale their flinty bulwarks.
Bed. Ascend, brave Talbot; we will follow thee.
Tal. Not all together; better far, I guess,
That we do make our entrance several ways;
That, if it chance the one of us do fail,
The other yet may rise against their force.
Bed. Agreed. I'll to yond corner.
Bar. And I to this.
Tal. And here will Talbot mount, or make his grave.
Now, Salisbury, for thee, and for the right
Of English Henry, shall this night appear
How much in duty I am bound to both.
Sent. Arm! arm! the enemy doth make assault!
[Exeunt.]

The French leap over the walls in their shirts. Enter, several ways, the Bastard of Orleans, Alençon, and Regnier. Bedford sends a band half an hour before them.

Alen. How now, my lords! what, all unready so?
Bed. Unready! ay, and glad we 'scape so well.
Reg. 'Twas time, I trow, to wake and leave our Hearing alarums at our chamber-doors. [Eds. beds.
Alen. Of all exploits since first I follow'd arms,
Ne'er heard I of a warlike enterprise
More venturous or desperate than this.
Bed. I think this Talbot be a head of hell.
Reg. If not of hell, the heavens, sure, favour him.
Alen. Here cometh Charles! I marvel how he spake.
Bed. Tut, holy Joan was his defensive guard.

Enter Charles and La Pucelle.

Char. Is this thy cunning, thou deceitful dame?
Duld thou at first, to flatter us welfare,
Make us partakers of a little gain,
That now our loss might be ten times so much?
Puc. Wherefore is Charles impatient with his
At all times will you have my power alike? [Friend?
Sleeping or waking must I still prevail,
Or will you blame and lay the fault on me?
Improv'd soldiers! had your watch been good,
This sudden mischief never could have fall'n.
Char. Duke of Alençon, this was your default,
That, being captain of the watch to-night,
Did look no better to that weighty charge.
Alen. Had all your quarters been as safely kept
As that whereof I had the government,
We had not been thus shamefully surprised.
Bed. Mine was secure.
Reg. And so was mine, my lord.
Char. And, for myself, most part of all this night,
Within her quarter and mine own precinct
I was employ'd in passing to and fro,
About relieving of the sentinels:
Then how or which way should they first break in?
Puc. Question, my lords, no further of the case,
How or which way: 'tis sure they found some place
But weakly guarded, where the breach was made.
And now there rests no other shift but this,
To gather our soldiers, scatter'd and dispersed,
And lay new platforms to embarrass them.

Alarum. Enter an English Soldier, crying 'A Talbot! a Talbot!' They fly, leaving their clothes behind.

Sold. I'll be so bold to take what they have left.
The cry of Talbot serves me for a sword;
For I have loaden me with many spoils,
Using no other weapon but his name. [Exit.
SCENE II.—Orleans. Within the town.

Enter Talbot, Bedford, Burgundy, a Captain, and others.

Bed. The day begins to break, and night is fled, Whose pitchy mantle over-veil'd the earth.
Here sound retreat, and cease our hot pursuit. [Retreat sounded.

Tal. Bring forth the body of old Salisbury, And here advance it in the market-place, The middle-centre of this cursed town.
Now have I paid my vow unto his soul; For every drop of blood was drawn from him There hath at least five Frenchmen died to-night, And that hereafter ages may behold What ruin happen'd in revenge of him, Within their chiefest temple I'll erect A tomb, wherein his corpse shall be inter'd: Upon the which, that every one may read, Shall be engraven the sack of Orleans, The treacherous manner of his mournful death And what a terror he had been to France. But, meekly, sir, I muse we met not with the Dauphin's grace, His new-come champion, virtuous Joan of Arc, Nor any of his false confederates. [began,

Bed. 'Tis thought, Lord Talbot, when the light Roused on the sudden from their drowsy beds, They did not feel the hand of sleep, but men Leap o'er the walls for refuge in the field.
Bar. Myself, as far as I could well discern For smoke and dusty vapours of the night, Am sure I scarce the Dauphin and his train, When arm in arm they both came swiftly running, Like a pair of loving turtle-doves, That could not live unless day or night, After that things are set in order here, We'll follow them with all the power we have.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. All hail, my lords! Which of this princely Call ye the warlike Talbot, for his acts [train So much applauded through the realm of France? Tal. Here is the Talbot: who would speak with him?

Mess. The virtuous lady, Countess of Auvergne, With modestly admiring thy renown, By me entreats, great lord, thou wouldst vouchsafe To visit her poor castle where she lies, That she may boast she hath beheld the man Whose glory fills the world with loud report.
Bar. Is it even so? Nay, then, I see our wars Will turn unto a peaceful course of sport, When ladies crave to be encounter'd with, You may not, my lord, despise her gentle suit.
Tal. Ne'er trust me then; for when a world of Could not prevail with all their oratory, [men Yet hath a woman's kindness over-ruled; And therefore tell her I return great thanks, And in submission will attend on her, Will not your honours bear me company? Bed. No; truly; it is more than manners will; And I have heard it said, unbidden guests Are often welcomest when they are gone. Tal. Well then, alone, since there's no remedy, I mean to prove this lady's courtesy.
Come hither, captain. [Whispers.] You perceive my mind?
Cpt. I do, my lord, and mean accordingly. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Auvergne. The Countess's castle.

Enter the Countess and her Porter.

Coent. Porter, remember what I gave in charge; And when you have done so, bring the keys to me. Port. Madam, I will. [Exit.

Count. The plot is laid: if all things fall out right, I shall as famous be by this exploit As Scythian Tonyris by Cyrus' death.
Great is the humour of this dreadful knight, And his achievements of no less account: Fain would mine eyes be witness with mine ears, To give their censure of these rare reports.

Enter Messenger and Talbot.

Mess. Madam, According as your ladyship desired, By message craved, so is Lord Talbot come.
Count. And he is welcome. What! is this the Mess. Madam, it is. [man? Count. Is this the scourge of France? Is this the Talbot, so much fear'd abroad That with his name the mothers still their babes? I see report is fabulous and false: I thought I should have seen some Hercules, A second Hector, for his grim aspect, And large proportion of his strong-knit limbs. Alas, this is a child, a silly dwarf! I cannot be this weakling and o'ergrown shrimp Should strike such terror to his enemies.
Tal. Madam, I have been bold to trouble you; But since your ladyship is not at leisure, I'll sort some other time to visit you. [he goes.
Count. Then have I substance too.
Tal. No, no, I am but shadow of myself: You are deceived, my substance is not here; For what you see is but the smallest part And least proportion of humanity; I tell you, madam, were the whole frame here, It is of such supple and offy pitch. Your roof were not sufficient to contain 't. Count. This is a riddling merchant for the nonce; He will be here, and yet he is not here: How can these contrarieties agree?
Tal. That will I show you presently. [Winds his horn. Drum strike up: a peal of ordnance. Enter Soldiers.

How say you, madam? are you now persuaded That Talbot is but shadow of himself? These are his substance, sinews, arms and strength, With which he yoketh his rebellious necks, Razez your cities and strips your sacred towns And in a moment makes them desolate.
Count. Victorious Talbot! pardon my abuse; I find thou art no less than fame hath bruited And more than may be gather'd by thy shape. Let my presumption not provoke thy wrath;
ACT II.

FIRST PART OF KING HENRY VI.  SCENE IV.

For I am sorry that with reverence
I did not entertain thee as thou art.

Tal. Be not dismay'd, fair lady; nor misconstrue
The mind of Talbot, as you did mistake
The outward expression of his body;
What you have done hath not offended me;
Nor other satisfaction do I crave,
But only, with your patience, that we may Taste of your wine and see what cates you have;
For soldiers' stomachs always serve them well.

Count. With all my heart, and think me honoured
To least so great a warrior in my house.  [Exeunt.

SCENE IV. — London.  The Temple-garden.

Enter the Earls of Somerset, Suffolk, and Warwick; Richard Plantagenet, Vernon, and another Lawyer.

Plan. Great lords and gentlemen, what means this silence?

Dare no man answer in a case of truth?

Suf. Within the Temple-hall we were too loud;
The garden here is more convenient.

Plan. Then say at once if I maintain'd the truth; Or else, as Somerset, you are the error?

Suf. Faith, I have been a truant in the law, And never yet could frame my will to it:
And therefore frame the law unto my will.

Som. Judge you, my Lord of Warwick, then, between us.

War. Where is the greening pair of hawks, Which flies the higher Between two dogs, which hath the deeper mouth; Between two blades, which bears the better temper; Between two horses, which doth bear him best; Between two girls, which hath the merriest eye; I have perhaps some shallow spirit of judgment; But in these nice sharp quillets of the law, Good faith, I am no wiser than a daw.

Plan. Tut, tut, here is a mannerly forbearance: The truth appears so naked on my side That any purblind eye may find it out.

Som. And on my side it is so well appra'd, So clear, so shining and so evident;
That it will glimmer through a blind man's eye.

Plan. Since you are tongue-tied and so loath to speak,
In dumb significants proclaim your thoughts:
Let him that is a true-born gentleman And stands upon the honour of his birth, If he suppose that I have pleaded truth,
From off this brier pluck a white rose with me.

Som. Let him that is no coward nor no flatterer,
But dare maintain the party of the truth,
Pluck a red rose from off this thorn with me.

War. I love no colours, and without all colour
Of base insinuating flattery
I pluck this white rose with Plantagenet.

Suf. I pluck this red rose with young Somerset
And say withal I think he held the right.

Ver. Stay, lords and gentlemen, and pluck no more
Till you conclude that he upon whose side
The fewest roses are cropp'd from the tree Shall yield the other in the right opinion.

Som. Good Master Vernon, it is well object'd: If I have fewest, I subscribe in silence.

Plan. And I.

Ver. Then for the truth and plainness of the case,
I pluck this pale and maiden blossom here,
Giving my verdict on the white rose side.

Som. Prick not your finger as you pluck it off,
Least bleeding you do paint the white rose red
And stain my side, as my blood will stain your will.

Ver. If I, my lord, for my opinion bleed,
Opinion shall be surgeon to my hurt
And keep me on the side where still I am.

Som. Well, well, come on: who else?

Lau. Unless my study and my books be false, The argument you held was wrong in you: [To Somerset.

In sign whereof I pluck a white rose too.

Plan. Now, Somerset, where is your argument?

Som. Nor do I; for, as I say, my son being dead Shall dye your white rose in a bloody red.

Plan. Meantime your cheeks do counterfeit our For pale they look with fear, as witnessing The truth on our side.

Som. No, Plantagenet,
'Tis not for fear but an apprehension blanks Blush for pure shame to counterfeit our roses, And yet thy tongue will not confess thy error.

Plan. Hath not thy rose a canker, Somerset?

Som. Hath not thy rose a thorn, Plantagenet?

Plan. Ay, sharp and piercing, to maintain his truth.

Whiles thy consuming canker eats his falsehood.

Som. Well, I'll find friends to wear my bleeding roses.
That shall maintain what I have said is true,
Where false Plantagenet dare not be seen.

Plan. Now, by this maiden blossom in my hand, I scorn thee and thy fashion, peevish, joyless, And all that thou dost call thy argument.

Som. Turn not thy roses this way, Plantagenet.
Plan. Proud Pole, I will, and scorn both him and thee.

Som. I'll turn my part thereof into thy throat.

Plan. Away, away, good William de la Pole! We grant this woman be not long with him.

War. Now, by God's will, thou wrong'st him, Somerset;
His grandfather was Lionel Duke of Clarence,
Third son to the third Edward King of England:
Spring crestless yeomen from so deep a root.

Plan. He bears him on the place's privilege,
Or durst not, for his craven heart, say thus.

Som. By him that made me, I'll maintain my
Any plot of ground in Christendom, I words Was not thy father, Richard Earl of Cambridge.
For treason executed in our late king's days?
And, by his treason, stand'st not thou attainted,
Corrupted, and exempt from ancient gentry?
His trespass yet lives guilty in thy blood;
And, till thou be restored, thou art a yeoman.

Som. My father was attached, not attainted,
Condemn'd to die for treason, but no traitor;
And that I'll prove on better than thee, Somerset,
Were growing line once ripen'd to my will.
For your partaker Pole and you yourself,
I'll note you in my book of memory,
To scourge you for this apprehension:
Look to it well and say you are well warn'd.

Som. Ah, thou shalt find us ready for thee still;
And know us by these colours for thy foes,
For these my friends in spite of thee shall wear.

Plan. And, by my soul, this pale and angry rose,
As cognizance of my blood-drinking hate,
Will I for ever and my faction wear,
Until at length I join with no other house
Or flourish to the height of my degree. [tion!

Suf. Go forward and be chok'd with thy ambitious

Som. And so farewell until I meet thee next. [Exeunt.

Plan. How I am brav'd and must perform endure it! [house

War. This blot that they object against your Shall be wiped out in the next parliament
Call'd for the truce of Winchester and Gloucester;
And if thou be not then created York,
I will, in my side, be accounted Warwick.

Marg. Meanwhile, in signal of my love to thee.
Against proud Somerset and William Pole,
Will I upon thy party wear this rose;
And here I prophesy: this brawl to-day,
Grown to this faction in the Temple-garden,
Shall send between the red rose and the white
A thousand souls to death and deadly night.

Plan. Good Master Vernon, I am bound to you,
That you on my behalf would pluck a flower.
Ye Cannot well, if the my faith will, still will I wear the same.

Love. And so will I.

Plan. Thanks, gentle sir.

Come, let us four to dinner: I dare say
This quarrel will drink blood another day. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The Tower of London.

Enter Mortimer, brought in a chair, and Gaolers.

Mor. Kind keepers of my weak decaying age,
Let dying Mortimer here rest himself.
Even like a man new haled from the rack,
So fare my limbs with long imprisonment?
And these grey locks, the pursuivants of death,
Nestor-like aged in an age of care,
Argue the end of Edmund Mortimer.
These eyes, like lamps whose wasting oil is spent,
Wax dim, as drawing to their exquit;
With glazed orbs, his white and tender eye,
And pitless arms, like to a wither'd vine
That droops his sapless branches to the ground:
Yet are these feet, whose strengthless stay is numb,
Unable to support this lamp of clay,
Swift-winged with desire to get a grave,
And bare to earth and earth of earth.
But tell me, keeper, will my nephew come?

First Gaol. Richard Plantagenet, my lord, will come:
We sent unto the Temple, unto his chamber;
And answer was return'd that he will come.

Mor. Enough: my soul shall then be satisfied.
Poor gentle man! his wrongs doth equal mine,
Since Henry Mowmouth first began to reign,
Before whose glory I was great in arms,
This loathsome sequestration have I had;
And even since then hath Richard been obscured,
Deprived of honour and inheritance.
But now the arbitrer of desairs,
Just death, kind umpire of men's miseries,
With sweet enlargement doth dismiss me hence:
I would his troubles likewise were expired,
That so he might recover what was lost.

Enter Richard Plantagenet.

First Gaol. My lord, your loving nephew now is come.

Mor. Richard Plantagenet, my friend, is he come?

Plan. Ay, noble uncle, thus ignobly used,
Your nephew, late despaired Richard, comes.

Mor. Most direct mine arms I may embrace his neck,
And in his bosom spend my latter gasp:
O, tell me when my lips do touch his cheeks,
That I may kindly give one fainting kiss.
And now declare, sweet stem from York's great stock,
Why, then, though thou say, of late thou Wert despaired?

Plan. First, lean thine aged back against mine arm;
And, in that case, I'll tell thee my disease.
This day, in argument upon a case,
Some words there grew 'twixt Somerset and me;
Among which terms he used his lavish tongue
And did enlarge me with his father's death:
Which obloquy set bars before my tongue,
Else with the like had I required him.
Therefore, good uncle, for my father's sake,
In honour of a true Plantagenet
And for my convenience sake, declare the cause
My father, Earl of Cambridge, lost his head.

Mor. That cause, fair nephew, that imprison'd me
And hath detain'd me all my flowering youth
Within a loathsome dungeon, there to pine,
Was cursed instrument of his decease.

Plan. Discover more at large what cause that was,
For I am ignorant and cannot guess.

Mor. I will that my sad breath permit
And death approach not ere my tale be done.
Henry the Fourth, grandfather to this king,
Deposed his nephew Richard, Edward's son,
The first begotten and the lawful heir
Of Edward king, the third of that descent:
During whose reign the Percy's bore the north,
Finding his usurpation most unjust,
Endea'vour'd my advancement to the throne:
The reason moved these warlike lords to this
Was, for that—young King Richard thus removed,
Leaving no heir begotten of his body—
I was the next by birth and parentage;
For by my mother I derived am
From Lionel Duke of Clarence, the third son
To King Edward the Third; whereas he
From John of Gaunt doth bring his pedigree,
Being but fourth of that heroic line.
Therefore, in this bold and warlike attempt
They laboured to plant the rightful heir,
I lost my liberty and they their lives.
Long after this, when Henry the Fifth,
Succeeding his father Bolingbroke, did reign,
Thy father, Earl of Cambridge, then derived
From famous Henry Percy, Duke of York,
Marrying my sister that thy mother was,
Again in pity of my hard distress
Lived an army, weening to redeem
And have install'd me in the diadem;
But, as the rest, so fell that noble earl
And was beheaded. Thus the Mortimers,
In whom the title rested, were overpowered.

Plan. Of which, my lord, your honour is the last.

Mor. True: and thou seest that I no issue have
And that my fainting words do warrant death:
Thou art my heir; the rest I wish thee gather:
But yet be wary in thy studious care.

Plan. Thy grave admonishments prevail with me:
But yet, methinks, my father's execution
Was nothing less than bloody tyranny.

Mor. With silence, nephew, be thou politic:
Strong-armed is the house of Lancaster
And like a mountain, not to be removed.
But now thy uncle is removing himself;
As princes do their courts, when they are cloy'd
With long continuance in a settled place.

Plan. O, uncle, would some part of my young years
Might but redeem the passage of your age!

Mor. Thou dost then wrong me, as that slaught'rer
Which giveth many wounds when one will kill.
Mourn not, except thou sorrow for my good;
Only give order for my funeral:
And so farewell, and fair be all thy hopes
And prosperous be thy life in peace and war! [Dies.

Plan. And peace, to war, to war, my parting soul!
In prison hast thou spent a pilgrimage
And like a hermit overpass'd thy days,
Well, I will lock his counsel in my breast;
And what I do imagine let that rest.
Keepers, convey him hence, and I myself
Will see his burial better than his life.

[Exit Gaolers, bearing out the body of Mortimer.

Here dies the dusky torch of Mortimer,
Choked with ambition of the meaner sort:
And for those wrongs, those bitter injuries,
Which Somerset hath offer'd to my house,
I doubt not but I shall receive them:
And therefore haste I to the parliament,
Either to be restored to my blood,
Or make my ill the advantage of my good. [Exit.

ACT III.

Flourish. Enter King, Exeter, Gloucester, Warwick, Somerset, and Suffolk; the Bishop of Winchester, Richard Plantagenet, and others. Gloucester offers to put up a bill; Winchester catches it, and tears it

Win. Comest thou with deep premeditated lines, With written pamphlets studiously devised, Humphry of Gloucester? Is it to the courts accuse, Or aught intend'st to lay unto my charge, Do it without invention, suddenly; As I with sudden and extemporal speech Purpose to answer what thou canst object. Gloucester. Presumptuous priest! this place commands my patience. Or thou shouldst find thou hast dis Honour'd me. Think not, although in writing I pretend The manner of thy vile outrageous crimes, That therefore I have forsworn, or am not able Verbatim to release the method of my pen: No, prelate; such is thy audacious wickedness, Thy lewd, pestiferous and dissertations pranks, As very infants prattle of thy pride. Thou art a most pernicious usurer, Froward by nature, enemy to peace: Lascivious, wanton, more than well beseeches A man of thy profession and degree: And for thy treachery, what's more manifest? In that thou laid'st a trap to take my life, As well at London bridge as at the Tower, Beside, I fear me, if thy thoughts were sifted, The king, thy sovereign, is not quite exempt From curious malice of thy swelling heart.

Win. Gloucester, I do defy thee, Lords, vouch To give me hearing what I shall reply. If I were covetous, ambitious or perverse, As he will have me, how am I so poor? Or how hap it is I seek not to advance Or raise myself, but keep my wonted calling? And for dissension, who preferreth peace More than I do? — except I be provoked. No, my good lords, it is not that offends; It is not that that hath incensed the duke: It is, because no one should sway but he; No one but he should be about the king; And that engenders thunder in his breast And makes him roar these accursations forth. But he shall know I am as good —

Glo. Thou bastard of my grandfather!

Win. Ay, lordly sir; for what are you, I pray, But one imperious in another's throne?

Glo. Am I not protector, sucy priest?

Win. And am not I a prelate of the church?

Glo. Yes, as an outlaw in a castle keeps And useth it to patronage his theft.

Win. Unreverent Gloster!

Glo. Thou art reverent Touching thy spiritual function, not thy life. Rome. Rome shall remedy this.

War. Roam thither, then.

Som. My lord, it were your duty to forbear. War. If your ladyship be not overborne.

Som. Methinks my lord should be religious And know the office that belongs to such. War. Methinks his lordship should be humber; It fitteth not a prelate so to plead.

Som. Yes, when his holy state is touch'd so near.

War. State holy or unhallowed, what of that? Is not the bishop an holy place? [concealing.] Plan. [Aside] Plantagenet, I see, must hold his best it be said 'Speak, sirrah, when you should; Must your bold verdict enter talk with lords?' Else would I have a thing at Winchester.

KING. Uncies of Gloucester and of Winchester, The special watchmen of our English weal, Would have it so, if prayerly should prevail, To join your hearts in love and amity. O, what a scandal is it to our crown, That two such noble peers as ye should jar! Believe me, lords, my tender years can tell Civil dissension is a vipersous worm That gouts the heart of this false commonwealth. [A noise within. 'Down with the tawny-coats!'] What tumult's this? War. An uproar, I dare warrant, Begin through malice of the bishop's men. [A noise again, 'Stones! stones!']

Enter Mayor.

May. O, my good lords, and virtuous Henry, Pity the city of London, pity us! The bishop and the Duke of Gloucester's men, Forbidden late to carry any weapon, Have fill'd their pockets full of grone stones And banding themselves in contrary parts Do pept so fast at one another's pate That many have their giddy brains knock'd out; Our windows are broke down in every street And we for fear compel'd to shut our shops.

Enter Serving-men, in skirmish, with bloody pates.

King. We charge you, on allegiance to ourself, To hold your slaughtering hands and keep the peace. Pray, uncle Gloucester, mitigate this strife.

First Serv. Nay, if we be forbidden stones, we'll fall to it with our teeth.

Sec. Serv. Do what ye dare, we are as resolute.

Glo. You of my household, leave this perish And set this unaccustomed'ld fight aside. [broil

Third Serv. My lord, we know your grace to be a just and upright; and, for your royal birth, [man inferior to none but to his majesty; And ere that we will suffer such a prince, So kind a father of the commonweal, To be disgraced by an inkommate, We and our wives and children will fight And have our bodies slaught'rd by thy foes.

First Serv. Ay, and the very dregs of our nails Shall pitch a field when we are dead. [Begin again.

Glo. Stay, stay, I say! And if you love me, as you say you do, Let me persuade you to forbear awhile.

King. O, how this discord doth afflict my soul! Can you, my Lord of Winchester, behold My sighs and tears and will not once relent? Who should be pitiful, if you be not? Or who should study to prefer a peace, If holy churchmen take delight in broils?

War. Yield, my lord protector; yield, Winchester; Except you mean with obstinate repugnance To slay your sovereign and destroy the realm. You see what mischief and what murder too Hath been enacted through your cunning; Then be at peace, except ye thirst for blood.

Win. He shall submit, or I will never yield.

Glo. Compassion on the king commands me Or I would see his heart out, ere the priest [stoop; Should ever get that privilege of me.

War. Behold, my Lord of Winchester, the duke Hath banish'd moody discontented fury. As by his smooth'd brows it doth appear; Why idk you still so stern and tragic? Glo. Here, Winchester, I offer thee my hand.

King. Fie, uncle Beaufort! I have heard you preach That malice was a great and grievous sin;
SCENE II.—France. Before Rouen.

Enter La Pucelle disguised, with four Soldiers with saxes upon their backs.

Puc. These are the city gates, the gates of Rouen, through which our policy must make a breach:

Take heed, be wary how you place your words;
Talk like the vulgar sort of market men
That come to gather money for their corn.
If we have entrance, as I hope we shall,
And that we find the slothful watch but weak,
I'll by a sign give notice to our friends,
That Charles the Dauphin may encounter them.

First Sol. Our saks shall be a mean to sack the
And we be lawful rulers over Rouen;
[city, Therefore we'll knock.] [Knocks.
Watch. [Within] Qui est là?
Puc. Paysans, pauvres gens de France;
Poor market folks that come to sell their corn.
Watch. Enter, go in; the market bell is rung.
Puc. Now, Rouen, I'll shake thy bulwarks to the ground.
[Exeunt.

Enter Charles, the Bastard of Orleans, Alençon, Reignier, and forces.

Char. Saint Denis bless this happy strag'ram!
And once again we'll make our presence in Rouen.
Bast. Here enter'd Pucelle and her practisants; now she is there, how will she specify
Where is the best and safest passage in?
Reign. By thrusting out a torch from yonder tower;
Which, once discern'd, shows that her meaning is,
No way to that. for weakness, which she enter'd.

Enter La Pucelle on the top, thrusting out a torch burning.

Puc. Behold, this is the happy wedding torch
That joineth Rouen unto her countrymen,
But burning fatal a torch to the Dauphin.
Exeunt. [Sax.]

Enter Talbot in an excitation.

Tal. France, thou shalt rue this treason with thy
If Talbot but survive thy treachery, [tears, Perchance, that he might, that damned sorceress,
Hath wrought this hellish mischief unawares,
That hardly we escaped the pride of France. [Exit.

An alarum. Exeunt.

An alarum: excursions. Bedford, brought in sick in a chair. Enter Talbot and Burgundy without: within La Pucelle, Charles, Bastard, Alençon, and Reignier, on the walls.

Puc. Good morrow, gallants! want ye corn for
I think the Duke of Burgundy will fast [bread? Before he'll buy again at such a rate;
'Twas full of darning? do you like the taste?
Bast. Scoff on, vile fiend and shameless cortizan!
I trust ere long to choke thee with thine own
And make thee curse the harvest of that corn.
Char. Your grace may starve perhaps before that time.
[reason! Ed. O, let no words, but deeds, revenge this
Puc. What will you do, good grey-beard? break
And run a tilt at death within a chair? [a lance,
Tal. Fouj fiend of France, and bag of all despite, Encompos'd with thy lustful paramours!
Becomes it thee to taunt his valiant age
And twit with cowardice a man half dead?
Bast. Not I, my lord; but that Exeunt. I'll have a hank with you again.
Or else let Talbot perish with this shame.
ACT III.
FIRST PART OF KING HENRY VI.
SCENE III.

Puc. Are ye so hot, sir? yet, Pucelle, hold thy
If Tablot do but thunder, rain will follow, [peace;
[The English whisper together in council.
God speed the parliament! who shall be the speaker?
Tal. Dare you come forth and preside in the field?
Puc. Belike your lordship takes us then for fools,
To try if our own be ours or no.
Tal. I speak not to that railing Hecate,
But unto thee, Alençon, and the rest;
Will ye, like soldiers, come and fight it out?
Alen. Signor, no.
Tal. Signior, hang! base mulaters of France!
Like peasant foot-boys do they keep the walls
And dare not take up arms like gentlemen.
Puc. Away, captains! let’s get us from the walls;
For Talbot means no goodness by his looks.
God be wi’you, my lord! we came but to tell you
That we are here. [Exeunt from the walls.
Tal. And there will we be too, ere it be long,
Or else reproach be Talbot’s greatest fame!
Vow, Burgundy, by honour of thy house,
Prick’d on by public wrongs sustain’d in France,
Either to get the town again or die:
And I, as sure as English Henry lives
And as his father here was conqueror,
As sure as in this late-betrayed town
Great Couré-de-lion’s heart was buried,
So sure I swear to get the town or die.
Burg. My vows are equal to thy vows, Talbot.
Tal. But, ere we go, regard this dying prince,
The valiant Duke of Bedford. Come, my lord,
We will bestow you in some better place,
Fitter for sickness and for crazy age.
Bed. Lord Talbot, do not so dishonour me:
Here will I sit before the walls of Rouen
And will be partner of your woe or woe. [yon.
Burg. Courageous Bedford, let us now persuade
Bed. Not to be gone hence; for once I read
That stout Pendragon in his litter sick
Came to the field and vanquished his foes:
Methinks I should revive the soldiers’ hearts,
Because I ever found them as myself.
Tal. Undaunted spirit in a dying breast!
Then be it so: heavens keep old Bedford safe!
And now no more ado, brave Burgundy,
But gather we our forces out of hand
And set upon ourboosting enemy.
[Exeunt all but Bedford and Attendants.

An alarm; excursions. Enter Sir John Fastolfe and a Captain.

Cap. Whither away, Sir John Fastolfe, in such haste?
Fastr. Whither away! I save myself by flight:
We are like to have the overthrow again.
Cap. What! will you fly, and leave Lord Talbot!
Fastr. Ay,
All the Talbots in the world, to save my life. [Exit
Cap. Cowardly knight! ill fortune follow thee!
[Exit.

Retreat; excursions. La Pucelle, Alençon, and Charles fly.

Bed. Now, quiet soul, depart when heaven please,
For I have seen our enemies’ overthrow.
What is the trust or strength of foolish man?
They that of late were daring with their scoffs
Are glad and fain by flight to save themselves.
[Bedford dies, and is carried in by two in his chair.

An alarm. Re-enter Talbot, Burgundy, and the rest.

Tal. Lost, and recover’d in a day again!
Yet heavens have glory for this victory!
Burg. Warlike and martial Talbot, Burgundy
Enshrines thee in his heart and there erects
Thy noble deeds as valour’s monuments.
Tal. Thanks, gentle duke. But where is Pucelle?
I think old Fastolfe asleep; [now?
Now where is the Bastard’s brave, and Charles his gleeks?
What, all amont? Rouen hangs her head for grief
That such a valiant company are fled.
Now will we take some order in the town,
Placing therein some expert governors,
And then depart to Paris, to the king,
For there young Henry with his nobles lies.
Burg. What wills Lord Talbot please Burgundy.
Tal. But yet, before we go, let’s not forget
The noble Duke of Bedford late deceased,
But see his exequies fulfill’d in Rouen:
A braver soldier never conched lance,
A gentler heart did never sway in court;
But kings and mightiest potentates must die,
For that’s the end of human misery. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The plains near Rouen.

Enter Charles, the Bastard of Orleans, Alençon, La Pucelle, and forces.

Puc. Dismay not, princes, at this accident,
Nor grieve that Rouen is so recovered:
Care is no cure, but rather corrosive,
Nor things that are not to be remedied.
Let saintly Talbot triumph for a while
And like a peacock sweep along his tail:
We’ll pull his plumes and take away his train,
If Dauphin and the rest will be but ruled.
Char. We have been guided by thee hitherto
And of thy cunning had no dilidence:
One sudden foil shall never breed distrust.
Last. Search out thy wit for secret policies,
And we will make thee famous through the world.
Alen. We’ll set thy statute in some holy place,
And have thee reverenced like a blessed saint:
Employ thee then, sweet virgins, for our good.
Puc. Then thus it must be: this doth Joan devise:
By fair persuasions mix’d with sugar’d words
We will entice the Duke of Burgundy
To leave the Talbot and to follow us.
Char. Ay, marry, sweeting, if we could do that,
France were in place for Henry’s warriors;
Nor should that nation boast it so with us,
But be extirped from our provinces.
Alen. For ever should they be expelled from
And not have title of an earldom here.
[Exeunt.
France
Puc. Your honours shall perceive how I will work
To bring this matter to the wished end.
Hark! by the sound of drum you may perceive
Their powers are marching unto Parisward.
Here sound an English march. Enter, and pass over at a distance, Talbot and his forces.

French march: Enter the Duke of Burgundy and forces.

Now in the rearward comes the duke and his:
Fortune in favour makes him lag behind.
Summon a parley; we will talk with him.
[Trumpets sound a parley.
Char. A parley with the Duke of Burgundy!
Burg. Who crave a parley with the Burgundy?
Puc. The Prince of England, Charles of France, thy count,
Char. Speak, Pucelle, and enchant him with thy words.
Puc. Brave Burgundy, unshod hope of France!
Stay, let thy humble handmaid speak to thee.
Scene IV.—Paris. The palace.

Enter the King, Gloucester, Bishop of Winchester, York, Suffolk, Somerset, Warwick, Exeter; Vernon, Basset, and others. To them with his Soldiers, Talbot.

Tal. My gracious prince, and honourable peers, hearing of your arrival in this realm, I have awhile given truce unto my wars, to do my duty to my sovereign; in sign whereof, this arm, that hath claim'd to your obedience fifty fortresses, twelve cities and seven walled towns of strength, beside five hundred prisoners of esteem, let fall his sword before your highness's feet, and with submissive loyalty of heart ascribes the glory of his conquest got first to my god and next unto your grace. [Kneels.]

King. Is this the Lord Talbot, uncle Gloucester, that hath so long been resident in France?

Glou. Yes, if it please your majesty, my liege.

King. Welcome, brave captain and victorious lord! When I was young, as yet I am not old, I do remember how my father said a stouter champion never handled sword. Long since we were resolved of your truth, your faithful service and your toil in war; yet never have you tasted our reward, or been reguard'd with so much as thanks, because till now we never saw your face; therefore, stand up; and, for these good deserts, we here create you Earl of Shrewsbury; and in our coronation take your place.

[Seated. Flourish. Exeunt all but Vernon and Basset.]

Ver. Now, sir, to you, that were so hot at sea, disgrace of these colours that I wear in honour of my noble Lord of York: [spakeset? Darest thou maintain the former words thou hast, yes, sir; as well as you dare patronage the envious barking of thy saucy tongue? Against my lord the Duke of Somerset, Sirrah, thy lord I honour as he is;

Bos. Why, what is he? as good a man as York.

Ver. Hark ye; not so: in witness, take ye that. [Strikes him.]

Bos. Villain, thou know'st the law of arms is such that who so draws a sword, 'tis present death. Or else this blow should breath thy nearest blood. But I 'll unto his majesty, and to the king I may have liberty to venge this wrong; when thou shalt see I'll meet thee to thy cost.

Ver. Well, miscreant, I'll be there as soon as you; and, after, meet you sooner than you would. [Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

Enter the King, Gloucester, Bishop of Winchester, York, Suffolk, Somerset, Warwick, Talbot, Exeter, the Governor of Paris, and others.

Glou. Lord bishop, set the crown upon his head, Win. God save King Henry, of that name the sixth! Glou. Now, governor of Paris, take your oath, that you elect no other king but him: Esteem none friends but such as are his friends, and none your foes but such as shall pretend malicious practices against his state: This shall ye do, so help you righteous God!

Enter Sir John Fastolfe.

Fast. My gracions sovereign, as I rode from To haste unto your coronation. [Calais, a letter was deliver'd to my hands, Writ to your grace from the Duke of Burgundy.

Enter Sir John Fastolfe.

Fast. My gracions sovereign, as I rode from To haste unto your coronation. [Calais, a letter was deliver'd to my hands, Writ to your grace from the Duke of Burgundy.
And ill becomenig any common man,
Much more a knight, a captain and a leader.

Ted. When first this order was ordain'd, my lords,
Knights of the garter were of noble birth,
Valiant, and virtuous was their courage,
Such as were grown to credit by the wars:
Not fearing death, nor shrinking for distress,
But always resolute in most extremes.
He then that is not furnish'd in this sort
Doth but usurp the sacred name of knight,
Profan'd, and his honour'd dignity disgrace'd.
And should, if I were worthy to be judge,
Be quite degr'd, like a hedge-born swain
That doth presume to boast of gentle blood. [loom!

King. Stain to thy countrymen, thou hear'st say
Be pocking, therefore, thou that wast a knight:
Henceforth we banish thee, on pain of death.

[Exit Foolstiffe.

And now, my lord protector, view the letter
Sent from our uncle Duke of Burgundy. [his style?

Glov. What means his grace, that he hath changed
No more but, plain and bluntly, 'To the king!'?

That he forgot he is his sovereign?
Or dare he think he (sor, sir, by this humor?

Pretend some alteration in good will?
What's here? [Reads] 'I have, upon especial cause,
Moved with compassion of my country's w rack,
Together with the pitiful complaints
Of such as your oppression feele upon,
For, while you do not bear yourselves
As the right honorable Grace, Wik. [France,
And join'd with Charles, the rightful King
Of monstrous treasons! can this be so,
That in alliance, amity and oaths,
There should be found such false dissembling guile?

King. What! doth my uncle Burgundy revolt?

Glov. This is the worst, and all, my lord, he writes.

King. Why, then, Lord Talbot there shall talk with
And give him chastisement for this abuse. [him
How say you, my lord? are you not content?

Tel. Content, my liege! yes, but that I am prevented,
I should have begg'd I might have been employ'd.

King. Then gather strength and march unto him straight.

Let him perceive how ill we brook his treason
And take him once it is to flout his friends.

Tel. I go, my lord, in heart desiring still
You may behold confusion of your foes.

[Exit.

Enter Vernon and Basset.

Ver. Grant me the combat, gracious sovereign.

Bus. And me, my lord, grant me the combat too.

York. This is my servant; hear him, noble prince.

Som. And this is mine; sweet Henry, favour him.

K. Hen. Be patient, lords; and give them leave to speak.

Say, gentlemen, what makes you thus exclaim?
And whether you have your consent? or with whom?

Ver. With him, my lord; for he hath done me wrong.

Bus. And with him; for he hath done me wrong.

K. Hen. What is that wrong whereof you both complain?

First let me know, and then I'll answer you.

Bus. Crossing the sea from England into France,
This fellow here, with envious carping tongue,
Upbraided me about the rose I wear;
Saying, the sanguine colour of the leaves
Did represent my master's blushing cheeks,
Whereby he did reproach me as the traitor
About a certain question in the law
Argued betwixt the Duke of York and him;
With other vile and ignominious terms:
In confusion of which rude reproach
And in defiance of my lord's worthiness,
I crave the benefit of law and arms.
Act IV.

FIRST PART OF KING HENRY VI.

SCENE IV.

War. My Lord of York, I promise you, the king
Prettily, methought, did play the orator.

War. 'Tis true, but his fancy, blame him
I dare presume, sweet prince, he thought no harm.
York. An if it wist he did,—but let it rest.

Other affairs must now be managed.

[Exit all but Exeter.

Exe. Well didst thou, Richard, to suppress thy
For, had the passions of thy heart burst out; [voice]
I fear we should have seen deck'per'd there
More rancorous spite, more furious raging broils,
Yet than can be imagined or supposed.
York. But here they are; what sayst thou but sees
This jarring discord of nobility,
This shoulderings of each other in the court,
This factions bandying of their favourites,
But that it doth presage some ill event.

'Tis much when sceptres are in children's hands;
But more when envy breeds ankind division;
There comes the ruin, there begins confusion.

[Exit.

SCENE II.—Before Bourdeux.

Enter Talbot, with trumpet and drum.

Tal. Go to the gates of Bourdeaux, trumpeter;
Summon their general unto the wall.

Trumpet sounds. Enter General and others, afloat.

English John Talbot, captains, calls you forth,
Servant in arms to Harry King of England;
And thus he would: Open your city gates:
Be humble to us; call my sovereign yours,
And do him homage as obedient subjects;
And I'll withdraw me and my bloody power:
But, if you frown upon this proffer'd peace,
You tempt the fury of my three attendants,
Lean famine, quartering steel, and climbing fire;
Who in a moment shall lay your stately and air-braving towers,
If you forsake the offer of their love.

Gen. Then ominous and fearful owl of death,
Our nation's terror and their bloody scourge!
The period of thy tyranny approacheth.
On us that cause not war but by death;
For, I protest, we are well fortified
And strong enough to issue out and fight:
If thou retir'd, the Dauphin, well appointed,
Stands with the snares of war to tangle thee;
On either hand thee there are squadrions pitch'd,
To wall thee from the liberty of flight:
And no way canst thou turn thee for redress,
But death doth from thee with apparent spoil
And pale destruction meets thee in the face.
Ten thousand French have taken the sacrament to ride their dangerous artillery.
Upon no Christian soul but English Talbot.

Lo, there thou stand'st, a breathing valiant man,
Of an invincible unconquer'd spirit!
This is the latest glory of thy praise
That, thy enemy, due thee withal;
For ere the glass, that now begins to run,
Finish the process of his sandy hour,
These eyes, that see thee now well coloured,
Shall see thee wither'd, bloody, pale and dead.

Hark! hark! the Dauphin's drum, a warning bell,
Sings heavy music to thy timorous soul,
And mine shall ring thy dire departure out.

[Exit General, &c.

Tal. He fables not; I hear the enemy:
Out, some light horsemen, and peruse their wings.
O, negligent and heedless discipline!
How are we park'd and bounded in a pale,
A little herd of England's timorous deer;
Mazed with a yeldeingkeel of French curs!
If we be English deer, be then in blood;

Not rascal-like, to fall down with a puch,
But rather, moody-mud and desperate stags,
As if the bloody hounds with heads of steel,
And make the cowards stand aloof at bay;
Sell every man his life as dear as mine.
And they shall find dear deer of us, my friends.
God and Saint George, Talbot and England's right.
Prosper our colours in this dangerous fight! [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Plains in Gascony.

Enter a Messenger that meets York.

Enter York with trumpet and many Soldiers.

York. Are not the speedy scouts return'd again.
That dogs'd the weale; John, y of the Dauphin?

Moss. They are return'd, my lord, and give it out
That he is March'd to Bourdeaux with his power,
To fight with Talbot; as he March'd along,
By your espials were discovered
Two mightier troopers than that the Dauphin led,
Which join'd with him and made their march for Bourdeaux.

York. A plague upon that villain Somerset,
That thus delays my promised supply
Of horsemen, that were levied for this siege!
Renowned Talbot doth expect my aid,
And I am levied by a traitor villain
And cannot help the noble Talbot,
God comfort him in this necessity!
If he miscarry, farewell wars in France.

Enter Sir William Lucy.

Lucy. Thou princely leader of our English strength.
Never so needful on the earth of France,
Spur to the rescue of the noble Talbot,
Who now is girdled with a waist of iron
And hemm'd about with grim destruction;
To Bourdeaux, warlike Duke! to Bourdeaux, York!
Else, farewell Talbot, France, and England's honour.

York. O God, that Somerset, who in proud heart
Doth stop my cornets, were in Talbot's place!
So should we save a valiant gentleman
By fortifying a traitor and a coward.
Mad ire and wrathful fury makes me weep,
That this wars and quarells of us must pass.
Lucy. O, send some succour to the distress'd lord!
York. He dies, we lose; I break my warlike word;
We mourn, France smiles; we lose, they daily get;
All 'long of this vile traitor Somerset.

Lucy. Then God take mercy on brave Talbot's
And on his son, young John, who has been since
I met in travel toward his warlike father!
This seven years did not Talbot see his son;
And now they meet where both their lives are done.
York. Alas, what joy shall noble Talbot have
To bid his young son welcome to his grave?
Away! vexation almost stops my breath.
That sunder'd friends greet in the hour of death.
Lucy. Farewell, no more my fortune can,
But curse the cause I cannot aid the man.
Maine, Blois, Poictiers, and Tours are won away;
Long all of Somerset and his delay.

Lucy. Thus, while the vulture of sedition
Feeds in the bosom of so great commanders,
Sleeping neglect doth betray to loss
The conquest of our scarce cold conqueror,
That ever living man of memory,
Henry the Fifth; while's they each other cross
Lives, honours, lands and all hurry to loss. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—Other plains in Gascony.

Enter Somerset, with his array; a Captain of Talbot's with him.

Som. It is too late; I cannot send them now:
This expedition was by York and Talbot
Too rashly plotted; all our general force flight with a rally of the very town
Be buckled with: the over-daring Talbot
Hath sullied all his gloss of former honour
By this unbecoming, desperate, wild adventure;
York set him on to fight and die in shame,
That Talbot took, great York might bear the name.
opup. Here is Sir William Lucy, who with me
Set from our o’ermatched forces forth for aid.

Enter Sir William Lucy.

Som. How now, Sir William! whither were you sent? [Lord Talbot.

Lucy. Whither, my lord? from bought and sold
Who, ring’d about with bold adversity,
Cries out for noble York and Somerset,
To beat assailing death from his weak legions;
And whiles the honourable captain there
Drops bloody sweat from his war-wearied limbs,
And, in advantage lingering, looks for rescue,
You, his false hopes, the trust of England’s honour,
Keep off aloof with worthless emulation.
Let not your private discord keep away
The levied succours that should lend him aid,
While we the renowned noble gentleman,
Yields up his life unto a world of odds:
Orleans the Bastard, Charles, Burgundy,
Aleonc, Reignier, compass him about,
And Talbot perisheth by your default. [him aid.

Som. York set him on; York should have sent Lucy. And York as lust upon your grace exclaim;
Sweareth that you withhold his levied host,
Collected for this expedition. [him aid.

Som. York lies; he might have sent and had the
I owe him little duty, and less love;
And take foul scorn to fawn upon him by sending.
Lucy. The fraud of England, not the force of France,
Hath now cut off the noble-minded Talbot:
Never to England shall he bear his life;
But dies, betray’d to fortune by your strife.

Som. Come, go; I will dispatch the horsemen
Within six hours they will be at his aid. [straight:

Lucy. Too late comes rescue: he is taken or slain;
For fly he could not, if he would have fled;
And fly would Talbot never, though he might.

Som. If he be dead, brave Talbot, then adieu!
Lucy. His fame lives in the world, his shame in
you. [Exeunt.

SCENE V. — The English camp near Bourneaux.

Enter Talbot and John his son.

Tal. O young John Talbot! I did send for thee
To tutor thee in stratagems of war,
That Talbot’s name might be in the revol
When danger and nakedness of limbs
Should bring thy father to his drooping chair.
But, O, malignant and ill-boding stars!
Now thou art come unto a feast of death,
A terrible and unavailing danger:
Therefore, dear boy, mount on my swiftest horse;
And I will follow thee, with lights and swift escape
By sudden flight: come, dally not, be gone.
John. Is my name Talbot? and am I your son?

Tal. And shall I fly? O, if you love my mother,
Dishonour not her honourable name,
To make a bastard and a slave of me.
That Talbot stands for, he is not a blood,
That basely fled when noble Talbot stood.

Tal. Fly, to revenge my death, if I be slain.

John. He that flies so will ne’er return again.

Tal. If we both stay, we both are sure to die.

John. Then let me stay; and, father, do you fly:
Your loss will be great, so you would fail be;
My worth unknown, no loss is known in me.
Upon my death the French can little boast;
In yours they will, in all you hopes are lost.
Flight cannot stain the honour you have won;

But mine it will, that no exploit have done:
You died for vantage, every one will swear;
But, if I bow, they’ll say it was for fear.
There is no hope that ever I will stay,
If the first hour I shrink and run away.
Here on my knee I beg mortality.
Rather that life my father than dishonour.

Tal. Shall all thy mother’s hopes lie in one tomb?

John. Ay, rather than I’ll shame my mother’s womb.

Tal. Upon my blessing. I command thee go.

John. To fight I will, but not to fly the foe.

Tal. I will at the very last have thee saved in thee.

John. No part of him but will be shame in me.

Tal. Thou never hadst renown, nor canst not lose it.

John. Yes, you renowned name: shall fight abuse
Thy father’s charge shall clear thee from that stain.

John. You cannot witness for me, being slain.
If death be so apparent, then both fly.

Tal. And leave my followers here to fight and die?
My age was never tainted with such shame.

John. And shall my youth be guilty of such blame?

Tal. No mother shall I be saved from your side.

John. That I can save you in a twain divide:

Tal. Stay, go, do what you will, the like do I;
For life I will not, if my father die.

Tal. Then here I take my leave of thee, fair son,
Born to eclipse thy life this afternoon.
Come, side by side together live and die;

And soul with soul from France to heaven fly.

SCENE VI.—A field of battle.

Alarum: excursions, wherein Talbot’s son is honored about, and to Talbot rescues him.

Tal. Saint George and victory! fight, soldiers, fight.

The regent hath with Talbot broke his word
And left us to the rage of France his sword.
Where is John Talbot? Pause, and take thy breath;
I gave thee life and rescued thee from death.

John. O, twice my father, twice am I thy son.
The life thou gavest me first was lost and done,
Till with thy warlike sword, despite of fate,
To my determined time thou gavest new date.

Tal. When from the Dauphin’s crest thy sword struck fire,
It warmed his father’s heart with proud desire
Of bold-faced victory. Then leaden age,
Quicken’d with youthful spleen and warlike rage,
Beat down Alencon, Orleans, Burgundy,
And from the pride of Gallia rescued thee.

The irreft bastard Orleans, that drew blood
From thee, my boy, and had the maidenhood
Of thy first fight, I soon encountered,
And interchanging blows I quickly shed
Some of his bastard blood; and in disgrace
Bespeak him thus: ‘Contaminated, base
And misbegotten blood I scorn to telne.
O son, and in truth I love you poor blood of mine
Which thou didst force from Talbot, my brave boy.’

Here, purposing the Bastard to destroy.
Came in strong rescue. Speak, thy father’s care,
Art thou not weary, John? how dost thou fare?
Will thou yet leave the battle, boy, and fly,
Soy the girdle of hope round thy breast be
Fly, to revenge my death when I am dead:
The help of one stands me in little stead.
O, too much folly is it, well I wot.

To hazard all our lives in one small boat!
If I to-day die not with Frenchmen’s rage,
O, then I breathe my last hour may be stayed;
By me they nothing gain an if I stay:
’Tis but the shortening of my life one day:
In thee thy mother dies, our household’s name.
My death’s revenge, thy youth, and England’s fame:

404
ACT V.

FIRST PART OF KING HENRY VI.

SCENE I.

All these and more I hazard by thy stay;
All these are saved if thou wilt fly away. [smiles;]
These words of thine draw life-blood from my heart:
On that advantage, bought with such a shame,
To save a paltry life and slay bright fame,
Before young Talbot from old Talbot fly.
The coward horse that bears me fall and die!
And like me to the peasant boys of France.
To be shame's scorn and subject of mischance!
Surely, by all the glory you have won,
An if I fly, I am not Talbot's son:
Then talk no more of flight, it is no boot;
If son to Talbot, die at Talbot's foot.
Talbot's, thy life to me is sweet;
If thou wilt fight, fight by thy father's side;
And, commendable proved, let's die in pride. [Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—Another part of the field.

Alarum: excursions. Enter old Talbot led by a Servant.

Talbot. Where is my other life? mine own is gone;
O, where's young Talbot? where is valiant John?
Triumphant death, sworn with captivity,
Young Talbot's valour make slave of thee;
When he perceived me shrink and on my knee,
His bloody sword he brandish'd over me,
And, like a hungry lion, did commence
Rough deeds of rage and stern impatience;
But when my angry guardian stood alone,
Tendering my ruin and assail'd of none,
Dizzy-eyed fury and great rage of heart
Suddenly made him from my side to start
Into the clustering battle of the French;
And in that sea of bloody men did drench
His over-mounting spirit, and there died,
My tears, my blossoms, in his pride.
Sure, O my dear lord, lo, where thy son is borne!

Enter Soldiers, with the body of young Talbot.

Talbot. Thou anted death, which laugh'st us here to Anon, from thy insulting tyranny, [scorns;
Coupled in bonds of perpetuity.

Two Talbots, winged through the lither sky,
In thy despite shall 'scape mortality.
O thou, whose wounds become hard-favour'd death,
Speak to thy father ere thou yield thy breath!
Brave death by speaking, whether he will or no;
Imagine him a Frenchman and thy foe.
Poor boy! he smiles, methinks, as who should say,
Had death been French, then death had died to-day.
Come, come and lay him in his father's arms:
My spirit can no longer bear these harms.
Soldiers, adieu! I have what I would have,
Now my old arms are young John Talbot's grave. [Dies.

Enter Charles, Aleton, Burgundy, Bastard, La Fucelle, and forces.

Chereb. Had York and Somerset brought rescue in,
We should have found a bloody day of this.

Bastard. How the young whelp of Talbot's, raging-wood,
Did dash his pupe sword in Frenchmen's blood!

Puc. Once I encounter'd him, and thus I said:
'Thun maiden youth, be vanquish'd by a maid!'
But, with a proud malestical high scorn,
He answer'd thus: 'Young Talbot was not born
To be the pillage of a gigot wench!'
So, rushing in the bowls of the French,
He left me proudly, as unworthy fight. [knights;

Baron. Doubtless he would have made a noble
See, where he lies inhearsed in the arms
Of the most bloody nursel of his harms! [der.

Bastard. Hiew them to pieces, hack their bones asunder,
Whose life was England's glory, Gallia's wonder.

Char. O, no, forbear! for that which we have fled
During the life, let us not wrong it dead.

Enter Sir William Lucy, attended; Herald of the French proceeding.

Lucy. Herald, conduct me to the Dauphin's tent,
To know who hath obtain'd the glory of the day.
Char. On what submissive message art thou sent?
Lucy. Submission, Dauphin! 'tis a more French word:
We English warriors not what it means.
I come to know what prisoners thou hast ta'en
And to survey the bodies of the dead. [Is.

Char. For prisoners ask'st thou? hell our prison
But tell me why thou art come thus,
Lucy. But where's the great Aeldes of the field,
Valiant Lord Talbot, Earl of Shrewsbury,
Created, for his rare success in arms,
Great Earl of Washford, Waterford and Valence;
Lord Talbot of Goodrig and Urchmfield,
Lord Strange of Blackmore, Lord Verdon of Alton,
Lord Cromwell of Wingfield, Lord Furnival of Sheffield.
The thrice-victorious Lord of Falconbridge;
Knight of the noble order of Saint George,
Worthy Saint Michael and the Golden Fleece;
Great marshal to Henry the Sixth
Of all his wars and thy defeat with France?

Puc. Here is a silly stately style indeed!
The Turk, that two and fifty kingdoms hath,
Writes not so tedious a style as this.
Him that thou magnifiest with all these titles
Stinking and fly-blown lies here at our feet.

Lucy. Is Talbot slain, the Frenchmen's only scourge,
Your kingdom's terror and black Nemesis?
O, were mine eyes-balls into bullets turn'd,
That I in rage might shoot them at your faces!
O, that I could but call these dead to life!
It were enough to fright the realm of France;
Worse were his picture left amongst you here,
It would amaze the proudest of you all.
Give me their bodies, that I may bear them hence
And give them burial as becometh their worth.

Puc. I think this upstart is old Talbot's ghost,
He speaks with such a proud commanding spirit.
For God's sake, let him have 'em: to keep them here,
They would but stink, and putrefy the air.

Char. Go, take their bodies hence.

Lucy. I'll hear them hence; but from their ashes shall be read:'
A phœnix that shall make all France afraid.

Char. So we be rid of them, do with 'em what then
And now to Paris, in this conquering vein: [wilt.
All will be ours, now bloody Talbot's slain. [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—London. The palace.

Soonet. Enter King, Gloucester, and Exeter.

King. Have you perused the letters from the pope.
The emperor and the Earl of Armagnac?

Glou. I have, my lord: and their intent is this:
They humbly sue unto your excellence
To have a godly peace concluded
Between the realms of England and of France.

King. How doth your grace affect their motion?

Glou. Well, my good lord: and as the only means
ACT V.
FIRST PART OF KING HENRY VI.
SCENE III.

To stop effusion of our Christian blood
And stabish quietness on every side.

King. Ay, marry, uncle; for I always thought
It was both impious and unnatural
That such immiunity and bloody strife
Should reign among professors of one faith.

Glou. Beside, my lord, the sooner to effect
And quiet this unhappy kingdom,
The Earl of Armagnac, near knelt to Charles,
A man of great authority in France,
Prorlers his only daughter to your grace
In marriage, with a large and sumptuous dowry.

King. Marriage, uncle! alas, my years are young!
And litter is my study and my play.
Than wanton dalliance with a paramour,
Yet call the ambassadors; and, as you please,
So let them have their answers every one:
I shall be well content with any choice
Tends to God’s glory and my country’s weal.

Enter Winchester in Cardinal’s habit, a Legate and two Ambassadors.

Exe. What! is my Lord of Winchester install’d,
And call’d unto a cardinal’s degree?
Then I perceive that will be verified
Henry the Fifth did sometime prophesy,
‘If once be come to be a cardinal,
He’ll make his cap co-equal with the crown.’

King. My lords ambassadors, your several suits
Have been consider’d and debated on.
Your purpose is both good and reasonable;
And therefore we are certainly resolved
To draw conditions of a friendly peace:
Which by my Lord of Winchester we mean
Shall be transported presently to France.

Exe. And for the proffer of my lord your master,
I have inform’d his highness so at large
As liking of the lady’s virtuous gifts,
Her beauty and the value of her dowry;
He doth intend she shall be England’s queen.

King. In argument and proof of which contract,
Bearn her this jewel, pledge of my affection.
And so, my lord protector, see them guarded
And safely brought to Dover; where himself
Commit them to the fortune of the sea.
[Exeunt all but Winchester and Legate.

Win. Stay, my lord legate: you shall first receive
The sum of money which I promised
Should be deliver’d to his holiness
For clothing me in these grave ornaments,
Leg. I will attend on your lordship’s leisure.

Win. [Aside] Now Winchester will not submit, I
Or be inferior to the proudest peer.
[Crow. Humphrey of Gloucester, thou shalt well perceive
That, neither in birth or for authority,
The bishop will be overborne by thee:
I’ll either make thee stoop and bend thy knee,
Or suck this country with a mutiny.
[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—France.  Plains in Anjou.

Enter Charles, Burgundy, Alençon, Bastard,
Reignier, La Pucelle, and forces.

Char. These news, my lords, may cheer our drooping spirits:
’Tis said the stout Parisians do revolt
And turn again unto the warlike French.  [France.

Alen. Then march to Paris, royal Charles of
And save the life of your powerfull valancie.

Puc. Peace be amongst them, if they turn to us;
Else, ruin combat with their palaces!

Enter Scout.

Scout. Success unto our valiant general,
And happiness to his accompanie! [speaks.

Scout. The English army, that divided was

Into two parties, is now conjoin’d in one,
And means to give you battle presently.

Char. Somewhat too sudden, sirs, the warning is;
But we will presently provide for them.

Puc. I trust the ghost of Talbot is not there:
Now he is gone, my lord, you need not fear.

Puc. Of all base passions, fear is most accursed,
Command the conquest, Charliers.  It shall be thine,
Let Henry fret and all the world repine.

Char. Then on, my lords; and France be for

SCENE III.—Before Angiers.

Alarm.  Excursions.  Enter La Pucelle.

Puc. The regent conquer, and the Frenchmen
Now help, ye charming spells and peripats;  [by.
And ye choice spirits that admonish me
And give me signs of future accidents.  [Thunder.
You speedy helpers, that are substitutes
Under the lordly monarch of the north,
Appear and aid me in this enterprise.

Enter Friends.

This speedy and quick appearance argues proof
Of your accustom’d diligence to me.
Now, ye familiar spirits, that are call’d
Out of the powerful regions under earth,
Help me this once, that France may get the field.

They walk, and speak not.

O, hold me not with silence over-long!
Where was I wont to feed you with my blood,
I’ll hop a member off and give it you
In earnest of a further benefit,
So you do condescend to help me now.

They hang their heads.

No hope to have redress?  My body shall Pay recompense, if you will put my suit.

They shake their heads.

Cannot my body nor blood-sacrifice
Entreat you to your wondert furtherance?
Then take my soul, my body, soul and all,
Before that England give the French the foil.

See, they forsake me!  Now the time is come
That France must vail her lofty-plumed crest
And let her head fall into England’s lap.
My ancient incantations are too weak,
And hell too strong for me to buckle with:
Now, France, thy glory droopeth to the dust.  [Exit.

Excursions.  Re-enter La Pucelle fighting head to head with York:  La Pucelle is taken.  The French fly.

York. Damsel of France, I think I have you fast:
Unchain your spirits now with spelling charms
And try if they can gain your liberty.
A goodly prize, fit for the devil’s grace!
See, how the ugly wench doth bend her brows,
As if with Circe she would change my shape!

Puc. Changed to a worser shape thou canst not be.
York. O, Charles the Damphin is a proper man;
No shape but his can please an dignity eye.
Puc. A plaguing mischief light on Charles and
And may ye both be suddenly surprised thec! By bloody hands, in sleeping on your beds!
York. Fell bann’d flag, enchantress, hold thy tongue!

Puc. I pritchee, give me leave to curse awhile;
you, French, miscreant, when thou comest to the stake.
[Exeunt.

Alarm.  Enter Suffolk, with Margaret in his hand.

Suf. Be what thou wilt, thou art my prisoner,
O fairest beauty, do not fear nor fly.
[Graces on her.
For I will touch thee but with reverent hands;
I kiss these fingers for eternal peace,
And lay them gently on thy tender side.
Who art thou? say, that I may honour thee.
Nor, Margaret my name, and daughter to a king,
The King of Naples, by the grace of God, my father.

Suf. A cart I am, and Suffolk am I call'd.
Be not offended, nature's miracle.
Thou art allotted to be taken by me:
So doth the swan her downy cygnets save,
Keep thee prisoner underneath her wings.
Yet, if this servile usage once offend
Go and be free again as Suffolk's friend.

[She is going.
O, stay! I have no power to let her pass; My hand would free her, but my heart says no.
As plays the sun upon the glassy streams,
Twinkling another counterfeited beam.
So true, What though I be e'eternal eyes.
Fain would I woo her, yet I dare not speak:
I'll call for pen and ink, and write my mind.
Fie, de la Pole! disable not thyself;
Hast not a tongue? is she not here?
Wilt thou be damned at a woman's sight?
Art beauty's princely majesty such?
Confounds the tongue and makes the senses rough.
Mar. Say, Earl of Suffolk—if thy name be so—
What ransom must I pay before I pass?
For I perceive I am thy prisoner.

Suf. How canst thou tell she will deny thy suit,
Bore thou make a trial of her love? I pray?
Mar. Why speak'st thou not? what ransom must
Suf. She's beautiful and therefore to be wodd;
She is a woman, therefore to be won,
Mar. Wilt thou accept of ransom? yea, or no.
Suf. Fond man, remember that thou hast a wife;
Then how can Margaret be thy paramour?
Mar. I were best to leave him, for he will not hear.
Suf. There all is marry'd; there lies a cooling card.
Mar. He talks at random; sure, the man is mad.
Suf. And yet a dispensation may be had.
Mar. And yet I would that you would answer me.
Suf. I'll win this Lady Margaret. For whom?
Why, for my king; that's a wooden thing.
Mar. He talks of wood: it is some carpenter.
Suf. Yet so my fancy may be satisfied,
And peace established between these realms.
But there remains a scruple in that too;
For though her father be the King of Naples,
Duke of Anjou, and no man may nor will, and
Our nobility will scorn the match.
Mar. Hear ye, captain, are you not at leisure?
Suf. It shall be so, disdain they never so much;
Henry is youthful and will quickly yield.
Madam. I have a secret to reveal. [knight,
Of marriage in the kingdom, ye see: he seems a
And will not any way dishonour me.

Suf. Lady, vouche-safe to listen what I say,
Mar. Perhaps I shall be rescued by the French;
And then need not crave his courtesy.
Suf. Sweet madam, give me hearing in a cause—
Mar. Trust, women have been captive ere now.
Suf. Lady, wherefore talk you so?
Mar. I cry you mercy, 'tis but Quid for Qno.
Suf. Say, gentle princess, would you not suppose
Your bondage happy, to be made a queen?
Mar. To be a queen in bondage is more vile
Than to be a slave in base servitude;
For princes should be free.
Suf.
If happy England's royal king be free.
Mar. Why, what concerns his freedom unto me?
Suf. I'll undertake to make thee Henry's queen,
To put the world in amazement; and set a precious crown upon thy head,
If thou wilt condescend to be my—

Mar. What?
Suf. His love.
Mar. I am unworthy to be Henry's wife.

Enter York, Warwick, and others.

York. Bring forth that sorecess condemn'd to burn.

Enter La Pucelle, guarded, and a Shepherd.

Shep. Ah, Joan, this kills thy father's heart out.

Have I sough every country far and near, [right! And an work exceeding my chance to find thee out,
Myst I behold thy timelesse cruel death?

Ah, Joan, sweet daughter Joan, I'll die with thee!

Puc. Decrepit miser! base ignoble wretch!

I am descended of a gentler blood:

Thou art no father nor no friend of mine. [not so:

Shep. Out, out! My lords, an please you, 'tis

I did bring thee to life with this advice: Her mother liveth yet, can testify

She was the first fruit of my bachelorship.

War. Graceless! wilt thou deny thy parentage?

York. This argues what her kind of life hath been,

Wicked and vile; and so her death concludes.

Shep. Alas, sweet Joan, that thou wert no obstacle!

God knows thou art a collop of my flesh;

And for thy sake have I shed many a tear:

Deny me not, I prithee, gentle Joan. [man,

Puc. Peasant, avant! You have suborn'd this

Of purpose to obscure my noble birth.

Shep. 'Tis true, I gave a noble to the priest

The morn that I was wedded to her mother.

Kneel down and take my blessing, good my girl,

Wilt thou not stoop? Now cursed be the time

Of thy nativity! I would the milk

Thy mother gave thee when thou suck'dst her breast,

Had been a little dralice for thy sake!

Or else, when thou didst keep my lambs a-field,

I wish some ravenous wolf had eaten thee!

Dost thou deny thy father, cursed drab?

O, burn her, burn her! hanging is too good. [Exit

York. Take her away; for she hath lived too long,

To fill the world with such ignominy.

Shep. But, Joan, that thou wert no obstacle!

Puc. First, let me tell you without you have con-

Not me begotten of a shepherd swain,

But issued from the progeny of kings;

Virgins and holy; chosen from above,

By inspiration of celestial grace,

To perform great miracles on earth.

I never had to do with wicked spirits:

But you, that are polluted with your lusts,

Stain'd with the guiltless blood of innocents,

Corrupt and tainted with a thousand vices,

Because you want the grace that others have,

You judge it straight a thing impossible

To counterfeit wondrous but by hand of devils.

No, misconceived! Joan of Arc hath been

A virgin from her tender infancy,

Chaste and immaculate in very thought;

Whose maiden blood, thus rigorously effused,

Will cry for vengeance at the gates of heaven.

York. Ay, ay; away with her to execution.

War. And hard ye, sirs; because she is a maid,

Spare no favours, let there be enow:

Place barrels of pitch upon the fatal stake,

That so her torture may be shortened.

Puc. Will nothing turn your unrelenting hearts?

Then shew them, I beseech you, humanly,

That warranteth by law to be thy privilege.

I am with child, ye bloody homicides:

Murther not then the fruit within my womb,

Although ye hate me to a violent death. [child!

York. Now heaven forbear! the holy maid with

War. The greatest miracle that e'er ye wrought:

Is all your strict preciseness come to this?

York. She and the Dauphin have been juggling:

I did imagine what would be her refuge.

War. Well, go to; we'll have no bastards live.

Especially since Charles must fail her.

Puc. You are deceived; my child is none of his:

It was Alençon that enjoy'd my love.

York. Alençon! that notorious Machiavel!

It dies, an if it had a thousand lives.

Puc. I give you leave, I have declared you:

'Twas he that the King, Charles nor yet the duke I named,

But Reignier, king of Naples, that prevail'd.

War. A married man! that's most intolerable.

York. Why, here's a girl! I think she knows not well.

There was no woman, whom she may accuse.

War. It's sign she hath been liberal and free.

York. And yet, forsooth, she is a virginn pure.

Strumpet, thy words condemn thy brat and thee:

Use no entreaty, for it is in vain. [cause:

Puc. Then lead me hence; with whom I leave my

May never glorious sun relish his beams

Upon that sacred place where all are slain:

But darkness and the gloomy shade of death

Environ you, till mischief and despair

Drive you to break your necks or hang yourselves!

York. Break thou in pieces and consume to ashes,

Thou foul accursed minister of hell!!

Enter Cardinal Beaufort, Bishop of Winchester, attended.

Car. Lord regent, I do greet your excellence

With letters of commission from the king.

For know, my lords, the states of Christendom,

Moved with remorse of these outrageous broils,

Have earnestly implored a general peace

Betwixt our nation and the aspiring French;

And here at hand the Dauphin and his train

Approacheth, to confer about some matter.

York. Is all our travel turn'd to this effect?

After the slaughter of so many peers,

So many captains, gentlemen and soldiers,

That in this quartel have been overthrown

And sold their bodies for their country's benefit,

Shall we at last conclude effeminate peace?

Of such popish base, and most abject peace,

Have the world witnessed, in the towns of

By treason, falsedhood and by treachery,

Our great progenitors had conquer'd?

O, Warwick, Warwick! I foresee with grief

The utter loss of all the realm of France.

War. Be patient, York: if we conclude a peace,

It shall be with such strict and severe covenants

As little shall the Frenchmen gain thenby.

Enter Charles, Alençon, Bastard, Reignier, and others.

Chas. Since, lords of England, it is thus agreed

That peaceful truce shall be proclaimed in France,

We come to be informed by yourselves

What the conditions of that league must be.

York. Speak, Winchester; for boiling choler choked

The hollow passage of my poison'd voice,

By sight of these their hateful enemies,

War. Charles, the rest, it is exacted thus:

That, in regard King Henry gives consent,

Of mere compassion and of lenity,

To ease your country of distressful war,

And suffer you to breathe in fruitful peace,

You shall become true liegenmen to his crown.

And, Charles, for you comen from in France,

To pay him tribute, and submit thyself,

Thou shalt be placed as viceroy under him,

And still enjoy thy regal dignity.

Alen. Must he be then as shadow of himself?

Adorn his temples with a coronet,

And yet, in substance and authority,
ACT V.  FIRST PART OF KING HENRY VI.  SCENE V.

Retain but privilege of a private man? This proffer is absurd and reasonless.
Chor. 'Tis known already that I am possess'd With such an title as to my dominions, And therein reverenced for their lawful king: Shall I, for lice of the rest unvanquish'd, Detrac so much from that prerogative, As to be call'd but vicevory of the whole? No, lord ambassador, I'll rather keep That which I have than, coveting for more, Be cast from possibility of all. [means }
York. Insulting Charles! hast thou by secret Used intercession to obtain a league, And, now the matter grows to compromise, Stand'st thou aloof upon comparison? Either accept the title thou us'st, Or lose by presenting from our king And not of any challenge of desert, Or we will plague thee with incessant wars. Reign. My lord, you do not well in obstinacy To cavil in the course of this contract: It once it be neglected, ten to one We shall not find any concurrence: Act. To say the truth, it is your policy To save your subjects from such massacre And ruthless slaughters as are daily seen By our proceeding in hostility: And therefore take this compact of a true, Although you break it when your pleasure serves. War. How say'st thou, Charles? shall our condn. Chor. It shall; [lion stand? Only reserved, you claim no interest In any of our towns of garrison. York. Then swear allegiance to his majesty, As thou art knight here to-day also Nor be rebellions to the crown of England, Thou, nor thy nobles, to the crown of England. So, now dismiss your army when ye please; Hang up your ensigns, let your drums be still, For here we entertain a solemn peace. [Exeunt. SCENE V. — London, The palace. Enter Suffolk in conference with the King, Gloucester and Exeter.

King. Your wondrous rare description, noble earl, Of beauteous Margaret how admirably: her: Her virtues, and her favouring gifts: Do brede love's settled passions in my heart: And like as rigour of tempestuous gusts Provokes the mightiest hulk against the tide, So am I driven by breath of her renown Either to suffer shipwreck or arrive. Where may have fruit of their love. Suff. Tush, my good lord, this superficial tale Is but a preface of her worthy praise; The chief perfections of that lovely dame, Had I sufficient skill to utter them, Would make a volume of enticing lines, And, which is more, she is not so divine, So full-replete with choice of all delights, But with as humble lowliness of mind She is content to be at your command; Command, I mean, of Virtuous chaste intents, To love and bright, Heer is her lord. King. And otherwise will Henry ne'er presume. Therefore, my lord protector, give consent That Margaret may be England's royal queen. Glou. So should I give consent to flatter sin. You know, my lord, your highness is betroth'd Into another lady of esteem; How shall we then dispense with that contract, And not deface your honour with reproach? Suff. As doth a ruler with unlawful oaths; Or one that, at a triumph having vow'd To try his strength, forsaketh yet the lists By reason of his adversary's odds: A poor earl's daughter is unequal odds, And therefore may be broke without offence. Glou. Why, what doth Margaret more than Her father is no better than an earl, [that? Although in glorious titles he excel. Suff. Yes, my lord, her father is a king, The King of Naples and Jerusalem; And of such great authority in France Will his alliance and perfections And keep the Frenchmen in allegiance. Glou. And so the Earl of Armagnac may do, Because he is near kinsman unto Charles. [dower, Eee. Beside, his wealth doth warrant a liberal Where Reignier sooner will receive than give. Suff. A dower, my lord, and disgrace not so your king, That he should become object of base and poor, To choose for wealth and not for perfect love. Henry is able to enrich his queen And not to seek a queen to make him rich: So worthless peasants bargain for their wives, As market-men for oxen, sheep, or horse. Marriage is a matter of more weight Than to be dealt in by attorneyship; Not whom we will, but whom his grace affects, Must be companion of his nuptial bed: And therefore, lords, since he affects her most, It most of all these reasons bindeth us, In our opinion, to marry her. For what is wedlock forced but a hell, An age of discord and continual strife? Whereas the contrary bringeth bliss, And is a pattern of celestial peace. Whom should we match with Henry, being a king, But Margaret, that is daughter to a king? Her peerless feature, joined with her birth, Approves her fit for none but for a king: Her valiant courage and unbaunted spirit, More than in women commonly is seen, Will answer our hope in issue of a king; For Henry, son unto a conqueror, Is likely to beget more conquerors, If with a lady of so high resolve As is fair Margaret he be linked in love, Then yield, my lords: and here conclude with me That Margaret shall be queen, and none but she. Suffolk. Well (though it be but repetition of your report, My noble Lord of Suffolk, or for that My tender youth was never yet attain; With any passion of inflaming love, I cannot tell; but this I am assured, I feel such sharp dissension in my breast, Such fierce alarms both of hope and fear, As I am sick with working these thoughts. Take, therefore, shipping; post, my lord, to France; Agree to any covenants, and procure That Lady Margaret do youchase to come To cross the seas to England and be crown'd King Henry's faithful and anointed queen: For your expenses and sufficient charge Among the people gather up a tenth. Be gone, I say; for, till you do return, I rest perplexed with a thousand cares. And you, good uncle, banish all offence: If you do censure me by what you were, Not what you are, I know not, will excuse This sudden execution of my will. And so, conduct me where, from company, I may revolve and nominate my grief. [Exit Glou. Ay, grief, I fear me, both at first and last. [Exeunt Gloucester and Exeter. Suff. Thus Suffolk, both prevailed; and thus he As did the youthful Paris once to Greece, [goes, With hope to find the like event in love, But prosper better than the Trojan did. Margaret shall now be queen, and rule the king; But I will rule both her, the king and realm. [Exit.

SCENE—England.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—London. The palace.

Flourish of trumpets; then hautboys. Enter the King, Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester, Salisbury, Warwick, and Cardinal Beaufort, on the one side; the Queen, Suffolk, York, Somerset, and Buckingham, on the other.

Suf. As by your high imperial majesty I had in charge at my depart for France, as procurator to your excellence, to marry Princess Margaret for your grace, so, in the famous ancient city Tours, in presence of the Kings of France and Sicili, [con, The Dukes of Orleans, Calaber, Bretagne and Alençon, Seven cards, twelve barons and twenty reverend bishops, I have performed my task and was espoused: And humbly now upon my bended knee, in sight of England and her lordly peers, deliver up my title in the queen.
To your most gracious hands, that are the substance of that great shadow I did represent; the happiest gift that ever marquis gave, the fairest queen that ever king received.

King. Suffolk, arise. Welcome, Queen Margaret: I can express no kinder sign of love Than this kind kiss. O Lord, that lends me life, lend me a heart replete with thankfulness! For then hast given me in this beauteous face A world of earthly blessings to my soul, if sympathy of love unite our thoughts. [Lord, Queen. Great King of England and my gracious

The mutual conference that my mind hath had, By day, by night, waking and in my dreams, In courtly company or at my seat, with you, mine elder-betreft sovereign, Makes me the bolder to salute my king With tender terms, such as my wit affords And over-joy of heart doth minister.

King. Her sight did ravish; but her grace in speech, Her words y-clad with wisdom's majesty, Makes me from wondering fall to weeping joys; Such is the fulness of my heart's content.

Lords, with one cheerful voice welcome my love. [All kneeling.] Long live Queen Margaret, England's happiness!
Queen. We thank you all. [Flourish.
Suf. My lord protector, so it please your grace, here are the articles of contracted peace Between our sovereign and the French king Charles, for eighteen months concluded by consent.
Glow. [Reads] Imprimus. It is agreed between the French king Charles, and William de la Pole, Marquess of Suffolk, ambassador for Henry King of England, that the said Henry shall espouse the Lady Margaret, daughter unto Regnier King of Naples, Sicilia, and Jerusalem, and crown her Queen of England ere the thirtieth of May next ensuing. Item, that the duchy of Anjou and the county of Maine shall be released and delivered to the king her father.'—[Let the paper fall.
King. Uncle, how now!
Glow. Pardon me, gracious lord;
Some sudden qualm hath struck me at the heart
And dunn'd mine eyes, that I can read no further.

KING. [Reads] Item, It is further agreed between them, that the duchies of Anjou and Maine shall be released and delivered over to the king her father, and she sent over of the King of England's own proper cost and charges, without having any dowry.

KING. By these words we are well. Lord marquess, kneel down:
We here create thee the first duke of Suffolk,
And gird thee with the sword. Cousin of York,
We here discharge your grace from being regent
The parts of France, till term of eighteen months.

KING. And further, our uncle Winchester, Gloucester, York, Buckingham, Somerset, Salisbury, and Warwick;
We thank you all for this great favour done,
In entertainment to my princely queen.

KING. Come, let us in, and with all speed provide
To see her coronation be performed.

[Exeunt King, Queen, and Suffolk.

KING. Brave peers of England, pillars of the state,
To you Duke Humphrey must unfold his grief,
Your grief, the common grief of all the land.
What! did my brother Henry spend his youth,
His mind, his body, in the sustenance of wars?
Did he so often lodge in open field,
In winter's cold and summer's parching heat,
To conquer France, his true inheritance?
And did my brother Bedford toll his wits,
To keep by policy what Henry got?
Have you yourselves, Somerset, Buckingham,
Brave York, Salisbury, and victorious Warwick,
Received deep scars in France and Normandy?
Or hath mine uncle Beaumont and myself,
With all the learned counsellor of the realm,
Studied so long, sat in the council-house
Early and late, debating to and fro
How France and Frenche might be kept in awe,
And had his highness in his infancy
Crowned in Paris in despite of foes?
And shall these labours and these honours die?
Shall Henry's conquest, Bedford's vigilance,
Your deeds of war and all our counsel die?
O peers of England, shame not this league!
Fata! this marriage, cancelling your fame,
Blotting your names from books of memory,
Razing the characters of your renown,
Defacing monuments of conquer'd France,
Undoing all, as all had never been!
I could, and will, have been the best
This peroration with such circumstance?
For France, 'tis ours; and we will keep it still.

KING. Ay, uncle, we will keep it, if we can;
But now it is impossible we should:
Suffolk, the new-made duke that rules the roast,
Hath given the dagger to my valiant son
Unto the poor King Reignier, whose large style
Agrees not with the leanness of his purse.

SOLD. Now, by the death of Him that died for all,
These counties were the keys of Normandy.
But wherefore weeps Warwick, my valiant son?
War. For grief that they are past recovery:
For, were there hope to conquer them again,
My sword should shed hot blood, mine eyes no tears.
Anjou and Maine! myself did win them both;
Those provinces these arms of mine did conquer:
And are the cities, that I got with wounds,
Delivered up again with peaceful words?
Mort Diem! York. For Suffolk's duke, may he be suffocate,
That dins the honour of this warlike isle!
France should have torn and rent my very heart,
Before I would have yielded to this league,
I never read but England's kings have had
Large sums of gold and dowries with their wives;

And our King Henry gives away his own,
To take behovellor that bring no vantages.

Glou. A proper jest, and never heard before,
That Suffolk should demand a whole fifteenth
For costs and charges in transporting her!
She should have stay'd in France and starv'd in KING. Before he had passed the Channel.

SOLD. France, My Lord of Gloucester, now ye grow too
It was the pleasure of my lord the king.

[Exit.

KING. My Lord of Winchester, I know your mind;
'Tis not my speeches that you do mislike,
But 'tis my presence that doth trouble ye.
Rancour will out; proud prelate, in thy face
I see thy fury: if I longer stay,
We shall begin our current bickering.
Lording, farewell; and say, when I am gone,
I prophesied France will be lost ere long.

[Exit.

KING. So, there goes our protector in a rage.
'Tis known to you he is mine enemy,
Nay, more, an enemy unto you all,
And no great friend, I fear me, to the king.
Consider, lords, be he the next of blood,
And heir apparent to the English crown:
Had Henry got an empire by his marriage,
And all the wealthy kingdoms of the west,
There's reason he should be dispasseed at it.
Look to it, and let not words inclined
Bewitch your hearts; be wise and circumspect.
What though the common people favour him,
Calling him ' Humphrey, the good Duke of Glou-cesterc,' Clapping their hands, and crying with loud voice,

'I shall maintain my royal excellence!'
With ' God preserve the good Duke Humphrey!'
I fear me, lords, for all this flattering gloss,
He will be found a dangerous protector.

Back. Why should he, then, protect our sovereign,
He being of age to govern himself?
Cousin of Somerset, join you with me,
And all together, with the Duke of Suffolk,
We'll quickly hoise Duke Humphrey from his seat.

Car. This weighty business will not brook delay;
I'll to the Duke of Suffolk presently.

[Exit.

SOM. Cousin of Buckingham, though Humphrey's
And greatness of his place be grief to us,
With pride yet let us watch the haughty cardinal:
His insolence is more intolerable
Than all the princes in the land beside:
If Gloucester be displaced, he'll be protector.

Back. Or thou or I, Somerset, will be protector,
Despite Duke Humphrey or the cardinal.

[Exit.

SOM. Beguise this, and tell the Duke of Gloucester,
York, and Somerset.

SOL. Pride went before, ambition follows him.
While these do labour for their own preferment,
Beloves it us to labour for the realm.
I never saw but Humphrey Duke of Gloucester
Did bear him like a noble gentleman.
On'ts gone we'll be nobly maintained,
More like a soldier than a man of the church,
As stent and proud as he were lord of all,
Swear like a ruffian and demean himself.
Unlike the ruler of a commonwealth.
Warwick, my son, the comfort of my age.
Thy deeds, thy plaintful and thy housekeeping,
Hath won the greatest favour of the commons,
Excepting none but good Duke Humphrey:
And, brother York, thy acts in Ireland,
In bringing them to civil discipline,
Thy late exploits done in the heart of France,
When thou wast most renowned;
Have made thee fear'd and honour'd of the people:
Join we together, for the public good.
In what we can, to bridge and suppress
The pride of Suffolk and the cardinal,
With Somerset's and Buckingham's ambition.
And, as we may, cherish Duke Humphrey's deeds,
While they do lend the proof of the land.
War. So God help Warwick, as he loves the land, And common profit of his country! York. [Aside] And so says York, for he hath not been the cause.

Sal. Then let's make haste away, and look unto the main.

War. Unto the main! O father, Maine is lost; That Maine which by main force Warwick did win, And would have kept so long as breath did last! Main chance, father, you meant; but I meant Maine, Which I will win from France, or else be slain. [Exit Warwick and Salisbury.

York, Anjou and Maine are given to the French; Paris is lost; the state of Normandy Stands on a tickle point, now they are gone: Suffolk concluded on the articles, The French made the best offer, they were well pleased To change two dukedoms for a duke's fair daughter, I cannot blame them all: what is 't to them? 'Tis thine they give away, and not their own. Piranes may make cheap pennyworths of their pillice And purchase friends and give to courtizans, Still revelling like lords till all be gone; While as the silly owner of the goods Weeps over them and wrings his hapless hands And shakes his head and trembling stands aloof, While all is shared and all is borne away, Ready to starve and dare not touch his own: So York not trusted, and both grove and tongue, While his own lands are bargained for and sold, Methinks the realms of England, France and Ireland Bear that proportion to my flesh and blood As did the fatal brand Althea burn'd Unto the prince's heart of Calydon. And Maine and Normandy given unto the French! Cold news for me, for I had hope of France, Even as I have of fertile England's soil. A day will come when York shall claim his own; And therefore I will take the Nevils' parts And make a show of love to proud Duke Humphrey, And, when I spy advantage, claim the crown, For that's the golden mark I seek to hit: Nor shall proud Lancaster usurp my right, Nor hold the sceptre in his childish fist, Nor wear the diadem upon his head, Whose church-like honours fits not for a crown.

Then, York, be still awhile, till thou do serve: Watch how the monarch when his eyes be asleep, To pry into the secrets of the state; Till Henry, surfeiting in joys of love, [Queen With his new bride and England's dear-bought And Humphrey with the peers be full at jats! Then will I raise aloft the milk-white rose, With whose sweet smell the air shall be perfumed; And in my standard bear the arms of York, To grapple with the house of Lancaster; And, force perforce, I'll make him yield the crown, Whose bookish rule hath pull'd fair England down. [Exit.

SCENE II. — The Duke of Gloucester's house.

Enter Duke Humphrey and his wife Eleanor.

Duch. Why droops my lord, like over-ripen'd corn, Hanging the head at Ceres' plentiful load? Why doth the great Duke Humphrey knit his brows, As frowning at the favours of the world? Why are thine eyes fix'd to the sullen earth, Gazing on that which seems to dim thy sight? What seest thou there? King Henry's diadem, Enchased with all the honours of the world? If so be, ye, and not the heavens, Until thy head be circled with the same, Put forth thy hand, reach to the glorious gold, What, is't too short? I'll lengthen it with mine; And, having both together heaved it up, We'll both together lift our heads to heaven,
When from Saint Albans we do make return,
We'll see these things effected to the full.
Here, Hume, take this; he shall make merry, man,
With thy confederates in this weighty cause. [Exit. Hume. Hume must make merry with the duchess' gold.]

Marly, and shall. But, how now, Sir John Hume! Seal up your lips, and give no words but mum: The business asketh silent secrecy. Dame Eleanor gives gold to bring the witch; Gold cannot come amiss, were she a devil. Yet have I gold dies from another coast; I dare not say, from the rich cardinal.

And from the great and new-made Duke of Suffolk, Yet I do find it so; for, be it plain,
They, knowing Dame Eleanor's aspiring humour, Have hired me to undermine the duchess
And bust these conjurations in her brain.

They say 'A crafty knife does need no broker;' Yet am I Suffolk and the cardinal's broker.
Hume, if you take not heed, you shall go near To call them both a pair of crafty knives.
Well, so it stands; and thus, I fear, at last Hume's knavery will be the duchess' wreck, And her attainture will be Humphrey's fall: Sort how it will, I shall have gold for all. [Exit.]

SCENE III. — The palace.

Enter three or four Petitioners, Peter, the Armourer's man, being one.

First Pet. My masters, let's stand close: my lord protector will come this way by and by, and then we may deliver our supplications in the quiet.

Sec. Pet. Marly, the Lord protect him, for he's a good man! Jesu bless him!

Enter Suffolk and Queen.

Peter. Her a' comes, methinks, and the queen with him, I'll be the first, sure.

Sec. Pet. Come back, fool; this is the Duke of Suffolk, and not my lord protector.

Suf. How now, fellow! wouldn't any thing with First Pet. I pray, my lord, pardon me; I took ye for my lord protector.

Ques. Then, what's mine, my Lord Protector? Are your supplications to his lordship? Let me see them: what is thine?

First Pet. Mine is, an't please your grace, against John Goodman, my lord cardinal's man, for keeping my house, and lands, and wife and all, from me.

Sec. Pet. A/as, sir, I am but a poor petitioner of our whole township.

Peter. [Giving his petition] Against my master, Thomas Horner, for saying that the Duke of York was rightful heir to the crown.

Ques. What sayst thou? did the Duke of York say he was rightful heir to the crown?

Peter. That my master was? no, forsooth: my master said that he was, and that the king was an usurer.

Suf. Who is there? [Enter Servant.] Take this fellow in, and send for his master with a pursuivant presently: we'll hear more of your matter before the king.

[Exit Servant with Pet.]

Ques. And as for you, that love to be protected Under the wings of our pay master's grace,
Begin your suits anew, and sue to him.

Away, base cullions! Suffolk, let them go.

All. Come, let's be gone.

[Exeunt. My Lord of Suffolk, say, is this the guise, Is this the fashion in the court of England? Is this the government of Britain's isle, And this the royalty of Albion's king? Under the surly Gloucester's governance? Am I a queen in title and in style, And must be made a subject to a duke? I tell thee, Pole, when in the city Tours Thou ran'st a tilt in honour of my love And stolest from the ladies of the court of France, I thought King Henry had resembled thee In courage, courtship and proportion: But all his mind is bent to holiness, To number Ave-Maries on his beads; His champions are the prophets and apostles, His weapons holy rays of sun and light, His study is his till-yard, and his love Are brazen images of canonized saints. I would the college of the cardinals Would choose him pope and carry him to Rome, And set the triple crown upon his head: That were a state fit for his holiness.

Suf. Madam, be patient; as I was cause Your highness came to England, so will I In England work your grace's full content. Queen. Beside the haughty protector, have we Beaufort, The imperial churchman, Somerset, Buckingham, And grappling York; and not the least of these But can do more in England than the king. Suf. And he of these that can do most of all Cannot do more in England than the Nevills: Salisbury and Warwick are no simple peers. Queen. Not all these lords do vex me half so much As that proud duke, the lord protector's wife. She sweeps it through the court with troops of ladies, More like an empress than Duke Humphrey's wife: Strangers in court do take her for the queen; She bears a duke's revenues on her back, And in her heart she scorns our poverty: Shall I not live to be avenged on her? Contumelious base-born callet as she is, She vaunted 'mongst her minions 'tother day, 'The very train of her worst wearing gown Was better worth than all my father's lands, Till Suffolk gave two dukedoms for his daughter. Suf. Madam, a crown and a bush for her; And placed a quire of such enticing birds, That she will fight to listen to the lutes, And never mount to trouble you again. So, let her rest: and, madam, list to me; For I am bold to counsel you in this. Although she be no courtier, yet must we join with him and with the lords, Till we have brought Duke Humphrey in disgrace. As for the Duke of York, this late complaint Will make but little for his benefit. So, one by one, we'll weed them all at last, And you yourself shall steer the happy helm.

Sound a sennet. Enter the King, Duke Humphrey of Gloucester, Cardinal Beaufort, Buckingham, York, Somerset, Salisbury, Warwick, and the Duchess of Gloucester.

King. For my part, noble lords, I care not which; Or Somerset or York, all's one to me.

York. If York have ill demean'd himself in France,
Then let him be deny'd the regentship.

Som. If Somerset be unworthy of the place,
Let York be regent: I will yield to him.

War. Whether it be Henry or his brother,
yea or no,
Dispute not that: York is the worther.

Cur. Ambitious Warwick, let thy better speak.

War. The cardinal's not my better in the field.

Buck. All in this presence are thy betters, Warwic.

War. Warwick may live to be the best of all.
ACT I.  SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI.  SCENE IV.

Sal. Peace, son, and show some reason, Bucking.—Why Somerset should be preferred in this.  [ham.
Queen.  Because the king, forsooth, will have it so.
Glo. Madam, the king is old enough himself To give his censure: these are no women's matters.

Sal. This he old enough, what needs your grace.
To be protector of his excellence?
Glo. Madam, I am protector of the realm;
And, at his pleasure, will resign my place.
Saf.  Resign it then and leave thine insolence.
Since thou wert king—as who is king but thou?—
The commonalty hath daily run to wreck;
The Dauphin hath prevail'd beyond the seas;
And all the peers and nobles of the realm
Have been as bondmen to thy sovereignty.
Car.  The commons shunt thou rack'd; the clergy's
Are lank and lean with thy exhortions.
[Attire
Som.  Thy swinish and abominable and thy wife's
Have cost a mass of public treasury.
[attire
Buck.  Thy cruelty in execution
Upon offenders hath exceeded law
And left thee to the mercy of the law.
Queen.  Thy sale of offices and towns in France,
If they in fact be, are more to be lamented
Would make thee quickly hop without thy head.
[Exit Gloucester.  The Queen drops her fan.
Give me my fan; what, minion! can ye not?
[She gives the Duchess a box on the ear.
I cry mercy, madam; was it you?
Duch.  War! I! yea, I it was, proud Frenchwoman:
Could I come near your beauty with my nails,
I'd set my ten commandments in your face.
King.  Sweet aunt, be quiet; 't was against her will.
Duch.  Against her will! good king, look to't in time;
She'll hamper thee, and dandle thee like a baby;
Though in this place most master wear no breeches,
She shall not strike Dame Eleanor unreverenced.
[Exit.
It enter Gloucester.
Glo.  Now, lords, my choler being over-blown
With walking once about the quadrangle,
I come to walk a second; bear my commands.
As for your spiteful false objections,
Prove them, and I lie open to the law:
But God in mercy so deal with my soul,
As I in duty love my king and country!
But, to the matter that we have in hand:
I say, my sovereign, York is nearest man
To be your regent in the realm of France.
Saf.  Before we make election, give me leave
To show some reason, of no little force,
That York is most meet of any man.
York.  I'll tell thee, Suffolk, why I am unmeet:
First, for I know not how the Dauphin
Next, if I be appointed for the place,
My Lord of Somerset will keep me here,
Without discharge, money, or furniture,
Till France be won into the Dauphin's hands:
Last time, I danced attendance on his will
Till Paris was besieged, famish'd, and lost.
War.  That can I witness; and a fouler fact
Did never traitor in the land commit.
Saf.  Peace, headstrong Warwick!
War.  Image of pride, why should I hold my peace?
[Enter Horner, the Armourer, and his man Peter,
Saf.  Because here is a man accused of treason:
Pray God the Duke of York excuse himself!
York.  Both any one accuse York for a traitor?

King.  What mean'st thou, Suffolk? tell me, what Are these?
Saf.  Please it your majesty, this is the man
That doth accuse his master of high treason;
His words were these: that Richard Duke of York
Was right well accustomed to the traitor
And that your majesty was an usurper.
King.  Say, man, were these thy words?
Hor.  An't shall please your majesty, I never said
Nor thought any such matter; God is my witness,
I am falsely accused by the villain.
Pty.  By these ten bones, my lords, he did speak them to me in the garret one night, as we were scouring my Lord of York's armour.
York.  Base dunghill villain and mechanical,
I'll have thy head for this thy traitor's speech.
I do beseech your royal majesty,
Let him have all the rigour of the law.
Hor.  Alas, my lord, hang me, if ever I spake
The words. My accuser is my 'prentice; and when I did correct him for his fault the other day,
I did vom upon his knees he would be even with me:
I have good witness of this; therefore I beseech your majesty, that I may cast away an honest man for a villain's accusation.
King.  Uncle, what shall we say to this in law?
Glo.  This doom, my lord, if I may judge:
Let Somerset be regent o'er the French,
Because in York this breeds suspicion:
And let it be with a day appoint them
For single combat in convenient place,
For he hath witness of his servant's malefice:
This is the law, and this Duke Humphrey's doom.
Som.  I humbly thank your royal majesty.
And I accept the combat willingly.
York.  Alas, my lord, I cannot fight; for God's sake, pity my case. The spirit of man prevails against me.
O Lord, have mercy upon me! I shall never be able to fight a blow. O Lord, my heart!
Glo.  Sirrah, or you must fight, or else be hang'd.
King.  Away with them to prison; and the day of combat shall be the last of the next month.
Come, Somerset, we'll see them set away.
[Flourish.  Exeunt.

SCENE IV. — Gloucester's garden.

Enter Margery Jourdain, Hume, Southwell, and Bolingbroke.

Hume.  Come, my masters; the duchess, I tell you, expects performance of your promises.

Boling.  Master Hume, are we therefore provided:
will her ladyship behold and hear our exorcisms?
Hume.  Ay, what else? fear you not her courage?
Boling.  I have heard her reported to be a woman of an invincible spirit: but it shall be convenient, Master Hume, that you be by her aloft, while we be busy below; and so, I pray you, go, in God's name, and leave us.  [Exit Hume.] Mother Jour-dain, be you prostrate and grovel on the earth; John Southwell, read you; and let us to our work.

Enter Duchess aloft, Hume following.

Duch.  Well said, my masters; and welcome all.
To this gear the sooner the better.
[Boling.  Patience, good lady; wizards know their deep night, dark night, the silent of the night,
The time of night when Troy was set on fire;
The time when screech-owls cry and ban-dogs howl
And spirits walk and ghosts break up their graves,
That time best fits the work we have in hand.
Madam, sit you and fear not; whom we raise,
We will wreak it fast within a hand's length.
[Here they do the ceremonies belonging, and made the circle; Bolingbroke or Southwell reads, Conjuro te, &c. It thunders and lights terrific; then the Spirit riseth.

ACT II.
SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI.
SCENE I.

Spir. Adsum.

M. Jourd. Asmath,

By the eternal God, whose name and power
Thou tremblest at, answer that I shall ask;
For, till thou speak, thou shalt not pass from hence.
Spir. Ask what thou wilt. That I had said and done.

Duke. 'First of the king: what shall of him be-

Come?' [Reading out of a paper.

Spir. The duke yet lives that Henry shall depose;

But him outlive, and die a violent death.

[As the Spirit speaks, Southwell writes the answer.

Duke. What fates await the Duke of Suffolk?
Spir. Two sisters shall be die, and take his end.

Duke. What shall befal the Duke of Somerset?
Spir. Let him shun castles;

Safer shall he be upon the sandy plains
Where as castles mounted stand.

Have done, for more I hardly can endure.

Duke. Descend to darkness and the burning lake!
False fiend, avoid!

[Thunder and lightning. Exit Spirit.

Enter the Duke of York and the Duke of Buckingham with their Guard and break in.

York. Lay hands upon these traitors and their Beldam, I think we watch'd you at an inch. [trash.
What, madam, are you there? the king and com-

monweal

Are deeply indebted for this piece of pains:
My lord protector will, I doubt it not,
See you well guarded for these good deserts.

Duch. Not half so bad as thine to England's king,
Injurious duke, that threatest where's no cause.

Buck. True, madam, none at all: what call you this?
Away with them! let them clapp'd up close,

And kept asunder. You, madam, shall with us.
Stafford, take her to thee.

[Exeunt above. Duchess and Home, guarded.
We'll see your trinkets here all forthcoming.
All, away!

[Exeunt guard with Jourdain, Southwell, &c.
York. Lord Buckingham, methinks, you watch'd her well;
A pretty plot, well chosen to build upon!
Now, pray, my lord, let's see the devil's writ.
What have we here? [Reads.

'The duke yet lives that Henry shall depose;
But him outlive, and die a violent death.'

Why, this is the answer.

'Aio te, &c. &c.'

Well, to the rest:
'Tell me what fate awaits the Duke of Suffolk?'
By water shall he die, and take his end.
What shall betide the Duke of Somerset?
'Let him shun castles;
Safer shall he be upon the sandy plains

Where as castles mounted stand.'

Come, come, my lords;
These oracles are hardly attain'd,
And hardly understood.

The king is now in progress towards Saint Alban's.
With him the husband of this lovely lady:
Thither go these news, as fast as horse can carry
A sorry breakfast for my lord protector. [them:
'Buck. Your grace shall give me leave, my Lord of
To be the post, in hope of his reward. [York.
York. At your pleasure, my good lord. Who's within there, ho!

Enter a Servingman.

Invite my Lords of Salisbury and Warwick
To sup with me to-night. Away! [Exeunt.

SCENE I.—Saint Alban's.

Enter the King, Queen, Gloucester, Cardinal, and Suffolk, with Falconers halloing.

Queen. Believe me, lords, for flying at the brook,
I saw not better sport these seven years' day:
Yet, by your leave, the wind was very high;
And, ten to one, old Jem had not gone out.

King. But what a point, my lord, your falcon made,
And what a pitch she slew above the rest!
To see how God in all his creatures works!
Yet, man and birds are fain of climbing high.

Suf. No marvel, an it like your majesty,
My lord protector's hawks do tower so well;
They know their master loves to be aloft
And bears his thoughts above his falcon's pitch.

Glou. My lord, 'tis but a base ignoble mind
That mounts no higher than a bird can soar.

Car. I thought as much; he would be above the clouds.

[Aside. Why, as you, my lord,
An't like your lordly lordship?

Glo. Why, Suffolk, England knows thine inso-
Queen. And thy ambition, Gloucester. [pence.

King. I pritchie, peace, good queen,

And what not on these furious peers;
For blessed are the peacemakers on earth.

Car. Let me be blessed for the peace I make,
Against this proud protector, with my sword!

Glo. [Aside to Car.] Faith, holy uncle, would
't were come to that!

Car. [Aside to Glo.] Marry, when thou darest.

Glo. [Aside to Car.] Make up no factions numbers for the matter.

In thine own person answer thy abuse.

Car. [Aside to Glo.] Ay, where thou darest not peep; an if thou darest,

This evening, on the east side of the grove.

King. How now, my lords!

Car. Believe me, cousin Gloucester,
Hod not your man put up the fowl so suddenly,
We had had more sport. [Aside to Glo.] Come with thy two-hand sword.

Glo. True, uncle.

Car. [Aside to Glo.] Are ye advised? the east side of the grove?

Glo. [Aside to Car.] Cardinal, I am with you.

King. Why, how now, uncle Gloucester!

Glou. Talking of hawking: nothing else, my lord.
[Aside to Car.] Now, by God's mother, priest, I'll shave your crown for this,

Or all my fence shall fall.

Car. [Aside to Glo.] Medice, tepiupon —

Protector, see to 't well, protect yourself.

415
Enter a Townsman of Saint Albans's, crying 'A miracle!'

Glu. What means this noise?
Fellow, what miracle dost thou proclaim?
Towns. A miracle! a miracle!
Suf. Come to the king and tell him what miracle.
Towns. Forssooth, a blind man at Saint Albans's shrine has recovered his sight.
Within this half-hour, hath received his sight;
A man that ne'er saw in his life before.
King. Now, God be praised, that to believing souls
Gives light in darkness, comfort in despair!

Enter the Mayor of Saint Albans's and his brethren, bearing Simpcox, between two in a chair, Simpcox's Wife following.

Car. Here comes the townsmen on procession,
To present their highnesses with the man.
King. Great is his comfort in this earthly vale,
Although by his sight his sin be multiplied.
Glu. Stand by, my masters: bring him near the
His highness's pleasure is to talk with him. [kneeling]
King. Good fellow, tell us here the circumstance,
That we for thee may glorify the Lord.
What, hast thou been long blind and now restored?
Simp. Born blind, an't please your grace.
Wife. Ay, indeed, was he.
Suf. What woman is this?
Wife. His wife, an't like your worship.
Glu. Hast thou been his mother, thou couldst have better told.
King. Where wast thou born? [grace]
Simp. At Berwick in the north, an't like your King. Poor soul, God's goodness hath been great too thee:
Let never day nor night unhallow'd pass,
But still remember what the Lord hath done.
Queen. Tell me, good fellow, canst thou here by
Or of devotion, to this holy shrine? [chance]
Simp. God knows, of pure devotion; being call'd
A hundred times and oftener, in my sleep,
By good Saint Alban; who said, 'Simpcox, come,
Come, offer at my shrine, and I will help thee.'
Myself have heard a voice to call him so.
Car. What, art thou lame?
Simp. Ay, God Almighty help me!
Suf. How camest thou so?
Glu. How long hast thou been blind?
Simp. O, born so, master.
Glu. What, and wouldst climb a tree?
Simp. But that in all my life, when I was a youth.
Wife. Too true; and bought his climbing very dear,
Glu. Mass, thou lovest fuller plums yet, that wouldst climb by his sight his sin be multiplied.
Simp. Als, good master, my wife desired some
And made me climb, with danger of my life.
Glu. A subtle knave! but yet it shall not serve.
Let me see thine eyes: wink now: now open them:
In my opinion yet thou seest not well.
Simp. Yes, master, clearly as day, I thank God and Saint Alban. [cloak off]
Glu. Say'st thou me so? What colour is this Simp. Red, master; red as blood. [gown on]
Glu. Why, that's well said. What colour is my Wife. Most true, forsooth; and couldst call it as jet. [is it?]
King. Why, then, thou know'st what colour jet.
Suf. And yet, I think, jet did he never see.
Glu. But cloaks and gowns, before this day, a many.
Wife. Never, before this day, in all his life.
Glu. Tell me, sirrah, what's my name?
Simp. Alas, master, I know not.
Glu. What's his name?
Simp. I know not.
Glu. Nor his?
Simp. No, indeed, master.
Glu. What's thine own name? [kneeling]
Simp. Saunders Simcox, an if it please you, master.
Glu. Then, Saunders, sit there, the lynget knave in Christendom. If thou hast been born blind, thou mightst as well have known all our names as thus to name the several colours we do wear. Sight may distinguish of colours, but suddenly to nominate them all, it is impossible. My lords, Saint Alban here hath done a miracle; and yole ye not think his cunning to be great, that could restore this cripple to his legs again?
Simp. O master, that you could!
Glu. My masters of Saint Alban's, have you not beadles in your town, and things called whips?
May. Yes, my lord, if it please your grace.
Glu. Then send for one presently.
May. Sirrah, go fetch the beadle hither straight.
[Exit Attendant.
Glu. Now fetch me a stool hither by and by.
Now, sirrah, if you mean to save yourself from whipping, leap me over this stool and run away.
Simp. Als, master, I am not able to stand alone:
You go about to torture me in vain.

Enter a Beadle with whips.

Glu. Well, sir, we must have you find your legs.
Sirrah, whip him till he leap over that same stool.
Bead. I will, my lord. Come on, sirrah; off with your doublet, quickly.
Simp. Als, master, what shall I do? I am not able to stand.

[After the Beadle hath hit him once, he leaps over the stool and ramps away; and they follow and cry, 'A miracle!'

King. O God, seest Thou this, and bearest so long?
Queen. It made me laugh to see the villain run.
Glu. Follow the knave; and take this drab away.
Wife. Als, sir, we did it for pure need.
Glu. Let them be whipped through every market-town, till they come to Berwick, from whence they came.
[Exeunt Wife, Beadle, Mayor, &c.
Car. Duke Humphrey has done a miracle to-day.
Suf. True; made the lame to leap and fly away.
Glu. But you have done more miracles than I;
You made in a day, my lord, whole towns to fly.

Enter Buckingham.

King. What tidings with our cousin Buckingham?

Buck. Such as my heart doth tremble to unfold.
A sort of naughty persons, lewdly bent,
Under the countenance and confederacy
Of Lady Eleanor, the protector's wife,
The ringleader and head of all this crew,
Have practised dangerously against your state,
Dealing with witches and with conjurers:
Whom we have apprehended in the fact;
Raising up wicked spirits from under ground,
Demanding of King Henry's life and death,
And other of your highness' Privy-council;
As more at large your grace shall understand.

Car. [Aside to Glou.] And so, my lord protector,
by this means
Your lady is forthcoming yet at London.

This, my lord, I think, hath turned your weapon's edge;
'T is like, your grace, you will not keep your hour.
Glu. Ambitious churchman, leave to afflicth my heart:
Sorrow and grief have vanquish'd all my powers;
And, vanquish'd as I am, I yield to thee,
Or to the meanest groom.

King. O God, what mischief work the wicked
Heaping confusion on their own heads thereby!

Queen. Gloucester, see here the tainture of thy nest,
And, that myself be faultless, thou wert best.

Glow. Madam, for myself, to heaven I do appeal,
How I have loved my king and commonwealth.
And, for my wife, I know not how it stands;
Sorry I am to hear what I have heard:
Noble she is, but if she have forgot
Honour and name I am conversed with such
As, like a pitch, defile inability.
I banish her my bed and company
And give her as a prey to law and shame,
That hath dishonour'd Gloucester's honest name.

King. Well, for this night we will repose us here:
To-morrow toward London back again,
To look into this business thoroughly
And call these foul offenders to their answers
And poise the cause in justice equal scales,
Whose beam stands sure, whose rightful cause prevails.

[Flourish. Exeunt.

Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick.

York. Now, my good Lords of Salisbury and Warwick,
Our simple supper ended, give me leave
In this close walk to satisfy myself,
In craving your opinion of my title,
Which is infallible, to England's crown.

Sal. My lord, I long to hear it at full.

War. Sweet York, begin: and if thy claim be
The Nevils are thy subjects to command.

[good. York. Then thus:
Edward the third, my lords, had seven sons:
The first, Edward the Black Prince, Prince of Wales;
The second, William of Hatfield, and the third,
Lionel Duke of Clarence; next to whom
Was John of Gaunt, the Duke of Lancaster;
The fifth was Edmund Langley, Duke of York;
The sixth was Thomas of Woodstock, Duke of Gloucester;
William of Windsor was the seventh and last.
Edward the Black Prince died before his father
And left me, his only son, [King;
Who after Edward the third's death reign'd as Till Henry Bolingbroke, Duke of Lancaster,
The eldest son and heir of John of Gaunt,
Crown'd by the name of Henry the Fourth,
Seized on the realm, deposed the rightful king,
Sent his poor queen to France, from whence she
And him to Pomfret; where, as all you know,
Harmless Richard was murdered traitorously.
War. Father, the duke hath told the truth;
Thus got the house of Lancaster the crown.
York. Which now they hold by force and not by right:
For Richard, the first son's heir, being dead,
The issue of the next son should have reign'd.
Sal. But William of Hatfield died without an heir.
York. The third son, Duke of Clarence, from
I claim the crown, had issue, Philippe, a daughter,
Who married Edmund Mortimer, Earl of March:
Edmund had issue, Roger Earl of March;
Roger had issue, Edmund, Anne and Eleanor.
Sal. This Edmund, in the reign of Bolingbroke,
As I remember, was of the crown;
And, but for Owen Glendower, had been king,
Who kept him in captivity till he died.
But to the rest.

York. His eldest sister, Anne,
My mother, being heir unto the crown,
Married Richard Earl of Cambridge; who was son
To Edmund Langley, Edward the third's fifth son.
By her I claim the kingdom: she was heir
To Roger Earl of March, who was the son
Of Edmund Mortimer, who married Philippe,
Sole daughter unto Lionel Duke of Clarence:
So, if the issue of the elder son
Succeed before the younger, I am king.

[This. War. What plain proceeding is more plain than Henry doth claim the crown from John of Gaunt,
The fourth son of York, stolen it from the third,
Till Lionel's issue fails, his shine to reign?
It fails not yet, but flourishes in thee
And in thy sons, fair slips of such a stock.
Then, father Salisbury, kneel we together;
And in this private plot be we the first
That shall salute our rightful sovereign
With honour of his birthright to the crown.
Loth. Long live our sovereign Richard, England's
King!

York. We thank you, lords. But I am not your Till I be crown'd and that my sword be stain'd
With heart-blood of the house of Lancaster;
And that's not suddenly to be perform'd,
But with advice and silent secrecy.

Do you as I do in these dangerous days:
Wink at the Duke of Suffolk's insolence,
At Beaufort's pride, at Somerset's ambition,
At Buckingham and all the crew of them,
Till they have shared the shepherd of the flock,
That virtuous prince, the good Duke Humphrey:
'Tis that they seek, and they in seeking that Shall find their deaths, if York can prophesy.
Sal. My lord, we break; we know your mind at full.

[Exeunt. War. My heart assures me that the Earl of War-
Shall one day make the Duke of York a king.
York. And, Nevil, this I do assure myself:
Richard shall live to make the Earl of Warwick
The greatest man in England but the king.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A hall of justice.

Sound trumpets. Enter the King, the Queen, Gloucester, York, Suffolk, and Salisbury; the Duchess of Gloucester, Margery Jourdain, Southwell, Hume,
And Bolingbroke, under guard.

King. Stand forth! Dame Eleanor Cobham, Glosester's wife:
In sight of God and us, your guilt is great:
Receive the sentence of the law for sins
Such as by God's book are adjudged to death.
You four, from hence to prison back again;
From thence unto the place of execution:
The witch in Smithfield shall be burn'd to ashes,
And you three shall be strangled on the gallows.
You, madam, for you are more nobly born,
Despoiled of your honour in your life,
Shall, after three days' open penance done,
Live in your country here in banishment,
With Sir John Stanley, in the Isle of Man.
Duch. Welcome is banishment; welcome were my death.

[thee. Glou. Eleanor, the law, thou see'st, hath judged
I cannot justify whom the law condemns.

[Exeunt. [With the prisoners guarded.
Mine eyes are full of tears, my heart of grief.
Ah, Humphrey, this dishonour in thine age
Will bring thy head with sorrow to the ground!
I beseech thee, my majesty, give me leave to go;
Sorrow would solace and mine age would ease.
King. Stay, Humphrey Duke of Gloucester: ere three days,
Give up thy staff: Henry will to himself
Protector be; and God shall be my hope,
ACT II.  SECOND PART OF  KING HENRY VI.  SCENE IV.

My stay, my guide and lantern to my feet; And go in peace. Humphrey, no less beloved Than when thou wert protector to thy king. Queen. I see no reason why a king of years Should be to be protected like a child. God and King Henry govern England’s realm. Give up your watchful, sir, and the king his realm. Gloucester. My staff! here, noble Henry, is my staff; As willingly do I the same resign As e'er thy father Henry made it mine; And even as willingly at thee I leave It as others would ambitiously receive it. Farewell, good king: when I am dead and gone, May honest hearts and minds appear to thee! [Exit. Queen. Why, now is Henry king, and Margaret queen; And Humphrey Duke of Gloucester scarce himself, That bears so shrewd a main in; two pats at once; His lady banishes, and a limb lopped off. This staff of honour raught, there let it stand Where it best fits to be, in Henry’s hand. [sprays; Suf. Thus droops this lofty pine and hangs his Thus Eleanor's pride dies in her youngest days. York, Lords, let him go. Please it your majesty, This is the day appointed for the combat; And which of you to be the appellant and defendant, The armorer and his man, to enter the lists, So please your highness to behold the fight. Queen. Ay, good my lord; for purposely therefore Left I the court, to see this quarrel tried. [Exit. King. O God’s name, see the lists and all things Here let them end it; and God defend the right! York. I never saw a fellow worse bested, Or more afraid to fight, than is the appellant, The servant of this armorer, my lords.

Enter at one door, Horner, the Armourer, and his Neighbours, drinking to him so much that he is drunk; and he enters with a drum before him and his staff with a sand-bag fastened to it; and at the other door Peter, his son, with a drum and sand-bag, and 'Prestices drinking to him. First Neigh. Here, neighbour Horner, I drink to you in a cup of sack: and fear not, neighbour, you shall do well enough. [charneco. Second Neigh. And here, neighbour, here be a cup of Third Neigh. Are here's a pot of double good beer, neighbour: drink, and fear not your man. Hor. Let it come, I't faith, and I'll pledge you all; and a fig for Peter! [not afraid. First Prentice. Here, Peter. I drink to thee: and be careful for your public service. Peter, and fear not thy master: fight for credit of the prentices. Peter. I thank you all: drink, and pray for me, I pray you; for I think I have taken my last dringat in this world. Here, Robin, an if I die, I give thee my apron; and, Will, thou shalt have my hammer: and here, Tom, be all the money that I have, O Lord bless me! I pray God! for I am never able to deal with my master, he hath learnt so much fence already. S dul. Come, leave your drinking, and fall to blows. Sirrah, what's thy name? Peter. Peter, Thump. S dul. Thump! then see thou thump thy master Hor. Masters, I am come hither, as it were, upon my man's instigation, to prove him a knife and myself a halberd: and now that I have touched the Duke of York, I will take my death, I never meant him any ill, nor the king, nor the queen: and therefore, Peter, have at thee with a downright blow! [double. York. Dispatch: this knife's tongue begins to sound the trumpets, alarm to the conspirators! [Alarums. Then fight, and Peter strikes him down. Hor. Hold, Peter, hold! I confess, I confess treason. [Dies. York. Take away his weapon. Fellow, thank God, and the good wine in thy master's way. Peter. O God, have I overcome mine enemy in this presence? O Peter, thou hast prevailed in right! King. Go, take hence that traitor from our sight; For by his death we do perceive his guilt; And God in justice hath treated him. The truth and innocence of this poor fellow, Which he had thought to have murder'd wrongfully, Come, fellow, follow us for thy reward. [Sound a flourish. Exeunt.

SCENE IV. — A street.

Enter Gloucester and his Serv ingmen, in mourning cloaks.

Glou. Thus sometimes hath the brightest day a After and summer evermore succeeds cloud; barren winter, with his wrathful nipping cold: So cares and joys abound, as seasons feet. Sirs, what's o'clock? Ser. Ten, my lord. Glou. Ten is the hour that was appointed me To watch the coming of my punish’d duchess; Unearth may she endure the flinty streets, To do treachery with her accursed feet. Sweet Nell, ill can thy noble mind abrook The abject people gazing on thy face, With envious looks, laughing at thy shame, That erst did follow thy proud chariot-wheels When thou didst ride in triumph through the streets. But, soft! I think she comes; and I'll prepare My tear-stain’d eyes to see her miseries.

Enter the Duchess of Gloucester in a white short, and a lower bearing in her hand; with Sir John Stanley, the Sheriff, and others.

Ser. So please your grace, we'll take her from the sheriff. Glou. No, stir not, for your lives; let her pass by. Duch. Come you, my lord, to see my open shame? Now thou hast done penance too. Look how they gaze! See how the giddy multitude do point, And nod their heads, and throw their eyes on thee! Glou. Ah, Gloucester, hark thee! be not of so careless look; And, in thy closet pent up, rue thy shame, And ban thine enemies, both mine and thine! Glou. Be patient, gentle Nell; forget this grief. Duch. Ah, Gloucester, teach me to forget myself! For whilst I think I am thy married wife And thus my privity, prudence, pride, Methinks I should not thus be led along, Mail'd up in shame, with papers on my back, And follow'd with a rabble that rejoice To see my tears and hear my deep-set groans. The ruthless knave did cut my tender feet, And when I start, the envious people laugh And bid me be advised how I tread. Ah, Humphrey, can I bear this shameful yoke? Trow'st thou that e'er I'll look upon the world, Or count them happy that enjoy the sun? No; dark shall be my light and night my day; To think upon my quiet shall be my hell, Sometime I'll say, I am Duke Humphrey's wife, And be a prince and ruler of the land: Yet so he ruled and such a prince he was As he stood by whilst I, his forlorn duchess, Was made a wonder and a pointing-stock To every idle tongue; but I had cause But be thou mild and blush not at my shame, Nor stir at nothing till the axe of death Hang over thee, as, sure, it shortly will; For Suffolk, he that can do all in all With her that ketheth thee and hates us all, And York and Impious Beaufort, that false priest, Have all lined bushes to betray thy wings, And, fly thou how thou canst, they'll tangle thee.
ACT III.  SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI.  SCENE I.

But fear not thou, until thy foot be snared,
Nor never seek prevention of thy foes.
Glot. Ah, Nell, forbear! thou art almost all awry;
I must offend before I be attainted;
And had I twenty times so many foes,
And each of them had twenty times their power,
All these could not procure me any cuticle,
So long as I am loyal, true and crimeless.
Wouldst have me rescue thee from this reproach?
Why, yet thy scandal were not wiped away,
But I in danger for the breach of law.
Thy greatest help is quiet, gentle Nell:
I pray thee, sort thy heart to patience;
These few days' wonder will be quickly worn.

Enter a Herald.

Her. I summon your grace to his majesty's parliament.

Hob. And Bury the first of this next month.

Glot. And my consent ne'er asked herein before!
This is close dealing. Well, I will be there.
[Exit Herald.

My Nell, I take my leave: and, master sheriff,
Let not her penance exceed the king's commission.
Sker. An't please your grace, here's my commission.
And Sir John Stanley is appointed now [stays,
To take her with him to the Isle of Man.

Glot. Must you, Sir John, protect my lady here?
Stan. So am I given in charge, may I please your grace.

Glot. Entreat her not the worse in that I pray.

You use her well: the world may laugh again;
And I may live to do you kindness if
You do it her: and so, Sir John, farewell! [well!]

Duch. What, gone, my lord, and bid me not fare-

Glot. Witness my tears, I cannot stay to speak.
[Exit Gloucester and Sheriff.

Duch. Art thou gone too? all sad, or go with thee!
For none abides with me: my joy is death;
Death, at whose name I oft have been afeard,
Because I wish'd this world's eternity.
Stanley, I prithee, go, and take me hence;
I care not whither, for I beg no favour,
Only convey me where thou art commanded.

Stan. Why, madam, that is to the Isle of Man;
There to be used according to your state.

Duch. That's bad enough, for I am but reproach;
And shall I then be used reproachfully?

Stan. Like to a duchess, and Duke Humphrey's lady;

According to that state you shall be used.

Duch. Sheriff, farewell, and better than I fare,
Although thou hast been conduct of my shame.
Sker. It is my office: and, madam, pardon me.

Duch. Ay, ay, farewell; thy office is discharged.
Come, Stanley, shall we go?

Stan. Madam, your penance done, throw off this
And go we to attire you for our journey.
[Exit. Duch. My shame will not be shifted with my sheet
No, it will hang upon my richest robes
And show itself, attire me how I can.
Go, lead the way; I long to see my prison.
[Exit.
ACT III.  SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI.  SCENE I.

Queen. Ah, what's more dangerous than this fond alliance!
Seems he a dove? his feathers are but borrow'd,
For he's dispos'd as the hateful raven;
Is he a lamb? his skin is surely lent him,
For he's inclin'd as is the ravenous wolf.
What can not be done? there's a shape't that means deceit?
Take heed, my lord; the welfare of us all
Hangs on the cutting short that fraudulent man.

Enter Somerset.

Som. All health unto my gracious sovereign!
King. Welcome, Lord Somerset. What news from France?
Som. That all your interest in those territories
Is utterly bereft you; all is lost.
King. Cold news, Lord Somerset: but God's will be done!
York. [Aside] Cold news for me; for I had hope
As firmly as I hope for fertile England,
Thus are my blossoms blasted in the bud
And cataphractis eat my leaves away;
But I will remedy this gear ere long,
Or sell my title for a glorious grave.

Enter Gloucester.

Glou. All happiness unto my lord the king!
Pardon, my liege, that I have stay'd so long. [soon, Sup. Nay, Gloucester, know that thou art come too
Unless thou wert more loyal than thou art;
Glou. Well, Suffolk, thou shalt not see me blush
Nor change my countenance for this arrest;
A heart unspotted is not easily daunted.
The purest spring is not so free from mud
As I am clear from treason to my sovereign;
Who can accuse me, wherein am I guilty?
York. 'Tis thought, my lord, that you took bribes of France,
And, being protector, stayed the soldiers' pay;
By means whereof his highness hath lost France.
Glou. Is it but thought so? What are they that
I never robb'd the soldiers of their pay, [think it?
Nor ever had one penny bribe from France,
So help me God, as I have watch'd the night,
Ay, night by night, in studying good for England,
That doth that e'er I wrested from the king,
Or any great I hearded to my use,
Be brought against me at my trial-day?
No; I do not speak of proper store,
Because I would not tax the needy commons,
Have I dispursed to the garrisons,
And never ask'd for restitution.
Car. It serves you well, my lord, to say so much.
Glou. I say no more than truth, so help me God!
York. In your protectorship did devise
Strange tortures for offenders never heard of,
That England was defac'd by tyranny. [lector,
Glou. Why, 'tis well known that, whiles I was pro-
Perty was all the fault that was in me;
For I should melt at an offender's tears,
And lovely words were raus'd for their fault.
Unless it were a bloody murderer,
Or foul felons thief that deceived poor passengers,
I never gave them condign punishment:
Murther indeed, that bloody sin, I tortured.
Above the felon or what trespass else [fewer:
Scot. My lord, these fall from my special hopes,
But lighter crimes are laid unto your charge,
Whereof you cannot easily purge yourself.
I do arrest you in his highness' name;
And here commit you to my lord cardinal.
To keep, until your further time of trial.

Glou. Ah, gracious lord, these days are dangerous:
Virtue is chok'd with foul ambition
And charity chas'd hence by rancour's hand;
Foul subornation is predominant.
And equity exil'd your highness' hand,
I know their complot is to have my life,
And if my death might make this island happy
And put an end to the world's direst state,
I would expend it with all willingness;
But mine is made the prologue to their play:
For thousands more, that yet suspect no peril,
Will not conclude their plotted tragedy.
Beaufort's red sparkling eyes blab his heart's malice,
And Somers ley breeding brighten'd his fatal hate;
Sharp Buckingham unburthen's with his tongue
The envious load that lies upon his heart;
And dogged York, that reaches at the moon,
Whose overweening arm I have pluck'd back,
By false accuse doth level at my life;
And you, my sovereign lady, with the rest,
Causeless have laid disgrace on my head
And with your best endeavour have stri'd up
My liefest liege to be mine enemy:
Ay, all of you have laid your heads together—
Myself had notice of your counsels—and
And also made away my guiltless life.
I shall not want false witness to condemn me,
Nor store of treasons to augment my guilt;
The ancient proverb will be well effected:
'A staff is quickly found to beat a dog.'
Car. My liege, his railing is intolerable:
If those that care to keep your royal person
From treason's secret knife and traitors' rage
Be thus upbraided, child and rated at,
And the offender granted scope of speech,
'Twill make them cool in zeal unto your grace.
Sup. Hath he not twit our sovereign lady here
With ignominious words, though directly cou'd,
As if she had suborn'd her own destruction?
False allegations to o'erthrow his state?
Glou. But I can give the loser leave to chide.
Glou. Far truer spoke than meant: I lose, indeed;
Beshrew the winners, for they play'd me false!
And well such losers may have leave to speak.
Back. He'll wrest the sense and hold us here all day:
Lord cardinal, he is your prisoner. [sure.
Car. Sirs, take away the duke, and guard him
Glou. Ah! thus King Henry throws away his Before his legs be firm to bear his only
Thus is a pound suborn'd from thy side
And wolves are guardian's who shall gaw that first,
Ah, that my fear were false! ah, that it were!
For, good King Henry, thy decay I fear.

King. My lords, what to your wisdom seemeth best,
Do or undo, as if ourself were here. [mend?
Queen. What, will your highness leave the parlia-
King. Ay, Margaret; my heart is drown'd with grief,
Whose flood begins to flow within mine eyes,
My body rendred and wrung with misery,
For what's more miserable than discontent?
Ah, uncle Humphrey! in thy face I see
The map of honour, truth and loyalty,
And yet, good Humphrey, is the hour to come
That e'er I proved thee false or fear'd thy faith.
Car. My lord, what shall I do to your highness?
What is the choice you have for your estate,
That these great lords and Margaret our queen
Do seek subversion of thy harmless life?
Thou never distildest them wrong nor man wrong;
And as the butcher takes away the calf
And binds the wretch and beats it when it strays,
Hearing the blood of thousands cry from his estate,
Even so remorseless have they borne him hence;
And as the dam runs lowing up and down,
Looking the way her harmless young one went,
And can do nought but wait her darling’s loss,
Even so myself bewails good Gloucester’s case.
Look with sad unhelpful tears, and with dim’d eyes
Like after him and cannot do him good.
No mighty are his vowed enemies.
His fellows shun him, and his name is writ each groan
Say ‘Who’s a traitor? Gloucester he is none.’

[Exeunt all but Queen, Cardinal Beaufort, Suffolk, and York; Somerset remains apart.

Queen. Free lords, cold snow melts with the sun’s
Henry my lord is cold in great affairs, shot beams,
Talk of feudal prejudice and Gloucester’s show
Beguiles him as the mournful crocodile
With sorrow snares relenting passengers,
Or as the snake roll’d in a flowering bank,
With shining checker’d slough, doth sting a child.
That for the beauty thinks it excellent.
Believe me, lords, were none more wise than I—
And yet herein I judge mine own wit go’d—
This Gloucester should be quickly rid the world,
To rid us from the fear we have of him.

Car. That he should die is worthy policy;
But yet we want a colour for his death:
’Tis meet he be condemned of course of law.

Suf. But, in my mind, that were no policy:
The king will labour still to save his life,
The commons haply rise, to save his life;
And yet we have but trivial argument,
More than mistrust, that shows him worthy death.
But what occasion, or what authority, will have him die.

Suf. Ah, York, no man alive so fair as I!

Yor. ’Tis York that hath more reason for his death.
But, my lord cardinal, and you, my Lord of Suffolk,
say as you think, and speak it from your souls,
Wrote not one, none empty eagle set
To guard the chicken from a hungry kite,
As place Duke Humphrey for the king’s protector?

Queen. So the poor chicken should be sure of death.

Suf. Madam, ’tis true; and were ’t not madness,
To make the foxsurveyor of the fold? [then,
Who being accused a crafty murderer,
His guilt should be but silly posted over,
Because his purpose is not executed.
No: let him die, in that he is a fox,
By nature proved an enemy to the flock,
Before his chaps be stain’d with crimson blood,
As Humphrey, proved by reasons, to my liege,
And yet I will not say he shall die:
Be it by gins, by snares, by subtlety,
Sleeping or waking, ’tis no matter how,
So he be dead; for that is good deceit
Which mates him first that first intends deceit.

Queen. Thrice-noble Suffolk, ’tis resolutely spoke.

Suf. Resolutely, except so much were done;
For things are often spoke and seldom meant:
But that my heart accordeth with my tongue,
Seeing the deed is meritorious,
And to preserve my sovereign from his foe,
Say but the word, and I will be his priest.
Card. ’Tis not said, my Lord of York, you can take due orders for a priest:
[Suffolk, say you consent and censure well the deed,
And I will provide his executioner,
I tender so the safety of my liege.

Suf. Here is my hand, the deed is worthily doing.

Queen. And so say I.

Yor. And I: and now we three have spoke it,
It skills not greatly who impugns our doom.

Enter a Post.

Post. Great lords, from Ireland am I come again,
To signify that rebels there are up.
And put the Englishmen unto the sword:
Send succours, lords, and stop the rage betime,
Before the wound do grow incurable;
For, being green, there is great hope of help.

Car. A breast that carries a quick expedient stop!
What counsel give you in this weighty cause?

Yor. That Somerset be sent as regent thither:
’Tis meet that lucky ruler be employ’d;
Witness the fortune he had hath in France.

Queen. If York, with all his underlie policy,
Had been the regent there instead of me,
He never would have stay’d in France so long.

Yor. No, not to lose it all, as thou hast done:
I rather would have lost my life betimes
Than bring a hurthen of dis-honour home
By staying there so long, if I care lost.

Show me one scar character’d on thy skin
Men’s flesh preserved so whole do seldom win.

Queen. Nay, then, this spark will prove a racing
If wind and fuel be brought to feed it with:
[fire,
No more, good York; sweet Somerset, be still:
Thy fortune, York, has been regent there,
 Might happily have proved far worse than his.

Yor. What, worse than nought? nay, then, a shame take all.

Som. And, in the number, thee that wastiest shame!

Car. My Lord of York, try what your fortune is
The uncivil word of our confederate law.
And temper clay with blood of Englishmen:
To Ireland will you lead a band of men,
Collected choice, from each county some,
And try your hap against the Irishmen?

Yor. I will, my lord, so please his majesty.

Som. Why, please his majesty? and what more?
And what we do establish he confirms;
Then, noble York, take thine this task in hand.

Yor. I am content: provide me soldiers, lords,
Whiles I take order for mine own affairs.

Suf. A charge, Lord York, that I will see perform’d.
But now return we to the false Duke Humphrey.

Car. No more of him: for I will deal with him
That henceforth he shall trouble us no more.
And so break off: the day is almost spent:
Lord Suffolk, you and I must talk of that event.

Yor. My Lord of Suffolk, within fourteen days
At Bristol I expect my soldiers:
For there I’ll ship them all for Ireland.

Suf. I’ll see it truly done, my Lord of York.

[Exeunt all but York.

York. Now, York, or never, steel thy fearful
And change misfortunes to resolution: [thoughts,
Be that thou hast, and what thou hast
Resign to death; it is not worth the enjoying:
Let pale-faced fear keep with the mean-born man,
And find no harbour in a royal heart. [thought.
Faster than spring-time showers comes thought on
And not a thought but thinks on dignity.
My brain more blaz’d than the labouring spider
Weaves tedious snares to trap mine enemies.
Well, nobles, well, ’tis politicly done,
To send me packing with an host of men:
I fear me you but warm the starved snake,
Who, cherished in your breasts, will sting your hearts.
Now, sir, how shall I do with this man?”
I take it kindly: yet be well assured
You put sharp weapons in a madman’s hands.
Whiles I in Ireland nourish a mighty band,
I will stir up in England some black storm
Shall blow ten thousand souls to heaven or hell;
And this fell tempest shall not cease to rage
Until the golden circuit on my head,
Like to the glorious sun’s transparent beams,
Do calm the fury of this mad-bred flaw.
And, for a minister of my intent,
I have seduced a headstrong Kentishman,
John Cadie of Asfordard.
To make commotion, as full well he can,
Under the title of John Mortimer.
In Ireland have I seen this stubborn Cadie
Oppose himself against a troop of kerns,

ACT III. SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI. SCENE I.
SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI. SECT. II.

And fought so long, till that his thighs with darts
Were almost like a sharp-quill’d porpentine;
And, in the end being rescued, I have seen
Him caper upright like a wild Morisco,
Shaking the bloody darts as he bet his.
Full often, like a shag-hair’d cratty kern,
Hath he conversed with the enemy;
And undiscover’d come to me again
And given me notice of their villanies.
This devil here shall be my substitute;
For that John Mortimer, which now is dead,
In face, in gait, in speech, he doth resemble:
By this I shall perceive the common’s mind.
How they affect the house and claim of York.
Say he be taken, rack’d and tortured,
I know no pain they can inflict upon him.
Will make him say I moved him to those arms.
Say that he thrive, as ‘tis great like he will;
Why, then from Ireland come I with my strength
And reap the harvest which that racial sow’d;
For Humphrey being dead, as he shall be,
And Henry put apart, the next for me.

SCENE II.—Bury St. Edmund’s. A room of state.

Enter certain Murderers, hastily.

First Mur. Run to my Lord of Suffolk; let him know
We have dispatch’d the duke, as he commanded.

Sec. Mur. O that it were so! What have we Didst ever hear a man so penitent? [done]

Enter Suffolk.

First Mur. Here comes my lord.

Suf. Now, sirs, have you dispatch’d this thing?

First Mur. Ay, my good lord, he’s dead.

Suf. Why, that’s well said. Go, get you to my house:
I will reward you for this venturous deed.
The king and all the peers are here at hand.
Have you laid fair the bed? Is all things well,
According as I gave directions?

First Mur. ‘Tis, my good lord.

Suf. Away! be gone. [Exeunt Murderers.

Sound trumpets. Enter the King, the Queen, Cardinal Beaufort, Somerset, with Attendants.

King. Go, call our uncle to our presence straight; Say you have found to try his grace to-day,
If he be guilty, as ’tis published.

Suf. I’ll call him presently, my noble lord. [Exit. King. Lords, take your places; and, I pray you all,
Proceed no straiter ’gainst our uncle Gloucester Than from true evidence of good esteem.
He be approved in practice culpable.

Queen. God forbid any malice should prevail,
That faultless may condemn a nobleman!
Pray God he may acquit him of suspicion! [much]

King. I thank thee, Meg; these words content me.

Re-enter Suffolk.

How now! why look’st thou pale? why tremblest thou?
Where is our uncle? what’s the matter, Suffolk?

Suf. Dead in his bed, my lord; Gloucester is dead.

Queen. Marry, God forfend!

Suf. O God, my secret judgment; I did dream to-night.
The duke was dumb and could not speak a word.

Queen. How fares my lord? Help, lords! the king is dead,

Sum. Rear up his body: wring him by the nose.

Queen. Run, go, help, help! O Henry, one thine eyes!

Suf. He doth revive again: madam, be patient.

King. O heavenly God!

Queen. How fares my gracious lord?

Suf. Comfort, my sovereign! gracious Henry, comfort!

King. What, doth my Lord of Suffolk comfort me?
Came he right now to sing a raven’s note,
Whose dismal tune bereft my vital powers;
And that I might feel the fire that he sent,
By crying comfort from a hollow breast,
Can chase away the first-conceived sound?
Hide not thy poison with such sugar’d words;
Lay not thy hands on me; forbear, I say;
Their touch affrights me as a serpent’s sting.

Thou hateful messenger of my sight!
Upon thy eye-ball murder’s tyranny.
Sits in grim majesty, to fright the world.
Look not upon me, for thine eyes are wounded:
Yet do not go away: come, basilsilk,
And kill the innocent gazer with thine sight;
For in the shade of death I shall find joy;
In life but double death, now Gloucester’s dead.

Queen. Why do you rate my Lord of Suffolk thus?
Although the duke was enemy to him,
Yet he most Christian-like lamented his death.
And for myself, foe as he was to me,
Might liquid tears or heart-offending groans
Or blood-dropping sighs recall his life,
I would be blind with weeping, sick with groans,
Look pale as primrose with blood-dropping sighs,
And all to have the noble duke alive.
What know I how the world may deem of me?
For it is known we were but hollow friends;
It may be judged I made the duke away;
So shall my name with slander’s tongue be wounded,
And princes’ courts be fill’d with my reproach.
This get I by his death: ay me, unhappy!
To be a queen, and crown’d with infamy! [man]

King. Ah, woe is me for Gloucester, wretched soul.
De woe be for me, more wretched than he is.
What, dost thou turn away and hide thy face?
I am no leasome leper: look on me.

What! art thou, like the adder, waxen deaf?
Be poisonous too and kill thy forlorn queen.
Is all thy comfort shut in Gloucester’s tomb?
Why, then, dame Margaret was ever thy joy.
Erect his status and worship it,
And make my image but an alehouse sign.
Was I for this nigh wreck’d upon the sea
And twice by awkward wind from England’s bank
Drove back again unto my native clime?
What landlord this, but well foretasting wind
Did seem to say ‘Seek not a scorpion’s nest,
Nor set no footing on this unkind shore’?
What did I then, but cursed the gentle gusts
And he that loosed them forth their brazen caves;
And bid them blow towards England’s blessed
Or turn our stern upon a dreadful rock? [shore, Yet Eolus would not be a murderer,
But left that hateful office unto thee; The pretty-vaulting sea refused to drown me,
Knowing that thou wouldst have me drown’d on shore,
With tears as salt as sea, through thy unkindness:
The splitting rocks cower’d in the sinking sands
And would not dash me with their ragged sides,
Because thy flinty heart, more hard than they,
Might in thy palace perish Margaret.
As far as I could ken thy chalky cliffs,
When from thy shore the tempest heard was back,
I stood upon the hatches in the storm,
And when the dusky sky began to rob
My earnest-gaping sight of thy land’s view,
I took a costly jewel from my neck,
A heart it was, bound in with diamonds.
And he that tunes towards thy fair sea received it,
And so I wish’d thy body might my heart;
And even with this I lost fair England’s view
And bid mine eyes be packing with my heart
And call’d them blind and dusky spectacles,
ACT III.
SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI. SCENE II.

For losing ken of Albion's wish'd I conf.
How often have I tempted Suffolk's tongue,
The agent of thy foul inconstancy,
To sit and witch me, as Ascanius did.
When he to maddling Dido would unfold
It shou'd be spoken in burning Troy!
Am I not witch'd like her? or thou not false like
Ay me, I can no more! die, Margaret! [him?
For Henry weeps that thou dost live so long.

Noise within. Enter Warwick, Salisbury, and many Commons.

War. It is reported, mighty sovereign,
That good Duke Humphrey traitorously is murder'd
By Suffolk and the Cardinal Beaufort's means.
The commons, like an angry hive of bees
That want their leader, scatter up and down.
And care not who they sting in his revenge.
Myself have calm'd their spicenous mutiny,
Until they hear the order of his death. [true;

King. That he is dead, good Warwick, 'tis too late
But how he died God knows, not Henry:
Enter his chamber, view his breathless corpse,
And commit his sudden death to the enemy.
War. That shall I do, my liege. Stay, Salisbury,
With the rude multitude till I return. [Exit.

King. O Thou that judgest all things, stay my thoughts,
My thoughts, that labour to persuade my soul
Some overweening hands were laid on Humphrey's life!
If my suspect be false, forgive me, God.
For judgment only doth belong to thee.
Fain would I go to chafe his paly lips
With twenty thousand kisses and to drain
Upon his face an ocean of salt tears,
To tell my love unto his dumb dead trunk
And with my fingers feel his hand unfeeling:
But all in vain are these mean obsequies;
And to survey his dead and earthy image,
What were it but to make my sorrow greater?

Re-enter Warwick and others, bearing Gloucester's body on a bed.

War. Come hither, gracious sovereign, view this body.

King. That is to see how deep my grave is made;
For with his soul fled all my worldly solace,
For seeing him I see my life: War.
As my soul intends to live
With that dread King that took our state upon him
To free us from his father's wrathful curse,
I do believe that violent hands were laid
Upon the life of this thrice-taun'd duke.

Suf. A dreadful oath, sworn with a solemn tongue;
What how his grace gives Lord Warwick for his vow?
War. See how the blood is settled in his face.

Oft have I seen a timely-parted ghost,
Of ashy semblance, meagre, pale and bloodless,
Being all descended to the labouring heart;
Who, in the conflict that it holds with death,
Attacks the same for aid; and his face, the enemy,
Which with the heart there cools and ce're returneth
To blush and beautify the cheek again.
But see, his face is black and full of blood,
His eye-balls farther out than when he lived,
Staring full ghastly like a strangled man; [glow;
His hair upcurl'd, his nestles stretched with string;
His hands abroad display'd, as one that grasp'd
And tugg'd for life and was by strength subdued:
Look, on the sheets his hair, you see, is sticking;
His well-proportion'd beard made rough and rugged,
Like to the summer's corn by tempest lodged.
I cannot but he was murder'd here:
The least of all these signs were probable. [death?

Suf. Why, Warwick, who should do the duke to Myself and Beaufort had him in protection;
And we, I hope, sir, are no murderers.

War. But both of you were vow'd Duke Humphrey's foes,
And you, forsooth, had the good duke to keep;
'Tis is like you would not feast him like a friend;
And 'tis was he found murdered in burning Troy:
Quee-n. Then you, belike, suspect these noblemen
As guilty of Duke Humphrey's timeless death.

War. Who finds the heifer dead and bleeding fresh
And sees fast by a butcher with an axe,
But will suspect 't was he that made the slaughter?
Who finds a parcel of unhurt trees burnt?

Suf. I wear no knife to slay right slaying men:
But here's a vengeful sword, rusted with ease,
That shall be scour'd in his rancorous heart
That slanders me with murder's crimson bade.

Quee-n. Say, if thou darest, proud Lord of Warwickshire,
That I am guilty in Duke Humphrey's death.

[Exeunt Cardinal, Somerset, and others.

War. What dares not Warwick, if false Suffolk dare him?

Quee-n. He dares not calm his contumacious spirit
Nor cease to be an arrogant controller,
Though Suffolk dare him twenty thousand times.

War. Madam, be still: with reverence may I say,
For every word you speak on behalf
Is slander to your royal dignity.

Suf. Blunt-lidded lord, ignoble in demeanour!
If ever lady wrong'd her lord so much,
Thy mother took into her blameful bed
Some stern untutor'd churl, and noble stock
Was graft with crab-tree sly; whose fruit thou art
And never of the Nevils' noble race.

War. But that the guilt of murder bucklers thee
And I should rob the deathsmen of his fee,
Quitting thee thereby of ten thousand shames,
And that my sovereign's presence makes me mild,
I would, false murderous coward, on thy knee
Make thee beg pardon for thy passed speech
And say it was thy mother that thou meant'st,
That thou thyself was born in bastardy;
And after all this fearful homage done,
Give thee thy hire and send thy soul to hell,
Prerogative of so base a villain as I am.

Suf. Thou shalt be waking while I shed thy blood,
If from this presence thou darest go with me.

War. Away even now, or I will drag thee hence:
Unworthy though thou art, I'll cope with thee
And do some service to Duke Humphrey's ghost.

Quee-n. Why, how now, lords! your wrathful weapons drawn
Here in our presence! dare you be so bold?
Why, what tumultuous clamour have we here?
Suf. The traitorous Warwick with the men of Set all upon me, mighty sovereign.

[Bury
Sal. [To the Commons, entering] Sirs, stand apart;
the king will know no compact.
Dread lord, the commons send you word by me,
Unless Lord Suffolk straight be done to death,
Or banished fair England's territories,
They will by violence tear him from your palace
And torture him with grievous lingering death.

423
They say, by him the good Duke Humphrey died; They say, in him they fear your highness' death; And more instinet of love and loyalty, Free from a stubborn opposite intent, As being thought to contradict your liking, Making you such a known objet deven. They say, in care of your most royal person, That if your highness should intend to sleep And charge that no man should disturb your rest In pain of your dislike or pain of death, Yet, notwithstanding such a strict edict, Were all the serpents, with forked tongue, That sily glided towards your holy presence, It were but necessary you were waked, Least, being suffer'd in that harmful slumber, The mortal worm might make the sleep eternal; And therefore do they cry, though you forbid, That they will guard you, whether you will or no, From such fell serpents as false Suffolk is, With whose envenomed and fatal sting, Your loving uncle, twenty times his worth, They say, is shamefully bereft of life. Commons. Within An answer from the king, my Lord of Salisbury! Suf. If like these serpents, rude unpolish'd minds Could send such message to their sovereignty: But you, my lord, were glad to be employ'd, To show how quaint an orator you are: But all the honour Salisbury hath won Is, that he was the lord ambassador Sent from a sort of tinkers to the king. Commons. Within An answer from the king, or we will all break in! King. Go, Salisbury, and tell them all from me, I thank them for their tender loving care; And had I not been cited so by them, Yet did I purpose as they do entreat: For, sure, my thoughts do hourly prophesy Mischance unto my state by Suffolk's means: And therefore, by His majesty I swear, Whose unworthy deputy I am, He shall not breathe infection in this air But three days longer, on the pain of death. [Exit Salisbury. Queen. O Henry, let me plead for gentle Suffolk! King. Ungentle queen, to call him gentle Suffolk! No more, I say, if thou dost plead for him, Thou wilt but add increase unto my wrath. Had I not been holden I would have laid my word, But when I swear, it is irrecoverable. If, after three days' space, thou here be'st found On any ground that I am ruler of, The world shall not be ransom for thy life. Come, Warwick, come, good Warwick, go with me; I have great matters to impart to thee. [Exit all but Queen and Suffolk. Queen. Mischance and sorrow go along with you! Heart's discontent and sour affliction Be playfellows to keep you company! There's two of you; the devil make a third! And who should share your opening woes? Suf. Cease, gentle queen, these excursions And let thy Suffolk take his heavy leave. Wretch! Queen. Fie, coward woman and soft-hearted Hest thou not spirit to curse thine enemy? Suf. A plague upon them! wherefore should I curse them? Would curses kill, as doth the mandrake's groan, I would invent as bitter-searching terms, As curst, as harsh and horrible to hear, Deliver'd strongly through my fixed teeth, With full as many signs of deadly hate, As the devils doth to Envy in her wanton love; My tongue should stumble in mine earnest words; Mine eyes should sparkle like the beaten flint; Mine hair be fix'd on end, as one distinct; Ay, every joint should seem to curse and ban: And even now my heart bend would break, Should I not curse them. Poison be their drink! Gall, worse than gall, the daintiest that they taste! Their sweetest shade a grove of cypress trees! Their chiefest prospect murdered basillisks! Their sweetest breath as much as auler's stings! Their music frightful as the serpent's hiss! And boding sereen-owls make the concert full! All the foul terrors in dark-steel'd hell— Queen. Enough, sweet Suffolk; thou torment'st thyself; And the threefold curses, like the sun 'gainst glass, Or like an overcharged gun, recoil, And turn the force of them upon thyself. Suf. You bade me ban, and will you bid me leave? Now, by the ground that I am banish'd from, Well could I curse away a winter's night, Though standing naked on a mountain top, Where biting cold would never let grass grow, And think it but a minute spent in sport. Queen. O, let me entreat thee cease. Give me thy That I may dew it with my mournful tears; (hand, Nor let the rain of heaven wet this place, To wash away my woful monuments. Queen. Go, could I bid them cease, I would, That thou mightst think upon these by the sea, Through whom a thousand sighs are breathed for thee! So, get thee gone, that I may know my grief; 'Tis but surpris'd whiles thou art standing by, As one that surpriseth thinking on a want. I will repeal thee, or, be well assured, Adventure to be banished myself: And banish'd I am, if but from thee. Go; speak not to me; even now be gone. O, go not yet! Even thus two friends condemn'd Embrace and kiss and take ten thousand leaves, Loather a hundred times to part than die. Yet now farewell; and farewell life with thee! Suf. Thus is poor Suffolk ten times banish'd; Once by the king, and three times thrice by thee. 'Tis not the land I care for, worth thou hence; A wilderness is populous enough, So Suffolk had thy heavenly company: For where thou art, there is the world itself, With every several pleasure in the world, And where thou art not, desolation. I can no more; live thou to joy thy life; Myself no joy in nought but that thou livest. Enter Vaux. Queen. Whither goes Vaux so fast? what news, I pray you. To signify unto his majesty [prithee? That Cardinal Beaufort is at point of death; For suddenly a grievous sickness took him, That makes him gasp and stare and catch the air, Blaspheming God and cursing men on earth. Sometimes he talks as if Duke Humphrey's ghost Were by his side; sometime he calls the king And whispers to his pillow as to him The soul was in the kiss of his passionate kiss! And I am sent to tell his majesty That even now he cries aloud for him. Queen. Go tell this heavy message to the king. [Exit Vaux. Ay me! what is this world! what news are these! But wherefore grieve I at an hour's poor loss, Omitting Suffolk's exile, my soul's treasure? Why only, Suffolk, mourn I not for thee, And with the southern clouds contend in tears, Theirs for the earth's increase, mine for my sorrows? Now get thee hence: the king, thou know'st, is coming: If thou be found by me, thou art but dead. Suf. If I depart from thee, I cannot live; And in thy sight to die, what were it else But like a pleasant slumber in thy lap?
ACT IV.
SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI.
SCENE I.

Here could I breathe my soul into the air,
As mild and gentle as the cradle-babe
Dying with mother's dyes between its lips:
Where, from thy sight, I should be raging mad
And cry out for thee to close up mine eyes,
To have thee with thine hope on my mouth;
So shouldst thou either turn my lying soul,
Or I should breathe it so into thy body,
And then it lived in sweet Elysium.
To die by thee were but to die in jest:
From thee to die were torture more than death:
O, let me stay, whatso may befal:
Queen. Away! though parting be a fretful cor-
seive,
It is applied to a deathful wound,
To France, sweet Suffolk: let me hear from thee,
For whosoever thou art in this world's globe,
I'll have an Iris that shall find thee out.
Suf. I go.
Queen. And take my heart with thee.
Suf. A jewel, lock'd into the wofull'st cask
That ever did contain a thing of worth.
Even as a splited bark, so sunder we:
This way fall I to death.
Queen. This way for me. [Exeunt severally.

SCENE III.—A bedchamber.

Enter the King, Salisbury, Warwick, to the Cardinal in bed.

King. How fares my lord? speak, Beaufort, to thy sovereign.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The coast of Kent.

Alarum. Fight at sea. Ordinance goes off. Enter a Captain, a Master, a Master's Mate, Walter Whitmore, and others; with them Suffolk, and others, prisoners.

Cap. The gaudy, blabbing and remorseful day
Is crept into the bosom of the sea;
And now loud-howling wolves arouse the jades
That drag the tragic melancholy night;
Who, with their drawsy, slow and flagging wings,
Clip dead men's graves and from their mistey jaws
Breathe foul contagious darkness in the air.
Therefore bring forth the soldiers of our prize;
For, whilst our phaumuce anchors in the Downs,
Here shall they make their ransom on the sand,
Or with their blood stain this discouler'd shore.
Master, this prisoner freely give I thee:
And thou that art his mate, make boot of this;
The other, Walter Whitmore, is thy share. [know.

First Gent. What is my ransom, master? let me Meet. A thousand crowns, or else lay down your head.
Mate. And so much shall you give, or off goes
Cap. What, think you much to pay two thousand crowns,
And bear the name and port of gentlemen?
Cut both the villains' throats: for die you shall:
The lives of those which we have lost in fight
Be counterposed with such a petty sum!
First Gent. I'll give it, sir; and therefore spare my life. [straight.

Sec. Gent. And so will I and write home for it
What. I lost mine eye in laying the prize aboard,
And therefore with thy lips to stop thou die; [To Suf.
And so should these, if I might have my will.
Cap. Be not so rash; take ransom, let him live.
Suf. Look on my George; I am a gentleman:
Rate me at what thou wilt, thou shalt be paid.

Car. If thou be'st death, I'll give thee England's Enough to purchase such another island, [treasure,
So thou wilt let me live, and feel no pain.
King. Ah, what a sign it is of evil life,
Where death's approach is seen so terrible!
War. Beaufort, it is the Murtherer speaks to thee.
Car. Bring me unto my trial when you will.
Died he not in his bed? where should he die?
Can I make men live, whether they will or no?
O, torture me no more! I will confess.
Alive again? then show me where he is:
I'll give a thousand pound to look upon him.
He hath no eyes, the dust hath blinded them.
Comb down his hair; look, look! it stands upright,
Like lime-twigs set to catch my winged soul.
Give me some drink; and bid the apothecary
Bring the strong poison that I bought of him.
King. O thou eternal Mover of the heavens,
Look with a gentle eye upon this wretch!
O, beat away the busy meddling fiend
That lays strong siege unto this wretch's soul
And from his bosom purge this black despair!
War. See, how the pangs of death do make him grip!
Suf. Disturb him not; let him pass peaceably.
King. Peace to his soul, if God's good pleasure be!
Lord cardinal, if thou think'st on heaven's bliss,
Hold up thy hand, make signal of thy hope.
He dies, and makes no sign. O God, forgive him!
War. So had a death argues a monstrous life.
King. Forbear to judge, for we are sinners all,
Close up his eyes and draw the curtain close;
And let us all to meditation.
[Exeunt.
ACT IV.  SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI.  SCENE II.

Cap.  Convey him hence and on our long-boat’s side
Strike off his head.

Suf.  Thou dar’st not, for thy own.

Cap.  Yes, Pole.

Suf.  Pole!

Cap.  Pool! Sir Pool! lord! An
Ay, kennel, puddle, sink; whose filthy and dirt
Troubles the silver spring where England drinks.
Now will I dam up this thy yawning mouth
For swallowing the treasure of the realm:
Thy lips that kiss’d the queen shall sweep the ground: [death.

And thank thatliest at good Duke Humphry’s
Against the senseless winds shall grind in vain,
Who in contempt shall kiss at thee again:
And waded be thou to the hags of hell,
For daring to affy a mighty lord
Unto the daughter of a worthless king,
Having neither subject, wealth, nor desdem.
By devilish policy art thou grown great
And, like ambitious Sylla, overgorged
With goblets of thy mother’s bleeding heart.
By thee Anjou and Maine were sold to France,
The false revolting Normans through thee
Disdainful mad, and thou hast not
Hath slain their governors, surprised our forts
And sent the ragged soldiers wounded home.
The princely Warwick, and the Nevills all,
Whose dreadful swords were never drawn in vain,
As hating thee, are rising up in arms;
And now the house of York, thrust from the crown
By shamefull murder of a guiltless king
And lotty proud encroaching tyranny,
Burns with revenging fire; whose hopeful colours
Advance our half-faced sun, striving to shine,
Under which is writ: Invictus annibus?
The commons here in Kent are up in arms:
And, to conclude, how to brooch a beggary
Is crept into the palace of our king.
And all by thee. Away! convey him hence.

Suf.  O that I were a god, to shoot forth thunder
Upon these paltry, servile, abject drudges!
Small things make base men proud: this villain
Being captain of a pinchair, threatens more: [here,
Than Bargulus the strong Illyrian pirate.
Drones suck not eagles’ blood but rob bee-hives:
It is impossible that he should die
By such a lowly vassal as thyself.
Thy words more rage and not choose in me:
I go of message from the queen to France;
I charge thee wait me safely cross the Channel.

Whit.  Come, Suffolk, I must wait thee to
Suf.  Geldius timor occupat artus; it is thee I fear.
Whit.  Thou shalt have cause to fear before I leave the house of York.

Cap.  What are ye daunted now? now will ye stop?
First Gent.  My gracious lord, entreat him, speak him fair.

Suf.  Suffolk’s imperial tongue is stern and rough,
Used to command,untaught to plead for favour.
Far be the humble suit of these
With humble suit; no, rather let my head
Stoop to the block than these knees bow to any Save to the God of heaven and to my king;
And sooner dance upon a bloody pole
Than stand uncover’d to the vulgar groom.
True kingship is exempt from folly
More can I bear than you dare execute.

Cap.  Halé him away, and let him talk no more.

Suf.  Come, soldiers, show what cruelty ye can,
That this my death may never be forgot!
Great men oft die by vile base hands;
A Rotterham and handlike slave
Murder’d sweet Tully; Brutus’ bastard hand
Stabb’d Julius Caesar; savage islanders
Trompoy the Great; and Suffolk dies by pirates.

[Exit Whitmore and others with Suffolk.

Cap.  And as for these whose ranson we have set,
It is our pleasure one of them depart:
Therefore come you with us and let him go.

[Exeunt all but the First Gentleman.

Re-enter Whitmore with Suffolk’s body.

Whit.  There let his head and lifeless body lie,
Until the queen his mistress bury it. [Exit.

First Gent.  O barbarous and bloody spectacle!
His body will I bear unto the king:
If he revenge it not, yet will his friends;
So will the queen, that living held him dear.

[Exit with the body.

SCENE II. — Blackheath.

Enter George Bevis and John Holland.

Bevis.  Come, and get thee a sword, though made of a hath: they have been up these two days.

Holl.  They have the more need to sleep now, then.

Bevis.  I tell thee, Jack Cade the clothier means to dress the commonwealth, and turn it, and set a new map upon it.

Holl.  So he hath need, for ’tis threadbare. Well,
I say it was ever merry world in England since gentlemen came up.

Bevis.  O miserable age! virtue is not regarded in handicrafts-men. [prosopos.

Holl.  The nobility think scorn to go in leather.

Bevis.  Nay, more, the king’s council are no good workmen.

Holl.  True; and yet it is said, labour in thy vocation; which is as much to say as, let the magistrates be labouring men; and therefore should we be magistrates.

Bevis.  Thou hast hit it; for there’s no better sign of a brave mind than a hard hand.

Holl.  I see them! I see them! There’s Best’s son, the tenant of Wingham.

Bevis.  He shall have the skin of our enemies, to make dog’s-leather of.

Holl.  And Dick the Butcher.

Bevis.  And so I must conclude, and Dick the Butcher;
I am noiser than you, my lord. You are
An Englishman and a gentleman.

Dick.  [Aside] Or rather, of stealing a cade of Holl.  For our enemies shall fall before us, inspired with the spirit of putting down kins and princes.— Command silence.

Dick.  Silence!

Cade.  My father was a Mortimer,—

Dick.  [Aside] He was an honest man, and a good

Cade.  My mother a Plantagenet,— [bricklayer.

Dick.  [Aside] I knew her well: she was a mildwife.

Cade.  My wife descended of the Lacies.—

Dick.  [Aside] She was, indeed, a pedlar’s daughter, and sold many kaces.

Smith.  [Aside] But now of late, not able to travel with her furled pack, she washes bucks here at home.

Cade.  Therefore am I of an honourable house.—

Dick.  [Aside] Ay, by my faith, the field is honourable;
and there was he born, under a hedge, for his father had never a house but the cage.

Cade.  Valiant I am. [valiant.

Smith.  [Aside] A must needs; for beggary is Cade.  I am able to endure much.

Dick.  [Aside] No question of that; for I have seen him whipped three market-days together.

Cade.  I fear neither sword nor fire.

Smith.  [Aside] He need not fear the sword; for his coat is of proof.
ACT IV.  SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI.  SCENE III.

Dick.  [Aside] But methinks he should stand in fear of fire, being burnt 'tis the hand for stealing of sheep.

Cade.  Be brave, then; for your captain is brave, and vows reformation.  There shall be in England none of halfe-sheep; and for a penny: the threehooped pot shall have ten hoops; and I will make it feoly to drink small beer: all the realm shall be in common; and in Cheapside shall my paifliy go to grass: and when I am king, as king I will be,—All.  God save your majesty!

Cade.  I thank you, good people; there shall be no man and shall eat and drink on my score; and I will apparel them all in one livery, that they may agree like brothers and worship me their lord.

Dick.  The first thing we do, let's kill all the lawyers.

Cade.  Nay, that I mean to do.  Is not this a laudable thing, that of the skin of an innocent lamb should be made parchment? that parchment, being scribbled over, should undo a man?  Some say the bee stings: but I say, 'tis the bee's wax; for I did but seal once to a thing, and I was never mine own man since.  How now! who's there?

Enter some, bringing forward the Clerk of Chatham.

Smith.  The clerk of Chatham: he can write and read and cast accompt.

Cade.  O monstrous!

Smith.  We took him setting of boys' copies.

Cade.  Here's a villain!

Smith.  Has a book in his pocket with red letters.

Cade.  Nay, then, he is a conjurer.  [in 't.

Dick.  Nay, he can make obligations, and write court-hand.

Cade.  I am sorry for 't: the man is a proper man, of much respect: unless I find him guilty, he shall not die.  Come hither, sirrah, I must examine thee: what is thy name?

Clerk.  Emmanuel.

Dick.  They use to write it on the top of letters: 't will go hard with you.

Cade.  Let me alone.  Dost thou use to write thy name? or hast thou a mark to thyself, like an honest plain-dealing man?

Clerk.  Sir, I thank God, I have been so well brought up that I can write my name.

All.  He hath confessed: away with him! he's a villain, and a traitor.

Cade.  Away with him.  I say! hang him with his pen and ink-horn about his neck.  [Exit one with the Clerk.

Enter Michael.

Mick.  Where's our general?

Cade.  Here I am, thou particular fellow.

Mick.  Fly, dy, dy!  Sir Humphrey Stafford and his brother are hard by, with the king's forces.

Cade.  Stand, villain, stand, or I'll fell thee down.

He shall be encountered with a man as good as himself: he is but a knight, is a?

Mick.  No.

Cade.  To equal him, I will make myself a knight presently.  [Kneels] Rise up Sir John Mortimer.  [Rises] Now have at him!

Enter Sir Humphrey Stafford and his Brother, with drum and soldiers.

Staff.  Rebellious kins, the fifth and scum of Kent, Mark'd for the gallows, lay your weapons down; Home to your cottages, forsake this grom: The king is merciful, if you revolt.  More than a worshipful, and inclined to blood, If you go forward; therefore yield, or die.

Cade.  As for those silken-coated slaves, I pass not: It is to you, good people, that I speak, Over whom, in time to come, I hope to reign; For I am rightful heir unto the crown.

Staff.  Villain, thy father was a platerer; And thou thyself a shearmen, art thou not?  Cade.  And Adam was a gardener.

Bro.  And what of that?  [March.

Cade.  Marry, this: Edmund Mortimer, Earl of March and the Duke of Clarence's daughter, did heStaff.  Ay, sir.

Bro.  By her he had two children at one birth.

Cade.  Ay, there's the question; but I say, 'tis The elder of them, being put to nurse, Was by a beggar-woman stolen away: And, ignorant of his birth and parentage, Became a bricklayer when he came to age: His son am I; deny it, if you can.

Dick.  Nay, 'tis too true: therefore shall he be king.

Smith.  Sir, he made a chimney in my father's house, and heave one live at this day to testify it; therefore deny it not.

Staff.  And will you credit this base drudge's words, That speaks he knows not what?

All.  Ay, marry, will we; therefore get ye gone, Bro.  Jack Cade, the Duke of York hath taught you this.

Cade.  [Aside] He lies for I invented it myself.

Go to, sirrah, tell the king from me, that, for his father's sake, Henry the Fifth, in whose time boys went to span-counter for French crowns, I am content he shall reign; but I'll be protector over him.  Dick.  And furthermore, we'll have the Lord Say's head for selling the dukedom of Lancaster.

Cade.  And good reason; for thereby is England maned, and faim to go with a staff, but that my puissance holds it up.  Fellow kings, I tell you that that Lord Say hath gelled the commonwealth, and made it an emnuch: and more than that, he can speak French; and therefore he is a traitor.

Staff.  O gross and miserable ignorance!

Cade.  Nay, answer, if you can: the Frenchmen are our enemies; go to, then, I ask but this: can he that speaks with the tongue of an enemy be a good counsellor, or no?

All.  No, no; and therefore we'll have his head.

Bro.  Well, seeking gentle words will not prevail, Assail them with the army of the king.

Staff.  Herald, away; and throughout every town Proclaim them traitors that are up with Cade; That those which fly before the battle ends May, even as the wild children's sight, Be hang'd up for example at their doors: And you that be the king's friends, follow me.  [Exeunt the two Stafford, and soldiers.

Cade.  And you that love the commons, follow me.  Now show yourselves men; 't is for liberty.  We will not have one lord, one gentleman: Spare none but such as go in stigmatized shoon; For they are thrifty honest men and such As would, but that they dare not, take our parts.

Dick.  They are all in order and march toward us.

Cade.  But then are we in order when we are most out of order.  Come, march forward.  [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Another part of Blackheath.

Alarums to the fight, wherein both the Stafford are slain.  Enter Cade and the rest.

Cade.  Where's Dick, the butcher of Ashford?

Dick.  Here, sir.

Cade.  They fell before thee like sheep and oxen, and thou belavedst thyself as if thou hadst been in thine own slaughter-house: therefore thus will I reward thee, the Lent shall be as long again as it is; and thou shalt have a licence to kill for a hundred Dick.  I desire no more.  [lacking one.

Cade.  And, to speak truth, thou deservest no less.  This monument of the victory will I bear [putting on Sir Humphrey's brigandine]; and the bodies shall be dragged at my horse's heels till I do come to Lon-
Buck. Trust nobody, for fear you be betray'd.
Say. The trust I have is in mine innocence,
And therefore am I bold and resolute. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—London. The Tower.

Enter Lord Scales upon the Tower, walking. Then enter two or three Citizens below.

Scales. How now! is Jack Cade slain?
First Cit. No, my lord, nor likely to be slain; for they have won the bridge, killing all those that withstand them: the lord mayor craves aid of your honour from the Tower to defend the city from the rebels.

Scales. Such aid as I can spare you shall command; but I am troubled here with them myself; The rebels have assay'd to win the Tower. But get you to Smithfield and gather head, And thither I will send you Matthew Gooff: Fight for your king, your country and your lives; And so, farewell, for I must hence again. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—London. Common Street.

Enter Jack Cade and the rest, and strikes his staff on London-stone.

Cade. Now is Mortimer lord of this city. And here, sitting upon London-stone, I charge and command that, of the city's cost, the pissing-conduit run nothing but claret wine this first year of our reign. And now henceforward it shall be treason for any that calls me other than Lord Mortimer.

Enter a Soldier, running.

Sold. Jack Cade! Jack Cade!

Cade. Knock him down there! [They kill him. Smith. If this fellow be wise, he'll never call ye Jack Cade more: I think he hath a very fair warning.

Dick. My lord, there's an army gathered together in Smithfield.

Cade. Come, then, let's go fight with them; but first, go and set London bridge on fire: and, if you can, burn down the Tower too. Come, let's away.

Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—London. Smithfield.

Alarms. Matthew Gooff is slain, and all the rest. Then enter Jack Cade, with his company.

Cade. So, sirs; now go some and pull down the Savoy; others to the inn's of court; down with them Dick. I have a suit unto your lordship, gall.

Cade. Be it a lordship, thou shalt have it for that word.

Dick. Only that the laws of England may come out of your mouth.

Holl. [Aside] Mass, 'twill be sore law, then: for he was thrust in the mouth with a spear, and 'tis not whole yet.

Smith, [Aside] Nay, John, it will be stinking law; for his breath stinks with eating toasted cheese.

Cade. I have thought upon it. It shall be so. Away, burn all the records of the realm; my mouth shall be the parliament of England.

Holl, [Aside] Then we are like to have biting statutes, unless his teeth be pulled out. [common.

Cade. And henceforward all things shall be in

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Jack Cade hath gotten London bridge: The citizens fly and forsake their houses: The rascal people, thirsting after prey, Join with the traitor, and they jointly swear To spoil the city and your royal court.

Buck. Then linger not, my lord; away, take horse. [court us.

King. Come, Margaret; God, our hope, will sue
Queen. My hope is gone, now Suffolk is deceased.

King. Farewell, my lord: trust not the Kentish rebels.
ACT IV.
SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI. SCENE VIII.

regal. What canst thou answer to my majesty for giving up of Normandy unto Monsieur Basineau, the dauphin of France? Be it known unto thee the presence even of Lord Mortimer, that I am the besom that must sweep the court clean of such filth as thou art. Thou hast most traitorously corrupted the youth of the realm in creating a grammar school; and whereas, before, our forefathers had no other books but the scare and the volume thou hast caused printing to be used, and, contrary to the king, his crown and dignity, thou hast built a paper-mill. It will be proved to thy face that thou hast men about thee that usually talk of a noun and a verb, and such abominable words as no Christian ear can endure to hear. I am sure thou hast caused printing to be used and, contrary to the king, his crown and dignity, thou hast built a paper-mill. It will be proved to thy face that thou hast men about thee that usually talk of a noun and a verb, and such abominable words as no Christian ear can endure to hear.

Sey. What of that? Cast. Marry, thou oughtest not to let thy horse wear a cloak, when honest men than thou go in their hose and doublets.

Dick. And work in their shirt too; as myself, for example, that an butcher.

Sey. Thou meanest of Kent.

Dick. What say you of Kent? [gns.

Sey. Nothing but this: 'tis 'bona terra, matr

Cast. Away with him, away with him! he speaks Latin.

Sey. I hear him but speak, and bear me where you Kent, in the Commentaries Caesar writ, 'tis term'd the civil'st place of all this isle: Sweet is the country, because full of riches: The people liberal, valiant, active, wealthy: Which makes me hope you are not void of pity. I sold not Maine, I lost not Normandy.

Justice with favour have I always done: Prayers and tears have moved me, gifts could never. When have I ought exacted at your hands.

But to maintain the king, the realm and you? Large gifts have I bestow'd on learned clerks, Because they would prefer me to the king, and seeing ignorance is the curse of God, Knowing the wing whereabouts we fly to heaven, Unless you possess with devilish spirits, You cannot but forbear to murder me:

This tongue hath parley'd unto foreign kings For much which is not in the King's [field? Cast. Tut, when struck'st thou one blow in the Sey. Great men have reaching hands: oft have I struck Those that I never saw and struck them dead.

Sey. These cheeks are pale for watching for your Cast. Give him a box o' the ear and that will make 'em red again.

Sey. Long sitting to determine poor men's causes Hath made me full of sickness and diseases.

Cast. Ye shall have a hempen candle then and the hatchet.

Dick. Why dost thou quiver, man?

Sey. The palsy, and not fear, provokes me.

Cast. Nay, he nods at us, as who should say, I'll be even with you: I'll see if his head will stand against a pole, or no. Take him away, and bear him.

Sey. Tell me wherein have I offended most? Have I affected wealth or honour? speak. Are my coffers fill'd up with extorted gold? Is my apparel sumptuous to behold? Whom have I injured, that ye seek my death? These hands are free from guiltless blood-shedding.

This breast from harbou'ring foul deceitful thoughts. O, let me live.

Cast. I feel remorse in myself with his words: but I'll strike him: he shall die, an he be but for pleading so well for his life. Away with him! he has a familiar under his tongue: he speaks not o' God's name. Go, take him away, I say, and strike off his head presently: and then break into his son-in-law's house, Sir James Cromer, and strike off his head, and bring them both upon two poles hither.

All. It shall be done. [prayers. Sey. Ah, countrymen! if when you make your God should be so obdurate as yourselves, How would it fare with your departed souls? And therefore let us prevent, and save our lives:

Cast. Away with him! and do as I command ye. [Execute some with Lord Sey. The proudest peer in the realm shall not wear a head on his shoulders, unless he pay me tribute; there shall not a maid be married, but she shall pay to me her maidenhead ere they have it: men shall hold of me in capite; and we charge and command that their wives be as free as heart can wish or tongue can tell.

Dick. My lord, when shall we go to Cheapside and take up commodities upon our bills?

Cast. Marry, presently.

All. O, brave!

Enter one with the heads.

Cast. But is not this braver? Let them kiss one another, for they loved well when they were alive. Now pay them again, lest they consult about the giving up of some more towns in France. Soldiers, defer the spoil of the city until night: for with these borne before us, instead of maces, will we ride through the streets and at every corner have them kiss. Away! [Exeunt.

SCENE VIII.—Southwark.

Alarum and retreat. Enter Cade and all his rabblement.

Cast. Up Fish Street! down Saint Magnus' Corner! kill and knock down! through the streets with a hatchet! [Sound a parish bell. What noise is this I hear? Dare any be so bold to sound retreat or parley, when I command them kill?

Enter Buckingham and old Clifford, attended.

Buck. Ay, here they be that dare and will disturb thee: Know, Cade, we come ambassadors from the king Unto the commons whom thou hast misled; And here proclaim free pardon to them all That will forsake thee and go home in peace.

Cle. What say ye, countrymen? will ye relent, And yield to mercy whilst it is offer'd you; Or let a rebel lead you to your deaths? Who loves the king and will embrace his pardon, Fling up his cap, and say 'God save his majesty!' Who rathet him and honours not his father, Henry the Fifth, that made all France to quake, Shake he his worship out and pass by. All. God save the king! God save the king!

Cast. What, Buckingham and Clifford, are ye so brave? And you, base peasants, do ye believe him? will you needs be hanged with your pardons about your necks? Hath my sword therefore broke through London streets, that you should leave me at the White Hart in Southwark? I thought ye would never have given out these arms till you had recovered your ancient freedom: but you are all recreants and dastards, and delight to live in slavery to the nobility. Let them break your backs with furthorns, take your houses over your heads, ravish your wives and daughters before your faces;
Of gallowglasses and stout kerns
Is marching hitherward in proud array,
And still proclaim'd, as he comes along,
His arms are only to remove from thee
The Duke of Somerset, whom he terms a traitor.
King. That fellow of my state, 'twixt Cade and York distress'd:
Like to a ship that, having 'scaped a tempest,
Is straightforward calm'd and board'd with a pirate;
But now is Cade driven back, his men dispersed;
And now is York in arms to second him.
I say, go, Buckingham. Upon my word, and yet,
And ask him what's the reason of these arms.
Tell him I'll send Duke Edmund to the Tower;
And, Somerset, we will commit thee hither,
Until his army be dismiss'd from him.

Som. My lord, I'll yield myself to prison willingly.
Or unto death, to do my country good.
King. In any case, be not too rough in terms;
For he is fierce and cannotbrook hard language.
Back, I will, my lord; and doubt not so to deal
As all things shall redound unto your good.
Kinc. Come, wife, let's in, and learn to govern better.
For yet may England curse my wretched reign.

[Flourish. Exeunt.]

SCENE X.—KENT. Iden's garden.

Enter Cade.

Cade. Fie on ambition! fie on myself, that have a sword, and yet am ready to famish! These five days have I hid me in these woods and durst not peep out, for all the country is laid for me: but now an I so haughty that I might have a lease of my life for a thousand years I could stay no longer. Wherefore, on a brick wall have I climbed into this garden, to see if I can eat grass, or pick a saltet another while, which is not amiss to cool a man's stomach this hot weather. And I think this word 'saltet' was born to do me good; for many a time, but for a saltet, my brain-pan had been eft with a brown bill: and many a time, when I have been dry and bravely marching, it hath served me instead of a quart pot to drink in; and now the word 'saltet' must serve me to feed on.

Enter Iden.

Iden. Lord, who would live turmoiled in the court,
And may enjoy such quiet walks as these?
This small inheritance my father left me
Contenteth me, and worth a monarchy.
I seek not to wax great by others' waning,
Or gather wealth. I care not, with what envy
Sufficeth that I have maintained my state
And sends the poor well pleased from my gate.

Cade. Here's the lord of the soil come to seize me for a strat, for entering his fee-simple without leave.
An villian! he will betray me, and get a thousand crowns of the king by carrying my head to him: but I'll make thee eat iron like an ostrich, and swallow my sword like a great pin, ere thou and I part.
Iden. Why, rude companion, whatsoever thou be,
I know thee not; why, then, should I betray thee?
Is't not enough to break in my garden?
And, like a thief, to come to rob my grounds,
Climbing my walls in spite of me the owner,
But thou wilt betray me with these saucy terms?
Cade. Brave thee! ay, by the best blood that ever was broached, and heard thee too. Look on me well: I am in my best mind, as well as ever: I do dismiss you to your several countries.

[stands.]
Iden. Nay, it shall ne'er be said, while England
That Alexander Iden, an esquire of Kent,
Took odds to combat a poor famish'd man.
Oppose thy steadfast-gazing eyes to mine,
See if thou canst outface me with thy looks:
Set limb to limb, and thou art far the lesser;
Thy hand is but a finger to my fist,
Thy edge but half the length of my truncheon;
My foot shall fight with all the strength thou hast;
And if mine arm be heaved in the air,
Thy grave is digg'd already in the earth.

As for words, whose greatness answers words,
Let this my sword report what speech forbears.

Come, By, and vent the trust that completes champion
That ever I heard! Steel, if thou turn the edge, or cut not out the burly-boned clown in chines of beef, ere thou sleep in thy sheath,
I beseech God on my knees thou mayst be turned to hobnails.

[Here they fight. Cade falls.]

Or, if I am slain! famine and other bath slain me;
let ten thousand devils come against me, and give me but the ten meals I have lost, and I'll defy them all.
Wither, garden; and be henceforth a burying-place to all that do dwell in this house, because the unconquered soul of Cade is fled.

ACT V.

SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI.

SCENE I.—Fields between Dartford and Black-heath.

Enter York, and his army of Irish, with drum and colours.

York. From Ireland thus comes York to claim his right,
And pluck the crown from feeble Henry's head:
Ring, bells, aloud; burn, bonfires, clear and bright,
To entertain great England's lawful king,
Ah! sancta majestas, who would not buy thee dear?
Let them obey that know not how to rule;
This hand was made to handle nought but gold,
I cannot give due action to my words,
Except a sword or sceptre balance it:
A sceptre shall it have, have I a soul,
On which I'll toss the flower-de-luce of France.

Enter Buckingham.

Whom have we here? Buckingham, to disturb me?
The king hath sent him, sure: I must dissemble.
Buck. York, if thou meanest well, I greet thee well. [greeting.]

York. Humphry of Buckingham, I accept thy Art thou a messenger, or come of pleasure?
Buck. A messenger from Henry, our dread liege,
To know the reason of these arms in peace;
Or why thou, being a subject as I am,
Against thy oath and true allegiance sworn,
Should raise so great a power without his leave,
Or dare to bring thy force so near the court.

York. [Aside] Scarce can I speak, my choler is so O, I could how up rocks and fight with dint, [great; I am so angry at these abject terms;
And now, like Ajax Telamonius,
On sheep or oxen could I spend my fury.
I am far better born than is the thing;
More like a king, more kindly in my thoughts;
But I must make fair weather yet awhile,
Till Henry be more weak and I more strong. —Buckingham, I prithee, pardon me,
That I have given no answer all this while:
My mind was troubled with deep melancholy.
The cause why I have brought this army hither
Is to remove proud Somerset from the king,
Seditious to his grace and to the state.

Buck. That is too much presumption on thy part:
But if thy arms be to no other end,
The king hath yielded unto thy demand:
The Duke of Somerset is in the Tower.

York. Upon thine honour, is he prisoner?
Buck. Upon mine honour, he is prisoner.
York. Then, Buckingham, I do dismiss my powers.
Soldiers, I thank you all; disperse yourselves;
Meet me to-morrow in Saint George's field,
You shall have pay and every thing you wish.
And let my sovereign, virtuous Henry,
Command my eldest son, may, all my sons,
As pledges of my fealty and love;
I'll send them all as willing as I live:
Lands, goods, horse, armure, any thing I have,
is his to use, so Somerset may die.

Buck. York, I commend this kind submission:
We twain will go into his highness' tent.

Enter King and Attendants.

King. Buckingham, dost York intend no harm to
That thus he marcheth with thee arm in arm? [us,
York. In all submission and humility
York doth present himself unto your highness.
King. Then what intends these forces thou dost bring?
York. To have the traitor Somerset from hence,
And fight against that monstrous rebel Cade,
Who since I heard to be discomfitted.

Enter Iden, with Cade's head.
Iden. If one so rude and of so mean condition
May pass into the presence of a king,
Lo, I present your grace a traitor's head,
The head of Cade, whom I in combat slew.
King. The head of Cade! Great God, how just
O, let me view his visage, being dead, [art Thou!
That living wrought me such exceeding trouble,
Tell me, my friend, art thou the man that slew him?
Iden. I was, an't like your majesty.
King. How art thou called? and what is thy de-
Iden. Alexander Iden, that's my name; [gree?
A poor esquire of Kent, that loves his king.
Buck. So please it you, my lord, 't were not amiss
He were created knight for his good service.

King. Iden, kneel down. [He kneels.] Rise up. We give thee this sword as a thousand marks, [knight.
And will that thou henceforth attend on us.
Iden. May Iden live to merit such a bounty,
And never live but true unto his liege! [Rises.

Enter Queen and Somerset.

King. See, Buckingham, Somerset comes with the Go, bid her hide him quickly from the duke. [queen:

481
Queen. For thousand Yorks he shall not hide his
But boldly stand and front him to his face. [head, York. How now! Is Somerset at liberty?
Then, York, unloose thy long-imprison'd thoughts,
And let thy tongue be equal with thy heart.
Shall I endure the sight of Somerset?
False king! why hast thou broken faith with me,
Knowing how hardly I can brook abuse?
King did I call thee? no, thou art not king,
Not fit to govern and rule multitudes,
Which last not, to nor cannot rule a traitor,
That head of thine doth not become a crown;
Thy hand is made to grasp a palmer's staff,
And not to grace an awful princely sceptre.
That gold must round enwrap these brows of mine,
Whose smile and frown, like to Achilles' spear,
Is able with the change to kill and cure.
Here is a hand to hold a sceptre up
And with the same to act controlling laws.
Give place: by heaven, thou shalt rule no more
O'er him whom heaven created for thy ruler.

Som. O monstrous traitor! I arrest thee, York,
Of false and conniving plot to dethrone a crown:
Obey, audacious traitor; kneel for grace.
York. Wouldst have me kneel! first let me ask
If they canbrook I bow a knee to man. [of these, Sirrah, call in my sons to be my bail:

Exit Attendant.

I know, ere they will have me go to ward;
They'll pawn their swords for my enchancement.
Queen. Call hither Clifford; bid him come again,
To say if that the bastard Boys of York
Shall be the surety for their traitor father.

Exit Buckingham.

York. O blood-besotted Neapolitan,
Outcast of Naples, England's bloody scourge!
The sons of York, thy better's in their birth,
Shall be their father's bail; and bane to those
That for my surety will refuse the boys!

Enter Edward and Richard.
See where they come: I'll warrant they'll make it good.

Enter old Clifford and his Son.

Queen. And here comes Clifford to deny their bail.
Cliff. Health and all happiness to my lord the King.
[Knock.
York. I thank thee, Clifford: say, what news with Ways, do not fright us with an angry look: [thee?
We are thy sovereign, Clifford, kneel again;
For thy mistaking so, we pardon thee.
Cliff. This is my king, York; I did not mistake;
But thou mistakest me much to think I do;
To Bedlam with him! is the man grown mad?

King. Ay, Clifford; a bedlam and ambitious humour
* Makes him oppose himself against his king.
Cliff. He is a traitor; let him to the Tower,
And charge away that factious pate of his.
Queen. He is arrested, but will not obey;
His sons, he says, shall give their words for him.
York. Will you not, sons?
Edw. Ay, noble father, if our words will serve.
Rich. And if words will not, then our weapons shall.
Cliff. Why, what a brood of traitors have we here!
York. Look in a glass, and call thy image so:
I am thy king, and thou a false-heart traitor,
Call hither to the stake my two brave bears,
That with the very shaking of their chains
They may astonish these fell-lurking curs:
Bil Salisbury and Warwick come to me.

Enter the Earls of Warwick and Salisbury.

Cliff. Are these thy bears? we'll bait thy bears to death,
And manacle the bearward in their chains,
If thou darest bring them to the baiting place.
Rich. Oft have I seen a hot o'erweening cur
Run back and bite, because he was withheld,
Who, by his fosterer d'right, was thoroughly raw.
Hath clapp'd his tail between his legs and cried:
And such a piece of service will you do,
If you oppose yourselves to match Lord Warwick.
Cliff. Hence, heap of wrath, foul indigested lump,
As crooked in thy manners as thy shape!
York. Nay, we shall heat you to your thorough anion.
Cliff. Take heed, lest by your heat you burn your- selves.
[how?

King. Why, Warwick, hath thy knee forgot to Old Salisbury, shame to thy silver hair,
Thou mad misleader of thy brain-sick son!
Wilt thou do grave a grave to find out war,
And shame thee with the view thereof?
Why art thou old, and want'st' experience?
Or wherefore dost abuse it, if thou hast it?
For shame! in duty bend thy knee to me
That bows unto the grave with milage age.
Sal. My lord, I have consider'd with myself
The title of this most renowned house,
And in my conscience do repute his grace
The rightful heir to England's royal seat.

King. Hast thou not sworn allegiance unto me?
Sal. I have. [an oath?

King. Canst thou dispense with heaven for such Sal. It is great sin to swear an oath, but Greater sin to keep a sinful oath.
Who can be bound by any solemn vow
To do a murderous deed, to rob a man,
To force a spotless virgin's chastity,
To reave the orphan of his patrimony,
To wring the widow from her customary right,
And have no other reason for this wrong
But that he was bound by a solemn oath?

Queen. A subtle traitor needs no sophister.

King. Call Buckingham, and bid him arm himself.
York. Call Buckingham, and all the friends thou
Mayest reserve for death or dignity. [hast.
Cliff. Their knightly arms shall warrant me as
War. You were best to go to bed and dream again,
To keep thee from the tempest of the field.
Cliff. I am resolved to bear a greater storm
Than any thou canst conjure up to-day;
And that I'll write upon thy bargains,
War. But, I'll know thy device by thy honest badge.
War. Now, by my father's badge, old Neville's crest,
The rampant bear chain'd to the ragged staff,
This day I'll wear allot my bargains,
As on a mountain top the cedar shows
That keeps his leaves in spite of any storm,
Even so the soul of thee with the Lord's approval.
Cliff. And from thy bargains I'll rend thy bear
And tread it under foot with all contempt,
Despite the bearward that protects the bear.

Y. Cliff. And so to arms, victorious father,
To quell the rebels and their complices.
Rich. I'll charity, for shame! speak not in spite,
For you shall sup with Jesus Christ to-night.

Y. Cliff. Foul stigmatism, that's more than thou canst tell.

Rich. If not in heaven, you'll surely spit in hell.

[Exeunt severally.

SCENE II. — Saint Albans's.

Alarums to the battle. Enter Warwick.
War. Clifford of Cumberland, 'tis Warwick calls:
And if thou dost not hide thee from the bear,
Now, when the angry trumpet sounds alarum
And dead men's cries do fill the empty air,
Clifford, I say, come forth and fight with me;
Proud northern lord, Clifford of Cumberland,
Warwick is hoarse with calling thee to arms.

Enter York.

How now, my noble lord! what, all afoot?
York. The deadly-handed Clifford slew my steed,
But match to match I have encounter'd him
And made a prey for carriages and crows
Even of the bonny beast he loved so well.

Enter old Clifford.

War. Of one or both of us the time is come.
York. Hold, Warwick, seek thee out some other
For myself must hunt this deer to death.
War. Then, nobly, York; 'tis for a crown thou fight'st.
As I intend, Clifford, to thrive to-day,
It grieves my soul to leave thee unassail'd. [Exit.
Cliff. What seest thou in me, York? why dost thou paus'd?
York. With thy brave bearing should I be in love,
But that thou art so fast mine enemy.
Cliff. Nor should thy prowess want praise and esteem.
But the day is shewn ignobly and in treason.
York. So let it help me now against thy sword
As I in justice and true right express it.
Cliff. My soul and body on the action both!
York. A dreadful lay! Address thee instantly.
[They fight, and Clifford falls.
Cliff. La fin commence, les œuvres.
York. Thus war hath given thee peace, for thou art still.
Peace with his soul, heaven, if it be thy will! [Exit.

Enter young Clifford.

Y. Cliff. Shame and confusion! all is on the rout;
Fear frames disorder, and disorder wounds
Where it should guard. O war, then son of hell,
Whom angry heavens do make their minister,
Throw in the frozen bosoms of our part
Hot coals of vengeance! Let no soldier fly.
He that is truly dedicate to war
Hath no self-love, nor Rich. loves himself.
Hath not essentially but by circumstance
The name of valor. [Seeing his dead father.

O, let the vile world end,
And the promised flames of the last day
Knit earth and heaven together!
Now let the general trumpet blow his blast,
Particularities and petty sounds
To cease! Wast thou ordain'd, dear father,
To lose thy youth in peace, and to achieve
The silver livery of advised age,
And, in thy reverence and thy chair-days, thus
To die in vulgar battle? Even at this sight
My heart is turn'd to stone: and while 'tis mine
It shall be stony. York not our old men spares;
'No more will I their babes; tears virginal!
Shall be to me even as the dew to fire,
And beauty that the tyrant oft reclaim'd
Shall to my flaming wrath be oil and flux.
Henceforth I will not have to do with pity:
Meet I an infant of the house of York,
Into as many goblets will I cut it
As wild Medea young Absyrtus did;
In cruelty will I seek out my fame.
Come then, my men, of one of Clifford's house:
As did . . . Enens old Andiches bear
So hear I thee upon my manly shoulders;
But then . . . Enens bare a living load.
Nothing so heavy as these woes of mine.

Alarum. Enter the Duke of York, Edward, Richard,
Norfolk, Montague, Warwick, and Soldiers.

War. I wonder how the king escaped our hands.
York. While we pursued the horsemen of the
He slily stole away and left his men: [north,
Whereat the great Lord of Northumberland,
Whose warlike ears could never brook retreat,
Cheer'd up the drooping army; and himself,
Lord Clifford and Lord Stafford, all abroad,
Charged our main battle's front, and breaking in
Were by the swords of common soldiers slain.

That this is true, Father, behold his blood. [blood,
Mont. And, brother, here's the Earl of Willshire's
Whom I encounter'd as the battles join'd.
Rich. Speak thou for me and tell them what I did.

[Throwing down the Duke of Somerset's head.
York. Richard hath best deserved of all my sons.
Nor. With your grace dead, my Lord of Somerset?
Rich. Such hope have all the line of John of Gaunt!

Rich. Thus do I hope to shake King Henry's head.
War. And so do I. Victorious Prince of York,
Before I see thee seated in that throne
Which now the house of Lancaster usurps,
I vouch by heaven these eyes shall never close.
This is the palace of the fearful king,
And this the regal seat: possess it, York;
For this is thine and not King Henry's heirs.
York. Assist me, then, sweet Warwick, and I will;
For hither we have broken in by force.

Nor. We'll all assist you; he that flies shall die.
York. Thanks, gentle Norfolk: stay by me, my lords;
And, soldiers, stay and lodge by me this night.

[They go up.

War. And when the king comes, offer him no violence,
Unless he seek to thrust you out perforce. [mwent.
York. The queen this day here holds her parliament:
But little thinks we shall be of her counsel:
Nor. But this, with words or blows here let us win our right.
Rich. Arm'd as we are, let's stay within this house.
York. War. The bloody parliament shall this be call'd,
Unless Plantagenet, Duke of York, be king.
Rich. And haughty Henry deposed, whose cowardice
Rich. Arm'd as we are, let's stay within this house.
York. War. The bloody parliament shall this be call'd,
Unless Plantagenet, Duke of York, be king.
Rich. And haughty Henry deposed, whose cowardice
Rich. Arm'd as we are, let's stay within this house.
York. War. The bloody parliament shall this be call'd,
Unless Plantagenet, Duke of York, be king.
Rich. And haughty Henry deposed, whose cowardice
Rich. Arm'd as we are, let's stay within this house.
York. War. The bloody parliament shall this be call'd,
ACT I.

THIRD PART OF KING HENRY VI.  SCENE I.

North. If I be not, heavens be revenge on me!
Clif. The hope thereof makes Clifford mourn in steel. [down:
West. What, shall we suffer this? let's pluck him
My heart is a red anger: I cannot brook it.
K. Hen. Be patient, gentle Earl of Westmoreland.
Clif. Patience is for poltroons, such as he:
He durst not sit there, had your father lived.
My gracious lord, here in the parliament
Let us assail the family of York.
North. To-morrow, then, my lord, be it so,
K. Hen. Ah, know you not the city favours them,
And they have troops of soldiers at their beck?
Exe. But when the duke is slain, 'tll quickly fly.
K. Hen. Far be the thought of this from Henry's
To make shambles of the parliament-house.
Cousin of Exeter, frowns, words and threats
Shall be the war that Henry means to use.
Thou factious Duke of York, descend my throne,
And kneel for grace and mercy at my feet;
I am thy sovereign.
York. I am the king. [of York
Exe. For shame, come down: he made thee Duke.
York. 'Twas my inheritance, as the earlbrain was.
Exe. Thy father was a traitor to the crown.
War. Exeuter, thou art a traitor to the crown.

In following this usurping Henry
Clif. What could he follow but his natural king?
War. True Clifford; and that's Richard Duke of York.
K. Hen. And shall I stand, and thou sit in my York. It must and shall be: content thyself.
West. Be Duke of Lancaster; let him be king.
North. He is both king and Duke of Lancaster;
And thou, the Lord protector, must maintain.
War. And Warwick shall disprove it. You forget
That we are those which chased you from the field
And slew your fathers, and with colours spread
March'd through the city to the palace gates.
North. Yes, Warwick, I remember it to my grief;
And, by his soul, thou and thy house shall rue it.
West. Plantagenet, of thee and these thy sons,
Thy kinsmen and thy friends, I'll have more lives
Than drops of blood were in my father's veins.
Clif. Urge it no more: lest that, instead of words,
I send thee, Warwick, such a messenger
As shall revenge his death before I stir. [threats
War. Poor Clifford! how I scorn his worthless York. Will you show our title to the crown?
If not, our swords shall plead it in the field.
K. Hen. What title hast thou, traitor, to the crown?
Thy father was, as thou art, Duke of York;
Thy grandfather, Roger Mortimer, Earl of March:
I am the son of Henry the Fifth,
Who made the Dauphin and the French to stoop
And seized upon their towns and provinces.
War. Talk not of France, slith thou hast lost it all.
K. Hen. The Lord protector lost it, and not I;
When I was crown'd I was but nine months old.
Rich. You are old enough now, and yet, methinks, you lose.
Father, tear the crown from the usurper's head.
Exe. Sweet father, do so; set it on your head.
Mont. Good brother, as thou lovest and honoured
est arms,
Let's fight it out and not stand cavilling thus.
K. Hen. Peace, thou! and give King Henry leave to speak.
[Exeunt Lords.
War. Plantagenet shall speak first: hear him,
And be you silent and attentive too,
For he that interrupts him shall not live. [throne,
K. Hen. Think'st thou that I will leave my kingly
Wherein my grandsire and my father sat?
No: first shall war unpeople this my realm;
And now in England to our heart's great sorrow
Shall be my winning-sheet. Why fainst you, lords?
My title's good, and better far than this.
War. Prove it, Henry, and thou shalt be king.
K. Hen. Henry the Fourth by conquest got the crown.
York. 'Twas by rebellion against his king.
K. Hen. [Aside] I know not what to say; my Horse's head thou speak'st traitor.
Tell me, may not a king adopt an heir?
York. What then?
K. Hen. An if he may, then am I lawful king.
For Richard, in the view of many lords,
Resign'd the crown to Henry the Fourth,
Whose heir my father was, and I am king.
York. He rose against him, being his sovereign,
And made him to resign his crown pertence.
War. Suppose, my lords, he did it unconstrained,
Think you 't were prejudicial to his crown?
Exe. No; for he could not so resign his crown
But that the next heir shall ascend to it.
York. Art thou against us, Duke of Exeter?
Exe. His is the right, and therefore pardon me.
York. Why whisper you, my lords, and answer not?
Exe. My conscience tells me he is lawful king.
K. Hen. [Aside] All will revolt from me, and turn to him.
North. Plantagenet, for all the claim thou lay'st,
Think not that Henry shall be so deposed.
War. Deseased he shall be, in despite of all.
North. Thou art deceived: 'tis not thy southern power.
Of Essex, Norfolk, Suffolk, nor of Kent,
Which makes thee thus presumptuous and proud,
Can set the duke up in despite of me.
Clif. King Henry, be thy title right or wrong,
Lord Clifford vows to fight in thy defence;
May that ground gape and swallow me alive,
Where I shall kneel to him that slew my father!
K. Hen. O Clifford, how thy words revive my heart!
What matter you, or what conspire you, lords?
War. Do right unto this princely Duke of York,
Or I will fill the horse with armed hands.
And over the chair of state, where now he sits,
Write up his title with usurping blood.
[He stamps with his foot, and the Soldiers show themselves.
K. Hen. My Lord of Warwick, hear me but one
Let me for this my life-time reign as king: [word
York. Confirm the crown to me and to mine heirs,
And thou shalt reign in quiet while thou livest.
King. I am content: Richard Plantagenet,
Enjoy the kingdom after my decease.
Clif. What wrong is this unto the prince your son?
War. What good is this to England and reign.
West. Base, fearful and despairing Henry!
Clif. How hast thou injured both thyself and us!
West. I cannot stand to hear these articles.
[Exeunt North. and West.
Clif. Come, cousin, let us tell the queen these news.
[Exit. North.
K. Hen. Alas, my Lord of Warwick, hear me but one
Let me for this my life-time reign as king: [word
North. And in bands for this unmanly deed!
Clif. In dreadful war must thou be overcome,
Or live in peace abandon'd and despised!
[Exeunt North., Clif., and West.
War. Turn this way, Henry, and regard them not.
Exe. They seek revenge and therefore will not
K. Hen. Ah, Exeter!
War. Why should you sigh, my lord?
K. Hen. Not for myself, Lord Warwick, but my Whom I unnaturally shall disinherit. [son, But be it as it may: I here entail The crown to thee and to thine heirs for ever; Conditionally, that here thou take an oath To cease to be, and as far as may be, To honour me as thine king and sovereign, And neither by treason nor hostility To seek to put me down and reign thyself. York. This oath I willingly take and will perform. War. Long live King Henry! Plantagenet, em- brace to him, and love, my dear sons! [Your, And long live thou and these thy for- crowns. Now York and Lancaster are reconciled, York. Farewell, my gracious lord; I'll to my castle. War. And I'll keep London with my soldiers, Norfolk, and I to Norfolk with my followers. Mont. And I into the sea from whence I came. [Exit York and his Sons, Warwick, Norfolk, Montague, their Soldiers, and Attendants. K. Hen. And I, with grief and sorrow, to the court. Enter Queen Margaret and the Prince of Wales. Exc. Here comes the queen, whose looks bewray I'll steal away. [her anger: K. Hen. Exeter, so will I. Q. Mar. Nay, go not from me: I will follow thee. K. Hen. Be patient, gentle queen, and I will stay. Q. Mar. Who can be patient in such extremities? Ah, wretched man! would I had died a maid, And never seen thee, never borne thee son, Seeing thou hast proved so unnatural a father! Hadst he deserved to lose his highbirth thus? Hadst thou but loved him, so well as I, Or felt that pain which I did for him once, Or nourish'd him as I did my blood, [there, Thou wouldst have left thy dearest heart-blood Rather than have made that savage duke thine heir And disinherited thine only son. Prince. Father, you cannot disinherit me: If you be king, why should not I succeed? [son: K. Hen. Pardon me, Margaret; pardon me, sweet The Earl of Warwick and the duke enformed me, Q. Mar. Enforced thee! art thou king, and wilt be forced? I shall not hear thee speak. Ah, timorous wretch! Thou hast undone thyself, thy son and me: And given unto the house of York such head As thou shalt reign but by their sufferance, To enail him and his heirs unto the crown, What is it, but to make thy subjection And creep into it far before thy time? Warwick is chancellor and the lord of Calais: Stern Falconbridge commands the narrow seas; The duke is made protector of the realm; And yet shall thou be safe? such safety finds The trembling lamb environed with wolves. Had I been there, which is a sorry woman, The soldiers should have toss'd me on their pikes Before I would have granted to that act. But then preferr'st thy life before thine honour: And seeing thou dost, I here divorce myself Both from thy table, Henry, and thy bed, Until that act of parliament be repeal'd Whereby my son is disinherited. The northern lords that have forsown thy colours Will follow mine, if once they see them spread; And spread they shall be, to thy foul disgrace And utter ruin of the house of York. Thus turn thee, Cambridge; let's away; Our army is ready; come, we'll after them. K. Hen. Stay, gentle Margaret, and hear me speak. Q. Mar. Thou hast spoke too much already: get thee gone. K. Hen. Gentle son Edward, thou wilt stay with me? Q. Mar. Ay, to be murder'd by his enemies. Prince. When I return with victory from the field I'll see your grace: till then I'll follow her. Q. Mar. If you know, you have no linger thus. [Exeunt Queen Margaret and the Prince of K. Hen. Poor queen! how love to me and to her son Hadh made her break out into terms of rage! Revenged may she be on that hateful duke, Whose naughty spirit, winged with desire, Will cost my crown, and give me this fingers thus. Tire on the flesh of me and of my son! The loss of those three lords torments my heart: I'll write unto them and entreat them fair. Come, cousin, you shall be the messenger. Exc. And I, I hope, shall reconcile them all. [Exeunt. SCENE II. — Soudal Castle. Enter Richard, Edward, and Montague. Rich. Brother, though I be youngest, give me leave. Edw. No, I can better play the orator. Mont. But I have reasons strong and forcible. Enter the Duke of York. York. Why, how now, sons and brother! at What is your quarrel? how began it first? [stren? Edw. No quarrel, but a slight contention. York. About what? [us: Rich. About that which concerns your grace and the crown of England, father, which is yours. York. Mine, boy? not till King Henry be dead. Rich. Your right depends not on his life or death. Edw. Now you are heir, therefore enjoy it now: By giving the house of Lancaster leave to breathe, It will out on you, father, in the end. York. I took an oath that he should quietly reign. Edw. But for a kingdom any oath may be broken: I would break a thousand oaths to reign one year. Rich. No: God forbid your grace should be for- York. I shall be, if I claim by open war. [sworn. Rich. I'll prove the contrary, if you'll hear me speak. York. Thou canst not, son; it is impossible. Rich. An oath is of no moment, being not took Before a true and lawful magistrate, That hath authority over him, that swears: Therefore, to arms! And, father, do but think How sweet a thing it is to wear a crown; Within whose circuit is Elysium And all that poets reign of bliss and joy. Why do we linger thus? I cannot rest Until the white rose that I wear be dyed Even in the lukewarm blood of Henry's heart. York. Richard, enough; I will be king, or die. Brother, thou shalt to London presently, And forthwith on Warwick to this enterprise. Thon, Richard, shall to the Duke of Norfolk, And tell him privily of our intent. You, Edward, shalt unto my Lord Cobham, With whom the Kentishmen will willingly rise: In them I trust; for they are soldiers, Witty, courteous, liberal, full of spirit. While you are thus employ'd, what resteth more, But that I seek occasion how to rise, And yet the king not privy to my drift, Nor any of the house of Lancaster? Enter a Messenger. But, stay: what news? Why comest thou in such post? lords Gorb. The queen with all the northern earls and intend here to beseech you in your castle:
ACT I.

THIRD PART OF KING HENRY VI. SCENE IV.

She is hard by with twenty thousand men; And therefore fortify your hold, my lord.
York. Ay, with my sword. What! think'st thou That we fear them?
Edward and Richard, you shall stay with me; My brother Montague shall post to London; Let noble Warwick, Cobham, and the rest, Whom we have left protectors of the king, With powerful policy strengthen themselves, And trust not simple Henry nor his oaths.
Mont. Brother, I go; I'll win them, fear it not: And this must humbly I do take my leave. [Exit.

Enter Sir John Mortimer and Sir Hugh Mortimer.
York. Sir John and Sir Hugh Mortimer, mine uncles, You are come to Sandal in a happy hour; The army of the queen mean to besiege us. [field. Sir John. She shall not need; we'll meet her in the York. What, with what five thousand men? Rich. Ay, with five hundred, father, for a need: A woman's general; what should we fear?
Edw. I hear their drums: let's set our men in order. And issue forth and bid them battle straight. York. Five men to twenty! though the odds be I doubt not, uncle, of our victory. [great, Many a battle have I won in France. Where shall the enemy battle? and where: Why should he? I do not now have the like success? [Alarum. Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Field of battle between Sandal Castle and Wakefield.

Alarums. Enter Rutland and his Tutor.
Ret. Ah, whither shall I fly to 'scape their hands? Ah, tutor, look where bloody Clifford comes!

Enter Clifford and Soldiers.
Clif. Chaplain, away! thy priesthood saves thy As for the brat of this accursed duke. [Life.
Whose father slew my father, he shall die.
Ret. And I, my lord, will bear him company.
Clif. Soldiers, away with him!
Ret. Ah, Clifford, murder not this innocent child, Let them be hated both of God and man! [Exit, dragged off by Soldiers.
Clif. How now! is he dead already? or is it fear That makes him close his eyes? I'll open them.
Ret. So looks the pent-up lion over the wretch That trembles under his devouring paws; And so he walks, insulting o'er his prey, And so he comes, to rend his limbs asunder, Ah, gentle Clifford, kill me with thy sword, And not with such a cruel threatening look. Sweet Clifford, I pray me speak before I die. I am too mean a subject for thy wrath!
Be thou revenged on men, and let me live.
Clif. In vain thou speakest, poor boy; my father's labour stopp'd the passage where thy words should enter.
Ret. Then let my father's blood open it again: He is a man, and Clifford, cope with him. [Thine Clif. Ha! I thy brethren here, their lives and Were not revengeous sufficient for me?
No, if I digg'd up thy forefathers' graves And hang their rotten coifs up in chains, It could not shame mine ere, nor ease my heart. The sight of any of the house of York Is as a fury to torment my soul; And till I root out their accursed line And leave not one alive, I live in hell. Therefore—[Lifting his hand.
Ret. O, let me pray before I take my death! To thee I pray; sweet Clifford, pity me!

Clif. Such pity as my rapier's point affords.
Ret. I never did thee harm; why wilt thou slay me?
Clif. Thy father hath.
Ret. But 'twas ere I was born. Thon hast one son; for his sake kill me, Lest in revenge thereof, sith God is just, He be as miserably slain as I.
Ah, let me live in prison all my days; And when I give occasion of offence, Then let me die, for now thou hast no cause.
Clif. No cause!
Thy father slew my father; therefore, die.
[Stabs him.
Ret. Di facient landis summa sit ista tua! [Dies.
Clif. Plantagenet! I come, Plantagenet! And this thy son's blood cleaving to my blade Shall rust upon my weapon, till thy blood, Congred! with this, do make me wipe off both.

SCENE IV.—Another part of the field.

York. The army of the queen hath got the field: My uncles both are slain in rescuing me; And all my followers to the eager foe Turn back and fly, like ships before the wind Or lambs pursu'd by hunger-starv'd wolves. My sons, God knows what hath bechanc'd them; But this I know, they have demean'd themselves Like men born to renown by life or death. Three times did Richard make a lane to me, And thrice cried 'Courage, father! fight it out!' And full as oft came Edward to my side, With purple falchion, painted to the hilt In blood of those that have demean'd themselves, And when the hardest warriors did retire, Richard cried 'Charge! and give not foot of ground!' And cried 'A crown, or else a glorious tomb! A sceptre, or an earthy sepulchre!'
With this, we charged again: but, out, alas! We boded again; as I have seen a swan With bloodless labour swim against the tide And spend her strength with over-matching waves.
Ah, hark! the fatal followers do pursue; And I am faint and cannot fly their fury; And were I strong, I would not shun their fury: The sands are number'd that make up my life; Here must I stay, and here my life must end.

Enter Queen Margaret, Clifford, Northumberland, the young Prince, and Soldiers.
Come, bloody Clifford, rough Northumberland, I dare your nameless fury to more rage: I am your butt, and I abide your shot.
North. Yield to our mercy, proud Plantagenet.
Clif. Ay, to such mercy as his ruthless arm, With downright payment, show'd into my father. My Plantagenet hath troubled from his hear, And made an evening at the noontide's press.
York. My ashes, as the phoenix, may bring forth A bird that will revenge upon you all: And in that hope I throw mine eyes to heaven, Scouring whate'er you can afflict me with. Why come you not? what! multitude, and fear?
Clif. So cowards fight when they can fly no further: So doves do peck the falcon's piercing talons; So desperate thieves, all hopeless of their lives, Breathe out invectives against the officers.
York. O Clifford, but bethink thee once again, And in thy thought do not turn my former time: And, if thou canst for blushing, view this face, And bite thy tongue, that slanders him with cowards: Whose brow hath made thee faint and fly ere this!
Act I. Third Part of King Henry VI. Scene IV.

Clif. I will not hourly with thee word for word, But juggle with thee blows, twice two for one.
Q. Mar. Hold, valiant Clifford! for a thousand causes
I would prolong awhile the traitor's life.
North. Hold, Clifford! do not honour him so much To prick thy finger, though to wound his heart: What value were it, when a cur doth grin, For one to thrust his hand between his teeth, When he might thrust him with his foot away? It is war's prize to take all advantages; And ten to one is to heap the impecual of war.
[They lay hands on York, who struggles.
Clif. Ay, ay, so strives the woodcock with the gin.
North. So doth the coy struggle in the net.
York. So triumph thieves upon their conquer'd booty;
So true men yield, with robbers so o'ermatch'd.
North. What would your grace have done unto him now?

Come, make him stand upon this molehill here, That we yet may sport with mountains on outstretched arms, Yet parted but the shadow with his hand. What! was it you that would be England's king? Was't you that revel'd in our parliament, And made a preachment of your high descent? Where are your mess of sons to back you now? The wanton Edward, and the lusty George? And where's that valiant crook-back prodigy, Dicky your boy, that with his grumbling voice Was wont to cheer his dad in mutinies? Or, with the rest, where is your darling Rutland?  York. York: I stain'd this napkin with the blood That valiant Clifford, with his rapier's point, Made issue from the bosom of the boy; And if thine eyes can water for his death, I give thee this to dry thy cheeks withal.
Ah, poor York! but that I hate thee deadly, I'should lament thy miserable state.
I prithee, grieve, to make me merry, York.
What, hath thy derry heart so parcell'd thine entrails That not a tear can fall for Rutland's death?
War! what art thou, patient? man? thou shouldst be mad; And I, to make thee mad, do mock thee thus,
Samp, rave, and fret, that I may sing and dance. The wound from thee would do the same;
York cannot speak, unless he wear a crown. A crown for York! and, lords, bow low to him;
Hold you his hands, whilst I do set it on.
[Putting a paper crown on his head.

Ay, marry, sir, now looks he like a king!
Ay, this is he that took King Henry's chair, And this is he was his adopted heir.
But how is it that great Plantagenet
Is crown'd so soon, and broke his solemn oath? As I bethink me, you should not be king Till our King Henry had shook hands with death.
And will you pile your head on Henry's glory, And rob his temples of the diadem.
Now in his life, against your holy oath? 0, 'tis a fault too unpardonable!
Off with the crown; and, with the crown, his head.
And, whilst we breathe, take time to do him dead.
Clif. This, too, of our sovereign, for my father's sake.
Q. Mar. Nay, stay; let's hear the orisons he makes.
York. She-wolf of France, but worse than wolves of France, Whose tongue more poisons than the adder's tooth!
How ill-becoming is it in thy sex To triumph, like an Amazonian trull, Upon their woes whom fortune captivates!
ACT II.

THIRD PART OF KING HENRY VI. SCENE I.

SCENE I.—A plain near Mortimer’s Cross in Herefordshire.

March. Enter Edward, Richard, and their powers.

Edward. I wonder how our princely father escap’d,
Or whether he be ‘scape’d away or no.
From Clifford’s and Northumberland’s pursuit:
He’s in the hands of the devil, whom I have heard the news:
Had he been slain, we should have heard the news;
Or had he ‘scape’d, methinks we should have heard
The happy tidings of his good escape.

How fares my brother? why is he so sad?
Rich. I cannot joy, until I be resolved
Where our right valiant father is become.
I saw him in the battle range about;
And watch’d him as he single Clifford forth.
He thought he bore him in the thickest troop
As doth a lion in a herd of neat;
Or as a bear, encompass’d round with dogs,
Who having pinch’d a few and made them cry,
The rest stood all aloof, and bark at him.
So far’d our father with his enemies;
So did his enemies my warlike father:
Methinks, ’tis prize enough to be his son.
See how the morning opes her golden gates,
And takes her far-famed sun.
How well resembles it the prime of youth.
Trimm’d like a younger prancing to his love!

Edward. Dazzle mine eyes, or do I see three suns?
Rich. Three glorious suns, each one a perfect sun;
Not separated with the racking clouds,
But sever’d in a pale clear-shining sky.
See, see! they join, embrace, and seem to kiss,
As if they vow’d some league inviolable:
Now are they but one lamp, one light, one sun.
In this the heaven figures some event. [heard of]
Edward. ’Tis wondrous strange, the like yet never
I think it cites us, brother, to the field,
That we, the sons of brave Plantagenet,
Each one already blazing by our meads,
Should notwithstanding join our lights together
And over-shine the earth as this the world.
Whate’er it bodes, henceforward will I bear
Upon my target three fair-shining suns.

Richard. Nay, bear three daughters: by your leave
I speak it,
You love the breeder better than the male.

Enter a Messenger.

But what art thou, whose heavy looks foretell
Some dreadful story hanging on thy tongue?
Mess. Ah, one that was a woful looker-on
When as the noble Duke of York was slain,
Your princely father and my loving lord!
Edward. O, speak no more, for I have heard too much.
Rich. Say how he died, for I will hear it all.
Mess. Environed he was with many foes,
And stood against them, as the hope of Troy
Against the Greeks that would have enter’d Troy.
But Hercules himself must yield to odds;
And many strokes, though with a little axe,
He woun’d and fell the hardest-tember’d oak.
By many hands your father was subdued;
But only slaughter’d by the irrefragable
Of unrelenting Clifford and the queen,
Who crown’d him the gracious duke in high despite,
Laugh’d in his face; and when with grief he wept,
Th’ justice of his case gave him to his cheeks
A napkin steep’d in the harmless blood
Of sweet young Ruthland, by rough Clifford slain:
And after many scorns, many foul taunts,
They took his head, and on the gates of York
They set the same; and there it doth remain,
The saddest spectacle that e’er I view’d.

Edward. Sweet Duke of York, our prop to lean upon,
Now thou art gone, we have no staff, no stay.
O Clifford, boisterous Clifford! thou hast slain
The flower of Europe for his chivalry!
And treacheriously hast thou vanquish’d him,
For hand to hand he would have vanquish’d thee.
Poor father, since my soul became a prison;
Ah, would she break from hence, that this my body
Might in the ground be closed up in rest!
For never henceforth shall I joy again,
Never, O never, shall I see more joy!

Rich. I cannot weep; for all my body’s moisture
Serves to quench my burning heart.
Nor can my tongue unloose my heart’s great burden;
For softsome wind that I should speak within.
Is kindling coals that fires all my breast, [quench.
And burns me up with flames that tears would
To weep is to make less the depth of grief.
Tears then for ladies; blows and revenge for me!
Richard, I bear thy name; I’ll venge thy death,
Or die renowned by attempting it. [thee
Edward. His name that valiant duke hath left with His dukedom and his chair with me is left.

Richard. Nay, if thou be that princely eagle’s bird,
Shew thy descent by gazing round on us;
For chair and dukedom through and through and join say;
Either that is thine, or else thou wert not his.

March. Enter Warwick, Marquess of Montague, and their army.

War. How now, fair lords! What fare? what news abroad?
[count
Rich. Great Lord of Warwick, if we should re-
Our baleful news, and at each word’s deliverance
Stab poniards in our flesh till all were told,
The words would add more anguish than the wounds.
O valiant lord, the Duke of York is slain!
Edward. O Warwick, Warwick! that Plantagenet,
Which held thee dearly as his soul’s redemption,
Is by the stern Lord Clifford done to death.
War. Ten days ago I drownd these news in tears;
And now, to add more measure to your woes,
I come to tell you things sith then I tell’d you.
After the bloody fray at Wakefield fought
Where your brave father breathed his latest gasp,
Tidings, as swiftly as the posts could run;
Were brought me of your loss and his depart.
I, then in London, keeper of the king,
Muster’d my soldiers, gather’d flock of friends,
And very necessary for the great fight, [queen.
March’d toward Saint Albans to intercept the Bearing the king in my behalf along;
For by my scouts I was advertised
That she was coming with a full intent
To dash our late decree in parliament
Touc’ning King Henry’s oath and your succession.
Short tale to make, we, at Saint Albans met,
Our battles join’d, and both sides fiercely fought;
But whether ’t was the coldness of the king,
Who look’d full gently on his warlike queen,
That robb’d my soldiers of their heated spleen;
Or whether ’t was report of her success;
Or more than common fear of Clifford’s rigour,
* Who thunders to his captives blood and death,
I cannot judge; but, to conclude with truth.
Their weapons like to lightning came and went;
Our soldiers? like the night-owl’s lazy flight;
Or like an enemy in a cloud,
Fell gently down, as if they struck their friends,
I cheer’d them up with justice of our cause.
With promise of high pay and great rewards.
But all in vain; they had no heart to fight.
And we in them no hope to win the day;
So that we fled; the king unto the queen;
ACT II.

THIRD PART OF KING HENRY VI.

SCENE II.

ScENE II.—Before York.

Flourish. Enter King Henry, Queen Margaret, the Prince of Wales, Clifford, and Northumberland, with drum and trumpets.

Q. Mar. Welcome, my lord, to this brave town:
You're the head of that arch-enemy [of York.
That sought to be encompass'd with your crown:
Doth not the object cheer your heart, my lord?
K. Hen. Ay, as the rocks cheer them that fear their wreck:
To see this sight, it racks my very soul.
Withhold revenge, dear God! 'Tis not my fault,
Nor willingly have I infringed my vow.
Clif. My gracious liege, here is too much lenity
And harmful pity must be laid aside.
To whom do lions cast their gentle looks?
Not to the beast that would usurp their den.
Whose hand is that which the forest bear doth lack?
Nor his that spoils her young before her face.
Who 'scapest the lurking serpent's mortal sting?
Not he that sets his foot upon her back.
The smallest frown will not be lost on that stern,
Which sometime they have used with fearful flight.
Make war with him that climb'd unto their nest.
Offering their own lives in their young's defence?
For shame, my liege, make them your precedent!
Were it not pity that this godly boy
Should lose his birthright by his father's fault,
And long hereafter say unto his child,
'What my great-grandfather and grandsire got
My careless father foolishly gave away'?
Ah, what a shame were this! Look on the boy;
And let his manly face, which promised
Success to honorable deeds,
To hold thine own and leave thine own with him.
K. Hen. Full well hath Clifford play'd the orator,
Interring arguments of mighty force.
But, Clifford, tell me, didst thou never hear
That things ill-got had ever bad success?
Nor that things fair which were ill-gotten?
Whose father for his hearding went to hell?
I'll leave my son my virtuous deeds behind;
And would my father had left me no more!
For all the rest is held at such a rate
As brings a thousand-fold more care to keep
Than in possession any jot of pleasure.
Ah, cousin York! would thy best friends did know
How it doth grieve me that thy head is here!
Q. Mar. My lord, cheer up your spirits; our foes are nigh,
And this soft courage makes your followers faint.
You promised knighthood to our forward son;
Unsheath your sword, and dub him presently.
Edw. kneel down.
K. Hen. Edward Plantagenet, arise a knight;
And learn this lesson, draw thy sword in right.
Prince. My gracious father, by thy kindly leave,
I'll draw it as apparent to the prince,
And in that quarrel use it to the death.
Clif. Why, that is spoken like a worship prince.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Royal commanders, be in readiness:
For with a band of thirty thousand men
THIRD

KING HENRY VI. SCENE III.

Comes Warwick, backing of the Duke of York;
And in the towns, as they do march along,
Proclaims him king, and many fly to him:
Darrail his battle, for they are at hand.
Cliff. I would your highness would depart the field:
That there were none of them who should be absent.
Q. Mar. Ay, good my lord, and leave us to our fortune.
K. Hen. Why, that's my fortune too; therefore North.
Be it with resolution then to fight.
Prince. My royal father, cheer these noble lords
And hearten those that fight in your defence.
Unsheath your sword, good father; cry 'Saint George!'

March. Enter Edward, George, Richard, Warwick, Norfolk, Montague, and Soldiers.

Edw. Now, perjured Henry! wilt thou kneel for And set thy diadem upon my head: [Grace, or hide the mortal fortune of the field?
Q. Mar. Go, rate thy minions, proud insulting
Becomes it thee to be thus bold in terms! [Boy!
Before thy sovereign and thy lawful king?
Edw. Ay, and old York, and yet not satisfied.
Cliff. I was adopted heir by his consent:
Since when, his oath is broke; for, as I hear,
You, that are king, though he do wear the crown,
Have caused him, by new act of parliament,
To blot out me, and put his own son in.

Who should succeed the father but the son?
Rich. Are you there, butcher? O, I cannot speak!
Cliff. Ay, crook-back, here I stand to answer thee,
Or any he the proudest of thy sort.
Rich. Ay, was I that killed young Rutland was,
Cliff. Ay, old York, and yet not satisfied.
Rich. For God's sake, lords, give signal to the fight.
War. What say'st thou, Henry, wilt thou yield the crown?
Q. Mar. Why, how now, long-tongued Warwick! dare you speak?
When you and I met at Saint Alban's last,
Your legs did better service than your hands.
War. Then I was my turn to fly, and now 'tis thine.
Cliff. You said so much before, and yet you fired.
War. 'T was not your valour, Clifford, drove me thence.
[Exit.
North. No, nor your manhood that doth not make Rich. Northumberland, I hold thee reverently,
Break off the parley; for scarce I can refrain
The execution of my big-swell heart.

Upon that Clifford, that cruel child-killer.
Cliff. I slew thy father, call'st thou him a child?
Rich. Ay, like a dastard and a treacherous coward,
As thou distil kill our tender brother Rutland;
But ere sunset I'll make thee curse the deed.
K. Hen. Have done with words, my lords, and hear me speak.
[Exeunt.
Q. Mar. Defy them then, or else hold close thy
til. I prithee, give no limits to my tongue:
I am a king, and privileged to speak.
Cliff. My liege, the wound that bared this meeting
Cannot be cured by words; therefore be still.
Rich. Then, executioner, unshackle thy sword:
By him that made us all, I am resolved
That Clifford's manhood lies upon his tongue.
Edw. Say, Henry, shall I have my right, or no?
A thousand men have broke their fasts to-day,
That ne'er shall dine unless thou yield the crown.
War. If thou deny, their blood upon thy head;
For York in justice puts his armour on. [right,
Prince. If that be right which Warwick says is
There is no wrong, but everything is right.
Rich. Whoever got thee, there thy mother stands;
For, well I wit, thou hast thy mother's tongue.
Q. Mar. But thou art neither like thy sire nor
But like a foul mis-shapen stigmatic, [daun;
Mark'd by the destinies to be avoided,
As venom toads, or hazards' dreadful stings,
Rich. Iron of Naples hid with English gift,
Whose father bears the title of a king,—
As if a channel should be call'd the sea;
Shamest that not, knowing whence thou art extrane.
To let thy tongue detect thy base-born heart?
Edw. A wisp of straw were worth a thousand crowns,
To make thee shameless callet know herself.
Helen of Greece was tamer far than thou,
Although thy husband may be Menelaus.
And ne'er was Agamemnon's brother wrong'd
By that false woman, as this king by thee.
His father revel'd in the heart of France,
And tamed the king, and made the dauphin stoop;
And had he match'd according to his state,
He might have kept that glory to this day;
But when he took a beggar to his bed,
And graced thy poor sire with his bridal-day,
Even then that sunshine brew'd a shower for him,
That wash'd his father's fortunes forth of France,
And Henry could sit on his crown at home.
For what hath breach'd this tumult but thy pride?
Hadst thou been meek, our title still had slept;
And we, in pity of the gentle king,
Had slip'd our chain until another age. [spring,
Geo. But when we saw our sunshine make thy
And that thy summer lend us no increase,
We set the axe to thy usurping root;
And though the edge hath something hit ourselves,
Yet, know thou, since we have begun to strike,
We'll never leave till we have hewn thee down,
Or bath'd thy growing with our heated bloods.
Edw. And, in this resolution, I defy thee;
Not willing any longer conference,
Since thou deniest the gentle king to speak.
Sound trumpets! let our bloody colours wave!
And either victory, or else a grave.
Edw. No, wrangling woman, we'll no longer stay:
These words will cost ten thousand lives this day. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. — A field of battle between Toun ton and Sabton, in Yorkshire.

Alarum. Excursions. Enter Warwick.

War. Forspent with toil, as runners with a race,
I lay me down a little while to breathe;
For strokes received, and many blows repaid.
Have robb'd my strong-knit sinews of their strength,
And spite of spite needs must: I rest awhile.

Enter Edward, running.

Edw. Smile, gentle heaven! or strike, ungentle death!
For this world crowns, and Edward's sun is clouded.
War. How now, my lord! what hap? what hope of good?
Enter George.

Geo. Our hap is loss, our hope but sad despair;
Our ranks are broke, and ruin follows us;
What counsel give you? whither shall we fly?
Edw. Bootless is flight, they follow us with wings;
And weak we are and cannot shun pursuit.

Enter Richard.

Rich. Ah, Warwick, why hast thou withdrawn thyself?
Thy brother's blood the thirsty earth hath drunk,
Broadly with the stealy point of Clifford's lance;
And in the very pangs of death he cried,
Like to a dismal clanger heard from far, 'Warwick, revenge! brother, revenge my death!'
So, underneath the belly of their steeds,
ACT II.  THIRD PART OF KING HENRY VI.  SCENE V.

That stain’d their fetlocks in his smoking blood,
The noble gentleman gave up the ghost.  [blood:]
War.  Then let the earth be drunken with our I'll kill my horse, because I will not fly.
When we stand like soft-hearted women here,
Waiting to be pushed by this quantity of doth rage;
And look upon, as if the tragedy
Were play’d in jest by counterfeit acting?
Here on my knee I vow to God above,
I'll never pause again, never stand still,
Till either death hath closed these eyes of mine.

Edw. O Warwick, I do bend my knee with thine,
And in this vow do chain my soul to thine!
And, ere my knee rise from the earth's cold face,
I throw my hands, mine eyes, my heart to thee,
Thou setter up and plucker down of kings,
Beseeching thee, if with thy will it stands
That to my foes this body must be prey,
Yet that thy brazen gates of heaven may ope,
And give sweet passage to my sinful soul!
Now, lords, take leave until we meet again,
Where'er it be, in heaven or in earth.  [Warwick.
Rich.  Brother, give me thy hand; and, gentle
Let another grace thee in my way.  I may say,
I, that did never weep, now melt with woe
That winter should cut off our spring-time so.
War.  Away, away!  Once more, sweet lords, farewell.

Geo.  Now, friends, let us all together to our troops,
And give them leave to fly that will not stay;
And call them pillars that will stand to us;
And, if we thrive, promise them such rewards
As victors wear at the Olympic games;
This may plant courage in their quelling breasts;
For yet is hope of life and victory.
Forsow, no longer, make we hence again.  [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Another part of the field.

Excursions.  Enter Richard and Clifford.

Rich.  Now, Clifford, I have singed thee alone:
Suppose this arm is for the Duke of York,
And this for Rutland; both bound to revenge,
Wert thou environ’d with a brazen wall.
Cliff.  Now, Richard, I am with thee here alone:
This is the hand that stabb’d thy father York;
And this the hand that slew thy brother Rutland;
And here the hand that cuttest off the head
And cheers these hands that stabb’d thy sire and brother
To execute the like upon thyself;
And so, have at thee!  [They fight.  Warwick comes; Clifford flies.

Rich.  Nay, Warwick, single out some other chase;
For I myself will hunt this wolf to death.  [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Another part of the field.

Alarum.  Enter King Henry alone.

King.  This battle fares like to the morning’s war,
When dying clouds contend with growing light,
What time the shepherd, blowing of his nails,
Can neither call it perfect day nor night.
Now sways it this way, like a mighty sea
Forced by the tide to combat with the wind;
Now sways it that way, like the selfsame sea
Forced to retire by fury of the wind;
Sometimes the fowls prevail, and then the wind;
Now one the better, then another best;
Both tugging to be victors, breast to breast,
Yet neither conqueror nor conqueror:
So is our battle, which this fell war
Here on this moorish hill will sin me down.
To whom God will, there be the victory!
For Margaret my queen, and Clifford too,
Have chid me from the battle; sweating both
They prosper best of all when I am there.

Would I were dead!  if God’s good will were so;
For what is in this world but grief and woe?
O God! methinks it were a happy life,
To be no better than a lonely swarm;
To sit up a lill, as I do now,
To carve and wish; let it be done; that by point,
Thereby to see the minutes how they run,
How many make the hour full complete;
How many hours bring about the day;
How many days will finish up the year;
How many years a mortal man may live.
When time is known of heaven it will divide the times;
So many hours must I tend my flock;
So many hours must I take my rest;
So many hours must I contemplate;
So many hours must I sport myself;
So many days my eyes have been with young;
So many weeks ere the poor fools will eat;
So many years ere I shall shear the fleece;
So minutes, hours, days, months, and years,
Pass’d over to the end they were created,
Would bring white hairs unto a quiet grave.

Ah, what a life were this!  how sweet! how lovely!
How noble in this inexpressible stage,
To shepherds looking on their silly sheep,
Than doth a rich embroidery canopysto
to kings that fear their subjects’ treachery?
O, yes, it doth; a thousand-fold it doth.
And to conclude, the shepherd’s lonely curds,
His cold hard drink out of his arms clasped,
This may plant courage in their quelling breasts;
For yet is hope of life and victory.
Forsow, no longer, make we hence again.  [Exeunt.

Alarum.  Enter a Son that has killed his father, dragging in the dead body.

Son.  Ill blows the wind that profits nobody.
This man, whom hand to hand I slew in fight,
May be possessed with some store of crowns;
And I, that happly take them from his bow.
May yet ere night yield both my life and them
To some man else, as this dead man deth me.
Whose is this?  O God! it is my father’s face,
Whom in this conflict I unwares have kill’d.
O heavy times, begetting such events!
From hence, as London by the high road bound
My father, being the Earl of Warwick’s son,
Came on the part of York, press’d by his master;
And I, who at his hands received my life,
Have by my hands of life bereaved him.
Pardon me, God, I know not what I did!
And pardon father, for I knew not thee!
My tears shall wipe away these bloody marks;
And no more words till they have wind’s fill.
K. Hen.  O pitious spectacle!  O bloody times!
Whiles hons war and battle for their dens,
Poor harrales lanes abide their eminity.
Weep, wretched man, and shed their tear for tear;
And let our hearts and eyes, like civil war, [grief.
Be blind with tears, and break o’ercharged with

Enter a Father that has killed his son, bringing in the body.

Feth.  Thou that so stoutly hast resisted me,
Give me thy gold, if thou hast any gold;
For I have bought it with an hundred blows,
But let me see: is this our foeman’s face?
Ah, no, no, no, it is mine only son!
Ah, boy, if any life be left in thee,
Throw thou this diadem of his father’s life
Showered arise, Blown with the windy tempest of my heart,
Upon thy wounds, that kill mine eye and heart!  [O. pity, God, this miserable age!
What stratagems, how fell, how butcherly,
Erroneous, mutinous and unnatural,
This deadly quarrel daily doth begot!
O boy, thy father gave thee life too soon,
And hast left thee this thy life to lament [grief!]
K. Hen. How above wo! grief more than common
O that my death would stay these ruthless deeds!
O, pity, pity, gentle heaven, pity!
The red rose and the white are on his face,
The fatal colours of our striving houses:
The one his purple blood right well resembles;
The other his pale cheeks, methinks, presents:
Wither one rose, and let the other flourish;
If you contend, a thousand lives must wither.
Son. How will my mother for a father's death
Take on with me and ne'er be satisfied!
Fath. How will my wife for slaughter of my son
Shed so much blood? methinks she will [changes
K. Hen. How will the country for this woful
Misthink the king and not be satisfied?
Son. Was ever son so rued a father's death?
Fath. Was ever father so bemoan'd his son?
K. Hen. Was every grief so griev'd for subjects' wo?
Much is your sorrow; mine ten times so much.
Son. I'll bear thee hence, where I may weep my fill.
[Exit with the body.
Fath. These arms of mine shall be thy winding-
My heart, sweet boy, shall be thy sepulchre, [sheet;
For from my heart thine image ne'er shall go;
My sighs, thy tomb shall be the hearse bell;
And so obsqueus will thy father be,
Even for the loss of thee, having no more,
As Prima was for all his valiant sons.
I'll bear thee hence; and let them light that will,
For I have murdered where I should not kill.
K. Hen. Sad-hearted men, much overgone with
Here sits a king more woful than you are. [care, Alarums: exercisins. Enter Queen Margaret, the Prince, and Exeter.
Prince. Fly, father, fly! for all your friends are fled,
And Warwick rages like a chafed bull;
Away! for death doth hold us in pursuit.
Q. Mar. Mount you, my lord; towards Berwick
post again:
Edward and Richard, like a brace of greyhounds
Having the fearful hares in sight,
With fiery eye sparkling for very wrath,
And bloody steel gisp'd in their ireful hands,
Are at our backs: and therefore hence anon.
Exe. Away! for vengeance comes along with them:
Nay, stay not to expostulate, make speed;
Or else ye shall not live a week longer. [ter:
K. Hen. Nay, take me with thee, good sweet Exe.
Not that I fear to stay, but love to go
Whither the queen intends. Forward; away!
[Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Another part of the field.
A loud alarum. Enter Clifford, wounded.
Cliff. Here burns my candle out; ay, here it dies,
Which, while it lasted, gave King Henry light.
O Lancaster, I fear thy overthrow
More than my body's parting with my soul!
My love and fear glued many friends to thee;
And, now I fall, thy touch commixture melts,
Unpairing Henry, strengthening misprisned York,
The common people swarm like summer flies;
And whither fly the gnats but to the sun?
And but Hesperos hold on ye, enemies?
O Phæbus, hast thou never given consent
That Phænix should check thy fiery steeds,
Thy burning car never had search'd the earth!
And, Henry, hast thou sway'd as kings should do,
Or as thy father and his father did,
Giving no ground unto the house of York,
They never then had sprung like summer flies;

I and ten thousand in this luckless realm
Had left no mourning widows for our death;
And then this day hath kept thy crown in peace.
For what doth cherish weeds but gentle air?
And what makes robbers bold but too much lenity?
Bootsless are plaints, and cruelless are my wounds;
No way to fly, nor strength to hold out tight:
The foe is merciless, and will not pity;
For that the kings I have伐'd and my foes are.
The air hath got into my deadly wounds,
And much effusion of blood doth make me faint.
Come, York and Richard, Warwick and the rest;
I stabb'd your fathers' bosoms, split my breast.

(He faints.

Alarum and retreat. Enter Edward, George, Richard,
Montague, Warwick, and Soldiers.
Exe. Now breathe we, lords: good fortune bids us pause,
And smooth the frowns of war with peacefull looks.
Some troops pursue the bloody-minded queen,
That led calm Henry, though he were a king;
As doth a sail, fill'd with a fretting gust,
Command an arsory to stem the waves.
But think you, lords, that Clifford fled with them?
War. No, 'tis impossible he should escape;
For, though before his face I speak the words,
A our brother Richard mark'd him for the grave:
And wheresoe'er he is, he's surely dead.
[Clifford groans, and dies.
Exe. Whose soul is that which takes her heavy leave?
Exe. See who it is: and, now the battle's ended,
If friend or foe, let him be gently used.
[ford.
Rich. Revolve that doom of mercy, for 'tis Clif.
Who not contented that he lopp'd the branch
In hewing Rutland when his leaves put forth,
But set his murdering knife unto the root.
From whence that tender spray did sweetly spring,
I mean our prince's father, Duke of York.
[head.
War. From off the gates of York fetch down the
Your father's head, which Clifford placed there;
Instead whereof let this supply the room:
Measure for measure must be answered. [house.
Exe. Bring forth that fatal scimitar to our
That nothing sung but death to us and ours;
Now death shall stop his dismal threatening sound,
And his ill-boding tongue no more shall speak.
War. I think his understanding is bereft.
Speak, Clifford, dost thou know who speaks to thee?
Dark cloudy death overspreads his hands of life,
And he nor sees nor hears us as we say.
Rich. O, would he did! and so perhaps he doth:
'Tis but his policy to counterfeit,
Because he would avoid such bitter taunts
Which in the time of death he gave our father.
Geo. If so be he be well, verdad with eager words.
Rich. Clifford, ask mercy and obtain no grace.
Exe. Clifford, repeat in bootless penitence.
War. Clifford, devise excuses for thy faults.
Geo. While we devise fell tortures for thy faults.
Rich. Thou didst love York, and I am son to York.
Exe. Thou provest it Rutland: I will ply thee.
Geo. Where's Captain Margaret, to fence you now?
War. Wast won.
War. They mock thee, Clifford; swear as thou
Rich. What, not an oath? may, then the world does harm.
When Clifford cannot spare his friends an oath,
I know by that he's dead; and, by my soul;
If this right hand would buy two hours' life.
That in all despite might rale at him, [blood
This hand should chop it off; and with the issuing
Still the villain whose unsubstantial thorn
York and young Rutland could not satisfy. [head.
War. Ay, but he's dead: off with the traitor's

And rear it in the place your father's stands,
And now to London with triumphant march,
There to be crowned England's royal king;
From whence shall Warwick cut the sea to France,
And ask the Lady Bonn for thy queen:
So shalt thou swear both these hands together;
And, having France thy friend, thou shalt not dread
The scatter'd age that hopes to rise again;
For though they cannot greatly sting to hurt,
Yet look to have them buzz to offend thine ears.
First will I see the coronation;
And then to Brittany I'll cross the sea,
To effect this marriage, so it please my lord.

ACT III.

WHILES Warwick tells his title, smooths the wrong,
Inferreth arguments of mighty strength,
And in conclusion wins the king from her,
With promise of his sister, and what else,
To strengthen and support King Edward's place.
O Margaret, thus 'twill be; and thou, poor soul,
Art then forsaken, as thou went'st forlorn!

K. Hen. More than I seem, and less than I was A man at least, for less I should not be;
And men may talk of kings, and why not I?

K. Hen. Why, so I am, in mind: and that 's enough.

K. Hen. But, if thou be a king, where is thy crown?

K. Hen. My crown is in my heart, not on my head;
Not deck'd with diamonds and Indian stones,
Nor to be seen; my crown is called content;
A crown it is that seldom kings enjoy.

K. Hen. But did you never swear, and break an oath?

K. Hen. Where did you dwell when I was King of England?

K. Hen. I was anointed king at nine months old;
My father and my grandfader were kings,
And you were sworn true subjects unto me:
And tell me, then, have you not broke your oaths?

First Keep. For we were subjects but while you were king.

K. Hen. Why, am I dead? do I not breathe a man?
Ah, simple men, you know not what you swear!
Look, as I blow this feather from my face,
And as the air blows it to me again.

K. Hen. Obeying with my mind when I do blow.

K. Hen. And yielding to another when it blows,
Commanded always by the greater gust;
Such is the lightness of you common men.
But do not break your oaths: for of that sin
My mild entreaty shall not make you guilty.
Go where you will, the king shall be commanded;
And be you kings, command, and I'll obey.

First Keep. We are true subjects to the king,
King Edward.

K. Hen. So would you be again to Henry,
If he were setteth as King Edward is. [the king's;
First Keep. We charge you, in God's name, and
To go with us unto the officers. [he obey'd:
K. Hen. In God's name, lead; your king's name

And what God will, that let your king perform; for he keeps the wind! [Aside to Grey.]

K. Edw. His hand then seized on by the conqueror; her suit is now to repose those hands; the worthy gentleman did lose his life.

Glo. Your highness shall do well to grant her suit; I was not born to deny it her. [Aside to Grey.]

K. Edw. It were disownour to deny it her.

Glo. [Aside to Grey.] Yea, is it so? [pause] I see the lady hath a thing to grant, Before the king will grant her humble suit. [Aside to Grey.] He knows the game; how true he keeps the wind! [Aside to Grey.] Silence!

K. Edw. Widow, we will consider of your suit; and come some other time to know our mind.

L. Grey. Right gracious lord, I cannot brook delay: May it please your highness to resolve me now; and what your pleasure is, shall satisfy me. [Aside to Grey.] Ay, widow? Then I will warrant you all your lands, An if what pleases him shall please you. Fight closer, or, good faith, you'll catch a blow. [Aside to Grey.] I fear her not, unless she shall chance to fall.

Glo. [Aside to Grey.] God forbid that! for he'll take advantages.

K. Edw. How many children hast thou, widow? tell me. [Aside to Grey.] I think he means to beg a child of her.

Glo. [Aside to Grey.] Nay, whips him then: he'll rather give her two.

L. Grey. Three, my most gracious lord.

Glo. [Aside to Grey.] You shall have four, if you'll be ruled by him.

K. Edw. 'Twere pity they should lose their father's lands.

L. Grey. Be pitiful, dread lord, and grant it then. K. Edw. Lords, give us leave: I'll try this widow's wit.

Glo. [Aside to Grey.] Ay, good leave have you; for you will have leave.

Till youth take leave and let me you to the crust. [Glo. and Grey retire.]

K. Edw. Now tell me, madame, do you love your children?

L. Grey. Ay, full as dearly as I love myself.

K. Edw. And would you not do much to do them good? [barn.]

L. Grey. To do them good, I would sustain some.

K. Edw. Then get your husband's lands, to do them good.

L. Grey. Therefore I came unto your majesty.

K. Edw. I'll tell you how these lands are to be got.

L. Grey. So shall you bind me to your highness!

K. Edw. What service wilt thou do me, if I give them? [to do.] K. Edw. What you command, that rests in me.

K. Edw. But you will take exceptions to my boon.

L. Grey, you gracious lord, except I cannot do it.

K. Edw. Ay, but thou canst do what I mean to ask. [commands.]

L. Grey. Why, then I will do what your grace.

Glo. [Aside to Grey.] He plays his hard; and much rain wears the marble.

Glo. [Aside to Grey.] As red as fire! nay, then her wax must melt. [bag?]

L. Grey. Why stops my lord? shall I not hear K. Edw. An easy task; 'tis but to love a king.

L. Grey. That's soon perform'd, because I am a subject. [give thee.]

K. Edw. Why, then, thy husband's lands I freely

L. Grey. I take my leave with many thousand thanks.

Glo. [Aside to Grey.] The match is made; she seals it with a curtsy. [mean.]

L. Grey. But stay thee, 'tis the fruits of love I L. Grey. The fruits of love I mean, my loving liege.

K. Edw. Ay, but, I fear me, in another sense. What love, think'st thou, I sue so much to get?

L. Grey. My love till death, my humble thanks, I sue to my prince.

That love which virtue begs and virtue grants.

K. Edw. No, by my troth, I did not mean such love. [you did.]

L. Grey. Why, then you mean not as I thought K. Edw. But now you partly may perceive my true mind.

L. Grey. My mind will never grant what I your highness aims at, if I aim aright.

K. Edw. To tell thee plain, I aim to lie with thee.

L. Grey. To tell thee plain, I had rather lie in prison.

K. Edw. Why, then thou shalt not have thy husband. L. Grey. Why, then mine honesty shall be my For by that loss I will not purchase them. [dower;]

K. Edw. Therein thou wrogest thy children mightily. [and me.]

L. Grey. Herein thy highness wrongs both them But, noble lord, this merry inclination Accord not with the sadness of my suit: Please you dismiss me, either with 'ay or 'no.' K. Edw. Ay, if thou wilt say 'ay' to my request; No, if thou dost say 'no' to my demand.

L. Grey. Then, no, my lord. My suit is at an end. Pull. [Aside to Grey.] The widow likes him not, she knits her brows.

Clar. [Aside to Grey.] He is the bluntest wooer in Christendom. [with modesty;]

K. Edw. [Aside] Her looks do argue her repel Her words do show her wit incomparable; All her perfections challenge sovereignty: One way or other, she is for a king; And she shall be my love, or else my queen.— Say that King Edward take thee for his queen? L. Grey. 'Tis better said than done, my gracious I am a subject fit to Jest withal. [lord;]

But far midst to be a sovereign. [thee.]

K. Edw. Sweet widow, by my state I swear to I speak no more than what my soul intends; And that is, to enjoy thee for my love.

L. Grey. And that is more than I will yield unto: I know I am too mean to be your companion; And yet too good to be your concubine. [queen.]

K. Edw. You civil, widow; I did mean, my L. Grey. 'T will grieve your grace my sons should call you father. [thee mother.

K. Edw. No more than when my daughters call Thou art a widow, and thou hast some children; And, by God's mother, I, being but a bachelor, Have other some; why, 'tis a happy thing To be the father unto many sons.

Answer no more, for thou shalt be my queen. [Aside to Grey.] The ghostly father now hath done his shift.

Clar. [Aside to Grey.] When he was made a shriver, it was for shift.

K. Edw. Brothers, you must what chat we two have had. [said;]

Glo. The widow likes it not, for she looks very K. Edw. 'You'll think it strange if I should Clar. To whom, my lord? [marry her.
K. Edw. Why, Clarence, to myself,
Glou. That would be ten days' wonder at the least.
Clari. That's a day longer than a wonder lasts.
Glou. By so much is the wonder in extremities.
K. Edw. Well, jest on, brothers: I can tell you
Her suit is granted for her husband's lands. [both
Enter a Nobleman.
Nob. My gracious lord, Henry your foe is taken,
And brought your prisoner to your palace gate.
K. Edw. See that he be conveyed unto the Tower:
And go we, brothers, to the man that took him,
To question of his apprehension.
Widow, go you along. Lords, use her honourably. [Exeunt all but Gloucester.
Glou. Ay, Edward will use women honourably.
Would he were wasted, narrow, bones and all,
That from his loins no hopefull branch may spring,
To cross me from the golden line I look for!
And yet, between my soul's desire and me—
The justful Edward's title buried—
Is Clarence, Henry, and his son young Edward,
And all the unlook'd for issue of their bodies,
To take their rooms, ere I can place myself:
A cold premeditation for my purpose!
Why, then, I do but dream on sovereignty;
Like one that stands upon a broach of hazard
And spits a far-off shore where he would tread,
Wishing his foot were equal with his eye,
And chides the sea that sunsers him from thence,
saying, he'll make it dry to have his way:
So do I wish the crown, being so far off;
And so I chide the means that keeps me from it;
And so I say, I'll cut the causes off,
Flattering me with impossibilities.
My eye's too quick, my heart o'erwastes too much,
Unless my hand and strength could equal them.
Well, say there is no kingdom then for Richard;
What other pleasure can the world afford?
I'll make my heaven in a lady's lap,
And deck my body in gay ornaments.
And witch sweet ladies with my words and looks.
O miserable thought! and more unlikely
Than to accomplish twenty golden crowns!
Why, love forswore me in my mother's womb:
And, for I should not deal in her soft laws,
She did corrupt frail nature with some bire,
To shrink mine arm up like a wither'd shrub;
To make an envious mountain on my back,
Where sits deformity to mock my body;
To show my meaner parts;
To disproportion me in every part,
Like to a chaos, or an unlick'd bear-whiped
That carries no impression like the dam.
And am I then a man to be beloved?
O monstrous fault, to harbour such a thought!
Then, since this earth affords no joy to me,
But to command, to check, to overbear such
As are of better person than myself,
I'll make my heaven to dream upon the crown,
And, whiles I live, to account this world but hell,
Until my mis-shaped trunk that bears this head
be round impaled with a glorious crown.
And yet I know not how to get the crown,
For many lives stand between me and home:
And I,—like one lost in a thorny wood,
That reads the thorns and is rent with the thorns,
Seeking a way and straying from the way;
Not knowing how to find it or where
But toil desperately to find it out,—
Torment myself to catch the English crown:
And from that torment I will free myself,
Or heave my way out with a bloody axe.
Why, I can smile, and murder whiles I smile,
And every "content" can set the graver in my heart,
And wet my cheeks with artificial tears.

And frame my face to all occasions.
I'll drown more sailors than the mermaid shall;
I'll slay more gazers than the basilisk;
I'll play the fool, or as it were, the fool;
Deceive more sily than Ulysses could,
And, like a Simon, take another Troy.
I can add colours to the chameleon,
Change shapes with Proteus for advantages,
And set the murderous Machiavel to school.
Can I do this, and cannot get a crown?
Tut, were it farther off, I'll pluck it down. [Exit.

SCENE III.—France. The King's palace.

Flourish. Enter Louis the French King, his sister Boni, his Admiral, called Bourbon: Prince Edward, Queen Margaret, and the Earl of Oxford. Lewis sits, and riseth up again.

K. Lew. Fair queen of England, worthy Margaret,
Sit down with us: it ill befits thy state
And birth, that thou shouldst stand while Lewis doth sit.
Bourbon. Q. Mar. No, mighty King of France: now Mar-
Minster strike her sail and learn awhile to serve
Where kings command. I was, I must confess,
Great Albion's queen in former golden days:
But now mischance hath trod my title down,
And with my hand, when I would have laid my hand on Where I must take like seat unto my fortune,
And to my humble seat conform myself.
K. Lew. Why, say, fair queen, whence springs this deep despair?
Q. Mar. From such a cause as fills mine eyes with tears
And stops my tongue, while heart is drown'd in
K. Lew. Whate'er it be, be thou still like thyself,
And sit thee by our side: [Seats her by him] yield not thy neck
To fortune's yoke, but let thy dauntless mind
Still ride in triumph over all mischance.
Be plain, Queen Margaret, and tell thy grief;
It shall be eased, if France can yield relief. [thoughts
Q. Mar. Those gracious words revive my drooping
And give my tongue-tied sorrows leave to speak.
Now, therefore, be it known to noble Lewis,
That Henry sole possessor of my love,
Is of a king become a banish'd man,
And forced to live in Scotland a forlorn;
While proud ambitious Edward Duke of York
Usurps the regal title and the seat
Of England's true-anointed lawful king.
This is the cause that this desolate,
With this my son, Prince Edward, Henry's heir,
Am come to crave thy just and lawful aid;
And if thou fail us, all our hope is done:
Scotland hath will to help, but cannot help;
Our people and our peers are both misled,
Our treasure seized, our soldiers put to flight,
And, as thou seest, ourselves in heavy plight. [storm,
K. Lew. Renowned queen, with patience, calm the While we bethink a means to break it off. [fear.
Q. Mar. The more we stay, the stronger grows our
K. Lew. The more I stay, the more I'll succour thee.
Q. Mar. O, but impatience waiteth on true sorrow.
And see where comes the breeder of my sorrow!

Enter Warwick.

K. Lew. What's he approacheth boldly to our presence?
[friend.
Q. Mar. The Earl of Warwick, Edward's greatest
K. Lew. Welcome, brave Warwick! What brings thee to France? [He descends. She riseth.
Q. Mar. Ay, now begins a second storm to rise;
For this is he that moves both wind and tide.
Wor. From worthy Edward, King of Albion,
My lord and sovereign, and thy sworn friend,
I come, in kindness and unfeigned love,
ACT III.  THIRD PART OF KING HENRY VI.  SCENE III.

First, to do greetings to thy royal person; And then to crave a league of amity; And lastly, to confirm that amity With nuptial knot, if thou vouchsafe to grant That virtuous Lady Bona, thy fair sister, To Edward's king in lawful marriage.

Q. Mar. [Aside] If that go forward, Henry's hope is done. [king's behalf.]

War. [To Bona] And, gracious madam, in our I am commanded, with your leave and favour, Humbly to kiss your hand and with my tongue To tell the passion of my sovereign's heart: Whereby, in signal conquer, I do beseech you, Hath placed thy beauty's image and thy virtue.

Q. Mar. King Lewis and Lady Bona, hear me Before you answer Warwick. His demand [speak,] Springs not from Edward's well-meant honest love, But from deceit bred by necessity; For how can tyrants safely govern home, Unless abroad they purchase great alliance? To prove him tyrant this reason may suffice, That Henry liveth still; but were he dead, Yet here Prince Edward stands, King Henry's son. Look, therefore, Lewis, that by this league and marry not thy daughter to the French prince; [rage For though usurers sway the rule awhile, Yet heavens are just, and time suppresseth wrongs.

War. Injurious Margaret! And why not queen? War. Because thy father Henry did usurp, And thou no more art prince than she is queen.

Q. Mar. Then Warwick dissuails great John of Gaunt, Which did subdue the greatest part of Spain; And, after John of Gaunt, Henry the Fourth, Whose wisdom was a mirror to the wisest; And, after that wise prince, Henry the Fifth, Who was of all princes the wisest; From these our Henry lineally descends. [course.]

You told not how Henry the Sixth hath lost All that which Henry the Fifth had gotten? Methinks these peers of France should smile at that. But for the rest, you tell a pedigree Of three score and two years; a silly time To make prescription for a kingdom's worth. [liege.

Q. Mar. Call him my king by whose injurious doom My elder brother, the Lord Aubrey Vere, Was done to death? and more than so, my father, Even in the downfall of his moulder'd years, While nature brought him to the door of death. No, Warwick, no; while life upholds this arm, This arm upholdeth the house of Lancaster.

War. And I the house of York. [Oxford, Q. Mar. Quene Margaret, Prince Edward, and Withal safe, at our request, to stand aside, While I use further conference with Warwick.]

[They stand aloof.]

Q. Mar. Heavens grant that Warwick's words bewitch him not! [conscience.

Q. Mar. Now, Warwick, tell me, even upon thy Is Edward your true king? for I were loath To break the compact of the lawful chosen. War. Thereon I pawn my credit and mine honour. Q. Mar. But is he gracious in the people's eye? War. The more that Henry was unfortunate. Q. Mar. Then further, all dissembling set aside, Tell me for truth the measure of his love Unto the sister Bona.

War. Such it seems

As may be seen a monarch like himself. Myself have often heard him say and swear That this his love was an eternal plant, Whereof the root was fix'd in virtue's ground, The leaves and fruit maintain'd with beauty's sun. Exempt from envy, but not from disdain, Unless the Lady Bona quit his pain.

K. Lew. Now, sister, let us hear your firm resolve. Q. Bona. Yet see, by justice and your father's will, shall be mine: [To War.] Yet I confess that often ere this day. When I have heard your king's desert recounted, Mine ear hath tempted judgment to desire.

K. Lew. Then, Warwick, thus: our sister shall be Edward's.

And now forthwith shall articles be drawn Touching the jointure that your king must make, Which with her dowry shall be counterpoised.

Draw near, Queen Margaret, and be a witness That Bona shall be wife to the English king.

Prince. To Edward, but not to the English king. Q. Mar. Destructive Warwick! it was thy device By this alliance to make void my suit: Before thy coming Lewis was Henry's friend.

K. Lew. And still is friend to him and Margaret: But if your title to the crown be weak, As may appear by Edward's good success, Then reason is but little brought to move you. From giving aid which late I promised. Yet shall you have all kindness at my hand That your estate requires and mine can yield.

War. Henry now lives in Scotland at his ease, Where having nothing, nothing can be lose, And as for you yourself, our dauntless queen, You have a father able to maintain you; And better 'twere you troubled him than France. Q. Mar. Peace, impatient and shameless War-wick, peace, Proud setter up and puller down of kings! Who will not henceforth listen to your talk and tears, Both full of truth, I make King Lewis behold Thy sly conveyance and thy lord's false love; For both of you are birds of selfsame feather.

K. Lew. Warwick, this is some post to us or thee.

Enter a Post.

Post. [To War.] My lord ambassador, these letters are for you, Sent from your brother, Marquess Montague: [To Lewis] These from our king unto your majesty: [To Margaret] And, madam, these for you; from whom I know not. [They all read their letters.

Q. Mar. Oxforl. I like it well that our fair queen and mistress Smiles at her news, while Warwick browses at his. Prince. Nay, mark how Lewis stamps, as he were I hope all's for the best. [sobbed.]

Q. Mar. Mine, such as fill my heart with unhoped War. Mine, full of sorrow and heart's discontent. K. Lew. What! has your king married the lady And now, to soothe thy forgery and his? [grey.]

Q. Mar. Sends me a reason to persuade thee patience? Is this the alliance that he seeks with France? Dare he presume to scorn us in this manner? Q. Mar. I told your majesty as much before: This proved Edward's love and Warwick's honesty. War. King Lewis, I here protest, in sight of And by the heaven of heavenly bliss, [heaven, That I am clear from this misdeed of Edward's, No more my king, for he dishonests me, But most himself, if he could see his shame. Did I forget that by the house of York My father came unlimily to his death? Did I let pass the time, or was my grace? Did I impale him with the regal crown? Did I put Henry from his native right? And am I guerdon'd at the last with shame?
Shame on himself! for my desert is honour: And to repair my honour lost for him, I here renounce him and return to Henry. My noble queen, let former grudges pass, And henceforth I am thy true servitor; I will revenge his wrong to Lady Bona And replant Henry in his former state.

Q. Mar. Warwick, these words have turn'd my hate to love:\nAnd I forgive and quite forget old faults,\And joy that thou becomest King Henry's friend.\War. So much his friend, ay, as his unfriend,\That if King Lewis von me he'll furnish us\With some few bands of chosen soldiers, I'll undertake to land them on our coast\And force the tyrant from his seat by war,\'Tis not his new-made bride shall scourc him:\And as for Clarence, as my letters tell me, He's very likely now to fall from him.\For matching more for wanton lust than honour,\Or than for strength and safety of our country.

Bona. Dear brother, how shall Bona be revenged\But by thy help to this distressed queen? [Hive,\Q. Mar. Renowned prince, how shall poor Henry\Unless thou rescue him from foul despair? Bona. My quarreland this English queen's are one.\War. And mine, fair Lady Bona, joins with yours.\K. Lew. And mine with hers, and thine, and Mar.\Therefore at last I firmly am resolved [garet's.\You shall have aid.

Q. Mar. Let me give humble thanks for all at once.\K. Lew. Then, England's messenger, return in\And tell false Edward, thy supposed king, [post,\That Lewis of France is sending over masquers\To revel with him and his new bride: Thou seest what 's past, go fear thy king withal.\K. Lew. Told him he, in goodly proof a widow,\I'll wear the willow garland for his sake. [shortly,\Q. Mar. Tell him, my mourning weeds are laid\And I am ready to put armour on. [aside]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—London. The palace.

Enter Gloucester, Clarence, Somerset, and Montague.

Glo. Now tell me, brother Clarence, what think\Of this new marriage with the Lady Grey? [you\Hath not our brother made a worthy choice?\Clar. Alas, you know, 'tis far from hence to\France:
How could he stay till Warwick made return?\Son. My lords, forbear this talk; here comes the\Glo. And his well-chosen bride. [king,\Clar. I mind to tell him plainly what I think.

Flourish. Enter King Edward, attended; Lady Grey, as Queen; Pembroke, Stafford, Hastings, and others.

K. Edf. Now, brother of Clarence, how like you\our choice,\That you stand pensive, as half malecontent?\Clar. But, Warwick, Thou and Oxford, with five thousand men,\Shall cross the seas, and bid false Edward battle;\And, as occasion serves, this noble queen\And prince shall follow with a fresh supply.\Yet, ere thou go, but answer me one doubt,\What pledge have we of thy firm loyalty?\War. This shall assure my constant loyalty,\That if the chieftain that to the young princes agree,\I'll join mine eldest daughter and my joy\To him forthwith in holy wedlock bands.

Q. Mar. Yes, I agree, and thank you for your\Son Edward, she is fair and virtuous, [motion.\Therefore delay not, give thy hand to Warwick;\And, with thy hand, thy faith irrevocable,\That only Warwick's daughter shall be thine. [it;\Prince. Yes, I accept her, for she well deserves\And here, to pledge my vow, I give my hand.\[He gives his hand to Warwick.

K. Lew. Why stay we now? These soldiers shall\be levied,\And then, Lord Bourbon, our high admiral,\Shall waft them over with our royal fleet.\I long till Edward full by war's mischance,\For mocking marriage with a dame of France. [Exeunt all but Warwick.

War. I came from Edward as ambassador,\But I return his sworn and mortal foe:\ Matter of marriage was the charge he gave me,\But dreadful war shall answer his demand.\Had he none else to make a stale but me?\Then none but I shall turn his jest to sorrow.\It was the last that rais'd our hopes to be,\The crown, and I'll be chief to bring him down again;\Not that I pity Henry's misery,\But seek revenge on Edward's mockery. [Exit.
K. Edw. Ay, what of that? it was my will and grant; And for the once my will shall stand for law.

Glou. And yet methinks your grace hath not done To give the heir and daughter of Lord Scales [wel, Unto the brother of your loving bride; She better would have fitted me or Clarence:

But in your bride you bury brotherhood; [his heir

Clar. Or else you would not have bestow'd the Of the Lord Bonville on your new wife's son, And leave your brothers to go speed elsewhere.

K. Edw. Alas, poor Clarence! is it for a wife That thou art malcontent? I will provide thee.

Clar. In choosing for yourself, you show'd your judgment to all that were to think on it. Which being shallow, you shall give me leave To play the broker in mine own behalf; And to that end I shortly mind to leave you.

K. Edw. Leave me, or tarry, Edward will be king, And not be tied unto his brother's will.

Q. Eliz. My lords, before it pleased his majesty To raise my state to title of a queen, Do me but right, and you must all confess That I was not ignoble of descent:

And meaner than myself have had like fortune. But as this title honours me and mine, So you all must, to whom I would be pleasing, Doth cloud my joys with danger and with sorrow.

K. Edw. My love, forbear to fawn upon their frowns: What danger or what sorrow can befal thee, So long as Edward is thy constant friend, And their true sovereign, whom they must obey? Nay, whom they shall obey, and love thee too, Unless they seek for hatred at my hands:

Which if they do, yet will I keep thee safe, And they shall feel the vengeance of my wrath. Glou. I hear, yet say not much, but think the more. [Aside.}

Enter Post.

K. Edw. Now, messenger, what letters or what From France?

[news

Post. My sovereign liege, no letters; and few words, But such as I, without your special pardon, Dare not relate.

K. Edw. Go to, we pardon thee: therefore, in brief, Tell me their words as near as thou canst guess them. What answer makes King Lewis unto our letters?

Post. At my depart, these were his very words: 'Go tell false Edward, thy supposed king, That Lewis is far from being over powrs, To revel it with him and his new bride.' [Henry.

K. Edw. Is Lewis so brave? belike he thinks me But what said Lady Bona to my marriage?

Post. These were her words, utter'd with mild disdain: 'Tell him, in hope he'll prove a widower shortly, I'll wear the willow garland for his sake.'

K. Edw. I blame not her, she could say little less; She had the wrong. But what said Henry's queen? For I have heard that she was there in place.

Post. 'Tell him,' quoth she, 'my mourning weeds And their ready to put armour on.' [are done,

K. Edw. Belike she means to play the Amazon.

But what said Warwick to these injuries?

Post. He, more incensed against your majesty Than all the rest, discharged me with these words: 'Tell him from me that he hath done me wrong, And therewith will I uncrown him ere he long.'

K. Edw. If I might rest the traitor breathe out so proud words?

Well, I will arm me, being thus forewarn'd: They shall have wars and pay for their presumption. But say, is Warwick friends with Margaret?

Post. My sovereign; they are so link'd in friendship,

K. Edw. That young Prince Edward marries Warwick's

Clar. Belike the elder; Clarence will have the younger, Now, brother king, farewell, and sit you fast, For I will hence to Warwick's other daughter: That, though I want a kingdom, yet in marriage I may not prove inferior to yourself.

You that love me and Warwick, follow me. [Exit Clarence, and Somerset follows.

Glou. [Aside.] Not I: My thoughts aim at a further matter; I Stay not for the love of Edward, but the crown.

K. Edw. Clarence and Somerset both gone to Warwick!

Yet am I arm'd against the worst can happen; And haste is needful in this desperate case. Pembroke and Stafford, you in our behalf Go levy men, and make prepare for war: They are already, or quickly will be landed: Myself in person will straight follow you. [Exeunt Pembroke and Stafford.

But, ere I go, Hastings and Montague, Resolve my doubt. You twain, of all the rest, Are near to Warwick by blood and by alliance: Tell me if you love Warwick more than me? If it be so, then both depart to him;

I rather wish you foes than hollow friends: But if you mind to hold your true obedience, Give me assurance with some friendly vow, That I may never have you in suspect.

Mont. So God help Montague as he proves true!

Hast. And Hastings as he favours Edward's cause!

K. Edw. Now, brother Richard, will you stand by us?

[Exeunt.

Glou. Ay, in despite of all that shall withstand and

K. Edw. Why, so! then am I sure of victory.

Now therefore let us hence; and lose no hour, Till we meet Warwick with his foreign power. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. — A plain in Warwickshire. Enter Warwick and Oxford, with French soldiers.

War. Trust me, my lord, all hitherto goes well; The common people by numbers swarm to us.

Enter Clarence and Somerset.

But see where Somerset and Clarence comes! Speak suddenly, my lords, are we all friends?

Clar. Fear not that, my lord.

War. Then, gentle Clarence, welcome unto War- rick: And welcome, Somerset: I hold it cowardice To rest mistrustful where a noble heart Hath pawn'd an open hand in sign of love; Else might I think that Clarence, Edward's brother, Were but a feigned friend to our proceedings: But welcome, sweet Clarence; my daughter shall be thine, And now what rests but, in night's coverture, Thy brother being carelessly encamp'd, His soldiers lurking in the towns about, And but attended by a simple guard, We may surprise and take him at our pleasure? Our scouts have found the adventure very easy: That as Ulysses and stout Diomede With slight and manhood stole to Rhesus' tents, And brought from thence the Thracian fatal steeds, So we, well cover'd with the night's black mantle, At unawares may beat down Edward's guard And seize himself; I say not, slay him, For I intend but only to surprise him.

You that will follow me to this attempt, Applaud the name of Henry with your leader.

[They all cry, 'Henry!'

War. Why, then, let's on our way in silent sort: For Warwick and his friends, God and Saint George! [Exeunt.

Second Watch. Stay, or thou diest! [Warwick and the rest cry all, 'Warwick! Warwick! Fly, flying, Arm! arm!' Warwick and the rest following them.

The drum playing and trumpet sounding, re-enter Warwick, Somerset, and the rest, bringing the King out to his going, sitting in a chair. Richard and Hastings fly over the stage.

Som. What are they that fly there?

War. Richard and Hastings: let them go; here is

The duke, [parted,

K. Edw. The duke! Why, Warwick, when we

Thou call'st me king?

War. Ay, but the case is alter'd:

When you disgraced me in my embassade,

Then I degraded you from being king,

And come now to create you Duke of York.

Alas! how should you govern any kingdom,

That know not how to use ambassadors,

Nor how to be contented with one wife,

Nor how to use your brothers brotherly,

Nor how to study for the people's welfare,

Nor how to shroud yourself from enemies? [too?

K. Edw. Yea, brother of Clarence, art thou here,

Nay, then I see that Edward needs must down.

Yet, Warwick, in despite of all mischance,

Of thee thyself and all thy complices,

Edward will always bear himself as king:

Though fortune's malice overthrow my state,

My mind exceeds the compass of her wheel.

War. Then, for his mind, be Edward England's

Duke, and shew him his crown.

But Henry now shall wear the English crown,

And be true king indeed, thou but the shadow.

My Lord of Somerset, at my request,

See that forthwith Duke Edward be convey'd

Unto my brother, Archbishop of York.

When I have fought with Pembroke and his fellows, I'll follow you, and tell what answer

Lewis and the Lady Bona send to him.

Now, for a while farewell, good Duke of York.

[They bid him out forcibly.

K. Edw. What fates impose, that men must needs

It boots not to resist both wind and tide. [abide;

Oct. What now remains, my lords, for us to do

But march to London with our soldiers? [do;

War. Ay, thus the first things we have to To free King Henry from imprisonment

And see him seated in the regal throne. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—London. The palace.

Enter Queen Elizabeth and Rivers.

Ric. Madam, what makes you in this sudden change?

Q. Eliz. Why, brother Rivers, are you yet to learn

What late misfortune is befall'n King Edward?

Ric. What! loss of some pitch'd battle against

Warwick? [Q.

Q. Eliz. No, but the loss of his own royal person.

Ric. Then is my sovereign skin?

Q. Eliz. Ay, almost skin, for he is taken prisoner,

Either betray'd by falsehood of his guard

Or by his foe surprises at unwares:

And, as I further have to understand,

Is new committed to the Bishop of York,

Fell Warwick's brother and by that our foes.

Ric. These news I most confess are full of grief;

Yet, gracious madame, bear it as you may:

Warwick may lose, that now hath won the day.

Q. Eliz. Till then fair hope must hinder life's

And I the rather wean me from despair [decay.

For love of Edward's offspring in my womb:

This is it that makes me bridle passion

And bear with mildness my misfortune's cross;

Ay, ay, for this I draw in many a tear

And stop the rising of blood-sucking sighs.

Lest with my sighs or tears I blast or drown

King Edward's fruit, true heir to the English crown.

Ric. But, madame, where is Warwick then become? [London.

Q. Eliz. I am inform'd he that comes towards

To set my son crown once more on Henry's head.

Guess thou the rest: King Edward's friends must

But, to prevent the tyrant's violence,— [down.

For trust not him that hath once broken faith,—

I'll henceforth with unto the sanctuary,

To save at least the heir of Edward's right:

There shall I rest secure from force and fraud.

Come, therefore, let us fly while we may fly;

If Warwick take us we are sure to die. [Exit.

SCENE V.—A park near Middleham Castle in Yorkshire.

Enter Gloucester, Lord Hastings, and Sir William Stanley.

Glo. Now, my Lord Hastings and Sir William

Leave off to wonder why I drew you hither, [Stanley,

Into this chiefest thicket of the park, [brother,

Thus stands the case: you know our king, my

Is prisoner to the bishop here, at whose hands

He hath good usage and great liberty,

And, often but attended with weak guard,

Comes hunting this way to disport himself.

I have advertised him by secret means

That if about this hour he make this way

Under the shadow of his royal grace,

He shall here find his friends with horse and men

To set him free from his captivity.

Enter King Edward and a Huntsman with him,

Hunt. This way, my lord; for this way lies the game.

ACT IV. THIRD PART OF KING HENRY VI. SCENE VII.

K. Edw. Nay, this way, man; see where the huntsmen stand. [rest, Now, as I said my latter days, and the Stand you thus close, to steal the bishop's deer? Glo. Brother, the time and case require haste: Your horse stands ready at the park-corner. K. Edw. But whither shall we then? Husk. To Lynn, my lord, And from thence to Flanders. [meaning. Glo. Well guess'd, believe me; for that was my K. Edw. Stanley, I will requite thy forwardness. Glo. But wherefore stay we? 'tis no time to talk. [go along? K. Edw. Huntsman, what say'st thou? willst thou Glo. Better is it, lest so then tarry and be hang'd. Husk. Ever I heard, the law can't have ado. K. Edw. Bishop, farewell; shield thee from Warwick's frown; And pray that I may repose the crown. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI. — London. The Tower.

Flourish. Enter King Henry, Clarence, Warwick, Somerset, young Richmond, Oxford, Montague, and Lieutenant of the Tower.

K. Hen. Master Lieutenant, now that God and Have shaken Edward from the royal seat, [Friends And turn'd my captive state to liberty, My fear to hope, my sorrows unto joys. At our enlargement what are thy due fees? Lord. Subjects may challenge nothing of their sovereigns; But if an humble prayer may prevail, I then crave pardon of your majesty. K. Hen. For what, lieutenant? for well using me? Nay, be thou sure 'twill well requite thy kindness, For that it made my imprisonment a pleasure; Ay, such a pleasure as incaged birds Conceive when after many moody thoughts At last by notes of household harmony They quite forget their loss of liberty. But, Warwick, after God, thou set'st me free, And chiefly therefore I thank God and thee; He was the author, thou the instrument. Therefore, that I may conquer fortune's spite By living low, where fortune cannot hurt me, And that the people of this blessed land May not be punish'd with my thwarting stars, Warwick, although my head still wear the crown, I here resign my government to thee, For thou art fortunate in all thy deeds. And now may all the ends be crowned with virtue! By spying and avoiding fortune's malice, For few men rightly temper with the stars: Yet in this one thing let me blame your grace, For choosing me when Clarence is in place. Chf. No, Warwick, thou art worthy of the sway, To whom the heavens in thy nativity Adjudged an olive branch and laurel crown, As likely to be blest in peace and war; And therefore I yield thee my free consent. War. And I choose Clarence only for protector. K. Hen. Warwick and Clarence, give me both your hands: [hearts, Now join your hands, and with your hands your That no dissension hinder government: I make you both protectors of this land, While I myself will lead a private life And shall return to my latter days. To sin's rebuke and my Creator's praise. War. What answers Clarence to his sovereign's will? Chf. That he consents, if Warwick yield consent For on thy fortune I repose myself. [content: War. Why, then, though north, yet must I be We'll yoke together, like a double shadow To Henry's body, and supply his place; I mean, in bearing weight of government, While he enjoys the honour and his case. And, Clarence, now then it is more than needful Forthwith that Edward be pronounced a traitor, And all his lands and goods be confiscate. Chf. What else? and that succession he determined. [part. War. Ay, therefore Clarence shall not want his K. Hen. But, with the first of all thy chief affairs, Let me entreat, for I command no more, That Margaret your queen and my son Edward Be sent for, to return from France with speed; For, till I see them here, by doubtful fear May of his life, and if not, be speedily. This G7o. It shall be done, my sovereign, with all K. Hen. My Lord of Somerset, what youth is that, Of whom you seem to have so tender care? Som. My liege, it is young Henry, earl of Richmond. K. Hen. Come hither, England's hope. [loays his hand on his head.] If secret powers Suggest but truth to my divining thoughts, This pretty lad will prove our country's bliss. His looks are full of peaceful majesty, His head by nature framed to wear a crown, His hand to wield a sceptre, and himself Likely in time to bless a regal throne. Make much of him, my lords, for this is he Must help you more than you are hurt by me. Enter a Post. War. What news, my friend? [Post. That Edward is escaped from your brother, And fled, as he hears since, to Burgundy. War. Unsavoury news! but how made he escape? Post. He was convey'd by Richard Duke of Gloucester, And the Lord Hastings, who attended him; [feaster In secret ambush on the forest side And from the bishop's men rescued him. For hunting was his daily exercise. War. My brother was too careless of his charge. But let us hence, my sovereign, to provide A salve for any sore that may betide. [Exeunt all but Somerset, Richmond, and Oxford. Som. My lord, I bring not of his flight of Edward's; For doubtless Burgundy will yield him help, And we shall have more wars before 'tis long. As Henry's late presaging prophecy [mond. Did glad my heart with hope of this young Rich, So doth my heart misgive me, in these conflicts What may befall him, to his father's ears: Therefore, Lord Oxford, to prevent the worst, Forthwith we'll send him hence to Brittany, Till storms be past of civil enmity. Oxf. Ay, for if Edward repossess the crown, 'Tis like that Richmond with the rest shall down. Som. It shall be so; he shall to Brittany. Come, therefore, let's about it speedily. [Exeunt.

SCENE VII. — Before York.

Flourish. Enter King Edward, Gloucester, Hastings, and Soldiers.

K. Edw. Now, brother Richard, Lord Hastings, and the rest, Yet thus far fortune maketh us amends, And says that once more I shall interchange My waned state for Henry's regal crown. And being once more in this region of the seas And brought desired help from Burgundy; What then remains, we being thus arrived From Ravenspurgh haven before the gates of York, But that we enter, as into our dukedom? [this; Glo. The gates made fast! Brother, I like not For many men that stumble at the threshold Are well foretold that danger lurks within.

451
K. Edw. Tush, man, abominations must not now afford us:
For by fair or foul means we must enter in,
For either will our friends repair to us. [them.]
Hast. My liege, I'll knock once more to summon

Enter, on the walls, the Mayor of York, and his Brethren.

May. My lords, we were forewarned of your coming,
And shut the gates for safety of ourselves;
For now we owe allegiance unto Henry. [king,
K. Edw. But, master mayor, if Henry be your Yet Edward at the least is Duke of York.
May. True. Trusty lords, I know you for no less.
K. Edw. Why, and I challenge nothing but my
As being well content with that alone. [dукedom, Glou. [Aside] But when the fox hath once got in his nose,
He'll soon find means to make the body follow.
Hast. Why, master mayor, why stand you in a doubt?

Open the gates; we are King Henry's friends.

May. Ay, say you so? the gates shall then be open'd. [They descend.
Glou. A wise stout captain, and soon persuaded!
Hast. The good old man would fain that all were
So 'twere not long of him; but being enter'd,
I doubt not, 1, but we shall soon persuade
Both him and all his brothers unto reason.

Enter the Mayor and two Aldermen, below.

K. Edw. So, master mayor; these gates must not
But in the night or in the time of war. [be shut
What! fear not, man, but yield me up the keys;
[They take the keys.
For Edward will defend the town and thee,
And all those friends that deign to follow me.

March. Enter Montgomery, with drum and soldiers.

Glou. Brother, this is Sir John Montgomery,
Our trusty friend, unless I be deceived. [in arms?
K. Edw. Welcome, Sir John! But why come you
Mont. To help King Edward in his time of storm,
As every loyal subject ought to do. [Forget
K. Edw. Thanks, good Montgomery; but we now
Our title to the crown and only claim
Our dukedom till God please to send the rest.
Mont. Then fare you well, for I will hence again:
I came to serve a king and not a duke.
Drummer, strike up, and let us march away.

The drum begins to march.

K. Edw. Nay, stay, Sir John, awhile, and we 'll debate
By what safe means the crown may be recover'd,
Mont. What talk you of debating? in few words,
If you'll not here proclaim yours our king,
I'll leave you to your fortune and be gone
To keep them back that come to succour you:
Why shall we fight, if you pretend no title?
Glou. Why, brother, wherefore stand you on nice points? [our claim?
K. Edw. When we grow stronger, then we'll make
Till then, 'tis wisdom to conceal our meaning.
Hast. Away with scrupulous wit! now arms must rule.
Glou. And fearless minds climb soonest unto crown.

Brother, we will proclaim you out of hand;
The bruit thereof will bring you many friends.
K. Edw. Then be it as you will; for 'tis my right,
And Henry but usurps the diadem. [self;
Mont. Ay, now my sovereign speaketh like him.
And Edward, your champion, claim'd:
Hast. Sound trumpet; Edward shall be here pro-
Come, fellow-soldier, make thou proclamation.

[Sough.]

Sold. Edward the Fourth, by the grace of God, king of England and France, and lord of Ireland, &c.
Mont. And whosoever gainsays King Edward's
By this I challenge him to single fight. [right,

All. Long live Edward the Fourth!
K. Edw. Thanks, brave Montgomery; and thanks you, gentlemen, all: If fortune serve me, I'll require this kindness.
Now, for this night, let's be Minster here in York;
And when the morning sun shall raise his car
Above the border of this horizon,
We'll forward towards Warwick and his mates;
For we shall find them. Edward, how now?
Ah, froward Clarence! how evil it beseems thee,
To flatter Henry and forsake thy brother!
Yet, as we may, we'll meet both thee and Warwick.
Come on, brave soldiers; doubt not of the day,
And, that once gotten, doubt not of large pay.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VIII. — London. The palace.

Flourish. Enter King Henry, Warwick, Monttague, Clarence, Exeter, and Oxford.

With nasty Germans and blunt Hollanders,
Hath pass'd in safety through the narrow seas,
And with his troops doth march amain to London;
And many giddy people flock to him.
K. Hen. Let's levy men, and beat him back again.
Exe. A little fire is quickly trodden out;
Which, being suffer'd, rivers cannot quench.
War. In Warwickshire have I true-hearted friends,
Not mutineous in peace, yet bold in war;
Those will I muster up: and thou, son Clarence,
Shalt stir up in Suffolk, Norfolk and in Kent.
The knights and gentlemen to come with thee;
Then, brother Montague, in Buckingham,
Northampton and in Leicestershire, shalt find
Men well inclined to hear what thou command'st;
And thou, brave Oxford, wondrous well beloved,
In Oxfordshire shalt muster up thy friends.
My sovereign, with the loving citizens,
Like to his island girl in with the ocean,
Or modest Dian circled with her nymphs,
Shall rest in London till we come to him.
Fair lords, take leave and stand not to reply.
Farewell, my sovereign.

K. Hen. Farewell, my Hector, and my Troy's true
Fairer.

Clar. In sign of truth, I kiss your highness' hand.
K. Hen. Well-minded Clarence, be thou fortunate!

Mont. Comfort, my lord; and so I take my leave.

Oxf. And thus I seal my truth, and bid adieu.
K. Hen. Sweet Oxford, and my loving Montague,
And all at once, once more a happy farewell.
War. Farewell, sweet lords; let's meet at Covenant.
[Exeunt all but King Henry and Exeter.
K. Hen. Here at the palace will I rest awhile.
Cousin of Exeter, what thinks your lordship?
Exe. Methinks the power that Edward hath in field
Should not be able to encounter mine.
Exe. The doubt is that he will seduce the rest.
K. Hen. That's not my fear; my meed hath got me fame:
I have not story'd mine ears to their demands,
Nor perst off their suits with slow delays;
My pity hath been balm to heal their wounds,
My mildness hath ally'd their swelling griefs,
My mercy dried their water-flowing tears;
I have not been desirous of their wealth,
Nor much opposed their false and insignificant.
Not for want of revenge, though they must err'd:
Then why should they love Edward more than me?
No, Exeter, these graces challenge grace;

452
And when the lion fawns upon the lamb,
The lamb will never cease to follow him.

[Shout within. "A Lancastrian! A Lancastrian!"

Exe. Hark! hark! my lord! what shouts are these?

Enter King Edward, Gloucester, and Soldiers.

K. Edw. Seize on the shame-faced Henry, bear him hence;
And once again proclaim us king of England.
You are the foost that makes small brooks to flow;
Now stops thy spring; my sea shall suck them dry,
And swell so much the higher by their ebb.
Hence with him to the Tower; let him not speak.

[Exeunt some with King Henry.

And, lords, towards Coventry bend we our course,
Where perpetually Warwick now remains:
The sun shines hot; and, if we may delay,
Cold biting winter mars our hoped-for lay.
Glou. Away betimes, before his forces join,
And take the great-grown traitor unawares;
Brave warriors, march amain towards Coventry.

[Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Coventry.

Enter Warwick, the Mayor of Coventry, and others upon the walls.

War. Where is the post that came from valiant Oxford?
How know we this thy lord, mine honest fellow?
First Mess. By this at Dunsmore, marching hitherward.
War. How far off is our brother Montague?
Where is the post that came from Montague?
Second Mess. By this at Dalbury, with a puissant troop.

Enter Sir John Somerville.

War. Say, Somerville, what says my loving son?
And, by thy guess, how nigh is Clarence now?
Som. At Southam I did leave him with his forces,
And do expect him here some two hours hence.

[Drum heard. War. Then Clarence is at hand; I hear his drum.
Som. It is not his, my lord; here Southam lies:
The drum your honor hears marcheth from Warwick.

[Friends.

War. Who should that be? belike, unknighted,
They are at hand, and you shall quickly know.

March: flourish. Enter King Edward, Gloucester, and Soldiers.

K. Edw. Go, trumpet, to the walls, and sound a parle.

Glou. See how the surly Warwick mans the wall!
War. Oh umbilical spirit! is sportful Edward come?
Where slept our scouts, or how are they seduced,
That we could hear no news of their repair? [gates.
K. Edw. Now, Warwick, will thou opè the city
Speak gentle words and humbly bend thy knee,
Call Edward king and at his hands beg mercy
And he shall pardon thee these outrages.
War. Nay, rather, wilt thou draw thy forces hence,
Confess who set thee up and pluck'd thee down,
Call Warwick patron and be penitent?
And thou shalt still remain the Duke of York.
Glou. I thought, at least, he would have said
Or did he make the jest against his will? [king;
War. Is not a dukedom, sir, a goodly gift?
Glou. Ay, by my faith, for a poor earl to give:
I'll do the service for so good a gift.

War. "Twas I that gave the kingdom to thy brother.
K. Edw. Why then 'tis mine, if but by War-War. Thou art no Atlas for so great a weight:
And, weaking, Warwick takes his gift again;
And Henry is my king. Warwick his subject.
K. Edw. But Warwick's king is Edward's pris-
And gallant Warwick, do but answer this: [oner:
What is the body when the head is off?
Glou. Alas, that Warwick had no more forecast,
But, whiles he thought to steal the single tuen,
Perhaps thou wilt object my holy oath:
To keep that oath were more importune
Than Jephthah's, when he sacrificed his daughter,
I am so tender of my brother's hands,
That, to deserve well at my brother's hands,
I here proclaim myself thy mortal foe,
With resolution, wheresoe'er I meet thee
As I will meet thee, if thou stir abroad
To plague thee for thy foul misleading me,
And so, proud-hearted Warwick, I defy thee,
And to my brother turn my blushing cheeks,
Pardon me, Edward, I will make amends;
And, Richard, do not frown upon my faults,
For I will henceforth be no more unconstant.
K. Edw. Now welcome more, and ten times more beloved.
Than if thou never hadst deserved our hate.
Glo. Welcome, good Clarence; this is brother-like.
War. O, passing traitor, perjured and unjust!
K. Edw. What, Warwick, will thou leave the town and fight?
Or shall we beat the stones about thine ears?
War. Ah, I can't coo'd here for defence!
I will away towards Barnet presently.
And bid thee battle, Edward, if thou darest.
K. Edw. Yes, Warwick, Edward dares, and leads the way.
Lords, to the field; Saint George and victory!
[Exeunt King Edward and his company.
March. Warwick and his company follow.

SCENE II.—A field of battle near Barnet.
Alarums and excursions. Enter King Edward, bringing forth Warwick wounded.
K. Edw. So, lie thou there: die thou, and die our For Warwick was a bag that fear'd us all. [fare: Now, Montague, sit fast; I seek for thee,
That Warwick's bones may keep thine company.
[Exeunt. Warwick.

War. Ah, who is nigh? come to me, friend or foe,
And tell me who is victor, York or Warwick?
Why ask I that? my mangled body shows,
My blood, my want of strength, my sick heart shows,
That I must yield my body to the earth
And, by my fall, the conquest to my foe.
Thus yields the cedar to the axe's edge,
Whose arms gave shelter to the prouder eagle,
Under whose shade the ramping lion slept,
Whose top-branch overpeep'd Jove's spreading tree
And kept low shrubs from winter's powerful wind.
These eyes, that now are dimm'd with death's black veil,
Have been as piercing as the mid-day sun,
To search the secret treasuries of the world:
The wrinkles in my brows, now fill'd with blood,
Were lik'en'd oft to kingly sepulchres;
For who liv'd king, but I could dig his grave?
And who dust smile when Warwick bent his brow?
Lo, now my glory smother'd dust and blood!
My parks, my walks, my manors that I had,
Even now forsake me, and of all my lands
Is nothing left me but my body's length.
Why, what is pomp, rule, reign, but earth and dust?
And, live we how we can, yet die we must.

Enter Oxford and Somerset.
Som. Ah, Warwick, Warwick! wert thou as we
We might recover all our loss again; [are.
The queen from France hath brought a praiseful
wover; for my trepang's sake;
Even now we heard the news: ah, couldst thou fly!
War. Why, then I would not fly. Ah, Montague,
If thou be there, sweet brother, take my hand,
And with thy lips keep in my soul awhile!
Thou lovest me not; lor, brother, if thou didst,
Thy tears would wash this cold congealed blood
That gles my lips and will not let me speak.
Come quickly, Montagne; or I am dead. [his last
Som. Ah, Warwick! Montague hath breathed
And to the latest gasp cried out for Warwick
And said, 'O commend me to my valiant brother, '
And more he would have said, and more he spoke,
Which sounded like a clavon in a vault,
That might not be distinguish'd: but at last,
I well might hear, deliver'd with a groan.
' O, farewell, Warwick! ' [yourselves;
War. So, Warwick! then my son! Fly, lords, and save
For Warwick bids you all farewell, to meet in heaven.
[Dies.
Oxf. Away, away, to meet the queen's great power!
[Here they bear away his body.
[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Another part of the field.
Flourish. Enter King Edward in triumph; with Gloucester, Clarence, and the rest.
K. Edw. Thus far our fortune keeps an upward
And we are graced with wreaths of victory.
But, in the midst of this bright-shining day,
I spy a black, suspicious, threatening cloud,
That will encounter with our glorious sun,
Fare he attain his easy western bed:
I mean this, these powers that the queen
Hath raised in Gallia have arrived our coast
And, as we hear, march on to fight with us.
Clar. A little gale will soon disperse that cloud
And blow it to the source from whence it came:
The very beams will dry those vapours up,
For every cloud engenders a storm.
Glo. The queen is valued thirty thousand strong,
And Somerset, with Oxford, fled to her:
If she have time to breathe, be well assured
Her faction will be full as strong as ours.
K. Edw. We are advertised by our loving friends
That they do hold their course toward Tewksbury:
We, having now the best at Barnet field,
Will thither straight, for willingness rids way:
And, as we march, our strength will be augmented
In every county as we go along.
Strike up the drum; cry 'Courage!' and away.
[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Plains near Tewksbury.
March. Enter Queen Margaret, Prince Edward, Somerset, Oxford, and Soldiers.
Q. Mar. Great lords, wise men ne'er sit and wait their loss,
But cheerly seek how to redress their harms.
What though the mast be now blown overboard,
The cable broke, the holding-anchor lost,
And half our sailors swallow'd in the flood?
Yet lives our pilot still. 'Is't meet that he Should leave the helm and like a fearful lad
With fearful eyes adds water to the sea [much,
And give more strength to that which hath too
Whiles, in his main, the ship splits on the rock,
Which industry and courage might have saved?
Ah, what a shame! ah, what a fault were this!
Say Warwick was our anchor; what of that?
And Montague our topmast; what of him?
Our slaughtered friends the tackles; what of these?
Why, is not Oxford here another anchor?
And Somerset another goodly mast?
To the crown of France our shrowds and tacking?
And, though unskillful, why not Ned and I?
For once allow'd the skilful pilot's charge?
We will not from the helm to sit and weep,
But keep our course, though the rough wind say no,
From shelves and rocks that threaten us with wreck.

434
As good to chide the waves as speak them fair.
And what is Edward but a ruthless sea?
What Chiefsee but a barge too troubled?
And Richard but a ragged fatal rock?
All these the enemies to our poor bark.
Say you can swim; alas, 'tis but a while!
Tread on the sand; why, there you quickly sink;
Bestride the rock; the tide will wash you off,
Or else you perish; that's a higher death.
This speak I, lords, to let you understand,
It case some one of you would fly from us,
That there's no hoped-for mercy with the brothers
More than with ruthless waves, with sands and rocks.
Why, courage then! what cannot be avoided
'Twill childishly weaken to lament or fear.
Prince. Methinks a woman of this valiant spirit
Should, if a coward heard her speak these words,
Infuse his breast with magnanimity
And make him, naked, foil a man at arms.
I speak not this as doubting any here;
For did I but suspect a fearful man,
He should have leave to go away helms,
Lost in our need he might infect another
And make him of like spirit to himself.
If any such be here—as God forbid!—
Let him depart before we need his help.
Oxf. Women and children of so high a courage,
And warfare fair, and why they, too,
O brave young prince! thy famous grandfather
Doth live again in thee: long mayst thou live
To bear his image and renew his glories!
Som. And he that will not fight for such a hope,
Go home to bed, and like the owl by day,
If he arise, he mock'd and wonder'd at.
Q. Mar. Thanks, gentle Somerset; sweet Oxford,
Thanks. [Exit a Messenger.]
Prince. And take his thanks that yet hath nothing
For Somerset, off with his guilty head.
Go, bear them hence; I will not hear them speak.
Oxf. For no man that speaks words,
Nor I, but stow with patience to my fortune.
[Exeunt Oxford and Somerset, guarded.]
Q. Mar. So part we sadly in this troublesome world,
To meet with joy in sweet Jerusalem. [Edward
K. Edw. Is proclamation made, that who finds
Shall have a high reward, and be his life?
For bearing arms, for stirring up my subjects,
And all the trouble thou hast turn'd me to?
Prince. Speak like a subject, proud ambitious York!
Suppose that I am now my father's mouth;
Resign thy chair, and where I stand kneel thou,
Whilst I propose the selfsame words to thee,
Which, traitor, thou wouldst have me answer to.
Q. Mar. Ah, that thy father had been so resolved!
Glo. That thou mightst still have worn the petticoat,
And ne'er have stol'n the breacli from Lancaster.
Prince. Let those that have a winter's night;
His curst riddles sort not with this place.
Glo. By heaven, brat, I'll plague ye for that word.
[men.
Q. Mar. Ay, thou wast born to be a plague to Glo. For God's sake, take away this captive sould.
Prince. Nay, take away this secking crookback rather.
K. Edw. Peace, wilful boy, or I will charm your Clar. Untutor'd lad, thou art too malapert.
Prince. I know my duty; you are all unadul't:
Lascivious Edward, and thou dissipated George,
And thou mis-shapen Dick. I tell ye all
I am your better, traitors as ye are;
And thou usyrp'st my father's right and mine.
K. Edw. Take that, thou likeness of this railer here.
[Stabs him.
Glo. Sprawlt's thou? take that, to end thy agon.
[Stabs him.
Ct. And there's for twitting me with perjury.
[Stabs him.
Q. Mar. O, kill me too!
Glo. Marry, and shall.
[Offers to kill her.
K. Edw. Hold, Richard, hold; for we have done too much, the like.
Glo. Why should she live, to fill the world with K. Edw. What, doth she swoon? use means for her recovery.
Glo. Clarence, excuse me to the king my brother;
I'll hence to London on a serious matter:
Ere ye come there, be sure to hear some news.
Clar. Why?
Glo. The Tower, the Tower.
[Exit.
Q. Mar. O Ned, sweet Ned! speak to thy mother,
boy!
Cust thou not speak? O traitors! murderers!
They that stabb'd Cesar shed no blood at all;
Did not offend, nor were not worthy blame,
If this foul deed were by to equal it.
He was a man; this, in respect, a child:
And men ne'er spend their fury on a child.
What's worse than murderer, that I may name it?
No, no, my heart will burst, an if I speak:
And I will speak, that so my heart may burst.
Butchers and villains! bloody cannibals!
How sweet a plant have you unthinking cropp'd!
You have no children, butchers! if you had,
The thought of them would have stir'd up remorse:
But if you ever chance to have a child,
Look in his youth to have him so cut off!
As, deathlymen, you have rid this sweet young prince!
ACT V.  THIRD PART OF KING HENRY VI.  SCENE VII.

K. Edw. Away with her; go, bear her hence perforce. [here; Q. Mar. Nay, never bear me hence, dispatch me Here shall thy word. I'll pardon thee my death; When, wilt thou not? then, Clarence, do it thon. Clor. By heaven, I will not do thee so much ease. Q. Mar. Good Clarence, do; sweet Clarence, do thou do it. [do it? Clor. Dost thou not hear me swear I would not Q. Mar. Ay, but thou usest to forswear thyself; T was a warrer, but now 'tis charity. What, wilt thou not? Where is that devil's butcher, Hard-favour'd Richard? Richard, where art thou? Thou art not here: murder is thy alms-deed; Petitioners for blood thou ne'er putst back. K. Edw. Away, I say; I charge thee, bear her hence. Q. Mar. So come to you and yours, as to this prince! [Exit, led out forcibly. K. Edw. Where's Richard gone? Clor. To London, all in post; and, as I guess, To make a bloody supper in the Tower. K. Edw. He's sullen, if a thing comes in his head. Now this will discover a common sort: With pay and thanks, and let's away to London And see our gentle queen how well she fares: By this, I hope, she hath a son for me. [Exit. SCENE VI.—London. The Tower.

Enter King Henry and Gloucester, with the Lieutenant, on the walls. Glo. Good day, my lord. What, at your book so hard? K. Hen. Ay, my good lord:—my lord, I should say; 'Tis sin to flatter; 'good' was little better: 'Good Gloucester!' and 'good devil!' were alike, And both posteroner; therefore, not 'good lord.' Glo. Sirrah, leave us to ourselves: we must confer. [Exit Lieutenant. K. Hen. So dies the reckless shepherd from the wolf; So first the harmless sheep doth yield his fleece And next his throat unto the butcher's knife. What scene of death hath Ioscinus now to act? Glo. Suspicion always haunts the guilty mind; The bell with fear dittches, the bush offlhen: K. Hen. The bird that hath been lined in a bush, With trembling wings misfocleth every bush; And I, the hapless male to one sweet bird, Have now the fatal object in my eye [kill'd. Where my poor young was lined, was caught and Glo. Why, what a peevish fool was that of Crete, That taught his son the office of a fool! And yet, for all his wings, the fool was drown'd. K. Hen. 1, Daedalus: my poor boy, Icarus; Thy father, Minos, that denied our course; The sun that sear'd the wings of my sweet boy Thy brother Edward, and myself the sea; Whose envious gulf dili swallow up his life. Ah, kill me with thy weapon, not with words! My breast can better brook thy dagger's point Than can my ears that tragic history. But wherefore dost thou come? is 't for my life? Glo. Think'st thou I am an executioner? K. Hen. A persecutor, I am sure, thou art: If murdering innocents be executing, Why, then thou art an executioner. Glo. Thy son I kill'd for his presumption. K. Hen. Haist thou been kill'd when first thou spok'st Where hast not lived to kill a son of mine, And thus I prophesy, that many a thousand, Which now mistrust no parcel of my fear, And many an old man's sigh and many a widow's, And many an orphan's water-standing eye— Men for their sons, wives for their husbands, And orphans for their parents' timeless death— Shall rue the hour that ever thou wast born. The owl shriek'd at thy birth,—an evil sign; The night-blow cried, aboding blissless time; Dogs howled that would hideous toilsome trees; The raven rock'd her on the chimney's top, And chattering pies in dismal discords sang. Thy mother felt more than a mother's pain, And yet brought forth less than a mother's hope, To wit, an indigested and deformed lump, Not like the fruit of such a goodly tree. Teeth hast thou in thy head when thou wast born, To signify thou cam'st to bite the world: And, if the rest be true which I have heard, Thou canst not

Glo. I'll hear no more: die, prophet, in thy speech; [Stabs him. For this, amongst the rest, was I ordain'd. [this. K. Hen. Ay, and for much more slaughter after O, God forgive my sins, and pardon thee! [Dies. Glo. What, will the aspiring blood of Lancaster Sink in the ground? I thought it would have mounted. See how my sword weeps for the poor king's death! O, may such purple tears be alway shed From those that wish the downfall of our house! If any spark of life be yet remaining, Down; down to hell; and say I sent thee thither: [Stabs him again. I, that have neither pity, love, nor fear, Indeed, 'tis true that Henry told me of; For I have often heard my mother say I came into the world with my legs forward: Had I not reason, think ye, to make haste, And send their ruin that may check my right? The midwife wonder'd and the women cried 'O, Jesus bless us, he is born with teeth!' And so I was; which plainly signified That I should snarl and bite and play the dog. Then, since the heavens have shaped my body so, Let hell make crock'd my mind to answer it. I have no brother, I am like no brother: And this word 'love,' which greybeards call divine, Be resident in men like one another And not in me: I am myself alone. Clarence, beware; thou keep'st me from the light: But I will sort a pitchy day for thee; For I will buzz abroad such prophecies That Edward shall be fearful of his life, And then, to purge his tear, I'll be thy death. King Henry and the prince his son are gone: Clarence, thy turn is next, and then the rest, Counting myself but bad till I be best. I'll throw thy body in another room And triumph, Henry, in thy day of doom. [Exit, with the body.

SCENE VI.—London. The palace.

FLOURISH. Enter King Edward, Queen Elizabeth, Clarence, Gloucester, Hastings, a Nurse with the young Prince, and Attendants.

K. Edw. Once more we sit in England's royal Re-purchased with the blood of enemies. [throne. What valiant feems, like to autumn's chaff, Have we 'way'd down in tents of all their pride! Three Dukes of Somerset, threefold renown'd For hardy and undoubted champions; Two Clifford, as the father and the son, And two Northumberland; two braver men Never bear'd a pitchy head for their countrymen. With them, the two brave bears, Warwick and Montague, That in their chains fetter'd the kingly lion And made the forest tremble when they roard. Thus have we swept suspicion from our seat And made our footstool of security.
ACT V.  THIRD PART OF KING HENRY VI.  SCENE VII.

| Come hither, Bess, and let me kiss my boy. | Glou. And, that I love the tree from whence thou sprang'st, |
| Young Ned, for thee, thine uncles and myself | Witness the living kiss I give the fruit. |
| Have in our armours watch'd the winter's night, | [Aside] To say the truth, so Judas kiss'd his master, |
| Went all afoot in summer's scalding heat. | And cried 'all hail!' when as he meant all harm. |
| That thou mightest repossess the crown in peace; | K. Edw. Now am I seated as my soul delights, |
| And of our labours thou shalt reap the gain. | Having my country's peace and brothers' loves. |

Glou. [Aside] I'll blast his harvest, if your head were laid:

For yet I am not look'd on in the world.

This shoulder was ordain'd so thick to lieave:

And heave it shall some weight, or break my back:

"Work thou the way,—and thou shalt execute."

K. Edw. Clarence and Gloucester, love my lovely queen;

And kiss your princely nephew, brothers both.

Clar. The duty that I owe unto your majesty I seal upon the lips of this sweet babe.

Q. Eliz. Thanks, noble Clarence; worthy brother, thanks.

Reignier, her father, to the king of France

Hath pawn'd the Sicils and Jerusalem,

And hither have they sent it for her ransom.

K. Edw. Away with her, and wait her hence to France.

And now what rests but that we spend the time

With stately triumphs, mirthful comic shows,

Such as befits the pleasure of the court?

Sound drums and trumpets! farewell sour annoy!

For here, I hope, begins our lasting joy.  [Exeunt.

Richard.—Now, Clifford, I have singled thee alone:

Suppose this arm is for the Duke of York,

And this for Rutland; both bound to revenge,

Wert thou environ'd with a brazen wall,

Clifford.—Now, Richard, I am with thee here alone:

This is the hand that stabb'd thy father York;

And this the hand that slew thy brother Rutland;

And here's the heart that triumphs in their death;

And cheers these hands that slew thy sire and brother

To execute the like upon thyself;

And so, have at thee!—Act II., Scene IV.

ACT I.

Enter Richard, Duke of Gloucester, solus.

Glow. Now is the winter of our discontent
Made glorious summer by this sun of York;
And all the clouds that lour'd upon our house
In the deep bosom of the ocean buried.
Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths;
Our bruised arms hung up for monuments;
Our stern alarums changed to merry meetings,
Our dreadful marches to delightful measures.
Grim-visaged war hath smooth'd his wrinkled front;
And now, instead of mounting barked steeds
To fright the souls of fearful adversaries,
He capers nimbly in a lady's chamber
To the lascivious pleasing of a base.
But I, that am not shaped for sportive tricks,
Nor made to court an amorous looking-glass;
I, that am rudely stamp'd, and want love's majesty
To strut before a wanton spring nymph;
I, that am curtail'd of this fair proportion,
Cheated of feature by dissembling nature,
Deform'd, unfinish'd, sent before my time
Into this breathing world, scarce half made up,
And that so lamely and unprofitably
That dogs bark at me as I halt by them:
Why, I, in this weak piping time of peace,
Have no delight to pass away the time,
Unless to spy my shadow in the sun
And descant on mine own deformity:
And therefore, since I cannot prove a lover,
KING RICHARD THE THIRD.—Act I., Scene ii.
King Richard III.

ACT I.

SCENE I.

KING RICHARD III.

King. If I the Gracious Lord, do not misplace me,
My issue disinherited should be. And,
For my name of George begins with G,
It follows in his thought that I am he.
These, as I learn, and such like toys as these
Have moved his highness to commit me now,
Glou. Why, this it is, when men are ruled by
'T is not the king that sends you to the Tower;
My Lady Grey his wife, Clarence, 't is she
That tempers him to this extremity.
Was it not she and that good man of worship,
Anthony Woodville, her brother there,
That made him send Lord Hastings to the Tower,
From presence and deliver'd?
We are not safe, Clarence; we are not safe.
Clar. By heaven, I think there's no man is secure
But the queen's kindred and night-walking heralds
That trudge betwixt the king and Mistress Shore.
Heard ye not what an humble suppliant
Lord Hastings was to her for his delivery?
Glou. Humbly complaining to her deity
Got my lord chamberlain his liberty.
I'll tell you what: I think it is our way,
If we will keep in favour with the king,
To be her men and wear her livery:
The joys which our company afford,
Since that our brother dubb'd them gentlewomen,
Are mighty gossips in this monarchy.
Brak. I beseech your graces both to pardon me;
His majesty hath straitly given in charge
That no man shall have private conference,
Of what degree soever, with his brother.
Glou. Even so; an't please your worship, Brak-
You may partake of any thing we say; [enbury,
We speak no treason, man: we say the king
Is wise and virtuous, and his noble queen
Well struck in years, fair, and not jealous;
We say alone the shore's with a pretty face.
A cherry lip, a bonny eye, a passing pleasing tongue;
And that the queen's kindred are made gentleso:
How say you, sir? can you deny all this?
Brak. With this, my lord, myself have ought to do.
Glou. What, to go to do with Mistress Shore! I tell
He that doth naught with her, excepting one,
Were best he do it secretly, alone.
Brak. What one, my lord?
Glou. Her husband, knave; wouldst thou betray me?
[Withal
Brak. I beseech your grace to pardon me, and Forbear your conference with the noble duke. [obey.
Clar. We know thy charge, Brakenbury, and will Glou. We are the queen's subjects, and must obey.
Brother, farewell: I will unto the king;
And whatsoever you will employ me in,
Were it to call King Edward's widow sister,
I will perform it to the uttermost, and,
Meantime, this deep disgrace in brotherhood
Touches me deeper than you can imagine.
Clar. I know it pleaseth neither of us well.
Glou. Well, your imprisonment shall not be long;
I will deliver you, or else lie for you.
Heavens, have patience.
Clar. I must perforce. Farewell.
[Exeunt Clarence, Brakenbury, and Guard.
Glou. Go, tread the path that thou shalt never re-
Simple, plain Clarence! I do love thee so, [turn,
That I will shortly send thy soul to heaven,
If heaven will take the worm at our hands.
But who comes here? the new-deliver'd Hastings?

Enter Lord Hastings.

Hast. Good time of day unto my gracious lord!
Glou. As much unto my good lord chamberlain!
We'll see you welcome to the open air.
How hath your lordship brook'd imprisonment?

Hast. With patience, noble lord, as prisoners must:
But I shall live, my lord, to give them thanks
That were the cause of my imprisonment.
Glou. No doubt, no doubt; and so shall Clarence
For they that were your enemies are, [too;
And have prevail'd as much on him as you.
Hast. More pity that the eagle should be mew'd,
While kites and buzzards prey at liberty.
Glou. What news abroad?
Hast. No news so bad abroad as this at home;
The king is sickly, weak and melancholy,
And his physicians fear him mightily.
Glou. Now, by Saint Paul, this news is bad indeed.
O, he hath kept an evil diet long,
And overmuch consumed his master person:
'T is very grievous to be thought upon.
What, is he in his bed?
Hast. He is.
Glou. Go you before, and I will follow you.

[Exit Hastings.

He cannot live, I hope, and must not die.
Till George be pack'd with post-horse up to heaven.
I'll in, to urge his hatred more to Clarence,
With lies well steel'd with weighty arguments,
And, if I fail not in my deep intent,
Clarence hath not another day to live:
Which done, I'll send him to his mercy,
And leave the world for me to buske in!
For then I'll marry Warwick's youngest daughter.
What though I kill'd her husband and her father?
The readiest way to make the wench amends
Is to become her husband and her father:
The which will I: not all so much for love
As for another secret close intent,
By marrying her which I must reach unto.
But yet I run before my horse to market:
Clarence still breathes; Edward still lives and reigns:
When they are gone, then must I count my gains.

[Exit.

SCENE II. — Another street.

Enter the corpse of King Henry the Sixth, Gentlemen with halberds to guard it; Lady Anne being the manner.

Jane. Set down, set down your honourable load.
If honour may be shrouded in a hearse,
Whilst I awhile obsequiously lament
The untimely fall of virtuous Lancaster,
Poor key-cold figure of a holy king!
Pale ashes of the house of Lancaster!
Thou bloodless remnant of that royal blood!
Be it lawful that I say, how? by imposture?
To hear the lamentations of poor Anne,
Wife to thy Edward, to thy slaughter'd son,
Stabb'd by the selfsame hand that made these wounds!
Lo, in these windows that let forth thy life,
I pour the helpless bath of my poor eyes.
Cursed be the hand that made these fatal holes!
Cursed be the heart that had the heart to do it!
Cursed the blood that let this blood from hence!
More direful hap beside that hated wretch,
That makes us wretched by the death of thee,
Than I can wish to God take King Edward, toads,
Or any creeping venom'thing that lives!
It ever he have child, abortive be it,
Prodigious and untimely brought to light,
Whose ugly and unnatural aspect
May fright the hopeful mother at the view;
And that be by the weapon of the Law!
If ever he have wife, let her be made
As miserable by the death of him
As I am made by my poor lord and thee!
Come, now towards Chertsey with your holy load,
Taken from Paul's to be interred there;
And still, as you are weary of the weight,
Rest you, whiles I lament King Henry's corse.
Enter Gloucester.

Glou. Stay, you that bear the corse, and set it down.

Anne. What black magician conjures up this fiend, To stop devoted charitable deaths?

Glou. Villains, set down the corse; or, by Saint I'll make a corse of him that disobeys. [Paul, Gent. stand by, and let the coffin pass.

Glou. Unnammer'd dog! stand then, when I command: Advance thy halberd higher than my breast, Or, by Saint Paul, I'll strike thee to my foot, And spurn upon thee, beggar, for thy boldness.

Anne. What do you tremble? are you all afraid? Ah, I blame you not; for you are mortal, And mortal eyes cannot endure the devil.

Avant, thou dreadful minister of hell! Thou hast but power over his mortal body, His soul thou canst not have; therefore, be gone.

Glou. Sweet saint, for charity, be not so curst.

Anne. Foul devil, for God's sake, hence, and trouble us not:

For thou hast made the happy earth thy hell, Fili'd it with cursing cries and deep exclains. If thou delight to view thy heinous deeds, Behold this pattern of thy butcheries, O, grieve not France! see God's wounds Open their congeal'd months and bleed afresh! blush, blush, thou heap of foul deformity; For 'tis thy presence that exhausts this blood From cold and empty veins, where no blood dwells; Thy deed, inhuman and unnatural, Provokes this dehge most unnatural.

O God, which this blood madest, revenge his death! O earth, which this blood drink'st, revenge his death! Either heaven with lightning strike the murderer Or earth, gape wide and eat him quick, [dead, As thou dost swallow up this good king's blood, Which his hell-govern'd arm hath butcher'd!

Glou. Lady, you know no rules of charity, Which renders good for bad, blessings for curses.

Anne. Villain, thou know'st no law of God nor man:

No beast so fierce but knows some touch of pity.: Glou. But I know none, and therefore am no beast.

Anne. O wonderful, when devils tell the truth!

Glou. More wonderful, when angels are so angry. Vouchsafe, divine perfection of a woman, Of these supposed evils, to give me leave, By circumstance, but to acquaint myself.

Anne. What was this confus'd business of a man, For these known evils, but to give me leave, By circumstance, to curse thy cursed self.

Glou. Fairer than tongue can name thee, let me Some patient leisure to excuse myself. [have

Anne. Foul'er than heart can think thee, thou canst No more excuse cloth, to hang thyself, Glou. By such despair, I should accuse myself.

Anne. And, by despairing, shouldst thou stand excused;

For doing worthy vengeance on thyself, Which diist unworthy slaughter upon others.

Glou. Say that I slew them not.

Anne. Why, then they are not dead:

But dead they are, and, devils, slave, by thee. Glou. I did not kill thy husband.

Anne. Why, then he is alive.

Glou. Nay, he is dead; and slain by Edward's hand; [saw [saw

Anne. In thy foul throat thou liest: Queen Mary Thy murdererful falchion smoking in his blood; The which thou once diist bend against her breast, But that thy brothers beat beside the point.

Glou. I was provoked by her slanderous tongue, Which laid their guilt upon my guiltless shoulders, Anne. Thou was provok't by thy bloody mind,

Which never dreamt on aught but butcheries: Didst thou not kill this king? I grant ye.

Anne. Dost grant me, hedgehog? then, God grant me too

Thou mayst be damned for that wicked deed! O, he was gentle, mild, and virtuous!

Glou. The fitter for the King of heaven, that had a come. Anne. He is in heaven, where thou shalt never Glou. Let him thank me, that thou hast sent him For he was fitter for that place than earth. [thither; Anne. And thou unfit for any place but hell. Glou. Yes, one place else, if you will hear me Anne. Some dungeon. Glou. Your bed-chamber.

Anne. I'll rest betide the chamber where thou liest! So will it, madame, till I lie with you. Anne. I hope so.

Glou. I know so. But, gentle Lady Anne, To leave this keen encounter of our wits, And fall somewhat into a slower method, Is not the cause of the timeless deaths Of these Plantagenets, Henry and Edward, As blameful as the executioner? [effect. Anne. Thou art the cause, and most accused Glou. Your beauty was the cause of that effect; Your beauty, which did haunt me in my sleep To undertake the death of all the world, So I might live one hour in your sweet bosom. Anne. If I thought that, I tell thee, homicide, These nails should read that beauty from my cheeks. [wrench;

Glou. These eyes could never endure sweet beauty's You should not blemish it, if I stood by:

As all the world is cheered by the sun, So I by that; it is my day, my life. Anne. Black night o'ershade thy day, and death thy life! [both.

Glou. Thou art not thyself, fair creature; thou art Anne. I would I were, to be revenged on thee. Glou. It is a quarel most unnatural, To be revenged on him that loveth you. Anne. It is a quarel just and reasonable, To be revenged on him that slew my husband. Glou. He that benefic thee, lady, of thy husband, Did it to help thee to a better husband. Anne. His better doth not breathe upon the earth. Glou. He lives that loves thee better than he could. Anne. Name him.

Glou. Plantagenet.

Anne. Why, that was he.

Glou. The selfsame name, but one of better nature.

Anne. Where is he?

Glou. Here. [She spitteth at him.]

Anne. Why dost thou spit at me?

Anne. Would it were mortal poison, for thy sake! Glou. Never came poison from so sweet a place. Anne. Never hung poison on a Fowler's head. Out of my sight! thou dost infect my eyes.

Glou. Thine eyes, sweet lady, have infected mine. Anne. Would they were basilisks, to strike thee dead!

Anne. Glou. I would they were, that I might die at once; For now they kill me with a living death. Those eyes of thine from mine have drawn salt tears, Shamed their aspect with store of childish drops: These eyes, which never shed remorseful tear, No, when my father York and Edward wept, To hear the piteous howl that England made When black-faced Clifford shook his sword at him; Nor when thy warlike father, like a child, Told the sad story of my father's death, And twenty times made pause to sob and weep, That all the standers-by had wet their cheeks. Like trees bedadshed with rain; in that sad time My manye eyes did scorn an humble tear;
And what these sorrows could not thense exhale,
Thy beauty hath, and made them blind with weep.
I never sued to friend nor enemy; [ing,
My tongue could never learn sweet smoothing
But, now thy beauty is proposed my fee; [words;
My proud heart sue's and prompts my tongue to speak;
[Sneaks severely at him.
Teach 't, that I'd lips such scorn, for they were made
For kissing, lady, not for such contempt.
If thy revengeful heart cannot forgive,
Lo, here I lend thee this sharp-pointed sword;
Which if thou please to hide in this true bosom,
And let the soul forth that adores thee,
I'd kill'd so many, and I should die too,
And humbly beg the death upon my knee.
[He lays his broad open: she offers at it with his sword.
Nay, do not pause; for I did kill King Henry,
But 't was thy beauty that provoked me. [Edward,
Nay, now dispatch; 't was I that stab'd young
But 't was thy heavenly face that set me on.
[Here she lets fall the sword.
Take up the sword again, or take up me.
Anne. Arise; dispenser: though I wish thy death,
I will not be the executioner.
Glou. [Exit. And, then, my peace is made.
Anne. That shall you know hereafter.
Glou. But shall I live in hope?
Anne. All men, I hope, live so.
Glou. Vouchsafe to wear this ring.
Anne. To take is not to give.
Glou. Look, how this ring encompasseth thy finger,
Even so thy breast encloses my poor heart
Wear both of them, for both of them are thine.
And if thy poor devoted suppliant may
But beg one favour at thy gracious hand,
Thou dost confirm his happiness for ever.
Anne. What is it? [designs
Glou. That it would please thee leave these sad
To him that hath more cause to be a mourner,
And presently repair to Crosby Place:
Where, after I have solemnly inter'd
At Chesterseye monastery this noble king,
And wet his grave with my repentant tears,
I will with all expedition dy see you;
For divers unknown reasons, I beseech you,
Grant me this boon.
Anne. With all my heart; and much it joys me too,
To see you become so penitent.
Tressel and Berkeley, go along with me.
Glou. Did me farewell.
Anne. This is more than you deserve;
But since you teach me how to flatter you,
Imagine I have said farewell already.
[Excuit Lady Anne, Tressel, and Berkeley.
Glou. Sirs, take up the corpse.
Gent. Glou. No, to White-Friars; there attend my coming. [Excuit all but Gloucester.
Was ever woman in this humour wood? Was ever woman in this humour won?
I'll have her: but I will not keep her long.
What! she is my mother, and his father,
To take her in her heart's extreme hate,
With curses in her mouth, tears in her eyes,
The bleeding witness of her hatred by;
[me,
Having God, her conscience, and these bars against
And nothing to back my suit at all,
But the plain devil and dissembling looks,
And yet to win her, all the world to nothing!
Ha!
[Sigh she forgot already that brave prince
Edward, her lord, whom I, some three months since,
Stabb'd in my angry mood at Tewksbury?
A swearer and a lovelier gentleman,
Framed in the prodigality of nature,
Young, valiant, wise, and, no doubt, right royal,
The glorious world cannot again afford;
And will she yet delace her eyes on me,
That cropp'd the golden prime of this sweet prince,
And made her widow to a godly bed?
On me, whose all not equals Edward's moiety?
On me, that halt and am unshapen thus?
My dukedom to a beggarly debtor,
I do mistake my person all this while:
Upon my life, she finds, although I cannot,
Myself to be a marvellous proper man.
I'll be at charges for a looking-glass,
And entertain some score or two of tailors,
To study fashions to adorn my body:
Since I am erec't in favour with myself,
I will maintain it with some little cost,
But first I'll turn you fellow in his grave;
And then return lamenting to my love.
Shine out, fair sun, till I have bought a glass,
That I may see my shadow as I pass. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The palace.

Enter Queen Elizabeth, Lord Rivers, and Lord Grey.
Riv. Have patience, madam: there's no doubt his majesty
Will soon recover his accustom'd health.
Grey. In that you brook it ill, it makes him worse:
Therefore, for God's sake, entertain good comfort,
And cheer his grace with quick and merry words.
Q. Eliz. If he were dead, what would betide of Riv. No other harm but loss of such a lord. [me?
Q. Eliz. The loss of such a lord includes all harm.
Grey. The heavens have bless'd you with a goodly
To be your comforter when he is gone. [son,
Q. Eliz. Oh, he is young, and his ministrion
Is put unto the trust of Richard Gloucester,
A man that none can fear, who is not met.
Riv. Is it concluded he shall be protector?
Q. Eliz. It is determined, not concluded yet;
But so it must be, if the king miscarry.

Enter Buckingham and Derby.
Grey. Here come the lords of Buckingham and Derby.
Buck. Good time of day unto your royal grace!
Der. God make your majesty joyful as you have been! [of Derby,
Q. Eliz. The Countess Richmond, good my Lord
To your good prayers will scarcely say amen.
Grey. Derby, notwithstanding she's your wife,
And loves not me, be you, good lord, assured
I hate not you for your proud arrogance.
Der. I do beseech you, either not believe.
The envious slanders of her false accusers;
But, if she be accused in true report,
Bear with her weakness, which I think, proceeds
From wayward sickness, and no grounded malice.
Riv. Saw you the king to-day, my Lord of Derby?
Der. But now the Duke of Buckingham and I
Are come from visiting his majesty.
Q. Eliz. What likelihood of his amendment, lords?
Buck. Madam, good hope; his grace speaks cheerfully, [with him?
Q. Eliz. God grant him health! Did you confer

Buck, Madam, we did: he desires to make atonement
Betwixt the Duke of Gloucester and your brothers,
And betwixt them and my lord chamberlain;
And sent to warn them to his royal presence. [be:
Q. Eliz. Would all were well! but that will never
I fear our happiness is at the highest.

Enter Gloucester, Hastings, and Dorset.
Glo. They do me wrong, and I will not endure it:
Who are they that complain unto the king,
That I, forsooth, am stern and love them not?
By holy Paul, they love his grace but lightly;
That fill his ears with such dissentsious rumours.
Because they cannot endure the smile in men's faces, smooth, deceiv and cog,
Duck with French nods and apish courtesy,
I must be held a rancorous enemy,
Cannot a plain man live and think no harm,
But thus his simple truth must be abused
By silken, sly, insinuating Jacks? [grace?
Ric. To whom in all this presence speaks your
Glo. To thee, that hast nor honesty nor grace.
When have I injured thee? when done thee wrong?
Or thee? or thee? or any of thy faction?
A plague upon you all! His royal person,—
Who would bestow, yet not bestow'd should wish!—
Cannot be quiet scarce a breathing-while,
But you must trouble him with lewd complaints.
Q. Eliz. Brother of Gloucester, you mistake the

And not provoked by any suitor else;
Alone, belike, at your interior hatred,
Which in your outward actions shows itself
Against my kindred, brothers, and myself,
Makes him to send; that thereby he may gather
The ground of your ill-will, and so remove it.
Glo. I cannot tell: the world is grown so bad,
That were the make pay where eagles dare not perch:
Since every Jack became a gentleman,
There's many a gentle person made a Jack.
Q. Eliz. Come, come, we know your meaning,
brother Gloucester;
You envy my advancement and my friends':
God grant we never may have need of you! [you:
Glo. Meantime, God grants that we have need of Myself disgraced, and the nobility

 Held in contempt; whilst many fair promotions
Are daily given to ennoble those [noble.

Q. Eliz. By Him that raised me to this careful height
From that contented hap which I enjoy'd,
I never did incense his majesty
Against the Duke of Clarence, but have been
An earnest advocate to plead for him.
My lord, you do me shamefull injury,
Falsely to draw me in these vile suspects.
Glo. You may deny that you were not the cause
Of my Lord Hastings' late imprisonment.
Ric. She may, my lord, for—[not so? She may, Lord Rivers! why, who knows
She may do more, sir, than denying that;
She may help you to many fair preferments,
And then deny her aiding hand therein,
And lay those honours on your high deserts.
What may she not? She may, yea, marry, may she,—
Ric. She may, Lord Rivers, I know she may she.
Q. Eliz. What, marry, may she? marry with a king,
A bachelor, a harmless scribbler too:
I was your grandam had a worse match. [borne
Q. Eliz. My Lord of Gloucester, I have too long
Your blunt upbraiding and your bitter scoffs;
By hearing but little profit.
With these gross taunts I often have endured,
I had rather be a country servant-maid
Than a great queen, with this condition,
To be thus taunted, scorn'd, and taunted at:

Enter Queen Margaret, behind.
Small joy have I in being England's queen. [thee!
Q. Mar. And lessen'd be that small, God, I beseech

Q. Mar. Out, devil! I remember them too well:
Thou searest my husband Henry in the Tower.
A villain, my poor soul! a villain truly. [king.
Glo. Ere you were queen, yea, or your husband
I was a pack-horse in his great affairs;
A weeder-out of his proud adversaries,
A liberal rewarder of his friends:
To royalise his blood I spilt mine own. [thine.
Q. Mar. Yea, and much better blood than his or
Glo. In all which time you and your husband
Were factions for the house of Lancaster;
Gray And, Rivers, so were you. Was not your husband
In Margaret's battle at Saint Alban's slain?
Let me put in your minds, if you forget,
What honest service should you give us, and what you are;
Withal, what I have been, and what I am.
Q. Mar. A murderous villain, and so still thouart.
Glo. Poor Clarence did forsake his father, War-
vick;
Yea, and forswore himself which Jean pardon!—
Q. Mar. Which God revenge!
Glo. To fight on Edward's party for the crown;
And for his need, poor lord, he is mew'd up.
I would to God my heart were flint like Edward's; Or Edward's soft and pitiful, like mine:
I am too childish-foolish for this world. [world,
Q. Mar. His thee to hell for shame, and leave the Thee castradon, thy kingdom is.
Ric. My Lord of Gloucester, in those busy days Which here you urge to prove us enemies,
We follow'd then our lord, our lawful king:
So should we you, if you should be our king.
Glo. If I should be! I had rather be a pedlar;
Far be it to my heart, the thought of it!
Q. Eliz. As little joy, my lord, as you suppose
You should enjoy, were you this country's king,
As little joy may you suppose in me,
That I enjoy, being the queen thereof.
Q. Mar. A little joy enjoys the queen thereof;
For I am never to be thought an old or press'd,
I can no longer hold me patient. [Advancing,
Hear me, you wrangling pirates, that fall out
In sharing that which you have pill'd from me!
Which of you trembles not that looks on me?
It not, that, I being queen, you bow like subjects,
Yet till you have been deposed, you quake like rebels? O gentle villain, do not turn away! [my sight?
Glo. Foul wrinkled witch, what maketh thou in
That will I make before I let thee go.
Glo. Wert thou not banished on pain of death?
Q. Mar. I was; but I do find more pain in banishment.
Than death can yield me here by my abode.
A husband and a son thou owest to me;
And thou a kingdom; all of you allegiance:
The sorrow that I have, by right is yours,
And all the pleasures you should have mine.
Glo. The curse my noble father laid on thee,
When thou didst crown his warlike brows with paper
And with thy scorns drew'st rivers from his eyes,
As thou didst try them, gavest the duke a clout
Steepe'd in the faintless blood of pretty Rutland—

ACT I.  KING RICHARD III.  SCENE III.

Denounced against thee, are all fall’n upon thee; And God, not we, hath plagued thy bloody deed. O. Eliz. So just is God, to right the innocent.

Q. Mar. Pout shame upon you! you have all moved mine. [your duty.

Ric. Were you well served, you would be taught Q. Mar. To serve me well; you all should do me duty, Teach me to be your queen, and you my subjects: O. serve me well, and teach yourselves that duty! Dor. Dispute not with her; she is lunatic.

[pert: Q. Mar. Peace, master marquess, you are making Your fire-hued step up of honour is scarce current. O. that your young nobility could judge What ‘t were to lose it, and be miserable! They that stand high have many blasts to shake them; And if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces. Glo. Good counsel, marley: learn it, learn it, marquess.

Dor. It toucheth you, my lord, as much as me. Glo. Yea, and much more: but I was born soligh, Our airy bulwark in the cedar’s top, And dainties with the wind and scorns the sun. Q. Mar. And turns the sun to shade; alas! alas! Witness my son, now in the shade of death: Whose bright out-shining beams thy cloudy wrath Hath in eternal darkness folded up. Your airy bulwark in your airy’s nest. O God, that seest it, do not suffer it: As it was won with blood, lost it so!

Buck. Have done! for shame, if not for charity. Q. Mar. Urge neither charity nor shame to me: Uncharitably with me you have dealt, And shamefully by you my hopes are butcher’d. My charity is outrage, life my shame; And in that shame still live my sorrow’s rage! Buck. Have done, have done, [hand, Q. Mar. O Princely Buckingham, I’ll kiss thy In sign of league and amity with thee: Now fair befall thee and thy noble house! Thy garments are not spotted with our blood, Nor thou within the compass of my curse. Buck. Nor no one here; for curses never pass The lips of those that breathe them in the air. Q. Mar. I’ll not believe but they ascend the sky, And there awake God’s gentle-sleeping peace. O Buckingham, take heed of yonder dog! Look, when he fawns, he bites; and when he bites, His vomit such a fruit for the racketh to the death: Have not to do with him, beware of him; Sin, death, and hell have set their marks on him, And all their ministers attend on him. [ingham? Glo. What doth she say, my Lord of Buck- Buck. Nothing that I respect, my gracious lord. Q. Mar. What dost thou scorn me for my gentle counsel? And soothe the devil that I warn thee from? O, but remember this another day, When he shall split thy very heart with sorrow, And say poor Margaret was a prophetess! Live each of you the subjects to his hate, And he to yours, and all of you to God’s! [Exit.

Hest. My hair doth stand on end to hear her curses. [lery.

Ric. And so doth mine: I must why she’s at lib- Glo. I cannot blame her; by God’s holy mother, She hath had too much wrong; and I repent My part thereof that I have done to her. O. Eliz. I never did her any, to my knowledge. Glo. But you have all the vantage of her wrong. I was too hot to do somebody good, That is too cold in thinking of it now. Marry, as for Clarence, do I think he will; He is stark’d up to fettling for his pains: God pardon them that are the cause of it! Ric. A virtuous and a Christian-like conclusion, To pray for them that have done scathe to us. Glo. So do I ever: [aside] being well advised. For had I cursed now, I had cursed myself.

Hest. False-boding woman, end thy frantic curse, Lest to thy harm thou move our patience.
ACT I.  KING RICHARD III.  SCENE IV.

Enter Catesby.

Cates. Madam, his majesty doth call for you:
And for your grace; and you, my noble lords. [Exeunt.

Rich. Madam, we will attend your grace.

Glow. I do the wrong, and I suffer such harm, I begin to brawl.
The secret michiefs that I set abroad
I lay unto the grievous charge of others,
Clarence, whom I, indeed, have laid in darkness,
Namely, to Hastings, Derby, Buckingham;
And say it is the queen and her allies
That stir the king against the duke my brother.
Now, they believe it: and withal whet me
To be revenged on Rivers, Vaughan, Grey:
But then I sigh; and, with a piece of scripture,
Tell them that God bids us do good for evil;
And thus I clothe my naked villany
With old odd ends stolen out of holy writ;
And seem a saint, when most I play the devil.

Enter two Murderers.

But, soft! here come my executioners.
How now? not about hereabout, revolting rascals!
Are you now going to dispatch this deed?

First Mard. We are, my lord; and come to have the warrant,
That we may be admitted where he is.

Glow. Well thought upon; I have it here about me.

First Mard. This do we, my lord.

Glow. Fear not, my lord, we will not stand to prate;
Talkers are no good doers; be assured
We come to use our hands and not our tongues.

Glow. Your eyes drop millstones, when fools' eyes drop tears:
I like you, lads; about your business straight;
Go, go, dispatch.

First Mard. We will, my noble lord. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—London.  The Tower.

Enter Clarence and Brakenbury.

Brak. Why looks your grace so heavily to-day?

Clar. O, I have pass'd a miserable night,
So full of ugly sights, of ghastly dreams,
That, as I am a Christian faithful man,
I would not spend another such a night,
Though 'twere to buy a world of happy days,
So full of dismal terror was the time.

Brak. What was your dream? I long to hear you tell it.

[Enter Tower.

Clar. Methoughts that I had broken from the
And was embark'd to cross to Burgundy;
And, in my company, my brother Gloucester;
Who from my cabin tempted me to walk [land,
Upon the hatches: thence we look'd toward Eng-
And cited up a thousand fearful times,
During the wars of York and Lancaster
That had fell'n us. As we paced along
Upon the only footing of the hatches, [fing,
Methought that Gloucester stumbled; and, in fall,
Struck me, that thought to stay him, overboard,
Into the tumbling billows of the main.

Lord, Lord! methought, what pain it was to drown!
What dreadful noise of waters in mine ears!
What ugly sights of death within mine eyes!
Methought I saw a thousand flaming galleys;
Ten thousand men that fishes guawd upon;
Wedges of gold, great anchors, heaps of pearl,
Sec. Mard. What, shall we stab him as he sleeps?
First Mard. No; then he will say 't was done cowardly, when he wakes.
Sec. Mard. When he wakes, why, fool, he shall never wake till the judgment-day.
First Mard. Why, then he will say we stabbed him.
Sec. Mard. The very name of that word 'judgment' hath bred a kind of remorse in me.
First Mard. What, art thou afraid?
Sec. Mard. Not to kill him, having a warrant for it: but to be damned for killing him, from which no warrant can defend us.
First Mard. The very least thou hadst been resolve.
Sec. Mard. So I am, to let him live. [hym so.
First Mard. Back to the Duke of Gloucester, tell
Sec. Mard. I pray thee, stay a while: I hope my holy humour will change; 'twas wont to hold me but while one would tell twenty.
First Mard. How dost thou feel thyself now?
Sec. Mard. 'Faith, some certain dregs of conscience are yet within me.
First Mard. Remember our reward, when the deed is done.
Sec. Mard. 'Zounds, he dies: I had forgot the re-
First Mard. Where is thy conscience now?
First Mard. So when he opens his purse to give us our reward, thy conscience dies out.
Sec. Mard. Let it go; there's few or none will entertain it.
First Mard. How if it come to thee again?
Sec. Mard. 'Twill not meddle with it: it is a dangerous thing: it makes a man a coward: a man cannot steal, but it accuses him: he cannot swear, but it checks him: he cannot lie with his neighbour's wife, but it detects him: 'Tis a blushing shame that makes that mutineers in a man's bosom: it fills one full of obstacles: it made me once restore a purse of gold that I found: it haggars any man that keeps it: it is turned out of all towns and cities for a dangerous thing: and every man that means to live well endeavours to trust to himself and to live without.
First Mard. 'Zounds, it is even now at my elbow, persuading me not to kill the duke.
Sec. Mard. Take the devil in thy mind, and believe him not: he would insinuate with thee but to make thee sigh.
First Mard. Tut. I am strong-framed, he cannot prevail with me: I warrant thee.
Sec. Mard. Spoke like a tall fellow that respects his reputation. Come, shall we to this gear?
First Mard. Take him over the cord with the hitches of thy sword, and then we will chop him in the mainsey-but in the next room.
Sec. Mard. O excellent device! make a sop of him.
First Mard. Hark! he stirs: shall I strike?
Sec. Mard. No, first let's reason with him. [wine.
Clar. Where art thou, keeper? give me a cup of Sec. Mard. You shall have wine enough, my lord,
Sec. Mard. A man, as you are.
Clar. But not, as I am, royal.
Sec. Mard. Nor you, as we are, loyal.  [humble.
Clar. Thy voice is thunder, but thy looks are Sec. Mard. My voice is now the king's, my looks Clar. How darkly and how deadly dost thou speak?
Your eyes do menace me: why look you pale?
Who sent you hither? Wherefore do you come?
Both. To, to, to—
Clar. To murder me?
Both. Ay, ay.
Sec. Mard. I merely have the hearts to tell me so,
And therefore cannot have the hearts to do it.
Wherein, my friends, have I offended you? [king.
First Mard. Offended us you have not, but the Clar. I shall be reconciled to him again.

Sec. Mard. Never, my lord; therefore prepare to Clar. Are you call'd forth from out a world of men
To slay the innocent? What is my offence?
Where are the evidence that do accuse me?
What lawful quest have given their verdict up
Unto the wronging of the king? or what pronounced
The bitter sentence of poor Clarence' death?
Before I be convict by course of law,
To threaten me with death is most unlawful.
I charge you, as you hope to have redemption
By Christ's dear blood shed for our grievous sins,
That you desist hence: the deed you undertake is damnable.
First Mard. What we will do, we do upon command.
[king.
Sec. Mard. And he that hath commanded is the Clar. Erroneous vassal! the great King of kings
Hath in the tables of his law commanded
That thou shalt do no murder: and wilt thou, then,
Spare at his edict and fulfil a man's?
Take heed; for he holds vengeance in his hands,
To hurl upon their heads that break his law.
Sec. Mard. And that same vengeance doth he hurl on thee.
For false forswearing and for murder too:
Thou didst receive the holy sacrament,
To fight in quarrel of the house of Lancaster,
First Mard. And, like a traitor to the name of God, Didst break that vow; and with thy treacherous blade
Urirp'dst the bowels of thy sovereign's son.
Sec. Mard. Whom thouwert sworn to cherish and defend.  [law to us,
First Mard. How canst thou urge God's dreadful
When thou hast broke it in so dear degree?
Clar. Alas! for whose sake didst thou ill deed?
For Edward, for my brother, for his sake:
Why, sirs,
He sends ye not to murder me for this;
For in this sin he is as deep as I.
If God will be revenged for this deed,
O, know you yet, he doth it publicly:
Take not the quarrel from his powerful arm;
He needs no indirect nor lawless course
To cut off those that have offended him.  [inter.
First Mard. Who made thee, then, a bloody mini-
When gallant-sprungling brave Plantagenet,
That princely novice, was struck dead by thee?
Clar. My brother's love, the devil, and my rage.
First Mard. Thy brother's love, our duty, and thy Provokes us hither now to slaughter thee.  [fault,
Clar. Oh, if you love my brother, hate not me;
I am his brother, and I love him well.
If you be hired for need, go back again,
And I will send you to my brother Gloucester,
Who shall reward you better for my life
Than Edward will for tidings of my death.
Sec. Mard. You are deceived, your brother Gloucester hates you.
Clar. O, no, he loves me, and he holds me dear.
Go you to him from me.
Both. Ay, so we will.  [York
Clar. Tell him, when that our princely father
Bless'd his three sons with his victorious arm,
And charged us from his soul to love each other,
He little thought of this divided friendship:
Big Gloucester think'd of this, and he will weep.
First Mard. Ay, millstones, as he less'd us to weep.
Clar. O, do not slander him, for he is kind.
First Mard. Right.
As snow in harvest. Thou deceivest thyself:
For he that us hither now to slaughter thee
Clar. It cannot be; for when I parted with him,
He hugg'd me in his arms, and swore, with soles,
That he would labour my delivery.

465
Sec. Mard. Why, so he doth, now he delivers thee
From this world's thraldom to the joys of heaven.
First Mard. Make peace with God, for you must die, my lord.
Chas. Hast thou that holy feeling in thy soul,
To counsel me to make my peace with God,
And an' thou yet to the own soul so blind,
That thou wilt war with God by murdering me?
Ah, sirs, consider, he that set thee on
To do this deed will hate you for the deed.
Sec. Mard. What shall we do?
Chas. Relent, and save your souls.
First Mard. Relent! 'Tis cowardly and womanish.
Chas. Not to relent is beastly, savage, devilish.
Which of you, if you were a prince's son,
Being pent from liberty, as I am now,
If such two murderers as yourselves came to you,
Would not entreat for life?
My friend, I spy some pity in thy looks;
O, if thine eye be not a flatterer,
Come thou on my side, and entreat for me,
As you would beg, were you in my distress:
A beggaring prince what beggar pities not?

Sec. Mard. Look behind you, my lord.
First Mard. Take that, and that: if all this will not do,
[Stabs him.
I'll drown you in the malins-eye-butt within.
Sec. Mard. A bloody deed, and desperately dis-patch'd!
How fain, like Pilate, would I wash my hands
Of this most grievous guilty murder done!

Re-enter First Murderer.
First Mard. How now! what mean'st thou, that thou help'st me not?
By heavens, the duke shall know how slack thou art!
Sec. Mard. I would he knew that I had saved his brother!
Take thou the fee, and tell him what I say;
For I repent me that the duke is slain. [Exit.
First Mard. So do not I: go, coward as thou art.
Now must I hide his body in some hole,
Until the duke take order for his burial;
And when I have my need, I must away;
For this will out, and here I must not stay.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—London. The palace.

Dorset, Rivers, Hastings, Buckingham, Grey, and
others.

And now in peace my soul shall part to heaven,
Since I have set my friends at peace on earth,
Rivers and Hastings, take each other's hand;
Dissemble not your hatred, swear your love. [hate;

And with my hand I seal my true heart's love.
Hast. So thrive I, as I truly swear the like!
K. Edw. Take heed you daily not before your

Either of you to be the other's end.
Hast. So prosper I, as I swear perfect love!
Ric. And I, as I love Hastings with my heart!
K. Edw. Madam, yourself are not exempt in this,
Nor your son Dorset, Buckingham, nor you;
You have been factious one against the other,
Wife, love Lord Hastings, let him kiss your hand:
What you do, do it unfeignedly. [member
Q. Eliz. Here, Hastings; I will never more re-

K. Edw. Dorset, embrace him; Hastings, love lord marquess.
Dor. This interchange of love, I here protest,
Upon my part shall be inviolable.
Hast. And so swear I, my lord. [They embrace.
K. Edw. Now, princely Buckingham, seal thou this league
With thy embracements to my wife's allies,
And make me happy in our union.
Dor. Why ever Buckingham doth turn his hate
On you or yours [to the Queen], but with all duteous

With hate in those where I expect most love!

And when that same friend is a foe,
Deep, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile,
Be he unto me! this do I beg of God,
When I am cold in zeal to you or yours.
[They embrace.
KING RICHARD III.

SCENE II.—The palace.

Enter the Duchess of York, with the two children of Clarence.

Boy. Tell me, good grandam, is our father dead?

Duch. No, boy; but he, poor soul, by your first order died, And that a winged Mercury did bear: Some tardy cripple bore the countermand, That came too late to see him buried.

Boy. Then, grandam, you conclude that he is dead. The king my uncle is to blame for this: The king my uncle is to blame for this: God will revenge it ere our fortune With daily prayers all to that effect.

Grandam. And so will I. [yowell.

Duch. Peace, children, peace! the king doth love Incapable and shallow innocents, You cannot guess who caused your father’s death.

Boy. Grandam, we can; to my good uncle (Glou. Told me, the king, provoked by the queen, [ester Devised impeachments to imprison him: And when my uncle told me so, he wept, [check; And hugg’d me in his arm, and kindly kiss’d my knee me on him as on my father, And he would hold me dearly as his child.

Duch. Oh, that deceit should steal such gentle shapes, And with a virtuous wizard hide foul guile! He is my son; yea, and therein my shame; Yet from my dugs he drew not this deceit. Son, Thinkst thou my uncle did dissemble, grandam?

Boy. Ay, boy.

Son. I cannot think it. Hark! what noise is this?

Enter Queen Elizabeth, with her hair about her ears; Rivers and Dorset after her.

Q. Eliz. Oh, who shall hinder me to wall and weep, To chide my fortune, and torment myself? I’ll join with black despair against my soul, And to myself become an enemy.

Duch. What means this scene of rude impatience? Q. Eliz. To make an act of tragic violence: Edward, my lord, your son, our king, is dead. Why grow the branches now the root is wither’d? Why wither not the leaves the sap being gone? If you will live, lament; if die, be brief, That our swift-winged souls may catch the king’s; Or, like obedient subjects, follow him To his new regicide, perpetual rest.

Duch. Ah, so much interest have I in thy sorrow As I had title in thy noble husband! I have bewept a worthy husband’s death, And lived by looking on his images; But now two mirrors of his princely semblance Are crack’d in pieces by malignant death, And I for comfort have but one fair glass, Which grieves me when I see my shame in him. Then art a widow: yet thou art a mother, And hast the comfort of thy children left thee: But death hath snatch’d my husband from mine embrace, And pluck’d two clusters from my feeble limbs, Edward and Clarence. O, what cause have I, Thine being but a moiety of my grief, To overgo thy plaints and drown thy cries! [death; Boy. Good aunt, you went not for our father’s How can we aid you with our kindred tears? Q. Eliz. Our fatherless distress was left unmoan’d: Your widow-dourour likewise be unwep! Q. Eliz. Give me no help in lamentation; I am not barren to bring forth complaints: All springs reduce their currents to mine eyes, That I, being govern’d by the watery moon, May send forth plentiful tears to drown the world! Oh for my husband, for my dear lord Edward! Chil. Oh for our father, for our dear lord Clarence! Duch. Alas for both, both mine, Edward and Clarence! [gone. Q. Eliz. What stay had I but Edward? and he Q. Eliz. Was never widow had so dear a loss! Chil. Were never orphans had so dear a loss! Duch. Was never mother had so dear a loss! Alas, I am the mother of these means! Their woes are parcell’d, mine are general. 467
She for an Edward weeps, and so do I;
I for a Clarence weep, and so do not she:
These babes for Clarence weep, and so do I;
I for an Edward weep, so do not they:
Alas, you three, on me, threefold distress'd,
Pour all your tears! I am your sorrow's nurse,
And I will purport it with lamentations. [pleased
Dor. Comfort, dear mother; God is much dis-
That you take with unthankfulness his doing:
In common worldly things, 'tis call'd ungrateful,
With dull unwillingness to repay a debt
Which with a bounteous hand was kindly lent;
Much more do thus be opposite with heaven,
For it will repay the royal debt for you.
Rir. Madam, bethink you, like a careful mother,
Of the young prince your son; send straight for him;
Let him be crown'd; in him your comfort lives;
Drown desperate sorrow in death Edward's grave,
And plant your joys in living Edward's throne.

Enter Gloucester, Buckingham, Derby, Hastings, and Ratcliff.
Glo. Madam, have comfort; all of us have cause
To wail the dimming of our shining star;
But none can cure their barns by wailing them.
Madam, my father doth cry me mercy;
I did not see your grace: humbly on my knee
I crave your blessing. [mind
Duch. God bless thee; and put meekness in thy Love, charity, obedience, and true duty! [man!
Glo. [Aside] Amen; and make me die a good old
That is the butt-end of a mother's blessing:
I marvel why her grace did leave it out. [peers,
Buck. You cloudy princes and heart-sorrowing
That bear this mutual heavy load of mean,
Now cheer each other in each other's love;
Though we have spent our harvest of this king,
We are to reap the harvest of his son.
The broken rancour of your high-sown hearts,
But lately splinter'd, knit, and join'd together,
Must gently be preserved, cherish'd, and kept;
Me seemeth good, that, with some little train,
Forthwith from Ludlow the young prince be fetch'd
Lither to London, to be crown'd our king.
Rir. Why with some little train, my Lord of Buckingham?
Buck. Marry, my lord, lest, by a multitude,
The new-heap'd wound of malice should break out;
Which would be so much the more dangerous,
By how much the estate is green and yet ungrown:
Where every horse bears his commanding rein,
And may direct his course as please himself,
As well the fear of harm, as harm apparent,
In my opinion, ought to be prevented.
Glo. I hope the king made peace with all of us;
And the compact is firm and true in me.
Rir. And so in me; and so, I think, in all:
Yet, since it is but green, it should be put
To no apparent likelihood of breach.
Which haply by much company might be urged:
Therefore I say with noble Buckingham,
That none so few should fetch the prince.
Hest. And so say I.
Glo. Then be it so; and go we to determine
Who they shall be that straight shall post to Ludlow.
Madam, and you, my mother, will you go
To give your curesances in this weighty business?
Buck. [Exeunt all but Buckingham and Gloucester.
Buck. My Lord, whoever journeys to the prince,
For God's sake, let not us two be behind;
For, by the way, I'll sort occasion,
As how much the state is green and yet ungrown:
To part the queen's proud kindred from the king.
Glo. My other self, my counsel's consistory,
My oracle, my prophet! My dear cousin,
Q. Eliz. But I hear, no; they say my son of York Hath almost overtaken him in his growth.
York. Ay, mother; but I would not have it so.
Duck. Why, my young cousin, it is good to grow.
York. Grandam, one night, as we did sit at supper,
My uncle Rivers talk’d how I did grow [coster,
More than my brother: ’Ay,’ quoth my uncle Gloucester,
‘Small herbs have grace, great weeds do grow apace.’
And since, methinks, I would not grow so fast,
Because sweet flowers are slow and weeds make haste.
Duck. Good faith, great faith, the saying did not
In him that did object the same to thee: [hold
He was the wretched’st thing when he was young,
So long a-growing and so leisurely,
That, if this rule were true, he should be gracious.
Arch. Why, madam, so, no doubt, he is.
Duck. I hope he is; but yet let mothers doubt.
York. Now, by my troth, if I had been remember’d,
I could have given my uncle’s grace a dolt,
To touch his growth nearer than he touch’d mine.
Duck. How, my pretty York? I pray thee, let me hear it.
York. Of Murray, they say my uncle grew so fast
That he could gnaw a crust at two hours old;
’Twas full two years ere I could get a tooth.
Grandam, this would have been a biting jest.
Duck. I pray thee, pretty York, who told thee this?
York. Grandam, his nurse.
Arch. [born.
Duck. Is that so? why, she was dead ere then was York.
If ’twere not she, I cannot tell who told me.
Q. Eliz. A parlians boy: go to, you are too shrewd.
Arch. Good madam, be not angry with the child.
Q. Eliz. Pitches have ears.

Enter a Messenger.

Arch. Here comes a messenger. What news?
Mess. Such news, my lord, as grieves me to untold.
Q. Eliz. How fares the prince?

ACT III.

The trumpets sound. Enter the young Prince, the Duke of Gloucester and Buckingham, Cardinal Bourchier, Catesby, and others.

Buck. Welcome, sweet prince, to London, to your chamber.

Glo. Welcome, dear cousin, my thoughts’ sovereign.

Buck. The weary way hath made you melancholy.

Priest. My noble lord, but our crosses doubt.

Buck. Have made it tedious, wearisome, and heavy:
I want more uncles here to welcome me. [years

Glo. Sweet prince, the untainted virtue of your
Hath not yet dwelt into the world’s deceit:
Nor more can you distinguish of a man
Than of his outward show; which, God be thanks,
Seldom or never jumpeth with the heart.
Those uncles which you want were dangerous;
Your grace attended to their sugar’d words,
But look’d not on the poison of their hearts.
God keep you from them, and from such false friends!
Prince. God keep me from false friends, but they were none.

Glo. My lord, the mayor of London comes to Enter the Lord Mayor and his train.

May. God bless your grace with health and happy days!

Prince. I thank you, good my lord; and thank
I thought my mother, and my brother York,
Would long ere this have met us on the way.
Fie, what a shrug is Hastings, that he comes not
To tell us whether they will come or no!
ACT III.

KING RICHARD III.

SCENE I.

You break no privilege nor charter there.
Oft have I heard of sanctuarv men;
But sanctuarv children are to manage now. [Once.
Come on, Lord Hastings, will you go with me?
Host. I go, my lord.

Prince. Good lords, make all the speedy haste you may.
[Aside.]

For which, for then say, you, too, if lie is all our coronation?
Glou. Where it seems best unto your royal self,
If I may converse with you, some day or two.
Your highness shall be paid at the Tower: [Exit
Then where you please, and shall be thought most
For your best health and recreation.
Prince. I will not like the Tower, of any place.
Did Julius Caesar build that place, my lord?

Buck. He did, my gracious lord, begin that place;
Which, since, succeeding ages have re-edified.
Prince. Is it upon record, or else reported
Successively from age to age, he built it?
Buck. Upon record, my gracious lord.
Prince. But, lord, it is not register'd,
Merchants the truth should live from age to age,
As 't were retail'd to all posterity,
Even to the general all-ending day. [live long.

Glou. [Aside.] So wise so young, they say, do never Prince. What say you, uncle?
Glou. [Aside.] These courtiers, fame lives long.
[Aside.] Thus like the formal wise, Iniquity,
I moralize two meanings in one word.

Prince. That Julius Caesar was a famous man;
With what his valour did enrich his wit,
His wit set down to make his valour live:
Death makes no conquest of this conqueror;
For now he lies in fame, though not in life.
I'll tell you what, my cousin Buckingham, —

Buck. What, my gracious lord?

Prince. An if I live until I be a man,
I'll win our ancient right in France again;
Or die a soldier, as I lived a king. [ward spring.

Glou. [Aside.] Short summers lightly have a forerun.

Enter young York, Hastings, and the Cardinal.

Buck. Now, in good time, here comes the Duke of York. [brother?

Prince. Richard of York! how fares our loving York. Well, my dread lord; so must I call you now.
Prince. Ay, brother, to our grief, as it is yours:
Too late he died that might have kept that title,
Which by his death hath lost much majesty,
Glou. How fares our cousin, noble Lord of York?
York. Thank you, gentle cousins: O, my lord,
You said that idle weeds are fast in growth:
The prince my brother hath outgrown me far.

Glou. He hath, my lord.

York. And therefore is he idle?

Glou. O, my fair cousin, I must not say so.
York. Then be more beholding to you than I.
Glou. He may command me as my sovereign;
But you have power in me as in a kinsman.

York. I pray you, uncle, give me this dagger.

Glou. My dagger, little cousin! with all my heart.

Prince. A beggar, brother?

York. Of my kind uncle, that I know will give;
And being but a toy, which is no grief to give.
Glou. A greater gift than that I'll give my cousin.
York. A greater gift! O, that's the sword to it.
Glou. Ay, gentle cousin, were it light enough.
York. O, then, I see, you will part with but light
In weightier things you'll say a beggar may. [gifts;
Glou. I'll give for you your grace to wear.

York. I weigh it lightly, were it heavier. [lord?

Glou. What, would you have my weapon, little York. I would, that I might thank you as you Glou. How?
York. Little.
SCENE II.—Before Lord Hastings' house.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. What, ho! my lord!

Hast. [Within] Who knocks at the door?

Mess. A messenger from the Lord Stanley.

Enter Lord Hastings.

Hast. What is 't o'clock?

Mess. Upon the stroke of four.

Hast. Cannot thy master sleep these tedious hours? So it should seem by that I have to say. First, he commends him to your noble lordship. Second, and then?

Mess. And then he sends you word he dreamt to-night the boar had rased his helm: Besides, he says there are two councils held; And that may be determined at the one Which may make you and him to rue at the other. Therefore he sends to know your lordship's pleasure, If presently you will take horse with him, And with all speed post with him toward the north, To shun the danger that his soul divides.

Hast. Go, fellow, go, return unto thy lord; Bid him not fear the separated councils: His honour and myself are at the one; And at the other is my servant Catesby: Whereof I shall not have intelligence. Tell him his fears are shallow, wanting instance: And for his dreams, I wonder he is so fond To trust the mockery of unquiet slumberers: To fly the boar before the purses, Were to incense the boar to follow us And make pursuit where he did mean no chase. Go, bid thy master rise and come to me; And we will both together to the Tower, Where, shall he see, the boar will use us kindly.

Mess. My gracious lord, I'll tell him what you say.

[Exit.]

Enter Catesby.

Cate. Many good morrows to my noble lord!

Hast. Good morning, Catesby; you are early stirring.

What news, what news, in this our tottering state?

Cate. It is a reeling world, indeed, my lord; And I believe 'twill never stand upright Till Richard wear the garland of the realm. [crowns] Hast. How! wear the garland! dost thou mean the Cate. Ay, my good lord. [shoudlers

Hast. I'll have this crown of mine cut from my ear I will see the crown so foul misplaced But canst thou guess that he doth aim at it? Cate. Ay, on my life; and hopes to find you for Upon his party for the gain thereof: [ward And thereupon he sends you this good news, That this day the queen doth die by her own hand, The kindred of the queen, must die at Pomfret.

Hast. Indeed, I am no mourner for that news, Because they have been still mine enemies: But, that I'll give my voice on Richard's side, To bar my master's heirs in true descent, God knows I will not do it to the death. [mind Cate. God keep your lordship in that gracious Hast. But I shall laugh at this a twelve-month hence, That they who brought me in my master's hate, I live to look upon their tragedy. I tell thee, Catesby.

Cate. What, my lord?

Hast. Ere a fortnight make me elder, I'll send some packing that yet think not on it.

Cate. 'Tis a vile thing to die, my gracious lord, When men are unprepared and look not for it. Hast. O monstrous, monstrous! and so falls it out With Rivers, Vaughan, Grey; and so 'twill do With some men else, who think themselves as safe As thou and I, who, as thou know'st, are dear To princely Richard and to Buckingham. Cate. The princes both make high account of you; [Aside] For they account his head upon the bridge. Hast. I know they do; and I havewell deserved it.

Enter Lord Stanley.

Come on, come on; where is your bear-spear, man? Fear you the boar, and go so unprovided? Stan. My lord, good morrow; good morrow. You may jest on, but, by the holy rood, [Catesby: I do not like these several councils, I. Hast. My lord, I hold my life as dear as you do yours; And never in my life, I do protest, Was it more precious to me than 'tis now: Think you, but that I know our state secure, I would be so triumphant as I am? [London, Stan. The lords at Pomfret, when they were from where I was, and supposed their state was sure, And they indeed had no cause to mistrust; But yet, you see, how soon the day o'ercast. This sudden stab of rancour I misdoubt! Pray God, I say, I prove a needless coward! What, shall we toward the Tower? the day is spent. Hast. Come, come, have with you. Wot you what, my lord? To-day the lords you talk of are beheaded. [heads Stan. They, for their truth, might better wear their Than some that have accused them wear their hats. But come, my lord, let us away.

Enter a Pursuivant.

Hast. Go on before; I'll talk with this good fellow. [Exit Stanley and Catesby. How now, sirrah! how goes the world with thee? Pars. The better that your lordship please to ask. Hast. I tell thee, man, 'tis better with me now Than when I met thee last where now we meet: Then was I going prisoner to the Tower, By the suggestion of the queen's allies; But now, I tell thee—keep it to thyself— This day those enemies are put to death, And I in better state than e'er I was. Pars. God hold it, to your honour's good content! Hast. Gramercy, fellow: there, drink that for me. [Throws him his purse. Pars. God save your lordship! [Exit. Enter a Priest.

Priest. Well met, my lord; I am glad to see your honour. [heart Hast. I thank thee, good Sir John, with all my Am in your debt for your last exercise; Come the next Sabbath, and I will content you. [He kiswhers in his ear.

Enter Buckingham. Buckingham.

Buck. What, talking with a priest, lord chamberlai

Your friends at Pomfret, they do need the priest; You honour hath no slaving work in hand, Hast. Good faith, and when I met this holy man, Those men you talk of came into my mind. What, go you toward the Tower?

Buck. I do, my lord; but long I shall not stay: I shall return before your lordship thence. Hast. 'Tis like enough, for I stay dinner there. Buck. [Aside] And supper too, although, thou know'lt not. Come, will you go?

Hast. I'll wait upon your lordship. [Exit.
SCENE III. — Pomfret Castle.

Enter Sir Richard Ratcliffe, with heralds, carrying Rivers, Grey, and Vaughan to death.

Rat. Come, bring forth the prisoners.

Riv. Sir Richard Ratcliffe, let me tell thee this: To-day shalt thou behold a subject die.

For truth, for duty, and for loyalty, [you!

Grey. God keep the prince from all the pack of a knot you are of damned blood-suckers. [after.

Vow. You have no part that shall cry we for this here.

Rat. Dispatch; the limit of your lives is out.

Riv. O Pomfret, Pomfret! O thou bloody prison, Fatal and ominous to noble peers! Within the guilty closure of thy walls Richard the second here was mark'd to death; And, for more staidly to thy dismal seat, We give thee up our guiltless blood to drink.

Grey. Now Margaret's curse is fall'n upon our heads.

For standing by when Richard stabb'd her son.

Grey. Then cursed she Hastings, then cursed she Buckingham, Then cursed she Richard. O, remember, God, To hear her prayers for them, as now for us! And for my sister and her princely sons, Be satisfied, dear God, with our true blood. Which, as thou know'st, unjustly must be spilt.

Rat. Make haste; the hour of death is expir'd.

Riv. Grey, come, Grey, come, Vaughan, let us all embrace: And take our leave, until we meet in heaven.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Tower of London.

Enter Buckingham, Derby, Hastings, the Bishop of Ely, Ratcliffe, Lovel, with others, and take their seats at a table.

Host. My lords, at once: the cause why we are Is, to determine of the coronation. [met In God's name, speak: when is the royal day? Buck. Are all things fitting for that royal time? Der. It is, and wants but nomination.

Ely. To-morrow, then, I judge a happy day.

Buck. Who knows the Lord protector's mind herein? Who is most inward with the royal duke? Ely. Your grace, we think, should soonest know his mind. [faces.

Buck. Who, I, my lord! we know each other's But for our hearts, he knows no more of mine, Than I of yours.

Nor I no more of his, than you of mine.

Lord Hastings, you and he are near in love.

Host. I thank his grace, I know he loves me well; But, for his purpose in the coronation, I have not sounded him, nor he desired His gracious pleasure any way therein: But you, my noble lords, may name the time; And in the duke's behalf I'll give my voice, Which, I presume, he'll take in gentle part.

[Exeunt.

Enter Gloucester.

Ely. Now in good time, here comes the duke him- self.

Glow. My noble lords and cousins all, good mor- ning have been long a sleeper; but, I hope, My absence doth neglect no great designs, Which by my presence might have been concluded. Buck. Had not you come upon your cue, my lord, With the Lord Hastings already pronounced your place, — I mean, your voice,—for crowning of the king.

Glow. Than my Lord Hastings no man might be bolder; His lordship knows me well, and loves me well.

Host. I thank your grace.

Glou, Ely. My lord of Ely!

Glou. When I was last in Holborn, I saw good strawberries in your garden there: I do beseech you send for some of them.

Ely. Marry, and will, my lord, with all my heart. [Exit.

Glou. Cousin of Buckingham, a word with you.

Catesby hath sound'd Hastings in our business, And finds the testy gentleman so hot.

As he will use his head ever to consult His master's son, as worshipful he terms it, Shall lose the royalty of England's throne. [you.

Buck. Withdraw you hence, my lord, I'll follow thee. [Exit Gloucester, Buckingham following.

Der. We have not yet set down this day of triumph; To-morrow, in mine opinion, is too sudden; For I myself am not so well provided As else I would be, were the day prolong'd.

Re-enter Bishop of Ely.

Ely. Where is my lord protector? I have sent for these strawberries.

Host. His grace looks cheerfully and smooth to— There's some conceit or other likes him well; to-day, When he doth bid good morrow with such a spirit. I think there's never a man in Christendom That can less hide his love or hate than he; For by his face straight shall you know his heart.

Der. What of his heart perceive you in his face By any likelihood he should to-day? Host. Marry, that with no man here he is offender; For, were he, he had shew'd it in his looks.

Der. I pray God he be not, I say.

Re-enter Gloucester and Buckingham.

Glow. I pray you all, tell me what they deserve That do conspire my death with devilish plots Of damned witchcraft, and that have prevail'd Upon my body with their hellish charms? Host. The tender love I bear your grace, my lord, Makes me most forward in this noble presence To doom the offenders: whatsoever they be: I say, my lord, they have deserved death.

Glow. Then be your eyes the witness of this ill: See how I am bewitch'd; behold mine arm Is, like a blasted sapling, wither'd aloof; And this is Edward's wife, that monstrous witch, Consorted with that harlot strumpet Shore, That by their witchcraft thus have marked me, Host. If they have done this thing, my gracious lord, [pet, Glow. If! then protector of this damned stran- Tellest thou me of 'tis? Then art a traitor: Off with his head! Now, by Saint Paul I swear, I will not dine until I see the same.

Lovel and Ratcliffe, look that it be done: The rest, that love me, rise and follow me. [Exeunt all but Hastings, Ratcliffe, and Lovel.

Host. Woe, woe for England! not a whit for me; For I, too fond, might have prevented this. Stanley did dream the boar did raise his helm; But I disdain'd it, and did scorn to fly: Three times to-day my foot-clotl horse did stumble, And startled, when he look'd upon the Tower, As loath to bear me to the slaughter-house. O, now I want the priest that sijke to me: I now repent I told the pursuivant, As 't were triumphing at mine enemies, How they at Pomfret bloody were butcher'd, And I, too late, had just prononcé your grace.

O Margaret, Margaret, now thy heavy curse Is lighted on poor Hastings' wretched head! [ner; Rat. Dispatch, my lord; the duke would be at din- Make a short shrift; he longs to see your head.

Host. O momentary grace of mortal men,
Which we more hunt for than the grace of God!
Who builds his hopes in air of your good looks,
Lives like a drunken sailor on a mast,
Ready, with every nod, to tumble down
Into the fatal bowels of the deep,

Shake, I say, both subsidy and brick,
He is bold to extort.

Host. O bloody Richard! miserable England!
I prophesy the fearfull'st time to thee
That ever wretched age hath look'd upon.

Come, lead me to the block; bear him my hand:
They smile at me that shortly shall be dead.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The Tower-walls.

Enter Gloucester and Buckingham, in rotten armour, mercurial ill-favoured.

Glou. Come, cousin, came thou quake, and change thy colour,
Murder thy breath in the middle of a word,
And then begin again, and stop again,
As if thou wert distraught and mad with terror?

Buck. Tut, I can counterfeit the deep tragedian;
Speak and look back, and pray on every side,
Tremble and start at wagging of a straw,
Intend deep suspicious: glibly looks
Are at my service, like enforced smiles;
And both are ready in their offices,
At any time, to grace my stratagems.

But what, is Catesby gone?

Glou. He is; and, see, he brings the mayor along.

Enter the Mayor and Catesby.

Buck. Lord May—

Glou. Look to the drawbridge there!

Buck. Mark! a drum.

Glou. Catesby, o'erlook the walls.

Buck. Lord mayor, the reason we have sent—

Glou. Look back, defend thee, here are enemies.

Buck. God and our innocence defend and guard us!

Glou. Be patient, they are friends, Ratchiff and Enter Lovel and Ratcliff, with Hastings' head.

Lovel. Here is the head of that ignoble traitor,
The dangerous and unsuspected Hastings.

Glou. So dear I loved the man, that I must weep.
I took him for the plainest harmless creature
That breathed upon this earth a Christian;
Made him my book, wherein my soul recorded
The history of all her secret thoughts:
So smooth he danc'd his vice with show of virtue,
That, his apparent open guilt omitted.
I mean, his conversation with Shore's wife,
He lived from all attainer of suspect. [traitor

Buck. Well, well, he was the covert'st shelter'd
That ever lived.

Would you imagine, or almost believe,
Were 't not that, by great preservation,
We live to tell it you, the noble traitor
This day had plotted, in the council-house
To murder me and my good Lord of Gloucester?

May. What, had he so?

Glou. What, think you we are Turks or infidels?
Or that we would, against the form of law,
Proceed thus rashly to the villain's death,
But that the extreme peril of the case,
The peace of England and our persons' safety,
Enforced us to this execution?

May. Now, fair Fellow, he deserved his death;
And you my good lords, both have well proceeded,
To warn false traitors from the like attempts.
I never look'd for better at his hands.

Buck. After he once fell in with Mistress Shore.

Glou. Yet had not we determined he should die,
Until your lordship came to see his death;
Which now the loving haste of these our friends,
Somewhat against our meaning, have prevented:
Because, my lord, we would have bad you heard
The traitor speak, and timeously confess
The manner and the purpose of his treason;
That you might well have signified the same
Unto the citizens, who haply may Misconstrue this, to his death. [serve

May. But, my good lord, your grace's word shall
As well I had seen and heard him speak;
And doubt you not, right noble princes both,
But I'll acquaint our duteous citizens
With all your just proceedings in this cause. [here,

Glou. And to that end we wish'd your lordship
To avoid the carping censures of the world.

But, since you come too late of our intents,
Yet witness what you hear we did intend:
And so, my good lord mayor, we bid farewell.

Glou. Go, after, after, cousin Buckingham.
The mayor towards Guildhall hies him in all post: There, at your meet'st advantage of the time,
Infer the bastardy of Edward's children:
Tell them how Edward put to death a citizen,
Only for saying he would make his son
Heir to the crown; meaning indeed his house,
Which, by a just sign of horror, was termed so.
Moreover, urge his hateful luxury,
And bestial appetite in change of lust;
Which stretched to his servants, daughters, wives,
Even where his lustful eye or savage heart,
Without control, listed to make his prey.

Nay, for a need, thus far come near my person:
Tell them, when that my mother went with child
Of that unsatiate Edward, noble York
My princely father then had wars in France;
And, by just computation of the time,
Found that the issue was not his begot;
Which well appeared in his complexion,
Being nothing like the noble duke my father:
But touch this sparingly, as 't were far off;
Because you know, my lord, my mother lives.

Buck. Fear not, my lord, I'll play the orator
As if the golden fee for which I plead
Were for myself, and so, my lord, adieu. [Castle;

Glou. If you thrive well, bring them to Baynard's
Where you shall find me well accompanied
With reverend fathers and well-learned bishops.

Buck. I go; and towards three or four o'clock
Look for the news that the Guildhall affords.

[Exit. Glou. Go, Lovel, with all speed to Doctor Shaw;
[To Cate.] Go thou to Friar Penker; bid them both
Meet me within this hour at Baynard's Castle.

[Exeunt all but Gloucester.

Now will I in, to take some privy order.
To draw the brats of Clarence out of sight;
And to give notice, that no manner of person
At any time have recourse unto the princes.

[Exit.

SCENE VI.—The same. A street.

Enter a Scrivener, with a paper in his hand.

Scriv. This is the indictment of the good Lord Hastings;
Which in a set hand fairly is engross'd,
That it may be this day read over in Paul's.
And mark how well the sequel hangs together:
Eleven hours I spent to write it over.
For yesterday night by Catesby it was brought me;
The precedent was full as long a-doing;
And yet within these five hours lived Lord Hastings,
Untainted, unexamined, free, at liberty.
Here's a good world the while! Why who's so gross,
That such a thing can't fall to his share?
Yet who's so blind, but says he sees it not?
Bad is the world: and all will come to nought,
When such bad dealing must be seen in thought.

ACT III.  KING RICHARD III.  SCENE VII.

-SCENE VII.- Baynard's Castle.

Enter Gloucester and Buckingham, at several doors.

Glo. How now, my lord, what say the citizens?

Buck. Now, by the holy mother of our Lord, the citizens are mum and speak not a word.

Glo. Touch'd you the bastards of Edward's children?

Bet. I did; with his contract with Lady Lucy, And his contract by deputy in France; The insatiate greediness of his desires, And his enforcement of the city wives; His tyranny for triles; his own bastards, As being got, your father then in France, And his resemblance being not like the duke: Withal I did infer your lineaments, Being the right idea of your father, Both in your form and nobleness of mind;
Laid open all your victories in Scotland, Your discipline in war, wisdom in peace, Your bounty, virtue, fair humility; Indeed, left nothing fitting for the purpose Untouch'd, or slightly handled, in discourse: And when mine oratory grew to an end, I bid them that did love their country's good Cry 'God save Richard, England's royal king!' Then did they say:

Buck. No, so God help me, they spake not a word; But, like dumb statues or breathing stones, Gazed each on other, and look'd deadly pale, Which when I saw, I reprehended them; And ask'd the mayor what meant this wild silence: His answer was, the people were not wont To be spoke to but by the receptor. Then he was urg'd to tell my tale again, 'Thus saith the duke, thus hath the duke inferred;' But nothing spake in warrant from himself. When he had done, some followers of mine own, At the lower end of the hall, hurl'd up their caps, And some ten voices cried 'God save King Richard!' And thus I took the vantage of those few, 'Thanks, gentle citizens and friends,' quoth I; 'This general applause and loving shout, Argues your wisdoms and your love to Richard:' And even here brake off, and came away.

Glo. I was mov'd, and my self mov'd, to tell them no lies; But they would have me say it to theire self; Or no doubt we 'll bring it to a happy issue. Buck. Go, go, up to the leads; the lord mayor knocks. [Exit Gloucester.

Enter the Mayor and Citizens.

Welcome, my lord; I dance attendance here; I think the duke will not be spoke withal.

Enter Catesby.

Here comes his servant: how now, Catesby, What say they here?

Cates. My lord, he doth entreat your grace To visit him to-morrow or next day: He is within, with two right reverend fathers, Divinely bent to meditation; And in no worldly suit would he be moved, To draw him from his holy exercise.

Buck. Return, good Catesby, to thy lord again;

Tell him, myself, the mayor and citizens, In deep designs and matters of great moment, No less import than our general good.
May come to have some conference with his grace.

Cates. I'll tell him what you say, my lord. [Exit. Buck. Ah, ha, my lord, this prince is not an Ed. He is not loling on a lewd day-bed, [ward! But on his knees at meditation; Not dallying with a brace of courtzans, But meditating with two wise divines; Not sleeping, to engross his idle body. But praying, to enrich his watchful soul; Happy were England, would this gracious prince Take on himself the sovereignty thereof.
But, sure, I fear, we shall ne'er win him to it. May. Marry, God forbid his grace should say us. Buck. I fear he will.

Re-enter Catesby.

How now, Catesby, what says your lord?

Cates. My lord, he wonders to what end you have assembled Such troops of citizens to speak with him, His grace not being warn'd thereof before: My lord, he fears you mean no good to him. Buck. Sure, I am my lord's counsel should suspect me, that I mean no good to him: By heaven, I come in perfect love to him; And so once more return and tell his grace.

When holy and devout religious men Are at their beads, 'tis hard to draw them thence, So sweet is zealous contemplation.

Enter Gloucester aloft, between two Bishops.

Catesby returns.

May. See, where he stands between two clergy-men! [Exit. Buck. Two props of virtue for a Christian prince, To stay him from the fall of vanity: And, see, a book of prayer in his hand, True ornaments to know a holy man. Famous Plantagenet, most gracious prince, Lead favourable ears to our request; And pardon us the interruption Of thy devotion and right Christian zeal.

Glo. Who now, my lord, that would here make apology? I rather do beseech you pardon me, Who, earnest in the service of my God, Neglect the visitation of my friends.

But, leaving this, what is your grace's pleasure?

Buck. Even that, I hope, which pleasth God And all the world; the pavement'sledeille. [above, Glo. I do suspect I have done some offence That seems discouraging in the city's eyes, And that you come to reprehend my ignorance.

Buck. You have, my lord: would it might please your grace, At our entreaties, to amend that fault! [land? Glo. Else wherefore breathe I in a Christian Buck. Then know, it is your fault that you resign The supreme seat, the throne majestical, The scepter'd office of your ancestors.

Your state of fortune and your due of birth, The lineal glory of your royal house, To the corruption of a blemish'd stock: Whilst, in the mind'sness of your sleepy thoughts, Which here we waken to our country's good, This noble isle doth want her proper limbs; Her face defaced with scars of infamy, Her royal stock with grafts and hollies, And almost shoulderd in the swallowing gulf Of blind forgetfulness and dark oblivion. Which to recur, we heartily solicit Your gracious self to take on you the charge And kingly government of this your land; Not as protector, steward, substitute,
ACT IV.

KING RICHARD III.

SCENE I.—Before the Tower.

Enter, on one side, Queen Elizabeth, Duchess of York, and Marquess of Dorset; on the other, Anne, Duchess of Gloucester, leading Lady Margaret Plantagenet, Clarence’s young daughter.

Buck. Who meets us here? my niece Plantagenet?

Led in the hand of her kind aunt of Gloucester? Now, for my life, she’s wandering to the Tower, on pure heart’s love to greet the tender princes. Daughter, well met.

Save that, for reverence to some alive,
I give a sparing limit to my tongue.

Then, good my lord, take to your royal self
This prosper’d benefit of dignity:
It not to bless us and the land withal,
Yet to draw forth your noble ancestry
From the corruption of abusing times,
Unto a lineal true-derived course.

May. Do, good my lord, your citizens entreat you.

Buck. Before I buy any dear lord, this prosper’d love.

Cate. O, make them joyful, grant their lawful suit!

Glou. Alas, why would you hear these cares on me?

I am unfit for state and majesty; I do beseech you, take it not amiss; I cannot nor I will not yield to you.

Buck. If you refuse it, — then, this prosper’d love.

Cate. Call them again, my lord, and accept their suit.

[Exeunt Buckingham with the Citizens.

Cousin of Buckingham, and you sarge, grave men, Since you will buckle fortune on my back, To bear her burden, whether I will or no, I must have patience to endure the load: But if black scoundal or foul-faced reproach Attend the sequel of your impositions, Your mere enforcement shall acquittance me From all the impure blots and stains thereof; For God he knows, and you may partly see, How far I am from the desire thereof. [it. May. God bless your grace! we see it, and will say Glou. In saying so, you shall but say the truth.

Buck. Then I salute you with this kingly title: Long live Richard, England’s royal king! May, and Cate. Amen.—as, in love and zeal, Buck. To-morrow will it please you to be crowned? Glou. Even when you please, since you will have it so.

Buck. To-morrow, then, we will attend your grace: And so most joyfully we take our leave.

Glou. Come, let us to our holy task again. Farewell, good cousin; farewell, gentle friends. [Exeunt.

Enter Brackenbury.

And, in good time, here the lieutenant comes. Master lieutenant, pray you, by your leave. How doth the prince, and my young son of York?
KING RICHARD III.

SCENE II.

_Bruk._ Right well, dear madam. By your pa-
I may not suffer you to visit them; [tence,
The king hath straitly charged the contrary.
_Q. Eliz._ The king! why, who's that?
_Bruk._ My lord, the protector.
_Q. Eliz._ The Lord protect him from that kindly Hath he set bounds betwixt his love and me! [Title!
I am their mother; who should keep me from them?
_Duck._ I am their father's mother; I will see them.
_Ane._ Their aunt I am in law, in love their mother:
Then living that weepeth: I'll hear by blane
And take thy office from thee, on my peril.
_Bruk._ No, madam, no; I may not leave it so:
I am bound by oath, and therefore pardon me. [Exit.

_Enter Lord Stanley._

_Stan._ Let me but meet you, ladies, one hour hence,
And I'll salute your grace of York as mother,
And reverent looker on of two fair queens. [minister,
[To Ane.] Come, madam, you must straight to West-
There to be crowned Richard's royal queen. [heart
_Q. Eliz._ O, cut my eye in sander, that my pent
May have some scope to beat, or else I swoon
With this dead-blighting news! [sent.
_Ane._ Despairful tidings! O unpleasing news!
_Dor._ Be of good cheer; mother, how fares your grace? [sent.
_Q. Eliz._ O, Dorset, speak not to me, get thee
Death and destruction dog thee at the heels;
They shall not moisten their bloody breath
If thou wilt offstrip death, go cross the seas.
And live with Richmond, from the reach of hell;
Go, lie thee, lie thee from this slaughter-house,
Lest thou increase the number of the dead;
And make me die the thrall of Margaret's curse.
No mother, wife, nor kinsman Richard's crowned queen.
_Stan._ Full of wise care is this your counsel, madam.
Take all the swift advantage of the hours;
You shall have letters from me to my son
To meet you on the way, and welcome you.
Be not taken tardy by unwise delay.
_Duck._ O ill-dispensing wind of misery!
My accursed womb, the bed of death!
A cockatrice hast thou hatch'd to the world,
Whose unavoyded eye is murderous. [sent.
_Stan._ Come, madam, come; I in all haste was _Ane._ And I in all unwillingness will go.
I would to God that the infant's heart
Of golden metal that must round my brow
Were red-hot steel, to scorch me to the brain!
Anointed let me be with deadly venom,
And die, ere men can say, God save the queen!
_Q. Eliz._ Go, go, poor soul, I envy not thy glory;
To feed my humour, wish myself no harm. [sent.
_Ane._ No! why? When he that is my husband
Came to me, as I follow'd Henry's corte. [hands
When scarce the blood was well wash'd from his
Which issued from my other angel husband
And that dead saint which then I weeping follow'd;
O, when, I say, I look on Richard's crowned face.
This was my wish: 'Be thou, quoth I, accursed,
For making me, so young, so old a widow!'
And, when thou wert, let sorrow haunt thy bed;
And be thy wife—if any be so mad—
As miserable by the life of thee.
As thou hast made me by my dear lord's death!''
_Lo, me I can repeat this curse again,
Even in so short a space, my woman's heart
Grossly grew captive to his honey words
And proved the subject of my own enchantment,
Which ever since hath kept my eyes from rest;
For seven and one hour in his bed
Have I enjoy'd the golden dew of sleep,
But have been waked by his timorous dreams.
Besides, he hates me for my father Warwick;
And will, no doubt, shortly be rid of me. [sent.
_Q. Eliz._ Poor heart, alas! I pity thy complain-
_Ane._ No more than from my soul I mourn for
Q. Eliz._ Farewell, thou woful wamer of glory!
_Ane._ Alas, poor soul, that takes thy leave of it!
_Duck._ To Dorset! Go thou to Richmond, and good fortune guide thee! [To Ane] Go thou to Richard, and good angels Guard thee! [To Queen Eliz.] Go thou to sanctuary, and good thoughts possess thee!
To my dear lady! peace and rest lie with me!
Eighty old years of sorrow have I seen,
And each hour's joy wrenched'd with a week of teem.
_Q. Eliz._ Stay, yet look back with me unto the Tower.
Pity, you ancient stones, these tender labes
Who enchain'd immured within your walls!
Rough cradle for such little pretty ones!
Rule ragged nurse, old sullen playfellow
For tender princes, use my babies well!
So foolish sorrow bids your stones farewell. [Exit.

SCENE II.—London. The palace.

_Enter Enter Richard, in pomp, crowned; Buckingham, Catesby, a Page, and others._

_K. Rich._ Stand all apart. Cousin of Buckingham!
_Buck._ My gracious sovereign?
_K. Rich._ Give me thy hand. [Here he ascended _his_ throne with a noise high, by thy advice
And thy assistance, is King Richard seated:
But shall we wear these honours for a day?
Or shall they last, and we rejoice in them?
_Buck._ Still live they and for ever may they last!
_K. Rich._ O Buckingham, now do I play the touch,
To try if thou be current gold indeed:
Young Edward lives: think now what I would say.
_Buck._ Say on, my loving lord. [sent.
_K. Rich._ Why, Buckingham, I say, I would be
_Buck._ Why, so you are, my thrice renowned liege.
_K. Rich._ Ha! am I king? 'Tis so: but Edward _Buck._ True, noble prince.
_K. Rich._ O bitter consequence,
That Edward still should live! 'True, noble prince!
Cousin, thou wert not wise to be so dull:
Shall I be plain? I wish the bastards dead;
And I would have it suddenly perform'd.
What said the king then? 'Tis, say, thou hast

_Cote._ [Aside to a standing by] The king is angry:
see, he bites the lip.
_K. Rich._ I will converse with iron-wrought fools
And unrespective boys: none are for me
That look into me with considerate eyes.
High-reaching Buckingham grows circumspect.
Boy!
_Page._ My lord? [gold
_K. Rich._ Know'st thou not any whom corrupting
Would tempt unto a close exploit of death?
_Page._ My lord, I know a discontented gentleman,
Whose humble means match not his haughty mind:
Gold were as good as twenty orators,
And will, no doubt, tempt him to any thing.
_K. Rich._ What is his name?
_Page._ His name, my lord, is Tyrell.
_K. Rich._ I partly know the man: go, call him

_The deep-revolving witty Buckingham
No more shall be the neighbour to my counsel:
Hath he so long held out with me unfaithed,
And stops he now for breath?_
ACT IV.

KING RICHARD III.

SCENE III.

Enter Stanley.

Now! now! what news with you?

Stan. My lord, I hear the Marquis Dorset's fled To Richmond, in those parts beyond the sea, Where he's arrived — [Stands apart.]

K. Rich. Catesby! Cate. My lord?

K. Rich. Rumour it abroad That Anne, my wife, is sick and like to die: I will take order for her keeping close. Inquire me out some old-born gentleman, Whom I will marry straight to Clarence's daughter: The boy is foolish, and I fear not him. Look, how thou dream'st! I say again, give out That Anne my wife is sick and like to die: About it: for it stands me much upon To stop all hopes whose growth may damage me. [Exit Catesby.]

I must be married to my brother's daughter, Or else my kingdom stands on brittle glass, Murder her brothers, and then marry her! Uncertain way of gain! But I am in So far in blood that we will pluck on sin: Tear-falling pity dwells not in this eye.

Re-enter Page, with Tyrrel.

Is thy name Tyrrel? [Ject.]

Tyr. Prove me, my gracious sovereign. K. Rich. Darest thou resolve to kill a friend of Tyr. Ay, my lord: [mine?]

But I had rather kill two enemies, [enemies,

K. Rich. Why, thou hast it: two deep Feet to my rest and my sweet sleep's disturbers Are they that I would have thee deal upon: Tyrrel, I mean those lastards in the Tower. Tyr. Let me have open means to come to them, And soon I'll rid you from the fear of them. K. Rich. Thou sing'st sweet music. Hark, come hither, Tyrrel: Go, by this token: rise, and lend thine ear: [Whispers.

There is no more but so: say it is done, And I will love thee, and prefer thee too. Tyr. 'T is done, my gracious lord. [sleep?

K. Rich. Shall we hear from thee, Tyrrel, ere we Tyr. Ye shall, my lord. [Exit.

Re-enter Buckingham.

Buck. My lord, I have consider'd in my mind The late demand that you did sound me in. K. Rich. Well, let that pass. Dorset is fled to Buck. I hear that news, my lord. [Richmond.

K. Rich. Stanley, he is your wife's son: well, look to it. [promise, Buck. My lord, I claim your gift, my due by For which your honour and your faith is pawn'd; The cardinals of Hereford and the nobles The which you promised I should possess. [vey K. Rich. When last I was at Exe, The mayor in courtesy show'd me the castle, [ier, And call'd it Rongemont: at which name I started, Because a bird of Ireland told me once, I should not live long after I saw Richmond.

Buck. My lord!

K. Rich. Ay, what's o'clock?

Buck. I am thus bold to put your grace in mind Of what you promised me.

K. Rich. Well, but what's o'clock?

Buck. Upon the stroke of ten.

K. Rich. Well, let it strike.

Buck. Why let it strike? [the stroke K. Rich. Because that, like a Jack, thou keep'st Betwixt thy begging and my meditation. I am not in the giving vein today. [or no.

Buck. Why, then resolve me whether you will K. Rich. Tut, tut, Thou troublest me; I am not in the vein.

SCENE III.—The same.

Enter Tyrrel.

Tyr. The tyrannous and bloody deed is done, The most arch act of pitious massacre That ever yet this land was guilty of. Dighton and Forrest, whom I did suborn To do this ruthless piece of butchery, Although they were desh'd villains, bloody dogs, Molding with tenderness and kind compassion. Wept like two children in their deaths' sad stories, 'Lo, thus,' quoth Dighton, 'lay those tenderbabs: ' 'Thus, thus,' quoth Forrest, 'girdling one another Within their innocent alabaster arms; Their lips were four red roses on a stalk, Which in their summer beauty kiss'd each other. A book of prayers on their pillow lay: [mend; Which once,' quoth Forrest, 'almost changed my But O! the devil — there the villain stopp'd; Whilst Dighton thus told on: ' We smothered The most replenished sweet work of nature, That from the prime creation e'er she framed.' Thus both are gone with conscience and remorse; They could not speak: and so I left them both, To bring this tidings to the bloody king. And here he comes.

Enter King Richard.

All hail, my sovereign liege! K. Rich. Kind Tyrrel, am I happy in thy news?

Tyr. If to have done the thing you gave in charge Beget your happiness, be happy then, For it is done, my lord. K. Rich. But didst thou see them dead? Tyr. I did, my lord. K. Rich. And buried, gentle Tyrrel? Tyr. The chaplain of the Tower hath buried them; But how or in what place I do not know. K. Rich. Come to me, Tyrrel, soon at after supper, And thou shalt tell the process of their death, Meantime, but think how I may do thee good, And be inheritor of thy desire. Farewell till soon. [Exit Tyrrel.

The son of Clarence have I pent up close; His daughter meanly have I match'd in marriage; The sons of Edward sleep in Abraham's bosom. And Anne my wife hath bid the world good night. Now, for I know the Breton Richmond ains At young Elizabeth, my brother's daughter, And, by that knot, looks proudly o'er the crown, To her I go, a jolly thriving wooer.

Enter Catesby.

Cate. My lord!

K. Rich. Good news or bad, that thou comest in so bluntly? [mend; Cate. Bad news, my lord: Ely is fled to Rich-
And Buckingham, back't with the hardy Welshmen,
Is in the field, and still his power increaseth. [hear
K. Rich. Ely with Richmond troubles me more
Than Buckingham and his rash-levied army,
Come, I have heard that fearful commenting
Is leeking out of one of your pitiful delays.
 Delay leads impotent and snail-paced beggary:
Then fiery expedition be my wing,
Jove's Mercury, and herald for a king!
Come, muster men; my counsel is my shield:
We must be brief when traitors brave the field. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV. — Before the palace.

Enter Queen Margaret.

Q. Mar. So, now prosperity begins to mellow
And drop into the rotten mouth of death.
Here in these confines slitly have I lurk'd,
To watch the waning of mine adversaries.
A dire induction am I witness to,
And will to France, hoping the consequence
Will prove as bitter, black, and tragical. [here?
Withdraw thee, wretched Margaret: who comes

Enter Queen Elizabeth and the Duchess of York.

Q. Eliz. Ah, my young princes! ah, my tender babes!
My unbown flowers, new-appearing sweets!
If yet your gentle souls fly in the air
And be not fix'd deep to perpetual,
Hover about me with your airy wings
And hear your mother's lamentation! [right
Q. Mar. Hover about her; say, that right for Hath dinn'd your infant morn to aged night.
Duch. So many miseries have craz'd my voice,
That my word-earried tongue is mute and dumb,
Edward Plantagenet, why so late dead?
Q. Mar. Plantagenet doth guilt Plantagenet,
Edward for Edward pays a dying debt. [hams,
Q. Eliz. Wilt thou, O God, fly from such gentle
And throw them in the entrails of the wolf?
When diest thou sleep when such a deed was done?
Q. Mar. When holy Harry died, and my sweet son.
Duch. Blind sight, dead life, poor mortal living ghost,
Add them to your scene, world's shame, grave's due by life
Brief abstract and record of tedious days.
Rest thy unrest on England's lawful earth.
Q. Mar. If ancient sorrow be most reverend,
Give mine the benefit of seniory,
And let my woes crown on the upper hand.
If sorrow can admit society,
Sitting down by her.

Unlawfully made drunk with innocents' blood!
Q. Eliz. O, that thou wouldst as well afford
As thou canst yield a melancholy seat! [grave
Then would I hide my bones, not rest them here.
O, who hath any cause to mourn but I?

Q. Mar. If ancient sorrow be most reverend,
Give mine the benefit of seniory,
And let my woes crown on the upper hand.
If sorrow can admit society,
Sitting down by her.

Tell o'er your woes again by viewing mine:
I had an Edward, till a Richard kill'd him;
I had a Harry, till a Richard kill'd him;
Thou hadst an Edward, till a Richard kill'd him;
Thou hadst a Richard, till a Richard kill'd him.
Duch. I had a Richard too, and thou diest kill
I had a Hutland too, thou help't to kill him. [him:
Q. Mar. Thou hadst a Clarence too, and Richard kill'd him.
From forth the kennel of thy womb hath crept
A hell-hound that doth hunt us all to death:
That dog, that had his teeth before his eyes,
To worry limbs and lap their gentle blood,
That foul defacer of God's handwork.
That excellent grand tyrant of the earth,
That reigns in galled eyes of weeping souls,
Thy womb let loose, to chase us to our graves.

O upright, just, and true-disposing God,
How do I thank thee, that this carnal cur
Preys on the issue of his mother's body,
And makes her pew-fellow with others' morn!
Duch. O Harry's wife, triumph not in my woes!
God wills thee do one thing to another,
Q. Mar. Bear with me: I am hungry for revenge,
And now I cloy me with beholding it.
Thy Edward he is dead, that stabb'd my Edward;
Thy other Edward dead, to quit my Edward;
Young York he is but boot, because both they
Are not the high fortune, now my present;
Thy Clarence he is dead that kill'd my Edward;
And the beholders of this tragic play,
The adulterate Hastings, Rivers, Vaughan, Grey,
Unlimmer smother'd in their dusky graves.
Richard yet lives, hell's black intelligencer,
Only reserved their factor, to buy souls
And send them thither: but at hand, at hand,
Enues his piteous and impiti'd end:
Earth gapes, hell burns, fiends roar, saints pray,
To have him suddenly convay'd away.
Came bond of life, dear God, I pray,
That I may live to say, The dog is dead. [come Q. Eliz. That dog diest, time would I, that I should wish for thee to help me curse
That bottled spider, that foul bunch-back'd tead!
Q. Mar. I call'd thee then vain flourish of my fortune.
I call'd thee then poor shadow, painted queen;
The presentation of but what I was;
The flattering index of a direful pageant;
One heaved a-high, to be hurl'd down below;
A mother only mock'd with two sweet babies;
A dream of what thou wert, a breath, a bubble,
A sign of dignity, a garish flag,
To be the aim of every dangerous shot;
A queen in jest, only to fill the scene.
Where is thy husband now? where be thy brothers?
Where are thy children? wherein dost thou joy?
Who suses to thee and cries 'God save the queen?'
Where be the bending plers that flatter'd thee?
Where be the thronging troops that follow'd thee?
Decline all this, and see what now thou art:
For happy wife, a most distressed widow;
For joyful mother, one that wails the name;
For queen, a very callit crown'd with care;
For one being sue'd to, one that humbly sses;
For one that would be think'd at, and one that
For one being bear'd of all, now fearing one;
For one commandning all, obey'd of none.
Thus hath the course of justice wheel'd about,
And left thee but a very prey to time;
Having no more but thought of what thou wert,
To torture thee the more, being what thou art.
Thou diest usurp my place, and dest thou not.
Usurp the just proportion of my sorrow?
Now thy proud neck bears half my burreh'd yoke;
From which even here I slip my weary neck,
And leave the burden of it all on thee.
Farewell York's wife, and one sad mischance!
These English woes will make me smile in France.
Q. Eliz. O thou well skill'd in curses, stay awhile,
And teach me how to curse mine enemies! [days;
Q. Mar. Forbear to sleep the nights, and fast the Comparre dead happiness with living woe;
Think that thy babes were fairer than they were,
And he that slew them fouler than he is:
Better thy loss makes the bad causre worse;
Revolving this will teach thee how to curse. [thine!
Q. Eliz. My words are dull; O, quicken them with Q. Mar. Thy woes will make them sharp, and warble thine own lyrics.
Duch. Why should calamity be full of words?
Q. Eliz. Windy attorneys to their client woes,
Airy succeders of intestate joys,
Poor breathing orators of miseries!

Scene IV.

Let them have scope: though what they do import
Help not at all, yet do they case the heart.

_Duch. If so, then be not tongue-tied: go with me,
And in the breath of letter words let's smoother
My damned son, which thy two sweet sons smothed—
I hear his drum: be copious in exclamations._ [er'd.

_Enter King Richard, marching, with drums and trumpets._

K. Rich. Who intercepts my expedition?

_Duch. O, she that might have intercepted thee,
By strangling thee in her accursed womb,
From all the slaughter, wretch, that thou hast done!_[crown

_Q. Eliz. Hidest thou that forehead with a golden
Where it could be grav'd, if that right were right,
The slaughter of the prince that owed that crown,
And the dire death of my two sons and brothers?
Tell me, thou villain slave, where are my children?

_Duch. Thou too'd, thou too'd, where is thy brother
And little Neill Plantagenet, his son?_[Charence

_Q. Eliz. Where is kind Hastings, Rivers, Vaughan,
Grey?

K. Rich. A flourish, trumpets! strike alarum,
Let not the heavens hear these talke-full women
Rail on the Lord's anointed: strike, I say!_[Flourish. Alarum

Either be patient, and entertain the air,
Or with the clamorous report of war.
Thus will I drown your exclamations.

_Duch. Art thou my son?_[self.

_K. Rich. Ay, I thank God, my father, and your—
_Duch. Then patiently hear my impatience. [tion

_K. Rich. Madame, I have a touch of your condi-
Which cannot Comcast the accent of reproof.

_Duch. O, let me speak!

K. Rich. Do then; but I'll not hear.

_Duch. I will be mild and gentle in my speech.

K. Rich. And brief, good mother; for I am in haste.

_Duch. Art thou so hasty? I have stay'd for thee,
God knows, in anguish, pain and agony.

_K. Rich. And came I not at last to comfort you?

_Duch. No, by the holy rood, thou know'st it well,
Thou canst on earth to make the earth my hell.
A grievous burden was thy birth to me;
Tetchy, and wayward was thy infancy.
Thy school-days frightful, desperate, wild, and furious,
Thy prime of manhood daring, bold, and venturous,
Thy age confirm'd, proud, subtle, bloody, treach-ery.

More mad, but yet more harmful, kind in hatred:
What comfortable hour canst thou name,
That ever graced me in thy company?

_K. Rich. Faith, none, but Humphrey, Honour, that call'd your grace
To breakfast once forth of my company.
If I be so disgracious in your sight,
Let me march on, and not offend your grace.

Strike up the drum.

_Duch. I prithee, hear me speak.

_K. Rich. You speak too bitterly._

_Duch. Hear me a word:

For I shall never speak to thee again.

_K. Rich. So._

_Duch. Either thou wilt die by God's just ordi-

ere from this war thou turn a conqueror._ [nance,

Or I with grief and extreme age shall perish
And never look upon thy face again.
Thereat I have taken thee my most heavy curse;
Which, in the day of battle, tire thee more
Than all the complete armour that thou wear'st!
My prayers on the adverse party fight;
And there the little souls of Edward's children
Whisper the spirits of thine enemies
And promise them success and victory.

_Bloody thou art, bloody will be thy end;
Shame serves thy life and doth thy death attend._ [Eec.

Q. Eliz. Though for more cause, yet much less spirit to curse
Abides in me; I say amen to all._ [you

_K. Rich. Stay, madam: I must speak a word with
_Q. Eliz. I have no moe sons of the royal blood
For thee to murder: for my daughters, Richard,
They shall be left as false as Edward's wives;
And therefore level not to hit their lives.

_K. Rich. You have a daughter call'd Elizabeth,
Virtuous and fair, royal and gracious.

Q. Eliz. And must she die for this? O, let her live,
And I'll corrupt her manners, stain her beauty;
And slander me as false to Edward's bed;
Throw over her the veil of infamy:
So she may live unscarr'd of bleeding slaughter,
I will confess she was not Edward's daughter.

_K. Rich. Wrong not her birth, she is of royal blood.

Q. Eliz. To save her life, I'll say she is not so.

_K. Rich. Her life is only safest in her birth.

Q. Eliz. And only in that safety died her brothers.

_K. Rich. Lo, at their births good stars were op-pos.

_Q. Eliz. No, to their lives had friends were con-

_K. Rich. All unavoyd in the doom of destiny.

_Q. Eliz. True: when avoided grace makes destiny:
My babies were destined to a fairer death,
If grace had bless'd thee with a fairer life.

_K. Rich. You speak as if that I had stain my

Q. Eliz. Cousins, indeed; and by their uncle
Of comfort, kingdom, kindred, freedom, life,
Whose hand soever lanced their tender hearts,
Thy head, all indirectly, gave direction:
No doubt the murderous knife was dull and blunt
Till it was whetted on thy stone-hard heart,
To revel in the entrails of my lambs.
But that still use of grief makes wild grief tame,
My tongue should to thy ears not name my boys
Till that my nails were anchor'd in thine eyes;
And 1, in such a desperate bay of death,
Like a poor bark, of sails and tackling reft,
Rush'd all to pieces on thy rocky bosom,
To revel in the entrails of my lambs.

_K. Rich. To discover'd, that can do me good? [heaven
To be discover'd, that can do me good?

_Q. Eliz. What is heaven? To advancement of your children, gentle lady._ [heads

_Q. Eliz. Up to some scaffold, there to lose their

_K. Rich. No, to the dignity and height of honour,
The high imperial type of this earth's glory._

_Q. Eliz. Platter my sorrows with report of it;
Tell me what state, what dignity, what honour,
Canst thou demise to any child of mine?

_K. Rich. Even all I have; yea, and myself and

Will I withhold a child of thine;

So in the Lethe of thy angry soul
Thou drown the sad remembrance of those wrongs
Which thou suppos'st I have done to thee.

_Q. Eliz. Be brief, lest that the process of thy

_K. Rich. Then know, that from my soul I love thy daughter.

_Q. Eliz. A daughter's mother thinks it with her

_K. Rich. What do you think?_[soul

_Q. Eliz. That thou dost love my daughter from thy soul:

So from thy soul's love didst thou love her brothers;
And from my heart's love do thank thee for it.

_K. Rich. Be not so hasty to confound my meaning;
The petty rebel, dull-brained’du Buckingham,
Bound with triumphant garlands will I come
And lead thy daughter to a conqueror’s bed;
To whom I will retain my conquest won,
And she shall be sole victress, Caesar’s Caesar.
Q. Eliz. What were I best to say? her father’s brother
Would she be lord? or shall I say, her uncle?
Or, lie there to her brothers and her uncles?
Under what title shall I woo for thee,
That God, the law, my honour and her love,
Can make seem pleasing to her tender years?
K. Rich. Infer fair England’s peace by this alliance [long war.
Q. Eliz. Which shall she purchase with such last hast?
K. Rich. Say that the king, which may command, entreats.
Q. Eliz. That at her hands which the king’s King
Rich. Say, she shall be a high and mighty queen.
Q. Eliz. To wall the title, as her mother doth.
K. Rich. Say, I will love her everlastingly.
Q. Eliz. But how long shall that title ever last?
Q. Eliz. But how long fairly shall her sweet life last?
K. Rich. So long as heaven and nature lengthens.
Q. Eliz. So long as hell and Richard likes of it.
K. Rich. I think, her sovereign, and her subject love.
Q. Eliz. But she, your subject, loathes such sovereignty.
K. Rich. Be eloquent in my behalf to her. [fold.
Q. Eliz. An honest tale speaks best being plainly.
K. Rich. Then in plain terms tell her my loving tale.
Q. Eliz. Plain and not so honest is too harsh a style.
K. Rich. Your reasons are too shallow and too quick.
Q. Eliz. O no, my reasons are too deep and dead;
Too deep and dead, poor infants, in their grave.
K. Rich. Harp not on that string, madam, that is past.
Q. Eliz. Harp on it still shall I till heart-strings
K. Rich. Now, by my George, my garter, and my crown.—[usurp’d.
Q. Eliz. Profaned, dishonour’d, and the third
K. Rich. I swear—
Q. Eliz. By nothing; for this is no oath;
The George, profan’d, hath lost his holy honour;
The garter, bleedish’d, pawn’d his knightly virtue;
The crown, usurp’d, disgraced his kingly glory.
If something thou wilt swear to be believed,
Swear to that something that thou hast not wrong’d.
K. Rich. Now, by the world—
Q. Eliz. ‘Tis full of thy foul wrongs.
K. Rich. My father’s death—
Q. Eliz. Thy life hath dishonour’d.
K. Rich. Then, by myself;
Q. Eliz. Thyself thyself misusset.
K. Rich. Why then, by God—
Q. Eliz. God’s wrong is most of all.
If thou hast fear’d to break an oath by Him,
The unity the king thy brother made
Had not been broken, nor my brother slain:
If thou hast fear’d to break an oath by Him,
The imperial metal, circling now thy brow,
Had graced the tender temples of my child,
And both the princes had been breathing here,
Which now, two tender playfellows for dust,
Thy broken faith hath made a prey for worms.
What canst thou swear by now?—
K. Rich. Thou the time to come.
Q. Eliz. That thou hast wronged in the time o’er
For I myself have many tears to wash [past;
Hereafter time, for time past wrong’d by thee.
The children live, whose parents thou hast slaugh-
Uncovered youth, to wall it in their age: [tred.
The parents live, whose children thou hast butcher’d,
KING RICHARD III.

Scene IV.

ACT IV.

Oh! wert thou plants, to wall it with their age. Swear not by time to come; for that thou hast Misused ere used, by time misused o'erpast.

K. Rich. As I intend to prosper and repent, So thrive I in my dangerous attempt Of lifting up my shoulders. Heaven and fortune bar me happy hours! Day, yield me not thy light; nor, night, thy rest! Be opposite all planets of good luck To my proceedings, if, with pure heart's love, Immaculate devotion, holy thoughts, I teach not thy base, base, base, base daughter! In her consists my happiness and thine: Without her, follows to this hand and me, To thee, herself, and many a Christian soul, Death, desolation, ruin and decay: It cannot be avoided but by this; It will be Salford: but by this, Therefore, good mother,—I must call you so— Be the attorney of my love to her: Plead what I will be, not what I have been; Not my deserts, but what I will deserve: Urge the necessity and state of times, And be they not in present expedients.

Q. Eliz. Shall I go win my daughter to thy will? K. Rich. And be a happy mother by the deed.

Q. Eliz. I go. Write to me very shortly, And you shall understand from me her mind.

K. Rich. Bear her my true love's kiss; and so, farewell. [Exit Queen Elizabeth.]

Relenting fool, and shallow, changing woman! Enter Ratcliff; Catesby following. How now! what news?

Rat. My gracious sovereign, on the western coast Rides a puissant navy; to the shore Throng many doubtful hollow-hearted friends, Unarm'd, and unresolved to beat them back: This night, that Richmond is their admiral! And there they build, expecting the aid Of Buckingham to welcome them ashore. [Norfolk: K. Rich. Some light-foot friend post to the Duke of Ratcliff, thyself, or Catesby; where is he?

Cate. Here, my lord, K. Rich. Fly to the duke: [To Ratcliff] Post thou to Salford: When thou comest thither,—[To Catesby] Dull, un-mindful villain, Why stand'st thou still, and go'st not to the duke? Cate. First, mighty sovereign, let me know your What from your grace I shall deliver to him, K. Rich. O, true, good Catesby: bid him keep straight The greatest strength and power he can make, And meet me presently at Salisbury. Cate. I go. [Exit Ratcliff.]

K. Rich. What is 't your highness' pleasure I shall do at Salford?

Enter Lord Stanley.

How now, what news with you?

Sten. None good, my lord, to please you with the Nor none so bad, but it may well be told. K. Rich. Hoyday, a riddle! neither good nor bad! Why dost thou run so many mile about, When thou mayst tell thy tale a nearer way? Once more, what news?

Sten. Richmond is on the seas. K. Rich. There let him work, and be the seas on Whiteliver'd runagate, what doth he there? [Exit. I know not, mighty sovereign, but by guess, K. Rich. Well, sir, as you guess, as you guess?

Sten. Stirr'd up by Dorset, Buckingham, and Ely, He makes for England, there to claim the crown. K. Rich. Is the chair empty? is the sword unsaw'd? Is the king dead? the empire unpossess'd? What heir of York is there alive but we? And who is England's king but great York's heir? Then, tell me, what doth he upon the sea? Sten. Unless for that, my liege, I cannot guess. K. Rich. Unlesse for that he comes to be your liege, You cannot guess wherefore the Wiclimes comes. Thou wilt revolt, and fly to him, I fear.

Sten. No, mighty liege; therefore mistrust me not. K. Rich. Where is thy power, then, to beat him? Where are thy tenants and thy followers? [back? Are they not upon the western shore. Safe-conducting the rebels from their ships? Sten. No, my good lord, my friends are in the north.

K. Rich. Cold friends to Richard: what do they in the north, When they should serve their sovereign in the west? Sten. They have not been commanded, mighty sovereign; Please it your majesty to give me leave, [enigm. I'll muster up my friends, and meet your grace Where and what time your majesty shall please. K. Rich. Ay, ay, thou wouldst be gone to join with I will not trust you, sir. [Richmond: Sten. Most mighty sovereign, You have no cause to hold my friendship doubtful; I never was nor never will be false. K. Rich. Well, Go muster men; but, hear you, leave behind Your son, George Stanley: look your faith be firm, Or else his head's assurance is but frail. Sten. So deal with him as I prove true to you.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My gracious sovereign, now in Devonshire, As I by friar I am much advertised, Sir Edward Courtenay, and the haughty prelate Bishop of Exeter, his brother there, With many more confederates, in arms. Enter another Messenger.

Sec. Mess. My liege, in Kent the Guildford are in And every hour more complices in arms; Flock to their aid, and still their power increaseth.

Enter another Messenger.

Third Mess. My lord, the army of the Duke of Buckingham— K. Rich. What on you, owls! nothing but songs of death? [He striketh him. Take that, until thou bring me better news. Third Mess. The news I have to tell your majesty is, that by sudden floods and fall of waters, Buckingham's army is dispersed and scatter'd; And he himself wander'd away alone, No man knows whither. K. Rich. I cry thee mercy; There is my purse to cure that blow of thine. Hath any well-advised friend proclain'd Reward to him that brings the traitor in? Third Mess. Such proclamation hath been made, my liege.

Enter another Messenger.

Fourth Mess. Sir Thomas Lovell and Lord Mar- quis Dorset,
ACT V.

SCENE I.—Salisbury. An open place.

Enter the Sheriff, and Buckingham, with halberds, led to execution.

Buck. Will not King Richard let me speak with him?

Sher. No, my good lord: therefore be patient.

Buck. Hastings and Edward's children, Rivers, Holy King Henry, and thy fair son Edward, [Grey, Vaughan, and all that have miscarried]

By underhand corrupted foul injustice,

If that thy wooden discontented souls

Do through the clouds behold this present hour,

Even for revenge mock my destruction!

This is All-Souls' day, fellows, is it not?

Sher. It is, my lord. [downday.

Buck. Why, then All-Souls' day is my body's

This is the day that, in King Edward's time, I wish'd might fall on me, when I was found False to his children or his wife's allies

This is the day wherein I wish'd to fall

By the false faith of him I trusted most;

This, this All-Souls' day to my fearful soul

Is the determined respite of my wrongs;

That high All-See that I dallied with

Hath turn'd my feigned prayer on my head

And given in earnest what I begg'd in jest.

Thus doth he force the swords of wicked men

To turn their own points on their masters' bosoms:

Now Margaret's curse is fallen upon my head;

'When he,' saith she, 'shall split thy heart with Remember Margaret was a prophetess:' [sorrow, Come, sirs, convey me to the block of shame;

Wrong hath but wrong, and blame the blam of blame.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The camp near Tamworth.

Enter Richmond, Oxford, Blunt, Herbert, and others, with drum and colours.

Rich. Fellows in arms, and my most loving

Bruised underneath the yoke of tyranny, [friends, Thus far into the bowels of the land

Have we march'd on without impediment;

And here receive we from our father Stanley

Lines of fair comfort and encouragement.

The wretched, bloody, and usurping boar,

That spoil'd your summer fields and fruitful vines,

Swills your warm blood like wash, and makes his trough

In your embowell'd bosoms, this foul swine

Lies now even in the centre of this isle,

Near to the town of Leicester, as we learn:

From Tamworth thither is but one day's march.

In God's name, cheerly on, courageous friends,

To reap the harvest of perpetual peace

By this one bloody trial of sharp war.

Oft, for another's sake, I have seen a thousand swords,

To fight against that bloody homicide.

Hrb. I doubt not but his friends will fly to us.

Blunt. He bath no friends but who are friends for fear,

Which in his greatest need will shrink from him.

Rich. All for our vantage. Then, in God's name, march:

True hope is swift, and flies with swallow's wings;

Kings it makes gods, and meaner creatures kings.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Bosworth Field.

Enter King Richard in arms, with Norfolk, the Earl of Surrey, and others.

K. Rich. Here pitch our tents, even here in Bos-

My Lord of Surrey, why look you so sad? [wroughtfield.

Sur. My heart is ten times lighter than my looks.

K. Rich. My Lord of Norfolk, —

Nor. Here, most gracious liege.

K. Rich. Norfolk, we must have knights: ha! must we not?

Nor. We must both give and take, my gracious

K. Rich. Up with my tent there! here will I lie to-night:

But where to-morrow? Well, all 's one for that. Who hath descried the number of the foe?

Nor. Six or seven thousand is their utmost power.

K. Rich. Why, our battlefield trelles that account:

Besides, the king's name is a tower of strength,

Which they upon the adverse party wait.

Up with my tent there! Valiant gentlemen, Let us survey the vantage of the field;

Call for some men of sound direction:

Let's want no discipline, make no delay;

For, lords, to-morrow is a busy day.

[Exeunt, on the other side of the field, Richmond, Sir William Brandon, Oxford, and others. Some of the Soldiers pitch Richard's tent.

Rich. The weary sun hath made a golden set,

And, by the bright track of his fiery car,
KING RICHARD III: SCENE III.

ACT V.

Gives signal of a gloomy day to-morrow. Sir William Brandon, you shall bear my standard. Give it some inky bottle, I will put it in: I'll draw the form and model of our battle, Limit each leader to his several charge, And part in just proportion our small strength. My Lord of Oxford, you, Sir William Brandon, And you, Sir Walter Herbert, stay with me. The Earl of Pembroke keeps his regiment; Good Captain Blunt, bear my good-night to him, And by the second hour in the morning Desire the earl to see me in my tent: Yet one thing more, good Blunt, before thou go'st, Where is Lord Stanley quarter'd, dost thou know? Blunt. Unless I haste in his colours much, We shall have news of him ere this done, His regiment lies half a mile at least South from the mighty power of the king. Richmond. If without peril it be possible, Good Captain Blunt, bear me my good-night to him, And give him from me this most needful scroll. Blunt. Upon my life, my lord, I'll undertake it; And so, God give you quiet rest to-night! Richmond. Good-night, good Captain Blunt. Come, gentlemen, Let us consult upon to-morrow's business: In to our tent; the air is raw and cold. [They withdraw into the tent.

Enter, to his tent, King Richard, Norfolk, Ratcliff, Catesby, and others. K. Rich. What is 't o'clock? Cate. It's supper-time, my lord; It's nine o'clock. K. Rich. I will not sup to-night. Give me some ink and paper. What, is my beaver easier than it was? And all my armour laid into my tent? [neat. Cate. It is, my liege; and all things are in readiness. Rat. mad. Norfolk, lie thee to thy charge; Use careful watch, choose trusty sentinels. Nor. I go, my lord. [To Norfolk. K. Rich. Stir with the lack to-morrow, gentle Nor. I warrant you, my lord. [Exit. K. Rich. Catesby! Cate. My lord? K. Rich. Send out a pursuing at arms To Stanley's regiment: bid him bring his power Before sunrising, lest his son George fall Into the blind eye of eternal night. [Exit Catesby. Fill me a bowl of wine. Give me a watch. Send white Surrey for the field to-morrow, Look that my steves be sound, and not too heavy. Ratcliff! Rat. My lord? [underland? K. Rich. Saw'st thou the melancholy Lord North-Rat. Thomas the Earl of Surrey, and himself, Much about cock-shut time, from troop to troop Went through the army, cheering up the soldiers. K. Rich. So, I am satisfied. Give me a bowl of wine; I have not that alacrity of spirit. [wine. Nor cheer of mind, that I was wont to have. Set it down. Is ink and paper ready? Rat. It is, my lord. K. Rich. Bid my guard watch; leave me, Ratcliff, about the mid of night come to my tent. And help to arm me. Leave me, I say, [Exit Ratcliff and the other Attendants.

Enter Derby to Richmond in his tent, Lords and others attending. Der. Fortune and victory sit on thy helm! Richmond. All comfort that the dark night can afford Be to thy person, noble father-in-law! Tell me, how fares our loving mother? Der. In, by attorney, bless thee from thy mother, Who prays continually for Richmond's good: So much that, for the silent hours steal on, And flaky darkness breaks within the east. In brief,—for so the season bids us be,— Prepare thy troops and the army ready, And put thy fortune to the arbitrement Of bloody strokes and mortal-sharpened war. I, as I may—that which I would I cannot,— With best advantage will deceive the time, And aid thee in this doubtful shock of arms: But on thy side I may not be too forward, Lest, being seen, thy brother, tender George, Be executed in his father's sight. Farewell: the leisure and the fearful time Cuts off the ceremonial vows of love And ample interchange of sweet discourse, Which so long slander'd friends should dwell upon: God give me knowledge to discern it, And being all, let me not the day go by. Once more, adieu: be valiant, and speed well! Richmond. Good lords, conduct him to his regiment: I'll strive, with troubled thoughts, to take a nap, lest leaden slumber seize me down to-morrow, When I should mount with wings of victory. Once more, good-night, kind lords and gentlemen. [Exit all but Richmond. O Thou, whose captain I account myself, Look on my forces with a gracious eye; Put in their hands thy bruising iron of wrath, That they may crush downward with a heavy fall The usurping helms of our adversaries. Make us thy ministers of chastisement, That we may raise thee in the victory! To thee I do commend my watchful soul, Ere I let fall the windows of mine eyes: Sleeping and waking, O, defend me still! [Sleeps.

Enter the Ghost of Prince Edward, son to Henry the Sixth. Ghost. [To Richard] Let me sit heavy on thy soul to-morrow! Think, how thou stab'st me in my prime of youth At Tewksbury: despair, therefore, and die! [To Richmond] Be cheerful, Richmond; for the wronged souls Of butcher'd princes fight in thy behalf: King Henry's issue, Richmond, comfort thee.

Enter the Ghost of Henry the Sixth. Ghost. [To Richard] When I was mortal, my anointed body By thee was punched full of deadly holes; Think on the Tower and me: despair, and die! Harry the Sixth bids thee despair and die! [qu'eror! To Richmond] Thou offspring of the house of Lancaster, Be thou consoled! But for God's sake, Harry, that prophesied thou shouldst be king, Doth comfort thee in thy sleep: live, and flourish! [Exit.

Enter the Ghost of Clarence. Ghost. [To Richard] Let me sit heavy on thy soul to-morrow! I, that was wash'd to death with fulsome wine, Poor Clarence, by thy guile betrayed to death! To-morrow in the battle think on me, And fall thy edge sword: despair, and die!— To Richmond] Thou offspring of the house of Lancaster, Be thou consoled! But for God's sake, good angels guard thy battle! live, and flourish![Exit.

Enter the Ghosts of Rivers, Grey, and Vaughan. Ghost of R. [To Richard] Let me sit heavy on thy soul to-morrow! Rivers, that didst Pomfret! despair, and die! Ghost of G. [To Richard] Think upon Grey, and let thy soul despair! Ghost of V. [To Richard] Think upon Vaughan, and, with guilty fear, Let fall thy lance: despair, and die! [All. [To Richmond] Awake, and think our wrongs in Richard's bosom Will conquer him! awake, and win the day! 483
Enter the Ghost of Hastings.

_Ghost._ [To Richard] Bloody and guilty, guiltily
And in a bloody battle end thy days! [awake,
Think on Lord Hastings: despair, and die! [To Richmond] Quiet untroubled soul, awake! awake!
Arm, fight, and conquer, for fair England's sake!

Enter the Ghosts of the two young Princes.

_Ghosts._ [To Richard] Dream on thy cousins
smother'd in the Tower:
Let us be led within thy bosom, Richard,
And weigh thee down to ruin, shame, and death!
Thy nephews' souls bid thee despair and die! [To Richmond] Sleep, Richmond, sleep in peace,
And wake in joy;
Good angels guard thee from the boar's annoys!
Live, and beget a happy race of kings!
Edward's unhappy sons do bid thee flourish.

Enter the Ghost of Lady Anne.

_Ghost._ [To Richard] Richard, thy wife, that wretched Anne thy wife,
That never slept a quiet hour with thee,
Now in thy sleep with guilty dreams,
To-morrow in the battle think on me,
And fall thy edgeless sword: despair, and die! [To Richmond] Thou quiet soul, sleep thou a quiet
Dream of success and happy victory! [sleep;
Thy adversary's wife doth pray for thee.

Enter the Ghost of Buckingham.

_Ghost._ [To Richard] The first was I that helped thee
The last was I that felt thy tyranny: [to the crown;
O, in the battle think on Buckingham,
And die in terror of thy guiltiness!
Dream on, death, of bloodred deeds and death;
Fainting, despair; despairing, yield thy breath! [To Richmond] I died for hope ere I could lend thee
But cheer thy heart, and be not then dismay'd: [said;
God and good angels fight on Richmond's side;
And Richard falls in height of all his pride.

[The Ghosts vanish. _King Richard starts out of his dream._

K. Rich. Give me another horse: bind up my wounds.
Have mercy, J esu!—Soft! I did but dream.
O coward conscience, how dost thou afflicte me!
The lights in blee, it is now midnight.
Cold fearful drops stand on my trembling flesh.
What do I fear? myself? there's none else by;
Richard loves Richard; that is, I am I.
Is there a murderer here? No. Yes, I am:
Then fly, What, from myself? Great reason why:
Lest I revenge. What, myself upon myself?
Alack, I love myself. Wherefore? for any good
That I myself have done unto myself?
O, no! alas, I rather hate myself!
For hateful deeds committed by myself!
I am a villain: yet I lie, I am not.
Poof, of thyself speak well: fool, do not flatter.
My conscience hath a thousand several tongues,
And every tongue brings in a several tale,
And every tale condemns me for a villain.
Perjury, perjury, in the high'st degree;
Murder, stern murder, in the direst degree;
All several sins, all used in each degree,
Throng to the bar, eying all, Guilty! guilty! I shall despair. There is no creature loves me;
And if I die, no soul shall pity me:
Nay, wherefore should they, since that I myself
Find in myself no pity to myself?
Men thought the souls of all that I had murder'd
Came to my tent; and every one did threat
To-morrow's vengeance on the head of Richard.

Enter Ratcliff.

_Rat._ My lord! [To Richard] 'Zounds! who is there?

K. Rich. O Ratcliff, I have dream'd a fearful

_What thought you then, will our friends prove all true?_ [To Richmond] Rat. No doubt, my lord?

K. Rich. O Ratcliff, I fear, I fear.—

_Rat._ Nay, good my lord, be not afraid of shadows.

K. Rich. By the apostle Paul, shadows to-night

_Have struck more terror to the soul of Richard

Than can the ghost. Here be thousand soldiers

_Armed in proof, and led by shallow Richmond._

It is not yet near day. Come, go with me;
Under our tents I'll play the eaves-dropper,
To see it any mean to shriek from me. _Exeunt._

Enter the Lords to Richmond, sitting in his tent.

_Lords._ Good morrow, Richmond! _Richon._ Cry mercy, lords and watchful gentlemen,
That you have ta'en a tardy sluggard here.

_Lords._ How have you slept, my lord? _dreams_ [dreams

_Richon._ The sweetest sleep, and fairest-boding

_Of the event of this day._

_Have I since your departure had, my lords, der'd?

_I promise you, my soul is very jocund

_Lords._ Upon the stroke of four._ [lorn.

Richon. Why, then 'tis time to arm and give dire-

_His motion to his soldiers._

More than I have said, loving countrymen,
The leisure and enforcement of the time,
Forbids to dwell upon: yet remember this,
God and our good cause fight upon our side;
The prayers of holy saints and wronged souls,
Like high-rear'd bulwarks, stand before our faces;
Richard except, those whom we fight against
Had rather have us win than them they follow;
For what is he they follow? truly, gentlemen,
A bloody tyrant and a homicide:
One raised in blood, and one in blood establish'd;
One that made means to come by what he hath,
And slaughter'd those that were the means to help
A base foul stone, made precious by the foil _[lorn;
Of England's orphans: when the high-born set;
One that hath ever been God's enemy:
Then, if you fight against God's enemy,
_God will in justice_ [ward you as his soldiers;
If you do sweat to put a tyrant down,
_You sleep in peace, the tyrant being slain;
If you do fight against your country's foes,
_Your country's fate shall pay your pains the hire;
If you do fight in safeguard of your wives,
_Your wives shall welcome home the conquerors;
If you do free your children from the sword,
_Your children's children quift it in your age._
Then, in the face of God and all these rights,
_Advance your standards, draw your willing swords.
For me, the ransom of my bold attempt
_Shall be this cold corpse on the earth's cold face;
But if I thrive, the gain of my attempt
_The least of you shall share his part thereof._
_Sound drums and trumpets boldly and cheerfully;
_God and Saint George! Richmond and victory!_ [Exeunt.

Re-enter King Richard, Ratcliff, Attendents and Forces.

K. Rich. What said Northumberland as touching

KING RICHARD III.

SCENE V.

K. Rich. He was in the right; and so indeed it is. [Clock strikes.]

Tell the clock there. Give me a calendar.

Who saw the sun to-day?

Rot. Not I, my lord. [book

K. Rich. Then he disinlays to shine; for by the He shall have heard the clock an hour ago:

A black day will it be in somebody.

Raillift!

Rot. My lord?

K. Rich. The sun will not be seen to-day;
The sky doth frown and pour upon our army.
I would these dewy tears were from my hand.

Not shine to-day! Why, what is that to me?

More than to Richmond? for the selfsame heaven
That frowns on me looks sadly upon him.

Enter Norfolk.

Nor. Arm, arm, my lord; the foe vaunts in the field.

Call up Lord Stanley, bid him bring his power:
I will lead forth my soldiers to the plain,
And thus my battle shall be ordered:
My foremost shall be over all in length,
Consisting equally of horse and foot;
Our archers shall be placed in the midst:
John Duke of Norfolk, Thomas Earl of Surrey,
Shall have the leading of this foot and horse.
They thus directed, we will follow
In the main battle, the renaissance on either side
Shall be well winged with our chiefest horse.
This, and Saint George to boot! What thinkst thou, Norfolk?

Nor. A good direction, warlike sovereign.

This found I on my tent this morning.

K. Rich. [Revels] Jockey of Norfolk, be not too
For Dickon thy master is bought and sold. [bold, A thing devised by the enemy.

Go, gentlemen, every man unto his charge:

Let not our babbling dreams affright our souls;

Conscience is but a word that cowards use.

Devised at first to keep the strong in awe:
Our strong arms are our conscience, swords our law.

March on, join bravely, let us to 't pell-mell;

If not to heaven, then hand in hand to hell.

His oration to his army.

What shall I say more than I have inferr'd?

Remember whom you are to cope withal;

A sort of vagabonds, rascals, and runaways,
A scum of Breton, and base luckey peasants,
Whom their or-eleroyed country vomits forth
To desperate ventures and assured destruction.

You sleeping safe, they bring to you unrest;

You having lands, and blest with beauteous wives,
They would restrain the one, distress the other.

And who doth lead them but a paltry fellow,

Long kept in Bretagne at our mother's cost?

A milk-sop, one that never in his life
Felt so much cold as to draw blood in snow?

Let's whip these stragglers o'er the seas again;

Lash hence these overweening rages of France,

These famish'd beggars, weary of their lives;

Who, but for dreaming on this fond exploit.

For want of means, poor rats, had hung'd them.

If we be conquer'd, let men consider us. [selves:

And not these bastard Bretons; whom our fathers

Have in their own land beaten, bob'd, and thumb'd,

And in record, left them the heirs of shame.

Shall these enjoy our lands? He with our wives?

Ravish our daughters? [Drum afar off.] Hark! I

Fight, gentlemen of England! fight, bold yeomen!

Draw, archers, draw your arrows to the head!

Spur your proud horses hard, and ride in blood;

Amaze the welkin with your broken staves!

 Enter a Messenger.

What says Lord Stanley? will he bring his power?

Mes. Lord, he doth deny to come.

K. Rich. Off with his son George's head!

Nor. My lord, the enemy is past the marsh:

After the battle let George Stanley die.

K. Rich. A thousand prayers are due within my Advance our standards, set upon our foes: [bosom;

Our ancient word of courage, fair Saint George,

Inspire us with the splen of fiery dragons!

Upon them! Victory sits on our helms. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV. —Another part of the field.

Alarum: Excursions. Enter Norfolk and forces fighting: to him Catesby.

Cutc. Rescue, my Lord of Norfolk, rescue, rescue! The king exacts more wonders than a man,

During an opposite time to danger;

His horse is slain, and all on foot he fights,

Seeking for Richmond in the throat of death.

Rescue, fair lord, or else the day is lost!

Alarums. Enter King Richard.

K. Rich. A horse! a horse! my kingdom for a horse!

Cutc. Withdraw, my lord: I'll help you to a horse.

K. Rich. Slave, I have set my life upon a cast,

And I will stand the hazard of the die:

I think there be six Richmonds in the field;

Pive have I slain to-day instead of him.

A horse! a horse! my kingdom for a horse! [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Another part of the field.

Alarum. Enter Richard and Richmond; they fight. Richard is slain. Retreat and flourish, Re-enter Richmond, Derby, sharing the crowns, with divers other Lords.

Richm. God and your arms be praised, victorious

The day is ours, the bloody dog is dead. [friends;

Der. Courageous Richmond, well hast thou acqur

Lo, here, this long-asur'd royalty

From the dead temples of this bloody wretch

Have I pluck'd off, to grace thy brows withal;

Wear it, enjoy it, and make much of it.

Richm. Great God of heaven, say Amen to all!

But, tell me, is young George Stanley living?

Der. He is, my lord, and safe in Leicester town;

Whither, if it please you, we may now withdraw us. Richmond. With shun on neither side.

Der. John Duke of Norfolk, Walter Lord Ferrers,

Sir Robert Brakenbury, and Sir William Brandon.

Richm. Inter their bodies as becomes their births:

Proclaim a pardon to the soldiers fied

That in submission will return to us:

And then, as we have ta'en the sacrament;

We will unite the white rose and the red:

Smile heaven upon this fair conjunction,

That long have frown'd upon their cunning!

What traitor hears me, and says not amen?

England hath long been mad, and scar'd herself;

The brother blindly shed the brother's blood,

The father wildly slaughter'd his son's son.

The son, compell'd, was butcher to the sire;

All this divided York and Lancaster,

Divided in their dire division.

O, now, let Richmond and Elizabeth,

The true suceeders of each royal house,

By God's fair ordinance conjoin together!

And let their heirs, God, if they be so,

Enrich the time to come with smooth-faced peace,

With smiling plenty and fair prosperous days!

Abate the edge of traitors, gracious Lord,

That would reduce these bloody days again,

And make us stand in streams of blood!

Let them not live to taste this land's increase

That would with treason wound this fair land's peace!

Now civil wounds are stopp'd, peace lives again:

That she may long live here, God say amen! [Exeunt,

ACT I.

SCENE I. — London. An antechamber in the palace.

Enter the Duke of Norfolk at one door; at the other, the Duke of Buckingham and the Lord Abergavenny.

Duck. Good morrow, and well met. How have Since last we saw in France?
Nor. I thank your grace, Healthful; and ever since a fresh admirer Of what I saw there.

Duck. An untimely age Stay'd me a prisoner in my chamber when Those suns of glory, those two lights of men, Met in the vale of Andren.

ACT I.  KING HENRY VIII.  SCENE I.

Buck.  All the while time
I was my chamber’s prisoner.
Nor.  Then you lost
The view of earthly glory: men might say,
Till this time pomp was single, but now married
To one above itself. Each following day
Became the next day’s master, till the last
Made them to wonder, and made them think
That every Frenchman was leutenant to the French,
All chaukman, all in gold, like heathen gods,
Shone down the English: and, to-morrow, they Made Britain India: every man that stood Show’d like a mine. Their dwarfish pages were
As cheminds, all gilt; the madams too,
Nor.  Make your peace: to toil, did almost sweat to bear
The pride upon them, that their very labour
Was to them as a painting: now this masque
Was cried incomparable; and the ensuing night
Made it a fool and beggar. The two kings,
Equal in lustre, were now best, now worst,
As presence did present them: him in eye,
Still him in praise: and, being present both,
Was said they saw but one: and no discern
Durst wag his tongue in censure. When these suns—
For so they phrase ’em — by their heralds challenged
The noble spirits to arms, they did perform
Beyond thought’s compass; that former fabulous
Being now seen possible enough, got credit, I trust,
That Devils was believed.

Buck.  O, you go far.
Nor.  As I belong to worship and affect
In honour honesty, the tract of every thing
Would by a good discoverer lose some life,
Which action’s self was tangible to. All was royal;
To the disposing of it nought rebel’d.
Order gave each thing view; the office did
Distinctly his full function.

Buck.  Who did guide,
I mean, who set the body and the limbs
Of so great sport together, as you say?
Nor.  One, certes, that promises no element
In such a business.

Buck.  I pray you, who, my lord?
Nor.  All this was order’d by the good discretion
Of the right reverend Cardinal of York.

Buck.  The devil speed him! no man’s ple is freed
From his ambitious linger. What had he
To do in these fierce vanities? I wonder
That such a keech can with his very bulk
Take up the rays of the beneficial sun
And keep it from the earth.

Nor.  Surely, sir,
There’s in him stuff that puts him to these ends;
For, being not prop’d by ancestry, whose grace
Chalks successors their way, nor call’d upon
For high feats done to the crown; neither allied
To eminent assistants; but, spider-like,
Out of his self-drawing web, he grew; note,
The force of his own merit makes his way;
A gift that heaven gives for him, which buys
A place next to the king.

Nor.  I cannot tell
What heaven hath given him;— let some graver eye
Pass it into that; but I can see his pride
[that,
Peep through each part of him; whence has he
If not from hell? the devil is a niggard,
Or has given all before, and he begins
A new hell in himself.

Buck.  Why the devil
Upon this French going out, look he upon him,
Without the privity o’ the king, to appoint
Who should attend on him? He makes up the file
Of all the gentry; for the most part such
To whom as great a charge as little honour
He meant to lay upon: and his own letter,
The honourable board of council out,
Most fetch him in the papers.

Nor.  Do I know
Kinsmen of mine, three at the least, that have
By this so sicken’d their estates, that never
They shall abound as formerly.

Buck.  O, many
Have broke their backs with lying manors on ’em
For this great journey. What did this vanity
But minister communication of
A most poor issue?

Nor.  Grievously I think
The peace between the French and us not values
The cost that did conclude it.

Buck.  Every man,
After the hideous storm that follow’d, was
A thing inspired; and, not consulting, broke
Into a general prophecy; That this tempest,
Dashing the garment of this peace, aboded
The sudden breach on ’t.

Nor.  Which is bidden out;
For France hath flaw’d the league, and hath at
Our merchant’s goods at Bourdeaux.

Nor.  Is it therefore
The ambassador is silenced?

Nor.  Marry, is’t.

Nor.  A proper title of a peace; and purchased
At a superfluous rate!

Buck.  Why, all this business
Our reverend cardinal carried.

Nor.  Like it your grace,
The state takes notice of the private difference
Betwixt you and the cardinal. I advise you—
And take it from a heart that wishes towards you
Honour and plentiful safety — that you read
The cardinal’s malice and his potency
Together; to consider further that
What his high hated would effect wants not
A minister in his power. You know his nature,
That he’s revengeful, and I know his sword
Hath a sharp edge: it’s long and, ’t may be said,
It reaches far; and where it will not extend,
Neither he darts it. Bosom up my counsel. [pock
You’ll find it wholesome. Lo, where comes that
That I advise your shaming.

Enter Cardinal Wolsey, the pensive before him, certain of the Guard, and two Secretaries with pipers.

The Cardinal in his passage fixeth his eye on Buckingham, and Buckingham on him, both full of disdain.

Wol.  The Duke of Buckingham’s surveyor, ha?

First Ser.  Where’s his examination?

Wol.  Is he in person ready?

First Ser.  Ay, please your grace.

Wol.  Well, we shall then know more; and Buck-shall lessen this big look.

[Exeunt Wolsey and his Train.

Buck.  This butcher’s ear is venom-mouth’d, and I
Have not the power to muzzle him; therefore, best
Not wake him in his slumber. A beggar’s book
Out worths a noble’s blood.

Nor.  What, are you chafed?
Ask God for temperance; that’s the appliance only
Which your disease requires.

Buck.  I read in’s looks
Matter against me: and his eye rivileth
Me, as his abject object: at this instant
He bores me with some trick; he’s gone to the king;
I’ll follow and outstare him.

Nor.  Stay, my lord,
And let your reason with your clever question.
What is it you go about; to climb steep hills
Requires slow pace at first: anger is like
A full-hoar horse, who being allow’d his way,
Self-nettle fires him. Not a man in England
Can advise me like you: be to yourself
As you would to your friend.

Buck.  I’ll to the king;
And from a mouth of honour quite cry down
This Ipswich fellow's insolence; or proclaim
There's difference in no persons.

Nor.

Heat not a furnace for your foe so hot
That it do singe yourself: we may outrun,
By violent swiftness, that which we run at,
And lose by over-running. Know you not,
The very hottest exercises, that he sober o'er,
In seeming to augment it wastes it? Be advised:
I say again, there is no English soul
More stronger to direct you than yourself,
It with the sap of reason you would quench,
Or but allay, the fire of passion.

Buck. Sir, I am thankful to you; and I'll go along
By your prescription: but this top-pride fellow,
Whom from the flow of gall I name not but
From sincere motions, by intelligence,
And proofs as clear as fountains in July when
We see each grain of gravel, I do know
To be corrupt and treasonous.

Nor. Say not 'treasonous.'

Buck. To the king I'll say 't; and make my vouch as strong
As shore of rock. Attend. This holy fox,
Or wolf in the wolf's skin, — for he is equal ravenous
As he is subtle, and as prone to mischief
As able to perform 't; his mind and place
Infesting one another, yea, reciprocally —
Only to show his pomp as well in France
As here at home, suggests the king our master
To this last costly treaty, the interview.
That swallow'd so much treasure, and like a glass
Did break i' the ringing.

Nor. — Buck. Pray, give me favour, sir. This cunning
The articles o' the combination drew — cardinal
As himself pleas'd; and they were certified
As he cried 'Thus let 'be'; to as much end
As give a crutch to the dead; but our count-cardinal
Has done this, and 't is well; for worthy Wolsey,
Who cannot err, he did it. Now this follows,—
Which, as I take it, is a kind of puppy
To the old dam, treason. — Charles, the emperor,
Under pretence to see the queen his aunt,—
For 't was indeed his colour, but he came
To whisper Wolsey, — here makes visitation:
His fears were, that the interview betwixt
England and France might, through their amity,
Breed him some prejudice; for in this league
Peopled harms that menced him: he privily
Deals with our cardinal; and, as I trow,—
Which I do well; for I am sure the emperor
Paid ere he promised; whereby his suit was granted;
Yes it was ask'd; but when the way was made,
And paved with gold, the emperor thus desired,
That he would please to alter the King's course,
And break the foresaid peace. Let the king know,
As soon he shall by me, that thus the cardinal
Does buy and sell his honour as he pleases,
And for his own advantage.

Nor. I am sorry
To hear this of him; and could wish he were Something mistaken in 't.

Buck. No, no a syllable:
I do pronounce him in that very shape
He shall appear in proof.

Edward Brandon, a Sergeant-at-arms before him,
and two or three of the Guard.

Bran. Your office, sergeant; execute it.

Sir, My lord the Duke of Buckingham, and Earl
Of Northampton, Stafford, and Northampton, I
 Arrest thee of high treason, in the name
Of our most sovereign king.

Buck. Lo, you, my lord,
The net has fall'n upon me! I shall perish
Under device and practice.

Bren. I am sorry
To see you ta'en from liberty, to look on
The business present: 'tis his highness' pleasure
You shall to the Tower.

Buck. It will help me nothing
To plead mine innocence; for that dye is on me
Which makes my whitest part black. The will of
Be done in this and all things! I obey. [heaven
O my Lord Abergavenny, fare you well!
Bren. Nay, he must hear you company. The king
Doth Abergavenny.
If pleased you shall to the Tower, till you know
How he determines further.

Aber. As the duke said,
The will of heaven be done, and the king's pleasure
By me obey'd!

Bren. Here is a warrant from
The king to call Lord Montacute; and the bodies
Of the duke's confessor, John de la Car.
One Gilbert Peck, his chancellor.

Buck. — So; so,
These are the limbs o' the plot; no more, I hope.

Bren. A monk o' the Chartreux.

Buck. O, Nicholas Hopkins? this

He.
Buck. My surveyor is false; the o'er-great cardinal
Hath show'd him gold; my life is span'd already:
I am the shadow of poor Buckingham,
Whose figure even this instant cloud puts on,
By darkening my clear sun. My lord, farewell.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II. — The same. The council-chamber.

Cornets. Enter the King, leaving on the Cardinal's shoulder, the Nobles, and Sir Thomas Lovell; the Cardinal places himself under the King's feet on his right side.

King. My life itself, and the best heart of it,
Thanks you for this great care: I stood it the level
Of a full-charged confederacy, and give thanks
To you that choked it. Let be call'd before us
That gentleman of Buckingham's; in person
I'll hear him of his confessions justify;
And point by point the treasons of his master
He shall again relate.

A noise within, crying 'Room for the Queen!' Enter Queen.

Katharine, ushered by the Duke of Norfolk, and the Duke of Suffolk: she kneels. The King riseth from his seat, takes her up, kisses and placeth her by him.

Q. Koth, Nay, we must longer kneel! I am a suitor.

King, Arise. and take place by us: half your suit
Never name to us; you have half our power:
The other moiety, ere you ask, is given;
Repeat your will and take it.

Q. Koth. Thank your majesty.
That you would love yourself, and in that love
Not unconsider'd leave your honour, nor
The dignity of your office, is the point
Of my petition.

King. Lady mine, proceed.

Q. Koth. I am solicited, not by a few,
And those of true condition, that your subjects
Are in great grievance: there have been commissions
Sent down among 'em, which hath flaw'd the heart
Of all their loyalties, wherein, although
My good lord cardinal, they vent reproaches
Most bitterly on you, as putter on
Of these exactions, yet the king our master—
Whose honour heaven shield from soil! — even he escapes not
Language, more properly, yea, smch which breaks
The sides of loyalty, and almost appears
In loud rebellion.

Nor. Not almost appears,
KING HENRY VIII.

SCENE II.

ACT I.

It doth appear: for, upon these taxations, the clothes all, not able to maintain the many to them longing, have put off the spinners, carders, fullers, weavers, who, for their life, compelled by hunger and lack of other means, in desperate manner during the event to the teeth. are all in uproar, and danger serves among them.

King. Taxation! Wherein? and what taxation? My lord cardinal, you that are blamed for it alike with us, knowest of this taxation? Wol. Please you, sir, I know but of a single part, inaugurated pertains to the state; and front but in that file where others tell steps with me. King. No, no, my lord, you know no more than others; but you frame [some things] that are known alike; which are not whole. To those which would not know them, and yet must perform be their acquaintance. These exactions, whereof my sovereign would have note, they are most pestilential to the hearing: and, to bear 'em, the back is sacrificed to the side. They are devised by you; or else you suffer too hard an exclamation.

King. Still exact! The nature of it? in what kind, let's know, Is this exaction? Wol. I am much too venturous in tempting of your patience: but am holden'd under your promised pardon. The subjects' grief comes through commissions, which compel from the sixth part of his substance, to be levied [each without delay; and the presence for this months; is named, your wars in France: this makes bold tongues spit their duties out, and cold hearts freeze allegiance in them; their cursed now live where their prayers did: and it's come to pass, this tractable obedience is a slave to each incensed will. I would your highness would give it quick consideration, for there is no primer business.

King. By my life, this is against our pleasure. Wol. And for me, I have no further gone in this than by a single part, not pass'd me but by learned approval of the judges. If I am traduced by ignorant tongues, which neither know my faculties nor person, yet will be the chronicles of my doing, let me say 'tis but the fate of place, and the rough brake that virtue must go through. We must not stint our necessary actions, in the fear to cope malicious censurers; which ever, as ravenous fishes, do a vessel follow that is new-trimm'd, but benefit no further than vainly longing. What we oft do best, by sick interpreters, or weak ones, is not our part accord'd; while would they, as oft, hitting a grosser quality, is cried up for our best act. If we shall stand still, in fear our motion will be mock'd or camp'd at, we should take root here where we sit, or sit state-statues only.

King. Things done well, and with a care, exempt themselves from fear; things done without example, in their issue are to be fear'd. Have you a precedent of this commission? I believe, not any. We must not rend our subjects from our laws, and seek them in our will. Sixth part of each? A trembling contribution! Why, we take from every tree top, bark, and part 'o' the timber; and, though we leave it with a root, thus hack'd, the air will drink the sap. To every county where this is question'd send our letters, with free pardon to each man that has denied. The force of this commission: pray, look to 't; I put it to your care.

Wol. A word with you. [To the Secretary. Let there be letters writ to every shire, of the king's grace and pardon. The grievous comet hardly conceive of me; let it be noised [means that through our intercession this revolt soon And pardon comes: I shall anon advise you further in the proceeding. [Exit Secretary. Enter Surveyor.

Q. Kath. I am sorry that the Duke of Buckingham is run in your displeasure. It grieves many; the gentleman is learn'd, and a most rare speaker; to nature none more bound; his training such, that he may furnish and instruct great teachers, and never seek for aid out of himself. Yet see, when these so noble benefits shall prove not well disposed, the mind growing once corrupted, they turn to vulgar的东西, and is become as black than ever they were fair. This man so complete, who was enrolled 'mongst wonders, and when we, almost with ravish'd listening, could not find his hour of speech a minute; he, my lady, hath into monstrous habits put the graces, and is occasional once were his, and is become as black as if by man's in hell. Sit by us; you shall hear—this was his gentleman in trust—of him things to strike honour sad. Bid him return the fore-roceted practices; whereof we cannot feel too little, hear too much. Wol. Stand forth, and will bold spirit relate what most like a careful subject, have collected [you, out of the Duke of Buckingham.

King. Speak freely. Serr. First, it was usual with him, every day it would infest his speech, that if the king should without issue die, he'll carry it so to make the sceptre his; these very words I've heard him utter to his son-in-law, Lord Abbergaveny; to whom by oath he menaced revenge upon the cardinal.

Wol. Please your highness, note this dangerous conception in this point. Not friend'd by his wish, to your high person his will is most malignant; and it stretches beyond you, to your friends.

Q. Kath. My learn'd lord cardinal, deliver all with charity. Speak on:

King. How ground'd he his title to the crown, upon our fail? to this point hast thou heard him at any time speak aught? Serr. He was brought to this by a vain prophecy of Nicholas Hopkins. King. What was that Hopkins? Serr. A Chartreux friar, his confessor; who fed him every minute with words of sovereignty.

King. How know'st thou this? Serr. Not long since before your highness sped to France, the duke being at the Rose, within the parish Saint Lawrence Poulney, did of me demand what was the speech among the Londoners concerning the French journey: I replied, men fear'd the French would prove pernicious, to the king's danger. Presently the duke said, 'twas the fear, indeed; and that he doubted I would prove the verity of certain words spoken by a holy monk: 'that oft,' says he, 'has sent to me, wishing me to permit John de la Car, my chaplain, a choice hour to hear from him a matter of some moment:
ACT I.

KING HENRY VIII.

SCENE III.

Whom after under the confession's seal
He solemnly had sworn, that what he spoke
My chaplains to no creature living, but
To me, should utter, with demure confidence
This pausingly ensued: Neither the king nor's heirs,
Tell you the duke, shall prosper; bid him strive
To gain the love of the commonalty: the duke
Shall govern England.'
Q. Kath.
If I know you well,
You were the duke's surveyor, and lost your office
On the complaint of the tenants: take good heed
You charge not in your spleen a noble person
And spoil their nobler soul: I say, take heed;
Yes, earnestly beseech you.
Let him on.
Go forward.
Sure.
On my soul, I'll speak but truth.
I told my lord the duke, by the devil's illusions
The monk might be deceived; and that 't was dan-
To ruminate on this so far, until
It forged him some design, which, being believed,
It was much like to do: he answer'd, ' Tush,
It can do me no damage; ' adding further,
That, had the king in his last sickness fail'd,
The duke's and Sir Thomas Lovell's heads
Should have gone off.
King.
Ha! what, so rank? Ah ha!
There's mischief in this man: canst thou say fur-
Sure, I can, my liege. [ther?
King.
Proceed.
Sure.
Being at Greenwich,
After your highness had reproved the duke
About Sir William Bionner,—
King.
I remember
Of such a time: being my sworn servant,
The duke retain'd him his. But on; what hence?
Sure.
If, 'quoth he, 'I for this had been com-
As, to the Tower, I thought, I would have play'd
The part my father meant to act upon
The usurper Richard; who, being at Salisbury,
Made suit to come in's presence; which if granted,
As he made semblance of his duty, would
Have put his knife into him.
King.
A giant traitor!
Wol.
Now, madam, may his highness live in free-
And this man out of prison? [dom,
Q. Kath.
God mend all!
King.
There's something more would out of thee;
What sa'st?
Sure.
After 'the duke his father,' with 'the
He stretch'd him, and, with one hand on his dagger,
Another spread on's breast, mounting his eyes,
He did discharge a horrible oath; whose tenour
Was, were he evil used, he would outgo
His father by as much as a performance
Does an irreparable purpose.
King.
There's his period,
To shear his knife in us. He is attach'd;
Call him to present trial; if he may
Find mercy in the law, 'tis his; if none,
Let him not seek 't of us; by day and night,
He's traitor to the height.
[Exit.

SCENE III. — An antechamber in the palace.

Enter the Lord Chamberlain and Lord Sands.
Cham.
Is't possible the spells of France should Men into such strange mysteries? [juggle
Sands.
New customs,
Though they be never so ridiculous,
Nay, let 'em be unmann'd, yet are follow'd.
Cham.
As far as I see, all the good our English
Have got by the late voyage is but merely
A fit or two o' the face; but they are shrewd ones;
For when they hold 'em, you would swear directly
Their very noses had been counsellors
To Pepin or Clotharius, they keep state so.
Sands.
They have all new legs, and lame ones:
one would take it,
That never saw 'em pace before, the spavin
Or springhalt reign'd among 'em.
Cham.
Death! my lord,
Their clothes are after such a pagan cut too,
That, sure, they've worn out Christendom.

Enter Sir Thomas Lovell.

What news, Sir Thomas Lovell?
Loc.
Faith, my lord,
I hear of none, but the new proclamation
That's clapp'd upon the court-gate.
Cham.
What is 't for?
Loc.
The reformation of our trav'l'd gallants,
That fill the court with quarrels, talk, and tailors.
Cham.
I'm glad 't is there: now I would pray
our monks
To think an English courtier may be wise,
And never see the Louvre.
Loc.
They must either,
For so run the conditions, leave those remnants
Of fool and feather that they get in France,
With all their honourable points of ignorance
Pertaining thenceunto, as fights and fireworks,
Abusing better men than they can be,
Out of a foreign wisdom, renouncing clean
The faith they have in tennis, and tall stockings,
Short blister'd breeches, and those types of travel
And understand again like honest men;
Or pack to their old playfellows; there, I take it,
They may, 'tum privilegio, wear away
The rag end of their lewdness and be laugh'd at.
Sands.
'Tis time to give 'em physic, their dis-
A grown so catching.
Loc.
What a loss our ladies
Will have of these trim vanities!
Ay, marry,
There will be woe indeed, lords: the shy whoresons
Have got a speeding trick to lay down ladies;
A French song and a fiddle has no fellow.
Sands.
The devil fiddle 'em! I am glad they are going,
For, sure, there's no converting of 'em: now
An honest country lord, as I am, beaten
A long time out of play, may bring his plain-song
And have an hour of hearing; and, by 'r lady,
I hold current music too.
Well said, Lord Sands;
Your colt's tooth is not cast yet.
Sands.
No, my lord;
Nor shall not, while I have a stump.
Cham.
Whither were you a-going?
Loc.
To the cardinal's:
Your lordship is a guest too.
Cham.
O, 't is true:
This night he makes a supper, and a great one,
To many lords and ladies; there will be
The beauty of this kingdom, I'll assure you.
Loc.
That churchman bears a bounteous mind
Indeed,
A hand as fruitful as the land that feeds us;
It's dews fall every where.
Cham.
No doubt he's noble;
He had a black mouth that said other of him.
Sands.
He may, my lord; has wherewithal: in him
Sparing would show a worse sin than ill doctrine.
Men of his way should be most liberal;
They are set here for examples.
Cham.
True, they are so;
But few now give so great ones.
My large stays:
Your lordship shall along. Come, good Sir Thomas,
SCENE IV. — A Hall in York Place.

Hautboys. A small table under a state for the Cardinal, a longer table for the guests. Then enter Anne Bullen and divers other Ladies and Gentlemen as guests, at one door; at another door, enter Sir Henry Guildford.

Guild. Ladys, a general welcome from his grace Salutes ye all; this night he dedicates To fair content and you: none here, he hopes, In all this noble levy, has brought with her One care abroad: he would have all as merry As, first, good company, good wine, good welcome, Can make good people. O, my lord, you're tardy:

Enter Lord Chamberlain, Lord Sands, and Sir Thomas Lovell.

The very thought of this fair company Chapp'd wings to me.

Cham. You are young, Sir Harry Guildford.

Studs. Sir Thomas Lovell, had the cardinal But half my joy thoughts in him, some of these Should find a running banquet ere they rested, I think would better please 'em: by my life, They are a sweet society of fair ones.

Lov. O, that your lordship were but now confessor To one or two of these!

Studs. I would I were;

They should find easy penance.

Lov. Faith, how easy?

Studs. As easy as a down-bed would afford it.

Cham. Sweet ladies, will it please you sit? Sir Harry, Place you on that side: I'll take the charge of this: His grace is entering. Nay, you must not freeze; Two women placed together makes cold weather: My Lord Sands, you are one will keep 'em wak'ing; Pray, sit between these ladies.

Studs. By my faith, And thank your lordship, By your leave, sweet ladies: If I chance to talk a little wild, forgive me; I had it from my father.

Anne. Was he mad, sir?

Studs. O, very mad, exceeding mad, in love too; But he would bite none: just as I do now, He would kiss you twenty with a breath.

To Cham. [Kisses her.] Cham. Well said, my lord. So, now you're fairly seated. Gentlemen, The penance lies on you, if these fair ladies Pass away frowning.

Studs. For my little cure, Let me alone.

Hautboys. Enter Cardinal Wolsey, and takes his state.

Wol. You're welcome, my fair guests: that noble Or gentleman, that is not freely merry, [lady, Is not my friend: this to confirm my welcome; And to you all, good health.

[Drinks.

Studs. Your grace is noble; Let me have such a bowl may hold my thanks, And save me so much talking.

Wol. My Lord Sands, I am beholding to you: cheer your neighbours. Ladies, you are not merry: gentlemen, Whose fault is this?

Studs. The red wine first must rise In their fair cheeks, my lord; then we shall have Talk as to silence. If 'em is joyous, You are a merry gamester, My Lord sands.

Studs. Yes, if I make my play.

Here's to your ladyship: and pledge it, madam, For 'tis to such a thing,—

Anne. You cannot show me.

Studs. I told your grace they would talk anon.

Wol. [Drum and trumpet, chamberlaries discharged. What's that?

Cham. Look out there, some of ye. [Exit Servant. Wol. What warlike voice, And to what end, is this? Nay, ladies, fear not; By all the laws of war you're privileged.

Re-enter Servant.

Cham. How now! what's that?

Serv. A noble troop of strangers; For they seen: they've left their baggage and landed, And lithe make, as great ambassadors From foreign princes.

Wol. Good lord chamberlain, Go, give 'em welcome; you can speak the French tongue:

And, pray, receive 'em nobly, and conduct 'em Into our presence, where this heaven of beauty Shall shine at full upon them. Some attend him.

You have now a broken banquet; but we'll mend it. A good digestion to you all; and once more I shower a welcome on ye; welcome all.

Hautboys. Enter the King and others, as masquers, habited like shepherds, ushered by the Lord Chamberlain. They pass directly before the Cardinal, and gracefully salute him.

A noble company! what are their pleasures? [pray'd Cham. Because they speak no English, thus they To tell your grace, that, having heard by fame Of this so noble and so fair assembly This night to meet here, they could do no less, Out of the great respect they bear to beauty, But leave their flocks; and, under your fair conduct, Crave leave to view these ladies and entreat An hour of revels with 'em.

Wol. Say, lord chamberlain, They have done my poor house grace; for which I pay 'em a thousand thanks, and pray 'em take their pleasures: [They choose Ladies for the dance. The King chooses Anne Bullen.

Wol. Pray, tell 'em thus much from me: There should be one amongst 'em, by his person, More worthy this place than myself; to whom, If I but knew him, with my love and duty I would surrender it.

Cham. I will, my lord.

[Whispers the Masquers.

Wol. What say they?

Cham. Such a one, they all confess, There is indeed; which they would have your grace Find out, and he will take it. Let me see, then, By all your good leaves, gentlemen; here I'll make My royal choice.

King. Ye have found him, cardinal: [Unasking. You hold a fair assembly; you do well, lord; You are a churchman, or, I'll tell you, cardinal, I should judge now unhappy.

Wol. I am glad Your grace is grown so pleasant.

King. My lord chamberlain, Prithhee, come hither: what fair lady's that?

Cham. An't please your grace, Sir Thomas Bul- len's daughter,—
ACT II.

KING HENRY VIII.

SCENE I.

WESTMINSTER. A street.

Enter two Gentlemen, meeting.

First Gent. Whither away so fast?

Sec. Gent. O, God save ye!

Even to the hall, to hear what shall become

Of the great Duke of Buckingham.

First Gent. I'll save you

That labour, sir. All's now done, but the ceremony

Of bringing back the prisoner.

Sec. Gent. Were you there?

First Gent. Yes, indeed, was I.

Sec. Gent. Pray, speak what has happened?

First Gent. You may guess quickly what.

Sec. Gent. Is he found guilty?

First Gent. Yes, truly is he, and condemn'd upon't.

Sec. Gent. I am sorry for't.

First Gent. So are a number more.

Sec. Gent. But, pray, how pass'd it?

First Gent. I'll tell you in a little. The great duke

Came to the bar; where to his accusations

He pleaded still not guilty and alleged

Many sharp reasons to defeat the law.

The king's attorney on the contrary

Urged on the examinations, proofs, confessions

Of divers witnesses: which the duke desired

To have brought vivâ voce to his face:

At which appear'd against him his surveyor;

Sir Gilbert Feck his chancellor; and John Car,

Confessor to him: with that devil-monk,

Hophkins, that made this mischief.

Sec. Gent. That was he

That fed him with his prophecies?

First Gent. The same.

All these accused him strongly: which he fain

Would have flung from him, but, indeed, he could

And so his peers, upon this evidence, [not: have found him guilty of high treason. Much

He spoke, and learnedly, for life; but all

Was either pitten in him or forgotten.

Sec. Gent. After all this, how did he bear himself?

First Gent. When he was brought again to the bar,

to hear

His kneel rung out, his judgment, he was stirr'd

With such an agony, he sweat externally.

And something spoke in choler, ill, and hasty:

But he felt to himself again, and sweetly

In all the rest show'd a most noble patience.

Sec. Gent. I do not think he fears death.

First Gent. Sure, he does not:

He never was so womanish: the cause

He may a little grieve at.

Sec. Gent. Certainly

The cardinal is the end of this.

First Gent. 'Tis likely,

By all conjectures: first, Kildare's attainder,

Then deputy of Ireland: who removed,

Earl Surrey was sent thither, and in haste too,

Lest he should help his father.

Sec. Gent. Was a deep envious one.

That trick of state

KING. I fear, too much.

Wol. There's freshier air, my lord,

In the next chamber.

KING. Lead in your ladies, every one: sweet partner.

I must not yet forsake you: let's be merry:

Good my lord cardinal, I have half a dozen healths

To drink to these fair ladies, and a measure

To lead 'em once again; and then let's dream

Who's best in favour. Let the music knock it.

(Exeunt with tranqul.)

ACT II.

First Gent. At his return

No doubt he will require it. This is noted,

And generally, whoever the king favours,

The cardinal instantly will find employment,

And far enough from court too.

Sec. Gent. All the commons

Hate him perniciously, and, 'o' the conscience.

Wish him ten fathom deep: this duke as much

They love and dote on; call him bonmutes Buck.

The mirror of all courtesy: —

[Ingham,

First Gent. Stay there, sir,

And see the noble ruin'd man you speak of.

Enter Buckingham from his arraignement: tipstaffs before him; the axe with the edge towards him: halberds on each side: accompanied with Sir Thomas Lovell, Sir Nicholas Vaux, Sir William Sands, and common people.

Sec. Gent. Let's stand close, and behold him.

You that thus far have come to pity me,

Hear what I say, and then go home and lose me.

I have this day received a traitor's judgment, [neatly.

And by that name must die: yet, heaven bear wit

And if I have a conscience, let it sink me,

Even as the axe falls, if I be not faithful!

The law I bear no malice for my death:

'Thas done, upon the premises, but justice:

But those that sought it I could wish more Chris-

Be what they will, I heartily forgive 'em; [tians,

Yet let 'em look they glory not in misconstrue,

Nor build their evils on the graves of great men:

For then my guiltless blood must cry against 'em.

For further life in this world I ever hope,

Nor will I sue, although the king have mercies

More than I dare make faults. You few that loved

And dare be bold to weep for Buckingham, [he.

His noble friends and fellows, whom to leave

Is only bitter to him, only dying,

Go with me, like good angels, to my end;

And, as the long divorce of steel falls on me,

Make of your prayers one sweet sacrifice,

And lift my soul to heaven. Lead on, o' God's name.

Lor. I do beseech your grace, for charity,

If ever any malice in your heart

Were hid against me, now to forgive me frankly.

Buck. Sir Thomas Lovell, I as free forgive you

As I would be forgiven: I forgive all;

There cannot be those numberless offences [enjoy

'Gainst me, that I cannot take peace with: no black

Shall mark my grave. Commend me to his grace:

And, if he speak of Buckingham, pray, tell him

You met him half in heaven: my vows and prayers

Yet are the king's; and, till my soul forsake,

Shall cry for blessings on him: may he live

Longer than I have time to tell his years!

Ever beloved and loving may his name be!

And when old time shall lead him to his end,

Goodness and he fill up one monument!

Lor. To the waterside I must conduct your grace;

Then give my charge up to Sir Nicholas Vaux,

Who undertakes you to your end.
ACT II.

KING HENRY VIII.

SCENE II.

Vaur.  Prepare there, The duke is coming: see the bare be ready; And fit it with such furniture as suits The greatness of his person.

Duck.  Nay, Sir Nicholas, Let it be done: my state now will but mock me. When I came hither, I was lord high constable And Duke of Buckingham; now, poor Edward Yet I am richer than my base accensors. [Bohun: That never knew what truth meant: I now seal it; And with that blood will make 'em one day groan My noble father, Henry of Buckingham, [for 't. Where he raised head against not only Richard, Flying for succour to his servant Banister. Being distress'd, was by that wretch betray'd, And without trial fell; God's peace be with him! Henry the Seventh succeeding, truly pitying My father's loss, like a most royal prince, Restored me to my honours, and, out of ruins, Made my name once more noble. Now his son, Henry the Eighth, life, honour, name and all That made me happy at one stroke has taken For ever from the world. I had my trial, And, must needs say, a noble one; which makes me A little happier than my wretched father: Yet thus far we are one in fortunes: both Fell by our servants, by those men we loved most; A most unnatural and faithless service! Heaven has an end in all: yet, you that hear me, This from a dying man receive as certain: Where you are liberal of your loves and counsels Be sure you be not loose: for those you make friends And give your hearts to, when they once perceive The least rub in your fortunes, fall away Like water from ye, never found again But where they mean to sink ye. All good people, Pray for me: I must now ford it, in the last hour Of my long weary life is come upon me. Farewell: And when you would say something that is sad, Speak how I fell. I have done: and God forgive me. [Exeunt Duke and Trin.

First Gent.  O, this is full of pity! Sir, it calls, I fear, too many curses on their heads That were the authors.

Sec. Gent.  If the duke be guileless, 'Tis full of woé: yet I can give you inklings Of an ensuing evil, if it fall, Greater than in this.

First Gent.  Good angels keep it from us! What may it be? You do not doubt my faith, sir? Sec. Gent.  This secret is so weighty, 't will require A strong faith to conceal it.

First Gent.  Let me have it; I do not talk much.

Sec. Gent.  You shall, sir; did you not of late days hear A buzzing of a separation Between the king and Katharine?

First Gent.  Yes, but it held not: For when the king once heard it, out of anger He sent command to the lord mayor straight To stop the rumour, and allay those tongues That durst disperse it.

Sec. Gent.  But that slander, sir, Is found a truth now; for it grows again Fresher than ever it was: and held for certain The king will venture at it. Either the cardinal, Or some about him near, have, out of malice To the good queen, possess'd him with a s clerk That will undo her: to confirm this too, Cardinal Campeius is arrived, and lately As lord chamber, for this business.

First Gent.  T is the cardinal; And merely to revenge him on the emperor For not bestowing on him, at his asking, The archbishopric of Toledo, this is purposed.

See. Gent.  I think you have hit the mark; but 's not cruel That she should feel the smart of this? The cardinal Will have his will, and she must fall.

First Gent.  We are too open here to argue this; Let's think in private more. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—An ante-chamber in the palace.

Enter the Lord Chamberlain, reading a letter.

Cham.  'My lord, the horses your lordship sent for, with all the care I had, I saw well ridden, And furnished. They were young and handsome, and of the best breed in the north. When they were ready to set out for London, a man of my lord cardinal's, by commission and main power, took you from me: with this reason: His master would be served before a subject, if not before the king: which stopped our mouths, sir.' I fear he will indeed: well, let him have them: He will have all, I think.

Enter, to the Lord Chamberlain, the Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk.

Nor.  Well met, my lord chamberlain. Cham.  Good day to both your graces.

Suf.  How is the king employ'd?

Nor.  I left him private, Full of sad thoughts and troubles.

Cham.  What's the cause?

Suf.  Cham.  It seems the marriage with his brother's Has crept too near his conscience. [wife

Suf.  No, his conscience Has crept too near another lady.

Nor.  'Tis so: This is the cardinal's doing, the king-cardinal: That blind priest, like the eldest son of fortune, Turns what he list. The king will know him one day, Suf. Pray God he do! he'll never know himself else. Nor. How holly he works in all his business! And with what zeal! for, now he has crack'd the league Between us and the emperor, the queen's great He dives into the king's soul, and there scatters Dangers, doubts, wringing of the conscience, Fears, and despair: and all these for his marriage: And out of all these to restore the king, A grade counsels a divorce; a loss of state That, like a jewel, has hung twenty years About his neck, yet never lost her lustre; Of her that loves him with that excellence That angels love good men with; even of her That, when the greatest stroke of fortune falls, Will bless the king: and is not this cause pains? Cham. Heaven keep me from such counsel! 'Tis most true

Sec. Gent.  These news are every where; every tongue speaks And every true heart weeps for 't; all that dare Look into these affairs see this main end, The French king's sister. Heaven will one day open The king's eyes that so long have slept upon This bold had man.

Suf.  And free us from his slavery.

Nor.  We had need pray, And heartily, for our deliverance:

Sec. Gent.  Nor this We have need pray, or this: Who will work us all From princes into pages: all men's honours Lie like one lump before him, to be fashion'd Into what pitch he please.

Suf.  For me, my lords, I love him not, nor fear him; there's my creed: As I am made without him, so I'll stand. If the king please: his curses and his blessings Touch me alike, they're breath I not believe in. I knew him, and I know him: so I leave him To him that made him proud, the pope.

493
Let's in;

The king has sent me otherwhere: besides,

Go to; I'll make ye know your times of business.

I would your grace would give us but an hour

Your scruple to the voice of Christendom:

Your highness having lived so long with her, and she

And thank the holy conclave for their loves: [for,

And with some other business put the king

A woman of less place might ask by law:

So dear in heart, not to deny her that

You'll find me a fit fellow.

Excuse me;

This priest has no pride in you.

But this cannot continue.

Tell him, if I do.

Thou art a cure fit for a king. [To Camp.] You're welcome,

Sir, you cannot.

I mean the learned ones, in Christian kingdoms

One general tongue unto us, this good man,

And your grace must needs deserve all strangers?

Of such receipt of learning is Black-Friars;

And his majesty has always loved her

And with some other business put the king

Suffer flesh to argue for her. [favour

Who's there? I say! How dare you thrust

Thou hast no need of any goodness,

Would it not be so sick though for his place:

To know your royal pleasure.

Ye are too bold:

Would you have me speak to you?

And you would have me speak to you?

Who can be angry now? what envy reach you?

A touch of your gentle hands, and I am

To know your royal pleasure.

I have your grace given a precedent of wisdom

Above all princes, in committing freely

May have any goodness,

That I speak of; I would not be so sick though for his place:

As your grace will give us but an hour

Of private conference.

We are busy: go.

This priest has no pride in you.

Not to speak of; I would not be so sick though for his place:

Your highness' hand [loves,

I tender my commission: by whose virtue,

Court of Rome commanding, you, my lord

Cardinal of York, are join'd with me their servant

In the impartial judging of this business.

The queen shall be acquainted

For whatthou comest. Where's Gardiner?

Wol. I know your majesty has always loved her

So dear in heart, not to deny her that

A woman of less place might ask by law:

School's allowance freely to argue for her. [favour

Cardinal, Aye, and the best she shall have: and my

To him that does best: God forbid else. Cardinal,

Prithee, call Gardiner to me, my new secretary:

[Exit Wolsey.

Ro-enter Wolsey, with Gardiner.

Wol. [Aside to Gard.] Give me your hand: much

You are the king's now.

Gard. [Aside to Wol.] But to be commanded

For ever by your grace, whose hand has rais'd me.

King. Come hither, Gardiner.

Cam. My Lord of York, was not one Doctor Lance

In this man's place before him?

Wol. [Aside.] Yes, he was.

Cam. Was he not held a learned man?

Wol. [Aside.] Yes, surely.

Cam. Believe me, there's an ill opinion spread

Even of yourself, lord cardinal. [then

Wol. How of me?

They will not stick to say you envied him,

Keep him a foreign man still; which so grieved him,

That he ran mad and died.

Wol. Heaven's peace be with him!

That's Christian care enough: for living murrurers

Can answer to the crimes, which he committed: he is a

Cardinal, and a man of such worth and wisdom,

I was ever in his service; and a noble friend;

And let him be known as such. [Enter Gardiner.

The most convenient place that I can think of

For such receipt of learning is Black-Friar's;

There ye shall meet about this weighty business.

God's will, my lord; I hope you will not come to

To leave a thousand-fold more bitter than

This is sweet at first to acquire;—after this process,

To give her the avont! It is a pity

Would move a monster.

Hearts of most hard temper

Melt and lament for her.

O, God's will! much better

She never had known pomp: though't be temporal,

Yet, if that quarrel, fortune, do divorce

It from the beauteous, it is a sufferance punging

As soul and body's severing.

Alas, poor lady!

She's a stranger now again.

So much the more

Must pity drop upon her. Verily,

I swear, 't is better to be lowly born,

And range with humble livers in content,

Than to be perk'd up in a glistening grief,

Wear a golden sorrow.

Our content

Is our best having.

By my troth and maidenhead, I

Would not be a queen.

[Exit Wolsey.

Cam. How of me?

They will not stick to say you envied him,

And fearing he would rise, he was so virtuous;

Knew himself.

Gardiner.

This priest has no pride in you.

While he was living, he was a

Good and true cardinal; and a noble friend;

And let him be known as such. [Enter Gardiner.

[Aside to Gard.] Give me your hand: much

You are the king's now.

[Aside to Wol.] But to be commanded

If he would go on this course?

I will have none so near else. Learn this, brother,

We live not to be grieved by meaner persons.

[Exit Wolsey.

Wol. [Aside to Gard.] Give me your hand: much

You are the king's now.

Gard. [Aside to Wol.] But to be commanded

If he would go on this course?

I will have none so near else. Learn this, brother,

We live not to be grieved by meaner persons.

[Exit Wolsey.

Wol. [Aside to Gard.] Give me your hand: much

You are the king's now.

Gard. [Aside to Wol.] But to be commanded

If he would go on this course?

I will have none so near else. Learn this, brother,

We live not to be grieved by meaner persons.

[Exit Wolsey.

Wol. [ Aside to Gard.] Give me your hand: much

You are the king's now.

Gard. [Aside to Wol.] But to be commanded

If he would go on this course?

I will have none so near else. Learn this, brother,

We live not to be grieved by meaner persons.

[Exit Wolsey.

Wol. [Aside to Gard.] Give me your hand: much

You are the king's now.

Gard. [Aside to Wol.] But to be commanded

If he would go on this course?

I will have none so near else. Learn this, brother,

We live not to be grieved by meaner persons.

[Exit Wolsey.
KING HENRY VIII.

ACT IV.

SCENE IV.

Enter the Lord Chamberlain.

Cham. Good morrow, ladies. What were’t worth
The secret of your conference? [to know
Anne. My good lord,
Not your demand: it values not your asking:
Our maids’ sorrows we were pity’d.
Cham. It was a gentle business, and becoming
The action of good women; there is hope
All will be well.
Anne. Now, I pray God, amen!
Cham. You bear a gentle mind, and heavenly blessings
Follow such creatures. That you may, fair lady,
Perceive I speak sincerely, and high note’s
Tae’n of your many virtues, the king’s majesty
Commends his good opinion of you, and
Does purpose honour to you no less flowing
Than the nobility of Pembroke; to which title
A thousand pound a year, annual support,
Out of his grace he adds.
Anne. I do not know
What kind of my obedience I should render;
More than my all is nothing; nor my prayers
Are not words duly hallow’d, nor my wishes
More than with empty vanities; yet prayers and wishes
Are all I can return. Beseech your lordship,
Vouchsafe to speak my thanks and my obedience,
As from a blushing handmaid, to his highness;
Who in health and royalty I pray for.
Cham. Lady,
I shall not fail to approve the fair conceit
The king hath of you. [Aside] I have perused her Beauty and honour in her are so mingled [well]:
That they have caught the king: and who knows
But from this lady may proceed a gem
Yet to lighten all this isle? I’ll to the king,
And say I spoke with you. [Exit Lord Chamberlain.
Anne. My honour’d lord.
Old L. Why, this it is; see, see!
I have been begging sixteen years in court,
Am yet a courtier leggazy, nor could
Countenance betwixt too early and too late
For any suit of pounds; and you, O fate!
A very fresh-fish here — fie, fie, fie upon
This compell’d fortune! — have your mouth till’d up
Before you open it.
Anne. This is strange to me.
Old L. How tastes it? Is it bitter? forty pence,
There was a lady once, ’tis an old story, [no.
That would not be a queen, that would she not,
For all the men in Egypt; had you heard it?
Anne. Come, you are pleasant.
Old L. With your theme, I could
O’ermount the lark. The Marchioness of Pembroke!
A thousand pounds a year for pure respect!
No other obligation! By my life,
That promises more thousands! honour’s train
Is longer than his forskirt. By this time
I know your back will bear a duchess: say,
Are you not stronger than you were?
Anne. Good lady,
Make yourself mirth with your particular fancy,
And leave me out on’t. Would I had no being,
If this salute my blood a jot: it faints me,
To think what follows.
The queen is comfortless, and we forgetful
In our long absence: pray, do not deliver
What here you’ve heard to her.
Old L. What do you think me?
[Exit.

SCENE IV.—A hall in Black-Friers.

Trumpets, serenets, and cornets. Enter two Vergers, with short silver swords; next them, two Scribes, in the habit of doctors; after them, the Archbishop of Canterbury alone; after him, the Bishops of Lincon, Ely, Rochester, and Sarum. on: next them, with some small distance, follow a Gentleman bearing the purse, with the great seal, and a cardinal’s hat; then two Priests, bearing each a silver cross; then a Gentleman-neither borne-headed, wearing a soft helmet, and a silver mace; then two Gentlemen bearing two great silver pillars; after them, a Bishop, the two Cardinals; and two Noblemen with the sword and mace. The King takes place under the cloth of estate; the two Cardinals sit under him as judges. The Queen takes place some distance from the King. The Bishops place themselves on each side the court, in manner of a consistory; below them, the Scribes. The Lords sit next the Bishops. The rest of the Attendants stand in convenient order about the stage.

Wol. Whilst our commission from Rome is read,
Let silence be commanded.

KING.
What’s the need?
Wol. It hath already publicly been read.
And on all sides the authority allow’d;
You may, then, spare that time.

Wol. Be’t so. Proceed.

Scrib. Say, Henry King of England, come into the court.

KING. Here.
Scrib. Say, Katharine Queen of England, come into the court.

[The Queen makes no answer, rises out of her chair;
goes about the court, comes to the King; and kneels at his feet; then speaks.

Q. Kath. Sir, I desire you do me right and justice;
And to bestow your pitty on me: for
I am a most poor woman, and a stranger,
Born out of your dominions; having here
No judge indifferent, nor no more assurance
Of equal frats; as, sir, in what have I offended you? what cause
Hath my behaviour given to your displeasure,
That thus you should proceed to put me off. [press,
And take your good grace from me? Heaven with
I have been to you a true and humble wife,
At all times to your will conformable;
Ever in fear to kindle your dislike,
Yea, subject to your countenance, glad or sorry

495
As I saw it inclined: when was the hour
I ever contradicted you, or, if I did,
Or if it not mine too? or which of your friends
Have I not strove to love, although I knew
He were mine enemy? what friend of mine
That had to him derived your anger, did I
Continue in my liking? nay, gave notice
He was from thence discharged? Sir, call to mind
That I have been your, in this obedience,
Upward of twenty years, and have been theft
With many children by you: if, in the course
And process of this time, you can report,
And prove it too, against mine honour aught,
My bond to wedlock, or my love and duty,
Against your say, any part with God's name,
Turn me away; and let the foulst contempt
Shut door upon me, and so give me up
To the sharpest kind of justice. Please you, sir,
The king, your father, was reputed for
A prince most prudent, of an excellent
And unmatch'd wit and judgment: Ferdinand,
My father, king of Spain, was reck'd one
The wisest prince that there had reign'd by many
A year before: it is not to be question'd
That they had gather'd a wise council to them
Of every realm, that did debate this business,
Who doth hear my wife, in this obsequy:
Wherefore I beseech you, sir, to spare me, till I may humbly
Be by my friends in Spain advised; whose counsel
I will implore: if not, I the name of God,
Your pleasure be fulfill'd!

If you have here, lady, and
Of your choice, these reverend fathers; men
Of singular integrity and learning,
"Yea, the elect of the land, who are assembled
To plead your cause: it shall be therefore bootless
That longer you desire the court: as well
For your own quiet, as to rectify
What is unsettle'd in the king.

Q. Kath. His grace
Hath spoken well and justly: therefore, madam,
It's fit this royal session do proceed;
And that, without delay, their arguments
Be now produced and heard.

Lord cardinal,
To you I speak.

Wol. Your pleasure, madam?

Q. Kath. Sir,
I am about to weep; but, thinking that
We are a queen, or long have dream'd so, certain
The daughter of a king, my drops of tears
I'll turn to sparks of fire;

Wol. Be patient yet. [fore]

Q. Kath. I will, when you are humble; nay, be Or God will punish me. I do believe,
Induced by potent circumstances, that
You are mine enemy, and make my challenge
You shew not by my judge: for it you
Have blown this coal betwixt my lord and me;
Which God's due quench! Therefore I say again,
I utterly abhor, yea, from my soul
Refuse you for my judge; whom, yet once more,
I hold my most malicious foe, and think not
At all a friend to truth,

Wol. I do profess
You speak not like yourself; who ever yet
Have stood to charity, and display'd the effects
Of disposition gentle, and of wisdom
[wrong: Or since woman's pow'r. Madam, you do me
I have no spleen against you; nor injustice
For you or any: how far I have proceeded,
Or how far further shall, is warranted
By a commission from the consistory,
[me
Yea, the whole consistory of Rome. You charge
That I have blown this coal: I do deny it;

The king is present: if it be known to him
That I gainsay my deed, how may he wound,
And worthy, my falsehood! yea, as much
As you have done with truth. If he know
That I am free of your report, he knows
I am not of your wrong. Therefore in him
It lies to cure me: and the cure is, to Remove these thoughts from you: the which before
It is highness shall speak in, I do beseech
You, gracious madam, to unthink your speaking
And to say no more.

Q. Kath. My lord, my lord,
I am a simple woman, much too weak [mouth'd]
To oppose your cunning. You're meek and humble
You sign your place and calling, in full seeming,
With meekness and humility; but your heart
Is rampant as a transport of pride, and pride,
You have, by fortune and his highness' favours,
Gone slightly o'er low steps and now are mounted
Where powers are your retainers, and your words,
Do not suffice to you, serve your will as 'tis please
Yourself pronounce your office. I must tell you,
You tender more your person's honour than
Your high professional: that again
I do refuse you for my judge; and here,
Before you all, appeal unto the pope,
To bring my whole cause fore his holiness,
And to be judged by him.

[She curtseys to the King, and offers to depart.

Com. The queen is obstinate,
Stubborn to justice, apt to accuse it, and Disbelieve to be tried by 'tis not well.

She's going away.

King. Call her again, [the court.

Q. Kath. Call her again, Griz. Madam, you are call'd back. [your way:

Q. Kath. What need you note it? pray you, keep
When you are call'd, return. Now, the Lord help,
They vex me past my patience! Pray you, pass on:
I will not tarry; no, nor ever more
Upon this business my appearance make
In any of your courts.

King. Go thy ways, Kate;
That man 'tis the world who shall report he has
A better wife, let him in nought be trusted,
For speaking false in that: thou art, alone,
If thy rare qualities, sweet gentleness,
Thy meekness saint-like, wife-like government,
Obeying in commandings, and thy parts
Sovereign and pious else, could speak thee out,
The queen of earthly queens: she's noble born;
And, like her noble birth, she has Carried herself towards me.

Wol. Most gracious sir,
In humblest manner I require your highness,
That it shall please you to declare, in hearing
Of all these ears,—for where I am robb'd and bound,
There must I be unloosed, although not there
At once and fully satisfied,—whether ever I Did broach this business to your highness; or Laid any scruple in your way, which might Induce you to the question on 't? or ever
Have to you, but with thanks to God for such
A royal lady, speak one the least word I that might Be to the prejudice of her present state,
Or touch of her good person?

King. My lord cardinal,
I do excuse you; yea, upon mine honour,
I free you from 't. You are not to be taught
That you are ignorant; but make not known
Why they are so, but, like to village-cour,
Bark when their fellows do: by some of these
The queen is put in anger. You're excused;
But will you be more justified? you ever [shouted
Have wish'd the sleeping of this business; never de-
It to be go'd, but to turn it to bluid.
The passages made toward it: on my honour,
I speak my good lord cardinal to this point,
ACT III.

KING HENRY VIII.

SCENE I.

London. The Queen's apartments.

Enter the Queen and her Women, as at work.

Q. Kath. Take thy lute, wench: my soul grows sad with troubles; sing, and disperse 'em, if thou canst: leave working.

SONG.

Orpheus with his lute made trees, And the mountain tops that freeze, Bow themselves when he did sing: To his music plants and flowers Ever sprung; as sun and showers. There had made a lasting spring. Every thing that heard him play, Even the billows of the sea, Hung their heads, and then lay by. In sweet music is such art, Killing care and grief of heart. Fall asleep, or hearing, die.

Enter a Gentleman.

Q. Kath. How now! [dinals

Gent. An't please your grace, the two great car- waiting in the presence. Q. Kath. Would they speak with me? Gent. They will'd me say so, madam. Q. Kath. Pray their graces to come near. [Exit Gent.] What can their business

With me, a poor weak woman, fall'n from favour? I do not like their coming. Now I think on't, They should be good men; their affairs as righteous: But all heads make not monks.

Enter the two Cardinals, Wolsey and Campeius.

Wol. Peace to your highness!

Q. Kath. Your graces find me here part of a house. I would be all, against the worst may happen. [wife. What are your pleasures with me, reverend lords? Wol. May it please you, noble madam, to withdraw into your private chamber, we shall give you the full cause of our coming.

Q. Kath. Speak it here; There's nothing I have done yet, of my conscience, deserves a corner; would all other women could speak this with as free a soul as I do! My lords, I care not, so much I am happy Above a number, if my actions were tried by every tongue, every eye saw 'em, envy and base opinion set against 'em. I know my life so even. If your business seek me out, and that way I am wife in. Out with it boldly: truth loves open dealing.

Wol. Tanta est erga te mentis integritas, regina serenissima. Q. Kath. O, good my lord, no Latin; I am not such a traitor since my coming, As to not to know the language I have lived in. A strange tongue makes my cause more strange, suspicious;
KING HENRY VIII.

ACT III.

SCENE I.

Pray, speak in English; here are some will thank you, If you speak truth, for their poor mistress' sake; Believe me; she has had much wrong; lord cardinal, The willing'st sin I ever yet committed May be absolved in English.

I hold her NUNNERY, noble lady, I am sorry my integrity should breed, And service to his majesty and you, So deep suspicion, where all faith was meant. We come not by the way of accusations, To taint that honour every good tongue blesses, Nor to betray you any way to sorrow. You have too good a lady; but to know How you stand minded in the weighty difference Between the king and you; and to deliver, Like free and honest men, our just opinions And comforts to your cause.

Cam. Most honour'd madam, My Lord of York, out of his noble nature, Zeal and obedience he still bore your grace, Forgetting, like a good man, your late censure Both of his truth and him, which was too far, Offers, as I do, in a sign of peace, His service and his counsel.

[Exit.] To betray me,— My lords, I thank you both for your good wills; Ye speak like honest men; pray God, ye prove so! But how to make ye suddenly an answer, In such a point of weight, so near mine honour,— More near my life, I fear,—with my weak wit, And to such men of gravity and learning, In truth, I know not. I was set at work Among my maids; full little, God knows, looking Either for such men or such business. For her sake that I have been,— for I feel The last fit of my greatness,—good your graces, Let me have (thine and counsel) for my cause: Alas, I am a woman, friendless, hopeless! Wol. Madam, you wrong the king's love with these Your hopes and friends are infinite. [Fears: Q. Kath. In England But little for my profit: can you think, lords, That any Englishman dare give me counsel? Or be a known friend, gains his highness' pleasure, Though he be grown so desperate to be honest, And live a subject? Nay, forsooth, my friends, They that must weigh out my afflictions, They that my trust must grow to, live not here: They are, as all my other comforts, far hence In mine own country, lords. I would your grace Would leave your griefs, and take my counsel.

Q. Kath. How, sir? Cam. Put your main cause into the king's protection; He's loving and most gracious: 'twill be much Both for your honour better and your cause; For if the trial of the law o'ertake ye, You'll part away disgraced.

Wol. Q. Kath. Ye tell me what ye do both, in Is this your Christian counsel? o'ertake ye! [Rum. heaven is above all yet; there sits a judge That no king can corrupt.

Cam. Your rage mistakes us. Wol. Q. Kath. The more shame for ye: holy men I thought ye Upon my soul, two reverend cardinal virtues; But cardinal sins and hollow hearts I fear ye: Mend 'em, for shame, my lords. Is this your counsel The cordial that ye bring a wretched lady, [Fort? A woman lost among ye, laugh'd at, scorn'd? I will not wish ye half my miseries; I have no more charity but say, I would ye; Take heed, for heaven's sake, take heed, lest at once The burden of my sorrows fall upon ye. Wol. Madam, this is a mere distraction; You turn the good we offer into envy.

Q. Kath. Ye turn me into nothing: woe upon ye And all such false professed! would you have me— If you have any justice, any pity: If ye be anything but churchmen's habits— Put my sick cause into his hands that hates me? Alas, he'll make me his holy lady, His love, too long ago! I am old, my lords, And all the fellowship I hold now with him Is only my obedience. What can happen To me above this wretchedness? all your studies Make me a curse like this.

Cam. Your fears are worse. Q. Kath. Have I lived thus long— let me speak myself, Since virtue finds no friends—a wife, a true one? A woman, I dare say without vain-glory, Never yet branded with suspicion? Have I with all my full affections [him? Still met the king? loved him next heaven? they'd Been, out of fondness, superstitious to him? Almost forgot my prayers to content him? And am I thus rewarded? 't is not well, lords. Bring me a constant woman to her husband, One that ne'er dream'd a joy beyond his pleasure; And yet the woman, madam, we'll set about, Yet will I add an honour, a great patience. Wol. Madam, you wander from the good we aim at. Q. Kath. My lord, I dare not make myself so negligent, To give up willingly that noble title Your master weal to: nothing but death Shall ever divorce my dignities. Pray, hear me. Wol. Q. Kath. Would I had never trod this English Or felt the flatteries that grow upon it! [earth. Ye have angels' faces, but heaven knows your hearts. What will become of me now, wretched lady! I am the most unhappy woman living! Alas, poor wench, where are now your fortunes! Shipwreck'd upon a kingdom, where no pity, No friends, no hope; no kindred weep for me; Almost no grave allow'd me: like the lily, That once was mistress of the field and flourisht, I'll hang my head and perish. Wol. If your grace Could but be brought to know our ends are honest, You 'll feel more comfort: why should we, good lady, Upon what cause, wrong you? alas, our places, The way of our profession is against it. We are of women, that much sorrow we say 'em For goodness' sake, consider what you do; How you may hurt yourself, ay, utterly Grow from the king's acquaintance, by this car. The hearts of princes kiss obedience, [riage. So much they love it: but to stubborn spirits They swell, and grow as terrible as storms. I know you have a gentle, noble temper, A soul as even as a calm: pray, think us [vants. Those we profess, peace-makers, friends, and ser. Cam. Madam, you 'll find it so. You wrong your virtues With the weak women's fears: a noble spirit, As yours was put into you, ever casts Ye; such doubts, as false coin, from it. The king loves Beware you lose it, not; for us, if you please To trust us in your business, we are ready To use our utmost studies in your service. Q. Kath. Do what ye will, my lords: and, pray, forgive me, If I have used myself unmanfully; You know I am a woman, lacking wit To make a severely answer to such persons. Pray, do my service to his majesty: He has my heart yet: and shall have my prayers While I shall have my life. Come, reverend fathers, Bestow your counsels on me: she now begs, That little thought, when she set footing here, She should have bought her dignities so dear.

[Exeunt.]
SCENE II. — Antechamber to the King's apartment.

Enter the Duke of Norfolk, the Duke of Suffolk, the Earl of Surrey, and the Lord Chamberlain.

Nor. If you will now unite in your complaints, And force them with a constancy, the cardinal Cannot stand under them: if you omit The offer of this time, I cannot promise But that you shall sustain me new disgrace, With these you bear already.

Sir. I am joyful To meet the least occasion that may give me Remembrance of my father-in-law, the duke, To be revoked on him.

Suf. Which of the peers Have uncontemned gone by him, or at least Strangely neglected? when did he regard The stamp of nobleness in any person Out of himself?

Cham. My lords, you speak your pleasures: What he deserves of you and me I know; What we can do to him, though now the time Gives way to us, I much fear. If you cannot Bar his access to the king, never attempt Any thing on him; for he hath a witchcraft Over the King in's tongue.

Nor. O, fear him not; His spell in that is out: the king hath found Matter against him that for ever mars The honey of his language. No, he's settled, Not to come off, in his displeasure.

Sir. I should be glad to hear such news as this Once every hour.

Nor. Believe it, this is true: In the divorce his contrary proceedings Are all unfolded; wherein he appears As I would wish mine enemy.

Suf. How came His practices to light?

Suf. Most strangely.

Nor. O, how, how?

Suf. The cardinal’s letters to the pope miscarried, And came to the eye of the king; wherein was read, How that the cardinal did entreat his holiness To stay the judgment o’ the divorce: for if It did take place, 't do, quoth he, perceive My king is tangled in affection to A creature of the queen’s, Lady Anne Bollen.'

Suf. Has the king this?

Suf. Believe it.

Sir. Will this work?

Cham. The king in this perceives him, how he coasts And hedges his own way. But in this point All his tricks founder, and he brings his physic After his patient’s death; the king already Hath married the fair lady.

Sir. Would he had!

Suf. May ye be happy in your wish, my lord! For, I profess, you have it.

Nor. Now, all my joy

Suf. Trace the conjunction!

Nor. My amen to’t! All men’s!

Suf. There’s order given for her coronation: Marry, this is yet but young, and may be left To some ears unaccounted. 'But, my lords, Sue is a gallant creature, and capable In mind and feature: I persuade me, from her Will fall some blessing to this land, which shall In it be memorized.

Nor. But, will the king Digress this letter of the cardinal’s? The Lord forbid!

Suf. Marry, amen!

Nor. No, no;

Suf. There be more wasps that buzz about his nose

Will make this sting the sooner. Cardinal Campeius Is stol’n away to Rome; hath ta’en no leave; Has left the cause o’ the king unhandled; and Is posted, as the agent of our cardinal, To second all his plot. I do assure you The king cried Ha! at this.

Cham. Now, God incense him, And let him cry Ha! louder!

Nor. But, my lord, When returns Crammer?

Suf. He is return’d in his opinions; which Have satisfied the king for his divorce, Together with all famous colleges.

Nor. Almost in Christendom. I truly believe, His second marriage shall be publish’d, and Her coronation. Katharine no more Shall be call’d queen, but princess dowager And widow to Prince Arthur.

Nor. This same Crammer’s A worthy fellow, and hath to ta’en much pain In the king’s business.

Suf. He has; and we shall see him For it an archbishop.

Nor. So I hear.

Suf. The cardinal!

Enter Wolsey and Cromwell.

Nor. Observe, observe, he’s moody.

Wol. The packet, Cromwell, Gave you the king?

Crom. To his own hand, in’s bedchamber.

Wol. Look’d he o’ the inside of the paper?

Crom. Presently He did unseal them: and the first he view’d, He did it with a serious mind: a heed Was in his countenance. You he bade Attend him here this morning.

Wol. Is he ready To come abroad?

Crom. I think, by this he is.

Wol. Leave me awhile. [Exit Cromwell.

[Aside.] It shall be to the Duchess of Alencon, The French king’s sister: she shall marry her.

Anne Bollen? No: I’ll go Anne Balleis for him: There’s more in’t than fair visage. Bollen! No, we’ll no Bollens. Speedily I wish To hear from Rome. The Marchioness of Pembroke! Nor. He’s discontented.

Suf. May be, he hears the king Does what his anger to him. Sharp enough,

Sir. Lord, for thy justice!

Wol. [Aside] The late queen’s gentlewoman, a knight’s daughter, To be her mistress’ mistress! the queen’s queen! This candle burns not clear: ‘tis I must smit it: Then out it goes. What though I know her virtuous And well deserving? yet I know her for A spleeney Lutheran; and not wholesome to Our cause, that she should lie i’ the bosom of Our hard-ruled King. Again, there is sprung up An heretic, an arch one. Crammer: one Hath crawl’d into the favour of the king, And is his oracle.

Nor. He is vex’d at something.

Sir. I would ’twere something that would fret The master-cord on’s heart! [the string, Enter the King, reading of a schedule, and Lovell.

Suf. The king, the king! King. What piles of wealth hath he accumulated To his own portion! and what expense by the hour Seems to flow from him! How? If the name of thrift, Does he take this together! Now, my lords, Saw you the cardinal?

Nor. My lord, we have Stood here observing him: some strange commotion
Act III. King Henry VIII. Scene II.

Is in his brain: he bites his lip, and starts; Stops on a sudden, looks upon the ground, Then lays his finger on his temple; straight Springs out into fast gait; then stops again, Strikes his breast hard, and anon he casts His eye against the moon: in most strange postures We have seen him set himself.

King. It may well be:
There is a mutiny in’s mind. This morning Papers of state he sent me to peruse; As he read them: and wot you what I found There.—on my conscience, but unwittingly? Forsworn, an inventory, thus importing; The several parcels of his plate, his treasure, Rich stuffs, and ornaments of household; which I find at such proud rate, that it out-speaks Possession of a subject.

Nor. It’s heaven’s will:
Some spirit put this paper in the packet, To bless your eye withal.

King. If we did think His contemplation were above the earth, And fix’d on spiritual object, he should still Dwell in his musings: but I am afraid His thoughts are below the moon, not worth His serious considering.

[King takes his seat; whispers Lovell, who goes to the Cardinal.]

Wol. Heaven forgive me!

King. Ever God bless your highness!

Good my lord, You are full of heavenly stuff, and bear the inven- Of your best graces in your mind; the which [tory You were now running o’er: you have scarce time To steal from spiritual leisure a brief span To keep your earthly audit: sure, in that I deem you an ill husband, and am glad To have you therein my companion.

Wol. Sir, For holy offices I have a time; a time To think upon the part of business which I bear it the state; and nature does require Her times of preservation, which performe I, her frail son, amongst my brethren mortal, Must give my tendance to.

King. You have said well.

Wol. And ever may your highness yoke together, As I will lend you cause, my doing well With my well saying!

King. ‘Tis well said again; And ’tis a kind of good deed to say well; And yet words are no deeds. My father loved you: He said he did; and with his death did crown His word upon you. Since I had my office, I have kept you next my heart; have not alone Employ’d you where high profits might come home, but pared my present havings, to bestow My bounties upon you.

Wol. [Aside] What should this mean?

Sir. [Aside] The Lord increase this business!

King. Have I not made you The prime man of the state? I pray you, tell me, If what I now pronounce you have found true: And, if you may confess it, say withal, If you are bound to us or no. What say you? Wol. My sovereign, I confess your royal graces, Shower’d on me daily, have been more than could My studied purposes require; which went Beyond all man’s endeavours: my endeavours Have ever come too short of my desires, Yet this with myBinContent my own ends Have been mine so that evermore they pointed To the good of your most sacred person and The profit of the state. For your great graces Heap’d upon me, poor undeserver, I Can nothing render but aliegant thanks, My prayers to heaven for you, my loyalty,

Which ever has and ever shall be growing, Till death, that winter, kill it.

King. A loyal and obedient subject is Therein illustrated: the honour of it Does pay the act of it: as, ’tis contrary, The foulishness is the punishment. I presume That, as my hand has open’d bounty to you, My heart dropp’d love, my power rain’d honour, On you thus: so your hand and heart, [more Your brain, and every function of your power. Should, notwithstanding that your bond of duty, As ’t were in love’s particular, be more To me, your friend, than any.

Wol. I do profess That for your highness’ good I ever laboured More than mine own; that am, have, and will be— Though all the world should crack their duty to you, And throw it from their soul; though perils did Abound, as thick as thought could make ’em, and Appear in forms more horrid,—yet my duty, As doth a rock against the chiding flood, Should the approach of this wild river break, And stand unshaken yours.

King. ’Tis nobly spoken:
Take notice, lords, he has a loyal breast,
For you have seen him open ‘t. Read o’er this; [Giving him paper. And after, this: and then to breakfast with What appetite you have.

[Exit King, frowning upon Cardinal Wolsey: the Nobles throng after him, smiling and whispering.]

Wol. What should this mean?

What sudden anger’s this? how have I receiv’d it? He parted frowning from me, as if ruin Leapt from his eyes: so looks the chafed lion Upon the daring huntsman that has gall’d him; Then makes him nothing. I must read this paper; I fear, the story of his anger. ’Tis so;
This paper has undone me: ’t is the account Of all that world of wealth I have drawn together For mine own ends; indeed, to gain the pependom, And fee my friends in Rome. O negligence! Fill for a fool to fall by: what cross devil Made me put this main secret in the packet I sent the king? Is there no way to cure this? No new device to beat this from his brains? I know ‘t will stir him strongly; yet I know A way, if it take right, in spite of fortune [Pope! Will bring me off again. What’s this? ’To the letter, as I live, with all the business I writ to ‘s holiness. Nay then the devil! I have touch’d the highest point of all my greatness; And, from that full meridian of my glory, I haste now to my setting: I shall fall Like a bright exhalation in the evening, And no man see me more.

Renter to Wolsey, the Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk, the Earl of Surrey, and the Lord Chamberlain.

Nor. Hear the king’s pleasure, cardinal: who cometh To render up the great seal presently [hands you Into our hands; and to confine yourself To Asher House, my Lord of Winchester’s, Till you hear further from his highness.

Wol. Stay: Where’s your commission, lords? words cannot Authority so weighty. [carry off. Who dare cross ‘em? Who dare cross ‘em? Bearing the king’s will from his mouth expressly? Wol. Till I find more than will or words to do it, I mean your malice, know, officious lords, I dare and must deny it. Now I feel Of what coarse metal ye are moulded, envy: How eagerly ye follow my disgraces, As if it fed ye! and how sleek and wanton
KING HENRY THE EIGHTH.—Act III., Scene ii.
ACT III.

KING HENRY VIII.

SCENE II.

Ye appear in every thing may bring my ruin! Follow your envious courses, men of malice; You have Christian warrant for 'em, and, no doubt, In time will find their fit rewards. That seal, You must sign for me. Pray, let me have Mine and your master, with his own hand gave me; Bade me enjoy it, with the place and honours, During my life: and, to confirm his goodness, Tied it by letters-patents: now, who'll take it? Sur. The king, that gave it. Wol. I must be himself, then. Sur. Thou art a proud traitor, priest. Wol. Proud lord, thou liest: Within these forty hours Surrey burst better Have burnt that tongue than said so.

Sur. Thy ambition, This talking lord can lay upon my credit, I answer, is most false. The like by law Found his deserts: how innocent I was From any private malice in his end, His noble jury and foul cause can witness. If I loved many words, lord, I should tell you You have as little honesty as honour, That in the way of loyalty and truth, Toward the king, my ever royal master, Dare mate a sonnder man than Surrey can be, And all that love his follies.

Sur. By my soul, [feel Your long coat, priest, protects you; thou shouldest My sword i' the life-blood of thee else. My lords, Can ye endure to hear this arrogance? And from this fellow? If we live thus tamely, To be thus jaded by a piece of scarlet, Farewell nobility; let his grace go forward, And dare us with his cap like larks. All goodness Is poison to thy stomach.

Wol. Yes, that goodness Of gleaning all the land's wealth into one, Into your own hands, cardinal, by extortion; The goodness of your intercepted packets [ness, You write to the pope against the king: your good- Since you provoke me, shall be most notorious, My Lord of Norfolk, as you are truly noble, As you respect the common good, the state Of our despoiled nobility, our issues, Who, if he live, will scarce be gentlemen. Produce the grand sum of his sins, the articles Collected from his cruell, I'll startle you Worse than the sanning bell, when the brown wench Lay kissing in your arms, lord cardinal. Wol. How much, methinks, I could despise this man, But that I am bound in charity against it! Nor. These articles, my lord, are in the king's. But, thus much, they are foul ones. [band. So much fairer And spotless shall mine innocence arise, When the king knows my truth.

Sur. This cannot save you: But I thank my memory, I yet remember Some of these articles; and out they shall. Now, if you can blush and cry 'guilty,' cardinal, You'll show a little honesty.

Wol. Speak on, sir; I dare your worst objections: if I blush, It is to see a nobleman want manners.

Sur. I had rather want these than my head. Have at you! First, that, without the king's assent or knowledge, You wrought to be a legate: by which power You maintain a jurisdiction of all bishops. Nor. Then, that in all you write to Rome, or else To foreign princes, 'Ego et Rex meus' Was still inscribed: in which you brought the king To be your servant.

Sur. That, without the knowledge Either of king or council, when you went Ambassador to the emperor, you made bold To carry into Flanders the great seal. Sur. Item, you sent a large commission To Gregory de Cassado, to conclude, Without the king's will or the state's allowance, And league with him against Pope Gregory of Ferrara. Sur. That, out of mere ambition, you have caused Your holy hat to be stamp'd on the king's coin. Sur. Then that you have sent innumerable sub- By what means got, I leave to your own conscience— To furnish Rome, and to prepare the ways You have for dignities: to the mere undoing Of all the kingdom. Many more there are; Which, since they are of you, and odious, I will not taint my mouth with.

Cham. O my lord, Press not a falling man too far! 'tis virtue: His faults lie open to the laws; let them, Not you, correct him. My heart weeps to see him So little of his great self.

Sof. Lord cardinal, the king's further pleasure is, Because all those things you have done of late, By your power legislative, within this kingdom, Fall into the compass of a premonitory, That therefore such a writ be sued against you: To forfeit all your goods, lands, tenements, Chattels, and whatsoever, and to be Out of the king's protection. This is my charge. Nor. And so we'll leave you to your meditations: How to live better. For your stubborn answer About the giving back the great seal to us, you, The king shall know it: and, no doubt, shall thank So fare you well, my little good lord cardinal.

Wol. So farewell to the little good you bear me. Farewell! a long farewell, to all my greatness! This is the state of man: to-day he puts forth The tender leaves of hopes; to-morrow blossoms, And bears his blushing honors thick upon him; The third day comes a frost, a killing frost, And when he thinks, good easy man, full surely His greatness is a ripening, nips his root, And then he falls, as I do. I have ventured, Like little wanton boys that swim on bladders, This many summers in a sea of glory, But far beyond my depth: my high blown pride At length broke under me and now has left me, Weary and old with service, to the mercy Of a rude stream, that must for ever hide me, Vain pomp and glory of this world, I hate ye: I feel my heart new open'd. O, how wretched Is that poor man that hangs on princes' favours! There is, betwixt that smile we would aspire to, That sweet aspect of princes, and their ruin, More pangs and fears than wars or women have: And when he falls, he falls like Lucifer, Never to hope again.

Enter Cromwell, and stands amazed.

Crom. Why, how now, Cromwell! I have no power to speak, sir. Wol. What, amazed At my misfortunes? can thy spirit wonder A great man should decline? Nay, an you weep, I am fall'n indeed.
What and howtrue thou art: he will advance thee;
Some little memory of me will stir him —
I know his noble nature — not to let
Thy hopeful service perish too: good Cromwell,
Neglect him not; make use now, and provide
For thine own future safety. — O my lord,
Must I, then, leave you? must I needs forego
So good, so noble and so true a master?
Bear witness, all that have not hearts of iron,
With what a sorrow Cromwell leaves his lord.
The king shall have my service; but my prayers
For ever and for ever shall be yours.
Wol. Cromwell, I did not think to shed a tear
In all my miseries; but thou hast forced me,
Out of thy honest truth, to play the woman.
Let's dry our eyes: and thus far hear me, Crom-
And, when I am forgotten, as I shall be,
[well;
And sleep in dull cold marble, where no mention
Of me more must be heard of, say, I taught thee,
Say, Wolsey, that once trod the ways of glory.
And sounded all the depths and shamed of honour,
Found thee a way, out of his wreck, to rise in;
A sure and safe one, though thy master miss'd it.
Mark but my fall; and that that ruin'd me.
Cromwell, I charge thee, fling away ambition:
By that sin fell the angels; how can man, then,
The image of his Maker, hope to win by it?
Love thyself last: cherish those hearts that hate
Corruption wins not more than honesty.
[thee;
Still in thy right hand carry gentle peace,
To silence envious tongues. Be just, and fear not:
Let all the ends thou aim'st at be thy country's,
Thy God's, and truth's; then if thou fall'st, O
Cromwell,
Thou fall'dst a blessed martyr! Serve the king;
And, — prithee, lead me in
There take an inventory of all I have,
To the last penny: 'tis the king's: my rob -
And my integrity to heaven, is all
I dare now call mine own. O Cromwell, Cromwell!
Had I but served my God with half the zeal
I served my king, he would not in mine age
Have left me naked to mine enemies.
Crom. Good sir, have patience.
Wol. So I have. Farewell
The hopes of court I my hopes in heaven do dwell.
[Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—A street in Westminster.

Enter two Gentlemen, meeting one another.

First Gent. You're well met once again.

Sec. Gent. So are you.

First Gent. You come to take your stand here, and The Lady Anne pass from her coronation? [behind Sec. Gent. 'Tis all my business. At our last encounter,
The Duke of Buckingham came from his trial.

First Gent. 'Tis very true: but that time offer'd
This, general joy. [sorrow;
Sec. Gent. 'Tis well: the citizens,
I am sure, have shown at full their royal minds —
As, let 'em have their rights, they are ever forward—In celebration of this day with shows,
Pageants and sights of honour.

First Gent. Never greater,
Nor, I'll assure you, better taken, sir.

Sec. Gent. May I be bold to ask what that con-
That paper in your hand? [titans,
First Gent. Yes; 'tis the list
Of those that claim their offices this day
By custom of the coronation.

502
THE ORDER OF THE CORONATION.

1. A lively flourish of Trumpets.
2. Then, two Judges. [him.
3. Lord Chancellor, with the purse and mace before
5. Mayor of London, bearing the mace. Then Guarter, in his old dress of arms, and on his head a gilt copper crown.
6. Marquess Dorset, bearing a sceptre of gold, on his head a demi-cornonal of gold. With him, the Earl of Surrey, bearing the rod of silver with the dove, crowned with an earl's coronet. Collars of SS.
7. Duke of Suffolk, in his robe of estate, his coronet on his head, bearing a long white wand, as high-servant. With him, the Duke of Norfolk, with the rod of marshalship, a coronet on his head. Collars of SS.
8. A canopy borne by four of the Cinque-ports;
   under it, the Queen in her robe; in her hair richly adorned with pearl, crowned. On each side her, the Bishops of London and Winchester.
9. Tho^rd Duchess of Norfolk, in a coronal of gold, with flowers, bearing the Queen's train.
10. Certain Ladies or Countesses, with plain circlets of gold without flowers.
They pass over the stage in order and state.

Sec. Gent. A royal train, believe me. These I
Who's that that bears the sceptre? [know:
First Gent. Marquess Dorset: And that the Earl of Surrey, with the rod.
Sec. Gent. A bold brave gentleman. That should
The Duke of Suffolk? [be
First Gent. 'Tis the same; high-steward.
Sec. Gent. And that my Lord of Norfolk?
First Gent. Yes. Sec. Gent.
Heaven bless thee! [Looking on the Queen.
Thou hast the sweetest face I ever look'd on.
Sir, as I have a soul, she is an angel;
Our king has all the Indies in his arms,
And more and richer, when he strains that lady;
I cannot blame his conscience.
First Gent. They that bear
The cloth of honour over her, are four barons
Of the Cinque-ports. [hear her.
Sec. Gent. Those men are happy; and so are all are
I take it, she that carries up the train.
Is that old noble lady, Duchess of Norfolk.
First Gent. It is; and all the rest are countesses.
Sec. Gent. Their coronets say so. These are stars
And sometimes falling ones. [indeed;
First Gent. No more of that.
[Exit procession, and then a great flourish of trumpets.

Enter a third Gentleman.
First Gent. God save you, sir! where have you been broiling?
Third Gent. Among the crowd i' the Abbey;
where a finger
Could not be wedged in more: I am stifled
With the mere rankness of their joy.
Sec. Gent. You saw
The ceremony?
Third Gent. That I did.
First Gent. How was it?
Third Gent. Well worth the seeing.
Sec. Gent. Good sir, speak it to us.
Third Gent. As well as I am able. The rich stream
Of lords and ladies, having brought the queen
To a prepared place in the choir, fell off
A distance from her; while her grace sat down
To rest a while, some half an hour or so,
In a rich chair of state, opposing freely
The beauty of her person to the people.

BELIEVE ME, SIR, SHE IS THE GOODLIEST WOMAN
That ever lay by man: which when the people
Had the full view of, such a noise arose
As the shrouds make at sea in a stiff tempest,
As loud, and to as many tunes: hats, cloaks,—
Doubtless, I think,—blew up; and had their faces
So well loose, this day they had been lost. Such joy
I never saw before. Great-bellied women,
That had not half a week to go, like rams
In the old time of war, would shake the press,
And make 'em reel before 'em. No man living
Could say, This is my wife there; all were woen
So strangely in one piece.

Sec. Gent. But, what follow'd?
Third Gent. At length her grace rose, and with modest paces
Came to the altar; where she knee'd, and saint-like
Cast her fair eyes to heaven and pray'd devoutly.
Then rose again and bow'd her to the people:
When by the Archbishop of Canterbury
She had all the royal makings of a queen;
As holy oil, Edward Confessor's crown,
The rod, and bird of peace, and all such emblems
Laid nobly on her: which perform'd, the choir,
With all the choicest music of the kingdom,
Together sung Te Deum. So she parted,
And with the same full state paced back again to York-place, where the feast is held.
First Gent. Sir,
You must no more call it York-place, that's past;
For, since the cardinal fell, that title's lost:
'Tis now the king's, and call'd Whitehall.
Third Gent. I know it;
But 'tis so lately alter'd, that the old name
Is fresh about me.
Sec. Gent. What two reverend bishops
Were those that went on each side of the queen?
Third Gent. Stokelsey and Girdiner, the one of Winchester,
Newly preferr'd from the king's secretary,
The other, London.
Sec. Gent. He of Winchester
Is held no great good lover of the archbishop's,
The virtuous Cranmer.
Third Gent. All the land knows that:
However, yet there is no great breach; when it comes,
Cranmer will find a friend who will not shrink from him.
Sec. Gent. Who may that be, I pray you?
Third Gent. Thomas Cromwell;
A man in so high esteem with the king, and truly
A worthy friend. The king has made him master
O' the jewel house,
And one, already, of the privy council.
Sec. Gent. He will deserve more.
Third Gent. Yes, without all doubt.
Come, gentlemen, ye shall go my way, which
Is to the council; and there ye shall be my guests:
Something I can command. As I walk thither,
I'll tell ye more.
Both. You may command us, sir. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Kimbolton.

Enter Katharine, Dowager, sick; led between Griff-
th, her gentleman usher, and Patience, her woman.
Griff. How does your grace?
Koth. O Griffith, sick to death! My legs, like laden branches, bow to the earth.
Willing to leave their burden. Betch a chair:
So: now, methinks, I feel a little ease.
Didst thou not tell me, Griffith, as thou led'st me,
That the great child of honour, Cardinal Wolsey,
Was dead?
Griff. Yes, madam; but I think your grace,
Out of the pain you suffer'd, gave no ear to 't.
Koth. Prithree, good Griffith, tell me how he died:
If well, he stepp'd before me, happily
For my example.
Griff. Well, the voice goes, madam: For after the stout Earl Northumberland An arrested him at York, and brought him forward, As a man sorely tainted, to his answer, He fell sick suddenly, and grew so ill He could not sit his mule.

Kath. Alas, poor man!

Griff. At last, with easy roads, he came to Leicester, Lodged in the abbey; where the reverend abbot, With all his covent, honourably received him; To whom he gave these words, 'O, father abbot, An old man, broken with the storms of state, Is come to lay his weary bones among ye; Give him a little earth for charity!' So went through; and, with this his weakness Pursued him still: and, three nights after this, About the hour of eight, which he himself Foretold should be his last, full of repentance, Continual meditations, tears, and sorrows, He gave his honours to the world again, His blessed part to heaven, and slept in peace.

Kath. So may he rest; his faults lie gently on him! Yet thus far, Griffith, give me leave to speak him, And yet with charity. He was a man Of an unbounded stomach, ever ranking Himself with princes; one that, by suggestion, Tied all the kingdom: simony was full-play His own was law: the presence He would say untruths; and be ever double Both in his words and meaning: he was never, But where he meant to ruin, pitiful: His promises were, as he then was, mighty; But his performance, as he is now, nothing: Of his own body he was ill, and gave The clergy ill example.

Griff. Noble madam, Men's evil manners live in brass; their virtues We write in water. May it please your highness To hear me speak his good now?

Kath. Yes, good Griffith; I was malicious else.

Griff. This cardinal, Though from an humble stock, undoubtedly Was fashion'd to much honour from his cradle. He was a scholar, and a ripe and good one; Excelling in the things spoken, he became: Lofty and sour to them that loved him not; But to those men that sought him sweet as summer. And though he were unsatisfied in getting, Which was a sin, yet in bestowing, madam, He was most princely: ever witness for him Those twits of our will, called arms, that ha' been you, Ipswich and Oxford! one of which fell with him, Unwilling to outlive the good that did it; The other, though unmind'd, yet so famous, So excellent in art, and still so rising, That Christendom shall ever speak his virtue. His own eye he found happiness in him; For then, and not till then, he felt himself, And found the blessedness of being little: And, to add greater honours to his age Than man could give him, he died fearing God.

Kath. After my death I wish no other herald, No other speaker of my living actions, To keep mine honour from corruption, But such an honest chronicler as Griffith, Whom I most hated living, thou hast made me, With thy religious truth and modesty, Now in his ashes honour: peace be with him! Pardon me, madam; and send me lower: I have not leisure to trouble thee. Good Griffith, Cause the musicians play me that sad note I named my knell, whilst I sit meditating On that celestial harmony I go to.

[Sad and solemn music."

Griff. She is asleep; good wench, let's sit down quiet, For fear we wake her: softly, gentle Patience.
ACT V.

KING HENRY VIII.

SCENE I.

Pat. No, madam. [Giving it to Katherine.

Kath. Sir, I most humbly pray you to deliver
This to my lord the king.

Cry. Most willing, madam.

Kath. In which I have commended to his good ness
The model of our chaste loves, his young daughter;
The dew of heaven full thick in blessings on her!
Beseeching him to give her virtuous breading,—
She is young, and of a noble modest nature,
I hope she will deserve well,—and a little
To love her for her mother's sake, that loved him,
Heaven knows how dearly. My next poor petition
Is, that his noble grace would have some pity
Upon my wretched women, that so long
Have follow'd both my fortunes faithfully:
Of which there is not one, I dare avow,
And now I should not lie, but will deserve,
For virtue and true beauty of the soul,
For honesty and decent carriage,
A right good husband, let him be a noble;
And sure, those men are happy that shall 'em.
The last is, for my men: they are the poorest,
But poverty could never draw 'em from me;

That they may have their wages duly paid 'em,
And something over to remember me by:
It heaven had pleased to have given me longer life
And able means, we had not parted thus,
These are the whole contents: and, good my lord,
By that you love the dearest in this world,
As you wish Christian peace to souls departed,
Stand these poor people's friend, and urge the king
To do me this last right.

Cry. By heaven, I will,
Or let me lose the fashion of a man.

Kath. I thank you, honest lord. Remember me
In all humility unto his highness:
Say his long trouble now is passing
Out of this world; tell him, in death I bless'd him,
For so I will. Mine eyes grow dim. Farewell,
My lord, Griffith, farewell. Nay, patience,
You must not leave me yet: I must to bed;
Call in more women. When I am dead, good wench,
Let me be used with honour: strang me over
With maiden flowers, that all the world may know
I was a chaste wife to my grave: embalm me,
And then lay me forth, although unqueen'd, yet like
A queen, and daughter to a king, inter me.
I can no more.

[Exeunt, leading Katherine.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—London. A gallery in the palace.

Enter Gardiner, Bishop of Winchester, a Page with a torch before him, and by Sir Thomas Lovell.

Gard. It's one o'clock, boy, is't not?

Boy. It hath struck.

Gard. These should be hours for necessities,
Not for delights; times to repair our nature
With comforting repose, and not for us [Thomas!
To waste these times. Good hour of night, Sir
Whither so late?

Lov. Came you from the king, my lord?

Gard. I did, Sir Thomas; and let him at primero
With the Duke of Suffolk.

Lov. I must to him too,
Before he go to bed. I'll take my leave.

Gard. Not yet, Sir Thomas Lovell. What's the matter?
It seems you are in haste: an if there be
No great offence belongs to 't, give your friend
Some touch of your late business: affairs, that walk,
As they say spirits do, at midnight, have
In them a wilder nature than the business
That seeks dispatch by day.

Lov. My lord, I love you;
And durst commend a secret to your ear [labour,
Much weightier than this work. The queen's in
They say, in great extremity; and fear'd
She will with the labour end

Gard. The fruit she goes with
I pray for heartily, that it may find
Good time, and live: but for the stock, Sir Thomas,
I wish it grubb'd up now.

Lov. Methinks I could
Cry the amen; and yet my conscience says
She's a good creature, and, sweet lady, does
Deserve our better wishes.

Gard. But, sir, sir,
Hear me, Sir Thomas: you're a gentleman
Of mine own way: I know you wise, religious;
And, let me tell you, it will never be well,
'Twill not, Sir Thomas Lovell, take 't of me,
Till Cranmer, Cromwell, her two hands, and she,
Sleep in their graves.

Lov. Now, sir, you speak of two
The most remark'd in the kingdom. As for Cromwell,
Beside of that in the jewel house, is made master
O' the rolls, and the king's secretary; further, sir,
Stands in the gap and trade of most preferments,
With which the time will load him. The archbishop
Is the king's hand and tongue; and who dare speak
One syllable against him?

Gard. Yes, yes, Sir Thomas,
There are that dare; and I myself have ventured
To speak my mind of him: and indeed this day,
Sir, I may tell you, I think I have Incensed the lords of the council, that he is,
For so I know he is, they know he is,
A most arch heretic, a pestilence
That does infect the land: with which they moved
Have broken with the king; who hath so far
Given ear to our complaint, of his great grace
And prince: care foreseeing these fell mischiefs
Our reasons laid before him, hath commanded
To-morrow morning to the council-board
He be convened. He's a rank weed, Sir Thomas,
And we must root him out. From your affairs
I hinder you too long: good-night, Sir Thomas.

Lov. Many good-nights, my lord: I rest your serv-

[Exeunt Gardiner and Page.

Enter the King and Suffolk.

King. Charles, I will play no more to-night;
My mind's not on 't; you are too hard for me.

Suff. Sir, I did never win of you before.

King. But little; Charles; nor shall not, when my fancy's on my play.

Now, Lovell, from the queen what is the news?

Lov. I could not personally deliver to her
What you commanded me, but by her woman
I sent your message; who returned her thanks
In the greatest humbleness, and desired your high-
Most heartily to pray for her. [Read

King. What say'st thou, ha?
To pray for her? what, is she crying out?

Lov. So said her woman; and that her sufferance
Almost each pang a death.

King. Alas, good lady! [Read

Say, God safely quit her of her barrenth, and
With gentle travail, to the gladding of
Your highness with an heir!

King. 'Tis midnight, Charles;
Prithee, to bed; and in thy prayers remember
The estate of my poor queen. Leave me alone;
For I must think of that which company
Would not be friendly to. I wish your highness
A quiet night; and my good mistress will Remember in my prayers.

King. Charles, good-night. [Exit Suffolk.

Enter Sir Anthony Denny.

Well, sir, what follows?

Den. Sir, I have brought my lord the archbishop,
As you commanded me.

King. Ha! Canterbury?

Den. Ay, my good lord. But 'tis a matter of terror. All's not well. [Aside]

King. Bring him to us.

Loc. [Aside] This is about that which the bishop
I am happily come hither. [Enter Denny, with Cranmer.

King. Avoid the gallery. [Lowell seems to stay.] Ha! I have said. Be gone.

What! [Exit Lowell and Denny.

Cran. [Aside] I am fearful: wherefore frowns he
'Tis his aspect of terror. All's not well. [Aside]

King. How now, my lord! you do desire to know
Wherefore I sent for you.

Cran. [Kneeling] It is my duty
To attend your highness' pleasure.

King. Pray you, arise,
My good and gracious Lord of Canterbury.
Come, you and I must walk a turn together; [hand]
I have news to tell you: come, come, give me your
Ah, my good lord, I grieve at what I speak,
And am right sorry to repeat what follows:
I have, and most unwillingly, of late
Heard many grievances, I do say, my lord,
Grievous complaints of you; which, being consider'd,
Have moved us and our council, that you shall
This morning come before us: where, I know,
You cannot with such freedom purge yourself,
But that, till further trial in those charges
Which will require your answer, you must take
Your patience to, and be well contented [us,
To make your house our Tower: you a brother of
It fits we thus proceed, or else no witness
Would come against you.

Cran. [Kneeling] I humbly thank your highness;
And am right glad to catch this good occasion
Most thoroughly to be winnow'd, where my chaff
And corn shall fly asunder: for, I know,
There's none stands under more calamitous tongues
Than I myself, poor man.

King. Stand up, good Canterbury:
Thy truth and thy integrity is rooted.
In us, thy friend; give me thy hand, stand up:
Prichet, let's walk. Now, by my holocausts,
What manner of man are you? My lord, I look'd
You would have given me your petition, that I should have ta'en some pains to bring together
Yourself and your accusers; and to have heard you,
Without inducement, further.

Cran. Most dread liege, The good I stand on is my truth and honesty:
If they shall fail, I, with mine enemies,
Will triumph o'er my person; which I weigh not,
Being of those virtues vacant. I fear nothing
What can be said against me.

King. Know you not
How your state stands 't the world, with the whole world?

Cran. I hope I am not too late; and yet the gentleman
That was sent to me from the council, prithee me
To make great haste. All fast? what means this? Who waits there? Sure, you know me? [Hear.

Enter Keeper.

Keep. Yes, my lord;
But yet I cannot help you.

Cran. Why?

[Enter Doctor Butts.

Keep. Your grace must wait till you be call'd for.

Cran. So.

Butts. [Aside] This is a piece of malice. I am glad
I have been here before them; to communicate
Shall understand it presently. [Exit.}

Cran. [Aside] 'Tis Butts, The king's physician: as he pass'd along,
How earnestly he cast his eyes upon me! 'tis true, for he was not my equal; for certainly this is the first time I have told you why I hate me—

God turn their hearts! I never sought their malice—

[make me]

To quench mine honour: they would shame to Wait else at door, a fellow-counselor. 'Mong boys, grooms, and lackeys. But their pleas—Must be full'd, and I attend with patience.

Enter the King and Butts at a window above.

Butts. I'll shaw your grace the strangest sight—

King. What's that, Butts?

Butts. I think your highness saw this many a day.

King. Body o' me, where is it?

Butts. There, my lord: the high promotion of his grace of Canterbury;

Who holds his state at door, 'mongst pursuivants, Pages, and footboys.

King. Ha! 'tis he, indeed:

Is this the honour they do me one another?

'Tis well there's one above 'em yet. I had thought

They had parted so much honestly among 'em,

At last, good manners, as not thus to suffer

A man of his place, and so near our favour,

To dance attendance on their lordships' pleasures, And keep his door too, in a pew with jackets.

By holy Mary, Butts, there's knavery:

Let 'em alone, and draw the curtain close:

We shall hear more anon.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Council-Chamber.

Enter Lord Chancellor; places himself at the upper end of the table on the left hand; a seat being left vacated by him, as for Canterbury's seat. Duke of Suffolk, Duke of Norfolk, Surrey, Lord Chamberlain, Gardiner, seat themselves in order on each side. Cromwell at lower end, as valet-de-chamber. [Keeper at the door.

Cham. Speak to the business, master secretary:

Why are we met in council?

Crom. Please your honours.

Lord chancellor concerns his grace of Canterbury.

Gar. Has he had knowledge of it?

Crom. Yes.

Nor. Who waits there?

Gar. Yes.

Keep. My lord archbishop:

And has done half an hour, to know your pleasures.

Cham. Let him come in.

Keep. Your grace may enter now.

Crom. Enter the chamber and approaches the council-table.

Cham. My good lord archbishop, I'm very sorry

To sit here at this present, and behold

That chair stand empty: but we are men, In our own natures frail, and capable

Of our flesh: few are angels: out of which frailty And want of wisdom, you, that best should teach us, Have inordinate 'ly yourself, and not a little, Toward the king first, then his laws, in filling

The whole realm, by your teaching and your claps: For so we are inform'd, with new opinions, Affairs, Divers and dangerous: which are heresies, And, not reform'd, may prove pernicious.

Gar. Which reformation must be sudden too, My noble lords; for those that tame wild horses Place 'em not in their hands to make 'em gentle, But stop their mouths with stubborn bits, and spur Till they obey the manager. If we suffer, 'em, Out of our easiness and childishness,

To one man's honour, this contagious sickness, Farewell all physic: and what follows then?

Commotions, uproars, with a general taint Of the whole state: as, of late days, our neighbours, The upper German, can dearly witness, Yet freshley ridded in our memories.

Crom. My good lords, hititherto, in all the progress Of both my life and office, I have labour'd, And with no little study, that my teaching And the strong course of my authority Might go one way, and safely: and the end Was ever, to do well: nor is there living, I speak it with a single heart, my lords, A man that more defers, more stirs against, Both in his private conscience and his place, Defacers of a public peace, than I do. Pray heaven the king may never find a heart With less allegiance in it! Men that make Envy and crooked malice nonishment

Dare bite the best, I do beseech your lordships, That, in this case of justice, my accusers, Be what they will, they may stand forth face to face, And freely urge against me.

Sof. Nay, my lord,

That cannot be: you are a counsellor,

And, by that virtue, no man dare accuse you.

Gar. My lord, because we have business of more moment,

We will be short with you. 'tis his highness' pleas—

And our consent, for better trial of you.

From hence you be committed to the Tower;

Where, being but a private man again, You shall know many dare accuse you boldly.

More than, I fear, you are provided for: [yon;

Crom. All, my good Lord of Winchester, I thank you.

You are always my good friend; if your will pass, I shall both find your lordship judge and juror,

You are so merciful: I see your end;

'Tis my undoing: love and meekness, lord,

Become a churchman better than ambition;

Win straining souls with modesty again,

Cast none away. That I shall clear myself,

Lay all the weight ye can upon my patience,

I make as little doubt, as you do conscience

In doing daily wrongs. I could say more.

But reverence to your calling makes me modest.

Gar. My lord, my lord, you are a sectary,

That's the plain truth: you painted gloss discovers,

To men that understand you, words and weakness.

Crom. My Lord of Winchester, you are a little,

By your good favour, too sharp; men so noble,

However faulty, yet should find respect.

For what they have been: 'tis a cruelty

To lead a falling man.

Gar. Good master secretary,

I cry your honour mercy; you may, worst

Of all this table, say so.

Crom. Why, my lord?

Gar. Do not I know you for a favourer

Of this new sect? ye are not sound.

Crom. Not sound, I say.

Gar. Not sound, I say.

Crom. Would you were half so honest!

Men's prayers then would seek you, not their fears.

Gar. I shall remember this bold language.

Cham. Do.

Remember your bold life too.

Cham. This is too much;

Forbear, for shame, my lords.

Gar. I have done.

Crom. And I.

Cham. Then thus for you, my lord: it stands

I take it, by all voices, that forthwith

[agreed, You be convey'd to the Tower a prisoner;

There to remain till the king's further pleasure

Be known unto us: are you all agreed, lords?

All. We are.

Cham. Is there no other way of mercy,

But I must needs to the Tower, my lords?

Gar. What other

Would you expect? you are strangely troublesome.

Let some o' the guard be ready there.

Enter Guard.

Cham. For me?

Must I go like a traitor thither?

507
ACT V.  KING HENRY VIII.

SCENE IV.

Gav.  Receive him, and see him safe to the Tower.

Crom.  I dare not. Stay, good my lords, a little yet to say. Look there, my lords! By virtue of that ring, I take my cause To the most noble judge, the king my master. Crom.  This is the king's ring.

Sar.  It is no counterfeit.

Nor.  Do you think, my lords, the king will suffer but the little finger Of this man to be vex'd?—Gav.  'Tis now too certain: How much more is his life in value with him? Would I were fairly out on it! Crom.  My mind gave me, In seeking tales and informations Against this man, whose honesty the devil And his disciples only envy at,

Ye blew the fire that burns ye: now have at ye!

Enter King, frowning on them; takes his seat.

Gav.  Dread sovereign, how much are we bound to In daily thanks, that gave us such a prince; [heaven Not only my good name, but my religious: One that, in all obedience, makes the church The chief aim of his honour; and, to strengthen That holy duty, out of dear respect, His royal self in judgment comes to hear The cause betwixt her and this great offender.

King.  You were ever good at sudden conclaves, Bishop of Winchester. But now, I come not [fions, To hear such flattery now, and in my presence; They are too thin and bare to hide offences. To me you cannot reach, you play the spindie, And think with wagging of your tongue to win me; But, whatsoever thou takest me for, I am sure Thou hast a cruel nature and a bloody. [prolemest To Cranmer.] Good man, sit down. Now let me see the He, that dares most, but wag his finger at thee: By all thy holiness, he had better starve Than but once think this place becomes thee not.

Nor.  May it please your grace,—Gav.  No, sir, it does not please me, I had thought I had had men of some understanding And wisdom of my council; but I find none. Was it discretion, lords, to let this man, This good man,—few of you deserve that title,— This honest man, wait like a lousy footboy At chamber-door; and one as great as you are? Why, what a shame was this! Did my commission Bid ye so far forget yourselves? I gave ye Power as he was a counselor to try him, Not as a groomsman: there's some of ye, I see, More out of malice than integrity. Would try him to the utmost, had ye mean; Which ye shall never have while I live.

Cham.  Thus far, My most dread sovereign, may it like your grace To let my tongue excuse all. What was purposed Concerning his imprisonment, was rather If there be faith in men, meant for his trial, And fair purgation to the world, than malice, I'm sure, in me.

King.  Well, well, my lords, respect him; Take him, and use him well, he's worthy of it. I will say thus much for him, if a prince May be draging to a subject, I Am, for his love and service, to him. Make me no more ado, but all embrace him; Barry, Be friends, for shame, my lords! My Lord of Canter- I have a suit which you must not deny me; That is, a fair young maid that yet wants baptism, You must be godfather, and answer for her. Crom.  The greatest monarch now alive may glory In such an honour: how may I deserve it, That am a poor and humble subject to you?—King.  Come, come, my lord, you'll spare your son's? You have all but my lawful partners with you; the old Duchess of Norfolk, and Lady Marchess Dor- set: will these please you? Once more, my Lord of Winchester, I charge you, Embrace and love this man.

Gav.  With a true heart.

And brother-love I do it.

Crom.  And let heaven Witness, how dear I hold this confirmation. [heart:

King.  Good man, those joyful tears show thy true The common voice, I see, is verified [hnr: Of thee, which says thus, 'Do my Lord of Canter- A shrewd name; and he is your friend for ever.' Come, lords, we will trie the case with we To have this young one made a Christian.  As I have made ye one, lords, one remain; So I grow stronger, you more honour gain. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The palace yard.

Noise and tumult within. Enter Porter and his Man.

Port.  You'll leave your noise anon, ye rascals: do you take the court for Paris-garden? ye rude slaves, leave your gaping—[harder. With all your rude'y portrayer, I belong to the—

Port.  Belong to the gallow's, and be hanged, ye rogue! is this a place to roar in? Fetch me a dozen crab-tree staves, and strong ones: these be but switches to 'em. I'll scratch your heads: you must be seeing christenings? do you look for ale and horse here, you rude rascals? [sible—

Mon.  Pray, sir, be patient: 'tis as much impo- Unless we sweep 'em from the door with cannons— To scatter em, as 'tis to make 'em sleep On May-day morning; which will never be: We may as well push against Powle's, as stir 'em. Port.  How got they in, and be hang'd?—

Man.  Alas, I know not; how gets the tide in? As much as one sound cudgel of four foot— You see the poor remainder—could distribute, I made no spare, sir.

Port.  You did nothing, sir.

Mon.  I am not Sansom, or Sir Gun ; nor Colbrand, To mow 'em down before me; but if I scarce any That had a head to hit, either young or old, He or she, uncalk or coddle-maker, Let me 'er hope to see a chin again; And that I would not for a cow, God save her! Within] Do you hear, master porter?—

Port.  We shall shew you presently, good master puppy. Keep the door close, sirrah.

Mon.  What would you have me do?—

Port.  What should you do, but knock 'em down by the dozens? Is this Moorfields to muster in? or have we some strange Indian with the great tool come to court, the women so besiege us? Bless me, what a fry of fornication is at door! On my Christian con- science, this one christening will beget a thousand; here will be father, godfather, and all together. Mon.  The spoons will be the bigger, sir. There is a fellow somewhat near the door, he should be a brassier by his face, for, 'tis my conscience, twenty of the dog-days now reign in 's nose; all that stand about him are under the line, they need no other penance: that fire-drake did I hit three times on the head, and three times was his nose discharged against me: he stands there, like a mortar-piece, to bless us, and his wife's the wife of small wit near him, that railed upon me till her pinked poiringer fell off her head, for kindling such a combustion in the state. I missed the meteor once, and hit that woman; who cried out 'Chuts!' when I might see from far some forty tramoneau to draw to her succour, which were the hoop e' the Strand, where she was quartered. They fell on; I made good my place: at length they came to the broomstaff to me; I debated 'em still: when suddenly a file of boys behind 'em, loose shot, delivered such a shower of pebbles, that I was fain to draw mine honour in, and let 'em win the work: the devil was amongst 'em, I think, surely.

Port. These are the youths that thunder at a playhouse, and light for blithe boys; he that audience, but the tribulation of Tower-hill, or the limbs of Limehouse, their dear brothers, are able to endure, I have some of 'em in Limbo Patrum, and there they are like to dance these three days; besides the running banquet of two bealettes that is to come.

Enter Lord Chamberlain.

Cham. Mercy o' me, what a multitude are here! They grow still too; from all parts they are coming, As if we kept a fair here! Where are these porters, These lazy knaves? Ye have made a fine hand, felo- There's a trim rabble let in: are all these [loves? Your faithful friends o' the suburbs? We shall have Great store of room, no doubt, left for the ladies, When they pass back from the christening.

Port. An't please your honour, We are but men: and what so many may do, Not being born at pieces, we have done: An army cannot rule 'em.

Cham. As I live, If the king blame me for 't, I'll lay ye all By the heels, and suddenly; and on your heads Chop round lines for neglect: ye are lazy knaves; And here ye lie baiting of bombards, when Ye should do service. Hark! the trumpets sound; They're come already from the christening: Go, break among the press, and find a way out To let the troop pass fairly; or I'll find A Marashelsea shall hold ye play these two months. Port. Make way there for the princess.

Men. You great fellow, Stand close up, or I'll make your head ache.

Port. You t' the cannet, get up o' the rail; I'll peck you o'er the pales else. [Exeunt.

SCENE V. – The palace.

Enter trumpets, sounding; then two Aldermen, Lord Mayor, Garter, Cranmer, Duke of Norfolk with his wife, Sir John Suffolk, twelve Noblemen bearing great standing-bowls for the christening gifts; then four Noblemen bearing a canopy, under which the Duchess of Norfolk, godmother, bearing the child richly hobbled in a mantle, dr. train borne by Lady, then follow the Marchioness Dorset, the other godmother, and Ladies. The troop pass once about the stage, and Garter speaks.

Gart. Heaven, from thy endless goodness, send prosperous life, long, and ever happy, to the high and mighty princess of England, Elizabeth!

Flourish. Enter King and Guard.

Cran. [Kneeling] And to your royal grace, and the good queen, My noble partners, and myself, thus pray: All comfort, joy, in this most gracious lady, Heaven ever laid up to make parents happy, May hourly fall upon ye!

King. Thank you, good lord archbishop; What is her name?

Gart. Elizabeth.

King. Stand up, lord; [The King kisses the child. With this kiss take my blessing; God protect thee! Into whose hand I give thy life.

Cran. Amen.

King. My noble gossips, ye have been too prodigal: I thank ye heartily; so shall this lady, When she has so much English.

Cran. Let me speak, sir, For heaven now bids me; and the words I utter Let none think flattery, for they'll find 'em truth. This royal infant— heaven still move about her!— Though in her cradle, yet now promises Upon this land a thousand thousand blessings, Which time shall bring to ripeness: she shall be — But few now living can behold that goodness — A pattern to all princes living with her, And all the world may be pleased. Shall succeed; More covetous of wisdom and fair virtue Than this pure soul shall be: all princely graces, That mould up such a mighty piece as this is, With all the virtues that attend the good, Shall still be doubled on her: truth shall nurse her, Holy and noble-minded thoughts; she shall be happy! She shall be loved and feared: her own shall bless Her fœs shake like a field of beaten corn, [her; And hang their heads with sorrow; good grows with In her days every man shall eat in safety. [her: Under his own vine, what he plants; and sing The merry songs of peace to all his neighbours! God shall be truly known: and these about her From her shall read the perfect ways of honour, And by those claim their greatness, not by blood. Nor shall this peace sleep with her: but as when The bird of wonder dies, the maiden phoenix, Her ashes new create another like her, As great in admiration as herself: So shall she leave her blessedness to one, [ness, When heaven shall call her from this cloud of dark- Who from the sacred ashes of her honour Shall star-like rise, as great in fame as she was, And so stand fixed; peace, plenty, love, truth, terror, That were the servants to this chos'n infant, Shall then be his, and like a vine grow to him: Wherever the bright sun of heaven shall shine, His honour and the greatness of his name Shall be, and make new nations: he shall flourish, And like that Shalshet in Salsa, from his branches To all the plains about him: our children's children Shall see this, and bless heaven.

King. Thou speakest wonders.

Cran. She shall be, to the happiness of England, An aged princess: many days shall see her, And yet a day without a deed to crown it. Would I had known more! but she must die, She must, the saints must have her; yet a virgin, A most unspotted lily shall she pass To the ground, and all the world shall mourn her. King. O lord archbishop, Thou hast made me not a man! never, before This happy time, did I so consent: I give any thing: This oracle of comfort has so pleased me, That when I am in heaven I shall desire To see what this child does, and praise my Maker. I thank ye all. To you, my good lord mayor, And your good brethren, I am much beholding; I have received much honour by your presence, And ye shall find me thankful. Lead the way, lords: Ye must all see the queen, and she must thank ye, She will be sick else. This day, no man think Has business at his house; for all shall stay: This little one shall make it holiday. [Exeunt.

EPILOGUE.

Tis ten to one this play can never please All that are here: some come to take their ease, And sleep an act or two: but those, we fear, We have frightened with our trumpets: so, 'tis clear, They 'll say their imagination is so light, As it was near the city Abused extremely, and to cry 'That's witty!' Which we have not done neither: that, I fear, All the expected good we're like to hear For this play at this time, is only in The merciful construction of good women; For such a beast as 'hope' we scarce smile, And say 't will do, I know, within a while All the best men are ours; for 'tis all hap, If they hold when their ladies bid 'em clap. 509

Prologue.

In Troy, there lies the scene. From isles of Greece
The princes orgulous, their high blood chafed,
Have to the port of Athens sent their ships,
To ran'sack Troy, wherein those strong immures
Put forth toward Phrygia, and their vow is made;
With wanton Paris sleeps; and that's the quarrel.
To Tenedes they come:
And the deep-drawing barks do there disgorge
Their warlike fraughtage: now on Dardan plains
The fresh and yet unbruised Greeks do pitch
Their brave pavilions: Priam's six-gated city,
Dardan, and Tymbria, Helius, Chetas, Troien,
And Antenorides, with massy staples
And corresponsive and fulfilling bolts,
Sperr up the sons of Troy.
Now expectation, tickling skittish spirits,
Leaps o'er the vaunt and firstlings of those broils,
Beginning in the middle, starting thence away
To what may be digested in a play.
Like or find fault; do as your pleasures are:
Now good or bad, 'tis but the chance of war.

Act I.

Enter Troilus armed, and Pandarus.

Troil. Ay, the grinding; but you must marry the Trojan.

Pand. Have I not tarried? [bolting.

Troil. I have not tarried? [leavening.

Pand. Ay, the grinding; but you must marry the Trojan.

Troil. Have I not tarried? [leavening.

Pand. Ay, the grinding; but you must marry the Trojan.

Troil. Still have I tarried.

Pand. Ay, to the leavening; but here's yet in the word 'hereafter' the kneading, the making of the cake, the heating of the oven and the baking; may you must stay the cooling too, or you may chance to burn your lips.

Troil. Patience herself, what goddess e'er she be,

Pand. So, traitor! 'When she comes!' When is she thence?

Troil. Patience herself, what goddess e'er she be,

Pand. Well, she looked yesternight fairer than ever I saw her look, or any woman else.

Troil. I was about to tell thee:—when my heart,
ACT I.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

SCENE II.

As wedged with a sigh, would rive in twain,
Lest Hector or my father should perceive me,
I have, as when the sun doth light a storm,
Barren high in Phrygia's heat:—
But sorrow, that is couch'd in seeming gladness,
Is like that mirth fate turns to sudden sadness.

Pan. An her hair were not somewhat darker than Helen's—well, go to—there were no more comparison between the women: but, for my part, she is as a kinswoman; I would not, as they term it, to praise her: but I would somebody had heard her talk yesterday, as I did. I will not disparage your sister Cassandra's wit, but—

Tro. O Pandarus! I tell thee, Pandarus.—
When I do tell thee, there my hopes lie drown'd,
Reply not in how many fathom's deep
They lie indrue'd. I tell thee I am mad
In Cressid's love: thou answer'st 'she is fair;'
Pour'st in the open ulcer of my heart
Her eyes, her hair, her cheek, her gait, her voice,
Handest in thy discourse, O, that her hand,
In whose comparison all whites are ink,
Writing their own reproach, to whose soft seizure
The cygnet's down is harsh and spirit of sense
Hard as the palm of ploughman: this thou tell'st
As true thon tell'st me, when I say I love her; [me,
But, saying thus, instead of oil and balm,
Thou lay'st in every gash that love hath given me
The knife that made it.

Pan. I speak no more than truth.

Tro. Thou dost not speak so much.
Pan. Faith, I'll not meddle in't. Let her be as she is: if she be fair, 'tis the better for her; an she be not, she has the mends in her own hands.

Tro. Good Pandarus, how now, Pandarus!

Pan. I have had my labour for my travail; ill-thought of on her and ill-thought of on you; gone between and between, but small thanks for my labour. [me?

Pan. What art thou angry, Pandarus? what, with Pan. Because she's kin to me, therefore she's not so fair as Helen: an she were not kin to me, she would be as fair on Friday as Helen is on Sunday.
But what care I? I care not an she were a blackma'oo; 'tis all one to me.

Pan. Say I she is not fair?

Pan. I do not care whether you do or no. She's a fool to stay behind her father: let her to the Greeks; and so I'll tell her the next time I see her:
for my part, I'll meddle nor make no more of the Tro. Pandarus.—
Pan. Not 1.

Pan. Pray you, speak no more to me: I will leave all as I found it, and there an end.
[Exit Pandarus. An alarm.]

Tro. Peace, you ungracious clowns! peace, rule sounds.
Fools on both sides! Helen must needs be fair,
When with your blood you daily paint her thus.
I cannot fight upon this argument;
It is too starved a subject for my sword.
But Pandarus,—O gods, how do you plague me!
I cannot come to Cressid but by Pandar;
And he's as tetchy as he'd woo'd to woo,
As she is stubborn-chaste against all suit.
Tell me, Apollo, for thy Daphne's sake,
What Cressid is, what Pandar, and what we?
Her bed is India: there she lies, a pearl;
Between our Ilissum and where she resides,
Let it be said in whisper, having done good,
Ourselves the merchant, and this sailing Pandar
Our doubtful hope, our convoy and our bark.

Alarum. Enter Eneas.

Ene. How now, Prince Troilus! wherefore not afield?

Tro. Because not there: this woman's answer
For womanish it is to be from theece.

What news, Eneas, from the field to-day?
Ene. Troy, that Pandar is returned home and hurt.

Tro. By whom, Eneas?
Ene. Troilus, by Menelaus.

Tro. Let Paris bleed: 'tis but a scar to scorn;
Paris is gored with Menelaus' horn.

Ene. Hark, what good sport is out of town today?—

Tro. Better at home, if 'would I might' were
But to the sport abroad: are you bound thither?
Ene. In all swift haste.

Tro. Come, go we then together.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same. A street.

Enter Cressida and Alexander.

Cres. Who were those went by?
Alex. Queen Hecuba and Helen.

Cres. And whither go they?
Alex. Up to the eastern tower,
Whose height commands as subject all the vale,
To see the battle. Hector, whose patience
Is, as a virtue, fix'd, to-day was mov'd:
He chid Andromache and struck his armourer,
And, like as there were husbandry in war,
Before the sun rose he was harness'd light,
And to the field goes he; where every flower
Did, as a prophet, weep what it foresaw
In Hector's wrath.

Cres. What was his cause of anger?
Alex. The noise goes, this: there is among the Greeks
A lord of Trojan blood, nephew to Hector;
They call him Ajax.

Cres. Good; and what of him?
Alex. They say he is a very man per se,
And stands alone.

Cres. So do all men, unless they are drunk, sick, or have no legs.

Alex. This man, lady, hath robbed many beasts of their particular additions: he is as valiant as the lion, churlish as the bear, slow as the elephant:
A man into whom nature hath so crowded humours
That his valour is crushed into folly. His folly suceeds with discretion: there is no man hath a virtue that he hath not a glimpse of, nor any man an attain't but he carries some stain of it: he is melancholy without cause, and merry against the hair: he hath the joints of every thing; but every thing so out of joint that he is a gouty Briarvas, many hands and none, one Sweeney and Argus, all eyes and no sight.

Cres. But how should this man, that makes me smile, make Hector angry?
Alex. They say he yesterday coped Hector in the battle and struck him down, the disdain and shame whereof hath ever since kept Hector fasting and wailing.

Cres. Who comes here?
Alex. Madam, your uncle Pandarus.

Enter Pandarus.

Cres. Hector's a gallant man.
Alex. As may be in the world, lady.
Pan. What's that? what's that?

Cres. Good morrow, uncle Pandarus.
Pan. Good morrow, cousin Cressid; what do you talk of? Good morrow, Alexander. How do you, cousin? When were you at Ilium?

Cres. This morning, uncle.
Pan. What were you talking of when I came?
Was Hector armed and gone ere ye came to Ilium?
Helen was not up, was she?

Cres. Hector was gone, but Helen was not up.
Pan. Even so: Hector was stirring early.
Cres. That were we talking of, and of his anger.

511
Pan. Was he angry?

Cres. So he says here.

Pan. True, he was so: I know the cause too: he'll say about him to-day, I can tell them that; and there's Troilus will not come far behind him; let them take heed of Troilus, I can tell them that.

Cres. What, is he angry too?

Pan. Who, Troilus? Troilus is the better man of the two.

Cres. O Jupiter! there's no comparison.

Pan. What, not between Troilus and Hector?

Do you know a man if you see him?

Cres. Ay, if I ever saw him before and knew him.

Pan. Well, I say Troilus is Troilus.

Cres. Then you say as I say; for, I am sure, he is not Hector.

Pan. No, nor Hector is not Troilus in some degrees.

Cres. 'Tis just to each of them; he is himself.

Pan. Himself! Alas, poor Troilus! I would he

Cres. So he is. [Exeunt.]

Pan. Condition, I had gone barefoot to India.

Cres. He is not Hector.

Pan. Himself! no, he's not himself: would a' were himself! Well, the gods are above; time must friend or end; well, Troilus, well; I would my heart were in her body. No, Hector is not a better man than Troilus.

Cres. Excuse me.

Pan. He is elder.

Cres. Pardon me, pardon me.

Pan. Th' other's not come to 't: you shall tell me another tale, when th' other's come to 't. Hector shall not have his wit this year.

Cres. He shall not need it, if he have his own.

Pan. Nor his qualities.

Cres. No matter.

Pan. Nor his beauty.

Cres. 'T would not become him: his own 'a better.

Pan. You have no judgment, niece; Helen herself swore th' other day, that Troilus, for a brown favour—for so 'tis, I must confess,—not brown neither,—

Cres. No, but brown.

Pan. 'Faith, to say truth, brown and not brown.

Cres. But say the truth, true and not true.

Pan. She praised his complexion above Paris.

Cres. Why, Paris hath colour enough.

Pan. So he has.

Cres. Then Troilus should have too much: if she praised him above, his complexion is higher than his; he having colour enough, and the other higher, is too much praise for a good complexion. I had as lief Helen's golden tongue had commended Troilus for a copper nose.

Pan. I swear to you, I think Helen loves him better than Paris.

Cres. Then she's a merry Greek indeed.

Pan. Nay, I am sure she does. She came to him th' other day into the compassed window.—and, you know, he has not past three or four hairs on his chin,—

Cres. Indeed, a tapster's arithmetic may soon bring his particulars therein to a total.

Pan. Why, he is very young: and yet will he, within three pound, lift as much as his brother Hector.

Cres. Is he so young a man and so old a lilter?

Pan. But to prove to you that Helen loves him: she came and puts me her white hand to his cloven chin—

Cres. Juno have mercy! how came it cloven?

Pan. Why, you know, 'tis dimpled: I think his smiling becomes him better than any man in all

Pan. Does he not?

Cres. O yes, and 't were a cloud in autumn.

Pan. Why, go to, then: but to prove to you that Helen loves Troilus,—

Cres. Troilus will stand to the proof, if you'll have it clearly kept before you.

Pan. Troilus! why, he esteems her no more than I esteem an addle egg.

Cres. If you love an addle egg as well as you love an idle head, you would eat chickens' the shell.

Pan. I cannot choose but laugh, to think how she tickled his chin: indeed, she has a marvellous white hand, I must needs confess,—

Cres. Without the rack.

Pan. And she takes upon her to spy a white hair on his chin.

Cres. Alas, poor chin! many a wart is richer.

Pan. But there was such laughing! Queen Hecuba laughed that her eyes ran over.

Cres. With mill-stones.

Pan. And Cassandra laughed.

Cres. But there was more temperate fire under the pot of her eyes: did her eyes run over too?

Pan. And Hector laughed.

Cres. At what was all this laughing?

Pan. Marry, at the white hair that Helen spied on Troilus' chin. [Laughed too.

Cres. An't had been a green hair, I should have

Pan. They laughed not so much at the hair as at his pretty answer.

Cres. What was his answer?

Pan. Quoth she, 'Here's but two and fifty hairs on your chin, and one of them is white.'

Cres. This is her question.

Pan. That's true: make no question of that.

Two and fifty hairs, quoth he, 'and one white: that white hair is my father, and all the rest are his sons.' 'Jupiter!' quoth she, 'which of these hairs is Paris my husband?' 'The forked one,' quoth he, 'pluck it out, and give it him.' But there was such laughing! and Helen so blushed, and Paris so chafed, and all the rest so laughed, that it passed.

Cres. So let it now; for it has been a great while going by. [Think on't.

Pan. Well, cousin, I told you a thing yesterday;

Cres. So I do.

Pan. I'll be sworn 't is true; he will weep you, and weep a man born in April.

Cres. And I'll spring up in his tears, an't were a nettle against May. [A retreat sounded.

Pan. Hark! they are coming from the field; shall we stand up here, and see them as they pass toward Ilum? good niece, do, sweet niece Cressida.

Cres. Do your pleasure.

Pan. Here, here, here's an excellent place; here we may see most bravely: I'll tell you them all by their names as they pass by; but mark Troilus above

Cres. Speak not so loud. [The rest.

Æneas passes.

Pan. That's Æneas: is not that a brave man? he's one of the flowers of Troy, I can tell you: but mark Troilus; you shall see anon.

Antenor passes.

Cres. Who's that?

Pan. That's Antenor: he has a shrewd wit, I can tell you; and he's a man good enough: he's one of the soundest judgments in Troy, however, and a proper man of person. When comes Troilus? I'll show you Troilus anon: if he see me, you shall see him nod at me.

Cres. Will he give you the nod?

Pan. You shall see.

Cres. If he do, the rich shall have more.

Hector passes.

Pan. That's Hector, that, that, look you, that; there's a fellow! Go thy way, Hector! There's a brave man, niece, O brave Hector! Look how he looks! there's a countenance! is 't not a brave man?

Cres. O, a brave man!

Pan. Is 't not? it does a man's heart good. Look you what hacks are on his helmet! look you yonder, do you see? look you there: there's no jesting; there's laying on, take 't off who will, as they say: there be hacks!

Pan. Be those with swords?

Pan. Swords! any thing, he cares not; an the devil come to him, 'tis all one; by God's lid, it does one's heart good. Yonder comes Paris, yonder comes Paris.

Paris passes.

Cres. Who's that?

Cres. Can Helenus fight, uncle?

Pan. Is it not? yes, he'll fight indifferent well. I marvel where Troilus is. Hark! do you not hear the people cry? Troilus? Helenus is a priest.

Cres. What sneaking fellow comes yonder?

Pan. Where? yonder? that's Deiphobus. 'Tis Troilus! there's a man, niece! Hemp! Brave Troilus! the prince of chivalry!

Cres. Peace, for shame, peace!

Pan. Mark him; note him. O brave Troilus! Look well upon him, niece: look you how his sword is bloodied, and his helm more bloody than Hector's, and how he looks, and how he goes! O admirable youth! he ne'er saw three and twenty. Go thy way, Troilus, go thy way! Had I a sister were a grace, or a daughter a goddess, he should take his choice. O admirable man! Paris? Paris is dirt to him, and, I warrant, Helen, to change, would give an eye

Cres. Here come more. [in boot.

Pan. Asses, fools, dolts! chaff and bran, chaff and bran! porridge after meat! I could live and die the eyes of Troilus. Ne'er look, the eagles are gone: crows and daws, crows and daws! I had rather be such a man as Troilus than Agamemnon and all Greece.

Cres. There is among the Greeks Achilles, a better man than Troilus.

Pan. Achilles! a drayman, a porter, a very camel.

Cres. Well, well.

Pan. 'Well, well.' Why, have you any discretion? have you any eyes? do you know what a man is? Is not birth, beauty, good shape, discourse, manhood, learning, gentleness, virtue, youth, liberality, art, such like, the spice and salt that season a man?

Cres. Ay, a minced man: and then to be baked with no date in the pie, for then the man's date's out.

Pan. You are such a woman! one knows not at what word you lie.

Cres. Look in my back, to defend my belly: upon my wit, to defend my wits: upon my secrecy, to defend mine honesty: my mask, to defend my beauty; and you, to defend all these: and at all these words I lie, at a thousand watches.

Pan. Say one of your watches.

Cres. I do not watch for that; and that's one of the chiefest of them too: if I cannotward what I would not have bit, I can watch you for telling how I took the blow: unless it swell past hating, and then it's past watching.

Pan. You are such another!

Enter Troilus's Boy.

Boy. Sir, my lord, he would instantly speak with you.

Pan. Where?

Boy. At your own house: there he unbarms him.

Pan. Good boy, tell him I come. [Exit Boy.] I doubt he be hurt. Fare ye well, good niece.

Cres. Adieu, uncle.

Pan. I'll be with you, niece, by and by.

Cres. To bring, uncle?

Pan. Ay, a token from Troilus.

Cres. By the same token, you are a bawd. [Exit Pandar.]

SCENE III.—The Greek camp. Before Agamemnon's tent.

Scened. Enter Agamemnon, Nestor, Ulysses, Menelaus, and others.

Agam. Princes,

What grief doth set the jaundice on your cheeks? The ample proposition that hope makes

In all designs begin on earth below

Fails in the promised largeness; checks and disasters

Grow in the veins of actions highest reared,

As knots, by the confux of meeting sap,

Infect the sound pine and divert his grain

Tortive and errant from his course of growth.

Nor, princes, is it matter new to us

That we come short of our suppose so far

That after seven years' siege yet Troy walls stand:

Sith every action that hath gone before,

Whereof we have record, trial did draw

Bias and thwart, not measure, be our aim,

And that unembodied figure of the thought

That gave't surprized shape. Why then, you princes,

Do you with cheeks abash'd behold our works,

And call them shames? which are indeed nought else

But the protractive trials of great Jove

To find perpetually constancy in men:

The fineness of which metal is not found

In fortune's love; for then the bold and coward,

The wise and fool, the artist and unread,

The hard and soft, seem all aligned and kin:

But, in the wind and tempest of her frown,

Distinction, with a broad and powerful fan,

Pulling at all, winnows the light away:

And what hath mass or matter, by itself

Lies rich in virtue and unmingled.

Nest. With due observance of thy godlike seat,

Great Agamemnon, Nestor shall apply

The latest words. In the reproved chance

Lies the true proof of men: the sea being smooth,

How many shallow baulble boats dare sail

Upon her patient breast, making their way

With those of nobler bulk!

But let the rufian Boreas once enrage

The gentle Theis, and anou behold

The strong-rib'd bark through liquid mountains

33
Bounding between the two moist elements,
Like Perseus' horse: where's then the saucy boat
Whose weak unlimber'd sides but even now
Cries, or, to the northward--(setting his sun)
Or made a toast for Neptune. Even so
Doth valour's show and valour's worth divide
In storms of fortune: for in her ray and brightness
The herd hath more annoyance by the breeze
Than by the tiger: but when the splitting wind
Makes flexible the knees of knotted oaks,
[Exeunt all but Ulysses]

Ulysses. Agamemnon,
The great commander, nerve and heart of Greece,
Heart of our numbers, soul and only spirit,
In whom the tempers and the minds of all
Should be shut up, hear what Ulysses speaks.
Besides the applause and approbation
The which, [To Agamemnon] most mightily for thy place and sway, [out lie

[To Nest.] And thou most reverend for thy stretch'd-
I give to both your speeches, which were such
As Agamemnon and the hand of Greece
Should hold up high in brass, and such again
As venerable Nestor, hatch'd in silver,
Should come with a bond of air, the daedalean
On which heaven rides, knit all the Greekish ears
To his experienced tongue, yet let it please both,
Thou great, and wise, to hear Ulysses speak.

Agnan. Speak, Prince of Iliaca; and be 't of less
That matter needless, of importless burden, [expe-
Divide thy lips, than we are commanded
When rank Thersites orates his mastic jaws,
We shall hear munific, wit and oracle.

Ulyss. Troy, yet upon his basis, had been down,
And the great Hector's sword had lack'd a master,
But for these instances.
The specialty of rule hath been neglected:
And, look, how many Grecian tents do stand
Hollow upon this plain, so many hollow factions.
When that the general is not like the hive
To whom the foragers shall all repair,
What honey is expected? Degree being vizarded,
The tyrants viles fairly in the mask
The heavens themselves, the planets on this centre
Observe degree, priority and place,
Insistency, course, proportion, season, form,
Office and custom, in all line of order;
And therefore is the glorious planet Sol
In noble eminence enthroned and splashed
Amidst the other stars in catchable eye
Corrects the ill aspects of planets evil,
And posts, like the commandment of a king,
Sans check to good and bad: but when the planets
In evil mixture to disorder wander,
What plagues and what portents! what mutiny!
What raging of the sea! shaking of earth
Commotion in the winds! frights, changes, horrors,
Divert and crack, rend and decimate
The unity and married calm of states
Quite from their mixture! O, when degree is shak'd,
Which is the ladder to all just designes,
Then enterprise is sick! How could communities,
Degrees in schools and brotherhoods in cities,
Peaceful commerse from divisable shores,
The primogenitive and due of birth,
Prerogative of age, crowns, sequeires, laurels,
But by degree's violation荧?
Take but degree away, the string
And, hark, what discord follows! each thing meets
In mere oppignancy: the bounded waters
Should lift their bosoms higher than the shores
And make a sop of all this solid globe:
Strength should be lord of imbecility
And the rude son should strike his father dead:

Force should be right; or rather, right and wrong,
Between whose endless jar justice resides,
Should lose their names, and so should justice too.
Then equal things includes itself in power,
Power into will, will into appetite;
And appetite, an universal wolf,
So doubtly seconded with will and power,
Must make perforce an universal prey,
And last eat up himself. Great Agamemnon,
This current passion degree is suffocates,
Follows the choking.
And this neglect of degree it is.
That by a pace goes backward, with a purpose
It hath to climb. The general's disdain'd
By him one step below, he by the next.
That man to him be both; so every step,
Examined by the first pace that is sick
Of his superior, grows to an envious fever
Of pale and bloodless emulation:
And 't is this fever that keeps Troy on foot,
Not her own sinews. To end a tale of length,
Troy, in our weakness stands, not in her strength.

Nest. Most piously hath Ulysses discover'd
The fever whereof all our power is sick.

Agnan. The nature of the sickness found, Ulysses,
What is the remedy?

Ulyss. The great Achilles, whom opinion crowns
The shrew and the foremost of our host,
Having the car full of his heart's good,
Grows dainty of his worth and in his tent
Lies mocking our designs: with him Patroclus
Upon a lazy bed the etenlong day
Breaks scurril jests,
And with ridiculous and awkward action,
Which, slanderer, he imitation calls,
He pageants us. Sometimes, great Agamemnon,
Thy topless deputation he puts on,
And, like a strutting player, whose conceit
Lies in his hamstring, and doth think it rich
To hear the wooden dialogue and sound
'Twixt his stretch'd footing and the seawallage,
Such to-be-pitied and o'er-wrested seeming
He acts thy greatness in: and when he speaks,
'Tis like a chime-a-mending: with terms unsquared,
Which, from the tongue of roaring Typhon dropp'd,
Would seem hyperboles. At this lusty stuff
The larval heroes, on his fiery frame,
From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause;
Cries 'Excellent!' 't is Agamemnon just.
Now play me Nestor: hem, and stroke thy beard,
As he being drest to some oration.'
That's done, as near as the extremest ends
Of parable, as like as two peacocks, his wife:
Yet god Achilles still cries 'Excellent!
'T is Nestor right. Now play him me, Patroclus,
Arming to answer in a night alarm.'
And then, forsooth, the faint defects of age
Must be the scene of mirth: to cough and spit,
And, with a palsy-fumbling on his gout,
Shake in and out the rivet: and at this sport
Sir Valour dies; cries 'O, enough, Patroclus;
Or give me ribs of steel! I shall splitt all
In pleasure of my spleen.' And in this fashion
All our abilities, gifts, natures, shapes,
Severals and generals of grace exact:
Achievements, plots, orders, preventions,
Excitements to the field, or speech for truce,
Success or loss, what is or is not, serves
As stuff for these two to make paradoxes.

Nest. And in the imitation of these twain—
Who, Ulysses, says, opinion crowns
With an imperial voice—many are infect.
Ajax is grown self-will'd, and bears his head
In such a rein, in full as proud a place
As broad Achilles; keeps his tent like him;
Makes factious feasts; full on our state of war,
Bold as an oracle, and sets Thersites,
A prince call'd Hector.—Prium is his father,—
Who in this dull and long-continued truce
Is vastly grieved to see his trumpets cease,
And to this purpose speak, Kings, princes, lords!
If there be one among the fair'st of Greece
That holds his honour higher than his ease,
That seeks his praise more than he fears his peril,
That knows his valour, and knows not his fear.
That loves his mistress more than in confession,
With truant vows to her own lips he loves,
And dare avow her beauty and her worth
In other arms than hers,—to him this challenge.
Hector, in view of Trojans and of Greeks,
Shall make it good, or do his best to do it,
He hath a body, fairer, firmer, truer
Than ever Greek did compass in his arms,
And will to-morrow with his trumpet call
Midway between your tents and walls of Troy,
To rouse a Grecian that is true in love;
If any come, Hector shall honour him;
If none, he'll say in Troy when he retires,
The Grecian dames are sunburnt and not worth
The splinter of a lance. Even so much.

Agam. This shall be told our lovers, Lord Eneas;
If none of them have soul in such a kind,
We left them all at home: we are soldiers,
And may that soldier a more recreant prove,
That means not, hath not, or is not in love!
If then one is, or hath, or means to be,
That one meets Hector; if none else, I am he.

Nest. Tell him of Nestor, one that was a man
When Hector's grandsire suck'd: he is old now;
But if there be not in our Grecian host
One noble man that hath one spark of fire,
To answer for his love, tell him from me
I'll hide my silver beard in a gold beaver
And in my pantaloon put this wither'd brawn,
And meeting him will tell him that my lady
Was fairer than his mistress chaste,
As may be in the world: his youth in flood,
I'll prove this truth with my three drops of blood.

Eneas. Now heavens forbid such scarcity of youth!

Ulyss. Amen.

Agam. Fair Lord Eneas, let me touch your hand:
To our pavilion shall I lead you, sir,
Achilles shall have word of this intent:
So shall each lord of Greece, from tent to tent:
Yourself shall feast with us before you go
And find the welcome of a noble foe.

[Exeunt all but Ulysses and Nestor.

Ulyss. Nestor!—
Nest. What says Ulysses?
Ulyss. I have a young conception in my brain:
Be you my time to bring it to some shape.

Nest. What is't?
Ulyss. This is:
Blind wedges river hard knots: the seeded pride
That hath this maturity blown up
In rank Achilles must or now be cropp'd,
Or, shedding, breed a nursery of like evil,
To overbuck us all.

Nest. Well, and how?

Ulyss. This challenge that the gallant Hector
However it is spread in general fame, [seems]
Relates in purpose only to Achilles...
[stance]
Nest. The purpose is perspicuous even as sub-
Whose grossness little characters sum up:
And, in the publication, make no strain.
But that Achilles, were his brain as barren
As tanks of the colossus knows,
T is dry enough,—will, with great speed of judg-
Ay, with celerity, find Hector's purpose [ment]
Pointing on him.

Ulyss. And wake him to the answer, think you?

Nest. Yes, 'tis most meet: whom may you else op-
That can from Hector bring his honour off. [pose.
If not Achilles? Though 'tis a sportful combat.
Yet in the trial much opinion doth swell;
For here the Trojans taste our dearst repute
With their best palate; and trust to me, Ulysses,
Our imputation shall be oddly poised
In this wild action; for the success,
Although particular, shall give a scantling
Of good or bad unto the general;
And in such indexes, although small pricks
to their subsequent volumes, there is seen
The lady figure of the giant mass
Of things to come at large. It is supposed
He that meets Hector issues from our choice;
And choice, being mutual act of all our souls,
Makes merit her election, and cloth boil.
As 't were from forth us all, a man distill'd
Out of our virtues; who miscarrying, [part
What heart receives from hence the conquering
To steel a strong opinion to themselves?
Which entertain'd, limbs are his instruments
In no less working than are swords and bows
Directive by the limbs.
Ulyss. Give pardon to my speech;
Therefore 'tis meet Achilles meet not Hector.
Let us, like merchants, show our foulest wares,
And think, perchance, they'll sell; if not,
The lower of the better yet to show,
Shall show the better. Do not consent
That ever Hector and Achilles meet:
For both our honour and our shame in this
Are dogg'd with two strange followers.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A part of the Grecian camp.

Enter Ajax and Thersites.

Ajax. Thersites! Thersites!
Ther. Agamemnon, how if he had boil'd? full,
al over, generally?

Ajax. Thersites!
Ther. And those boil'd did run? say so; did not the general run then? were not that a botchey core?

Ajax. Dog!
Ther. That would come some matter from him:
I see none now.

Ajax. Thou bitch-wolf's son, canst thou not hear?
[Beating him] Feel, then.

Ther. The plague of Greece upon thee, thou mongrel beef-witted lord!

Ajax. Speak thou viewDEST heaven, speak!
I will beat thee into handlessness.

Ther. I shall sooner rai thee into wit and holiness:
but, I think, thy horse will sooner con an erration than thou learn a prayer without book.
Thou canst strike, canst thou? a red murrain on thy lade's tricks!

Ajax. Toadstool, learn me the proclamation.

Ther. Dost thou think I have no sense, thou striketh me thus?

Ajax. The proclamation!

Ther. Thou art proclaimed a fool. I think.

Ajax. Do not, perpendive, do not; my fingers itch.

Ther. I would thou dist itch from head to foot and I had the scratching of thee; I would make thee
the loathsomest scab in Greece.
When thou art forth in the incursions, thou striketh as slow as another.

Ajax. I say, the proclamation!

Ther. Thou grumblest and raiest every hour on Achilles, and thou art as full of envy at his greatness as Cærbens is at Proserpina's beauty, ay, that thou bestark at him.

Ajax. Mistress Thersites!

Ther. Thou shouldst strike him.

Ajax. Cobbold!

Nest. I see them not with my old eyes: what are

They? I see...

Ulyss. What glory our Achilles shares from Hector,
Were he not proud, we all should share with him:
But he already is too insolent;
And we were better parch in Afric sun
Than in the pride and salt spurn of his eyes,
Should he escape Hector fair: if he were foil'd,
Why then, we did our main opinion crush
In taint of our best man. No, make a lottery;
And, by device, let blockish Ajax draw
The sort to fight with Hector: among ourselves
Give him allowance for the better man:
For that will physic the great Myrmidon
Who broils in loud applause, and make him fall
His crest that pronder than blue Iris bends.
If the dull brainless Ajax come safe off,
We'll dress him up in voices: if he fail,
Yet go we under our opinion still
That we have better men. But hit or miss,
Our project's life this shape of sense assumes:
Ajax employ'd plucks down Achilles' plumes.

Nest. Ulysses,
Now I begin to relish thy advice;
And I will give a taste of it forthwith
To Agamemnon: go we to him straight.
Two cures shall tame each other: pride alone
Must tarre the mastiffs on, as 't were their bone.
[Exeunt.
ACT II. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA. SCENE II.

Achil. Nay, good Ajax.
Ther. Has not so much wit—
Achil. Nay, I must hold you.
Ther. As will stop the eye of Helen's needle, for whom he comes to fight.
Achil. Peace, fool!
Ther. I would have peace and quietness, but the fool will have that he: look you there.
Achil. O thou damned cur! I shall—
Ther. Will you set your wit to a fool's? [It.
Achil. No, I warrant you; for a fool's will shame
Patr. Good words, Thersites.
Achil. What's the quarrel?
Ther. The owl go learn me the tenor of the proclamation, and he rails upon me.
Ther. I serve thee not.
Achil. Your last service was sufferance, 't was not voluntary: no man is beaten voluntary: Ajax was here the voluntary, and you as under an impress.
Ther. E'en so; a great deal of your wit, too, lies in your sives, or else there be lirs. Hector shall have a great catch, if he knock out either of your brains: a were as good crack a rusty nut with no
Achil. What, with me too, Thersites? [Kernel
Ther. This is but a child's and old Nester, whose wit was mouldy ere your grandfathers had nails on their toes, voke you like draught-oxen and make you plough up the wars.
Achil. What, what?
Ther. Yes, good sooth: to, Achilles! to, Ajax! to Achil. I shall cut out your tongue.
Ther. Tis no matter; I shall speak as much as thou afterwards.
Patr. No more words, Thersites; peace!
Ther. I will hold my peace when Achilles' brach
Achil. There's for you, Patroclus.
Ther. I will see you hanged, like clotpoles, ere I come any more to your tents: I will keep where there is wit stirring and leave the faction of fools. [Exit. Patr. A good riddance. [Our host Achil. Marry, this, sir, is proclaim'd through all That Hector, by the fifth hour of the sun,
Will with a trumpet 'twixt our tents and Troy To-morrow morning call some knight to arms That hath a stomach; and such a one that dare Maintain— I know not what: 'tis trash. Farewell.
Achil. Farewell. Who shall answer him?
Ther. I know not: 'tis put to lottery; otherwise He knew his man:

Enter Priam, Hector, Troilus, Paris, and Helenus.

Pri. After so many hours, lives, speeches spent, Thus once again says Nestor from the Greeks: 'Deliver Helen, and all damage else— As honour, loss of time, travail, expense. [Summed Wounds, friends, and what else dear that is Condemned of hot digestion of this comorous war— Shall be struck off.' Hector, what say you to 't?
Hect. Though no man lesser fears the Greeks than As far as toucheth my particular,
I Yet, dear Priam, There is no lady of more soft bowels, More spongy to suck in the sense of fear, More ready to cry out 'Who knows what follows?' Than Hector is; the wound of peace is surety, Surely secure; but modest doubt is call'd The least of the worst, the tent that searches To the bottom of the worst. Let Helen go:

Since the first sword was drawn about this question, Every title soul, amongst many thousand dismes, Hath been as dear as Helen: I mean, of ours: If we have lost so many tenths of ours, To guard a thing not ours nor worth to us, Had it our name, the value of one ten. What merit in that reason which denies The yielding of her up?

Tro. Fie, fie, my brother! Weigh you the worth and honour of a king So great as our dead father in a scale Of common houses? will you with counters sum The past proportion of his infinite? And buckler in a waist most fathomless With spans and much and thin the live; Ares and reasons? fie, fie godly shame! [sobs, Hel. No marvel, though you bite so sharp at reason, You are so empty of them. Should not our father Bear the great sway of his affairs with reasons, Because your speech hath none that tells him so?

Tro. You are for dreams and slumber, brother priest; You fur your gloves with reason. Here are your kith and kin that intend you harm; You know a sword employ'd is perilous, And reason flies the object of all harm: Who marvels then, when Helenus beholds A Greekian and his father, whom he loved The very wings of reason to his heels And by like chidden Mercury from Jove, Or like a star disorder'd? Nay, if we talk of reason, Let's shut our gates and sleep: manhood and honour Should have bare-hearts, would they but bat their brains, With this crouch'd reason: reason and respect Make livers pale and lustful head dear.

Hect. Brother, she is not worth what she doth cost The holding.

Tro. What is aught, but as 't is valued?

Hect. But value does not in particular will; It holds its estimate and dignity As well wherein 't is precious of itself As in the prize: 't is mad idolatry To make the service greater than the god; And the will does that is attributive To what infectiously itself affects, Without some image of the affected merit.

Tro. I take to-day a wife, and my election Is let on in the conduct of my will; My will eunuch'd by mine eyes and ears, Two trained pilots 'twixt the dangerous shores Of will and judgment, who may I avoid, Although my will distaste what it elected, The wife I chose? there can be no evasion To blemish from this and to stand firm by honour: We turn not back the silks upon the merchant, When we have sold them, nor the remainder viands We do not throw in unrespective sties, Because we now the full. It was thought meet Paris should do some vengeance on the Greeks: Your breath of full consent bellic'd his sails; The seas and winds, old wranglers, took a truce And did him service: he touch'd the ports desired, And for an old aunt whom the Greeks held captive He brought a Greekian queen, whose youth and freshness Wrinkles Apollo's, and makes stale the morning. Why keep we her? the Grecians keep our aunt: Is she worth keeping? why, she is a pearl, Whose price hath launch'd above a thousand ships, And turn'd a crown'd kings to merchandise. If you ' ll avouch ' t was wisdom Paris went — As you must needs, for you all cried 'Go, go,— If you ' ll confess he brought home noble prize — As you must needs, for you all clapp'd your hands, and cried 'Inestimable!' why do you now The issue of your proper wisdons rate, And do a deed that fortune never did,
TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

ACT II.

TROILUS. Why, what if I would enrich? We that have stol'n what we do fear to keep! But thieves, unthrifts, of a thing so stol'n, That in their country died them that disgrace, We fear to warrant in our native place! Cos. [Within] Cry, Trojans, cry! I. Prit. What noise? what shriek is this? Tro. 'Tis our true sister; I do know her voice. Cos. [Within] Cry, Trojans! Het. It is Cassandra.

Enter Cassandra, raving.

Cus. Cry, Trojans, cry! lend me ten thousand eyes, And I will fill them with prophetic tears. [Sighs.]

Het. Why, brother Hector, We may not think the justness of each act Such and no other than event both torn it, Nor once deject the courage of our minds. Because Cassandra's mad: her brain-sick raptures Cannot distaste the goodness of a quarrel Which hath our several honours all engaged To make it gracious. For my private part, I am no more touch'd than all Priam's sons; And Jove forbid there should be done amongst us Such things as might offend the weakest spoke To fight for and maintain! Par. Else might the world convince of levy As well my understandings as your counsels: But I, the gods, ye gods, ye gods! Gave wings to my propension and cut off All fears attending on so dire a project. For what, alas, can these my single arms? What propinquity is in one man's valour, To stand the push and enmity of those Things excellest would excite? I protest, Were I alone to pass the difficulties And had as ample power as I have will, Paris should ne'er retract what he hath done, Nor faint in the pursuit.

Het. Paris, you speak Like one besotted on your sweet delights: You have the honey still, but these the gall; So to be valiant is no praise at all.

Par. Sir, I propose not merely to myself The pleasures such a beauty brings with it; But I would have the soil of her fair rape Wiped off, in honouurable keeping her. What treason were it to the rashack'd queen, Disgrace to your great worths and shame to me, Now to deliver her possession up. On terms of base compulsion? Can it be That so degenerate a strain as this Shall pass the speech of that generous bosom? There's not the meanest spirit on our party Without a heart to dare or sword to draw When Helen is defended, nor none so noble Whose life were ill bestow'd or death unmanned Where Helen is the subject; then, I say, Well may we shrug our shoulders, we know well, The world's large spaces cannot parallel.

Het. Paris and Troilus, you have both said well, And on the cause and question now in hand Have glozed, but superficially: not much Unlike the lute, that if the sot's idle thought Unit to hear moral philosophy: The reasons you allege do more conclude To the hot passion of distemper'd blood Than to make up a free determination "Twixt right and wrong; for pleasure and revenge Have ears more deaf than adders given to the voice Of any true decision. Nature craves All dues be render'd to their owners: now, What nearer debt in all humanity Than wife is to the husband? If this law Of nature be corrupted through affection, And that such power, sister, sib, and friend, To their bended wills, resist the same, There is a law in each well-order'd nation To curb those raising appetites that are Most disobedient and refractory. If Helen then be wife to Sparta's king, As it is known she is, these moral laws Of nature and of nations speak aloud To have her back return'd: thus to persist In doing wrong extemates not wrong, But makes it much more heavy. Hector's opinion Is this in way of truth; yet nevertheless, Surely spirited brethren, I appeal to you In resolution to keep Helen still, For 'tis a cause that hath no mean dependence Upon our joint and several dignities. [Sign: Tro. Why, there you touch'd the life of our de... Wore it not glory that we more affected Than the performance of our heaving sails, I would not wish a drop of Trojan blood Spent more in her defence. But, worthy Hector, She is a theme of honour and renown, A spurious and magnanimous deeds, Whose present courage may beat down our foes, And some in time to come can vie us. For, I presume, brave Hector would not lose So rich advantage of a promised glory As smiles upon the forehead of this action For the wide world's revenue.

Het. I am yours, You want offspring of great Priam's blood. I have a roisting challenge sent amongst The dull and factious nobles of the Greeks Will strike amazement to their drowsy spirits: I was advertised their general slept, Whilst emulation in the army crept: This, I presume, will wake him.

Enter Thersites, solus.

Ther. How now, Thersites! what, lost in the labyrinth of thy fury! Shall the elephant Ajax carry it thus? he beats me, and I rai at him: O, worthy satisfaction! would it were otherwise; that I could beat him, whilst he rai'd me. 'Stoop, I'll learn to conjure and raise devils, but I'll see some issue of my spiteful excursions. Then there's Achilles, a raw engineer! If Troy be not taken till these two undermine it, the walls shall stand till they fall of themselves. O thou great thunder-darier of Olympus, forget that thou art Jove, the king of gods, and, Mercury, lose all the serpentine grace; and with the issue of the serpent, less than little little less than little little wit from them that have us! which short-armed ignorance itself knows is so abundant scarce, it will not in circumvention deliver a fly from a spider, without this, the vengeance on the whole camp; or rather, the house of Ajax, Lacon, Thersites, is the curse dependent on those that war for a Enter Patroclus.

Patr. Who's there? Thersites! Good Thersites, come in and rally.

Ther. If I could have remembered a gift counter-feit, thou wouldst not have slipped out of my con-templation: but it is no matter: thyself upon thyself! The common curse of mankind, folly and igno-rance, be thine in great revenue! heaven bless thee from a tutor, and discipline come not near thee! Let thy blood be thy direction till thy death! then if she that lays thee out says thou art a fair corpse. I'll be sworn he and sworn upon 'shelnex-shrouded any but Lazarus. Amen. Where's Thersites?

Patr. What, art thou devout? wast thou in prayer?

Ther. Ay: the heavens hear me!

Enter Achilles.

Achil. Who's there?

Patr. Thersites, my lord.

Achil. Where, where? Art thou come? why, my cheese, my digestion, why hast thou not served thyself in to my table so many meals? Come, what do the Acharnians want?

Ther. Thy commander, Achilles. Then tell me, Patroclus, what's Achilles?

Patr. Thy lord, Thersites: then tell me, I pray thee, what's thyself?

Ther. Thy knower, Patroclus: then tell me, Patroclus, what art thou?

Patr. Thou mayst tell that knowest, Achil. O, tell, tell.

Ther. I' ll decline the whole question. Agamem-non commands Achilles; Achilles is my lord; I am Patroclus' knowler, and Patroclus is a fool.

Patr. You rage.

Ther. Peace, fool! I have not done. [sites. Achil. He is a privileged man. Proceed, Ther. Agamemnon is a fool; Achilles is a fool; Thersites is a fool, and, as aforesaid, Patroclus is a fool. Derive this; come. [fool. Ther. Agamemnon is a fool to offer to command Achilles; Achilles is a fool to be commanded of Agamemnon; Thersites is a fool to serve such a fool, and Patroclus is a fool positive.

Patr. Why am I a fool?

Ther. Make that demand of the proper. It suf-fices me thon art. Look you, who comes here?

Achil. Patroclus. I'll speak with nobody. Come in with me, Thersites. [Exit. Ther. Here is such patchery, such juggling and such knavery! all the argument is a cuckold and a whore; a good quarrel to draw emulous factions and bless to death upon. Now, the dry serpigo on the subject! and war and leechery confound all! [Exit.

Enter Agamemnon, Ulysses, Nestor, Diomedes, and Ajax.

Agam. Where is Achilles?

Patr. Within his tent; but ill disposed, my lord.

Agam. Let it be known to him that we are here. He shent our messengers; and we lay by 'Our appraittments, visiting of him: Let him be told so; lest perchance he think We dare not move the question of our place, Or we may not what we mean.

Patr. I shall say so to him. [Exit. Ulyss. We saw him at the opening of his tent: He is not sick.

Ajax. Yes, lion-sick, sick of proud heart: you may call it melancholy, if you will favour the man; but, by my head, 'tis pride: but why, why? let him show us the cause.

A word, my lord. [Takes Agamemnon aside.

Ulyss. Ile.

Nest. Then will Ajax lack matter, if he have lost his argument.

Ulyss. No, you see, he is his argument that has his argument: Achilles.

Nest. All the better; their fraction is more our wish than their faction: but it was a strong com-posure a fool could disunite.

Ulyss. The unity that wisdom knits not, folly may easily unite. Here comes Patroclus.

Re-enter Patroclus.

Nest. No Achilles with him.

Ulyss. The elephant hath joints, but none for courtesy: his legs are legs for necessity, not for flexure.

Patr. Achilles bids me say, he is much sorry, If anything more than your sport and pleasure Did move your greatness and this noble state To call upon him; he hopes it is no other But for your health and your digestion sake, An after-dinner's breath.

Agam. Ho! Hear you, Patroclus: We are too well acquainted with these answers; But his evasion, wing'd thus swift with scorn, Cannot outly our apprehensions.

Much attribute he hath, and much the reason Why we ascribe it to him; yet all his virtues, Not virtuously on his own part beheld, In our eyes begin to lose their gloss, Yea, like fair fruit in an unwholesome dish, Are like to rot untasted. Go and tell him. We come to speak with him: and you shall not sin, If you do say we think him over-prond And under-honest, in self-assumption greater Than in the note of judgment; and worthier than him.

Here tend the savage strangeness he puts on, Disguise the holy strength of their command, And underwrite in an observing kind His humorous predominance; yea, watch His petitious lutes, his ebbs, his flows, as if The passage and whole carriage of this action Rode on his tide. Go tell him this, and add, That if he overhold his price so much, We'll none of him: but let him, like an engine Not portable, lie under this report: • Bring action hither, this cannot go to war: A stirring dwarf we do allowance give Before a sleeping giant. Tell him so.

Patr. I shall; and bring his answer presently. [Exit. Agam. In second voice we'll not be satisfied; We come to speak with him. Ulysses, enter you. [Exit Ulysses. Ajax. What is he more than another?

Agam. No more than what he thinks he is.

Ajax. Is he so much? Do you not think he thinks himself a better man than I am?

Agam. No question. [is? Ajax. Will you subscribe his thought, and say he Agam. No, noble Ajax: you are as strong, as valiant, as wise, no less noble, much more gentle, and altogether more tractable.

Ajax. Why should a man be proud? How doth pride grow? I know not what pride is.

Agam. You, noble Ajax, and Ajax, and your virtues the father. He that is proud eats himself up: pride is his own glass, his own trumpet, his own chronicle: and whatever praises itself but in the deed, doth the deed and the praise.

Ajax. I do hate a proud man, as I hate the en-gaged brimm'd look. Nest. Yet he loves himself: is't not strange? [Aside.

Nest. II.
ACT III.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

SCENE I.

Enter Ajax and Pandarus.

Ajax. Friend, I pray you, a word: do not you follow the young Lord Paris?

Pand. Sir, as he goes before me.

Ajax. You depend upon him, I mean?

Pand. Sir, I do depend upon the Lord.

Ajax. You depend upon a noble gentleman; I must needs praise him.

Pand. The Lord be praised!

Ajax. You know me, do you not?

Pand. Faith, sir, superficially.

Ajax. He will be the physician that should be the patient.

Ajax. An all men were of my mind,—

Ulyss. Wit would be out of fashion.

Ajax. 'Tis all should bear it so, a' should eat swords first; shall pride carry it?

Nest. An 'twould, you 'd carry half.

Ulyss. 'Tis would have ten shares.

Ajax. I'll make him supple.

Nest. He's not yet through warm; force him with praises; pour in, pour in; his ambition is dry.

Ulyss. [To Ajax.] My lord, you feed too much on this dislike.

Nest. Our noble general, do not do so.

Ajax. You must procure to fight without Achilles.

Ulyss. Why, 'tis this naming of him does him here is a man—but 'tis before his face; [sigh.] I will be silent.

Nest. Wherefore should you so?

Ajax. He is not envious, as Achilles is.

Ulyss. Know the whole world, he is as valiant.

Ajax. A whoreson dog, that shall palter thus Would he were a Trojan! [sigh.] We.

Nest. What a vice were it in Ajax now,—

Ulyss. If he were proud,—

Ajax. Or covetous of praise,—

Ulyss. Ay, or surly borne—

Ajax. Or strange, or self-affected! [composure;

Ulyss. Thank the heavens, lord, thou art of sweet Praise him that got thee, she that gave thee suck: Famed be thy tutor, and thy parts of nature Thrice famed, beyond all emulation:

But be that disciplined thy arms to fight, Let Mars divide eternity in twain, And give him half: and, for thy vigour, Bull-bearing Milo his addition yield To shewy Ajax. I will not praise thy wisdom, Which, like a bourn, a pale, a shore, confines Thy spacious and dilated parts: here's Nestor; Instructed by the antiquity times, He must, he is, he cannot but be wise: But pardon, father Nestor, were your days As green as Ajax' and your brain so temper'd, You should not have the eminence of him, But be as Ajax.

Ajax. Shall I call you father?

Nest. Ay, my good son.

Ajax. Be ruled by him, Lord Ajax.

Ulyss. There is no tarrying here; the harts Achilles Keeps thickest. Please it our great general To call together all his state of war:

Axe. The fresh kings are come to Troy; to-morrow We must with all our main of power stand fast: And here's a lord,—come kithens from east to west, And call their flower, Ajax shall cope the best.

Ajax. Go we to council. Let Achilles sleep: Light beats sail swift, though greater hulls draw deep. [Exeunt.]
ACT III.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

SCENE II.

Serv. At mine, sir, and theirs that love music.

Serv. Who shall I command, sir?

Pan. Young sir, we understand not one another: I am too curtly and thou art too cunning. At whose request do these men play?

Serv. That's to't indeed, sir; marry, sir, at the request of Paris my lord, who's there in person; with him, the mortal Venus, the heart-blood of beauty, love's invisible soul.

Pan. Who, my cousin Cressida?

Serv. No, sir, Helen: could you not find out that by her attributes?

Pan. It should seem, fellow, that thou hast not seen the Lady Cressida. I come to speak with Paris from the Prince Troilus: I will make a complimentary assault upon him, for my business seethes.

Serv. Solden business! there's a stewed phrase indeed.

Enter Paris and Helen, attended.

Pan. Fair he to you, my lord, and to all this fair company! fair desires, in all fair measure, fairly guide them! presently to you, fair queen! fair thoughts be your fair pillow!

Helen. Dear lord, you are full of fair words.

Pan. You speak your fair pleasure, sweet queen.

Fair prince, here is good broken music.

Pan. You have broke it, cousin: and, by my life, you shall make it whole again: you shall piece it out with a piece of your performance. Well, he is full of harmony.

Pan. Truly, lady, no.

Helen. O, sir.—

Pan. Ruie, in sooth: in good sooth, very rude.

Pan. Well said, my lord! well, you say so in fits.

Pan. I have business to my lord, dear queen.

My lord, will you vouchsafe me a word?

Helen. Nay, this shall not hedge us out: we'll hear you sing, certainly.

Pan. Well, sweet queen, you are pleasant with me. But, marry, thus: my lord: my dear lord and most esteemed friend, your brother Troilus.—

Helen. My Lord Pandarous: honey-sweet lord.—

Pan. Go to, sweet queen, go to:—commands himself most affectionately to you.—

Helen. You shall not bob us out of our melody: if you do, our melancholy upon your head!

Pan. Sweet queen, sweet queen! that's a sweet queen, i' faith.

Helen. And to make a sweet lady sad is a sour

Pan. Nay, that shall not serve your turn: that shall it not, in truth, la. Nay, I care not for such words; no, no. And, my lord, he desires you, that if the king call for him at supper, you will make his excuse.

Helen. My Lord Pandarous.—

Pan. What says my sweet queen, my very very sweet queen? [night?

Pan. What exploit's in hand? where sups he to?

Helen. Nay, but, my lord,—

Pan. What says my sweet queen? My cousin will fall out with you. You must not know where he sups.

Pan. I'll lay my life, with my disposer Cressida.

Pan. No, no, no such matter; you are wide; come, your disposer is sick.

Pan. Well, I'll make excuse.

Pan. Ay, good my lord. Why should you say Cressida? no, your poor disposer's sick.

Pan. I spy.

Helen. Why, this is kindly done.

Pan. My niece is horribly in love with a thing you have, sweet queen. Lord Paris.

Helen. She shall have it, my lord, if it be not my Pan. He! no, she'll none of him; they two are twin.

Helen. Falling in, after falling out, may make them three.

Pan. Come, come, I'll hear no more of this; I'll sing you a song now.

Helen. Ay, ay, prithee now. By my troth, sweet lord, thou hast a fine forehead.

Pan. Ay, you may, you may.

Helen. Let thy song be love: this love will undo us all. O Cupid, Cupid, Cupid!

Pan. Love! ay, that it shall, I' faith.

Pan. Ay, good now, love, love, nothing but love.

Pan. In good troth, it begins so. [Sings.

Love, love, nothing but love, still more!

For, O, love's bow

Shouts buck and doe;

Those Trojans valiant,

Not that it wounds,

But tickles still the sore.

These lovers cry Oh! oh! they die!

Yet that which seems the wound to kill,

Doth turn oh! oh! to ha Sha! he!

So dying love lives still:

Oh! oh! a while, but ha! ha! ha!

Oh! oh! groans out for ha! ha! ha!

Heigh-ho!

Helen. In love, i' faith, to the very tip of the nose.

Pan. He eats nothing but doves, love, and that breeds hot blood, and hot blood begots hot thoughts, and hot thoughts beget hot deeds, and hot deeds be love.

Pan. Is this the generation of love? hot blood, hot thoughts, and hot deeds? Why, they are vipers: is love a generation of vipers? Sweet lord, who's a-field to-day?

Pan. Hector, Deiphobus, Helenus, Antenor, and all the gallantry of Troy: I would fain have armed to-day, but my Neleus would not have it so. How chance my brother Troilus went not?

Helen. He hangs the lip at something: you know all, Lord Pandarous.

Pan. Not I, honey-sweet queen. I long to hear how they sped to-day. You' ll remember your brother—

Pan. To a hair. [er's excuse?

Pan. Farewell, sweet queen.

Helen. Commend me to your niece.

Pan. I will, sweet queen. [Exit. [l retreat sound.

Pan. They're come from field: let us to Priam's hall.

To greet the warriors. Sweet Helen, I must woo To help umbr our Hector: his stubborn hucksters, With these your white enchanting fingers touch'd, Shall more obey than to the edge of steel Or force of Greekish shews: you shall do more Than all the island kings,—disarm great Hector.

Helen. 'T will make us proud to be his servant, Yea, what he shall receive of us in duty—[Paris; Gives us more palm in beauty than we have, Yea, overshines oursef.

Enter Pandarous and Troilus' Boy, meeting.

Boy. No, sir; he stays for you to conduct him

Pan. O, here he comes.

Enter Troilus.

How now, how now!

Boy. Sirrah, walk off. [Exit Boy.

Pan. Have you seen my cousin?

Boy. No, Pandarous; I talk about her door,

Like a strange soul upon the Stygian banks

Staying for waftage. O, be thou my Charon,

And give me swift transportation to those fields.
ACT III.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

SCENE II.

Where I may wallow in the lily-beds
Proposed for the desirer! O gentle Pandarus,
From Cupid's shoulder pluck his painted wings,
And fly with me to Cressid!

Tro. Walk here in the orchard, I'll bring her straight.

Pand. She's making her ready, she'll come straight;
you must be witty now. She does so blush, and fetches her wind so short, as if she were fraught with a spirit: I'll fetch her. It is the prettiest villain she:
she fetches her breath as short as a new-ta'en sparrow.

Tro. Even such a passion doth embrace my bosom:
My heart beats thicker than a feverous pulse;
And all my powers do their bestowing lose,
Like vessels at awares encountering
The eye of majesty.

Re-enter Pandarus with Cressida.

Pand. Come, come, what need you blush? shame's a baby. Here she is now: swear the oaths now to her that you have sworn to me. What, are you gone again? you must be watched ere you be made tame, must you? Come your ways, come your ways; an you draw backward, we'll put you in the fills. Why do you not speak to her? Come, draw this curtain, and let's see your picture. Alas the day, how faint you are to offend daylight! 'an't were dark, you'd sit closer sooner. So, so; rub on, and kiss the mistress. How now! a kiss in fee-farm! build there, carpenter; the air is sweet. Nay, you shall fight your hearts out ere I part you. The falcon as the tercel, for all the ducks i'the river; go to.

Tro. You have bereft me of all words, lady.

Pand. Words pay no debts, give her deeds: but she'll bereave you of the deeds too, if she call your activity in question. What, billing again? Here's
In witness whereof the parties interchangeably.

Come in, come in: I'll go get a fire. [Exit.

Cres. Will you walk in, my lord? [thus!

Tro. O Cressida, how often have I wished me Cres. Wished, my lord! The gods grant,—O my lord!

Tro. What should they grant? what makes this parity abruption? What too curious dreg castriz my sweet lady in the fountain of our love?

Cres. More dregs than water, if my fears have eyes.

Tro. Fears make devils of cherubins; they never see truly.

Cres. Blind fear, that seeing reason leads, finds safer footing than blind reason stumbling without fear: to fear the worst oft cures the worse.

Tro. O, let my lady apprehend no fear: in all
Cupid's pageant there is presented no monster.

Cres. Nor nothing monstrous neither?

Tro. No, but when we vow to weeps, live in fire, eat rocks, tame tigers; thinking it harder for our mistress to devise impossition enough than for us to undergo any difficulty imposed. This is the monstruous in love, lady, that the will is infinite and the execution confined;
that the desire is boundless and the act a slave to limit.

Cres. They say all lovers swear more performance than they are able and yet reserve an ability that never perform, whereby the perfection of ten and dischargeless than the tenth part of one. They that have the voice of lions and the act of hares, are they not monsters?

Tro. Are there such? such are not we: praise us as we are tasted, allow us as we prove: our head shall go bare till merit crown it: no perfection in reversing the scale, or praise in praise: we will not name desert before his birth, and, being born, his addition shall be humble. Few words to fair faith:
Troilus shall be such to Cressid as what envy say worst shall be a mock for his truth, and what truth can speak trust not truer than Troilus.

Cres. Will you walk in, my lord?

Re-enter Pandarus.

Pand. What, blushing still! have you not done talking yet?

Cres. Well, uncle, what folly I commit, I dedisicate to you.

Tro. I thank you for that: if my lord get a boy of you, you'll give him me. Be true to my lord: if he flinch, chide me for it.

Tro. You know now your hostages; your uncle's word and my firm faith.

Pand. I'll give my word for her too: our kindred, though they be long ere they are woed, they are constant being woed: they are burs, I can tell you; they'll stick where they are thrown. [heart.

Cres. Boldness comes to me now, and brings me
Prince Troilus, I have loved you night and day.
For many weary breaths.

Tro. Why was my Cressid then so hard to win?

Cres. Hard to seem won: but I was won, my lord,
With the first glance that ever—pardon me—
If I confess much, you will play the tyrant.
I love you now; but not, till now, so much
But I might master it; in faith, I lie;
My thoughts were like unbridled children, grown
Too headstrong for their mother. See, we fools!
Why have I blab'd! who shall be true to us,
When we are so unsecret to ourselves?

But, though I loved you well, I wou'd you not;
And yet good faith, I wish'd myself a man,
Or that we women had men's privilege
Of speaking first. Sweet, bid me hold my tongue,
For in this rapture I shall surely speak
The thing I shall repent. See, see, your silence,
Cunning in dumbliness, from my weakness draws
My very soul of counsel! stop my mouth.

Tro. And shall, albeit sweet music issues thence.

Pand. Pretty, i' faith.

Cres. My lord, I do beseech you, pardon me;
'T was not my purpose, thus to beg a kiss:
I am ashamed. O heavens! what have I done?
For this I wish till I take my leave, my lord.

Tro. Your leave, sweet Cressid!

Pand. Leave! an you take leave till to-morrow's morning.

Cres. Pray, you content, you.

Tro. What offends you, lady?

Cres. Sir, mine own company.

Tro. You cannot shun yourself.

Cres. Let me go and try:
I have a kind of self resides with you;
But an unkind self, that itself will leave,
To be another's fool and another's cow.
Where is my wit? I know not what I speak.

Tro. Well know they what they speak that speak so wisely.

Cres. Perchance, my lord, I show more craft than
And fell so roundly to a large confession,
To angle for your thoughts: but you are wise,
Or else you love not, for to be wise and love
Exceeds man's might: that dwells with gods above.
Tro. O that I thought it could be in a woman—
As, if it can, I will presume in you—
To feed for aye her lamp and flames of love;
To keep her constancy in plight and youth,
Outliving beauty well to lose a mind,
That death renew swifter than bloodstains,
Or that persuasion could but thus convince me,
That my integrity and truth to you
Might be affronted with the match and weight
Of such a winnow'd purity in love:
How were I then uplifted! but, alas!
I am already to such a height,
And simpler than the infancy of truth.

Cres. In that I'll war with you.

Tro. O virtuous fight,
When right with right wars who shall be most right?
True swains in love shall in the world come
Approve their truths by Troilus: when their rhymes,
Full of protest, of oath and big compare,
Want similes, truth tired with iteration,
As true as steel, as plantation to the moon,
As sun to day, as turtle to her mate,
As iron to adamant, as earth to the centre,
Yet, after all comparison, as truth's
As truth's authentic author to be cited,
'As true as Troilus' shall crown up the verse,
And sanctify the numbers.

Cres. Prophet may you be!
If I be false, or swerve a hair from truth,
When time is old and hath forgot itself,
When waterdrops have worn the stones of Troy,
And blind oblivion swallow'd cities up,
And mighty states characterless are grated
To dusty nothing, yet let memory,
From false to false, among false maidens in love,
Upon her forehead! even thus have said "as false
As air, as water, wind, or sandy earth,
As fox to lamb, as wolf to heifer's calf,
Part to the kind, or stepdame to her son,'—
'Yea, let them say, to stick the heart of falsehood,
'As false as Cressida.'

Pat. Go to, a bargain made: seal it, seal it: I'll be the witness.
Here I hold your hand, here my cousin's.
If ever you prove false one to another,
since I have taken such pains to bring you together, let all pitiful goers-between be called to the world's end after my name: call them all Pandars; let all combat with Troiluses, all false women Cressids, and all brokers-between Pandars! say amen.

Tro. Amen.

Cres. Amen.

Pat. Amen. Whereupon I will show you a chamber with a bed; which bed, because it shall not speak of your pretty encounters, press it to death: away! And God grant all tongues heard hereare Bed, chamber, Pandar to provide this gear! [Exeunt.

Enter Agamemnon, Ulysses, Diomedes, Nestor,
Ajax, Menelaus, and Cachas.

Cal. Now, princes, for the service I have done you,
The advantage of the time prompts me aloud
To call for recompense. Appear it to your mind
That, through the sight I bear in things to love,
I have, like Troy, a Troy in passion,
Incurn'd a traitor's name; exposed myself,
From certain and possess'd conveniences,
To doubtful fortunes; sequestering from me all
That time, acquaintance, custom and condition
Made tame and most familiar to my nature,
And hence, to do you service, am become
As new into the world, strange, unacquainted:

I do beseech you, as in way of taste,
To give me now a little benefit,
Out of those many register'd in promise,
Which, you say, five to come in my behalf.

Agn. What thought, then of us, Trojan? make demand.

Cal. You have a Trojan prisoner, call'd Antenor,
Yesterday here: this Ajax, his son unto Priam.
Oft have you — often have you thanks therefore Desired my Cressid in right great exchange.
Whom Troy hath still denied: but this Antenor,
I know, is such a wrest in their affairs
That their negotiations all must slack,
Wanting his manage: and they will almost
Give us a new alliance, a son of Priam,
In change of him: let him be sent, great princes,
And he shall buy my daughter; and her presence
Shall quite strike off all service I have done,
In most accepted pain.

Agn. Let Diomedes bear him,
And bring us Cressid hither: Calchas shall have
What he requests of us. Good Diomed,
Furnish you fairly for this interchange:
Withal bring word if Hector will to-morrow
Be answer'd in his challenge: Ajax is ready.

Dio. This shall I undertake; and 'tis a burden
Which I am proud to bear.

[Exeunt Diomedes and Calchas.

Enter Achilles and Patroclus, before their tent.

Ulyss. Achilles stands 't the entrance of his tent:
Please it our general to pass strangely by him,
As if he were forgot; and, princes all,
Lay negligent and loose regard upon him:
I will come last. 'Tis like he'll question me
Why such unpleasing eyes are bent on him:
If so, I have decision medicable,
To use between your strangeness and his pride,
Which his own will shall have desire to drink:
It may do good; pride hath no other glass
To show itself but pride, for supple knees
Feed arrogance and are the proud man's fees.

Agn. We'll execute your purpose, and put on
A form of strangeness as we pass along:
So do each lord, and either greet him not,
Or else think finely to vary him, to carry
Than if not look'd on. I will lead the way.

Achil. What, comes the general to speak with me?
You know my mind. I'll fight no more 'gainst Troy.

Agn. What says Achilles? would he be aught with us?

Nest. Would you, my lord, aught with the general?
Achil. No.

Nest. Nothing, my lord.

Agn. The better.

[Exeunt Agamemnon and Nestor.

Achil. Good day, good day.

Achil. What, does the cuckold scorn me?

Ajax. How now, Patroclus! Achilles, good morrow, Ajax.

Ajax. Ha?

Achil. Good morrow.

Ajax. Achil, good morrow.

Achil. Achil, and good next day too.

[Exeunt.

Achil. What mean these fellows? Know they not
They Achilles? [bend.

Pat. They pass by strangely: they were used to
To send their smiles before them to Achilles;
To come as humbly as they used to creep
To holy altars.

Achil. What, am I poor of late?
'Tis certain, greatness, once fall'n out with fortune,
Must fall out with men too: what the declined is
He shall as soon read in the eyes of others
As feel in his own fall; for men, like butterflies,
Show not their melancholy but to the summer,
And not a man, for being simply man,
Hath any honour, but honour for those honours
That are without him, as place, riches, favour,
Prizes of accident as oft as merit:
Which when they fall, as being slippery standers,
There is no sure footing in such rich behaviour,
Do one pluck down another and together
Die in the fall. But 'tis not so with me:
Fortune and I are friends: I do enjoy
At ample point all that I did possess:
Save these men's looks: who do, methinks, find out
Something not in me in such rich beholding
As they have often given. Here is Ulysses;
I'll interrupt his reading.

ACT III.  TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.  SCENE III.

Ulyss.  Now, great Thetis' son!
Achill.  What are you reading?

Ulyss.  A strange fellow here
Wants me: 'That man, how dearly ever parted,
How much in having, or without or in,
Cannot make boast to have that which he hath,
Nor feels not what he owes, but by reflection
As when his virtues shaming upon others
Heat them and they retort that heat again
To the first giver.'

This is not strange, Ulysses.

Achill.  The beauty that is borne here in the face
The bearer knows not, but commends itself
To others' eyes; nor doth the eye itself,
That of so fair a race, behold itself,
Not going from itself; but eye to eye opposed
Salutes each other with each other's form;
For speculation turns not to itself,
Till it hath travelled and is mirror'd there
Where it may see itself. This is not strange at all.

Ulyss.  I do not strain at the postition,—
It is familiar,—but at the author's drift:
Who, in his circumstance, expressly proves
That no man is the lord of any thing,
Though in and of him there be much consisting,
Till he communicate his parts to others;
Nor doth he of himself know them for ought
Till he behold them torn'd in the applause
Where they're extended; who, like an arch, reverberates
The voice again, or, like a gate of steel
Fronting the sun, receives and renders back
His figure and his heat. I was much wrapt in this;
And doth not know, but does immediately
The unknown Ajax.

Heaven, what a man is there! a very horse,
That has he knows not what. Nature, what things
Most abject in regard and dear in use! [there are
What things again most dear in the esteem
And poor in worth! Now shall we see to-morrow—
An act that very chance doth throw upon him—
Ajax renown'd. O heavens, what some men do,
While some men leave to do!

How some men creep in skittish fortune's hall,
While others play the idiots in her eyes!
How one man eats into another's pride,
While pride is fasting in his wantonness!
To see these Grecian lords!—why, even already
They clap the ruber Ajax on the shoulder,
As if his foot were on brave Hector's breast
And great Troy shrieking.

Achill.  I do believe it; for they pass'd by me
As misers do by beggars, neither gave to me
Good word nor look: what, are my deeds forgot?

Ulyss.  Time hath, my lord, a wallet at his back,
Wherein he puts alms for oblivion,
A great-sized monster of ingratiations; [your'd Thou dost play to this jest, which are doas
As fast as they are made, forgot as soon
As done: perseverance, dear my lord,
Keeps honour bright: to have done is to hang
Quite out of fashion, like a rusty mail
In monument mockery. Take the instant way;

For honour travels in a strait so narrow,
Where one but goes abroad: keep then the path;
For emulation hath a thousand sons
That one by one pursue: if you give way,
Or hedge your friends, you'll lose your self of all,
Like to an enter'd tide, they all rush by
And leave you hindmost;
Or, like a gallant horse fall'n in first rank,
Lie there for pavement to the abject rear, [present,
And run and trampled on: then what they do in
Though less than yours, you must o'ertop yours;
For time is like a fashionable host
That slightly shakes his parting guest by the hand,
And with his arms outstretched, as he would fly,
Grasps in the corner: welcome ever smiles, [seek
And farewell goes out sighing. O, let not virtue

Remuneration in the thing it was;
For beauty, wit,
High birth, vigour of bone, desert in service,
Love, friendship, charity, are subjects all
To curious and calamulating time.

One touch of nature makes the whole world kin,
That all the world's a stage, and all the men
As well as you that have and hold the stage,
To use it for my country's ornament,
And give to dust that is a little gilt
More land than gilt o'er-dusted.

The present eye praises the present object:
Then marvel not, thou great and complete man,
That all the poets begin to worship Ajax:
Sence things is in motion sooner catch the eye
Than what not stirs. The cry went once on thee,
And still it might, and yet it may again,
If thou wouldst not entomb thyself alive
And case thy reputation in thy tent;
Whose glorious deeds, but in these fields of late,
Made emulous composition of the gods themselves:
And drave great Mars to faction.

Achill.  Of this my privacy
I have strong reasons.

Ulyss.  But against your privacy
The reasons are more potent and heroidal:
'Tis known, Achilles, that you are in love
With one of Priam's daughters.

Achill.  Ha! known!

Ulyss.  Is that a wonder?

This providence that 's in a watchful state
Knows almost every grain of Piatus' gold,
Finds below the pavement, and above the deeps,
Keeps place with thought and almost, like the gods,
Does thoughts unweve in their dumb cradles.
There is a mystery— with whom relation
Durst never meddle—in the soul of state;
Which hath an operation more divine
Than breath or pen can give expressure to;
All the commerce that you have had with Troy
As perfectly is ours as yours, my lord;
And better would it fit Achilles much
To throw down Hector but Polyxena:
But it must grieve young Pityus now at home,
When fame shall in our island breed sound her trump,
And all the Grecish girls shall tripping sing,
Great Hector's sister did Achilles win,
But our great Ajax bravely beat down him.
Farewell, my lord: I as your lover speak;
The fool slides o'er the ice that you should break.

[Exit Patroclus. Achilles, have I moved you:
To throw down Hector but Polyxena;
But it must grieve young Pityus now at home,
When fame shall in our island breed sound her trump,
And all the Grecish girls shall tripping sing,
Great Hector's sister did Achilles win,
But our great Ajax bravely beat down him.'

Achill.  Shall Ajax fight with Hector?
ACT IV.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

SCENE I. — Troy. A street.

Enter, from one side, Cresseid, and Servant with a torch; from the other, Ajax, Diomedes, and others, with torches.

Par. See, ho! who is that there? [Exit.

Do. It is the Lord Cresseid.

Eue. Is the prince there in person? Had I so good occasion to lie long? [Exit. As you, Prince Paris, nothing but heavenly busi-should rob my heart's mate of my company. [Cresseid.

Do. That's my mind too. Good morrow, Lord Par. A valiant Greek, Cresseid,—take his hand,—

Witness the process of your speech, wherein You told how Diomed, a whole week by days, Did haunt you in the field,

[Health to you, valiant sir, During all question of the gentle truce: But when I meet you arm'd, as black defiance As heart can think or courage execute. —

Do. The one and other Diomed embraces, Our bloods are now in calm; and, so long, health! But when contention and occasion meet, By love, I'll play the hunter for thy life With all my force, pursuit and policy.

professes not answering; speaking is for beggars; he wears his tongue in his arm. I will put on his presence: let Patroclus make demands to me, you shall see the pageant of Ajax.

Achil. To him, Patroclus: tell him I humbly desire the valiant Ajax to invite the most valorous Hector to come unarmed to my tent, and to pro- vide safe-conduct for his person of the magnificent and most illustrious six-or-seven-times-honoured captain-general of the Grecian army, Agamemnon, et cetera. Do this.

Par. Thanks, Patroclus. How so? [Enter, from the worthy Achilles.—

Ther. Ha! Par. What say you to 't? Ther. God b' wi' you, with all my heart.

Par. Your answer, sir.

Ther. If to-morrow be a fair day, by eleven o'clock it will go one way or other: howsoever, he shall pay for me ere he has me.

Par. Your answer, sir.

Ther. Fare you well, with all my heart,

Achil. Why, he is not in this time, is he? [Exit. No, but he's out o' time thus.

Ther. What music will be in him when Hector has knocked out his brains, I know not; but, I am sure, unless the fiddler Apollo get his sinews to make cat-straight.

Eues. Come, thou shalt bear a letter to him Ther. Let me bear another to his horse; for that's more capable creature.

Achil. My mind is troubled, like a fountain stirr'd; And I myself see not the bottom of it.

[Execut Achilles and Patroclus.

Ther. Would the fountain of your mind were clear again, that I might water an ass at it! I had rather be a tick in a sheep than such a valiant ignorance.

ACT IV.

Euece. And thou shall hunt a lion, that will fly With his face backward. In humane gentleness, Welcome to Troy! now, by Anchises' life, Welcome indeed! By Venus' hand I swear, No man alive move in such a sort The thing he means to kill more excellently.

Do. We sympathize: Jove, let Cresseid live, If to my sword his fate be not the glory, A thousand complete courses of the sun! But, in mine envious honour, let him die, With every joint a wound, and that to-morrow! —

Euece. We know each other well.

Do. We do: and long to know each other worse.

Par. This is the most despitable gentle greeting, The noblest hateful love, that e'er I heard of. What business, lord, so early? —

Do. I was sent for to the king; but why, I know not. [This Greek

Par. His purpose meets you: 'twas to bring To Calchas' house, and there to render him, For the enfeebled Antenor, the fair Cressid: 'Let's have your company, or, if you please, Haste the three before us: I constantly do think — Or rather, call my thought a certain knowledge — My brother Troilus lodges there to-night.
Rouse him and give him note of our approach,
With the whole quality wherefo'rc: I fear
We shall be much unwelcome.

Troilus. That I assure you:
Troilus had rather Troy were borne to Greece
Than Cressid borne from Troy.

Par. There is no help;
The bitter disposition of the time
Will have it so. On, lord; we'll follow you.

[Exit Good morrow, all. [Exit with Servant. Par. And tell me, noble Diomed, faith, tell me true,
Even in the sound of sound good-fellowship,
Who, in your thoughts, merits fair Helen best,
Myself or Menelaus?

 Dio. Both alike:
He merits well to have her, that doth seek her,
Not making any scruple of her soile.

Par. You are too bitter to your countrywoman.

Dio. She’s bitter to her country: hear me, Paris:
For every false drop in her bawdy veins
A Grecian’s life hath sunk; for every scruple
Of her contaminated carrion weight,
A Trojan hath been slain: since she could speak,
She hath not given so many good words breath
As for her Greeks and Trojans suffer’d death.

Par. Fair Diomed, you do as chapsmen do,
Disparize the thing that you desire to buy:
But we in silence hold this virtue well,
We’ll but commend what we intend to sell.
Here lies our way.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. — The same. Court of Pandarus’ house.

Enter Troilus and Cressida.

Troil. Dear, trouble not yourself; the morn is cold.
Cress. Then, sweet my lord, I’ll call mine uncle.
He shall unboil the gales. [down; Troil. Trouble him not; To bed, to bed; sleep kill those pretty eyes,
And give as soft attachment to thy senses
As infants’ empty of all thought!
Cress. Good morrow, good morrow, then.

Troil. I prithee now, to bed.

Cress. Are you a weary of me?

Troil. O Cressida! but that the busy day,
Waked by the lark, hath roused the ribald crows,
And dreaming night will hide our joys no longer,
I would not from thee.

Cress. Night hath been too brief.

Troil. Beshrew the witch! with venomous wights she stays
As tediously as hell, but flies the grasps of love
With wings more momentary-swift than thought.
You will catch cold, and curse me.

Cress. Pratehe, tarry: You men will never tarry.
O foolish Cressid! I might have still held off,
And then you would have tarried. Hark! there’s one up.

[Pan with Philoctetes.]

Troil. It is your uncle.

Cress. A pestilence on him! now will he be mocking;
I shall have such a life!

[Exeunt Pandarus.

Pan. How now, how now! how go maidenheads?
Here, you maid! where’s my cousin Cressid?
ACT IV.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

SCENE IV.

Pan. Thou must be gone, wench, thou must be gone; thou art changed for Antenor: thou must to thy father, and be gone from Troilus; 'twill be his death; 'twill be his bane; he cannot bear it.

Cres. O you immortal gods! I will not go.

Pan. Thou must.

Cres. Tear my bright hair and scratch my praised Crack my clear voice with sobs and break my heart With sounding Troilus. I will not go from Troys.

[Exit.

SCENE III.—The same. Street before Pandaruss' house.

Enter Paris, Troilus, Aeneas, Deiphobus, Antenor, and Diomedes.

Par. It is great morning, and the hour prefix'd Of her delivery to this valiant Greek Comes fast upon. Good my brother Troilus, Tell you the lady what she is to do, And haste her to the purpose.

Tro. Walk into her house; I'll bring her to the Grecian presently: And to his hand when I deliver her, Think it an altar, and thy brother Troilus A priest there offering to it his own heart.

Cres. I know what 'tis to love in a true heart, And would, as I shall pity, I could help! Please you walk in, my lords.

[Exit.

SCENE IV.—The same. Pandaruss' house.

Enter Pandarus and Cressida.

Par. Be moderate, be moderate.

Cres. Why tell you me of moderation? The grief is fine, full, perfect, that I taste, And violenteth in sense as strong As that which coucheth in me: how can I moderate it? If I could temporize it with my affection, Or brew it to a weak and colder palate, The like allayment could I give my grief: My love admits no qualifying dross; No more my grief, in such a precious loss.

Pan. Here, here, here he comes.

Enter Troilus.

Ah, sweet ducks!

Par. What a pair of spectacles is here! Let me embrace too! 'O heart, 'tis the godly saying is, — O heart, heavy heart, Why sigh'st thou without breaking? where he answers again, 'Because thou canst not ease thy smart By friendship nor by speaking,' There was never a true rhyme. Let us cast away nothing, for we may live to have need of such a verse: we see it, we see it. Now how, lambs?

Tro. Cressit, I love thee in so strain'd a purity, That the bless'd gods, as angry with my fancy, More bright in zeal than the devotion which Cold this blow to their graces, take thee from me.

Cres. Have the gods envy

Pan. Ay, ay, ay, ay; 'tis too plain a case.

Cres. And is it true that I must go from Troy?

Tro. A hateful truth.

Cres. What, and from Troilus too?

Tro. From Troy and Troilus.

Par. What? Is it possible?

Tro. And suddenly; where injury of chance Puts back leave-taking, justices roughly by All time of pause, rudely beguiles our lips Of all rejoicing, and with hearty vents Our lock'd embrasures, strangles our dear vows Even in the birth of our own labouring breath: We two, that with so many thousand sighs Did buy each other, must poorly sell ourselves With the rude brevity and discharge of one. Injuries of love can't be with a robber's haste Crams his rich thievish up, he knows not how: As many farewells as be stars in heaven, With distinct breath and consign'd kisses to them, He fumbles up into a loose adieu, And scants us with a single famish'd kiss, Distasted with the salt of broken tears.

Enter. [Within] Nay, my lord, is the lady ready?

Tro. Hark! you are call'd: some say the Genius so Cries 'come' to him that instantly must die. Bid them have patience; she shall come anon.

Par. Where are my tears? rain, to lay this wind, my heart will be blown up by the root.

Cres. I must then to the Grecians?

Tro. No remedy.

Cres. A woful Cressid 'mongst the merry Greeks! When shall we see again?

Par. Hark me, my love: be thou but true of Cres. Troilus! how now? what wicked deem is this?

Par. Nay, we must use expositions kindly, For it is parting from us: I speak not 'be thou true,' as fearing thee, For I will throw my glove to Death himself, That there's no maculation in thy heart; But 'be thou true,' say I, to fashion In my sequent pretension; be thou true, And I will see thee.

Cres. O, you shall be exposed, my lord, to dangers As infinite as imminent! but I'll be true.

Tro. And I'll grow friend with danger. Wear this sleeve, Cres. And you this glove. When shall I see you?

Tro. I will corrupt the Grecian sentinals, To give thee nightly visitation. But yet be true.

Cres. O heavens! 'be true' again!

Tro. Hear why I speak it, love: The Grecian youths are full of quality; They're loving, well composed with gifts of nature, Flowing and swelling o'er with arts and exercise: How novelty may move, and parts with person, Alas, a kind of godly jealousy — Which, I beseech you, call a virtuous sin — Makes me afeard.

Cres. O heavens! you love me not.

Tro. Die I a villain, then! In this I do not call your faith in question So mainly as my merit: I cannot sing, Nor heark the high Havolt, nor sweeten talk, Nor play at subtle games; fair virtue all. [Exit.

Par. To which the Grecians are most prompt and preg- But I can tell that in each grace of these There lurks a still and dumb-discursive devil That tempts most cunningly: but be not tempted.

Cres. Do you think I will?

Tro. No.

Par. But something may be done that we will not: And sometimes we are devils to ourselves, When we will tempt the frailty of our powers, Presuming on their changeable potency.

Enter. [Within] Nay, good my lord,—

Par. [Within] Brother Troilus!

Tro. Good brother, come you hither; And bring Aeneas and the Grecian with you.

527
ACT IV.

TRoILUS AND CRESSIDA.

SCENE V.

Cres. My lord, will you be true?
Troy. Who, I? alas, it is my vice, my fault:
Wiles others with fish with craft for great opinion,
I with great truth catch mere simplicity;
Whilst some with cunning gild their copper crowns,
With truth and plainness I do wear mine bare.
Fear not my truth: the moral of my wit
Is ‘plain and true;’ there’s all the reach of it.

Enter AEneas, Paris, Antenor, Deiphobus, and Diomedes.

Welcome, Sir Diomed! here is the lady
Which for Antenor we deliver you:
At the port, lord, I’ll give her to your hand;
And I imagine I know who she is.
Entreat her fair; and, by my soul, fair Greek,
If e’er thou stand at mercy of my sword,
Name Cressid, and thy life shall be as safe
As Priam is in Ilion.

Diom. Fair Lady Cressid,
So please you, save the thanks this prince expects:
The lustre in your eye, heaven in your cheek,
Please your fair usage; and to Diomed
You shall be mistress, and command him wholly.

Troy. Grecian, thou dost not use me courteously,
To shame the seal of my petition to thee
In praising her: I tell thee, lord of Greece,
She is as far high-sounding o’er thy praises
As thou unworthy to be call’d her servant.
I charge thee use her well, even for my charge;
For, by the dreadful Pluto, if thou dost not,
Through the great bulk Achilles be thy guard,
I’ll cut thy throat.

Diom. O, be not moved, Prince Troilus:
Let me be privileged by my place and message,
To be a speaker free; when I am hence,
I’ll answer to my lust: and know you, lord,
I’ll nothing do on charge: to her own worth
She shall be priced; but that you say ‘be ’t so,’
I’ll speak it in my spirit and honour, ‘no.’

Troy. Come, to the port. I’ll tell thee, Diomed,
This brave shall oft make thee to hide thy head.
Lady, give me your hand, and, as we walk,
To our own selves bend! we our needful talk.

[Exit Troylus, Cressida, and Diomedes.]

Par. Hark! Hector’s trumpet.

Enter. How have we spent this morning!
The prince must think me tardy and remiss,
That swore to ride before him to the field.

Patroclus. ’Tis Troylus’ fault! come, come, to field with Par.
Let us make ready straight. [him.

Enter. Yea, with a bridegroom’s fresh alacrity,
Let us address to tend on Hector’s heels:
The glory of our Troy doth this day lie
On his fair worth and single chivalry.

[Exeunt.

Enter Ajax, armed; Agamemnon, Achilles, Patroclus, Menelaus, Ulysses, Nestor, and others.

Agam. Here art thou in appointment fresh and Anticipate with starting courage [fair,
Give with thy trumpet a loud note to Troy,
Thou dreadful Ajax: that the appalled air
May pierce the head of the great combatant
And hate him hitter.

Ajax. Thou, trumpet, there’s my purse.
Now crack thy limbs, and split thy brazen pipe:
Blow, villain, till thy spherical brass check
Outswell the colic of Puff’d Aquilon: [blood;
Come, stretch thy chest, and let thy eyes spit
Thou blow’st for Hector. [Trumpet sounds.

Ulyss. No trumpet answers.

Achil. ’Tis but early days.

Agam. Is not yond Diomed, with Castor’s daught,
Ulyss. ’Tis he, I ken the manner of his gait; [ter?

He rises on the toe; that spirit of his
In aspiration lifts him from the earth.

Enter Diomedes, with Cressida.

Agam. Is this the Lady Cressid?

Dio. Even she.

Agam. Most dearly welcome to the Greeks, sweet lady.

Nest. Our general doth salute you with a kiss.

Ulyss. Yet is the kindness but particular;
’Tis better she were kiss’d in general.

Nest. And very courteously: I’ll begin.

So much for Nestor.

Achil. I’ll take that winter from your lips, fair Achilles
Hide you welcome.

Lady: Men. I had good argument for kissing once.

Petr. But that’s no argument for kissing now:
For thus pope’d Paris in his hard heart,
And parted thus you and your argument.

Ulyss. O deadly gall, and theme of all our scars!
For which we lose our heads to gild his beams.
Petr. The first was Menelaus’ kiss; this, mine:
Patroclus kisses you.

Men. O, this is trim!
Petr. Paris and I kiss evermore for him.

Men. I’ll have my kiss, sir. Lady, by your leave.
Cres. In kissing, do you reader or receive?
Petr. Both take and give.

Cres. I’ll make my match to live,
The kiss you take is better than you give;
Therefore no kiss.

Men. I’ll give you boot, I’ll give you three for one.

Cres. You’re an old man; give even, or give none.
Men. An old man, lady! every man is odd.
Cres. No, Paris is not; for you know ’tis true,
That you are odd, and he is even with you.
Men. You fill me o’ the head.

Cres. No, I’ll be sworn.

Ulyss. It were no match, your nail against his horn.
May I, sweet lady, beg a kiss of you?
Cres. You may.

Ulyss. I do desire it.

Cres. Why, beg, then.

Ulyss. Why then for Venus’ sake, give me a kiss,
When Helen is a maid again, and his.
Cres. I am your debtor, claim it when ’tis due.
Ulyss. Never’s my day, and then a kiss of you.

Dio. Lady, a word: I’ll bring you to your father.

Nest. A woman of quick sense.

Ulyss. Pike, fie upon her!

There’s language in her eye, her cheek, her lip,
Nay, her foot speaks: her wan’ton spirits look out
At every joint and motive of her body.

O, these encounters, so glib of tongue,
That give accosting welcome ere it comes,
And wide unclasp the tables of their thoughts
To every ticklish reader! set them down
For shalit spoil’s of opportunity
And daughters of the game.

All. The Trojans’ trumpet.

Agam. Yonder comes the troop.

Enter Hector, armed; AEneas, Troilus, and other Trojans, with Attendants.

Hec. Hail, all you state of Greece! what shall be done
To him that victory commands? or do you purpose
A victor shall be known? will you the knights
Shall to the edge of all extremity
Pursue each other, or shall be divided
By any voice or order of the field?

Hector made as if.

Agam. Which way would Hector have it?

Hec. He cares not; he’ll obey conditions.

Achil. ’Tis done like Hector; but securely done,
ACT IV.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

SCENE V.

A little proudly, and great deal mistrusting
The knight opposed.

\textit{Exit.}
If not Achilles, sir,
\textit{Exit.}
Therefore Achilles: but, whate’er, know
In the extremity of great and little.
\textit{[End of this:]}
Valour and pride excel themselves in Hector;
The one almost as if it were all.
The other blank as nothing.
Weigh him well,
And that which looks like pride is courtesy.
This Ajax is half made of Hector’s blood:
\textit{In love whereof, half Hector stays at home;}
Half heart, half hand, half Hector comes to seek
The other knight, whom half Greek.
\textit{Achilles.}
A madcap battle, then? O, I perceive you.

\textit{Re-enter Diomedes.}
\textit{Ajax.}
Here is sir Diomed.
Go, gentle knight,
Stand by our Ajax: as you and Lord \textit{Eneas}
Consent upon the order of their fight,
So be it; either to the utmost;
Or else a breath: the combatants being kin
Half aints their stroke before their strokes begin.
\textit{Ajax and Hector enter the list.}

Ulysses.
They are opposed already.
\textit{Ajax.}
What Trojan is that same that looks so heavy?

Ulysses.
The youngest son of Priam, a true knight,
Not yet mature, yet matchless, firm of word,
Speaking in deeds and deadless in his tongue;
Not soon provoked nor being provoked soon calmed;
His heart and hand both open and both free;
For what he has lies given, what thinks he shows;
Yet gives he not till judgment guide his bounty,
Nor dignifies an impure thought with breath;
Mandyl as Hector, but more dangerous;
For Hector in his blaze of wrath subscribes
To tender objects, but he in heat of action
Is more vindictive than jealous love:
They call him Troilus, and on him e’er
A second hope, as fairly built as Hector.
Thus says \textit{Eneas}; one that knows the youth
Even to his inches, and with private soul
Did in great Ilium thus translate him to me.
\textit{Ajax.}
Hector and Ajax fight.

\textit{Ajax.}
They are in action.

\textit{Nestor.}
Now, Ajax, hold thy own!

\textit{Hector.}
H欧美on thee!

\textit{Ajax.}
Hs blows are well disposed: there, Ajax!

\textit{Troilus.}
You must no more.

\textit{Ajax.}
Princes, enough: so please you.

\textit{Ajax.}
I am not warm yet; let us fight again.

\textit{Dido.}
As Hector please.

\textit{Hector.}
Why, then will I no more:
Thou art, great lord, my father’s sister’s son,
A cousin-german to great Priam’s seed;
The obligation of our blood forbids
A gory enunciation twist us twain:
Were they connubial Greek and Trojan so
That thou couldst say ‘This hand is Greekian all,
And this is Trojan; the sinews of this leg
All Greek, and this all Troy; my mother’s blood
Runs on the dexter cheek, and this sinister
‘Bounds in my father’s;’ by Jove multipotent,
Thou shouldst not bear from me a Greekish member Wherein my sword had not impressure made of his rank blood, but I will use just gods sayer
That any drop thou borrow’dst from thy mother,
My sacred aunt, should by my mortal sword
Be drain’d!

\textit{Ajax.}
Let me embrace thee, Ajax:
By him that thunders, thou hast insty arms;
Hector would have them fall upon him thus:
Cousin all honour to thee!

\textit{Ajax.}
I thank thee, Hector:

Thou art too gentle and too free a man:
I came to kill thee, cousin, and bear hence
A great addition earned in thy death.

\textit{Hector.}
Not Neoptolemus so miracle,
On whose bright crest Fame with her loud’st Oyes
Cries ‘This is he,’ could promise to himself
A thought of ad-lead honor turn from Hector.

\textit{Ajax.}
There is expectancy here from both the sides,
What further you will do.

\textit{Hector.}
We’ll answer it;
The issue is embracement: Ajax, farewell.

\textit{Ajax.}
If I might in entreaties find success—
As said I have the chance—I would desire
My famous cousin to our Grecian tents.

\textit{Hector.}
’Tis Agamemnon come to meet us here.

\textit{Ajax.}
Eneas, call my brother Troilus to me,
And signify this loving interview
To the expectors of our Trojan part;
Desire them home.
Give me thy hand, my cousin;
I will go eat with thee and see your eyes.

\textit{Ajax.}
Great Agamemnon comes to meet us here.

\textit{Hector.}
The worthiest of them tell me name by name;
But for Achilles, mine own searching eyes
Shall find him by his large and portly size.

\textit{Ajax.}
Worthy of arms! as welcome as to one
That would be rid of such an enemy;
But that I would endure: understand more clear.
What’s past and what’s to come is swrew’d with
And formless ruin of oblivion;
But in this extant moment, faith and truth,
Strain’d purely from all hollow bias-drawing,
Bids thee, with most divine integrity,
From heart of very heart, great Hector, welcome.

\textit{Ajax.}
I thank thee, most impious Agamemnon.

\textit{Ajax.}
[To Troilus]
My well-famed lord of Troy,

\textit{Mena.}
No less to you.

\textit{Ajax.}
Let me confirm my princey brother’s greet-
You brace of warlike brothers, welcome hither.

\textit{Ajax.}
Who must we answer?

\textit{Eneas.}
The noble Menelaus.

\textit{Hector.}
O, you, my lord! by Mars his gauntlet,
Mock not, that I affect the untraded oath;
[thanks!
Your quondam wife swears still by Venus’ glove;
She’s well, but bade me not commend her to you.

\textit{Mena.}
Name her not now, sir; she’s a deadly theme.

\textit{Hector.}
I offend.

\textit{Nestor.}
I have, thou gallant Trojan, seen thee oft
Labouring for destiny make cruel way
Through ranks of Greekish youth; and I have seen
As hot as Paros, spur thy Phrygian steed,
Despise the fatal trophies and adulments,
When thou hast hung thy advanced sword in the air,
Not letting it decline on the declined,
That I have said to some my standers by
For Jupiter is yonder, dealing life!

\textit{Ajax.}
And have I seen thee pace and take thy breath,
When that a ring of Greeks have hemm’d thee in,
Like an Olympian wrestling: this have I seen;
But this thy countenance, still lock’d in steel,
I never saw till now.

\textit{Ajax.}
I knew thy grandsire,
And once fought with him: he was a soldier good;
But by great Mars, the captain of us all,
Thou art the most of men;
And, worthy warrior, welcome to our tents.

\textit{Ajax.}
’Tis the old Nestor.

\textit{Nestor.}
Let me embrace thee, good old chronicle,
That hast so long walk’d hand in hand with time:
Most reverend Nestor, I am glad to claspe thee.

\textit{Ajax.}
Hector, I would no man embrace thee!

\textit{Ajax.}
As they contend with thee in courtesy.

\textit{Hector.}
I would they could.

\textit{Ajax.}
Nestor!

\textit{Hector.}
By this white beard, I’ll fight with thee to-morrow.
Well, welcome, welcome! — I have seen the time.

\textit{Ulysses.}
I have seen the time.

\textit{Ajax.}
When we have here her base and pillar by us.

\textit{Hector.}
I know your favour, Lord Ulysses, well.

529
Ah, sir, is there any Greek and Trojan dead?

Since first I saw yourself and Diomed

In Ilion, on your Greekish embassage,

Ulysses, Sir, I forebode you then what would ensue:

My prophecy is but half his journey yet;

For you flung walls, that perfectly fortify your town,

And that old common arbitrator, Time,

Will one day end it.

Ulysses. So to him we leave it.

Most gentle and most valiant Hector, welcome:

After the general, I beseech you next

To feast with me and see me at my tent.

Achilles. I shall forestall thee, Lord Ulysses, thou.

Now, Hector, I have fed mine eyes on thee;

And quoted joint by joint.

Hector. Is this Achilles?

Achilles. I am Achilles.

Hector. Stand fair, I pray thee; let me look on thee.

Achilles. Behold thy ill.

Hector. Nay, I have done already.

Achilles. Thou art too brief; I will the second time,

As if I would buy thee, view thee limb by limb.

Hector. O, like a book of sport thou'rt read me o'er;

But there's more in me than thou understand'st,

Why dost thou so oppress me with thine eye?

Achilles. Tell me, you heavens, in what part of his body [there] shall I destroy him? whether there, or there, or that I may give the local wound a name

And make distinct the very breach whereon Hector's great spirit flew: answer me, heavens!

Hector. It would discredit the blest gods, proud man,

To answer such a question; stand again;

Think'st thou to catch my life so pleasantly As to prenominat in nice conjecture

Where thou wilt hit me dead?

Achilles. I tell thee, yea.

Hector. Wert thou an oracle to tell me so,

I'd not believe thee. Henceforth guard thee well;

For I'll not kill thee there, nor there, nor there;

But, by the force that stithed Mars his helm,

I'll kill thee everywhere, yea, over and over.

You wish to think that, Achilles, pardon me this brag;

His insolence draws folly from my lips;

But I'll endeavour deeds to match these words,

Or may I never—

Ajax. Do not chafe thee, cousin:

And you, Achilles, let these threats alone,

Till accident or purpose bring you to 't:

You may have every day enough of Hector,

If you have stomach; the general state, I fear,

Can scarce entreat you to be odd with him.

Hector. I pray you, let us see you in the field:

We have had pelting wars, since you refused

The Grecians' cause.

Ajax. Dost thou entreat me, Hector?

To-morrow do I meet thee, fell as death;

To-night all friends.

Hector. Thy hand upon that match.

Agamemnon. First, all you peers of Greece, go to my

There in the full convive we; afterwards, [tent;

As Hector's leisure and your bounties shall

Concur together, severally entreat him.

Beat loud the tabourins, let the trumpets blow,

That this great soldier may his welcome know.

[Exeunt all except Troilus and Ulysses.

Troilus. My Lord Ulysses, tell me, I beseech you,

In what place of the field doth Calchas keep?

Ulysses. At Menelaus' tent, most princely Troilus:

There Diomed doth feast with him to-night;

Who neither looks upon the heaven nor earth,

But gives all gaze and bent of amorous view

On the fair Cressida.

Troilus. Shall I, sweet lord, be bound to you so much,

After we part from Agamemnon's tent,

To bring me thither?

Ulysses. You shall command me, sir.

As gentle tell me, of what honour was

This Cressida in Troy? Had she no lover there

That wals her absence?

Troilus. O, sir, to such as boasting show their scars

A mock is due. Will you walk on, my lord?

She was beloved, she loves; she is, and doth;

But still sweet love is food for fortune's tooth.

[Exeunt.
Scene II.—The same. Before Calchas’ tent.

Enter Diomedes.

Di. Who, are you up here, ho' speak.

Cal. [Within] Who calls?

Di. [Within] Calchas, I think. Where's your Cal. [Within] She comes to you. [daughter?]

Enter Troilus and Ulysses, at a distance; after them, Thersites.

Ulyss. Stand where the torch may not discover us.

Enter Cressida.

Tro. Cressid comes forth to him.

Di. How now, my charge!

Cres. Now, my sweet guardian! Hark, a word with you. [Whispers.

Tro. Yes, so familiar!

Ulyss. She shall sing any man at first sight.

Ther. And any man may sing her, if he can take her cliff; she's not.

Di. Will you remember?

Cres. Remember! yes.

Di. Nay, but do, then;

And let your mind be coupled with your words.

Tro. What should she remember?

Ulyss. List.

Cres. Sweet honey Greek, tempt me no more to Ther. Rognery! [jolly.

Di. Nay, then,—

Cres. I'll tell you what,—

Di. Foh, foh! come, tell a pin: you are forsworn.

Cres. In faith, I cannot: what would you have me do?

Ther. A juggling trick,—to be secretly open.

Di. What did you wear you would bestow on me?

Cres. I prithee, do not hold me to mine oath;

Bid me do anything but that, sweet Greek.

Di. Good night.

Tro. Hold, patience!

Ulyss. How now, Trojan!

Cres. Diomed.—

Di. No, no, good-night: I'll be your fool no more.

Tro. Thy better must.

Cres. Hark, one word in your ear.

Ther. O plague and madness! [pray you,

Ulyss. You are moved, prince; let us depart, I

Lest your displeasure should enflame itself

To wrathful terms: this place is dangerous;

The time right deadly: I beseech you, go.

Tro. Behold, I pray you!

Ulyss. Nay, good my lord, go off;

You flow to great distraction: come, my lord.

Tro. I pray thee, stay.

Ulyss. You have not patience: come, Tro. I pray you, stay; by hell and all hell's ter-

I will not speak a word! [ments.

Di. And so, good night.

Cres. Nay, but you part in anger.

Ther. Doth that grieve thee?

O wither'd truth! Why, how now, lord! by Jove, I will be patient.

Cres. Guardian!—why, Greek!

Di. Foh, foh! adieu; you palter.

Cres. In faith, I do not; come hither once again.

Ulyss. You shake, my lord, at something: will you

Break out? [you go,

Ther. She storms his cheek!

Ulyss. Come, come.

Tro. Nay, stay; by Jove, I will not speak a word!

There is threat in me will and all offences

A guard of patience: stay a little while.

Ther. How the devil, Luxury, with his fat rump
And potato-finger, tickles these together! Fry, lechery, fry!

ACT V. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.
ACT V. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA. SCENE II.

Diom. But will you, then?
Cres. In faith, I will, la; never trust me else.
Diom. Give me some token for the surety of it.
Cres. I'll fetch you one. [Exit.

Ullyss. You have sworn patience.
Tro. Fear me not, sweet lord; I will not be myself, nor have cognition of what I feel: I am all patience.

Re-enter Cressida.

Ther. Now the pledge; now, now, now! Cres. Here, Diomed, keep this sleeve.
Tro. O beauty! where is thy faith?
Ullyss. My lord,—

Tro. I will be patient; outwardly I will.
Cres. You look upon that sleeve; behold it well. He loves me—O false wench!—Give 't me again.
Diom. Whose was 't?
Cres. It is no matter, now I have 't again.
I will not meet with you to-morrow night.
I prithee, Diomed, visit me no more.
Cres. As she sharpens: well said, whetstone!
Diom. Whose was it?
Cres. What, this?
Diom. Ay, that.
Cres. O, all you gods! O pretty, pretty pledge! Thy master now lies thinking in his bed
Of thee and me, and sighs, and takes my glove, And says memorial dainty kisses to it.
As I kiss thee. Nay, do not snatch it from me;
He that takes that doth take my heart withal.
Diom. I had your heart before, this follows, this.

Tro. I did swear patience.
Cres. You shall not have it, Diomed; faith, you
I'll give you something else: [she snatches it.] shall not;
Diom. I will have this; whose was it?
Cres. It is no matter.
Diom. Come, tell me whose it was.
Cres. 'Twas one's that loved me better than you
But, now you have it, take it. [will
Diom. Whose was it?
Cres. By all Diana's waiting-women yond,
And by herself, I will not tell you whose.
Diom. To-morrow will I wear it on my helm,
And grieve his spirit that dares not challenge it.
Ther. Wert thou then the devil, and worsted it on thy
It should be challenged. [lorn.
Cres. Well, well, it is done; 'tis past: and yet it:
I will not keep my word. [is not;
Diom. Why, then, farewell;
Thou never shalt mock Diomed again.
Cres. You shall not go: one cannot speak a word,
But it straightens starts you.
Diom. I do not like this foolishness.
Ther. Nor I, by Pluto: but that that likes not you pleases me best,
Diom. What, shall I come? the hour?
Cres. Ay, come;—O Jove!—do come:—I shall Diom. Farewell till then. [he plagued.
Cres. Good night! I prithee, come.

[Exit Diomedes.

Troilus, farewell! one eye yet looks on thee;
But with my heart the other eye doth see.
Ah, poor our sex! this fault in us I find,
The error of our eye directs our mind:
What error leads must err; O, then conclude
Minds sway'd by eyes are full of turpitude. [Exit.
Ther. A proof of strength she could not publish more,
Unless she said 'My mind is now turn'd where.'
Ullyss. All's done, my lord.
Tro. It is.
Ullyss. Why stay we, then?

Tro. To make a recordation to my soul
Of every syllable that here was spoke.
But if I tell how these two did co-act,
Shall I not lie in publishing a truth?

Sith yet there is a credence in my heart,
An esparance so obstinately strong,
That doth invert the attest of eyes and ears,
As if those organs had deceptive functions,
Created only to enchanted.
Was Cressid here?

Ullyss. I cannot conjure, Trojan.
Tro. She was not, sure.

Ullyss. Most sure she was.
Tro. Why, my negation hath no taste of madness.
Ullyss. Not mine, my lord; Cressid was here but Ther. Let it not be believed for womanhood! [now.
Think, we had mothers; do not give advantage
To stubborn critics, apt, without a theme,
For deprivation, to square the general sex
By Cressid's rule: rather think this not Cressid.
Ullyss. Whom of truth she done, prince, that can soil our mothers?

Ther. Nothing at all, unless that this were she.
Ther. Will he swagger himself out on 's own eyes?
Tro. This she? no, this is Diomed's Cressida:
If beauty have a soul, this is not she.
Ullyss. She, Diomed's?—no. For if they know,
It be not true of this, you, to-morrow
Without revolt: this is, and is not, Cressid.
Within my soul there doth conduce a fight
Of this strange nature that a thing inseparable
Divides more wider than the sky and earth,
And yet the spacious breadth of this division
Admits no orifice for a point as subtle
As Arion's broken wod to enter.

Instance, O instance! strong as Pluto's gates;
Cressid is nine, tied with the bonds of heaven;
Instance, O instance! strong as heaven itself;
The bonds of heaven are shop'd, dissolved, and
With and another knot, five-finger-tied, [bosed;
The frictions of her faith, orts of her love,
The fragments, scraps, the bits and greasy relics
Of her o'er-caten faith, are bound to Diomed.

Ullyss. May worthy Troilus be half attach'd
With that which here his passion doth express?

Tro. Ay, Greek; and that shall be divulged well
In characters red as Mars his heart
Inflamed with Venus; never did young man fancy
With so eternal and so fix'd a soul.

Hark, Greek; as much as I do Cressid love,
So much by weight hate I her Diomed;
That sleeve is mine that he'll bear on his helm;
Were it a couronne composed by Vulcan's skill,
My sword should bite it: not the dreadful spout
Which shipmen do the hurricane call,
Constringed in mass by the almighty sun,
Shall dizzy with more clamour Neptune's ear
In his descent than shall my prompt sword
Falling on Diomed.

Ther. He'll tickle it for his concupiscent. [false!

Tro. O Cressid! O false Cressid! false, false,
Let all untruths stand by thy stained name,
And they'll seem glorious.

Ullyss. O, contain yourself;
Your passion draws ears hither.

Enter Æneas.

Æneas. I have been seeking you this hour, my lord:
Hector, by this, is arming him in Troy;
Ajax, your guard, stays to conduct you home.

Tro. Why, pray, you, prince. My courteous lord,
Farewell, revoluted fair! and, Diomed, [adieu.
Stand fast, and wear a castle on thy head!
Ullyss. I'll bring you to the gates.

Tro. Accept distracted thanks.

[Exeunt Troilus, Æneas, and Ullysses.
ACT V. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA. SCENE III.

Hector. Would I could meet that rogue Diomed! I would crack like a raven; I would bode, I would bode. Patroclus will give me any thing for the intelligence of this where; the parrot will not do more for an almond than he for a commodious drab. Lechery, lechery; still, wars and lechery; nothing else holds fashion; a burning devil take them! [Exit.

SCENE III.—Troy. Before Priam’s palace.

Enter Hector and Andromache.

And. When was my lord so much urgently temeto stop his ears against admonishment? [per’d, Unarm, unarm, and do not fight to-day.

Hect. You train me to offend you; get you in; By all the everlasting gods, I’ll go! And. My dreams will, sure, prove ominous to the Hect. No more, I say.

Enter Cassandra.

Cas. Where is my brother Hector?

And. Here, sister: arm’d, and bloody in intent. Consort with me in loud and dear petition. Pursue we him on knees; for I have dream’d Of bloody turbulence, and this whole night Hath nothing been but shapes and forms of slough—

Cas. O, ’tis true.

Hect. No! bid my trumpet sound!

Cas. No notes of sally, for the heavens, sweet brother.

Hect. Be gone, I say: the gods have heard me—

Cas. The gods are deaf to hot and peevish vows: They are polluted offerings, more abhor’d Than spotted livers in the sacrifice.

And. O, be persuaded! do not comit it holy To hurt by being just: it is as lawful, For we would give much to these violent thefts, And rob in the behalf of charity.

Cas. It is the purpose that makes strong the vow; But vows to every purpose must not hold; Unarm, sweet Hector.

Hect. Hold you still, I say: Mine honour keeps the weather of my fate: Life every man holds dear; but the brave man Holds honour far more precious dear than life.

Enter Troilus.

How now, young man! mean’st thou to fight to-day? And. Cassandra, call my father to persuade.

Hect. No, faith, young Troilus; dost thy harness, I am to-day ’t the vein of chivalry: [youth; Let grow thy shews till their knots be strong, And temp’t not yet the brushes of the war. I warn thee, go, and doubt thou not, brave boy, I’ll stand to-day for thee and me and Troy. Tro. Brother, you have a vice of mercy in you, Which better fits a lion than a man.

Hect. What vice is that, good Troilus? chide me for it.

Tro. When manytimes the captive Grecian falls, Even in the fan and wind of your fair sword, You bid them rise, and live.

Hect. ’O, ’tis fair play.

Tro. Fool’s play, by heaven, Hector.

Hect. How now! how now! Tro. For the love of all the gods, Let’s leave the hermit pity with our mothers, And when we have our armours buckled on, The venom’d vengeance ride upon our swords, Spur them to ruthless work, rem them from ruth.

Hect. Fle, savage, fle!

Tro. Hector, then ’tis wars.

Hect. Troilus, I would not have you fight to-day.

Tro. Who should withhold me?

Not fate, obedience, nor the hand of Mars Beckoning with fiery truncheon my retire; Not Priamus and Hecuba on knees, Their eyes o’ergulled with recourse of tears; Nor you, my brother, with your true sword drawn, Opposed to hinder me, should stop my way, But by my ruin.

Re-enter Cassandra, with Priam.

Cas. Lay hold upon him, Priam, hold him fast: He is thy crutch; now if thou lose thy stay, Thou on him leaning, and all Troy on thee, Fall all together.

Pri. Thy wife hath dream’d; thy mother hath visions; Cassandra doth foresee; and I myself Am like a prophet suddenly erupt To tell thee that this day is ominous: Therefore, come back.

Hect. Echoes is a-field: And I do stand engaged to many Greeks, Even in the faith of valour, to appear This morning to them.

Pri. Ay, but thou shalt not go.

Hect. I must not break my faith.

You know me dutiful; therefore, dear sir, Let me not shame respect: but give me leave To take that course by your consent and voice, Which you do here forbid me, royal Priam.

Cas. O Priam, yield not to him!

And. Do not, dear father.

Hect. Andromache, I am offended with you: Upon the love you bear me, get you in.

Tro. This foolish, dreaming, superstitions girl Makes all these bodements.

Cas. O, farewell, dear Hector! Look, how thou diest! look, how thy eye turns pale! Look, how thy wounds do bleed at many vents! Hark, how Troy roars! how Hecuba cries out! How poor Andromache shrills her dolours forth! Behold, distraction. frenzy and amazement, Like withers antsies, one another meet, And cry Hector! Hector! Hector’s dead! O Hector! Tro. Away! away! Cas. Farewell: yet, soft! Hector, I take my leave: Thou dost thyself and all our Troy deceive. [Exit. Hect. You are amazed, my liege, at her exclam: Go in and cheer the town: we’ll forth and fight, Do deeds worth praise and tell you them at night.

Pri. Farewell: the gods with safety stand about thee! [Exeunt severally Priam and Hector. Abruums. Tro. They are at it, hark! Proud Diomed, believe, I come to lose my arm, or win my sleeve.

Enter Pandarus.

Por. Do you hear, my lord? do you hear?

Tro. What now?

Por. Here’s a letter come from your poor girl.

Tro. Let me read.

Por. A whomsever tisick, a whomsever rascally tisick so troubles me, and the foolish fortune of this girl; and what one thing, what another, that I shall leave you one o’ these days: and I have a rheum in mine eyes too, and such an ache in my bones that, unless a man were cursed, I cannot tell what to think on’t. What say you thereto?

Tro. Words, words, mere words, no matter from the heart; The effect doth operate another way.

[Tearing the letter. Go, wind, to wind, there turn and change together. My love with words and errors still she feels; But edifies another with her deeds. [Exeunt severally. 533
SCENE IV.—Plains between Troy and the Grecian camp.

Alarum: excursions. Enter Thersites.

Thers. Now they are chapper-clawing one another; I'll go look on. That dissembling abominable varlet, Diomed, he got that same scrawny dog's footish young knave's sleeve of Troy there in his helm:

Thou bastard, then that same young Trojan ass, that loves the whore there, might send that Greekish whoresomely villain, with the sleeve, back to the dissembling luxurious drab, of a sleeveless coward. Of the other side, the policy of those crafty swearing rascals, that stale old mouse-caten dry cheese, Nestor, and that same dog-fox, Ulysses, is not proved worth a blackberry: they set me up, in policy, that mongrel cur, Ajax, against that dog of as bad a kind, Achilles: and now is the cur Ajax prouder than the cur Achilles, and will not turn to-day; whereupon the Grecians begin to proclaim barbarism, and policy grows into an ill opinion. Soft! here comes sleeve, and t'other.

Enter Diomedes, Troilus following.

Tro. Fly not: for shouldst thou take the river I would swim after. [Styx, Dio. Thou dost miscall retire:

I do not fly, but advantageous care
Withdrew me from the odds of multitude:
Have at thee! Ther. Held thy where, Grecian!—now for thy where, Trojan!—now the sleeve, now the sleeve! [Excurs Troilus and Diomedes, fighting.

Enter Hector.

SCENE V.—Another part of the plains.

Enter Diomedes and a Servant.

Dio. Go, go, my servant, take thou Troilus' horse; Present the fair steed to my lady Cressid; Fellow, commend my service to her beauty: Tell her I have chastised theamous Trojan, And am her knight by proof. Serv. I go, my lord. [Exit.

Enter Agamemnon.

Agam. Renew, renew! The fierce Polydamus Hath beat down Menon; bastard Margarenon, Hath Dobias prisoner; And stands coalescous-wise, waving his beam, Upon the pushed corses of the kings Epiphanus and Cedus: Polyeuces is slain, Amphimachus and Theos dead hurt, Patroclus ta'en or slain, and Palaemos Sure hurt and bruised: the dreadful Sagittary Appals our numbers: haste we, Diommed, To reinforcement, or we perish all.

Enter Nestor.

Nest. Go, bear Patroclus' body to Achilles; And bid the small-sawed Ajax arm for shame. There is a thousand Hectors in the field: Now here he fights on Galathe his horse, And there lacks work; anon he's there afoot, And there they fly or die, like scaled sculls Before the belching whale; then is he yonder,

And there the strurdy Greeks, rife for his edge. Fall down before him, like the mower's swath: Here, there, and every where, he leaves and takes, Dexterity so obeying appetite. That what he will he does, and does so much That proof is call'd impossibility.

Enter Ulysses.

Ulyss. O, courage, courage, princes! great Achilles Is arming, weeping, cursing, vowing vengeance; Patroclus' wounds have roused his drowsy blood, Together with his mangled Myrmidons, That noneless, handless, hack'd and chipp'd, come to him. Crying on Hector. Ajax hath lost a friend And foams at mouth, and he is arm'd and at it, Roaring for Troilus, who hath done to-day Mad and fantastic execution. Engaging and redeeming of himself With such a careless force and forceless care As if that luck, in very spite of cunning, Bade him win all.

Enter Ajax.

Enter Achilles.

Achil. Where is this Hector? Come, come, thou bov-an-thaler, show thy face; Know what it is to meet Achilles angry; Hector! where's Hector? I will none but Hector. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Another part of the plains.

Enter Ajax.

Ajax. Troilus, thon coward Troilus, show thy head!

Enter Diomedes.

Enter Troilus.

Tro. O traitor Diomed! turn thy false face, thou traitor, And pay thy life thou owest me for my horse! Dio. Ha, art thou there? Ajax. I'll fight with him alone; stand, Diomed. Dio. He is my prize: I will not look upon. Tro. Come, both you googling Greeks; have at you both! [Exeunt, fighting.

Enter Hector.

Achil. Now do I see thee, ha! have at thee, Hector! Hector. Pause, if thou wilt. Achil. I do disdain thy courtesy, proud Trojan: Be happy that my arms are out of use. My rest and negligence befriended thee now, But thou anon shalt hear of me again; Till when, go seek thy fortune. [Exit. Hector. Fare thee well: I would have been much more a fresher man, Had I expected thee. How now, my brother!

Re-enter Troilus.

Tro. Ajax hath ta'en Æneas: shall it be? No, by the flame of yonder glorious heaven, He shall not carry him; I'll be ta'en too, Or bring him off: fate, hear me what I say! I reck not though I end my life to-day. [Exit.
ACT V.  TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.  SCENE X.

Enter one in exumption armour.

Hec. Stand, stand, thou Greek; thou art a godly Noz; wilt thou not? I like thy armour well; [mark: I'll brush it and unlock the rivets all. But I'll master of it: wilt thou not, beast, abide? Why, then I'll hunt thee forthwith hide. [Exit.

SCENE VII. — Another part of the plains.

Enter Achilles, with Myrmidons.

Achil. Come here about me, you my Myrmidons! Mark what I say. Attend me where I walk! Strike not a stroke, but keep yourselves in breath; And when I have the bloody Hector found, Empale him with your weapons round about; In fittest manner execute your aims. Follow me, sirs, and my proceedings eye: It is decreed Hector the great must die. [Exit.

Enter Menelaus and Paris, fighting: then Thersites.

Ther. The cuckold and the cuckold-maker are at it. Now, bull! now, dog! 'Lo, Paris, 'lo! now my double-henned sparrow! 'Lo, Paris, 'lo! The bull has the game: ware horns, ho! [Exit Paris and Menelaus.

Enter Margareto.

Mar. Turn, slaye, and fight. Ther. What art thou?

Ther. I am an bastard too: I love bastards: I am a bastard begot, bastard instructed, bastard in mind, bastard in valour, in every thing illegitimate. One bear will not bite another, and wherefore should one bastard? Take heed, the quarrl's most ominous to us: if the son of a whore for a whore, he tempts indignation: forever, bastard. [Exit.

Mar. The devil take thee, coward! [Exit.

SCENE VIII. — Another part of the plains.

Enter Hector.

Hec. Most perturbed core, so fair without, Thy godly armour thus hath cost thy life. Now is my day's work done; I'll take good breath. Rest, sword; thou hast thy fill of blood and death. [Puts off his helmet and hangs his shield behind him. Enter Achilles and Myrmidons.

Achil. Look, Hector, how the sun begins to set; How ugly night comes breathing at his heels: Even with the vail and darkening of the sun, To close the day up, Hector's life is done.

Hec. I am unarmed; forego this vantage, Greek. Achil. Strike, fellows, strike; this is the man I seek. [Hector falls. So, lion, fall thou next! now, Troy, sink down! Here lies thy heart, thy sinews, and thy bone. On, Myrmidons, and cry you all amain: 'Achilles hath the mighty Hector slain.' [Retreat sounded.

Hark! a retire upon our Grecian part. [lord. Myr. The Trojan trumpets sound the like, my Achil. The dragon wing of night overspreads the And, stickler-like, the armes separates. earth. My half-sup'd sword, that frankly would have fed, Pleased with this dainty bait, thus goes to bed. [Sheathes his sword.

Come, tie his body to my horse's tail; Along the field I will the Trojan trait. [Exit.

SCENE IX. — Another part of the plains.

Enter Agamemnon, Ajax, Menelaus, Nestor, Diomedes, and others, marching. Shouts within.

Agam. Hark! hark! what shout is that? Nest. Peace, drums!

ACT I.

First Cit. If I must not, I need not be barren of assumptions: he hath faults, with surplus, to tire in repetition. [Shouts within.] What shouts are these?
The other side of the city is risen: why stay we not appearing here? to the Capitol!
All. Come, come.
First Cit. Soft! who comes here?

Enter Menenius Agrippa.

Sec. Cit. Worthy Menenius Agrippa; one that hath always loved the people.
First Cit. He's one honest enough: would all the rest were so!
Men. What work's, my countrymen, in hand?
where go you
With hats and clubs? The matter? speak, I pray
you.

First Cit. Our business is not unknown to the senate: they have had indling this fortnight what we intend to do, which now we shall show 'em in deeds. They say poor suitors have strong breaths:
they shall know we have strong arms too.
Men. Why, masters, my good friends, mine honest neighbours.
Will you undo yourselves?
First Cit. We cannot, sir, we are undone already.
Men. I tell you, friends, most charitable care
Have the patricians of you. For your wants.
Your suffering in this death, you may as well
Strike at the heaven with your staves as lift them
Against the Roman state, whose course will on
The way it takes, cracking ten thousand curbs
Of more strong link asunder than can ever
Appear in your impudence. For the death,
The gods, not the patricians, make it, and
Your knees to them, not arms, must help, Alack,
You are transported by calamity
Thither where more attends you, and you slander
The helms of the state, who care for you like fathers,
When you curse them as enemies.
First Cit. Care for us! True, indeed! They never cared for us yet: suffer us to furnish, and their store-houses crammed with grain: make effects for usury, to support usurers; repeal daily any wholesome act established against the rich, and provide more piercing statutes daily, to chain up and restrain the poor. If the wars eat us not up, they will; and there's all the love they bear us.

Men. Begin.

Confess yourselves wondrous malicious, Or be accused of folly. I shall tell you
A pretty tale: it may be you have heard it; But, since it serves my purpose, I will venture To stale 't a little more.

[Enter Coriolanus.]

Ham. Well. I hear it, sir; yet you must not think to fob off our disgrace with a tale: but, an't please you, deliver. [Bers.

Men. There was a time when all the body's members Rebelled against the belly, thus accused it: That only like a gulf it did remain In the midst o' the body, idle and inactive, Still emulating the head, never bearing Like labour with the rest, where the other instruments Did see and hear, devise, instruct, walk, feel, And, mutually participate, did minister Into the appetite and affection common Of the whole body. The belly answered—

First Cit. Well, sir, what answer made the belly?

Men. Sir, I shall tell you. With a kind of smile, Which ne'er came from the lungs, but even thus— For, look you, I may make the belly smile As well as speak—it tauntingly replied To the discontents of the idle, ambitious parts That envied his receipt; even so much litly As you malign our senators for that They are not such as you.

First Cit. Your belly's answer? What! The kingly-crowned head, the vigilant eye, The counsellor heart, the arm our soldier, Our steel'd leg, the tongue our trumpeter, With other muniments and petty helps In this our fabric, if that they—

Men. What then?

First Cit. Should it by the cormorant belly be re-

Who is the sink o' the body,— [strain'd,

Men. Well, what then?

First Cit. The former agents, if they did con-

What could the belly answer? [plain,

Men. I will tell you.

If you'll bestow a small—of what you have little—

Patience awhile, you'll hear the belly's answer.

First Cit. Ye're long about it.

Men. Note me this, good friend;

Your most grave belly was deliberate,

Not rash like his accusers, and thus answer'd:

'Twas but a pleasing fable, my dear friends,' quoth he,

'That I receive the general food at first,

Which you do live upon; and fit it is,

Because I am the store-house and the shop Of the whole body: but, if you do remember, I send it through the rivers of your blood, Even to the heart, to the seat o' the brain; And, through the cranks and offices of man, The strongest nerves and small inferior veins From me receive that natural competency Whereby they live; and though that all at once, You, my good friends,—this says the belly, mark First Cit. Ay, sir; well, well.

Men. Though all at once cannot

See what I do deliver out to each,

Yet I can make my audit up, that all

From me do back receive the flour of all,

And leave me but the bran.' What say you to 't?

First Cit. It was an answer: how apply you this?

Men. The senators of Rome are this good belly, And you the mutinous members; for examine Their cómmissions and their cares, digest things rightly Touching the weal o' the common, you shall find No public benefit which you receive But it proceeds or comes from them to you

And no way from yourselves. What do you think, You, the great toe of this assembly? Whether you hear me?

Men. For that, being one o' the lowest, basest, poorest,

Of this most wise rebellion, thou go'st foremost: Thouascal, that art worst in blood to run, Lead'st first to win some vantage.

But make you play the gen'ral with hats and clubs: Rome and her rats are at the point of battle; The one side must have bale.

Enter Calcius Marcius.

Mar. Thanks. What's the matter, you dissatisfactions rogues, That, rubbing the poor ritch of your opinion, Make yourselves scabs?

First Cit. We have ever your good word.

Mar. He that will give good words to thee will flatter Beneath abhorring. What would you have, you cur's, That like nor peace nor war? the one all rights you, The other makes you proud. He that trusts to you, Where he should find you lions, finds you hares; Where foxes, geese: you are no surer, no, Than is the coal of fire upon the ice, That, lying in the sun, your virtue is To make him worthy whose offence subdues him And curse that justice did it. Who deserves great-

ness

Deserves your hate; and your affections are

A sick man's appetite, who desires most that Which would increase his evil. He that depends Upon your favours swins with fins of lead And hews down oaks with rushes. Hang ye! Trust With every minute, you do change a mind, [eye? And call him noble that was now your hate, Him vile that was your garland. What's the matter, That in these several places of the city You cry against the noble senate, who, Under the gods, keep you in awe, which else Would feed on another? What's their seeking? For corn at their own rates; whereof, they

The city is well stored.

Mar. Hang 'em! They say!

Men. They'll sit by the fire, and presume to know

What's done in the Capitol: who's like to rise, Who thrives and who declines: side factions and give out

Conjectural marriages: making parties strong And feeding such as stand not in their liking Below their coiled shoals. They say there's grain Would the nobility lay aside their ruth, [enough! And let me use my sword, I'd make a quarry With thousands of these quarter'd slaves, as high As I could pick my lance.

Men. Nay, these are almost thoroughly persuaded: For though abundantly they lack discretion, Yet are they passing cowardly. But, I beseech you, What says the other troop?

Mar. They are dissolved: hang 'em! They said they were an-hungry; sigh'd forth provisions, That hunger broke stone walls, that dogs must eat, That meat was made for months, that the gods sent Corn for the rich men only; with these shred's [not They vented their complaints; which being an-swer'd, And a petition granted them, a strange one— To break the heart of generosity. [caps

And make bold power look pale—they threw their As they would hang them on the horns o' the moon, Shouting their emulation.

Men. What is granted them?

Mar. Five tribunes to defend their vulgar wis-

ions,
Of their own choice: one's Junius Brutus,
Sicinius Velutus, and I know not—'sleath!
The rabble should have first maro'd the city,
Ere so prevaileth with me: it will in time
Win upon power and throw forth greater themes
For insurrection's arguing.

_Men._ This is strange.

_Mar._ Go, get you home, you fragments!

_Enter a Messenger, hasty._

_Mess._ Where's Caes's Marcus?

_Mar._ Here: what's the matter?

_Mess._ The news is, sir, the Volscians are in arms.

_Mar._ I am glad on 't: then we shall have means to

Our musty superstition. See, our best elders.

_Enter Cominius, Titus Lartius, and other Senators;

Junius Brutus and Sicinius Velutus._

_First Sen._ Marcus, 'tis true that you have lately
The Volscians are in arms. [told us]

_Have they a leader,

Tullus Aufidius, that will put you to 't,
I sin in envying his nobility,
And were any thing but what I am.
I would wish me only he.

_Corn._ You have fought together.

_Mar._ Were half to half the world by the ears and Upon my party. I'd revolt, to make _the only wars with him: he is a lion

That I am proud to hunt.

_First Sen._ Then, worthy Marcus,

Attend upon Cominius to these wars.

_Corn._ It is your former promise.

_Mar._ Say, Sir, it is;

And I am constant. Titus Lartius, thou
_Shall see me once more strike at Tullus' face.

What, art thou stiff? stand'st out?

_Tit._ No, Caes Marcus;

_I'll lean upon one crutch and fight with t'other,

Here stand behind this business.

_Mess._ O, true, Marcus!

_First Sen._ Your company to the Capitol; where.

_Our greatest friends attend us._

[I know,

_To Com._ Lead you on.

_[To Mar._ Follow Cominius; we must follow you;

Right worthy you priority.

_Noble Marcus!

_First Sen._ To the Citizens_ Hence to your homes;

_Nay, let them follow; _be gone!

_The Volscians have much corn; take these rascallion

To gnaw their granaries. Worshipful manners,

Your valour puts well forth; pray, follow.

[Citizens steal away. _Enter all but

Sicinius and Brutus.

_Sic._ Was ever man so proud as this Marcus?

_Bru._ He has no equal. [people—

_Sic._ When were we chosen tribunes for the

Info, Mark'd you his lip and eyes?

_Sic._ Nay, but his taunts.

_Bru._ Being moved, he will not spare to gird the _Sic._ Be-mock the modest moon.

_Bru._ The present wars devour him; he is grown

Too proud to be so valiant.

_Sic._ Such a nature,

Tickled with good success, disclaims the shadow
Which he trends on at noon: but I do wonder
His insolence can brook to be commanded
Under Cominius.

_Bru._ Fame, at the which he aims,

Is to whom already he's well grace'd, can not

Better be hold nor more attain'd than by

A place below the first: for what miscarries

Shall be the general's fault, though he perform

To the utmost of a man, and giddy censure

Will then cry out of Marcus' O, if he _Had borne the business!

_Bru._ Besides, if things go well,

Opinion that so sticks on Marcus shall

Of his demerits rob Cominius._

_Bru._ Half all Cominius' honours are to Marcus,

Though Marcus earn'd them not, and all his faults
To Marcus shall be honours, though indeed
In aught he merit not.

_Sic._ Let's hence, and hear

How the dispatch is made, and in what fashion,

More than his singularity, he goes

Upon this present action.

_Bru._ Let's away. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Coriol. The Senate-house.

_Enter Tullus Aufidius and certain Senators._

_First Sen._ So, your opinion is, Aufidius.

_That they of Rome are enter'd in our counsels

And know how we proceed._

_Auf._ Is it not yours?

_What ever have been thought on in this state.

That could be brought to bodily act are Rome

Had circumvention? _T is not four days gone

Since I heard thence; these are the words; I think

I have the letter here; yes, here it is.

[known _Read._] 'They have press'd a power, it is not

Whether for east or west: the earth is great;

The people mutinous: and it is rumoured,

Cominius, Marcus your old enemy.

Who is of Rome worse lathed than of you,

And Titus Lartius, a most valiant Roman,

These three lead on this preparation

Whither 't is bent; most likely 't is for you:

Consider of it.'

_First Sen._ Our army's in the field;

We never yet made doubt but Rome was ready

To answer us.

_Auf._ Nor did you think it folly

To keep your great pretences well'd till when

They need not now show themselves; which in the battling.

It seem'd, appear'd to Rome. By the discovery

We shall be short'en in our aim, which was

To take in many towns ere almost Rome

Should know we were afoot.

_Sec. Sen._ Noble Aufidius,

Take your commission; lie you to your hands:

Let us alone to guard Coriol:

If they set down before's, for the remove

Bring up your array; but, I think, you'll find

They've not prepared for us.

_Auf._ O, doubt not that;

I speak from certainties. Nay, more,

Some parcels of their power are forth already,

And only hitherward. I leave your honours.

If we and Caes Marcus chance to meet,

'T is sworn between us we shall ever strike

Till one can do no more.

_All._ The gods assist you!

_Auf._ And keep your honours safe!

_First Sen._ Farewell.

_Sec. Sen._ Farewell.

_Alt. Farewell._ [Exit.

SCENE III.—Rome. A room in Marcus' house.

_Enter Volumnia and Virgilia: they set them down _on two low stools, and sear._

_Vol._ I pray you, daughter, sing: or express yourself _in a more comfortable sort: if my son were my husband, I should feeler rejoice in that absence

wherein he won honour than in the embracements of his bed where he would show most love. When yet he was but tender-bodied and the only son of my womb, when youth with comeliness plucked all give his way when for a day of kings' entreaties a mother should not sell him an hour from her beholding, I, considering how honour would become such a person, that it was no better than picture-like to hang by the wall, if renown made it not stir, was well aware that there was danger where he was like to find fame. To a cruel war I sent him; from whence he returned, his brows bound with oak. I tell thee, daughter, I sprang not more in joy at first hearing he was a man-child than now in first seeing he had proved himself a man.

[how then?]

Vir. But had he died in the business, madam?

Vol. Then his good report should have been my son; I therein would have found issue. Hear me profess sincerely: had I a dozen sons, each in my love alike and none less dear than thee and my good Marchus. I had rather had eleven die nobly for their country than one voluptuously surfeit out of action.

Enter a Gentlewoman.

Gent. Madam, the Lady Valeria is come to visit you. Vir. Beseech you, give me leave to retire myself. Vol. Indeed, you shall not.

Methods I hear, either your husband's drum, See him pinch Aulidius down by the hair, As children from a bear, the Volscians shunning him: Metthink I see him stamp thus, and call thus: 'Come on, you cowards! you were got in fear, Though you were born in Rome!' his bloody brow With thirst then washing, forth he goes, Like to a harvest-man that's task'd to mow Or all lose his hire.

Vir. His bloody brow! O Jupiter, no blood!

Vol. Away, you fool! it more becomes a man Than gild his trophy: the breasts of Illeucba, When she did suckle Hector, look'd not lovelier Than Hector's forehead when it spit forth blood At Grecian sword, contenting. Tell Valeria. We are fit to bid her welcome. [Exit Gent.

Vir. Heavens bless my bird from fell Aulidius! Vol. He'll beat Aulidius' head below his knee And tread upon his neck.

Enter Valeria, with an Usher and Gentlewoman.

Vol. My ladies both, good day to you. Vol. Sweet madam.

Vir. I am glad to see your ladyship.

Vol. How can you bear and make the manifest housekeepers. What are you seeking here? A fine spot, in good faith. How does your little son?

Vir. I thank your ladyship; well, good madam. Vol. He had rather see the swords, and hear a drum, than look upon his schoolmaster.

Vol. O' my word, that's a mother's wish. I'll swear, 'tis a very pretty child. O' my word, I looked upon him? Wednesday half an hour together: has such a confirmed countenance. I saw him run after a gilded butterly; and when he caught it, he let it go again; and after it again: and over and over he comes, and up again; caught it again; or whether his hand didn't hand it to his, he did set his teeth and tear it: O, I warrant, how he mammed

Vol. One on 's father's moods. [it!]

Vol. Indeed, la, 'tis a noble child.

Vir. A crack, madam.

Vol. Come, lay aside your stitches; I must have you play that the husband's face with me this afternoon.

Vir. No, good madam; I will not out of doors.

Vol. Not out of doors!

Vir. Well, she shall, she shall.

Vol. Indeed, no, by your patience: I'll not over the threshold till my lord return from the wars.

Vir. If you yourself could mould yourself to come, you must go visit the good lady that lies in.

Vir. I will wish her speedy strength, and visit her with my prayers; but I cannot go thither.

Vol. Why, I pray you?

Vir. 'Tis not to save labour, nor that I want love, Vol. You would be another Penelope; yet, they say, all the yarn she spin in Ulysses' absence did but fill Thetis' full of moth. Come; I would your humble were sensible of your finger, that you might leave prick it for pity. Come, you shall go with us.

Vir. No, good madam, pardon me; indeed, I will not.

Vol. In truth, la, go with me; and I'll tell you excellent news of your husband.

Vir. O, good madam, there can be none yet.

Vol. Verily, I do not jest with you; there came news from him last night.

Vir. Indeed, madam?

Vol. In earnest, it's true: I heard a senator speak it. Thus it is: the Volscians have an army forth; against whom Cominius the general is gone, with one part of our Roman power: your lord and Titus Lentulus are set down between their city Corioli; they nothing doubt prevailing and to make it brief wars. This is true, on mine honour; and so, I pray, go with us.

Vir. Give me excuse, good madam: I will obey you in every thing hereafter.

Vol. Let her alone, lady: as she is now, she will but dissemble our better birth.

Vol. In truth, I think she would. Fare you well, then. Come, good sweet lady. Prichie, Virginia, turn thy solemnness out o' door, and go along with us.

Vir. No, at a word, madam; indeed, I must not. I wish you much more north.

Vol. Well, then, farewell. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—Before Corioli.

Enter, with dress and colours, Marcius, Titus Lentulus, Captains and Soldiers. To them a Messenger.

Mar. Yonder comes news. A wager they have Lart. My horse to yours, no. [met.

Lart. 'Tis done.

Lart. Mar. Say, has our general met the enemy? Mess. They lie in view: but have not spoken yet.

Lart. So, the good horse is mine.

Mar. I'll buy him of you.

Lart. No, I'll nor sell nor give him: lend you him I will

For half a hundred years. Summon the town.

Mar. How far off lie these armies? Mess. Within this mile and half.

Mar. Then shall we hear their Tarum, and they ours.

Now, Mars, I pritchie, make us quick in work, That we with smoking swords may march from hence, To help our fielded friends! Come, blow thy blast.

They sound a parley. Enter two Senators with others on the walls.

Tellus Aulidius, is he within your walls? [he,

First Sen. No, nor a man that fears you less than That's lesser than a little. [Drums after off.] Hark! our drums Are-bringing forth our youth. We'll break our walls, Rather than they shall pound us up: our gates, Which yet seem shut, we have but pin'd with black rushes: They'll open of themselves. [Drums after off.] Hark you, far off! There is Aulidius; list, what work he makes Amongst your cloven army.

Mar. O, they are at it! Lart. Their noise is our instruction. Ladders, ho! Enter the army of the Volscians.

Mar. They fear us not, but issue forth their city. Now put your shields before your hearts, and fight With hearts more proof than shields. Advance, brave Titus:
They do disdain us much beyond our thoughts, Which makes me sweat with wrath. Come on, my fellows: He that retires, I’ll take him for a Volsces, And he shall feel mine edge.

Alarum. The Romans are beat back to their trenches. Re-enter Marcius, cursing.

Mar. All the contagion of the south light on you, You shames of Rome! you herd of — Boils and plagues Plaster you o’er, that you may be abhorred Further than been and one infect another Against the wind a mile! you souls of geese, That bear the shape of men, how have you run From slaves that apes would beat! Pinto and hell! All hurt behind; backs red, and faces pale With flight and agued tear! Mend and charge home, Or, by the fires of heaven, I’ll leave the foe And make my wars on you: look to’t: come on: If you’ll stand fast, we’ll beat them to their wives, As they use to our trenches followed.

Another alarum. The Volsces fly, and Marcius follows them to the gates.

So, now the gates are ope: now prove good seconds: ’Tis for the followers fortune widens them, Not for the fliers: mark me, and do the like. [Enter the gates. First Sol. Fool-hardiness; not I. Sec. Sol. Nor I. [Marcius is shut in. First Sol. See, they have shut him in. All. To the pot, I warrant him. [Alarum continues.

Re-enter Titus Lartius.

Lart. What is become of Marcius? All. [Shám, sir, doublet. First Sol. Following the fliers at the very heels, With them he enters; who, upon the sudden, Clapped to their gates: he is himself alone, To answer all the city.

Lart. O noble fellow! Who sensibly outdreses his senseless sword, And, when it bows, stands up. Thou art left, Mar. A carbuncle entire, as big as thou art. [cins: Were not so rich a jewel. Thou wast a soldier Even to Cato’s wish, not fierce and terrible Only in strokes; but, with thy grim looks and The thunder-like percussion of thy sounds, Thou mindest thine enemies shame, as if the world Were feverous and did tremble.

Re-enter Marcius, bleeding, assaulted by the enemy. First Sol. Look, sir. Lart. O, ’tis Marcius! Let’s fetch him off, or make remain alike. [They fight, and all enter the city.

SCENE V.—Corioli. A street.

Enter certain Romans, with spoils.

First Rom. This will I carry to Rome. Sec. Rom. And I this. Third Rom. A murrain on’t! I took this for silver. [Alarum continues still after af.

Enter Marcius and Titus Lartius with a trumpet.

Mar. See here these movers that do prize their hours At a crack’d drachm! Cushions, leaden spoons, Irons of a doit, doublets that hangmen would Bury with those that wore them, these base slaves, Ere yet the fight be done, pack up; down with them. And mark, what noise the general makes! To him! There is the man of my soul’s hate, Aurilius,

Piercing our Romans: then, valiant Titus, take Convenient numbers to make good the city; Whilst I, with those that have the spirit, will haste To help Coriniius.

Lart. Worthy sir, thou blest’st; Thy exercise hath been too violent for A second course of fight.

Mar. Sir, praise me not; My work hath yet not warn’d me: fare you well! The blood I drop is rather physical Than dangerous to me: to Aurilius thus I will appear, and fight.

Lart. Now the fair goddess, Fortune, fall deep in love with thee; and her great charms Misguide thy opposers’ swords! Bold gentleman, Prosperity be thy page!

Mar. Thy friend no less Than those she placeth highest! So, farewell.

Lart. Thou worthiest Marcius! [Exit Marcius. Go, sound thy trumpet in the market-place; Call thither all the officers o’ the town, Where they shall know our mind: away! [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Near the camp of Coriniius.

Enter Coriniius, as it were in retire, with soldiers.

Com. Breathe you, my friends: well fought; we are come off Like Romans, neither foolish in our stands, Nor cowardly in retire: believe me, sirs, We shall be charged again. Whiles we have struck, By interims and conveying gusts we have heard The charges of our friends. Ye Roman gods! Lead their successes as we wish our own, That both our powers, with smiling fronts encoun-
May give you thankful sacrifice. [tiring,

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The citizens of Corioli have issued, And given to Lartius and to Marcius battle: I saw our party to their trenches driven, And then I came away.

Com. [Thou speak’st truth, Methinks thou speak’st not well. How long is ’t?

Mess. Above an hour, my lord. [since

Com. ’Tis not a mile; briefly we heard their drums: How couldst thou in a mile confound an hour, And bring thy news so late?

Mess. Held me in chase, that I was forced to wheel Three or four miles about, else had I, sir, Half an hour since brought my report.

Com. Who's vender, That does appear as he were flayed? O gods! He has the stamp of Marcius; and I have Before I have seen him thus.

Mar. [Within] Come I too late?

Com. The shepherd knows not thunder from a tabor More than I know the sound of Marcius’ tongue From every meaner man.

Enter Marcius.

Mar. Come I too late?

Com. Ay, if you come not in the blood of others, But mantled in your own.

Mar. O, let me clap ye In arms as sound as when I went out, in heart As many as when our unfruitful day was done, And tapers burn’d to bedward! Plow of warriors, How is ’t with Titus Lartius?

Mar. As with a man basted about deuces; Condemning some to death, and some to exile: Ransoming him, or pitying, threatening the other; Holding Corioli in the name of Rome,

510
Scene VIII.—A field of battle.

Alarum as in battle. Enter, from opposite sides, Marcius and Ausilius.

Mar. I'll fight with none but thee; for I do hate Worse than a promise-breaker. [Thee]

Aus. We hate alike:

Not Afric owns a serpent I abhor

More than thy fame and envy. Fix thy foot.

Mar. Let the first hugger die the other's slave,
And the gods doom him after! [Thee]

Aus. If I fly, Marcius,

Holloa me like a hare.

Mar. Within these three hours, Tullus,

Alone I fought in your Corioli walls,

And made what work I pleased: 'Tis not my blood Wherein thou seest me mask'd; for thy revenge Wrench up thy power to the highest.

Aus. Wert thou the Hector

That was the whip of your brag'd progeny,

Thou shouldst not scape me here.

[They fight, and certain Volsces come to the aid of Ausilius. Marcius fights till they be driven in breathless.

Officious, and not valiant, you have shamed me

In your condemned seconds. [Exit.

Scene IX.—The Roman camp.

Enter, from one side, Cominius with the Romans; from the other side, Marcius, with his arm in a scurf.

Com. If I should tell thee o'er this thy day's work,

Thou'ldst not believe thy deeds; but I'll report it

Where senators shall mingle tears with smiles,

Where great patricians shall attend and shring,

'T is the end admire, where ladies shall be frightened,

And, gladly quaked, hear more; where the dull tribune

That, with the frosty plebeians, hate thine honours,

Shall say against their hearts 'We thank the gods

Our Rome hath such a soldier.'

Yet comest thou to a morsel of this feast,

Having fully dined before.

Enter Titus Lartius, with his power, from the pursuit.

Lart. O general,

Here is the steed, we the caunussion:

Hadst thou beheld

Mar. Pray now, no more: my mother,

Who has a charter to extol her blood,

When she does praise me grieves me. I have done

As you have done; that's what I can; induced

As you have been; that's for my country;

He that hath but effected his good will

Hath o'er-ta'en mine act.

Com. Thou shalt not be

The grave of your deserving: Rome must know

The value of her own: 't were a concealment

Worse than a theft, no less than a traducement,

To hide your doings; and to silence that,

Which, to the spire and top of praises vouch'd,

Would seem but modest; therefore, becouse you—

In sign of what you are, not to reward

What you have done—before our army hear me.

Mar. I have some wounds upon me, and they

To hear themselves remember'd. [Smart

Com. Should they not,

We'll make them faster against ingratitude,

And tempt themselves with death. Of all the horses,

Whereof we have ta'en good and good store, of all

The treasure in this field achieved and city,

We render you the tenth, to be ta'en forth,

Before the common distribution, at

Your only choice.

541
Coriolanus.

Marc. I thank you, general; but cannot make my heart consent to take
A bribe to pay my sword: I do refuse it;
And stand upon my common part with those
That have beheld the doing.

[Flourish. They all cry 'Marcius! Marcius!' cast up their eyes and laugh: Cominius and Lartius stand bare.

Marc. May these same instruments, which you profane,
Never sound more! when drums and trumpets shall
To the field prove fathers, let courts and cities be Made all of false-faced soothing!
While steel grows soft as the parasite's silk,
Let him be made a coverture for the wars!
No more, I say! For that I have not wash'd
My face, nor in a little fo'te'd some double wretch,—
Which, without note, here 's many cise have done;
You shou't me forth
In acclamations hyperbolical:
As if I loved my little should be dieted
In praises sauc'd with lies.

Com. Too modest are you; more cruel to your good report than grateful
To us that give you truly: by your patience,
If 'gainst yourself you be incensed, we' ll put you,
Like one that means his proper harm, in manacles,
Then reason safely with you. Therefore, be it known,
As to us as to all the world, that Caius Marcius
Wears this war's garland: in token of the which,
My noble steel, known to the camp, I give him,
With all his trim belonging: and from this time,
For what he did before Corioli, I give,
With all the applause and clamour of the host,
Caius Marcius Coriolanus! Bear
The addition mildly ever!

[Flourish. Trumpets sound, and drums.

All. Caius Marcius Coriolanus!

Cor. I will go wash;
And when my face is fair, you shall perceive
Whether I blest or no: now beit, I thank you,
I mean to strike your sied, and at all times
To under rest your good addition
To the fairness of my power.

Com. So, to our tent;
Where, ere we do repose us, we will write
To Rome of our success. You, Titus Lartius,
Must to Corioli back: send as to Rome
The best, with whom we may articulate,
For their own good and ours.

Lart. I shall, my lord.

Cor. The gods begin to mock me. I, that now
Refused most princely gifts, am bound to beg
Of my lord general.

Com. Take 't; 'tis yours. What is 't?

Cor. I sometime lay here in Corioli
At a poor man's house; he used me kindly:
He cried to me; I saw him prisoner;
But then Aufidius was within my view,
And wrath o'erwhelm'd my pity: I request you
To give my poor host freedom.

O, well begg'd! Were he the butcher of my son, he should Be free as is the wind. Deliver him, Titus.

Lart. Marcius, his name?

Cor. By Jupiter! forgot.

I am weary; yea, my memory is tired.
Have we no wine here?

Com. Go we to our tent:
The blood upon your visage dries; 'tis time
It should be look'd to: come. [Exeunt.

SCENE X.—The camp of the Volscians.

A flourish. Cornets. Enter Tullus Aufidius, bloody, with two or three Soldiers.

Aauf. The town is ta'en!
First Sol. 'T will be deliver'd back on good con-
Auf. Condition!

I would I were a Roman; for I cannot,
Being a Volscian, be that I am. Condition!

What good condition can a treaty find
I the part that is at mercy? Five times, Marcius,
I have fought with thee; so often hast thou beat me,
And wouldst do so, I think, should we encounter
As often as we eat. By the elements,
If e'er again I meet him beard to beard,
He's mine, or I am his: nine emulation
Hath not that honour in 't it had; for where
I thought to crush him in an equal force,
True sword to sword, I'll yet potch at him some way
Or wrath or craft may get him.

First Sol. He's the devil.

Auf. Holder, though not so subtle. My valour's poison'd
With only suffering stain by him; for him
Shall fly out of itself: nor sleep nor sanctuary,
Being naked, sick, nor fame nor Capitol,
The prayers of priests nor times of sacrifice,
Embellishments all of fury, shall lift up
Their rotten privilege and custom against
My hate to Marcius: where I find him, were it
At home, upon my brother's guard, even there,
Against the hospitable canon, would I
Wash my fierce hand in 's heart. Go you to the city;
Learn how 't is held; and what they are that must Be hostages for Rome.

First Sol. Will not you go? [you—

Auf. I am attended at the eypress grove; I pray
'T is south the city walls—bring me word thither
How the world goes, that to the pace of it
I may spur on my journey.

First Sol. I shall, sir. [Exeunt.

ACT II.

Enter Menenius with the two Tribunes of the people,
Sicinius and Brutus.

Men. The angerer tells me we shall have news
Brut. Good or bad? [to-night.

Men. Not according to the prayer of the people, for they love not Marcius.

Sic. Nature teach's beasts to know their friends.

Men. Pray you, who does the wolf love?

Sic. The lamb.

Men. Ay, to devour him; as the hungry plebeians would the nolde Marcius.

Brut. He's a lamb indeed, that bares like a bear.

Men. He's a bear indeed, that lives like a lamb.

You two are old men: tell me one thing that I shall

Both. Well, sir.

Men. In what enormity is Marcius poor in, that you two have not in abundance? [all.

Brut. He's poor in no one fault, but stored with Sic. Especially in pride.

Both. And topping all others in boasting.

Men. This is strange now: do you two know how you are censured here in the city, I mean of us o'the right-hand file? do you?

Both. Why, how are we censured?

Men. Because you talk of pride now, will you not be angry?
ACT II.

CORIOLANUS.

Scene I.

Both. Well, well, sir, well.

Men. Why, 'tis no great matter; for a very little thief of occasion will rob you of a great deal of patience: give your dispositions the reins, and be angry with your party too: there's a man that, if you will make it a pleasure to you in being so, you blame Marcius for being proud.

Bra. We do it not alone, sir.

Men. I know you can do very little alone: for your helps are many, or else your actions would grow so neat and matter your own party too, that you would be like for doing much alone. You talk of pride: O that you could turn your eyes toward the napes of your necks, and make but an interior survey of your good selves! O that you could!

Bra. What then, sir?

Men. Nay, then you should discover a brace of mannering, proud, violent, testy magistrates, alias fools, as any in Rome.

Sec. Menenius, you are known well enough too.

Men. I am known to be a humorous person, and one that loves a cup of hot wine with not a drop of alloying Tiber in it; said to be something impetuous in your complexion; hoity and tinder-like upon too trivial motion: one that converses more with the buttock of the night than with the forehead of the morning: I think I utter, and spent my malice in my breath. Meeting two such worthmen as you are, I cannot call you Lycurgus; you give me tongue to touch my palate adversely, I make a crooked face at it. I can't say your worship's have delivered the matter well, when I find the ass in compound with the major part of your syllables: and though I must be content to bear with those that say you are reverend grave men: yet they encounter such that tell you you have good faces. If you see this in the map of my microcosm, follows it that I am known well enough too? what harm can your bison consequtencies gleam out of this character, if I be known well enough too?

Bra. Come, sir, come, we know you well enough.

Men. You know neither me, yourselves, nor any thing. You are ambitious for poor knaves' caps and legs: you wear out a good wholesome forenoon in hearing a cause between an orange-wife and a fop-seller; and then rejoin the controversy of three pence to a second day of audience. When you have lost a bet between party and party, and if you chance to be pinched with the colic, you make faces like mummers; set up the bloody flag against all patience; and, in roaring for a chamber-pot, dismiss the controversy bleeding, the more entangled by your hearing: all the peace you make in their cause is, calling both the parties knaves. You are a pair of strange ones.

Bra. Come, come, you are well understood to be a perfecter giber for the table than a necessary bencher in the Capitol.

Men. Our very priests must become mockers, if they are to disquiet the ridiculous subjects as you are. When you speak best unto the purpose, it is not worth the wagging of your beards: and your beards deserve not so honourable a grave as to stuff a butcher's cushion, or to be entombed in an ass's jack-saddle. Yet you must be saying, Marcius is proud: who, in a cheap estimation, is worth all your predecessors since Deucalion, though peradventure some of the best of 'em were hereditary hangmen. God-dan to your worship's: more of your conversation would infect my brain, being the herdmens of the beastly plebeians: I will be bold to take my leave of you.

Enter Volumnia, Virgilia, and Valeria.

How now, my as fair as noble ladies, — and the moon, were she earthly, no nobler. — whither do you follow your eyes so fast?

Men. Ha! Marcus coming home!

Vol. Ay, worthy Menenius; and with most proper application.

Men. Take my cap, Jupiter, and I thank thee. Hoo! Marcius coming home!

Vol. Look, here's a letter from him: the state hath another, his wife another; and, I think, there's one out home for Balbus.

Men. I will make my very house reel to-night: a letter for me!

[saw't.

Vir. Yes, certain, there's a letter for you; I

Men. A letter for me! it gives me an estate of seven years' health; in which time I will make a list the physician: the most sovereign prescription in Galen is but empiricke, and, to this preservative of no letter report than a horse-drench. Is he not wounded? he was wont to come home wounded.

Vir. O, no, no, no.

Vol. O, he is wounded: I thank the gods for 't.

Men. No, do I too, if it be not too much; brings a victory in his pocket? the wounds become him.

Vol. On's brows: Menenius, he comes the third time home with the oaken garland.

Men. Has he disciplined Aufidius soundly?

Vol. Titus Lartius writes, they fought together, but Aufidius off.

Men. And 'twas time for him too. I'll warrant him that: an he had stayed by him, I would not have been so disdained for all the chests in Corioli, and the gold that's in them. Is the senate possessed of this?

Vol. Good ladies, let's go. Yes, yes, yes; the senate has letters from the general, wherein he gives my son the whole name of the war: he hath in this action outdone his former deeds doubtfully.

Vol. In troth, there's wondrous things spoke of him.

Men. Wondrous! ay, I warrant you, and not without his true purchasing.

Vir. The gods grant them true!

Vol. True! pow, pow, pow.

Men. True! I'll be sworn they are true. Where is he wounded? [To the Tribunes] God save your good worship's! Marcius is coming home: he has more cause to be proud. Where is he wounded?

Vol. I, the shoulder! T, the left arm: there will be large cicatrices to show the people, when he shall stand for his place. He received in the repulse of Tarquin seven hurts to the body.

Men. One I, the neck, and two I, the thigh, — there's nine that I know.

Vol. He had, before this last expedition, twenty-five wounds upon him.

Men. Now it's twenty-seven: every gash was an enemy's grave. [Like shout and flourish.] Hark! the trumpets.

Vol. These are the ushers of Marcius: before him he carries noise, and behind him he leaves tears: Death, that dark spirit, in's nerry arm doth lie: Which, being advanced, declines, and then men die.

Enter Cominius the general, and Titus Lartius; between them, Coriolanus, crowned with an oaken garland; with Captains and Soldiers, and a Herald.

Her. Know, Rome, that all alone Marcus did fight Within Corioli gates: where he hath won, With fame, a name to Caius Marcius; these In honour follows Coriolanus. Welcome to home, renowned Coriolanus! [Flourish. All. Welcome to Rome, renowned Coriolanus! Cor. No more of this; it does offend my heart:

Pray now, no more.

Con. Look, sir, your mother!

Cor. O,
You have, I know, petition’d all the gods
For my prosperity! [Kneels.
Vol. Nay, my good soldier, up;
My gentle Marcius, worthy Caius, and Bright-achieving honour now bourned—
What is it?—Coriolanus must I call thee?—
But, O, thy wife!
Cor. My gracious silence, hail! Now,
On’st thou have laugh’d? I had come coffin’ home,
That weep’d to see me triumph? Ah, my dear,
Such eyes the widows in Coriol wear,
And mothers that lack sons.

MEN. Now, the gods crown thee! Cor. And live you yet? [To Valeria] O my sweet lady, pardon. [Home. Vol. I know not where to turn; O, welcome
And welcome, general, everywhere. All. A hundred thousand welcomes. I could weep
And I could laugh. I am light and heavy. Welcome.
A curse begin at very root on heart,
That is not glad to see thee! You are three
That Rome should do on: yet, by the faith of men,
We have some old crab-trees here at home that
Will be blasted to your relish. Yet welcome, warriors:
We call a nettle but a nettle and
The taints of tools but folly.

Cor. Menenius ever, ever. Ever right.
Cor. All tongues speak of him, and the bleared sights
Are spectacled to see him: your prattling nurse
Into a rapture lets her baby cry
While she chants him: the kitchen maidkin pins
Her fittest lockram bout her necthe neck, [dows,
Cumbering the walls to ed and eave welcome all.
Vol. I have lived
To see inherited my wishes
And the buildings of my fancy; only
There’s one thing wanting, which I doubt not but
Our Rome will cast upon thee.
Cor. Know, good mother,
I had rather be their servant in my way
Than away with them in theirs.

[Flourish. Cornets. Exeunt in state, as before. Bru. All tongues speak of him, and the bleared sights malice and displeasure of the people is as bad as that which he dislikes, to flattering them for their love.

See. Off. He he had deserved worthily of his country: and his ascent is not by such easy degrees as those who, having been ample and courteous to the people, bountied, without any further deed to have taken their Marcins Coriolanus. He hath so planted his honours in their eyes, and his actions in their hearts, that for their tongues to be silent, and not confess so much, were a kind of ingratitude; to report otherwise, were a malice, that, giving itself the lie, would pluck reproof and relake from every ear that heard it.

First Off. No more of him; he's a worthy man: make way, they are coming.

A venet. Enter, with Lectors before them, CINCIUS the consul. Menenius, Coriolanus, Senators, Sicinius and Brutus. The Senators take their places; the Tribunes take their places by themselves. Coriolanus stands.

Men. Having determined of the Volscs and To send for Titus Lartius, it remains, As the main point of this our after-meeting, Hath thus stood for his country: therefore, please Most reverend and grave elders, to desire [you, The present consul, and last general In our well-found successes, to report A little of that worthy work performed By Caius Marcins Coriolanus, whom We met here both to thank and to remember With honours like himself.

First Sen. Speak, good Ciminius: Leave nothing out for length, and make us think Rather our state's defective for requital Than we to stretch it out. [To the Tribunes] Masters of the people, We do request your kindest ears, and after, Your loving motion toward the common body, To yield what passes here.

Sic. We are convened Upon a pleasing meeting, and have hearts Inclined to honour and advance The theme of our assembly.

Bru. Which the rather We shall be blest to do, if he remember A kinder value of the people than He hath hereto prized them.

Men. That's off, that's off: I would you rather had been silent. Please you To hear Cominius speak?

Lrr. Most willingly; But yet my caution was more pertinent Than the rebuke you give it. Men. He loves your people; But tie him not to be their bedfellow. Worthy Cominius, speak. [Coriolanus offers to go away.] Nay, keep your place.

First Sen. Sit, Coriolanus; never shame to hear What you have nobly done. Cor. Your honours' pardon: I had rather have my wounds to heal again Than hear say how I got them.

When blows have made me stay, I died from words. You suffered not, therefore hurt not: but your love they as weigh. [people, Men. Pray now, sit down.

Cor. I had rather have one scratch my head than the sun When their arms were stricken by that sit To hear my nothings monster'd. [Exit. Men. Masters of the people, Your multiplying swarm how can be fatter —

That's thousand to one good one — when you now He had rather venture all his limbs to labour [see Than one on's ears to hear it? Proceed, Cominius. Com. I shall lack voice; the deeds of Coriolanus Should not be utter'd feebly. It is held That valour is the cheapest virtue, and Most dignified person is he that shews To give the people a good name: if he be, The man I speak of cannot in the world Be singly counterpoised. At sixteen years, When Tarquin made a head for Rome, he fought Beyond the mark of others: our then dictator, Whom with all praise I point at, saw him fight, When with his Amazons when he drov'd The bristled lips before him: he bestrid An o'er-press'd Roman and the consul's view Slew three oppressors: Tarquin's self he met, And struck him on his knee: in that day's feats, When he might act the woman in the scene, He proved best man if the field, and for his meed Was brow-bound with the oak. His pupil age Man-enter'd thus, he waxed like a sea, And in the brunt of seventeen battles since He hurl'd all swords of the garland. For this last, Before and in Coriol, let me say, To gratify his noble service home: he stopp'd the fliers; And by his rare example made the coward Turn terror into sport: as weeds before A vessel under sail, so men obey'd And fell below his stem: his sword, death's stamp, Where it did mark, it took: from face to foot He was a thing of blood, whose every motion Was timed with dying cries: alone he enter'd The mortal gale of the city, which he painted With shameless destiny: amidst came off, And with a sudden re enforcing struck Coriol like a planet: now all's his: When, by and by, the din of war gape pierce His ready senses: then struck his doubled spirit Re-quicken'd what in flesh was fatiguate, And to the battle came he; where he did Run reckon o'er the lives of men, as if 'T were a perpetual spoil: and till we call'd Both field and city o'er, he never sued To ease his breast with painting.

Men. Worthy man! First Sen. He cannot but with measure fit The which we devise him. [honours Com. Our spoils he kick'd at, And look'd upon things precious as they were One common mark of the world: he covets less Than misery itself would give: rewards His deeds with doing them, and is content To spend the time to end it.

Re-enter Coriolanus.

Men. The senate, Coriolanus, art well pleased To make thee consul. I do owe them still My life and services. It then remains That you do speak to the people.

Cor. I do beseech you, To me o'er-press that custom, for it can Put on the gown, stand naked and entreat them, For my wounds' sake, to give their suffrage: please That I may pass this doing. [you

Sic. Sir, the people Must have their voices; neither will they hate One lot of ceremony. Put them not to't: Pray you, go fit you to the custom and Take to you, as your predecessors have, Your honour with your form.
ACT II.

CORIOLANUS.

Cor.  It is a part
That I shall blush in acting, and might well
Be taken from the people.

Bru.  Mark you that?

Cor.  To brag unto them, thus I did, and thus;
Show them the maching scars which I should hide,
As if I had received them for the hire
Of their breath only!

Men.  Do not stand upon 't.

We recommend to you, tribunes of the people,
Our purpose to them: and to our noble consul
Wish we all joy and honour.

Senators. To Coriolanus come all joy and honour!

Bru.  You see how he intends to use the people,
Without the least respect of them! He will require
As if he did consider what he requested [then,]
Should be in them to give.

Bru.  Come, we'll inform them
Of our proceedings here: on the market-place,
I know, they do attend us.  [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same.  The Forum.

Enter seven or eight Citizens.

First Cit. Once, if he do require our voices, we ought not to deny him.

Sec. Cit. We will, if we will.

Third Cit. We have power in ourselves to do it, but it is a power that we have no power to do; for if he show us his wounds and tell us his deeds, we are to put our tongues into those wounds and speak for them: so, if he tell us his noble deeds, we must also tell him our noble acceptance of them. Ingratitude is monstrous, and for the multitude to be ingrateful, were to make a monster of the multitude: of the which we being members, should bring ourselves to be monstrous members.

First Cit. And to make us no better thought of, a little help will serve: for once we stood up about the corn, he himself stuck not to call us the many-headed multitude.

Third Cit. We have been called so of many; not that our heads are some brown, some black, some auburn, some bald, but that our wits are so diversely coloured: and truly I think if all our wits were to issue out of one skull, they would fly east, west, north, south, and their consent of one direct way should be at once to all the points o’ the compass.

Sec. Cit. Think you so? Which way do you judge my wit would fly?

Third Cit. Nay, your wit will not so soon out as another man's will; 'tis strongly wedged up in a blockhead, but if it were at liberty, 't would, sure, Sec. Cit. Why that way? [southward.

Third Cit. To lose itself in a fog, where being three parts melted away with rotten dews, the fourth would return for conscience sake, to help to get these a wife.

Sec. Cit. You are never without your tricks: you may, you may.

Third Cit. Are you all resolved to give your voices? But that's no matter, the greater part carries it. I say, if he would incline to the people, there was never a worthier man.

Enter Coriolanus in a gown of humility, with Menenius.

Here he comes, and in the gown of humility: mark his behaviour. We are not to stay all together, but to come to him where he stands, by ones, by twos, and by threes. He's to make his requests by particulars; wherein every one of us has a single honour, in giving him our own voices with our own tongues: therefore follow me, and I'll direct you how you shall go by him.

CITIZENS.  [Excit.]

CITIZENS.  [Excit.]

Cor.  Men. O sir, you are not right; have you not known The worthiest men have done 't?

Men.  Most what must I say? 'Very sir,—Plague upon 't! I cannot bring My tongue to such a paece:—Look, sir, my wounds! I got them in my country's service, when Some certain of your brethren roared and ran From the noise of our own drums.'

Men.  You must not speak of that: you must desire them To think upon you.

Cor.  Think upon me! hang 'em! I would they would forget me, like the virtues Which our divines lose by 'em.

Men.  You'll mar all.

Cor.  I'll leave you: pray, speak to 'em, I pray you, in wholesome manner.  [Exeunt.

Cor.  Bid them wash their faces
And keep their teeth clean.  [Re-enter two of the Citizens.]  So, here comes a brace.  [Re-enter a third Citizen.

You keep them out of the coarse, sir, of my standing here.

Third Cit. We do, sir; tell us what hath brought Cor. Mine own desert.

Men.  You to 't.

Sec. Cit. Your own desert!

Third Cit. Ay, but not mine own desire.

Third Cit. How not your own desire?

Sec. Cit. No, sir; 'twas never my desire yet to trouble the poor with begging.

Third Cit. You must think, if we give you any thing, we hope to gain by you.  [ship?

Sec. Cit. Well then, I pray, your price o' the consul.

First Cit. The price is to ask it kindly.

Sec. Cit. Kindly! Sir, I pray, let me ha' it: I have wounds to show you, which shall be yours in private. Your good voice, sir; what say you?

Sec. Cit. You shall have 't, worthy sir.

Third Cit. A match, sir. There's in all two worthy voices begged. I have your arms: adieu.

Third Cit. But this is something odd.

Sec. Cit. An 't were to give again,—but 't is no matter.  [Excit the three Citizens.

Re-enter two other Citizens.

Cor.  Pray you now, if it may stand with the tune of your voices (that I may be consul, I have here the customary gown.

Fourth Cit. You have deserved nobly of your country, and you have not deserved nobly.

Cor. Your enigma?

Fourth Cit. You have been a scourge to her enemies, you have been a rod to her friends; you have not indeed loved the common people.

Cor. You should account me the more virtuous that I have not been common in my love. I will, sir, flatter my sworn brother, the people, to earn a dearer estimation of them; 'tis a condition they account gentle: and since the wisdom of their enmity is rather to have my hat than my heart, I will practise the insinuating nod and be off to them most counterfeity that is, sir, I will counterfeit the bewitchment of some popular man and give it bountiful to the desirers. Therefore, beseech you, I may be consul.

Fifth Cit. We hope to find you our friend; and therefore give you our voices heartily.

Fourth Cit. You have received many wounds for your country.

Cor. I will not seal your knowledge with showing them. I will make much of your voices, and so trouble you no farther.

Both Cit. The gods give you joy, sir, heartily!

Cor. Most sweet voices! Better it is to die, better to starve,

Next.  [Excit.]

Thane the hire which first we do deserve.
Why in this woolish toge should I stand here,
'Cause of Hob and Dick, that do appear,
Their needless vouches? Custom calls me to 't;
What custom wills, in all things should we do 't,
The duty antique Rome would be unswept,
And mountainous error be too highly hearted
For truth to o'er-peer. Rather than fool it so,
Let the high office and the honour go
To one that would do thus. I am half through;
The one part suffer'd, the other will I do.

Re-enter three Citizens more.

Your voices: for your voices I have fought;
Watch'd for your voices; for your voices bear
Of wounds two dozen odd; battles thrice six
I have seen and heard of: for your voices have Done many things, some less, some more: your Indeed, I would be consul. [voices:
Sixth Cit. He has done nobly, and cannot go without any honest man's voice.
Seventh Cit. Therefore let him be consul: the gods given joy, and make him good friend to the people!
Six Cit. Amen, amen. God save thee, noble consul!
Cor. Worthy voices!

Re-enter Menenius, with Brutus and Cicinius.

Men. You have stood your limitation; and the tribunes
Endue you with the people's voice: remains
That, in the official marks invested, you
Anon do meet the senate.
Cor. Is this done?
Se. The custom of request you have discharged:
The people do admit you, and are summon'd
To meet anon, upon your approbation.

Cor. Where? at the senate-house?
Se. There, Coriolanus.

Cor. May I change these garments?
Se. You may, sir.
Cor. That I'll straight do; and, knowing myself
To repair to the senate-house, [again,
Men. I'll keep you company. Will you along?
Bru. We stay here for the people.

Cor. Fare you well.
[Exit Coriolanus and Menenius.

He has it now, and by his looks methinks
'T is warm at 's heart.
Bru. With a proud heart he wore his humble
Will you dismiss the people?

Re-enter Cicinius.

Sec. How now, my masters! have you chose this
First Cit. He has our voices, sir. [man?
Bru. We pray the gods he may deserve your loves.
Sec. Cit. Amen, sir: to my poor unworthy notice,
He mock'd us when he begg'd our voices.
Third Cit. Certainly
He flouted us downright.

First Cit. No, 't is his kind of speech: he did not mock us.
Sec. Cit. Not one amongst us, save yourself, but
He used us scornfully: he should have show'd us
His marks of merit; wounds received for 's country.
Sec. Why, so he did, I am sure.
Citizens. No, no; no man saw 'em.

Third Cit. He said he had wounds, which he could show in private;
And with his hat, thus waving it in scorn,
' I would be consul,' says he: 'aged custom,
But by your voices, will not so permit me:
Your voices therefore.' When we granted that.
Here was I thank you for your voices: thank you:
Your most sweet voices: now you have left your voices,
I have no further with you. Was not this mockery?

Sec. Why either were you ignorant to see 't,
Or, seeing it, of such childish friendliness
To yield your voices?
Bru. Could you not have told him
As you were lesson'd, when he had no power,
But was a petty servant to the state,
He was your enemy, ever spake against
Your liberties and the charters that you bear
The body of the weal; and now, arriving
A place of potency and sway o' the state,
If he should still malignantly remain
Fast foe to the plebeian, your voices might
Be curses to yourselves? You should have said
That as his worthy deeds did claim no less
Than what he stood for, so his gracious nature
Would think upon you for your voices and Translate his meekness towards you into love,
Standing your friendly lord.

Sec. Thus to have said,
As you were fore-advise, had touch'd his spirit
And tried his inclination: from him pluck'd
Either his gracious promise, which you might,
As cause had call'd you up, have held him to;
Or else it would have gald his surly nature,
Which easily endures not article
Tying him to aught: so putting him to rage,
You should have ta'en the advantage of his choler
And pass'd him unexplored.
Bru. Did you perceive
He did solict you in free contempt
When he did need your loves, and do you think
That his contempt shall not be bruising to you,
When he hath power to crush? Why, had your
No heart among you? or had you tongues to cry
Against the redorship of judgment?
Sec. Have you
Ere now denied the asker? and now again
Of him that did not ask, but mock, bestow
Your sued-for tongues?
Third Cit. He's not confirm'd; we may deny him
Sec. Cit. And will deny him: [yet.
I'll have five hundred voices of that sound.
First Cit. I twice five hundred and their friends
To piece 'em. [friends,
Bru. Get you hence instantly, and tell these
They have it that will consult that from them take
Their liberties: make them of no more voice
Than dogs that are as often beat for barking
As therefore kept to do so.
Sec. Let them assemble,
And on a safter judgment all revoke
Your ignominy election; enforce his pride,
And his old hate into you; besides, forget not
With what contempt he wore the humble weed,
How in his suit he scorn'd you; but your loves,
Thinking upon his services, took from you
The apprehension of his present portance,
Which most gimbly, ungravely, he did fashion
After the inveterate hate he bears you.
Bru. Lay
A fault on us, your tribunes; that we labour'd,
No impediment between, but that you must
Cast your election on him.
Sec. Say, you chose him
More after our commandment than as guided
By your own true affections, and that your minds,
Pre-occupied with what you rather must do
Than what you should, made you against the grain
To voice him consul: lay the fault on us,
Bru. Ay, spare us not. Say we read lectures to you.
How youngly he began to serve his country,
How long continued, and what stock he springs of,
The noble house of the Marcians, from whence came
That Ancus Marcius, Numa's daughter's son,
Who, after great Hostilius, here was king;
ACT III.

Cornets. Enter Coriolanus, Menenius, all the Gentlemen, Cominius, Titus Lartius, and other Senators.

Cor. Tullius Aufidius then had made new head? Lart. He had, my lord; and that it was which Our swifter composition. [caused Cor. So then the Volscæ stand but as at first, Read all, when time shall prompt them, to make road Upon 's again.

Com. They are worn, lord consul, so, That we shall hardly in our ages see Their banners wave again.

Cor. Saw you Aufidius? Lart. On safe-guard he came to me; and did curse Against the Volscæ, for they had so villely Yielded the town: he is retired to Antiwm.

Cor. Spoke he of me? Lart. He did, my lord.

Cor. How? what? Lart. How often he had met you, sword to sword; That of all things upon the earth he hated Your person most, that he would pawn his fortunes To hopeless restitution, so he might Be call'd your vanquisher.

Cor. At Antiwm lives he? Lart. At Antiwm.

Cor. I wish I had a cause to seek him there, To oppose his hated fully. Welcome home.

Enter Scenius and Brutus.

Behold, these are the tribunes of the people, [them; The tongues o' the common mouth: I do despise For they do prunk them in authority, Against all noble sufferance.

Scen. Pass no further.

Cor. Ha! what is that? Brut. It will be dangerous to go on: no further. Cor. What makes this change? Men. The matter? [mon? Com. Hath he not pass'd the noble and the con- Brutus: Cominius, no.

Cor. Have I had children's voices? First Sen. Tribunes, give way; he shall to the market-place.

Brut. The people are incensed against him.

Cor. Stop, Or all will fall in brol.

Cor. Are these your herd? Must these have voices, that can yield them now And straight disdain their tongues? What are Your o'ffices? Hee! You being their mouths, why rule you not their Have you not set them on?

Men. Be calm, be calm.

Cor. It is a purposed thing, and grows by plot, To curb the will of the nobility:

And presently, when you have drawn your number, Repair to the Capitol.

All. We will so; almost all Rejoet in their election. [Exeunt Citizens. Brut. Let them go on; This mutiny were better put in hazard, Than stay, past doubt, for greater: If, as his nature is, he fall in rage With their refusal, both observe and answer The vantage of his anger.

Cor. To the Capitol, come: We will be there before the stream o' the people; And this shall seem, as partly 'tis, their own, Which we have goaded onward. [Exeunt.
Men. What, what! his choler?
Cor. Choler!
Were I as patient as the midnight sleep,
By Jove, 't would be my mind!
Sic. It is a mind
That shall remain a poison where it is,
Not poison any further.
Cor. Shall remain!
Hear you this Triton of the mhimows? mark you
His absolute 'shall'?
Com. 'Twas from the canon.
Cor. O good but most unwise patricians! why,
You grave but reckless senators, have you thus
Given Hydra here to choose an officer,
That with his peremptory 'shall,' being but
The horn and noise o' the monster's, wants not spirit
To say he'll turn your current in a ditch,
And make your channel his? if he have power,
Then vail your ignorance: if none, awake
Your dangerous lenity. If you are learn'd,
Be not as common fools: if you are not,
Let them have cushions by you. You are plebeians,
If they be senators: and they are no less,
When, belted by your demands! The great'st taste
Most palates theirs. They choose their magistrate,
And such a one as he, who puts his 'shall,'
His popular 'shall,' against a graver bench
Than ever frown'd in Greece. By Jove himself!
It makes the consuls base: and my soul aches
To know, when two authorities are up,
Neither supreme, how soon confusion
May enter 'twixt the gap of both and take
The one by the other.
Com. Well, on to the market-place.
Cor. Whoever gave that counsel, to give forth
The corn o' the storehouse gratis, as 't was used
Sometime in Greece,—
Men. Well, well, no more of that.
Cor. Though there the people had more absolute
I say, they nourish'd disobedience, fed
Power, the ruin of the state.
Brut. Why, shall the people give
One that speaks thus their voice?
Cor. I'll give my reasons,
More worthier than their voices. They know the corn
Was not our recompense, resting well assured [war,
That he'er did service 't was: being press'd to the
Even when the navel of the state was touch'd,
They would not thread the gates. This kind of service
Did not deserve corn gratis. Being 't the war,
Their mutinies and revolts, wherein they show'd
Most valour, spoke not for them: the accusation
Which they have often made against the senate,
All cause unborn, could never be the motive
Of our so frank donation. Well, what then?
How shall this bison multitude digest
The senate's courtesy? Let deeds express
What 's like to be their words: 'We did request it;
We are the greater poll, and in true fear
They gave your demands.' Thus we delude
The nature of our seats and make the rabble
Call our cares fears; which will in time
Break ope the locks o' the senate and bring in
The crows to peck the eagles.
Men. Come, enough.
Bru. Enough, with over-measure.
Cor. No, take more:
What may be sworn by, both divine and human,
Seal what I end withal! This double worship,
Where one part does disdain with cause, the other
Insult without all reason, where gentry, title, wise
Cannot conclude but by the yea and no
[dom, of general ignorance: it must omit
Real necessities, and give way the while flows,
To mustable slightness: purpose so barr'd, it fol-

Nothing is done to purpose. Therefore, beseech
You that will be less fearful than discreet, [yon,—
That love the fundamental part of state
More than you doubt the change on't, that prefer
A noble life before a long, and wish
To jump a body with a dangerous physic;
That's sure of death without it, at once pluck out
The multituidinous tongue: let them not lick
The sweet which is their poison: your dishonour
Mangles true judgment and bereaves the state
Of that integrity which should become 't,
Not having the power to do the good it would,
For the ill which doth control 't.

Bru. Has said enough.
Sic. Has spoken like a traitor, and shall answer
As traitors do.
Cor. Thou wretch, despite o'erwhelm thee!
What should the people do with these bold tribunes?
On whom depending, their obedience fails
To the greater bench: in a rebellion,
When what's not meet, but what must be, was law,
Then were they chosen: in a better hour,
Let what is meet be said it must be meet,
And throw their power i' the dust.

Here. Manifest treason! This a consul? no.
Bru. The eddiles, ho!

Enter an Edile.

Let him be apprehended.

Sic. Go, call the people: [Exit Edile] in whose name myself
Attach thee as a traitorous innovator,
A foe to the public weal: obey, I charge thee,
And follow to thine answer.
Cor. Senators, &c. We'll surely hear him.
Com. Aged sir, hands off.
Cor. Hence, rotten thing! or I shall shake thy
Out of thy garments.

[Chorus of Citizens.

Sic. Help, ye citizens!

Enter a rabble of Citizens (Plebeians), with the Eddiles.

Men. On both sides more respect.
Sic. Here he's he that would take from you all your
Bru. Seize him, eddiles! [power.
Citizens. Down with him! down with him!
Senators, &c. Weapons, weapons, weapons!
[They all hustle about Coriolanus, crying
'Tribunes! 'Patricians! 'Citizens!' 'What, ho! 'Sicinius! 'Brutus! 'Coriolanus! 'Citizens!'
'Peace, peace, peace!' 'Stay, hold, peace!'
Men. What is about to be? I am out of breath;
Confusion's near; I cannot speak. You, tribunes
To the people! Coriolanus, patience!

Sic. Hear me, people; peace!
Citizens. Let's hear our tribune: peace! Speak, speak, speak.

Sic. You are at point to lose your liberties:
Marcius would have all from you; Marcius,
Whom Fate have named for consul.
Men. Fie, fie, fie! This is the way to knidle, not to quench.
First Sen. To unbuild the city and to lay all flat.
Sic. What is the city but the people?
Citizens. True,

The people are the city.

Bru. By the consent of all, we were establish'd
The people's magistrates.
Citizens. You so remain.

Men. And so are like to do.
Com. That is the way to lay the city flat;
To bring the rock to the foundation,
And bury all, which yet distinctly ranges,
In heaps and piles of ruin.

Sic. This deserves death.

519
ACT III.
CORIOLANUS.
SCENE I.

Brut. Or let us stand to our authority,
Or let us lose it. We do here pronounce,
Upon the part o' the people, in whose power
We were elected theirs, Marcus is worthy
Of present death.

Sic. Therefore lay hold of him;
Bear him to the rock Tarpeian, and from thence
Into destruction cast him.

Brut. Aidites, seize him!

Citizens. Yield, Marcus, yield!

Men. Hear me one word.

Beneath you, tribunes, hear me but a word.

Ed. Peace, peace!

Men. [To Tribunes] Be that you seem, truly your country's friend,
And temperately proceed to what you would
Thus violently redress.

Brut. Sir, those cold ways,
That seem like prudent helps, are very poisonous
Where the disease is violent. Lay hands upon him,
And bear him to the rock.

Cor. No, I'll die here.

[Drawing his sword.]

There's some among you have beheld me fighting:
Come, try upon yourselves what you have seen me.

Men. Down with that sword! Tribunes, with-

Brut. Lay hands upon him. [draws awhile.

Com. Help Marcels, help,
You that be noble; help him, young and old!

Citizens. Down with him, down with him!
[In this outcry, the Tribunes, the Aidites, and the People, are beat in.

Men. Go, get you to your house; be gone, away!
All will be taught else.

Sec. Sen. Get you gone.

Sec. Sen. Stand fast;
We have as many friends as enemies.

Men. Shall it be put to that?
First Sen. The gods forbid!
I prithee, noble friend, home to thy house;
Leave us to cure this cause.

Men. For 'tis a sore upon us,
You cannot tent yourself: be gone, beseech you.

Com. Come, sir, along with us.

Cor. I would they were barbarians — as they are,
Though in Rome litter'd — not Romans — as they are not,
Though calved i' the porch o' the Capitol —
Men. Be gone;
Put not your worthy rage into your tongue;
One time will ove another.

Cor. I could beat forty of them.

Com. I could myself
Take up a brace o' the best of them; yea, the two
But now 'tis odds beyond arithmetic: [tribunes;
And mankind is call'd foedery, when it stands
Against a falling fabric. Will you hence,
Before the tag return? whose rage doth rend
Like interruptted waters and o'erbear
What they are used to bear.

Men. Pray you, be gone;
I'll try whether my old wit be in request
With those that have but little: this must be patch'd
With cloth of any colour.

Com. [Exit Coriolanus, Comites, and others.

A Patrician. This man has mar'd his fortune.

Men. His nature is too noble for the world:
He would not flatter Neptune for his trident,
Or Jove for 's power to thunder. His heart's his month:
What his breast forges, that his tongue must vent;
And, being angry, does forget that ever
He heard the name of death. [A noise within.
Here's goodly work!

Sec. Pat. I would they were a-bed!

Men. I would they were in Tiber! What the
Could he not speak 'em fair?
[vengeance!
Re-enter Brutus and Sicinius, with the rabble.

Sic. Where is this viper
That would depopulate the city and
Be every man himself?
Men. You worthy tribunes.—
Sic. He shall be thrown down the Tarpeian rock
With rigorous hands: he hath resisted law,
And therefore law shall scorn him further trial
Than the severity of the public power
Which he so sets at nought.

First Cæ. He shall well know
The noble tribunes are the people's mouths,
And we their hands.

Citizens. He shall, sure on't.

Men. Sir, sir,—
Sic. Peace!
Men. Do not cry havoc, where you should but
With modest warrant.
[hunt

Sic. Sir, how comes 't that you
Have hope to make this rescue?

Men. As I do know the consul's worthiness,
So can I name his faults,—
Sic. Consul! what consul?

Men. The consul Corioliunus.
Sic. He consul?

Citizens. No, no, no, no, no.

Men. If, by the tribunes' leave, and yours, good people,
I may be heard, I would crave a word or two;
The which shall turn you to no further harm
Than so much loss of time.

Sic. For we are peremptory to dispatch
This vipers' traitor: to eject him hence
Were but one danger, and to keep him here
Our certain death: therefore it is decreed
He dies to-night.

Men. Now the good gods forbid
That our renowned Rome, whose gratitude
Towards her deserved children is enroll'd
In Jove's own book, like an unnatural dam
Should now eat up her own!
Sic. He's a disease that must be cut away.
Men. O, he's a limb that has but a disease;
Mortal, to cut it off: to cure it, easy.
What has he done to Rome that's worthy death?
Killing our enemies, the blood he hath lost —
Which, I dare vouch, is more than he hath.
By many an ounce — he drop'd it for his country;
And what is left, to lose it by his country,
Were to us all, that do 't and suffer it,
A brand to the end o' the world.

Sic. This is clean kam.
[Exit.

Men. Merely awry: when he did love his country,
It honour'd him.

Men. The service of the foot
Being once gangrened, is not then respected
For what before it was.
We'll hear no more.
Pursue him to his house, and pluck him thence;
Lest his infection, being of catching nature,
Spread further.

One word more, one word.

This tiger-footed rage, when it shall find
The harm of unseamen'd swiftness, will too late
Tie leaden pounds to 's heels. Proceed by process;
Lest parties, as he is beloved, break out,
And sack great Rome with Romans.

Sic. If it were so,—
Sic. What do ye talk?
Have we not had a taste of his obedience?
Men. Consider this: he has been bred i' the wars
Since he could draw a sword, and is ill school'd
In bolted language; meat and bran together
He throws without distinction. Give me leave,
I'll go to him, and undertake to bring him
Where he shall answer, by a lawful form,
In peace, to his utmost peril.

First Sen. Noble tribunes,
It is the humane way: the other course
Will prove too bloody, and the end of it
Unknown to the beginning.

Sen. Noble Menenius,
Be you then as the people's officer.
Masters, lay down your weapons.

Brut. Go not home.
Sic. Meet on the market-place. We'll attend
you there.
When, if you bring not Marcus, we'll proceed
In our first way.

Men. I'll bring him to you.
[To the Senators] Let me desire your company: he must come,
Or what is worst will follow.

First Sen. Pray you, let's to him.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A room in Coriolanus's house.

Enter Coriolanus with Patricians.

Cor. Let them pull all about mine ears, present
Death on the wheel or at wild horses' heels,
[The Or pile ten hills on the Tarpeian rock,
That the precipitation might down stretch
Below the beam of sight, yet will I still
Be thus to them.

A Patrician. You do the nobler.

Cor. I muse my mother
Does not approve me further, who was wont
To call them woolen vassals, things created
To buy and sell with greats, to show bare heads
In congregations, to yawn, be still and wonder,
When one but of my ordinance stood up
To speak of peace or war.

Enter Volumnia.

I talk of you:
Why did you wish me milder? would you have me
False to my nature? Rather say I play
The man I am.

O, sir, sir, sir,
I would have had you put your power well on,
Before you had worn it out.

Cor. Let go.

Vol. You might have been enough the man you
With striving less to be so: Jessor had been [Fire,
The thwartings of your dispositions, if
You had not show'd them how ye were disposed
Ere they lack'd power to cross you.

Cor. Let them hang.

A Patrician. Ay, and burn too.

Enter Menenius and Senators.

Men. Come, come, you have been too rough,
something too rough:
You must return and mend it.

First Sen. There's no remedy;
Unless, by not so doing, our good city
Cleave in the midst, and perish.

Vol. Pray, be counsel'd:
I have a heart as little apt as yours,
But yet a brain that leads my use of anger
To better vantage.

Men. Well said, noble woman!
Before he should thus stoop to the herd, but that
The violent fit o' the time craves it as physic
For the whole state, I would put mine armour on,
Which I can scarcely bear.

Cor. What must I do?

Men. Return to the tribunes.

Cor. Well, what then? what then?

Men. Repent what you have spoke.

Cor. For them! I cannot do it to the gods;
Must I then do 't to them?

Vol. You are too absolute;
Though therein you can never be too noble,
But when extremities speak. I have heard you say,
Honour and policy, like unsever'd friends,
I' the war do grow together: grant that, and tell me,
In peace what each of them by the other lose,
That they combine not there.

Cor. Tush, tush!

Men. A good demand.

Vol. If it be honour in your wars to seem
The same you are not, which, for your best ends,
You adopt yourself, hol's that it is worse or
That it shall hold companionship in peace
With honour, as in war, since that to both
It stands in like request?

Cor. Why force you this?

Vol. Because that now it lies you on to speak
To the people: not by your own instruction,
Nor by the matter which your heart prompts you,
But with such words that are but rooted in
Your tongue, though but bastards and syllables
Of no allowance to your bosom's truth.
Now, this no more dishonours you at all
Than to take in a town with gentle words.

Which else would put you to your fortune and
The hazard of much blood.
I would dissemble with my nature where
My fortunes and my friends at stake required
I should do so in honour: I am in this,
Your wife, your son, these senators, the nobles;
And you will rather show our general louts
How you can frown than spend a fawn upon 'em,
For the inheritance of their loves and safeguard
Of what that want might ruin.

Men. Noble lady!
Come, go with us: speak fair: you may save so,
Not what is dangerous present, but the loss
Of what is past.

Vol. I prithee now, my son,
Go to them, with this bonnet in thy hand;
And thus far having stretch'd it—here be with them.

Thy knee bussing the stones—for in such business
Action is eloquence, and the eyes of the ignorant
More learned than the ears—waving thy head,
Which often, thus, correcting thy stout heart,
Now humble as the ripest mulberry.

That will not hold the handling: or say to them,
That thou art their soldier, and being bred in broils
Hast not the soft way which, the time confess,
Were fit for thee to use as they to claim,
In asking their good loves, but thou wilt frame
Thyself, forsooth, hereafter theirs, so far
As thou hast power and person.

Men. This but done,
Even as she speaks, why, their hearts were yours;
For they have pardons, being ask'd, as free
As words to little purpose.

Vol. Prithee now,
Go, and be ruled: although I know thou hadst rather Follow thine enemy in a fiery gulf
Than fill a bow in a bowry. Here is Cominius.

Enter Cominius.

Com. I have been 't the market-place; and, sir,
You make strong party, or defend yourself: 'tis fit
By raillery or by absence: all's in anger.

Men. Only fair speech.

Com. I think 't will serve, if he
Can thereto frame his spirit.

Vol. He must, and will.
Prithee now, say you will, and go about it.
ACT III.
CORIOLANUS.
SCENE III.

Cor. Must I go show them my unbarbed sconce?
Must I with base tongue give my noble heart
A lie that it must bear?
Well, I will do 't:
Yet, were there but this single plot to lose,
This mould of Marcus, they to dust should grind it
And throw 'gainst the wind.
To the market-place!
You have put me now to such a part which never
I shall discharge to the life.
Come, come, we'll prompt you.
Vol. I prithee now, sweet son, as thou hast said
My praises made thee first a soldier, so,
To have my praise for this, perform a part
Thou hast not done before.
Cor. Well, I must do 't:
Away, my disposition, and possess me
Some harlot's spirit! my throat of war be turn'd,
Which quired with my drum, into a pipe
Small as an eunuch, or the virgin voice
That babies hills asleep! the smiles of knives
Tent in my cheeks, and schoolboy's tears take up
The glasses of my sight! a beggar's tongue
Make motion through my lips, and my arm's knes,
Who bow'd but in my stirrup, bend like his
That hath received an alms! I will not do 't,
Lest I surcease to honour mine own truth
And by my body's action teach my mind
A most inherent baseness.

Vol. At thy choice, then:
To beg of thee, it is my more dishonour
Than thou of them,
Come all to ruin; let
Thy mother rather feel thy pride than fear
Thy dangerous stoutness, for I mock at death
With as big heart as thou, Do as thou list.
Thy valianciness was mine, thou suck'd it from me,
But owe thy pride thyself.

Cor. Pray, be content:
Mother, I am going to the market-place;
Chide me no more. I'll mountebank their loves,
Clog their hearts from them, and come home beloved
Of all the trades in Rome. Look, I am going;
Command me to my wife. I'll return consul;
Or never trust to what my tongue can do
I' the way of flattering further.

Vol. Do your will. [Exit.

Cor. Away! the tribunes do attend you: arm
To answer mildly: for they are prepared
Yourself With accusations, as I hear, more strong
Than are upon you yet.
Cor. The word is 'mildly.' Pray you, let us go:
Let them accuse me by invention, I
Will answer in mine honour.

Men. Ay, but mildly.

Cor. Well, mildly be it then. Mildly!
[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same. The Forum.

Enter Sicinius and Brutus.

Bru. In this point charge him home, that he affects Tyrannical power: if he evade us there,
Enforce him with his envy to the people,
And that the spoil got on the Antietes
Was ne'er distributed.

Enter an Edile.

What will he come?
[Exit.

Ed. He's coming.

How accompanied?

Ed. With old Menenius, and those senators
That always favour'd him.

How have you a catalogue
Of all the voices that we have procured
Set down by the poll?

Cor. I have, 'tis ready.

Sic. Have you collected them by tribes?

Cor. I have.

Sic. Assemble presently the people hither;

And when they hear me say 'Tis shall be so
I' the right and strength o' the commons,' be it either.

For death, for fine, or punishment, then let them,
If I say fine, cry 'Fines;' if death, cry 'Death.'
Insisting on the old prerogative
And power i' the truth o' the cause.

Bru. And when such time they have begun to cry,
Let them come cease, but with a din confused
Enforce the present execution
Of what we chance to sentence.
Vol. Very well.

Sic. Make them be strong and ready for this hint,
When we shall hap to give 't them.

Vol. Go about it. [Exit—Edile.
Put him to choler straight: he hath been used
Ever to conquer, and to have his worth
Of contradiction: being once chafed, he cannot Be reined again to temperance; then he speaks
What's in his heart; and that is there which looks
With us to break his neck.

Sic. Well, here he comes.

Enter Coriolanus, Menenius, and Cominius, with Senators and Patricians.

Men. Calmly, I do beseech you.

Cor. Ay, as an ostler, that for the poorest piece
Will bear the knife by the volume. The honour'd gods
Keep Rome in safety, and the chairs of justice
Supplied with worthy men! plant love among's!
Thro' our large temples with the shows of peace,
And not our streets with war!
[First Sen. Amen, amen.

Men. A noble wish.

Re-enter Edile, with Citizens.

Sic. Draw near, ye people. [I say!
Vol. List to your tribunes. Audience! peace,
[First. First, hear me speak.

Vol. Both Tri. Well, say, Peace, ho!

Cor. Shall I be charged no further than this Must all determine here?
Sic. I do demand,
If you submit to you the people's voices,
Allow their officers and are content
To suffer lawful censure for such faults
As shall be proved upon you?

Cor. I am content.

Men. Lo, citizens, he says he is content:
The warlike service he has done, consider; think
Upon the wounds his body bears, which show
Like graves i' the holy churchyard.
Cor. Scratches with briers,
Scars to move laughter only.
[Men. Consider further,
That when he speaks not like a citizen,
You find him like a soldier: do not take
His rougher accents for malicious sounds,
But, as I say, such as become a soldier,
Rather than envy you.

Men. Well, well, no more.

Cor. What is the matter?

That being pass'd for counsel with full voice,
I am so dishonour'd that the very hour
You take it off again?

Sic. Answer to us.

Cor. Say, then: 'tis true, I ought so.
Take Sic. We charge you, that you have contrived to
From Rome all season'd office and to wind
Yourself into a power tyrannical;
For which you are a traitor to the people.

Vol. How! traitor!

Men. Nay, temperately; your promise.

Cor. The fires? the lowest hell fold-in the people!
Call me their traitor! Thon injurious tribune!
ACT IV.

CORIOLANUS. SCENE I.

Within thine eyes sat two thousand deaths, In thy hands clutched as many millions, in Thy living tongue both numbers, I would say 'Thou liest' unto thee with a voice as free As I do pray the gods.

Sic. Mark you this, people?

Citizens. To the rock, to the rock with him!

Sic. Peace! We need not put new matter to his charge:
What you have seen him do and heard him speak, Beating your officers, cursing yourselves,
Opposing laws with strokes and here defying
Those whose great power must try him; even this,
So criminal and in such capital kind,
Deserves the extremest death.

Bru. But since he hath Served well for Rome.—

Cor. What do you prate of service?

Bru. I talk of that, that know it.

Cor. You?

Men. Is this the promise that you made your

Com. Know, I pray you,— [mother?

Cor. I'll know no further:
Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death,
Vagabond exile, flaying, pent to linger
But with a grain a day, I would not buy
Their mercy at the price of one fair word;
Nor check my courage for what they can give,
To have 't with saying 'Good morrow.'

Sic. For that he has,
As much as in him lies, from time to time
Envied against the people, seeking means
To pluck away their power, as now at last
Given hostile strokes, and that not in the presence
Of dreaded justice, but on the ministers
That do distribute it: in the name o' the people
And in the power of us the tribunes, we,
Even from this instant, banish him our city,
In pernicious precipitation.
From off the rock Tarpeian never more
To enter our Rome gates: if the people's name,
I say it shall be so.

Citizens. It shall be so, it shall be so; let him away;
He's banish'd, and it shall be so.

Cor. Hear me, my masters, and my common friends,—

Sic. He's sentenced; no more hearing.

Com. Let me speak:
I have been consul, and can show for Rome
Her enemies' marks upon me. I do love
My country's good with a respect more tender,
More holy and profound, than mine own life.
My dear wife's estimate, her womb's increase,
And treasure of my lorns; then if I would Speak that,—

Sic. We know your drift: speak what?

Bru. There's no more to be said, but he is banished as enemy to the people and his country: [ish'd.

It shall be so.

Citizens. It shall be so, it shall be so. [hate
Cor. You common cry of curs! whose breath I
As reek o' the rotten fens, whose loves I prize
As the dead carcasses of unburied men
That do corrupt my air. I banish you;
And here remain with your uncertainty!
Let every feeble rumour shake your hearts!
Your enemies, with nodding of their phynes,
Fan you into despair! Have the power still
To banish your defenders; till at length
Your ignorance, which finds not till it feels,
Making not reservation of yourselves,
Still your own foes, deliver you as most
Abated captives to some nation
That won you without blows! Despising,
For you, the city, thus I turn my back:
There is a world elsewhere:

[Exeunt Coriolanus, Cominius, Menenius, Senators, and Patricians.

Ed. The people's enemy is gone, is gone!

Citizens. Our enemy is banish'd! he is gone!

Hoo! hoo! [Shouting, and throwing up their caps.

Sic. Go, see him out at gates, and follow him,
As he hath follow'd you, with all despair:
Give him deserved vexation. Let a guard
Attend us through the city. [come.

Citizens. Come, come; let's see him out at gates;
The gods preserve our noble tribunes! Come. [Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I. — Rome. Before a gate of the city.

Enter Coriolanus, Volumnia, Virgilia, Menenius, Cominius, with the young Nobility of Rome.

Cor. Come, leave your tears: a brief farewell: the beast.

With many heads butts me away. Nay, mother, We've lost your ancient courage? you were used To say extremity was the trier of spirits: That common chances common men could bear;
That when the sea was calm all boats alike Show'd mastership in floating; fortune's blows, When most struck home, being gentle wounded, etc.

A noble cunning; you were used to load me With precepts that would make invincible The heart that comm'd them.

Vr. O heavens! O heavens!

Cor. Nay, I prithee, woman.—
Vol. Now the red pestilence strike all trades in And occupations perish! [Rome, etc.

Cor. What, what, what! I shall be loved when I am lack'd. Nay, mother, Resume that spirit, when you were wont to say, If you had been the wife of Hercules,
Six of his labours you 'd have done, and saved Your husband so much sweet. Cominius, Droop not; adieu. Farewell, my wife, my mother;

I'll do well yet. Thou old and true Menenius, Thy tears are saltier than a younger man's, And venomous to thine eyes. My sometime general, I have seen thee stern, and thou hast oft beheld Heart-hardening spectacles; tell these sad women Tis fond to wait inevitable strokes.
As 'Tis to laugh at 'em. My mother, you not well My hazards still have been your solace: and Believe 't not lightly — though I go alone, Like to a lonely dragon, that his ten Makes fear'd and talk'd of more than seen — your Will or exceed the common or be caught [son With cautelous baits and practice.

Vol. My first son, Whither wilt thou go? Take good Cominius With thee awhile: determine on some course, More than a wild exposition to each chance That starts i' the way before thee.

Cor. O the gods!

Com. I'll follow thee a month, devise with thee Where thou shalt rest, that thou mayst bear of us And we of thee: so if the time thrust forth A cause for thy reapel, we shall not send O'er the vast world to seek a single man, And lose advantage, which doth ever cool I' the absence of the needer.

Cor. Fare ye well; Thou hast years upon thee; and thou art too full 553
SCENE II. — The same. A street near the gate.

Enter Sicinius, Brutus, and an Adile.

Sic. Bid them all home; he's gone, and we'll no further.

The nobility are vex'd, whom we have seen side by side in his behalf.

Brut. Now we have shown our power,

Let us seem humbler after it is done

Than when it was a-doing.

Sic. Bid them home:

Say their great enemy is gone, and they stand in their ancient strength.

Sic. Why?

Brut. They have ta'en note of us: keep on your guard.

Enter Volumnia, Virginia, and Menenius.

Vol. O, ye're well met: the hoarded plague o' the Requite your love!

Men. Peace, peace; be not so loud.

Vol. If that I could for weeping, you should hear,—

Nay, and you shall hear some. [To Brutus] Will you be gone?

Vir. [To Sicinius] You shall stay too: I would I had the power

To say so to my husband.

Sic. Are you mankind?

Vol. Ay, fool; is that a shame? Note but this fool,

Was not a man my father? Hadst thou foxship To banish him that struck more blows for Rome Than thou hast spoken words?

Sic. O blessed heavens!

Vol. More noble blows than ever thou wise words;

And for Rome's good. I'll tell thee what: yet go:

Nay, but thou shalt stay too: I would my son Were in Arabia, and thy tribe before him,

His good sword in his hand.

Sic. What then?

Vir. He'll make an end of thy posterity.

Vol. Bastards and all.

Good man, the wounds that he does bear for Rome!

Men. Come, come, peace.

Sic. I would he had continued to his country

As he began, and not unkind himself

The noble knot he made.

Brut. I would he had.

Vol. 'T would he had! 'T was you incensed the rabble:

Cats, that can judge as fitly of his worth

As I can of those mysteries which heaven

Will not have earth to know.

Brut. Pray, let us go.

Vol. Now, pray, sir, get you gone: [this]:—

You have done a brave deed. Ere you go, hear

As far as doth the Capitol exceed

The meanest house in Rome, so far my son —

This lady's husband here, this, do you see—

Whom you have banish'd, does exceed you all.

Brut. Well, well, we'll leave you.

Sic. Why stay we to be baited

With one that wants her wits?

Vol. Take my prayers with you.

[Exeunt Tribunes.

I would the gods had nothing else to do:

But to confirm my curses! Could I meet 'em

But once a-day, it would unclog my heart

Of what lies heavy to 't.

Men. You have told them home;

And, by my troth, you have cause. You'll sup with me?

Vol. Anger's my meat: I sup upon myself,

And so shall starve with feeding. Come, let's go:

Leave this faint pulsing and lament as I do.

In anger, Juno-like. Come, come, come.

Men.Fil, lie, lie!

SCENE III. — A highway between Rome and Antium.

Enter a Roman and a Voice, meeting.

Rom. I know you well, sir, and you know me:

Your name, I think, is Adrius.

Vols. It is so, sir: truly, I have forgot you.

Rom. I am a Roman: and my services are, as you are, against 'em; know you me yet?

Rom. The same, sir.

Vols. You had more beard when I last saw you; but your favour is well approved by your tongue. What's the news in Rome? I have a note from the Volscian state, to find you out there: you have well saved me a day's journey.

Rom. There hath been in Rome strange insurrections: the people against the senators, patriots, and nobles.

Vols. Hath been! is it ended, then? Our state thinks not so: they are in a most warlike preparation, and hope to come upon them in the heat of their division.

Rom. The main blaze of it is past, but a small thing would make it flame again: for the nobles receive so to heart the banishment of that worthy Coriolanus, that they are in a ripe aptness to take all power from the people and to pluck from them their tribunes for ever. This lies gnawing: 'I can tell you, and is almost mature for the violent breaking out.

Vols. Coriolanus banished!

Rom. Banished, sir.

[Nicanor.

Vols. You will be welcome with this intelligence.

Rom. The day serves well for them now. I have heard it said, the fittest time to corrupt a man's wife is when she's fallen out with her husband. Your noble Tullus Aufidius will appear well in these wars, his great opposer, Coriolanus, being now in no request of his country.

Vols. He cannot choose. I am most fortunate, thus accidentally to encounter you: you have ended my business, and I will merrily accompany you home.

Rom. I shall, between this and supper, tell you most strange things from Rome; all tending to the good of their adversaries. Have you an army ready, say you?

Vols. A most royal one; the centurions and their charges, distinctly billeted, already in the entertainment, and to be on foot at an hour's warning.

Rom. I am joyful to hear of their readiness, and am the man, I think, that shall set them in present action. So, sir, heartily well met, and most glad of your company.

Vols. You take my part from me, sir; I have the most cause to be glad of yours.

Rom. Well, let us go together.
ACT IV.
CORIOLANUS.

SCENE IV.—Antium. Before Aufidius’s house.

Enter Coriolanus in mean apparel, disguised and mangled.

Cor. A goodly city is this Antium. City, "tis I that made thy widows: many an heir Of these fair edifices fore my wars

Have I heard groan and drop: then know me not. Lest that thy wives with spits and boys with stones In pumy battle slay me.

Enter a Citizen.

Save you, sir.

Cit. And you.

Cor. Direct me, if it be your will, Where great Aufidius lies: is he in Antium?

Cit. He is, and feasts the nobles of the state. At his house this night.

Cor. Which is his house, beseech you?

Cit. This, here before you.

Cor. Thank you, sir: farewell.

[Exit Citizen.]

O world, thy slippery turns! Friends now hast sworn, Whose double bosoms seem to wear one heart, Whose house, whose friend, whose care, whose ease, Are still together, who twin, as ‘t were, in love Unseparable, shall within this hour, On a dissension of a doit, break out To bitter enmity; so, fallest foes, Whose passions and whose plots have broke their To take the one the other, by some chance, Sleep. Some trick not worth an egg, shall grow dear And interjoin their issues. So with me:—friends My birth-place hate I, and my love’s upon This enemy town. I’ll enter: if he slay me, He does fair justice; if he give me way, I’ll do his country service.

[Exit.

SCENE V.—The same. A hall in Aufidius’s house.

Music within. Enter a Servingman.

First Serv. Wine, wine, wine! What service is here! I think our fellows are asleep.

[Exit.

Enter a second Servingman.

Cor. A goodly house: the feast smells well; Appear not like a guest. [But I

Re-enter the first Servingman.

First Serv. What would you have, friend? whence are you? Here’s no place for you: pray, go to the door.

Cor. Away! [Exit.]

Sec. Serv. Away! get you away.

Cor. Now thou’rt troublesome. [Exit.]

Sec. Serv. Are you so brave? I’ll have you talked with anon.

Re-enter second Servingman.

Sec. Serv. Whence are you, sir? Has the porter his eyes in his head, that he gives entrance to such companions?—pray, get you out.

Cor. Away! [Exit.

Sec. Serv. Away! get you away.

Cor. Now thou’rt troublesome. [Exit.

Sec. Serv. Are you so brave? I’ll have you talked with anon.

Enter a third Servingman. The first meets him.

Third Serv. What fellow’s this?” First Serv. A strange one as ever I looked on: I cannot get him out o’ the house; prithee, call my master to him. [Retires.

Third Serv. What have you to do here, fellow? Pray you, avoid the house. [Exit.

Cor. Let me but stand: I will not hurt your Third Serv. What are you?
Longer to live most weary, and present
My throat to thee and to thy ancient malice;
Which not to cut would show thee but a fool,
Since I have ever follow'd thee with hate,
Drawn tuns of blood out of thy country's breast,
And cannot live but to thy shame, unless
It be to do thee service.

Aed.

O Marcus, Marcus! Each word thou spok hast spok wedded from my
A root of ancient envy. If Jupiter [heart
Should from yond cloud speak divine things,
And say 'T is true,' I'd not believe them more
Than thee, all noble Marcius. Let me twine
Mine arms about that body, where against
My grained ash an hundred times hath broke,
And scarr'd the moon with splinters: here I clip
The anvil of my sword, and do contest
As hotly and as nobly with thy love
As ever in ambitious strength I did
Contend against thy valour. Know thou first,
I loved the maid I married; never man
Sigh'd truer breath; but that I see thee here,
Thou noble thing! more dances my rapt heart
Than when I first my wedded mistress saw
Bestride my threshold. Why, thou Mars! I tell thee,
We lay an hundred thousand on that foot;
And I had purpose
Once more to hew thy target from thy brow,
Or lose mine arm for't: thou hast beat me out
Twelve several times, and I have nightly since
Dreamt of encounters 'twixt thyself and me;
We have been down together in my sleep,
Unbuckling helms, listing each other's throat,
And waked half dead with nothing. Worthy Mar-
Hud we no quarreI else to Rome, but that [eius,
Thou art thence banish'd, we would muster all
From twelve to seventy, and pouring war
Into the bowls of ungrateful Rome,
Like a bold flood o'er-bear. O, come, go in,
And take our friendly senators by the hands;
Who now are here, taking their leaves of me,
Who am prepareI against your territories,
Though not for Rome itself.

Cor.

Therefore, most absolute sir, if thou wilt
The leading of thine own revenge, take [have
The one half of my commission; and set down—
As best thou art experienced, since thou know'st
Thy country's strength and weakness,—thine own ways;
Whether to knock against the gates of Rome,
Or rudely visit them in parts remote,
To fright them, ere destroy. But come in:
Let me commend thee first to those that shall Say yea to thy desires. A thousand welcomes!
And more a friend than e'er an enemy;
Yet, Marcus, that was much. Your hand: most welcome!
[Exeat Coriolanus and Aufidias. The two Servingenmen come forward.]

First Serv. Here's a strange alteration! [Scene V.
Sec. Serv. By my hand, I had thought to have struck him with a cudgel; and yet my mind gave me his clothes made a false report of him.

First Serv. What an arm he has! he turned me about with his finger and his thumb, as one would set up a top.

Sec. Serv. Nay, I knew by his face that there was something in him; he had, sir, a kind of face, methought, well call'd how to bear it.

First Serv. He had so; looking as it were — would I be hanged, but I thought there was more in him than I could think.

Sec. Serv. So did I, I'll be sworn he is simply the best man I the world.

First Serv. I think he is: but a greater soldier than he yet won.

Sec. Serv. Who, my master?
SCENE VI. — Rome. A public place.

Enter Sicinius and Brutus.

Sic. We hear not of him, neither need we fear him; his remedies are tame 'tis the present peace, and quietness of the people, which before was of a wild hurry. Here do we make his friends, both there and within the town, and so we make ourselves.

Brutus to Sicinius. [Enter Mecenas.]

Sic. 'Tis he, 'tis he: O, he is grown most kind of Both Tri. Hall, sir! [late. Men. Hail to you both!

Sic. Your Coriolanus is not much miss'd, but with his friends; the commonwealth do stand, and so would, were he more angry at it.

Men. All's well; and might have been much better if he could have temporized. [ter, if you come near, I'll be sworn he is.] Sic. Nay, I hear nothing: his mother and his father nothing from him. [wife.

Enter three or four Citizens.

Citizens. The gods preserve you both!

Sic. God-den, our neighbours. Men. God-den to you all, god-den to you all.

First Cit. Ourselves, our wives and children, are bound to pray for you both. [four knees. Sic. Live, and thrive! Men. Farewell, kind neighbours: we wish'd Co. Had you love as we did! [diolanus

Sic. This is a happier and more comely time. Than when these fellows ran about the streets, Crying confusion. Men. Caesar Marcius was A worthy officer 'tis the war; but insolent, Overcome with pride, ambitions just all thinking, Self-loving, — And affecting one sole throne, Without assistance. Men. I think not so.

Sic. We should be by this, to all our lamentation, If he had gone forth himself, found it so. Men. The gods have well prevented it, and Rome Sits safe and still without him. [Exit.

Enter on Edile.

Ed. Worthy tribunes, there is a slave, whom we have put in prison, Reports, the Volscians with two several powers Are enter'd in the Roman territories, and with the deepest malice of the war Destroy what lies before 'em. Men. 'Tis Aufidius, who, hearing of our Marcianus' banishment, Thrusts forth his horns again into the world: Which were in shell'd when Marcianus stood for Rome, and durst not once peep out.

Sic. Come, what talk you Of Marcian? Men. Go see this rumourer whipped. It The Volscians dare break with us, [cannot be Men. Cannot be! We have record that very well it can, And three examples of the like have been Within my age. But reason with the fellow, Before we punish him. Here is the news heard, 'Lest you shall chance to whip your information And beat the messenger who bids beware Of what is to be dreaded. Sic. Tell not me: I know this cannot be. Men. Not possible.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The noblest men of great earnestness are going All to the senate-house: some news is come That turns their countenances.

Sic. Go whip him 'fore the people's eyes: — his raising; Nothing but his report.

Men. The slave's report is seconded; and more, More fearful, is deliver'd.

Sic. What more fearful? Men. It is spoke freely out of many months — How probable I do not know — that Marcus, Join it with Aufidius, leads a power against Rome, And vows revenge as spacious as between The young'st and oldest thing.

Sic. This is most likely! Men. Raised only, that the weaker sort may wish Good Marcus home again.

Sic. This is unlikely: He and Aufidius can no more atone Than violentest contrariety.

Enter a second Messenger.

Sec. Mess. You are sent for to the senate.

A fearful army, led by Caius Marcus, Associated with Aufidius, rages Upon our territories; and have already O'erborne their way, consumed with fire, and took What lay before them.

Enter Cominius.

Com. O, you have made good work! Men. What news? what news? Com. You have holp to ravish your own daughter To melt the city leads upon your pates, — toers and To see your wives dishonour'd to your noses, —

Men. Pray now, your news? You have made fair work. I fear me. — Pray, your news? — If Marcus should be joined with Volscians, — Com. He is their god: he leads them like a thing Made by some other deity than nature. That shapes man better; and they follow him, Against us brats, with no less confidence Than boys pursuing summer butterflies, Or butchers killing flies.

Men. You have made good work, You and your apron-men; you that stood so much Upon the voice of occupation and The breath of garlic-eaters!

Com. He will shake Your Rome about your ears.

Men. As Hercules Did shake down mellow fruit. You have made fair

Brutus. But is this true, sir? [work Com. Ay; and you'll look pale Before you find it other. All the regions Do smilingly revolt; and who can resist Are mock'd for valiant ignorance, [him? And perish constant fools. Who is 't can blame Your enemies and his find something in him.

Men. We are all undone, unless The noble man has mercy.

Com. Who shall ask it? The tribunes cannot do for shame; the people Deserve such pity of him as the wolf
ACT V.

Enter Menenius, Cominius, Sicinius, Brutus, and others.

Men. No. I'll not go; you hear what he hath said. Which was sometime his general; who loved him in a most dear particular. He call'd me father:

[Exeunt.

SCENE VII. — A camp, at a small distance from Rome.

Enter Aufidius and his Lieutenant.

Afp. Do they still fly to the Roman? Lice. I do not know what witchcraft's in him, but Your soldiers, use him as the grace 'tore meat, The talk at table, and their hands at end; And you are dark'n'd in this action, sir; Even by your own. Afp. I cannot help it now, Unless, by using means, I tune the foot Of our design. He bears himself more proudlier, Even to the person, than I thought he would When first I did embrace him: yet his nature In that's no changeling; and I must excuse What cannot be amended. Lice. Yet I wish, sir,— I mean for your particular,— you had not Join'd in commission with him; but either Had borne the action of yourself, or else To him had left it solely. Afp. I understand thee well; and be thou sure, When he shall come to his account, he knows not What I can urge against him. Although it seems, And so he thinks, and is no less apparent To the vulgar eye, that he bears all things fairly, And shows good husbandry for the Volscian state, Fights dragon-like, and does achieve as soon As draw his sword; yet he hath left undone That which shall break his neck or hazard mine, Whence'er we come to our account. [To Hipp. Rome? Lice. Sir, I beseech you, think he'll carry. Afp. All places yield to him ere he sits down; And the nobility of Rome are his: The senators and patricians love him too: The tribunes are no soldiers; and their people Cittill as rash in the repeal, as had been To expel him thence. I think he'll be to Rome As is the osprey to the fish, who takes it By sovereignty of nature. First he was A noble servant to them; but he could not Carry his honours even: whether 't was pride, Which out of daily fortune ever taints The happy man; whether defect of judgment, To fail in the disposing of those chances Which he was lord of; or whether nature, Not to be other than one thing, not moving From the casque to the cushion, but commanding Even with the same austerity and garb [peace As he controll'd the war; but one of these — As he hath spices of them all, not all. For I dare so far free him — made him fear'd, So hated, and so banish'd: but he has a merit, To choke it in the utterance. So our virtues Lie in the interpretation of the time; And power, unto itself most commendable, Hath not a tomb so evident as a chair To extol what it hath done.

One fire drives out one fire; one nail, one nail; Rights by rights falter, strengths by strengths do fail. Come, let's away. When, Cains, Rome is thine, Thou art poor'st of all; then shortly art thou mine.

[Exeunt.

ACT V.

Enter Menenius, Cominius, Sicinius, Brutus, and others.

Men. No. I'll not go; you hear what he hath said. Which was sometime his general; who loved him in a most dear particular. He call'd me father:

[Exeunt.

But what o' that? Go, you that banish'd him; A mile before his tent fall down, and kneel The way into his mercy; nay, if he coy'd To hear Cominius speak, I'll keep at home. Com. He would not seem to know me. Men. Do you hear? Com. Yet one time he did call me by my name:
ACT V.

CORIOLANUS.

SCENE II.

I urged our old acquaintance, and the drops
That we havebled together. Coriolanus
He would not answer to: forbade all names;
He was a kind of nothing, titleless,
Till he had forged himself a name o' the fire
Of burning Rome.
Men. Why, so: you have made good work!
A pair of tribunes that have racker'd for Rome,
To make coals cheap,—a noble memory!
Com. I minded him how royal 'tis to pardon
When it was less expected: he replied,
It was a bare petition of a state
To one whom they had punish'd.
Men. Very well: Could he say less?
Com. I offer'd to awaken his regard
For 's private friends; his answer to me was,
He could not stay to pick them in a pile
Of noisome musty chaff: he said 'tis folly,
For one poor grain or two, to leave unburnt,
And still to nose the offence.
Men. For one poor grain or two! I
I am one of those: his mother, wife, his child,
And this brave fellow too, were here the grains;
You are the musty chaff; and you are sweet
Above the moon: we must be burnt for you.
Sec. Nay, pray, be patient: if you refuse your aid
In this so never-need'd help, yet do not Uphold's with our distress. But, sure, if you
Would have your country please by your good tongue,
More than the instant army we can make,
Might stop our countryman.
Men. No, I'll not meddle.
Sec. Pray you, go to him.
Men. What should I do?
Sec. Only make trial what your love can do
For Rome, towards Marcus.
Men. Well, and say that Marcus
Return me, as Cominius is return'd,
Unheard; what then?
But as a discontented friend, grief-shot
With his unwik'dness? say 'tis so?
Sec. Yet your good will Must have that thanks from Rome, after the measure
As you intended well.
Men. I'll undertake 't:
I think he'll hear me. Yet, to bite his lip
And hang at good Cominius, made my heartbleed me.
He was not taken well; he had not dined:
The veins unfill'd, our blood is cold, and then
We sent upon the morning, are unapt
To give or to forgive; but when we have stuff'd
These pipes and these conveyances of our blood
With wine and feeding, we have suppler souls.
Then in our priest-like fasts: therefore I'll watch
Till he be dieted to my request,
[him
And then I'll set upon him.
Sec. You know the very road into his kindness,
And cannot lose your way.
Men. Good faith, I'll prove him,
Speed how it will. I shall ere long have knowledge
Of my success.
[Exit.

SCENE II.—Entrance of the Volscian camp before Rome. Two Sentinels on guard.
Enter to them, Menenius.
First Sen. Stay: whence are you?
Sec. Sen. Stand, and go jack.
Men. You guard like men: 'tis well: but, by your
I am an officer of state, and come leave, To speak with Coriolanus.
First Sen. From whence?
Men. From Rome.
First Sen. You may not pass, you must return:
our general
Will no more hear from thence.
Sec. Sen. You'll see your Rome embraced with fire before
You'll speak with Coriolanus.
Men. Good my friends,
If you have heard your general talk of Rome,
And of his friends there. it is lots to blanks,
My name hath touch'd your ears: it is Menenius.
First Sen. Be it so; go back: the virtue of your name
Is not here passable.
Men. I tell thee, fellow,
Thy general is my lover: I have been
The book of his good acts, whence men have read
His fame unparalleled, happily amplified;
For I have ever verified my friends,
Men. As his child is to his child, with all the size that verity
Would without lapsing suffer: nay, sometimes,
Like to a bowl upon a subtle ground,
I have tumbled past the throw; and in his praise
Have almost stamp'd the leasing; therefore, fellow,
I must have leave to pass.
First Sen. Faith, sir, if you had told as many lies
In his behalf as you have uttered words in your own, you should not pass here; no, though it were as virgins to lie as to live chastely. Therefore, go back.
Men. Prithee, fellow, remember my name is Menenius, always factionary on the party of your general.
Sec. Sen. Howsoever you have been his liar, as you say you have, I am one that, telling true under him, mist say, you cannot pass. Therefore, go back.
Men. Has he dined. canst thou tell? for I would not speak with him till after dinner.
First Sen. You are a Roman, are you?
Men. I am as they lie.
First Sen. Then you should hate Rome, as he does,
Can you, when you have pushed out your gates the very defender of them, and, in a violent popular ignorance, given your enemy your shield, think to front his revenges with the easy grans of old women, the virginal palms of your daughters, or with the pale intervention of such a decayed dart as you seem to be? Can you think to blow out the intended fire your city is ready to flame in, with such weak breath as this? No, you are deceived; therefore, back to Rome, and prepare for your execution: you are condemned,
our general has sworn you out of reprieve and pardon.
Men. Sirrah, if thy captain knew I were here, he would use me with estimation.
Sec. Sen. Come, my captain knows you not.
Men. I mean, thy general.
First Sen. My general cares not for you. Back,
I say; go; lest I let forth your half-pint of blood; back,—that's the utmost of your having: back.
Men. Nay, but, fellow, fellow.—

Enter Coriolanus and Aufidius.
Cor. What's the matter?
Men. Now, you companion, I'll say an errand for you: you shall know now that I am in estimation;
you shall perceive that a Jack gardant cannot office me from my son Coriolanus; guess, but by my entertainment with him, if thou standest not the CORIOLANUS.

I shall have forsaken to this hour
Rome, and thy petitionary countrymen. The good gods assuage thy wrath, and turn the dregs of it upon this varlet here,—this, who, like a block, hath denied me access to thee.
Cor. Away! Moth! How! away! Cor. Wife, mother, child, I know not. My affairs Are servanted to others: though I owe My revenge properly, my remission lies
In Volscian breasts. That we have been familiar, Ingrate forgetfulness shall poison, rather Than pity note how much. Therefore, be gone.
Mine ears against your suits are stronger than Your gates against my force. Yet, for I loved thee, Take this along; I write it for thy sake.

And would have sent it. Another word, Menenius, I will not hear thee speak. This man, And this, Was my beloved in Rome; yet thou beholdest! Auf. You keep a constant temper.

[Exeunt Coriolanus and Aufidius.
First Sen. Now, sir, is your name Menenius? Sec. Sen. 'Tis a spell, you see, of much power: you know the way he speaks. First Sen. Do you hear how we are shent for keeping your greatness back?
Men. I neither care for the world nor your general: for such things as you, I can scarce think there's any, ye're so slight. He that hath a will to die by himself fears it not from another; let your general do his worst. For you, be that you are; long, and your misery increase with your age! I say to you, as I was said to, Away! [Eccid. First Sen.} A noble fellow, I warrant him. Sec. Sen. The worthy fellow is our general: he's the rock, the oak not to be wind-shaken. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The tent of Coriolanus.

Enter Coriolanus, Aufidius, and others.
Cor. We will before the walls of Rome to-morrow Set down our host. My partner in this action, You must report to the Volscian lords, how plainly I have borne this business.
Auf. Only their ends
You have respected; stopped your ears against The general suit of Rome; never admitted A private whisper, no, not with such friends That thought them sure of you.
Cor. This last old man,
Whom with a crack'd heart I have sent to Rome, Loved me above the measure of a father; Nay, godded me, Indeed. Their latest refuge Was to send him: for whose old love I have, Though I should sourly to him, once more offer'd The first conditions, which they did refuse And cannot now accept; to grace him only That they did not more of their own will I have yielded to: fresh embassies and suits, Nor from the state nor private friends, hereafter Will I lend ear to. Ha! what shout is this? [Shout within.

Shall I be tempted to infringe my vow In the same time 'tis made? I will not.

Enter, in mourning habits, Virgilia, Volumnia, leading young Marcius, Valeria, and Attendants.
My wife comes foremost: then the honour'd maid Wherein this trunk was framed, and in her hand The grandchild to her blood. But, out, affection! All bond and privilege of nature, break! Let it be virtuous to be obstinate.

What is that curl'sy worth? or those doves' eyes, Which can make gods forsorn? I melt, and am not
Of stronger earth than others. My mother bows; As if Olympus to a molehill should In supplication nod: and my young boy Hath an aspect of intercession, which Great nature cries ' Deny not.' Let the Volscians Plough Rome, and harrow Italy: I'll never Be such a gosling to obey instinct, but stand, As if a man were author of himself And knew no other kin.

Vir. My lord and husband! Cor. These eyes are not the same I wore in Rome. Vir. The sorrow that delivers us thus changed Makes you think so.

Cor. Like a dull actor now, I have forgot my part, and I am out, Even to a full disgrace. Best of my flesh, Forgive my tyranny; but do not say For that I forgave your courtesies, O, a kiss Long as my exile, sweet as my revenge! Now, by the jealous queen of heaven, that kiss I carried from thee, dear; and my true lip Hath virgilia 'tis e'er since. You gods! I prate, And the most noble mother of the world Leave unsalted; sink, my love, the earth; [Knells. Of thy deep duty more impression show Than that of common sons.

Vol. O, stand up blest! Whilst, with no softer cushion than the flint, I kneel before thee; and improperly Show duty, as mistaken all this while Between the child and parent. [Knells. Cor. What is this? Your knees to me? to your corrected son? Then let the pebbles on the hungry beach Fillip the stars; then let the mutinous winds Strike the proud cedar, and the fiery sun; Murdering impossibility, to make What cannot be, slight work.

Vol. Thon art my warrior; I help to frame thee. Do you know this lady? Cor. The noble sister of Publicola,
The name of Rome, chaste as the icicle That's curdled by the frost from purest snow And hangs on Dian's temple: dear Valeria! Vol. This is a poor epitome of yours, Which by the interpretation of full time May show like all yourself.

Cor. The god of soldiers, With the consent of supreme Jove, inform Thy thoughts with nobleness; that thou mayst prove To shame unworthy, and stick i' the wars Like a great sea-mark, standing every flaw, And saving those that eye thee!
Vol. Your knee, sirrah.

Cor. That's my brave boy! Vol. Even he, your wife, this lady, and myself, Are suitors to you.
Cor. I beseech you, peace: Or, if you 'll ask, remember this before: The things I have servers of great may never Be held by your denials. Do not bid me Dismiss my soldiers, or capitulate Again with Rome's mechanics; tell me not Wherein I seem unnatural: desire not To allay my rages and revenges with Your colder reasons.
Vol.
O, no more, no more!
You have said you will not grant us any thing;
For we have nothing else to ask, but that
Which you deny already: yet we will ask;
That, if you fail in our request, may
Mutilate our happenance; therefore hear us.
Cor.
Avidius, and you Volscs, mark; for we'll
Hear nothing from Rome in private.
Your request?
Vol.
Should we besilent and not speak, our rament
And state of bodies would betray what life
We have led since thy exile. Think with thyself
How much more unfortunate than all living women
Are we come hither: since that thy sight, which Should [comforts,
Make our eyes flow with joy, hearts dance with Constrain us weep and shake with fear and sor-
Making the mother, wife and child to see [row;
The son, the husband and the father tearing
His country's bowels out. And to poor we Thine eminence's most capital: than bair'st us
Our prayers to the gods, which is a comfort
That all but we enjoy; for how can we,
Alas, how can we for our country pray,
When they have come together with thy victory,
Whereunto we are bound? slack, or we must lose
The country, our dear nurse, or else thy person,
Our comfort in the country. We must find
An evident calamity, though we had
Our wish, which side shall win: for either thou
Must, as a foreign recruit, be laid
With munacities thorough our streets, or else
Triumphantly tread on thy country's ruin,
And hear the palm for having bravely shed
Thy wife and children's blood. For myself, son,
I purpose not to wait on fortune till
These wars determine: if I cannot persuade thee
Rather to show a noble grace to both parts
Than seek the end of one, thou shalt no sooner
March to assay thy country than to tread
Trust to 't, thou shalt not—on thy mother's womb,
That brought thee to this world.
Vir.
Ay, and mine,
That bronghly you forth this boy, to keep your name
Living to time.
Young Mor.
A' shall not tread on me;
I'll run away till I am bigger, but then I'll fight.
Cor.
Not of a woman's tenderness to be,
Requires nor child nor woman's face to see.
I have sat too long. [Rising.
Vol.
Xay, go not from us thus.
If it were so that our request did tend
To save the Romans, thereby to destroy [us,
The Volscs whom you serve, you might condemn
As poisons of your honour: no; our suit
Is, that you recognize them: while the Volscs
May say 'This mercy we have show'd;' the Romans,
'This we received;' and each in either side
Give the all-hall to thee, and cry 'Be blest [son,
For making up this peace!' Thon know'st great
The end of war's uncertain, but this certain,
That, if thou conquer Rome, the conqueror
Which thou shalt hereby reap is such a name,
Whose repetition will be dog'd with curses:
Whose chronicle thus writ: 'The man was noble,
But with his last attempt he wiped it out;
Destroy'd his country, and his name remains
To the ensuing age abhorred.' Speak to me, son;
Thou hast affected the fine strains of honour,
To imitate the graces of the gods;
To tear with thunder the wide cheeks o' the air,
And yet to charge thy sulphur with a bolt
That should but rive an oak. Why dost not speak?
Think'st thou that he honorable for a noble man
Still to remember wrongs? Daunger, speak you:
He cares not for thy weeping. Speak thou, boy:
Perhaps thy childishness will move him more
Than our reasons. There's no man in the world
More bound to 's mother; yet here he lets me prate
Like one i' the stocks. Thou hast never in thy life
Show'd thy dear mother any courtesy,
When she, poor hen, fond of no second brood,
Has cluck'd thee up and safely home,
Loaden with honour. Say my request unjust,
And spur me back: but if it be not so,
Thou art not honest; and the gods will plague thee,
That thou restrain'st from me the duty which
To mother's part belongs. He turns away:
Down, ladies; let us shame him with our knees.
To his surname Corioli hangs more pride
Than pity to our prayers. Down: an end;
This is the last: so we will home to Rome,
And die among our neighbours. Nay, behold'st
This boy, that cannot tell what he would have,
But kneels and holds up hands for fellowship,
Does reason our petition: more strength
Than thou hast to deny 't. Come, let us go:
This fellow had a Volscen to his mother;
His wife is in Corioli and his child
Like him by chance. Yet give us our dispatch:
I am husht 'til our city be a-fire,
And then I'll speak a little. [He holds her by the hand, silent.
Cor.
'O mother, mother!
What have you done? Behold, the heavens do ope,
The gods look down, and this unnatural scene
They laugh at. O my mother, mother! O!
You have won a happy victory to Rome;
But, for your son,—believe it, O, believe it,
Most dangerously you have with him prevail'd,
If not most mortal to him. But, let it come.
Avidius, though I cannot make true wars,
I'll frame convenient peace. Now, good Avidius,
Were you in my stead, would you have heard
A mother less? or granted less, Avidius?
Auy.
I was moved withal.
Cor.
I dare be sworn you were;
And, sir, it is no little thing to make
Mine eyes to sweat compassion. But, good sir,
What peace you'll make, advise me: for my part,
I'll not to Rome, I'll back with you; and pray you,
Stand to me in this cause. O mother! wife!
Auy. [Aside] I am glad thou hast set thy mercy
And thy honour
At difference in thee: out of that I'll work
Myself a former fortune.
Cor.
(The Ladies make signs to Coriolanus.
Ay, by and by;
[To Volscenia, Virginia, &c.
But we will drink together; and you shall bear
A better witness back than words, which we,
On like conditions, will have counter-seal'd.
Come, enter with us. Ladies, you deserve
To have a temple built you: all the swords
In Italy, and her confederate arms,
Could not have made this peace.
[Exeunt.
SCENE IV.—Rome. A public place.
Enter Menenius and Sicinius.
Men. See you yond coign o' the Capitol, yond corner-stone?
Sic. Why, what of that?
Men. If it he possible for you to displace it with your little finger, there is some hope the ladies of Rome, especially his mother, may prevail with him. But I say there is no hope in 't: our throats are sentenced and stay upon execution,
Sic. Is't possible that so short a time can alter the condition of a man?
Men. There is difference between a grub and a butterfly; yet your butterfly was a grub; This Marcus is grown from man to dragon: he has wings; he's more than a creeping thing.
Sic. He loved his mother dearly.
Men. So did he me: and he no more remembers his mother now than an eight-year-old horse. The t匠ness of his face stouts ripe grapes: when he walks, he moves like an engine, and strew ground shrinks before his treading: he is able to pierce a corset with his eye; talks like a knell, and his hum is a battery. He sits in his state, as a thing made for Alexander. What he bids be done is finished with his bidding. He wants nothing of a god but eternity and a heaven to throne in.

Sin. Yes, mercy, if you report him truly.

Men. I paint him in the character. Mark what mercy his mother shall bring from him: there is no more mercy in him than there is milk in a male tiger; that shall our poor city find: and all this is long of Sin. The gods be good unto you.

Men. No, in such a case the gods will not be good unto us. When we banished him, we respected not them; and, he returning to break our necks, they respect not us. Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Sir, if you 'd save your life, fly to your house; The plebeians have got your fellow-tribune And hate him up and down, all swearing, if The Roman ladies bring not comfort home, They'll give him death by inches.

Enter a second Messenger.

Sin. What's the news?

Sec. Mess. Good news, good news; the ladies have prevail'd.
The Volscians are dislodged, and Marcus gone: A merrier day did never yet greet Rome, Nor, not the expulsion of the Tarquins, Sin. Friend, Art thou certain this is true? is it most certain?

Sec. Mess. As certain as I know the sun is fire: Where have you lurk'd, that you make doubt of it? Never through an arch so hurried the blown tide As the reconforted through the gates. Why, hark you! [Trumpets: hautboys: drum boy: all together.
The trumpets, sackbuts, psalteries and files, Tabors and cymbals and the shouting Romans, Make the sun dance. Hark you! [A shout within. Men. This is good news! I will go meet the ladies. This Volumnia Is worth of consuls, senators, patricians, A city full; of tribunes, such as you, A sea and land full. You have praved well to-day: This morning for ten thousand of your throats I'd not have given a dobt. Hark how they joy! [Music still, with shouts.

Sin. First, the gods bless you for your tidings; Accept my thankfulness. [Next, Sec. Mess. Sir, we have all Great cause to give great thanks.

Sin. They are near the city?

Sec. Mess. Almost at point to enter.

Sin. We will meet them, [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Antium. A public place.
Enter Burrus Audisius, with Attendants.

Auf. Go tell the lords o' the city I am here: Deliver them this paper: having read it, Bid them repair to the market-place; where I, Even in theirs and in the commons' ears, Will vouch the truth of it. Him I accuse The city ports by this bath enter'd and Intends to appear before the people, hoping To purge himself with words: dispute.

[Exeunt Attendants.

Enter three or four Conspirators of Audisius' faction.

Most welcome! First Con. How is it with our general? Auf. Even so As with a man by his own ahns empoison'd, And with his charity slain.

Sec. Con. Most noble sir, If you do hold the same intent wherein You wish'd us parties, we'll deliver you Of your great danger.

Auf. Sir, I can not tell: We must proceed as we do find the people.

Third Con. The people will remain uncertain whilst T'wit you there's difference; but the fall of either Makes the survivor heir of all. Auf. I know it; And my pretext to strike at him admits A good construction. I raised him, and I pawn'd Mine honour for his truth: who being so heightened He water'd his new plants with dew of flattery, Seducing so my friends; and, to this end, He bow'd his nature. never known before But to be rough, unseawayble and free.

Third Con. Sir, his stoutness When he did stand for counsel, which he lost By lack of stooping,— That I would have spoke of: Being banish'd for't, he came unto my heart; Presented to my knife his throat: I took him; Made him joint-servant with me; gave him way In all his own desires; may, let him choose Out of my files, his projects to accomplish, My best and freshest men; served his designments In mine own person; help to reap the fame Which he did end all his; and took some pride To do myself this wrong: till, at the last, I seem'd his follower, not partner, and He waged me with his countenance, as if I had been mercenary.

First Con. So he did, my lord: The armv marvell'd at it. and, in the last, When he had carried Rome and that we look'd For no less spoil than glory,— There was it: For which by my sinews shall be stretch'd upon him. At a few drops of women's rheum, which are As cheap as lies, he sold the blood and labour Of our great action; therefore shall he die, And I' ll renew me in his fall. But, hark! [Drums and trumpets sound, with great shouts of the People.

First Con. Your native town you enter'd like a And had no welcomes home; but he returns, [post, Splitting the air with noise.

Sec. Con. And patient fools, Whose children he hath slain, their base throats tear With giving him glory; these people.

Third Con. Therefore, at your vantage, Ere he express himself, or move the people With what he would say, let him feel your sword, Which we will second. When he lies along, After your way his tale pronounced shall bury His reasons with his body.
Enter the Lords of the city.
All the Lords. You are most welcome home.

Coriolanus, marching with drum and colours; Commons being with him.

Cor. Hail, lords! I am return'd your soldier,
No more infected with my country's love
Than when I parted hence, but still subsisting
Under your great command. You are to know
That prosperously I have attempted and
With bloody passage led my wars even to The gates of Rome. Our spoils we have brought home
Do more than counterpoise a full third part
The charges of the action. We have made peace
With no less honour to the Antiates
Than shame to the Romans: and we here deliver,
Subscribed by the consuls and patricians,
Together with the seal o' the senate, what
We have compounded on.

Aed. Read it not, noble lords;
But tell the traitor, in the highest degree
He hath abused your powers.

Cor. Traitor! how now!
Aed. Ay, traitor, Marcius! Marcius!

Aed. Ay, Marcius, Calus Marcius: dost thou think I'll grace thee with that robbery, thy stol'n name
Coriolanus in Corioli?
You lords and heads o' the state, perfidiously
He has betray'd your business, and given up,

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Rome. Before the Capitol.

The tomb of the Andronicæ appearing; the Tribunes and Senators enter. Enter, from one side, Saturninus and his Followers; and, from the other side, Bassianus and his Followers; with drum and colours.

Sat. Noble patricians, patrons of my right, Defend the justice of my cause with arms, And, countrymen, my loving followers, Plead my successive title with your swords: I am his first-born son, that was the last That wore the imperial diadem of Rome; Then let my father's honours live in me, Nor wrong mine age with this indignity.

Bus. Romans, friends, followers, favours of my If ever Bassianus, Cæsar's son, [right, Were gracious in the eyes of royal Rome, Keep then this passage to the Capitol And suffer not dishonour to approach The imperial seat, to virtuous consecrate, To justice, continence and nobility; But let desert in pure election shine, And, Romans, fight for freedom in your choice.

Enter Marcus Andronicus, aloft, with the crown.

Marc. Princes, that strive by factions and by Ambitiously for rule and empery, [friends Know that the people of Rome, for whom we stand A special party, have, by common voice, In election for the Roman empery, Chosen Andronicus, surnamed Pius For many good and great deserts to Rome: A nobler man, a braver warrior, Lives not this day within the city walls; He by the senate is accursed home From weary wars against the barbarous Goths; That, with his sons, a terror to our foes, Hath yoked a nation strong, train'd up in arms. Ten years are spent since first he undertook This cause of Rome and chastised with arms Our enemies' pride: five times he hath return'd Bleeding to Rome, bearing his valiant sons In coffins from the field; And now at last, laden with honour's spoils, Returns the good Andronicus to Rome, Renowned Titus, flourishing in arms. Let us entreat, by honour of his name, Whom worthily you would have now succeed, And in the Capitol and senate's right, Whom you pretend to honour and adore, That you withdraw you and abate your strength; Dismiss your followers and, as suitors should, Plead your deserts in peace and humbleness.

Sat. How fair the tribune speaks to calm my Bus. Marcus Andronicus, so I do affy [thoughts! In thy uprightness and integrity, And so I love and honour thee and thine, Thy noble brother Titus and his sons, And her to whom my thoughts are humbled all, Gracious Lavinia, Rome's rich ornament, That I will here dismiss my loving friends, And to my fortunes and the people's favour Commit my cause in balance to be weigh'd.

Sat. Friends, that have been thus forward in my I thank you all and here dismiss you all, [right, And to the love and favour of my country Commit myself, my person and the cause.

Rome, be as just and gracious unto me As I am confident and kind to thee. Open the gates, and let me in.

Bus. Tribunes, and me, a poor competitor.

Enter a Captain.

Cap. Romans, make way: the good Andronicus, Patron of virtue, Rome's best champion, Successful in the battles that he fights, With honour and with fortune is return'd From where he circumvailed with his sword, And brought to yoke, the enemies of Rome.

564

The self-same gods that arm'd the Queen of Troy
With opportunity of sharp revenge
Upon the Thracian tyrant in his tent,
May favour Tamora, the Queen of Croesus——
When Gotham's queen upon the tower stood:
To quell the bloody wrongs upon her foes.

Re-enter Lucius, Quintus, Martius, and Mutius, with their swords bloody.

Luc. See, lord and father, how we have perform'd
Our Roman rites: Alarbus' limbs are lopp'd,
And entrails feed the sacrificing fire,
Whose smoke, like incense, doth perfume the sky.
Remained not, but to inter our brethren,
And with loud laments welcome them to Rome.

Tit. Let it be so; and let Andronicus
Make this his latest伐u to their sons.
[Trumpets sounded, and the coffin laid in the tomb.
In peace and honour rest you here, my sons;
Rome's readiest champions, repose you here in rest,
Secure from worldly chances and mishaps!
Here lurks no treason, here no eny swells,
Here grow no damned grudges; here are no storms,
No noise, but silence and eternal sleep:
In peace and honour rest you here, my sons!

Enter Lavinia.

Luc. In peace and honour live Lord Titus long;
My noble lord and father, live in fame!
Lo, at this tomb my tributary tears
I render, for my brethren's obsequies;
And at thy feet I kneel, with tears of joy,
Shed on the earth, for thy return to Rome;
O, bless me here with thy victorious hand,
Whose fortunes Rome's best citizens applaud!

Tit. Kind Rome, that hast thus lovingly reserved
The cordial of mine age to glad my heart!
Lavinia, live; outlive thy father's days,
And fame's eternal date, for virtue's praise!

Enter, below, Marcus Andronicus and Tribunes; re-enter Saturninus and Bassianus, attended.

Marc. Long live Lord Titus, my beloved brother,
Gracious triumpheer in the eyes of Rome!

Tit. Thanks, gentle tribune, noble brother Marc.

Marc. And welcome, nephews, from successful
You that survive, and you that sleep in fame!
Fair lords, your fortunes are alike in all,
That in your country's service drew your swords:
But safer triumph is this funeral pomp,
That hath aspired to Solon's happiness
And triumphs over chance in honour's bed.

Titus Andronicus, the very bones,
Whose friend in justice thou hast ever been,
Send thee by me, their tribune and their trust,
This pillanment of white and spotless hue;
And name thee in election for the empire,
With these our late-deceased emperor's sons:
Be candidates then, and put it on,
And help to set a head on headless Rome.

Tit. A better head her glorious body fits
Than his that shakes for age and feebleness:
What should I dom this robe, and trouble you?
Be chosen with proclamations to-day,
To-morrow yield up rule, resign my life,
And set abroad new business for you all?
Rome, I have been thy soldier forty years,
And led my country's strength successfully,
And buried one and twenty valiant sons,
Knighted in field, slain manfully in arms,
In right and service of their noble country:
Give me a staff of honour for mine age,
But not a sceptre to control the world:
Upright he held it, lords, that held it last. [perry.

Marc. Titus, thou shalt obtain and ask the em-
Set. Proud and ambitious tribune, canst thou tell?
TITUS ANDRONICUS.

ACT I.

Scene I.

Tit. Patience, Prince Saturninus.

Sat. Romans, do me right:

Patricians, draw your swords, and shew them the path.

Till Saturninus be Rome's emperor.
Andronicus, would thou wert ship'd to hell,
Rather than rob me of the people's hearts!

Luc. Proud Saturninus, interrupter of the good
That noble-minded Titus means to thee!
Tit. Content thee, prince; I will restore to thee
The people's hearts, and wean them from themselves.

Andronicus, I do not flatter thee,
But honour thee, and will do till I die:
My faction if thou strengthen with thy friends,
I will most thankful be; and thanks to men
Of noble minds is honourable need.

Tit. People of Rome, and people's tribunes here,
I ask your voices and your suffrages:
Will you bestow them friendly on Andronicus?

Tribunes. To gratify the good Andronicus,
And gratulate his safe return to Rome,
The people will accept whom he admits.

Sat. I thank you; and this suit I make,
That you create your emperor's eldest son,
Lord Saturnine; whose virtues will, I hope,
Reflect on Rome as Titus' rays on earth,
And ripen justice in this commonweal:
Then, if you will elect by my advice,
Crown him, and say 'Long live our emperor!'

Marc. With voices and applause of every sort,
Patricians and plebeians, we create
Lord Saturninus Rome's great emperor,
And say 'Long live our Emperor Saturnine!'

Tit. [Aside] A long flourish till they come down.

Sat. Titus Andronicus, for thy favours done
To us in our election this day,
I give thee thanks in part of thy deserts,
And will with deeds requite thy gentleness,
And, for an onset, Titus, to advance
Thy name and honourable family,
Lavinia will I make my empress,
Rome's royal mistress, mistress of my heart,
And in the sacred Pantheon her espouse:
Tell me, Andronicus, doth this motion please thee?

Tit. It doth, my worthy lord; and in this match
I hold me highly honour'd of your grace:
And here in sight of Rome and all the people,
King and commander of our commonweal,
The wide world's emperor, do I consecrate
My sword, my chariot and my prisoners;
Presents well worthy Rome's imperial lord;
Receive them then, the tribute that I owe,
Men and the hands bound with my willing feet:

Sat. Thanks, noble Titus, father of my life!
How proud I am of thee and of thy gifts
Rome shall record, and when I do forget
The least of these unspeakable deserts,
Romans, forget your scanty to me.

Tit. [To Tamora] Now, madam, are you prisoner
To an emperor:
To him that, for your honour and your state,
Will use you mildly and your followers.

Sat. A goodly lady, trust me; of the hue
That I would choose, were I to choose anew.

Clear up, fair queen, that cloudy countenance:
Though chance of war hath wrought this change
of cheer,
Thou constant to be made a scorn in Rome:
Princeely shall be thy usage every way,
Rest on my word, and let not discontent
Damn you and your madam, he comforts you
Can make you greater than the Queen of Goths.
Lavinia, you are not displeased with this?

Lav. Not, I, my lord; sith true nobility
Warrants these words in princeely courtesy.

Sat. Thanks, sweet Lavinia. Romans, let us go:
Raisonless here we set our prisoners free:
Proclaim our honours, lords, with trump and drum.

Bus. Lord Titus, by your leave, this maid is mine.

[Enters Lavinia.

Tit. How, sir! are you in earnest, then, my lord?

Bus. Ay, noble Titus; and resolved withall
To do myself this reason and this right.

Marc. 'Sannun cuique' is our Roman justice:
This prince in justice seizeth but his own.

Luc. And that he will, and shall, if Lucius live.

Tit. Trulues, avay! Where is the emperor's
Treason, my lord! Lavinia is surprised! [guard?

Sat. Surprised! by whom?

Bus. By him that justly may
Bear his betrothed from all the world away.

[Exit Lucius, Bassianus and Marcus with Lavinia.

Mut. Brothers, help to convey her hence away,
And with my sword I'll keep this door safe.

[Enter Lucius, Quintus, and Martius.

Tit. Follow, my lord, and I'll soon bring her back.

Mut. My lord, you pass not here.

Tit. What, villain boy!

Ban. Set me my way in Rome? [Stabbing Matins.

Re-enter Lucius.

Luc. My lord, you are unjust, and, more than so,
In wrongfull quarrel you have slain your son.

Tit. Nor thou, nor he, are any sons of mine;
My sons would never so dishonour me:
Traitor, restore Lavinia to the emperor.

Luc. Dead, if you will; but not to be his wife,
That I with lawful promised love.
[Exit.

Sat. No, Titus, no; the emperor needs her not,
Nor her, nor thee, nor any of thy stock:
I'll trust, by leisure, him that mocks me once;
Thee never, nor thy traitorous haughty sons,
Confedurate all thus to dishonour me.

Sat. There none else in Rome to make a stale,
But Saturnine? Full well, Andronicus,
Agree these deeds with that proud brag of thine,
That said'st I begg'd the empire at thy hands.

Tit. O monstrous! what reproachfull words are these?

Sat. Go to thy ways; go, give that changing
To him that flourish'd for her with his sword:
A valiant son-in-law thou shalt enjoy;
One fit to bandy with thy lawless sons,
To ruffle in the commonwealth of Rome.

Tit. These words are razors to my wounded heart.

Sat. And the less thou fear'st, the more of Goths,
That like the stately Phæbus mogn's her nymphs
Dost overshine the gallant'st dames of Rome,
I thou be pleased with this my sudden choice,
Behold, I choose thee, Tamora, for my bride,
And will create thee empress of Rome.

Tit. Speak, Queen of Goths, dost thou applaud my choice?

Sat. I swear by all the Roman gods,
Sith priest and holy water are so near
And tapers burn so bright and every thing
In readiness for Hymenæus stand,
I will not re-salute the streets of Rome,
Or climb my palace, till from forth this place
I lead unpois'd my bride along with me.

Tit. Then and here, in sight of heaven, to Rome I
If Saturnine advance the Queen of Goths, [swear,
She will a handmaid be to his desires,
A loving nurse, a mother to his youth. [company
Set. Ascend, fair queen, to that transcendent
Lords, accour, noble emperor to that lovely bride,
Sent by the heavens for Prince Saturnine,
Whose wisdom hath her fortunate conquer'd
There shall we consummate our spousal rites.

Tit. I am not bid to wait upon this bride.

[Exit all but Titus.

TITUS ANDRONICUS.

ACT I.

Sat. Traitor, if Rome have law or we have power, Thou and thy faction shall repent this rape.

Bus. Rape, call you it, my lord, to seize my own, My truth-betrothed love and now my wife? But let the laws of Rome determine all; While I am possess'd of that is mine.

Sat. "Tis said, I am possess'd of that I am mine. But, if we live, we'll be as sharp with you.

Bus. My lord, what I have done, as best I may, Answer I must and shall do with my life. Only thus much I give your grace to know: By all the duties that I owe to Rome, This noble gentleman's son, and his laws, Is in opinion and in honour wrong'd; That in the refuge of Lavinia With his own hand did slay his youngest son, In zeal to you and highly moved to wrath To be controlled in that he frankly gave: Receive him, then, to favour, Saturnine, That hath express'd himself in all his deeds A father and a friend to thee and Rome.

Tit. Prince Bassianus, leave to plead my deeds: 'Tis thou and those that have dishonour'd me. Rome and the righteous heavens be my judge, How I have loved and honour'd my own land!

Tan. My worthy lord, if ever Tamora Were gracious in those princely eyes of thine, Then hear me speak indifferently for all; And at my suit, sweet, pardon what is past.

Sat. What, mutiny! be dishonour'd openly, And basely put it up without revenge?

Tan. Not so, my lord: the gods of Rome forfend I should be author to dishonour you! But on mine honour dare I undertake For good Lord Titus' innocence in all; Whose fury not dissembled speaks his griefs: Then, at my suit, look graciously on him; And while I live, if he be my friend, Or with sour looks afflicts his gentle heart.

[Aside to Sat.] My lord, be ruled by me, be won at Dissemble all your grieves and contentations: [last; You are but newly planted in your throne; Rest, then, the people, and patricians too, Upon a just survey, take Titus' part, And so suppliant you for ingratitude, Which Rome repute to be a heinous sin, Yield at entreats; and then let me alone: I'll find a day to massacre them all And rage their faction and their family, The cruel father and his traitor sons, To whom I sued for my dear son's life, And make them know what 'tis to let a queen Kneel in the streets and beg for grace in vain.

Come, come, sweet emperor; come, Andonnicus; Take up this good old man, and cheer the heart, That dies in tempest of thy angry frown.

Sat. Rise, Titus, rise; my empress hath prevail'd.

Tit. I thank your majesty, and her, my lord: These words, these looks, infuse new life in me.

Tan. Titus, I am incorporator in Rome, A Roman now adopted him till Satunnus, And must advise the emperor for his good. This day all quarrels die, Andonnicus; And let it be mine honour, good my lord, That I have reconciled your friends and you.

Sat. So, Bassianus, you have play'd your prize: God give you joy, sir, of your gallant bride!

Bus. And you of yours, my lord! I say no more, Nor wish no less; and so, I take my leave.
ACT II.

TITUS ANDRONICUS.

SCENE I. — Rome. Before the palace.

Enter Aaron.

Aor. Now clombeth Tamora Olympus' top,
Safe out of fortune's shot; and sits aloft,
Secure of thunder's crack or lightning flash;
Advanced above pale envy's threatening reach.
As when the golden sun salutes the morn,
And, having girt the ocean with his beams,
Galileo the zodiac in his glistering coach,
And overlooks the highest peering hills;
So Tamora:
Upon her wit doth earthly honour wait,
And virtue stoops and trembles at her frown.
Then, Aaron, arm thy heart, and fit thy thoughts,
To mount aloft with thy imperial mistress,
And mount her pitch, whom thou in triumph long
Hast prisoner held, fetter'd in amorous chains
And faster bound to Aaron's charming eyes
Than is Prometheus tied to Caucausus.
Away with lavish weeds and servile thoughts!
I will be bright, and shine in pearl and gold,
To wait upon this new-made empress.
To wait, said I? to wanton with this queen,
This goddess, this Semiramis, this nymf,
This siren, that will charm Rome's Satyrine,
And see his shipwreck and his commonwealth's
Holla! what storm is this?

Enter Demetrius and Chiron, braving.

Dem. Chiron, thy years want wit, thy wit wants edge,
And manners, to intrude where I am grace'd;
And must, for aught thou know'st, be affected.
Chir. Demetrius, thou dost over-wen in all;
And so in this, to bear me down with braves.
'Tis not the difference of a year or two
Makes me less gracious or thee more fortunate;
I am as able and as fit as thou
To serve, and to deserve my mistress' grace;
And that my sword upon thee shall approve,
And plead my passions for Lavinia's love.

Aor. [Aside] Clubs, clubs! these lovers will not keep the peace.

Dem. Why, boy, although our mother, unadvised,
Gave you a dancing-rapier by your side,
Are you so desperate grown, to threat your friends?
Go to; have your lath glued within your sheath
Till you know better how to handle it.
Chir. Meanwhile, sir, with the little skill I have,
Fell will shall thou perceive how much I dare.
Dem. Say I, boy, how ye so brave? [They draw.
Aor. [Coming forward] Why, how now, lords!
So near the emperor's palace dare you draw,
And maintain such a quarrel openly?
Full well I wot the ground of all this grudge;
I would not for a million of gold
The cause were known to them it most concerns;
Nor would your noble mother for much more
Be so dishonour'd in the court of Rome.
For shame, put up.

I found a friend, and sure as death I swore,
I would not part a bachelor from the priest.
Come, if the emperor's court can feast two brides,
You are my guest, Lavinia, and your friends.
This day shall be a love-day, Tamora.

Tit. To-morrow, an it please your majesty
To hunt the panther and the hart with me,
With horn and hound and we'll give you grace to journ.

Sat. Be it so, Titus, and granery too.

[Flourish. Exeunt.]
ACT II.

TITUS ANDRONICUS. SCENE III.

Take this of me: Lucrece was not more chaste Than this Lavinia, Bassianus’ love. A speedier course than lingering languishment Must we pursue, and I have found the path. My lords; a solemn hunting is in hand; There will the lovely Roman ladies troop: The forest walks are wide and spacious; And many unfrequented plots there are Fitted by kind for rape and villany; Single you thither then this dainty doe, And strike her home by force, if not by words: This way, or not at all, stand you in hope. Commissions are ready with your armed wit To villany and vengeance concordate. Will we acquaint with all that we intend: And she shall file our engines with advice, That will not suffer you to square yourselves, But to your wishes’ height advance you both. The emperor’s court is like the house of Fame, The palace full of tongues, of eyes, and ears: The woods are ruthless, dreadful, deaf, and dull; There speak, and strike, brave boys, and take your turns; That o’er your hunts, shadow’d from heaven’s eye, And rest in Lavinia’s treasury. O Chria. Thy counsel, lad, smells of no cowardice. Den. Sit fast aut nefas, till I find the stream To cool this heat, a charm to calm these fits, Per Styrca, per manes vehor. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A forest near Rome. Horns and cry of hounds heard.

Enter Titus Andronicus, with Hunters, &c., Marcus, Lucius, Quintus, and Martius.

Tit. The hunt is up, the morn is bright and grey, The frolic walks are wide and the woods are green: Uncompe here and let us make a bay And wake the emperor and his lovely bride And rouse the prince and ring a hunter’s peal, That all the court may echo with the noise. Sons, let it be your charge, as it is ours, To attend the emperor’s person carefully: I have been troubled in my sleep this night, But nothing will on comfort him inspired. A cry of hounds, and horns winded in a peel. Enter Saturninus, Tamora, Bassianus, Lavinia, Demetrius, Chiron, and Attendants.

Many good morrows to your majesty; Madam, to you as many and as good: I promised your grace a hunter’s peal. Sat. And you have rung it lustily, my lord; Somewhat too early for new-married ladies. Den. Lavinia, how say you? Lar. I say, no; I have been abroad awake two hours and more. Sat. Come on, then; horse and chariots let us have, And to our sport. [To Tamora] Madam, now shall Our Roman hunting. [Eye see Marcus] I have dogs, my lord, Will rouse the proudest panther in the chase, And climb the highest promontory top. Tit. And I have horse will follow where the game Makes way, and run like swallows o’er the plain. Den. Chiron, we hunt not, we, with horse nor hound, But hope to pluck a dainty doe to ground. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A lonely part of the forest.

Enter Aaron, with a bag of gold.

Are. He that had wit would think that I had none, To bury so much gold under a tree, And never after to inherit it. Let him that thinks of me so abjectly Know that this gold must coin a stratagem, Which, cunningly effected, will beget A very excellent piece of villany; And so repose, sweet gold, for their unrest [Hides the gold. That have their arms out of the empress’ chest.

Enter Tamora.

Tam. My lovely Aaron, wherefore look’st thou sad, When everything doth make a glorious feast? The birds chant melody on every bush, The snake lies rolled in the cheerful sun, The green leaves quiver with the cooling wind Compose the chase, and sweeten all the ground: Under their sweet shade, Aaron, let us sit, And whilst the babbling echo mocks the hounds, Replying shrilly to the well-tuned horns, As if a double hunt were heard at once, Let us sit down and mark their yelping noise; And, after conflict such as was supposed The wandering prince and Didon once enjoy’d, When with a happy storm they were surprised And curtail’d with a counsel-keeping cave, We may, each wreathed in the other’s arms, Our pastimes done, possess a golden sluicer; Whiles hows more, great empress sweet melodious birds Be unto us as a nurse’s song Of lullaby to bring her babe asleep. Are. Madam, though Venus govern your desires, Saturn is dominator over mine: What signifies my daily-standing eye, My silence and my cloudy melancholy? My decease of woolly hair that now uncurls Even as an adder when she doth unroll To do some fatal execution? No, madam, these are no venereal signs: Vengeance is in my heart, death in my hand, Blood and revenge are hammering in my head. Har. Tamora, the empress’ voice did say Which never hopes more heaven than rests in thee, This is the day of doom for Bassianus: His Phœnec must lose her tongue to-day, Thy sons make pilflage of her chastity And wash their hands in Bassianus’ blood, Swear thou this letter? take it up, I pray thee, And give the king this fatal-plotted scroll. Now question me no more; we are espied: Here comes a parcel of our hopeful booty, Which dreadful not yet their lives’ destruction. Tam. Ah, my sweet Moor, sweeter to me than life! Are. No, I speak not so great things; Bassianus comes: Be cross with him; and I’ll go fetch thy sons To back thy quarrels, whatsoever they be. [Exit.

Enter Bassianus and Lavinia.

Lav. Who have we here? Rome’s royal empress, Unfurnished of her well-born hunting troop? Or is it Dian, habitèd like her, Who hath abandoned her holy groves To see the general hunting in this forest? Tam. Sausy controller of our private steps! As I the power that some say Dian had, Thy temples should be planted presently With horns, as was Actæon’s; and the hounds Should drive upon thy new-transformed limbs, Unmaniered intruder as thou art! Are. Under your patience, gentle empress, I think you have a godly gift in horning; And to be doubted that you fear not; and you Are single forth to try experiments: Jove shield your husband from his hounds to-day! ‘Tis pity they should take him for a stag.

Are. Believe me, queen, your swarthy Chimeran Dost make your honour of his body’s live, Softned, detested, and abased. Why are you sequester’d from all your train, Dismounted from your snow-white goodly steed, And wander’d hither to an obscure plot, 569
Companied but with a barbarous Moor,
If foul desire had not conducted you?

Lav. And, being intercepted in your sport,
Great reason that my noble lord be rated
For sauciness. I pray you, let us hence,
And let her joy her raven-colour'd eye
This valley fits the purpose passing well.

Dos. The king my brother shall have note of this.

Lav. Ay, for these slips have made him noted long:
Good king, to be so mightily abused!

Tom. Why have I patience to endure all this?

Enter Demetrius and Chiron.

Dem. How now, dear sovereign, and our gracious mother!
Why doth your highness look so pale and wan?

Tom. Have I not reason, think you, to look pale?
These two have blessed me hither to this place:
A barren deserted vale, you see it is:
The trees, though summer, yet forlorn and lean,
O'ercome with moss and hateful mistletoe:
Here never shines the sun; here nothing breeds,
Unless the nightly owl or fatal raven:
And when they show'd me this abhorr'd pit,
They seem'd to pluck my heart from out my breast:
A thousand fiends, a thousand hissing snakes,
Ten thousand swelling toads, as many urchins,
Would make such fearful and confused cries
As any mortal body hearing
Should straight fall mad, or else die suddenly.
No sooner had they told this hellish tale,
But straight they told me they would bind me here
Unto the body of a dismal yew,
And leave me to this miserable death:
And then they call'd me foul adulteress,
Lascivious Goth, and all the bitterest terms
That ever ear did hear to such effect:
And, had you not by wondrous fortune come,
This vengeance on me had they executed.
Revenge it, as you love your mother's life,
Or be ye not henceforth call'd my children.

Dem. This is a witness that I am thy son.

[Stabs Bassianus.

Lav. Ay, come, Semiramis, nay, barbarous Tamora:
For no name fits thy nature but thy own!

Quin. Give me thy poniard; you shall know, my boy,
Your mother's hand shall right your mother's wrong.

Dem. Stay, madam; here is more belongs to her;
First thrust the corn, then after burn the straw:
This minion stood upon her chastity,
Upon heruptial vow, her loyalty,
And with that painted hope braves your mightiness:
And shall she carry this unto her grave?

Chi. An if she do, I would I were an eunuch.

Dem. Hark, she have the honey of thy desire,
Let not this wasp outlive, as both to sting.

Chi. I warrant you, madam, we will make that Come, mistress, now perforce we will enjoy
[sure.

Dem. That nice-preserved honesty of yours.

Lav. O Tamora! thou hear'st a woman's voice.

Quin. I will not hear her speak; away with her!

Lav. Sweet lords, entreat her hear me but a word.

Dem. Listen, fair madam: let it be your glory
To see her tears; but be her heart to them
As unrelenting flint to drops of rain.

Quin. Dam! Demetrius. had the tiger's young ones teach the
The o'er, do not let her joy her colour that desire;
List the milk thouk'st'dst from her did turn to marble;
Yet every mother breeds not sons alike:

[To Chiron] Do thou entreat her show a woman pity.

Chi. What, wouldst thou have me prove myself a bastard?

Lav. 'Tis true; the raven doth not catch a lark:
Yet have I heard,—O, could I find it now!—
The lion moved with pity did endure
To have the precious pears which we may pluck away:
Some say the raven feeder forlorn children,
The whilst their own birds finish in their nests:
O, be to me, though thy hard heart say no,
Nothing so kind, but something pitiful.

Dem. I know not what it means; away with her! Lav. O, let me teach thee! for my father's sake.
That green in fairest life, when we might have lain
Be not obdurate, open thy deaf ears.

Tom. Ha! hast thou in person ne'er offended me,
Even for his sake am I pitiless.
Remember, boys, I pour'd forth tears in vain,
To save your brother from the sacrifice;
But fierce Andronicus would not relent:
Therefore, away with her, and use her as you will,
The worse to her, the better loved of me.

Lav. O Tamora, be call'd a gentle queen,
And with thine own hands kill me in this place!
For 'tis not life that I have begg'd so long;
Poor I, and, alas! when Bassianus died,
I was no more:

Tom. What begg'dst thou, then? fond woman, let

Lav. 'Tis present death I beg; and one thing
That womanhood denies my tongue to tell: [more
O, keep me from their worse than killing lust,
And tumble me into some leathernsome pit,
Where never man's eye may behold my body:
Do this, and be a charitable murderer.

Dem. So should I rob my sweet sons of their fee:
No, let them satisfy their lust on thee.

Lav. Away! for thou hast stay'd us here too long.

Quin. O, no womanhood! Ah, beastly crea-

Tom. The blind and vanous to our general name! [true.
Confusion fall—

Chi. Nay, then I 'll stop your mouth. Bring thou her husband;

This is the hole where Aaron bid us hide him.

[Demetrius throws the body of Bassianus into the pit; then execr Demetrius and Chiron, dragging off Lavina.

Tom. Farewell, my sons: see that you make her
Ne'er let my heart know merry cheer indeend, [sure.
Till all the Andronicus be made away,
Now will I hence to seek my lovely Moor,
And let my shameful sons this trial defance.

[Exit.

Re-enter Aaron, with Quintus and Martinus.

Aar. Come on, my lords, the better help before;
Straight will I bring you to the lastsome pit
Where I espied the panther fast asleep.

Qun. My sight is very dull, whate'er it bodes.

Mar. And mine, I promise you: were 't not for Well could I leave our sport to sleep awhile. [shame.

Quin. What, art thou fall'n? What subtle hole is this?

Whose mouth is cover'd with rude-growing briers,
Upon whose leaves are drops of new-shed blood
As fresh as morning's dew distill'd on flowers?
A very fatal place it seems to me.

Speak, brother, hast thou hurt thee with the fall?

Mar. O brother, with the dismalst object hurt
That ever eye with sight made heart lament!

Aar. [Aside] Now will I fetch the king to find them,
That he thereby may give a likely guess
How these were they that made away his brother.

[Exit.

Mar. Why dost not comfort me, and help me out
From this unhallowed and blood-stained hole?

Quin. I am surprised with an uncouth fear:
A chilling sweat o'er-runs my trembling joints:
My heart suspects more than mine eye can see.
Mart. To prove thou hast a true-divining heart,
Aaron and thou look down into this den,
And see a fearful sight of blood and death.
Out, for the devil makes no compassionate
Will not permit mine eyes once to behold [heart
The thing whereat it trembles by surmise:
O, tell me how it is; for ne'er till now
Was I a child to fear I know not what.
Mart. Lord Bassianus lies embosomed here,
All on a heap, like to a slaughter'd lamb,
In this detested, dark, blood-drinking pit.
Quin. If it be dark, how dost thou know T is he?
Mart. Upon his bloody finger he doth wear
A precious ring, that lightens all the hole,
Which, like a taper in some monument.
Doth bloody me, and the dead man's earthy cheeks,
And shows the ragged entrails of the pit:
So pale did shine the moon on Pyramus
When he by night lay bathed in maiden blood.
O brother, help me with thy fainting hand —
If fear hath made thee faint, as me it hath —
Out of this hell devouring receptacle,
As hateful as Cocytes' misty mouth. [out:
Quin. Reach me thy hand, that I may help thee.
Or, warranting strength to do thee so much good,
I may be pluck'd into the swallowing womb
Of this deep pit, poor Bassianus' grave.
I have no strength to pluck thee to the brink.
Mart. Nor I, I shall not enter into this place.
Quin. Thy hand once more; I will not lose again,
Tell thee art here alott, or I below;
Thou cannot not come to me: I come to thee.

Enter Saturninus with Aaron. [falls in.
Sat. Along with me: I'll see what hole is here,
And what he is that now is leap'd into it.
Say, who art thou that lately didst descend
Into this gaping hollow of the earth?
Mart. The unhappy son of old Andronicus;
Brought hither in a most unbleak hour,
To find thy brother Bassianus dead.
Sat. My brother dead! I know thou dost but jest;
He and his lady both are at the lodge
Upon the north side of this pleasant chase;
'Tis not an hour since I left him there.
If thou say'st I may know he is alive;
But, out, alas! here have we found him dead.

Re-enter Tamora, with Attendants; Titus Andronicus, and Lucius.
Tam. Where is the throne of the two-layer? [grief
Sat. Here, Tamora, though grievéd with killing
Tam. Where is thy brother Bassianus?
Sat. Now to the bottom dost thou search my Poor Bassianus here lies murdered. [wound:
Tam. Then all too late I bring this fatal writ,
The compleot of this timeless tragedy;
And wonder greatly that man's face can fold
In pleasing smiles such murderous tyranny.

[She giveth Saturninus a letter.
Sat. [Reads] 'An if we miss to meet him hand-somely—
Swell the huntsman, Bassianus 'tis we mean—
Thou know'st our meaning. Look for thy reward
Among the nettles at the elder-tree
Which overslides the mouth of that same pit
Where we decreed to bury Bassianus.
Do this, and purchase us thy lasting friends.'
[To one of his men]
This is the pit, and this the elder-tree.
Look, sirs, if you can find the huntsman out
That should have murder'd Bassianus here.
Atr. My gracious lord, here is the bag of gold.
Sat. [To Titus] Two of thy whelps, fell curs of
That have here benef't my brother of his life.

Sirs, drag them from the pit unto the prison:
There let them bide until we have devised
Some never-heard-of torment for them too.
Tam. What, are they in this pit? O wondrous
How easily murder is discovered! [hush!
Tit. High emperor, upon my feeble knee
I beg this boon, with tears not lightly shed,
That this fell fault of my accursed sons,
Accused, if the fault be proved in them—
Sat. If it be proved! you see it is apparent.
Who found this letter? Tamora, was it you?
Tam. Andronicus himself did take it up,
Tit. I did, my lord: yet let me be their bail;
For, by my father's reverend tomb, I vow
They shall be ready at your highness will
To answer their suspicion with their lives.
Sat. Thou shalt not fail them: see thou follow me.
Some bring the murder'd body, some the murderers:
Let them not speak a word; the guilt is plain;
For, by my soul, were there worse end than death,
That can upon them should be executed.
Tam. Andronicus, I will entreat the king:
Fear not thy sons; they shall do well enough.
Tit. Come, Lucius, come; stay not to talk with them.
[Exeunt.

SCENE IV. Another part of the forest.

Enter Demetrius and Chiron, with Lavinia, ravished; her hands cut off, and her tongue cut out.
Dem. So, now go tell, an if thy tongue can speak,
Who 'tis was that cut thy tongue and ravish'd thee!
Chi. Write down thy mind, bewray thy meaning
An if thy stumps will let thee play the scribe. [so
Dem. See, how with signs and tokens she can scrawl.
[hands.
Chi. Go home, call for sweet water, wash thy Dem. She hath no tongue to call, nor hands to
And so let 's leave her to her silent walks. [wash;
Chi. An 't were my case, I should go hang myself.
Dem. If thou hastst hands to help thee knit the cord.
[Exeunt Demetrius and Chiron.

Enter Marcus.
Marc. Who is this? my niece, that flies away so
Cousin, a word: where is your husband? [fast!
If I do dream, would all my wealth would wake me!
If I do wake, some planet strike me down,
That I may slumber in eternal sleep!
Speak, gentle niece, what stern mœurs the hands
I have lopp'd and head'ed, and made thy body bare
Of her two branches, those sweet ornaments,
Whose circling shadows kings have sought to sleep
And might not gain so great a happiness [in,
As have thy love? Why dost not speak to me?
Alas, a crimson river of warm blood,
Like to a babbling fountain still with wind,
Both rise and fall between thy rosy lips,
Coming and going with thy honey breath.
But, sure, some Teresus hath decohered thee,
And, lest thou shouldst detect him, cut thy tongue.
Ah, now thou turn'st away thy face for shame!
And, notwithstanding all this loss of blood,
As from a conduit with three issuing spouts,
Yet do thy cheeks look red as Titian's face
Blushing to be encounter'd with a cloud,
Shall I speak for thee? shall I say 'tis so?
O, that I knew thy heart; and knew the beast,
That I might rail at him, to all the world to know
Sorrow concealed, like an oven stopp'd,
Doth burn the heart to cinders where it is.
Fair Philomela, she but lost her tongue,
And in a tedious sampler sew'd her mind:
But, lovely niece, that mean is cut from thee;
A craftier Teresus, cousinn, in thy kind;
And he hath cut those pretty fingers off.
That could have better sew'd than Philomela.

ACT III.

TITUS ANDRONICUS.

Enter Judges, Senators, and Tribunes, with Martius and Quintus, bound, passing on to the place of execution; Titus going before, weeping.

Tit. Hear me, grave fathers! noble tribunes, stay! For pity of mine age, whose youth was spent In dangerous wars, whilst you securely slept; For all my blood in Rome's great quarrel shed; For all the frosty nights that I have watch'd; And for these bitter tears, which now you see Filling the aged wrinkles in my cheeks; Be pity shown to my extreme rogand. Whose souls are not corrupted as 'tis thought. For two and twenty sons I never wept, Because they died in honour's lofty bed. [Exit; the Judges, &c. pass by him, and Exeunt.

For these, these tribunes, in the dust I write My heart's deep languor and my soul's sad tears: Let my tears stain the earth's dry appetite; My sons' sweet blood will make it shame and blush. O earth, I will befriend thee more with rain, That shall distil from these two ancient urs; Than youthful April shall with all her showers; In summer's drought I'll drop upon thee still; In winter with warm tears I'll melt the snow, And keep eternal spring-time on thy face, So thou refuse to drink my dear sons' blood.

Enter Lucius, with his sword drawn.

O reverence tribunes! O gentle, aged men! Unbind my sons, reverse the doom of death; And let me say, that never wept before, My tears are now prevailing orators. Luc. O noble father, you lament in vain: The tribunes hear you not; no man is by; And you recount your sorrows to a stone. Tit. Ah, Lucius, for thy brothers let me plead. Grave tribunes, once more I entreat of you.— Luc. My gracious lord, no tribune hears you speak. Tit. Why, 'tis no matter, man: if they did hear, They would not mark me, or if they did mark, They would not pity me, yet plead I must; And boodless unto them. Therefore I tell my sorrows to the stones; Whos, though they cannot answer my distress, Yet in some sort they are better than the tribunes, For that they will not hear my own tale: When I do weep, they humbly at my feet Receive my tears and seem to weep with me; And, were they but attend'd in grave weeds, Rome could afford no tribune like to these. A stone is soft as wax,—tribunes more hard than A stone is silent, and oftentimes not, [stones; And tribunes with their tongues doom men to death. But wherefore stand'st thou with thy weapon drawn? Luc. To rescue my two brothers from their death: For which attempt the judges have pronounced My everlasting doom of banishment. Tit. O happy man! they have befriended thee. Why, foolish Lucius, dost thou not perceive

That Rome is but a wilderness of tigers? Tigers must prey, and Rome affords no prey. But me and mine: how happy art thou, then, From these devourers to be banished! But who comes with our brother Marcus here?

Enter Marcus and Lavinia.

Marc. Titus, prepare thy aged eyes to weep; Or, if not so, thy noble heart to break: I bring consuming sorrow to thine age. Tit. Will it consume me? let me see it, then. Marc. This was thy daughter. Tit. Come, Marcus, so she is. Luc. Ay me, this object kills me! Tit. Faint-hearted boy, arise, and look upon her. Speak, Lavinia, what accursed band Hath made thee handless in thy father's sight? What foul hath add'd water to the sea, Or brought a faggot to bright burning Troy? My grief was at the height before thou camest, And now, like Nitus, it disdaineth bounds. Give me a sword, I'll chop off my hands too; For they have fought for Rome, and all in vain; And they have nursed this woe, in feeding life; Than most boodless prayer have they been held up, And they have served me to effectless use. Now all the service I require of thee, Is that the one will help to cut the other. 'Tis well, Lavinia, that thou hast no hands; For hands, to do Rome service, are but vain. Luc. Speak, gentle sister, who hath marty'd thee? Marc. O, that delightful engine of her thoughts, That blab'd them with such pleasing eloquence, Is torn from forth that pretty hollow cage, Where, like a sweet melodious bird, it sung Sweet varied notes, enchanting every ear! Luc. O, I have seen her, who hath done this deed? Marc. O, thus I found her, straying in the park, Seeking to hide herself, as doth the deer That hath received some murecning wound. Tit. It was my deer; and he that wounded her Hath hurst me more than he'd kill'd me dead: For now I stand as one upon a rock Envior'd with a wilderness of sea, Who marks the waxing tide grow wave by wave, Expecting ever when some envious surge Will in his briny bowls swallow him. This was my life! my wretched sons are gone; Here stands my other son, a banish'd man, And here my brother, weeping at my woes: But that which gives my soul the greatest spur, Is dear Lavinia, dearer than my soul. Had I but seen thy picture in this plight, It would have madd'd me: what shall I do Now I behold thy lively body so? Thou hast no hands, to wipe away thy tears: Nor tongue, to tell me who hath martyr'd thee: Thy husband he is dead; and for his death Thy brothers are condemn'd, and dead by this. Look, Marcus! ah, son Lucius, look on her! When I did name her brothers, then fresh tears Stood on her cheeks, as doth the honey-dew Upon a gather'd lily almost wither'd.

572
Marc. Perchance she weeps because they kill’d her husband; Perchance because she knows them innocent.

Tit. If they did kill thy husband, then be joyful, Because the law hath’en revenge on them. No, no, they would not do so foul a deed; Witness which tell that their sister shall makes. Gentle Lavinia, let me kiss thy lips; Or make some sign how I may do thee ease: Shall thy good uncle, and thy brother Lucius, And thou, and I, sit round about some fountain, Looking all downwards, to behold our cheeks How they are scald’d, as meadow’s, yet not dry, With miry slime left on them by a flood? And in the fountain shall we gaze so long Till the fresh taste be taken from that clearness, And made a brine-pit with our bitter tears? Or shall we cut away our hands, like thine? Or shall we bite our tongues, and in dumb shows Pass the remainder of our hateful days? What shall we do? let us, that have our tongues, Plot some device of further misery, To make us wonder’d at in time to come. [grief.

Luc. Sweet father, cease your tears; for, at your sweet will, we write your sister signs and weeps. Lavinia, I will wipe thy checks.

Tit. [Exeunt Lucius and Marcus.]

Marc. Patience, dear niece. Good Titus, dry thine eyes.

Tit. Ah, Marcus, Marcus! brother well I wot Thy naked cannot drink a tear of mine, For thou, poor man, hast drown’d it with thine own. Luc. Ah, my Lavinia, I will wipe thy checks.

Tit. Mark, Marcus, mark! I understand her signs: Had she a tongue to speak, now would she say That to her brother which I said to thee; His naked, with his true tears all bewet, Can do no service on her sorrowful cheeks. O, what a sympathy of woe is this, As far as help from as Lamio is from bliss!

Enter Aaron.

Aar. Titus Andronicus, my lord the emperor Sends thee this word,—that, if thou love thy sons, Let Marcus, Lucius, or thyself, old Titus, Or any one of you, chop off your hand, And send it to the king: he for the same Will send thee either both thy sons alive; And that shall be the ransom for their fault.

Tit. O gracious emperor! O gentle Aaron! Did ever such a gentleman chide thee? That gives sweet tidings of the sun’s uprise? With all my heart, I’ll send the emperor My hand: Good Aaron, wilt thou help to chop it off? Luc. Stay, father! for that noble hand of thine, That hath thrown down so many enemies, Shall not be sent: my hand will serve the turn: My youth can better spare my blood than you; And therefore mine shall save my brothers’ lives.

Marc. Which of your hands hath not defended And bear’d aloft the bloody battle-axe, [Home, Writing destruction on the enemy’s castle? O, none of both but in a high desert! My hand hath been but idle; let it serve To ransom my two nephews from their death; Then have I kept it to a worthy end.

Aar. Nay, come, agree whose hand shall go along, For they die before their pardon come.

Marc. My hand shall serve the purpose. Luc. By heaven, it shall not go! Tit. Sirs, strive no more: such witter’d herbs as these Are meet for plucking up, and therefore mine. Luc. Well said, my lord: if I should lose my thy son, Let me redeem my brothers both from death. Marc. And, for our father’s sake and mother’s care Let now me show a brother’s love to thee.

Tit. Agree between you; I will spare my hand. Luc. Then I’ll go fetch an axe. Marc. But I will use the axe.

[Exit Lucius and Marcus.]

Tit. Come hither, Aaron; I’ll deceive them both: Lend me thy hand, and I will give thee mine.

Aar. Lend me it if that be call’d deceit, I will be honest, And never, whilst I live, deceive men so: But I’ll deceive you in another sort, And that you’ll say, ere half an hour pass.

[Exeunt. Aar.]

Re-enter Lucius and Marcus.

Tit. Now stay your strife; what shall be is dis-Good Aaron, give his majesty my hand: [patch’d. Tell him it was a hand that warried him From thousand dangers; bid him bury it; More hath it merited; that let it have. As for my sons, say I account of them, As jewels purchased at an easy price; And yet dear too, because I bought mine own.

Aar. I go. Andronicus: and for thy hand Look by and by to have thy sons with thee. [Exit.

Tit. [To Lucius.] O, how this villain Doth fat me with the very thoughts of it! Let fools do good, and fair men call for grace, Aaron will have his soul black like his face. [Exit.

Tit. O, here I lift this one hand up to heaven, And bow this feebile ruin to the earth: If any power pitied wretched tears,

[Exeunt Lucius and Marcus.]

Tit. To that I call [To Luc.]. What, wilt thou kneel with me? To that I call! [To Lucius.] What, wilt thou kneel with me? Do, then, dear heart; for heaven shall hear our prayers; Or with our sighs we’ll breathe the welkin dim, And stain the sun with fog, as sometime clouds When they have driven in their melting bosoms.

Marc. O brother, speak with me, for possibility, And do not break into these deep extremities.

Tit. Is not my sorrow deep, having no bottom? Then be my passions bottomless with them.

Marc. But yet let reason govern thy lament.

Tit. If there were reason for these miseries, Then into limits could I bind my woes; When heaven doth weep, doth not the earth overflow? If the winds rage, doth not the sea wax mad, Threatening the welkin with his big-swoln face? And wilt thou have a reason for this coil? Or fix the sea; hark, how her winds blow! She is the deluge, the welkin, I the earth. Then must my sea be moved with her sighs; Then must my earth with her continual tears Become a deluge, overflow’d and drown’d; For why my bowels cannot hide her woes, But like a drunkard must I vomit them. Then give me leave, for losses will have leave To ease their stomachs with their bitter tongues.

Enter a Messenger, with two heads and a hand.

Mess. Worthy Andronicus, ill art thou requir’d For that great harm wert thou and thy emperor, Here are the heads of thy two noble sons; And here’s thy hand, in scorn to thee sent back; Thy griefs their sports, thy resolution mock’d; That woe is me to think upon thy woes More than remembrance of my father’s death. [Exit.

Marc. Now let hot Etna cool in Sicily, And be my heart’s hottest ever-morning hell! These miseries are more than may be borne. To weep with them that weep doth case some deal; But sorrow flipt at is double death.

Luc. Ah, that this sight should make so deep a wound And yet detested life not shrink thereat! That ever death should let life bear his name, Where life hath no more interest but to breathe!

[Lavinia kisses Titus.]
Marc. Alas, poor heart, that kiss is comfortless
As frozen water to a starved snake.
Tit. When will this fearful slumber have an end?
Marc. Now, farewell, Flatterer: die, Andronicus!
Titus, as that slumber: see, thy two sons’ heads,
Thy warlike hand, thy mangled daughter here;
Thy other banish’d son, with this dear sight
Struck pale and bloodless; and thy brother, I,
Even like a stony image, cold and numb.
Ah, now no more will I control thy griefs:
Rend off thy silver hair, thy other hand
Gnawing with thy teeth; and be this dismal sight
The closing up of our most wretched eyes:
Now is a time to storm; why art thou still?
Tit. Ha, ha, ha!
Marc. Why dost thou laugh? it fits not with this hour.
Tit. Why, I have not another tear to shed:
Besides, this sorrow is an enemy,
And would usurp upon my watery eyes,
And make them blind with tributary tears:
Then which way shall I find Revenge’s cave?
For these two heads do seem to speak to me,
And threat me I shall never come to bliss
Till all these mischiefs be return’d again
Even in their throats that have committed them.
Come, let me see what task I have to do.
You heavy people, circle me about,
That I may hear your murmurs; ‘swell your voice,
And swear unto my soul to right your wrongs.
The vow is made. Come, brother, take a head;
And in this hand the other will I bear.
Lavinia, thou shalt be employ’d: these arms!
Bear thou my hand, sweet wench, between thy teeth
As for thee, boy, go get thee from my sight;
Thou art an exile, and thou must not stay:
Hie to the Goths, and raise an army there;
And, if you love me, as I think you do,
Let’s kiss and part, for we have much to do.
[Exit Titus, Marcus, and Lavinia."

Luc. Farewell, Andronicus, my noble father,
The wofulst man that ever lived in Rome:
Farewell, proud Rome; till Lucius come again,
He leaves his pledges dearer than his life:
Farewell, Lavinia, my noble sister;
O, would thou wert as thou liest here fast been!
But how nor Lucius nor Lavinia lives
But in oblivion and lative griefs.
If Lucius live, he will requite your wrongs;
And make proud Saturnine and his empress
Beg at the gates, like Tarquin and his queen.
Now will I to the Goths, and raise a power,
To be revenged on Rome and Saturnine. [Exit."

SCENE II.—A room in Titus’s house. A banquet set out.

Enter Titus, Marcus, Lavinia, and young Lucius,
a Boy.

Tit. So, so; now sit: and look you eat no more
Than will preserve just so much strength in us
As will revenge these bitter woes of ours.
Marcus, unknot that sorrow-wreathen knot:
Thy niece and I, poor creatures, want our hands,
And cannot passion our tenfold grief
With folded arms. This poor right hand of mine
Is left to tyrannize upon my breast;
Who, when my heart, all mad with misery,
Beats in this hollow prison of my flesh,
Then thus I think it fits duly to speak
[To Lavinia.] Thou map of woe, that thus dost talk in signs!
When thy poor heart beats with outrageous beating,
Thou canst not strike it thus to make it still.
Wound it with sighing, girl, kill it with groans;
Or get some little knife between thy teeth,
And just against thy heart make thou a hole:
That all the tears that thy poor eyes let fall
May run into that sink, and soaking in Drunk the brave tears from each other’s hearts.
Marc. Fie, brother, fie! teach her not thus to lay
Such violent hands upon her tender life.
Tit. How now! has sorrow made thee dot already?
Why, Marcus, no man should be mad but I.
What violent hands can she lay on her life?
It were as if she strew’d some noble bosom
With her own daughter’s tears, and made them dry.
To bid Æneas tell the tale twice o’er,
How Troy was burnt and he made miserable?
O, handle not the theme, to talk of hands,
Lest we remember still that we have none.
Fie, fie, how franticly I square my talk,
As if we should forget we had no hands.
If Marcus did not name the word of hands!
Come, let’s fall to; and, gentle girl, eat this:
Here is no drink! Hark, Marcus, what she says;
I can interpret all her martyr’d signs:
She says she drinks no other drink but tears,
Brew’d with whined water, and embitter’d upon her checks;
Speechless complainer, I will learn thy thought;
In thy dumb action will I be as perfect
As begging hermits in their holy prayers:
Thou shalt not sigh, nor hold thy stumps to heaven,
Nor wink, nor nod, nor kneel, nor make a sign,
But I of old will witness all thy visage;
And by still practice learn to know thy meaning.
Boy. Good grandsire, leave these bitter deep laments:
Make my aunt merry with some pleasing tale.
Marc. Alas, the tender boy, in passion moved,
Doth weep to see his grandsire’s heaviness.
Tit. Peace, tender sapling; thou art made of tears,
And tears will quickly melt thy life away.
What dost thou strike at, Marcus, with thy knife?
Marc. At that that I have kill’d, my lord; a fly.
Tit. Out on thee, murderer! thou kill’st my heart;
Mine eyes are cloud’d with view of tyranny;
A deed of death done on the innocent
Becomes not Titus’ brother: get thee gone;
I see thou art not for my company.
Marc. Alas, my lord, I have but kill’d a fly.
Tit. But’s it not that if thy hand had a father and mother?
How would he hang his slender gilded wings,
And buzz lamenting doings in the air?
Poor harmless fly,
That, with his pretty buzzing melody,
Came here to make us merry! and thou hast kill’d
him.
Marc. Pardon me, sir; it was a black ill-favour’d fly.
Like to the empress’ Moor; therefore I kill’d him.
Tit. O, O, O.
Then pardon me for repressing thee,
For thou hast done a charitable deed.
Give me thy knife, I will insult on him;
Flattering myself, as if it were the Moor
Come hither purposely to poison me.—
There’s for thyself, and that’s for Tamora.
Ah, sirrah!
Yet, I think, we are not brought so low,
But that between us we can kill a fly
That comes in likeness of a coal-black Moor.
Marc. Alas, poor man! grief has so wrought on
him,
He takes false shadows for true substances.
Tit. Come, take Lavinia, go with me;
I’ll to thy closet: and go read with thee
Sad stories chanced in the times of old.
Come, boy, and go with me: thy sight is young,
And thou shalt read when mine begin to dazzle.
[Exeunt.]
ACT IV.

Enter young Lucius, and Lavinia running after him, and she flies from her arm books under his arm. Then enter Titus and Marcus.

Young Luc. Help, grandsire, help! my aunt Lavinia
Follows me every where, I know not why:
Good uncle Marcus, see how swift she comes.
Ah, sweet aunt, I know not what you mean.
Marc. Stand by me, Lucius; do not fear thine
Tit. She loves thee, boy, too well to do thee harm.
Young Luc. Ay, when my father was in Rome
she did.

Marc. What means my niece Lavinia by these
Tit. Fear her not, Lucius; somewhat doth she mean:

See, Lucius, see how much she makes of thee:
Somewhither would she have thee go with her.
Ah, boy, Cornelia never with more care
Read to her sons than she hath read to thee
Sweet poetry and Tully's Orator.
Marc. Canst thou not guess wherefore she plies thee thus?

Lavinia turns over with her stampsthe books which Lucius has let fall.

Tit. How now, Lavinia! Marcus, what means some book there is that she desires to see. [This is Which is it, girl, of these? Open them, boy. But thou art deeper read, and better skill'd: Come, and take choice of all my library, And so beguile thy sorrow, fill the heavens

Reveal the damn'd contriver of this deed.
Why does she on her arm some books thus?
Marc. I think she means that there was more than one
Confederate in the fact: ay, more there was;
Or else to heaven she heaves them for revenge.

Tit. Lucius, what book is that she possesseth so?
Young Luc. Grandsire, 'tis Ovid's Metamorpho-
My mother gave it me. [See;

Marc. For love of her that's gone,
Perhaps she'd ill it from among the rest.

Tit. Soft! see how busily she turns the leaves!

[Helping her. What would she find? Lavinia, shall I read?
This is the tragic tale of Philomel,
And treats of Tereus' treason and his rape;
And rape, I fear, was root of thine annoy.

Marc. See, brother, see; note how she quotes the leaves.

Tit. Lavinia, wert thou thus surprised, sweet
Ravish'd and wrong'd, as Philomela was,
Forced in the ruthless, vast, and gloomy woods?
See, see!
Ay, such a place there is, where we did hunt—
O, had we never, never hunted there!
Fitter, rather, that the poet here describes,
By nature made for murders and for rapes.

Marc. O, why should nature build so foul a den,
Unless the gods delight in tragedies? [Friends,
Tit. Give signs, sweet girl, for here are none but
What Roman lord it was durst do the deed:
Or slunk not Saturnine, as Tarquin erst,
That left this ramp to sin in Lorenzo?
Marc. Sit down, sweet niece: brother, sit down
Apollo, Pallas, Jove, or Mercury,
Inspire me, that I may this treason find!
My lord, look here; look here, Lavinia:
This sandy plot is plain; guide, if thou canst,
This after name, when I have mine own
Without the help of any hand at all.

[He writes his name with his staff, and guides it with feet and mouth.

Cursed be that heart that forced us to this shift!
Write thou, good niece; and here display, at last,
What God will have discovered for revenge:
Heaven guide thy pen to print thy sorrows plain,
That we may know the traitors and the truth!
[She takes the staff in her mouth, and guides it with her stamps, and writes.

Tit. O, do we read, my lord, what she hath writ?
'Strumpur, Chloron, Demus.'

Marc. What, what! the lustful sons of Tamora
Performers of this heinous, bloody deed?

Tit. Magni Dominator poli,
Tam lentus audis secerat? tam lentus vides?
Marc. O, calm thee, gentle lord; although I know
There is enough written upon this earth
To stir a mutiny in the mildest thoughts
And arm the minds of infants to exclaims.
My lord, kneel down with me; Lavinia, kneel;
And kneel, sweet boy, the Roman Hector's hope;
And swear with me, as, with the woful fere
And father of that chaste dishonour'd dame,
Lord Junius Brutus swear for Lucius' rape,
That we will prosecute by good advice
Mortal revenge upon these traitorous Gods,
And see their blood, or die with this reproach.

Tit. 'Tis sure enough, an you knew how.
But if you hunt these bear-whelps, then beware:
The dam will wake; and, if she wind you once,
She's with the lion deeply still in league,
And hulls him whilst she playeth on her back,
And when he sleeps she do what she list.
You are a young huntsman, Marcus; let it alone;
And, come, I will go get a leaf of brass,
And with a girdle of these words, and lay it by:
the angry northern wind
Will blow these sands, like Silvay's leaves, abroad,
And where's your lesson, then? Boy, what say you?

Young Luc. I say, my lord, that if I were a man,
Their mother's bed-chamber should not be safe
For these bad bondmen to the yoke of Rome.
Marc. Ay, that's my boy! thy father hath full oft
For his ungrateful country done the like.

Young Luc. And, uncle, so will I, an if I live.
Tit. Come, go with me into mine armoury;
Lucius, I'll fit thee; and withal, my boy,
Shalt carry from me to the empress' sons
Presents that I intend to send them both;
Come, come; thou 'lt do thy message, wilt thou not?

Young Luc. Ay, with my dagger in their bosoms, [course.
Tit. No, boy, not so; I'll teach thee another
Lavinia, come. Marcus, look to my house:
Lucius and I 'll go brave it at the court;
Ay, marry, will we, sir; and we'll be waited on.
Lascivious Titis, Lavinia, and Young Luc.

Marc. O heavens, can you hear a good man groan,
And not resolve, yet I meekly beseech him?
Marcus, attend him in his ecstasy,
That hath more scars of sorrow in his heart
Than foemen's marks upon his batter'd shield;
Yet call just that he will not revenge,
Revenge, ye heavens, for old Andronicus!  [Exit.

SCENE II.—The same. A room in the palace.

Enter, from one side, Aaron, Demetrius, and Chiron;
from the other side, young Lucius, and an Attendant,
with a bundle of weapons, and verses writ upon them.

Chi. Demetrius, here's the son of Lucius;
He hath some message to deliver us.

Aar. Ay, some mad message from his mad grandsire.

[Aside] and pray the Roman gods confound you

Dem. Gramercy, lovely Lucius: what's the news?

Young Luc. [Aside] That you are both declinder'd, that's the news.

For villains mark'd with rape.—May it please you,
My grandsire, well advised, hath sent by me
The goodliest weapons of his armoury
To gratify your honourable youth,
The hope of Rome; for so he bade me say;
And so I do, and with his gifts present
Your sov'reign, shall set every need, I say,
You may be armed and appointed well:
And so leave you both; [Aside] like bloody villains.

[Exeunt young Lucius and Attendant.

Dem. What's here? A scroll; and written round about?

Let's see:

Non eget Mauri jaehus, nec aren.'

Chi. O, 'tis a verse in Horace; I know it well:
I read it in the grammar long ago.

Aar. Ay, jest; a verse in Horace: right, you have [Aside] Now, what a thing it is to be an ass! [It. Here's no sound jest; the old man hath found their guilt;
And sends them weapons wrapp'd about with lines,
That wound, beyond their feeling, to the quick.
But were our witty empress well abed,
She would applaud Andronicus' conceit:
But let her rest in her nest awhile.

And now, young lords, was not 't a happy star
Led us to Rome, strangers, and more than so,
Captives, to be advanced to this height?
It did not fail, let them therefore go.
To brave the tribune in his brother's bearing,

Dem. But me more good, to see so great a lord,
Basely insinuate and send us gifts.

Aar. Had he not reason, Lord Demetrius?
Did you not use his daughter very friendly?

Dem. I would we had a thousand Roman dukes
At such an hour, by turn to serve our lust.

Chi. A charitable wish and full of love.

Aar. Here lacks but your mother for to say amen.
Chi. And that would she for twenty thousand more.

Dem. Come, let us go; and pray to all the gods
For our beloved mother in her pains.

Aar. [Aside] Pray to the devils; the gods have given us over.

[Trumpets sound within.

Dem. Why do the emperor's trumpets flourish thus?
Chi. Belike, for joy the emperor hath a son.

Dem. Soft! who comes here?

Enter a Nurse, with a blackamoor Child in her arms.

Nur. Good morrow, lords; O, tell me, did you see Aaron the Moor?

Aar. Well, more or less, or ne'er a whit at all,
Hope Aaron is; and which way, nurse now?

Nur. O gentle Aaron, we are all undone!
Now help, or woe betide thee evermore!

Aar. Why, what a caterwauling dost thou keep?
What dost thou wrap and tumble in thine arms?

Nur. That, which I would hide from heaven's eye.

Our empress' shame, and stately Rome's disgrace!
She is deliver'd; lords; she is deliver'd.

Aar. To whom?

Nur. I mean, she is brought a-bed.

Aar. Well, God give her good rest! What hath he sent her?

Aar. Why, then she is the devil's dam; a joyful

Nur. A joyless, dismal, black, and sorrowful issue:
Here is the babe, as lusty as toad

Amongst the trashy crew of Aaron's line:

The empress sends it thee, thy stamp, thy seal,
And bids thee christen it with thy dagger's point.

Aar. Zounds, ye whore! is black so base a hue?

Sweet blowze, you are a beauteous blossom, sure.

Dem. Villain, what hast thou done?

Aar. That which thou castest not undo.

Chi. Thou hast undone our mother.

Dem. Villain, I have done thy mother.

Dem. And therein, hellish dog, thou hast undone.
Woe to her chance, and damn'd her hoathed choice!
Accursed the offspring of so foul a fiend!

Chi. Aar. It shall not die.

Nur. Aaron, it must; the mother wills it so.

Aar. What, must it, nurse? then let no man but I
Do execution on my flesh and blood.

Dem. I'll broach the tadpole on my rapier's point;

Nur. give it me; my sword shall soon dispatch it.

Aar. Sooner this sword shall plough thy brows up,

Stay, murderers' villains! will you kill your brother?

Now, by the burning tapers of the sky,

That shone so brightly when this boy was got,

He dies upon my senator's sharp point

That touches this my first-born son and heir!

I tell you, younglings, not Enceladus

With all his threatening band of Typhon's brood,
Nor great Alcides, nor the god of war,

Shall seize this prey out of his father's hands.

What, what, ye sanguine, shallow-hearted boys!

Ye white-limed dunces! ye atrophied scions,

Ceal-black is better than another hue,

In that it scorns to bear another hue;

For all the water in the ocean

Can never turn the swan's black legs to white,

Although she have them hourly in the flood.

Tell them the stress from me, I am of use

To keep mine own, excuse it how she can.

Dem. Will thou betray thy noble mistress thus?

Aar. My mistress is my mistress; this myself,
The vigour and the picture of my youth;

This before all the world do I prefer;
This may the world will I keep safe,

Or some of you shall smoke for it in Rome.

Dem. By this our mother is for ever shamed.

Chi. Rome will despise her for this foul escape.

Nur. The emperor, in his rage, will doom her death.

Chi. I blush to think upon this ignomy.

Aar. Why, there's the privilege your hearty bears:

Fie, treacherous line, that will betray with blushing

The close enactts and counsels of the heart!

Here's a young lad framed of another kier;

Look, how the black slave smiles upon the father,
As who should say 'Old lad, I am thine own.'

He is yet your brother, lords, see what he is.
Of that self-blood that first gave life to you,

And from that womb where you imprison'd were

He is enfranchised and come to light:

Nay, he is your brother by the surer side,
Altho' my seal be stamped in his face.

Nur. Aar. What shall we do with this empress?

Dem. Advise thee, Aaron, what is to be done,
And we will all subscribe to thy advice; save thou the child, so we may all be safe.

AER. Then sit we down, and let us all consult. My son and I will have the wind of you: keep there: now talk at pleasure of your safety.

DEN. How many women saw this child of his?

AER. Why, so, brave lords! when we join in league, I am a lamb: but if you brave the Moor, the chafed bourn, the mountain homes, the ocean swells not so as Aaron storms. But say, again, how many saw the child?

AER. Cornelia the midwife, and my lord; and no one else but the deliver'd empress.

AER. The empress, the midwife, and yourself: Two may know council when the third's away: Go to the empress, tell her this I said.

Weke, weke! so crie a pig prepared to the spit.

DEN. What mean'st thou, Aaron? wherefore didst thou this?

AER. O Lord, sir, 'tis a deed of policy; Shall she live to betray this guilty cubs, A long-tongued babbling gossip? no, lords, no: And how by this their child shall be advanced, Not far, one Mult live, my countryman; His wife but yeastnacht was brought to bed; His child is like to her, fair as you are: Go pack with him, and give the mother gold; And tell them both the circumstance of all; And how by this their child shall be advanced, And be received for the emperor's heir, And substituted in the place of mine, To calm this tempest whirling in the court; And let the emperor dandle him for his own.

Hark ye, lords; ye see I have given her physic, And you must needs bestow her funeral; The fields are near, and you are gallant groans: This done, see that you take no longer days, But send the midwife presently to me.

The midwife and the nurse well made away, Then let the ladies tattle what they please.

CHI. Aaron, I see thou wilt not trust the air With secrets.

DEN. For this care of Tamora, Herself and hers are highly bound to thee.

[Enter Dem. and CHI. bearing on the Nurse's body.

AER. Now to the Goths, as well as the Moors flies; There to dispose this treasure in mine arms, And secretly to greet the empress' friends. Come on, you thick-lipp'd slave, I'll bear you hence; For it is you that puts us to our shifts: I'll make you feed on berries and on roots, And feed on curds and whey, and suck the goat, And cabin in a cave, and bring you up To be a warrior, and command a camp. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The same. A public place.

Enter Titus, bearing arrows with letters at the ends of them; with him, Marcus, young Lucius, Publius, Sempronius, Caius, and other Gentlemen, with bows.

Tit. Come, Marcus; come, kinsmen; this is the Sir boy, now let me see your archery; [way. Look ye draw home enough, and 'tis there straight. Terras Aetnae reliquit: Be you remember'd, Marcus, she's gone, she's dead. Sirs, take you to your tools. You, cousins, shall Go sound the ocean, and cast your nets; Happily you may catch her in the sea; Yet there's as little justice as at hand: No, sirs, you must not want for your work: 'Tis you must dig with mattock and with spade, And pierce the innermost centre of the earth: Then, when you come to Pluto's region, I pray you, deliver him this petition; Tell him, it is for justice and for all, And that it comes from old Andronicus. Shaken with sorrows in ungrateful Rome, Ah, Rome! Well, well: I made thee miserable What time I threw the people's suffrages On him that thus doth tyrannize. Go, get you gone; and pray be careful, And leave you not a man-of-war unsearch'd: This wicked emperor may have ship'd her hence; And, kinsmen, then we may go pipe for justice.

Marc. O Publius, is not this a heavy case, To see thy noble uncle thus distress'd?

PUBL. This wrongs my lord, it nightly concerns By day and night to attend him carefully, And feed his humour kindly as we may, Till time beget some careful remedy.

Marc. Kinsmen, his sorrows are past remedy, Join with the Goths; and with revengeful war Take wreak on Rome for this ingratitude, And vengeance on the traitor Saturnine.

Tit. Publius, how now! how now, my masters! What, have you met with her?

Marc. O, no, my good lord; but Pluto sends you word: If you will have Revenge from hell, you shall:

But by the justice, she's no more, I think, He thinks, with Jove in heaven, or somewhere else, So that performe you must needs stay a time.

Tit. He doth me wrong to feed me with delays. I'll dive into the burning lake below, And pull her out of Acheron by the heels.

Marcus, we are but brutes, no-Hares we, No big-boned men framed of the Cyclops' size; But metal, Marcus, steel to the very back, [bear. Yet wrung with wrongs more than our backs can And, sith there's no justice in earth nor hell, We will solicit heaven and move the gods To send us justice for to wreak our wrongs.

Come, to this gear. You are a good archer, Marcus:

[He gives them the arrows.

'Ad Jovem,' that's for you: here, 'Ad Apollinem.'

'Ad Martem,' that's for myself: Here, boy, to Pallas: here, to Mercury: To Saturn, Caius, not to Saturnine; You were as good to shoot against the wind. To it, boy! Marcus, loose when I bid. Of my word, I have written to effect; There's not a god left unsolicited.

Marc. Kinsmen, shoot all y'ur shafts into the wall, We will all shoot the arrow you in his side.

Tit. Now, masters, draw. [They shoot.] O, woe said, Lucius! Good boy, in Virgo's lap; give it Pallas.

Marc. My lord, I aim a mile beyond the moon; Your letter is with Jupiter by this.

Tit. Ha, ha!

Publius, Publius, what hast thou done? See, see, thou hast shot off one of Taurus' horns.

Marc. This was the sport, my lord: when Publius shot, The Dull, being gall'd, gave Aries such a knock That down fell both the Ram's horns in the court; And who should find them but the empress' villain? She laugh'd, and told the Moor he should not choose But give them to his master for a present. [joy!

Tit. Why, there it goes: God give his lordship Enter a Clown, with a basket, and two pigeons in it.

News, news from heaven! Marcus, the post is come. Sirrah, what tidings? have you any letters? Shall I have justice? what says Jupiter?

Clo. O, the gibbet-maker! he says that he hath taken them down again, for the man must not be hanged to the neck without some sentence.

Tit. But what says Jupiter, I ask thee?

Clo. Alas, sir, I know not Jupiter; I never drank with him in all my life.

Tit. Why, villain, art not thou the carrier?

577
ACT IV.

TITUS ANDRONICUS.

SCENE IV.

Clo. Ay, of my pigeons, sir; nothing else.
Tit. Why, diest thou not come from heaven?
Clo. From heaven! alas, sir, I never came there; Go, and should so bold to press to heaven in my young days. Why, I am going with my pigeons to the tribunal plebs, to take up a matter of brawl betwixt my uncle and one of the emperor's men.

More. Why, sir, that is as fit as can be to serve for your oration; and let him deliver the pigeons to the emperor for thee.
Tit. Tell me, can you deliver an oration to the emperor with a grace?
Clo. Nay, truly, sir, I could never say grace in all my life.

Tit. Sirrah, come hither: make no more ado, but give your pigeons to the emperor: By me thou shalt have justice at his hands. Hold, hold; meanwhile here’s money for thy charges.
Give me pen and ink. Sirrah, can you with a grace deliver a supplication?
Clo. Ay, sir.
Tit. Then here is a supplication for you. And when you come to him, at the first approach you must kneel, then kiss his foot, then deliver up your pigeons, and then look for your reward. I’ll be at hand, sir; see you do it bravely.
Clo. I warrant you, sir, let me alone.

Tit. Sirrah, hast thou a knife? come, let me see Here, Marcus, fold it in the oration; [lit. For thou hast made it like an humble supplicant. And when thou hast given it the emperor, Knock at my door, and tell me what he says.
Clo. God be with you, sir; I will.

Tit. Come, Marcus, let us go. Publius, follow me. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The same. Before the palace.

Enter Saturninus, Tamora, Demetrius, Chiron, Lords, and others; Saturninus with the arrows in his hand that Titus shot.

Sat. Why, lords, what wrongs are these! was ever seen An emperor in Rome thus overborne, Troubled, confounded thus; and, for the extent Of equal justice, used in such contempt? My lords, you know, as know the mighteful gods, However these disturbers of our peace Buzz in the people's ears, there nought hath pass'd, But every jot and tittle, against the will of Old Andronicus. And what an if His sorrows have so overweigh'd his wits, Shall we be thus affliicted in his wreaks, His fits, his frenzy, and his bitterness? And now he writes to heaven for his redress: See, here’s to Jove, and this to Mercury; This to Apollo; this to the god of war: Sweet scrolls to fly about the streets of Rome! What’s this but libelling against the senate, And blazoning our injustice everywhere? A goodly humour, is it not, my lords? As who would say, in Rome no justice were, But if I live, his feigned cesans Shall be no shelter to these outrages; But he and his shall know that justice lives In Saturninus' health, whom, if she sleep, He'll so awake as she in fury shall Cut off the proud contumacy for that lives.

Tam. My gracious lord, my lovely Saturnine, Lord of my life, commander of my thoughts, Cane thee, and bear the faults of Titus’ age, The effects of sorrow for his valiant sons, When he hath pierced him deep and scor’d his And rather comfort his distressed plight [heart; Than prosecute the meanest or the best.

For these contempt. [Aside] Why, thus it shall High-witted Tamora to glose with all: [become But, Titus, I have touch’d thee to the quick, Thy life-blood out; if Aaron now be wise, Then is all safe, the anchor’s in the port.

Enter Clown.

How now, good fellow! wouldst thou speak with us? Clo. Yea, forsooth, an your mistership be em'- your peril.
Tam. Empress I am, but yonder sits the emperor.
Clo. 'Tis he. God and Saint Stephen give you good-den; I have brought you a letter and a couple of pigeons here. [Saturninus reads the letter. Sat. Go, take him away, and hang him presently. Clo. His life-blood to much money than to hang. Tam. Come, sirrah, you must be hanged.
Clo. Hanged! by 'r lady, then I have brought up a neck to a fair end. [Exit, guarded. Sat. Despicable and intolerable wrongs! Shall I endure this monstrous villainy? I know from whence this same device proceeds: May this be borne?—as if its traitorous sons, That died by law for murder of our brother, Have by my means been butcher’d wrongfully! Go, drag the villain hither by the hair;
Nor age nor honour shall shape privilege: For this time I will look in your behalf, Sirrah, To thy desire, and thee will I be thy slayer; Sly frantic wretch, that help'st to make me great, In hope thyself should govern Rome and me.

Enter Èmilius.

What news with thee, Èmilius?
Èmil. Arm, arm, my lord;—Rome never had more cause.
The Goths have gather'd head; and with a power Of high-resolved men, bent to the spoil, They hither march amain, under conduct Of Lucius, son to old Andronicus:
Who threats, in course of this revenge, to do As much as ever Coriolanus did.
Sat. Is warlike Lucius general of the Goths? These tidings nip me, and I hang the head As flowers with frost or grass beat down with Ay, now begin our sorrows to approach: [storms: 'Tis he that made you people so yourself; Myself hath often over-heard them say, When I have walked like a private man, That Lucius' banishment was wrongfully, And they have wish'd that Lucius were their emperor.
Tam. Why should you fear? is not your city strong?
Sat. Ay, but the citizens favour Lucius, And will revolt from me to succour him. [same.
Tam. King, be thy thoughts imperious, like thy Sun is the summer’s, that guides do fly in it? The eagle suffers little birds to sing, And is not careful what they mean thereby, Knowing that with the shadow of his wings He can at pleasure stint their melody; Even so mayst thou the giddy men of Rome. Then cheer thy spirit: for know, thou emperor, I will enchant the old Andronicus:
With words more sweet, and yet more dangerous, Than baits to fish, or honey-stalks to sheep, When as the one is wounded with the bait, The other rotted with delicious food.
Sat. But he will not entertain his son for us.
Tam. If Tamora entreat him, then he will: For I can come to him, and fill him With golden promises; that, were his heart Almost impregnable, his old ears dead, Yet should both ear and heart obey my tongue. [To Èmilius] Go thou before, be our ambassador: Say that the emperor requests a parley Of warlike Lucius, and alludes to the meeting Even at his father's house, the old Andronicus.
ACT V.

SCENE I.—Plains near Rome.

Enter Lucius with an army of Goths, with drum and colours.

Luc. Approved warriors, and my faithful friends, I have received letters from great Rome, Which signify what hate they bear their emperor And how desirous of our sight they are. Therefore, great lords, be, as your titles witness, Imperious and impatient of your wrongs, And wherein Rome hath done you any scathe, Let him make treble satisfaction.

First Goth. Brave step, spring from the great Andronicus, Whose name was once our terror, now our comfort; Whose high exploits and honourable deeds Ingrateful Rome requites with foul contempt, Be bold in us: we'll follow where thou lead'st, Like stinging bees in hottest summer's day Led by their master to the flowered fields, And be avenged on cursed Tamora, [him. All the Goths. And as he saith, so say we all with Luc. I humbly thank him, and I thank you all. But who comes here, led by a lusty Goth?

Enter a Goth, leading Aaron with his Child in his arms.

Sec. Goth. Renowned Lucius, from our troops I To gaze upon a ruinous monastery; [stray'd And, as I earnestly did fix mine eye Upon the wasted building, suddenly I heard a child cry underneath a wall. I made mine noise; when soon I heard The crying babe controll'd with this discourse; 'Peace, twainy slave, half me and half thy dam! Did not thy line bewray whose brat thou art, Had nature lent thee but thy mother's book, Villain, thou might'st have been an emperor: But where the bull and cow are both milk-white, They never do beget a coat-black calf. Peace, villain, peace!'—even thus he rates the babe.— 'For I must bear thee to a trusty Goth; Who, when he knows thou art the emperor's bane, Will hold thee dearly for thy mother's sake.' With this, my weapon drawn, I rush'd upon him, Surprised him suddenly, and brought him hither, To use as you think needful of the man.

Luc. O worthy Goth, this is the incarnate devil That robb'd Andronicus of his good hand; This is the pearl that pleased your emperor's eye, And here's the base fruit of his burning lust. Say, wall-eyed slave, whither wouldst thou convey This growing image of thy head-like face? Why dost not speak? what, deaf? not a word? A haft, soldiers! hang him on this tree, And by his side his fruit of bastardy.

Aar. Touch not the boy; he is of royal blood. Luc. Too like the sire for ever being good. First hang the child, that he may see it sprawl! A sight to vex the father's soul within. Get me a ladder. [A ladder brought, which Aaron is made to ascend. Aar. Lucius, save the child, And bear it from me to the empress. If thou do this, I'll show thee wondrous things, That highly may advantage thee to hear: If thou wilt not, befall what may befall, I'll speak no more but 'Vengeance rot you all!' Luc. Say on: if it please me which thou speakest, Thy child shall live, and I will see it nourish'd. Aar. An if it please thee! why, assure thee, Lucius, 'twill vex thy soul to hear what I shall speak: For I must talk of murders, rapes and massacres, Acts of black night, abominable deeds, Complets of mischief, treason, villanies, Ruthful to hear, yet piteously perform'd: And this shall all be buried by my death, Unless thou swear to me my child shall live, Luc. Tell on thy mind: I say thy child shall live. Aar. Swear that he shall, and then I will begin. Luc. Who should I swear by? thou believest no god; That granted, how canst thou believe an oath? Aar. What? a thing I said, I did indeed, I do not; Yet, for I know thou art religious And hast a thing within thee called conscience, With twenty popish tricks and ceremonies, Which I have seen thee careful to observe, Therefore I urge thy oath: for that I know An idiot holds his hand to a god And keeps the oath which by that god he swears, To that I'll urge him: therefore thou shalt vow By that same god, what god seest thou it be, That thou adorest and hast in reverence, To save my boy, to nourish and bring him up; Or else I will discover nought to thee. Luc. Even by my god I swear to thee I will. Aar. First know thou, I begot him on the empress. Luc. O most insatiate and luxurious woman! Aar. Tut, Lucius, this was but a deed of charity To that which thou shalt hear of me anon. It was her two sons that murdered Bassianus; They cut thy sister's tongue and ravish'd her And cut her hands and trimm'd her as thou saw'st. Luc. O detestable villain! call'st thou that trimm'ing? Aar. Why, she was wash'd and cut and trimm'd, And trimm'd sport for them that had the doing of it. Luc. O barbarous, beastly villains, like thyself! Aar. Indeed, I was their tutor to instruct them: That codding spirit had they from their mother, As sure a card as ever was in the sid: That bloody mind, I think, they learn'd of me, As true a dog as ever fought at head. Well, let my deeds be witness of my worth. I train'd thy brethren to that guileful hole Where the dead corpse of Bassianus lay: I wrote the letter that thy father found, And bid the gold without the letter mention'd, Confedurate with the queen and her two sons: And what not done, that thou hast cause to rue, Wherein I had no stroke of mischief in it? I play'd the cheater for thy father's hand, And, when I had it, drew myself apart. And all the while my heart with extreme laughter: I pray'd me through the crevice of a wall When, for his hand, he had his two sons' heads;
Behold his tears, and laugh'd so heartily,
That both mine eyes were rainy like his;
And when I told the empress of this sport,
She swooned almost at my pleasing tale,
And for my tidings gave me twenty kisses.

First Goth. What, canst thou say all this, and never blush?

Aar. Ay, like a black dog, as the saying is.

Luc. Art thou not sorry for these heinous deeds?

Aar. Ay, that I had not done a thousand more.

Even now I curse the day—and yet, I think,
Few come within the compass of my curse—
Wherein I did not some notorious ill,
As kill my son, or threaten'd to deliver,
Ravish a maid, or plot the way to do it,
Accuse some innocent and forswear myself,
Set deadly enmity between two friends,
Make poor men's cattle break their necks;
Set fire on barns and hay-stacks in the night,
And bid the owners quench them with their tears.

Oft have I digg'd up dead men from their graves,
And set them upright at their dear friends' doors,
Even when their sorrow's almost were forgot;
And on their skins, as on the bark of trees,
Have with my knife carved in Roman letters,
"Let not your sorrow's keep me from this doom!"

Tit. No, nor a word: how can I grace my talk,
Wanting a hand to give it action?

Thou hast the odds of me; therefore no more.

Tam. If thou didst know me, thou wouldest talk with me.

Tit. I am not mad; I know thee well enough;
Witness this wretched stump, witness these crimson son's lines:

Witness these trenches made by grief and care;
Witness the tiring day and heavy night;
Witness all sorrow, that I know thee well.

For our proud empress, mighty Tamora:
Is not thy coming for my other hand?

Tam. Kate, am I not thy hand, and thou not Tamora?
She is thy enemy, and I thy friend:
I am Revenge; sent from the infernal kingdom,
To ease the gnawing vulture of thy mind,
By working wretched vengeance on thy foes.
Come down, and welcome me to this world's light;
Confer with me of murder and of death;
There's not a hollow cave or lurking-place,
No vast obscurity or misty vale,
Where bloody murder or detested rape
Can couch for fear, but I will find them out;
And in their ears tell them my dreadful name,
Rise, whieh makes the thunderer quake.

Tit. Art thou Revenge? and art thou sent to me,
To be a torment to mine enemies?

Luc. Yes. Tam. I am; therefore come down, and welcome
Tit. Do me some service, ere I come to thee.

Lo, by thy side where Rape and Murder stands;
Now give me some assurance that thou art Revenge
Stab them, or tear them on thy chariot-wheels;
And then I'll come and be thy waggoner,
And whirl along with thee about the globe,
Provide thee two proper palrets, black as jet,
To hide thy vengeful waggon swift away,
And find out innumerable in their guilty caves:
And when thy car is loaded with their heads,
I will dismount, and by the waggon-wheel
Troit-like, a servile footman, all day long,
Even from Hyperion's rising in the east,
Until his very downfall in the sea;
And day by day I'll do this heavy task,
So thou destroy Rape and Murder there.

Tam. These are my ministers, and come with me.

Tit. Are these thy ministers? what are they call'd?

Tam. Rape and Murder; therefore called so,
Causing them to wreak vengeance on such kind of men.

Tit. Good Lord, how like the empress' sons they
And you, the empress! but we worldly men [are!]
Have miserable, mad, mistaking eyes.
O sweet Revenge, now do I come to thee;
And, if one arm's embracement will content thee,
I will embrace thee in it by and by. [Exit above.

Tam. This closing with him fits his huncey,
Whatever I forg'd to feed his brain-sick fits,
Do you uphold and maintain in your speeches,
For now he firmly takes me for Revenge;
And, being credulous in this mad thought,
It'll make a poor man send for Lie and
And, whilst I at a banquet hold him sure,
I'll find some cunning practice out of hand,
To scatter and disperse the giddy Goths,
Or, at the last, make them his enemies.
See, here he comes, and I must ply my theme.

Enter Tamora below.

Tit. Long have I been forlorn, and all for thee;
Welcome, dread Fury, to my woful house:
Rapine and Murder, you are welcome too.
How like the empress and her sons you are!
Well are you fitted to hang or to floor;
Could not all hell afford you such a devil?
For well I wot the empress never wags
But in her company there is a Moor;
And, would you represent our queen alert,
It were convenient you had such a devil?
But welcome, as you are. What shall we do?
Tit. What wouldst thou have me do, Andronicus?
Dem. Show me a murderer, I'll deal with him.
Chi. Show me a villain that hath done a rape,
And I am sent to be reveng'd on him. [wrong,
Tit. Show me a thousand that have done thee
And I will be revenged on them all. [Rome;
Tit. Look about thee, and call the nicked streets of
And when thou find'st a man that's like thyself,
Good Murder, stab him; he's a murderer.
Go thou with him; and when it is thy hap
To find another that is like to thee,
Good Rapine, stab him: he's a ravisher.
Go thou with him; and in the emperor's court
There is a queen, attended by a Moor;
Well may'st thou know her by thy own proportion,
For up and down she doth resemble thee:
I pray thee, do on them some violent death;
They have been violent to me and mine. [do.
Tit. Well hast thou lesson'd us; this shall we
But would it please thee, good Andronicus,
To send for Lucius, thy thrice-valiant son,
Who leads towards Rome a band of warlike Goths,
And bid him come to me, and bring with him
Some of the chiefest princes of the Goths:
And bid him encomi his soldiers where they are:
Tell him the emperor and the empress too
Feast at my house, and he shall feast with them.
This do thou for my love; and so let him,
As he regards his aged father's life.
Marc. This will I do, and soon return again.
[Exit.

Tit. Now will I hence about my business,
And take my ministers along with me.
Tit. Nay, nay, let Rape and Murder stay with me;
Or else I'll call my brother back again,
And cleave to revenge but Lucius.
Tit. [Aside to her son.] What say you, boys? will
While I go tell my lord the emperor
How I have govern'd our determined jest?
Yield to his humour, smooth and speak him fair,
And tarry with him till I turn again.
Tit. [Aside] I know them all, though they suppose
And will o'erreach them in their own devices:
A pair of cursed hell-hounds and their dam!
Dem. Madam, depart at pleasure; leave us here.
Tit. Farewell, Andronicus; Revenge now goes
To lay a compot to betray thy foes.
Tit. I know thou dost; and, sweet Revenge, farewell.
Chi. Tell us, old man, how shall we be employ'd?
Tit. Tut, I have work enough for you to do.
Publius, come hither, Caius, and Valentine!

Enter Publius and others.
Pub. What is your will?
Tit. Know you these two?
Pub. The empress' sons, I take them, Chiron and Demetrius.
Tit. Pie, Publius, fie! thou art too much deceived;
The one is Murder, Rape is the other name's
And therefore bind them, gentle Publius.
Caius and Valentine, lay hands on them.
Oft have you heard me wish for such an hour,
And I said now! and this to be sure.
And stop their mouths, if they begin to cry.
[Exit.
Publ., &c. lay hold on Chiron and Demetrius.
Chi. Villains, forbear! we are the empress' sons.
Pub. And therefore do we what we are commanded.
Stop closing their mouths, let them not speak a word.
Is he sure bound? look that you bind them fast.

Re-enter Titus, with Lavinia; he bearing a knife, and she a basin.

Tit. Come, come, Lavinia; look, thy foes are bound.
Sirs, stop their mouths, let them not speak to me;
But let them hear what fearful words I utter,
O villains, Chiron and Demetrius! [mad,
Here stands the spring whom you have stain'd with
This goosey summer with your winter mix'd.
You kill'd her husband, and for that vile fault
Two of her brothers were condemn'd to death.
My hand cut off and made a merry jest; [sighs
Dear Both her sweet hands, her tongue, and that more
Than hands or tongue, her spotless chastity,
Inhuman traitors, you constrain'd and forced.
What would you have? should I let you speak?
Villains, for shame you could not beg for grace.
Hark, wretches! how I mean to martyr you.
This one hand yet is left to enthr your threats,
Whilst that Lavinia 'tween her stumps doth hold
The basin that receives your guilty blood.
You know your mother means to feast with me,
And calls herself Revenge, and thinks me mad;
Hark, villains! I will grind your bones to dust
And with your blood and it I'll make a paste,
And of the paste a coffin I will rear
And make two pasties of your shamefull heads,
And bid that strumpet, your unhallow'd dame,
Like to the earth swallow her own increase.
This is the feast that I have bid her to,
And this the banquet she shall surfeit on;
For worse than Philomel you used my daughter,
And worse than Progne I will be reveng'd;
And now prepare your threats, Lavinia, come,
He cuts their threats.
Receive the blood: and when that they are dead,
Let me go grind their bones to powder small
And with this hateful liquor temper it;
And in that paste let their vile heads be baked.
Come, come, be every one officious
To make this banquet; which I wish may prove
More stern and bloody than the Centaurs' feast.
So, now bring them in, for I'll play the cook,
And see them ready 'gainst their mother comes.
[Exeunt, bearing the dead bodies.

SCENE III.—Court of Titus's house. A banquet sit out.

Enter Lucius, Marcus, and Goths, with Aaron prisoner.

Luc. Uncle Marcus, since it is my father's mind
That I repair to Rome, I am content.
First Goth. And ours with thine, befall what fortune will.
[Meor.
Luc. Good uncle, take you in this barbarous
This ravenous tiger, this accurs'd devil;
Let him receive no sustenance, fetter him,
Till he be brought unto the empress' face;
For testimony of her foul proceedings;
And see the ambush of our friends be strong;
I fear the emperor means no good to us.
Aor. Some devil whisper curses in mine ear,
And prompt me, that my tongue may utter forth
The venomous malice of my swelling heart!
ACT V.

TITUS ANDRONICUS.

SCENE III.

Luc. Away, inhuman dog! unhallow'd slave! Sirs, help our uncle to convey him in. [*Exeunt Goths, with Aaron. Flourish within."

The trumpets show the emperor is at hand. Enter Saturninus and Tamora, with Émilius, Tribunes, Senators, and others."

Sat. What, hath the forum more sums than one? Luc. What boots it thee to call thyself a sun?" Marc. Rome's emperor, and nephew, break these quarrels must be quietly debated. [Purle; The feast is ready, which the careful Titus Hath ordain'd to an honorable end, For peace, for love, for league, and good to Rome: Please you, therefore, draw nigh, and take your Sat. Marcans, we will. [Hounds sound. The Company sit down at table."

Enter Titus dressed like a Cook, Lavinia veiled, young Lucius, and others. Titus places the dishes on the table."

Tit. Welcome, my gracious lord; welcome, dear queen: Welcome, ye warlike Goths; welcome, Lucius; And woe be mine, all: although the cheer be poor, T'will fill your stomachs: please you eat of it. Sat. Why art thou thus attired, Andronicus? Tit. Because I would be sure to have all well, To entertain your highness and your empress. Tam. We are beholding to you, good Andronicus. Tit. And if your highness knew my heart, you were, My lord the emperor, resolve me this: Was it well done of rash Virginis To shay his daughter with his own right hand, Because she was enforced, stain'd, and derelov'd? Sat. It was, Andronicus. Tit. Thy reason, mighty lord? [Shame. Sat. Because the girl should not survive her And by her presence still renew his sorrows. Tit. A reason mighty, strong, and effectual; A pattern, precedent, and lively warrant. For me, most wretched, to perform the like. Die, die, Lavinia, and thy shame with thee. [Kills Lavinia. And, with thy shame, thy father's sorrow die! Sat. What hast thou done, unnatural and unkind? Tit. 'Kills her, for whom my tears have made me I am as woful as Virginus was. [Blind. And, thou a chosen and thought precise cause than he To do this outrage: and it now is done. Sat. What, was she ravish'd? tell who did the deed. Tit. Will ' thee please eat? will ' please your highness feed? [thus? Tam. Why hast thou slain thine only daughter Tit. Not 1: 'twas Chiron and Demetrius: They ravish'd her, and eat away her tongue: And they, 'twas they, that did her all this wrong. Sat. Go fetch them hither to us presently. Tit. Why, there they are both, baked in that pie; Whereof their mother dastily hath fed, Eating the flesh that she herself hath paved. 'T is true, 'tis true; witness my knife's sharp point. [Kills Tamora. Sat. Die, frantic wretch, for this accurser deed! [Kills Titus."

Luc. Can the son's eye behold his father's bleed? There's need for need, death for a deadly deed! [Kills Saturninus. A great tempest, Lucius, Marcus, and others go up into the balcony."

Marc. You sad-faced men, people and sons of By uproar sever'd, like a flight of fowl [Rome, Scatter'd by winds and high tempestuous gusts, O, let me teach you how to knit again! This scatter'd corn into one mutual sheaf, These broken limbs again into one body; Lest Rome herself be tane unto herself; And she whom mighty kingdoms court sy to, Like a forlorn and desperate castaway, Do shameful execution on herself, But if my frosty signs and claps of age, Grave witnesses of true experience, Cannot induce you to attend my words, [ancestor, To Lucin, speak, Rome's dear friend, as erst our When with his hecenn tongue he did discourse To love-sick Dido's sad attending ear The story of that baleful burning night When subtle Greeks surprised King Priam's Troy, Tell us what Simon hath bewitch'd our ears, Or who hath brought the fatal engine In that given blood she, once so tenderly wound. My heart is not compact of flint nor steel; Nor can I utter all our bitter grief, But floods of tears will drown my oratory, And break my utterance, even in the time When it should move you to attend me most, Lending your kind commiseration. Here is a captain, let him tell the tale; Your hearts will throb and weep to hear him speak. Luc. Then, noble auditory, be it known to you, That cursed Chiron and Demetrius Were they that murdered our emperor's brother; And these two are they that make our sister, For their fell faults our brothers were beheaded; Our father's tears despised, and basely cozen'd Of that true hand that fought Rome's quarrel out, And sent her enemies unto the grave. Lastly, myself unhindly banished The gates shut on me, and turn'd weeping out, To beg relief among Rome's enemies; Who drown'd their eminence in my true tears, And oped their arms to embrace me as a friend. I am the turned forth, be it known to you, That have preserved her welfare in my blood; And from her unseen took the end of a point, Sheathing the steel in my adventurous body. Alas, you know I am no vaunter, 1; My scars can witness, dumb although they are, That my report is just and full of truth. But, soft! me thinks I do digress too much, Citing my worthless praise: O, pardon me; For when no friends are by, men praise themselves. Marc. Now is my turn to speak. Behold this child: [Pointing to the Child in the arms of an Attendant. Of this was Tamora delivered; The issue of an irreligious Moor, Chief among which she did found those woes: The villain is alive in Titus' house, And as he is, to witness this is true. Now judge what cause had Titus to revenge These wrongs, unspeakable, past patience, Or more than any living man could bear. Marcus? Now you have heard the truth, what say you, Ro? Have we done aught amiss;—show us wherein, And, from the place where you behold us now, The poor remainder of Andronicus Will, hand in hand, all headlong cast us down, And on the ragged stones beat forth our brains, And make an unkin'd and sullen house. Speak, Romans, speak; and if you say we shall, Lo, hand in hand, Lucius and I will fall. Emil. Come, come, then reverend man of Rome, And bring our emperor gently in thy hand, Lucius our emperor; for well I know The common voice do cry it shall be so. [Exeunt Attendants. Lucius, Marcus, and the others descend. All. Lucius, all hail, Rome's gracious governor!
Luc. Thanks, gentle Romans: may I govern so, To heal Rome's harms, and wipe away her woe! But, gentle people, give me aim awhile, For nature puts me to a heavy task: Stand all aloof: but, uncle, draw you near, To shed obsequious tears upon this face. O, take this warm kiss on thy pale cold lips, [Kissing Titus. These sorrowful drops upon thy blood-stain'd face, The last true duties of thy noble son! Marc. Tear for tear, and loving kiss for kiss, Thy brother Marcus tenders on thy lips; O, were the sum of these that I should pay Countless and infinite, yet would I pay them! Luc. Come hither, boy; come, come, and learn of us To melt in showers: thy grandsire loved thee well: Many a time he danced thee on his knee, Snug thee asleep, his loving breast thy pillow; Many a matter hath he told to thee, Meet and agreeing with thine infancy; In that respect, then, like a loving child, Shed yet some small drops from thy tender spring, Because kind nature doth require it so: Friends should associate friends in grief and woe; Bid him farewell; commit him to the grave; Do him that kindness, and take leave of him. Young Luc. O grandsire, grandsire! even with all my heart Would I were dead, so you did live again! O Lord, I cannot speak to him for weeping: My tears will choke me, if I ope my mouth.

Re-enter Attendants with Aaron.

Em. You sad Andronicus, have done with woes: Give sentence on this execrable wretch, That hath been breeder of these dire events. Luc. Set him breast-deep in earth, and famish him: There let him stand, and rave, and cry for food: If any one relieves or pities him, For the offence he dies. This is our doom: Some stay to see him fasten'd in the earth. Act. O, why should wrath be mute, and fury I am no baby, I, that with base prayers [dumb? I should repent the evils I have done: Ten thousand worse than ever yet I did Would I perform, if at might have my will: If one good deed in all my life I did, I do repent it from my very soul. [hence. Luc. Some loving friends convey the emperor And give him burial in his father's grave: My father and Lavinia shall withthorn Be closed in our household's monument. As for that heinous tigress, Tamora, No funeral rites, nor man in mourning weeds, No mournful bell shall ring her burial: But throw her forth to beasts and birds of prey: Her life was beast-like, and devoid of pity; And, being so, shall have like want of pity. See justice done on Aaron, that damn'd Moor, By whom our heavy laps had their beginning: Then, afterwards, to order well the state, That like events may ne'er it ruinate. [Exeunt.

Titus,—When will this fearful slumber have an end? Marcus,—Now, farewell, flattery: die, Andronicus; Thou dost not slumber: see, thy sons' heads, Thy warlike hand, thy mangled daughter here; Thy other banish'd son, with this dear sight Struck pale and bloodless; and thy brother, I, Even like a stone image, cold and numb. Ah, now no more will I control thy griefs: Rend off thy silver hair, thy other habil'd go, Gone past thy teeth; and be this dismal sight The closing up of our most wretched eyes: Now is a time to storm; why art thou still? Titus.—Ha, ha, ha! Marcus.—Why dost thou laugh? It fits not with this hour. Act III., Scene I.

[For an Analysis of the Plot of this Play, see Page 593.]

Prologue.

Two households, both alike in dignity,
In fair Verona, where we lay our scene,
From ancient grudge break to new mutiny,
Where civil blood makes civil hands unclean.

From forth the fatal loins of these two foes
A pair of star-cross'd lovers take their life;
Whose misadventured piteous overthrows
Do with their death bury their parents' strife.

The fearful passage of their death-mark'd love,
And the continuance of their parents' rage,
Which, but their children's end, nought could remove,
Is now the two hours' traffic of our stage;
The which if you with patient ears attend,
What here shall miss, our toil shall strive to mend.

Act I.

Scene I.—Verona. A public place.

Enter Sampson and Gregory, of the house of Capulet, armed with swords and bucklers.

Sampson. Gregory, o' my word, we'll not carry coals.
Gregory. No, for then we should be colliers.

Sampson. I mean, an we be in choler, we'll draw.
Gregory. Ay, while you live, draw your neck out o' the collar.

Sampson. I strike quickly, being moved.
Gregory. But thou art not quickly moved to strike.

Sampson. A dog of the house of Montague moves me.
Gregory. To move is to stir; and to be valiant is to stand: therefore, if thou art moved, thou runnest away.

Sampson. A dog of that house shall move me to stand:
I will take the wall of any man or maid of Montague's.
Gregory. That shows thee a weak slave; for the weakest goes to the wall.

Sampson. True; and therefore women, being the weaker vessels, are ever thrust to the wall: therefore I will push Montague's men from the wall, and thrust his maids to the wall.
Gregory. The quarrel is between our masters and us their men.

Sampson. 'Tis all one, I will show myself a tyrant:
when I have fought with the men, I will be cruel with the maids, and cut off their heads.

Gregory. The heads of the maids?
Sampson. Ay, the heads of the maids, or their maidenheads; take it in what sense thou wilt.
Gregory. They must take it in sense that feel it.

Sampson. Me they shall feel while I am able to stand; and 'tis known I am a pretty piece of flesh.
Gregory. 'Tis well thou art not fish; if thou hadst, thou hadst been poor John. Draw thy tool; here comes two of the house of the Montagues.

Sampson. My naked weapon is out: quarrel, I will knock thee.
Gregory. How! turn thy back and run?
Sampson. Fear me not.
Gregory. No, marry; I fear thee!

Sampson. Let us take the law of our sides; let them begin.
Gregory. I will frown as I pass by, and let them take it as they list.

Sampson. Nay, as they dare. I will bite my thumb at them; which is a disgrace to them, if they bear it.

Enter Abraham and Balthasar.

Abraham. Do you bite your thumb at us, sir?
Sampson. I do bite my thumb, sir.
Abraham. Do you bite your thumb at us, sir?
Enter Benvolio.

Benv. Part, tools! Put up your swords; you know not what you do.

[Beats down their swords.]

Enter Tybalt.

Tyb. What, art thou drawn among these heartless hands? Turn thee, Benvolio, look upon thy death.

Benv. I do but keep the peace; put up thy sword, or manage it to part these men with me.

Tyb. What, drawn, and talk of peace! I hate the word. As I hate hell, all Montagues, and thee; Have at thee, coward! [They fight.]

Enter Capulet in his gown, and Lady Capulet.

Cap. What noise is this? Give me my long sword, ho! [sword?]

La. Cap. A crutch, a crutch! why call you for a Cap? My sword, I say! Old Montague is come, and flushes his blade in spite of me.

Enter Montague and Lady Montague.

Mon. Thou villain Capulet,—Hold me not, let me go.

La. Mon. Thou shalt not stir a foot to seek a foe.

Enter Prince, with Attendants.

Prin. Rebellious subjects, enemies to peace, Profaners of this neighbour-stained steel,—[beasts, Will they not hear? What, ho! you men, That quench the fire of your pernicious rage With purple fountains issuing from your veins, On pain of torture, from those bloody hands Throw your mistemper'd weapons to the ground, And hear the sentence of your moved prince. Three civil brawls, bred of an airy word. By thee, old Capulet, and Montague,

Have thrice disturb'd the quiet of our streets, And made Verona's ancient citizens Cast by their grave besecning ornaments, To wield old partisans, in bands as old, Canker'd with peace, to part your canker'd hate: If every bird disturb our streets again, Your hands shall pay the forfeit of the peace. For this time, all the rest depart away: You, Capulet, shall go along with me: And, Montague, come you this afternoon, To know our further pleasure in this case, To old Free-town, our common judgment-place. Once more, upon pain of death, all men depart. [Exeunt all but Montague, Lady Montague, and Benvolio.

Mon. Who set this ancient quarrel new abroach? So, my nephew; were you by when it began? Benv. Here were the servants of your adversary, And yours, close fighting ere I did approach; I drew to part them: in the instant came The fiery Tybalt, with his sword prepared, Which, as he breathed defiance to my ears, Like swaying edge of his head and cut the grinds, Who nothing hurt withal hissed him in scorn; While we were interchanging thrusts and blows, Came more and more and fought on part and part, Till the prince came, who parted either part.

La. Mon. O, where is Romeo? saw you him to— Right glad I am he was not at this fray. [play?] Benv. Marliam, an hour before the worship'd sun Peer'd forth the golden window of the east, A troubled mind drave me to walk abroad; Where, underneath the grove of sycamore That, westward rooteth from the city's side, So early walking did I see your son: Towards him I nerved, but he was ware of me And stole into the covert of the wood: I, measuring his affections by my own, That most are busied when they're most alone, Pursued my humour not pursuing his, And gladly shunn'd who gladly fled from me. Mon. Many a morning hath he there been seen, With tears augmenting the fresh morning's dew, Adding to clouds more clouds with his deep sighs; But all so soon as the all-cheering sun Should in the furthest east begin to draw The shady curtains from Aurora's bed, Away from light steals home my heavy son, And private in his chamber pens himself, Shuts up his windows, locks fair daylight out And makes himself an artificial night: Black and portentous must this humour prove, Unless good counsel may the cause remove. Benv. My good master, shall I know the cause? Mon. I neither know it nor can learn of him. Benv. Have you imparted him by any means? Mon. Both by myself and many other friends: But he, his own affections' counsellor, Is to himself—[I will not say how true— But to himself so secret and so close, So far from sounding and discovery. As is the bud bit with an envious worm, Ere he can spread his sweet leaves to the air, Or dedicate his beauty to the sun, Could we but learn from whence his sorrows grow, We would as willingly give cure as know. [Enter Romeo.

Benv. See, where he comes: so please you, step aside; I'll know his grievance, or be much denied. Mon. I would thou wert so happy by thy stay, To hear true shift. Come, madam, let's away. [Exeunt Montague and Lady.}

Benv. Good morrow, cousin. Rom. Is the day so young? Benv. But new struck nine. Rom. Ay me! sad hours seem long. Was that my father that went hence so fast? Rom. It was. What sadness lengthens Romeo's hours? [They shunt. Rom. Not having that, which, having, makes Benv. In love? Rom. Out— Benv. Of love? Rom. Out of her favour, where I am in love. Benv. Alas, that love, so gentle in his view, Should be so tyrannous and rough in proof! Rom. Alas, that love, whose view is muffled still, Should, without eyes, see pathways to his will! Where shall we dine? O me! What fare was here? Yet tell me not, for I have heard it all. Here's much to do with hate, but more with love. 558
Why, then, 0 brawling love! 0 loving hate! 0 anything, of nothing first create!
0 heavy lightness! 0 serious vanity!
0 subtle, close-sighted, well-seeming forms!
Feather of lead, bright smoke, cold fire, sick health!
Still-waking sleep, that is not what it is!
This love feel I, that feel no love in this.
Dost thou not laugh?
Jon. No, coz, I rather weep.
Rom. Good heart, at what?
Jon. At thy good heart's oppression.
Rom. Why, such is love's transgression.
Griefs of mine own lie heavy in my breast,
Which thou wilt propagate, to have it prest
With more of thine: this love that thou hast shown
Doth add more grief to too much grief of my own.
(Love is a smoke raised with the fume of sighs;
Being purged, a fire sparkling in lovers' eyes;
Being vex'd, a sea nourish'd with lovers' tears;
What is it else? a madness most discreet,
A choking gall and a preserving sweet.)
Farewell, my coz.
Jon. Soft! I will go along;
An if you leave me so, you do me wrong.
Rom. Tut, I have lost myself; I am not here;
This is not Romeo, he's some other where.
Jon. Tell me in sadness, who is that you love.
Rom. What, shall I groan and tell thee this?
Jon. Groan! why, no;
But sadly tell me who.
Rom. Bid a sick man in sadness make his will:
Ah, word ill urged to one that is so ill!
In sadness, cousin, I do love a woman.
Jon. I aim'd so near, when I supposed you loved.
Rom. A right good mark-man: and she's fair I love.
Jon. A right fair mark, fair coz, is soonest hit.
Rom. Well, in that hit you miss; she'll not be hit
With Cupid's arrow; she hath Diana's wit;
And, in strong proof of chastity well arm'd,
From love's weak childish bow she lives unarm'd.
She will not stay the siege of loving terms,
Nor glide the encounter of assailing eyes,
Nor ope her lap to saint-seducing gold:
0, she is rich in beauty, only poor.
That when she dies with beauty dies her store.
Rom. Then she hath sworn that she will still live chaste?
[waiste?
Rom. She hath, and in that sparing makes huge
For beauty starved with her severity
Cuts beauty off from all posterity.
She is too fair, too wise, wisely too fair,
To merit bliss by making me despair:
She hath forsworn to love, and in that vow
Do I live dead that live to tell it now.
Rom. Be ruled by me, forget to think of her,
Rom. O, teach me how I should forget to think.
Jon. By giving liberty unto thine eyes;
Examine other beauties.
Rom. 'Tis the way
To call hers exquisite, in question more:
These happy masks that kiss fair ladies' brows
Being black put us in mind they hide the fair;
He that is stricken blind cannot forget
The precious treasure of his eyesight lost:
Show me a mistress that is passing fair,
What doth her beauty serve, but as a note
Where I may read who pass'd that passing fair?
Farewell: thou canst not teach me to forget.
Rom. I'll pay that doctrine, or else die in debt.

SCENE II. — A street.

Enter Capulet, Paris, and Servant.

Cap. But Montague is bound as well I,
In penalty alike; and 'tis not hard I think,
For men so old as we to keep the peace.

PAR. Of honourable reckoning are you both;
And pity it is you lived at odds so long,
But now, my lord, what is it you to my suit?
Cap. But saying o'er what I have said before;
My child is yet a stranger in the world;
She hath not seen the change of fourteen years;
Let two more summers wither in their pride,
Ere we may think her ripe to be a bride.

PAR. Yet think thou of our house than say mothers made.
Cap. And too soon married those so early made.
The earth hath swallow'd all my hopes but she,
She is the hopeful lady of my earth:
But wou, gentle Paris, get her heart,
My will to her consent is but a part;
And she agrees, within her scope of choice,
Sometimes my consent and fair according voice.
This night I hold an old accustom'd feast,
Whereeto I have invited many a guest,
Such as I love; and you, among the store,
One more, most welcome, makes my number more.
At my poor house look to behold this night
Earth-treading stars that make dark heaven light;
Such comfort as do lusty young men feel
When well-apparel'd April on the heel
Of limping winter treads, even such delight
Among fresh femeale buds shall you this night
Inherit at my house; hear all, and say;
And like the mildness whose kind must shall be:
Which on more view, of many mine being one
May stand in number, though in reckoning none.
Come, go, with me. [To Serv., giving a paper.] Go, sirrah, trudge about
Through fair Verona; find those persons out
Whose names are written there, and to them say,
My house and welcome on their pleasure stay.

[Exeunt Capulet and Paris.

Serr. Find them out whose names are written here.
It is written, that the shoemaker should meddle with his yard, and the tailor with his cloth, the fisher with his pen, and the painter with his nets; but I am sent to find these persons whose names are here writ, and can never find what names the writing person hath here writ. I must to the learned,—in good time.

Enter Benvolio and Romeo.

Jon. Tut, man, one fire burns out another's burning,
One pain is lessen'd by another's anguish;
Turn giddily, and be hold by backward turning;
One desperate grief cures with another's languish:
Take thou some new infection in thy eye,
And the bleak person of the old will die.
Rom. Your plaintain-leaf is excellent for that.
Jon. For what, I pray thee?
Rom. For your broken shin.
Jon. Why, Romeo, art thou mad? [is.
Rom. Not mad, but bound more than a mad-man
Shut up in prison, kept without my food,
Whipp'd and tormented and—God-dam, good fellow.
Serr. God's god—god-dam. I pray, sir, can you read?
Rom. Ay, mine own fortune in my misery.
Serr. Perhaps you have learned it without book;
but I pray, can you read any thing you see?
Rom. Ay, if I know the letters and the language.
Serr. Ye say honestly: rest you merry!
Rom. Stay, fellow; I can read. [Reads.
"Signior Martino and his wife and daughters; County Anselme and his beauteous sisters; the holy widow of Vitruvio; Signior Pecizzare and his lovely mother; vigna uncle Capulet, his wife, and daughters; my fair niece Rosaline; Livia; Signior Valerio and his cousin Tybalt; Lucio and the lively Hedena;"
A fair assembly: whither should they come?
Jon. Up with Whiter.
Serr. To supper; to our house.
SCENE III.—A room in Capulet's house.

Enter Lady Capulet and Nurse.

Enter Juliet.

Jul. How now! who calls?

Nurse. Your mother. Madam, I am here.

What is your will?

La. Cap. This is the matter:—Nurse, give leave awhile.

We must talk in secret:—nurse, come back again:—I have remember'd me, thou's hear our counsel. Thou know'st my daughter's fortune, and I pray thee, nurse, say I.

Nurse. Faith, I can tell her age unto an hour. La. Cap. She's not fourteen. Nurse. I'll lay fourteen of my teeth,—And yet, to my mind it is spoken, I have but four,—She is not fourteen. How long is it now To Lammmas-tide? La. Cap. A fortnight and odd days. Nurse. Even or odd, of all days in the year, Come Lammmas-eve at night shall she be fourteen. Susan and she—God rest all Christian souls!—Were of an age: well. Susan is with God; She was too good for me: but, as I said, On Lammmas-eve at night shall she be fourteen; That shall she, marry: I remember it well. 'Tis since the earthquake now eleven years; And she was wean'd,—I never shall forget it.—Of all the days of the year, upon that day:—For I had then laid wormwood to my dog, Sitting in the sun under the dove-house wall; My lord and you were then at Mantua:— Nay, I do bear a brain:—but, as I said, When it did taste the wormwood on the nipple Of my dog and felt it bitter, pretty fool, To bore it fetchy and fall out with the dog! Shake quoth the dove-house: 'twas no need, I trod To bid me trudge; And since that time it is eleven years:— For then she could stand alone; nay, by the rood, She could have run and waddled all about:— For even the day before, she broke her brow: And then my husband—God be with his soul! A' was a merry man,—took up the child: Yea,' quoth he, 'dost thou fall upon thy face? Thou wilt fall backward when thou livest more wit; Wilt thou not, Juliet?' and, by my holidame, The pretty wretch left crying and said 'Ay.' To see now, how a jest shall come about! I warrant, an I should live a thousand years, I never should forget it: 'Wilt thou not, Juliet?'

And, pretty fool, it stinted and said 'Ay.' La. Cap. Enough of this; I pray thee, hold thy peace.

Nurse. Yes, madam: yet I cannot choose but laugh, To think it should leave crying and say 'Ay.' And yet, I warrant, it had upon its brow A bump as big as a young cockerel's stone; A parous knock; and it cried bitterly: 'Yea,' quoth my husband, 'fall'st upon thy face? Thou wilt fall backward when thou comest to age; That look in many's eyes doth share the same.' Jul. And stout thou too? Nurse, say I.

Nurse. Peace, I have done. God mark thee to his grace! Thou wast the prettiest babe that e'er I nursed: An I might live to see thee married once, I have my wish. La. Cap. Marry, that ' marry ' is the very theme I came to talk of. Tell me, daughter Juliet, How stands your disposition to be married? Jul. It is an honour that I dream not of. Nurse. An honour! were not I thine only nurse, I would say thou hadst suck'd wisdom from thy teat. La. Cap. Wilt, think of marriage now; younger than you, Here in Verona, ladies of esteem, Are made already mothers: by my count, I was your mother much upon these years. That you are now a maid. Thus then in brief: The valiant Paris seeks you for his love, Nurse. A man, young lady! lady, such a man As all the world—why, he's a man of wax. La. Cap. Verona's summer hath not such a flower. Nurse. Nay, he's a flower; in faith, a very flower. La. Cap. What say you? can you love the gen-

This night you shall behold him at our feast; Read o'er the volume of young Paris' face And find delight writ there with beauty's pen; Examine every married lineament And see how one another lends content, And what obscured in this fair volume lies Find written in the margin of his eyes, This precious book of love, this mubonnard lover, To beautify him, only lacks a cover: The fish lives in the sea, and 'tis much pride For fair without the fair within to hide: That book in many's eyes doth bear the glory, That in gold clasps locks in the golden story; So shall you share all that he doth possess, By having him, making yourself no less. Nurse. No less! nay, bigger; women grow by men. La. Cap. Speak briefly, can you like of Paris' love? Jul. I'll look to like, if it looking liker move: But no more deep will I endure mine eye Than your consent gives strength to make it fly. Enter a Servant.

Serv. Madam the guests are come, supper served up, you can see my young lady asked for, the nurse cursed in the pantry, and every thing in extremity. I must hence to wait: I beseech you, follow straight. La. Cap. We follow thee. [Exit Servant.] Juliet, the county stays.

Nurse. Go, girl, seek happy nights to happy days. [Exit.]

ACT I.

SCENE IV.—A street.

Enter Romeo, Mercutio, Benvolio, with five or six Maskers, Torch-bearers, and others.

Romeo. What shall I say this speech be spoke for our ex-Or shall we on without apology? [cuse?

Benv. The date is out of such prolixity: We'll have no Cupid hoodwink'd with a scarf, Bearing a Tartar's painted bow of lath, Scaring the ladies like a crow-keeper; Nor no withoutlook prologue, faintly spoke After the promiser, for our audience; But let them measure us by what they will; We'll measure them a measure, and be gone.

Romeo. Give me a torch: I am not for this ambling; Being but heavy, I will bear the light.

Merc. Nay, gentle Romeo, we must have you dance.

Romeo. Not I, believe me: you have dancing shoes With nimble soles: I have a soul of lead So stakes me to the ground I cannot move.

Merc. You are a lover; borrow Cupid's wings, And soothe with them a common bond.

Romeo. I am too sore enpierced with his shaft To bear with his light feathers, and so bound, I cannot bound a pitch above dull woe: Under love's heavy burden do I sink.

Merc. And, to sink in it, should you burden love; Too great oppression for a tender thing.

Romeo. Is love a tender thing? it is too rough, Too tender by therules; and pricks like thorn.

Merc. If love be rough with you, be rough with love; Prick love for prickling, and you beat love down.

Give me a case to put my visage in: A visor for a visor! what care I

What curious eye doth quote deformities? Here are the becket brows shall blush for me.

Benv. Come, knock and enter; and no sooner in, But every man betake himself to his legs.

Romeo. A torch for me; let wantons light of heart Tickle the senseless rushes with their heels, For I am provok'd with a granshade phrase; I'll be a candle, holder, and look on.

The game was ne'er so fair, and I am done.

Merc. Tut, dun's the mouse, the constable's own word.

If thou art dun, we'll draw thee from the mire Of this shrive-reverence love, wherein thou stick'st up In the escort. Come, we burn daylight, ho!

Romeo. Nay, that's not so. I mean: in delay We waste our lights in vain, like las'nes by day. Take our good meaning, for our judgment sits Five times in that ere once in our five wits.

Romeo. And we mean well in going to this mask; But'tis no wit to go.

Merc. Why, may one ask?

Romeo. I dream'd a dream to-night. And so did I.

Merc. Well, what was yours?

Romeo. What I dreamers often lie.

Romeo. In bed asleep, while they do dream things true. [you.

Merc. O, then, I see Queen Mab hath been with She is the fairies' midwife, and she comes In shape no bigger than an agate-stone On the fore-finger of an alderman: Drawn with a team of little atonies Athwart men's noses as they lie asleep; Her waggon-spokes made of long spinners' legs, The cover of the wings of grasshoppers, The traces of the smallest spider's web, The cords the weaver's twines in the trees, Her whip of cricket's bone, the lash of him, Her waggoner a small grey-coated gnat, Not half so big as a round little worm Prick'd from the lazy finger of a maid; Her chariot is an empty hazel-nut Made by the joiner squirrel or old grub, Time out o' mind the fairies' coachmakers, And in this state she gallys night by night Through lovers' brains, and then they dream of [straight, O'er courtiers' knees, that dream on court sies O'er lawyers' fingers, who straight dream on fees, O'er ladies' lips, who straight on kisses dream, Which oft the angry Mab with blisters plagues, Because their breaths with sweetmeats tainted are: Sometimes she gallys o'er a courtier's nose, And then dreams he of smoking out a suit; And sometime comes she with a lithe-pig's tail Tickling a parson's nose as a lies asleep, Then dreams he of another benediction: Sometimes she driveth o'er a soldier's neck, And then dreams he of cutting foreign throats, Of breathes, ambuscades, Spanish blades, Of healths five-fathom deep; and then anon Drums in his ear, at which he starts and wakes, And being thus frighted swears a prayer or two And sleeps again. This is that very Mab That plats the manes of horses in the night, And laces the elfocks in foul shittish hairs, Which once untangled much misfortune bodes: This is the lag, when maids lie on their lach, That presses them and learns them first to bear, Making them women of good carriage: This is she— Peace, peace, Mercutio, peace! Thou talk'st of nothing.

Merc. True. I talk of dreams, Which are the children of an idle brain, Begot of nothing but vain fantasy, Which is as thin of substance as the air That needs no support, nor is sustained, But with the least wind ballets away.

Romeo. Which once untangled much misfortune bodes: This is the lag, when maids lie on their lach, That presses them and learns them first to bear, Making them women of good carriage: This is she— Peace, peace, Mercutio, peace! Thou talk'st of nothing.

Romeo. I fear, too early: for my mind misgives Some consequence yet hanging in the stars Shall bitterly begin his fearful date With this night's revels and expire the term Of a despaired life closed in my breast By some unlooked for snare of fortune's web. But I'll, that hath the steage of my course, Direct my sail! On, lusty gentlemen.

Benv. Strike, drum. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—A hall in Capulet's house.

Musicians waiting. Enter Servingmen, with napkins.

First Serv. Where's Potpan, that he helps not to take away? He shift a trencher! he scrape a trencher!

Sec. Serv. When good manners shall lie all in one or two men's hands and they unwashed too, 'tis a foul thing.

First Serv. Away with the joint-stools, remove the court-cupboard, look to the plate. Good thou, save me a piece of marchpane; and, as thou loves me, let the porter let in Susan Grindstone and Nell. Antony, and Potpan.

Sec. Serv. Ay, boy, ready.

First Serv. You are looked for and called for, asked for and sought for, in the great chamber.

Sec. Serv. We cannot be here and there too, Cheery, boys; be brisk awhile, and the longer liver take all.

Enter Capulet, with Juliet and others of his house, meeting the Guests and Maskers.

Cap. Welcome, gentlemen! ladies that have their toes
Ah, has my mistresses! which of you all
Will tell me to dance? she that makes dainty,
Shall I wear, hath corns; and I come hither now?
Welcome, gentlemen! I have seen the day
That I have worn a visor and could tell
A whispering tale in a fair lady's ear,
Such as would please: 'tis done, 'tis done, 'tis done:
You are welcome, gentlemen! Come, musicians,
A half, a half! give room! and foot it, girls.

[Music plays, and they dance.]

More light, you knaves: and turn the tables up,
And quench the fire, the room is grown too hot.
Ah, Sirrah, this unlook'd for sport comes well.
Now say, sir, how many guests are Capulet?
For you and I are past our dancing days;
How long is 't now since last yourself and I
Were in a mask?

Sec. Cap. By 't lady, thirty years.
Cap. What, man! 'tis not so much, 'tis not so much:
'Tis since the nuptial of Lucentio.
Come pentecost as quickly as it will,
Some five and twenty years; and then we mask'd.
Sec. Cap. 'Tis more, 'tis more: his son is elder, sir;
His son is thirty.

Cap. Will you, tell me that?
Sec. Cap. His son was but a ward two years ago.

Rom. [To a Serviceman] What lady is that, which doth enrich the hand
Of wonder knight?
Serv. I know not, sir.

Rom. O, she doth teach the torches to burn bright!
It seems she hangs upon the cheek of night.
Like a rich jewel in an Ethiope's ear;
Beauty too rich for use, for earth too dear!
So shows a snowy dove tropheo with crows,
As yonder lady o'er her fellows shows.
The measure done, I'll watch her place of stand,
And, touching hers, make blessed my rude hand.
Did my heart love till now? forswear it, sight!
For I ne'er saw true beauty till this night.

Tyb. This, by his voice, should be a Montague.
For choly may his rapier, bow, What dares the slave
Come hither, cover'd with an antic face,
To fleer and scorn at our solemnity?
Now, by the stock and honour of my kin,
To strike him dead! I hold it not a sin.

Cap. Why, how now, kinsman! wherefore storm you so?

Tyb. Uncle, this is a Montague, our foe,
A villain that is hither come in spite,
To scorn at our solemnity this night.

Cap. Young Romeo is it?

Tyb. 'Tis he, that villain Romeo.

Cap. Content thee, gentle coz, let him alone;
He bears him like a portly gentleman;
And, to say truth, Verona brags of him
To be a virtuous and well govern'd youth;
Would not for the wealth of all the town
Here in my house do him disapparagement:
Therefore be patient, take no note of him:
It is my will, the which if thou respect,
How a fair presence and put off these frowns,
An ill-beseeming semblance for a feast.

Tyb. It fits, when such a villain is a guest:
'1l not endure him.

Cap. He shall be endured: that, goodman boy! I say, he shall: go to;
I shall the master here, or you? go to.
You shall not endure him! God shall mend my soul!
You'll make a mutiny among my guests! You will set cock-a-hoop! You'll be the man! Tyb. Why, uncle, 'tis a shame.

Cap. Go to, go to; You are a saucy boy: is't so, indeed?
This trick may chance to sate you, I know what:
You must withdraw me; this intrusion is time.
Well said, my hearts! You are a prince; go:
Be quiet, or — More light, more light! For shame! I'll make you quiet. What, cheerly, my hearts!

Tyb. Patience performe with wilful cholear meeting
Makes my flesh tremble in their different greeting.
I will withdraw; but this intrusion shall
Now seeming sweet convert to bitter gall. [Exit.

Rom. [To Juliet] If I profane with my unwor-thest hand
This holy shrine, the gentle fine is this:
My lips, two blushing pilgrims, ready stand
To smooth that rough touch with a tender kiss.

Jul. Good pilgrim, you do wrong your hand too much,
Which mannerly devotion shows in this;
For saints have hands that pilgrims' hands do touch,
And palm to palm is holy palmer's kiss.

Rom. Have not saints lips, and holy palmer's too?

Jul. Ay, pilgrim, lips that they must use in prayer.

Rom. O, then, dear saint, let lips do what hands do;
They pray, grant thon, lest faith turn to despair.

Jul. Saints do not move, though grant for prayers' sake.

Rom. Then move not, while my prayer's effect I take.

Thus from my lips, by yours, my sin is purged.

Jul. Then have my lips the sin that they have took.

Rom. Sin from my lips? O trespass sweetly urg'd!
Give me my sin again.

Sec. Cap. You kiss by the book.

Nurse. Madam, your mother craves a word with

Rom. What is her mother? [you, sir.

Nurse. Marry, bachelor,
Her mother is the lady of the house,
And a good lady, and a wise and virtuous:
I nursed her daughter, that you talk'd withal;
I tell you, he that can lay hold of her
Shall have the chinks.

Rom. Is she a Capulet?

O dear account! my life is my foe's debt.

Jul. Away, be gone; the sport is at the best.

Rom. Ay, so far; the more is my unrest.

Cap. Nay, gentlemen, prepare not to be gone;
We have a trilling foolish banquet towards.
Is it e'en so? why, then, I thank you all;
I thank you, honest gentlemen; good night.
More torches here! Come on then, let's to bed.
Ah, sirrah, by my fay, it waxes late:
I'll to my rest.

[Exeunt all but Juliet and Nurse.

Jul. Come hither, nurse. What is yond gentleman?

Nurse. The son and heir of old Tiberio.

Jul. What's he that now is going out of door?

Nurse. Marry, that, I think, be young Petrucio.

Jul. What's he that follows there, that would dance nor dance?

Nurse. I know not.

Jul. Go, ask his name: if he be married,
My grave is likely men; it is a wedding bed.

Nurse. His name is Romeo, and a Montague;
The only son of your great enemy.

Jul. My only love sprung from my only hate!
Too early seen unknown, and known too late!
Prodigious birth of love it is to me,
That I must love a loathed enemy.

Nurse. What's this? what is this?

Jul. A rhyme I learn'd even now
Of one I danced withal. [One calls within 'Juliet,' Nurse.

Anon. anon!

Come, let's away; the strangers all are gone.

[Exeunt.]
ACT II.

PROLOGUE.

Enter Chorus.

Chor. Now old desire doth in his death-bed lie,
And young affection gaps to be his heir;
That fair for which love groan'd it for and would die,
With tender Juliet match'd, is now not fair.
Now Romeo is beloved and loves again,
Alas bewitched by the charm of looks,
But to his foe supposed he must complain,
And she stole love's sweet bait from fearful books:
Being held a foe, he may not have access
To breathe such vows as lovers use to swear;
And she as much in love, her means much less
To meet her new-beloved any where:
But passion lends them power, time means to meet,
Tempering extremities with extreme sweet. [Exit.

SCENE I.—A lane by the wall of Capulet's orchard.

Enter Romeo.

Rom. Can I go forward when my heart is here?
Turn back, dull earth, and find thy centre out.
[He climbs the wall, and leaps down within it.

Enter Benvolio and Mercutio.

Ben. Romeo! my cousin Romeo!

Mer. He is wise;
And, on my life, hath stol'n him home to bed.
Ben. He ran this way, and leap'd this orchard wall;
Call, good Mercutio.

Mer. Nay, I'll conjoin too.
Romeo! humours! madman! passion! lover!
Appear thou in the likeness of a sigh;
Speak but one rhyme, and I am satisfied;
Cry but 'Ay me!' pronounce but 'love!' and 'dove!'
Speak to my gossip Venus one fair word,
One nick-name for her parblind son and heir
Young Adam Cupid, he that shot so trim.
When King Cophetua loved the beggar's,
He heareth not, he stirreth not, he move;
The ape is dead, and I must conjoin
I conjoin thee by Rosaline's bright
By her high forehead and her sweet
By her fine foot, straight leg, and high
And the demesnes that thee:

Ben. An if he hear the

Mer. This cannot anger him.
To raise a spirit

Of some strange thing, surfacing there stand;
Till she%

That was my invocation
Is friends, and in his mistress' name
I must arise to raise him.

Lest, he hath hid himself among these
To be consorted with the humorous night;
Blind is his love and best fits the dark.

Mer. If love be blind, love cannot hit the mark.
Now will he sit under a medlar tree,
And wish his mistress were that kind of fruit
As maids call medlars, when they laugh alone.
O, Romeo, that I were, or that she were
An open et cetera, then a pox upon her!
Romeo, good night: I'll to my tracle-bed;
This field-bed is too cold for me to sleep:
Come, shall we go?

Ben. Go, then; for 'tis in vain
To seek him here that means not to be found.

Lactant.,

SCENE II.—Capulet's orchard.

Enter Romeo.

Rom. He jests at scars that never felt;
Juliet appears above his heart.
But, soft! what light through yon window breaks?
It is the east, and Juliet is the sun.
Arise, fair sun, and kill the envious
Who is already sick and pale with g
That thou her maid art far more fair
Be not her maid, since she is envio.
Her vestal livery is but sick and g
And none but fools do wear it; c
It is my lady, O, it is my love!
O, that she knew she were!
She speaks, yet she says nothing

Her eye discourses; I will answer that
I am too bold. 'Tis not to say;
Two of the fairest stars in heaven,
Having some business, d
To twinkle in their splendour return.
What if her eyes were dark in her head?
The brightness of her's makes shams those stars
As daylight doth

Wondrous bright streams so bright
That birds would wring their pinIONS but were not night.
See, how her eyes bespotic upon her hand!
O, that I were a fly on that hand,
That I might alight on check!

Jul. Ah me! she speaks,
O, speak like a mad angel! for thou art,
As I am sure I shall speak
As I am sure I shall speak
O Romeo, Romeo! wherefore art thou
Thee father and refuse thy name;
If thou wilt not, be but sworn my love,
And I'll no longer be a Capulet.
[This is]

Rom. [Aside]. Shall I hear more, or shall I speak at

Jul. Is but thy name that is my enemy;
Thou art thyself, though not a Montague.
What's Montague? it is not hard, nor foot,
Nor arm, nor face, nor any other part
Belonging to a name. O, be some other name!
What's in a name? that which we call a rose
By any other name would smell as sweet;
So Romeo would, were he not Romeo call'd,
Retain that dear perfection which he owes
Without that title. Romeo, doff thy name,
And for that name which is no part of thee
Take all my self.

Rom. I take thee at thy word:
Call me but love, and I'll be new baptized;
Henceforward I never will be Romeo.
[night

Jul. What man art thou that dost bescreen'd in

Rom. So stubblist on my counsel? By a name
I know not how to tell thee who I am:
My name, dear saint, is hateful to myself,
Because it is an enemy to thee:
Had I it written, I would tear the word.

Jul. My mistress hath not yet drunk a hundred words
Of that tongue's utterance, yet I know the sound:
Art thou not Romeo and a Montague?

Rom. Neither, fair saint, if either thee dislike.
Jul. How camest thou hither, tell me, and wherefore?
The walls are high and hard to climb,
And the place death, considering who thou art.
If any of my kinsmen find thee here.
ACT II.

ROMEO AND JULIET.

SCENE III.

Rom. With love’s light wings did I o’erleap these walls;
For stony limits cannot hold love out,
That strong love’s breaths can charge his icy埼.
Therefore thy children are no loss to me.

Jull. If they do see thee, they will murder thee.

Rom. Ache! there lies more peril in thine eye
Than twenty of their swords: look thou but sweet,
And I am proof against their enmity.

Jull. I could not for the world they saw thee here.

Rom. Have I night’s cloak to hide me from their sight;
And but thou love me, let them find me here:
My life were better ended by their hate.

Jull. Than death protracted, wanting of thy love.

Rom. By whose direction found’st thou out this place?

Rom. By love, who first did prompt me to inquire;
He lent me counsel and I lent him eyes.
I am no plot; yet, wert thou as fair
As that vast shore wash’d with the farthest sea,
I would adventure for such merchandise.

Jull. Thou know’st the mask of night is on my face,
Else would a maiden blush bepaint my cheek.
For that thou hast heard me speak to-night,
Faith would I dwell en form, fain, fain deny
What I have spoke: but farewell compliment!
Dost thou love me? I know thou wilt say ‘Ay,’
And I may thine words: yet, if thou swearst, I
Thou mayst prove false; at lovers’ perjuries,
They say, Jove laughs. O gentle Romeo,
If thou dost love, pronounce it faithfully:
Or if thou think’st I am too quickly won,
I’ll frown and be perverse and say thee nay,
So thou wilt woo; but else, not for the world.
In truth, fair Montague, I am too fond,
And therefore thou mayst think my ‘haviour light,
But trust me, gentlemen, I’ll prove more true
Than those that have more cunning to be strange.
I should have been more strange. I must confess,
But that thou overheardst, ere I was ware,
My true love’s passion: therefore pardon me,
And not imprint this yielding to light love,
Which the dark night hath so discovered.

Rom. Lady, by yonder blessed moon I swear
That tips with silver all these fruit-tree tops—
O, lady, that by yonder moon be constant
That monthly changes in her circled orb,
Methinks that thy love prove likewise variable.

Rom. What shall I swear by?

Jull. Do not swear at all; Or, if thou wilt, swear by thy gracious self,
Which is the god of my idolatry,
And I’ll believe thee.

Rom. If my heart’s dear love—

Jull. Well, do not swear: although I joy in thee,
I have no joy of this contract to-night:
It is too rash, too unadvis’d, too sudden.
To till the lightning, which doth cease to be
Ere one can say ‘It lightens,’ sweet, good night!
This bud of love, by summer’s ripening breath,
May prove a beauteous flower when next we meet.
Good night, good night! as sweet repose and rest
Come to thy heart as that within my breast!

Rom. O, wilt thou leave me so unsatisfied?

Jull. What satisfaction canst thou have to-night?

Rom. The exchange of thy love’s faithful vow for mine.

Jull. I gave thee mine before thou didst request
And yet I would it were to give again.

Rom. Wouldst thou withdraw it? for what purpose, love?

Jull. But to be frank, and give it thee again.
And yet I wish but for the thing I have:
My bounty is as boundless as the sea,
My love as deep; the more I give to thee,
The more I have, for both are infinite.

Nurse calls within.

I hear some noise within: dear love, adieu!

Anon, good nurse! sweet Montague, be true.
Stop a little, I will come again. [Exit above.

Rom. O blessed, blessed night! I am afraid,
Being in night, all this is but a dream,
Too flattering-sweet to be substantial.

Re-enter Juliet, above.

Jull. Three words, dear Romeo, and good night in-
If that thy bent of love be honourable, [deed.
Thy purpose marriage, send me word to-morrow,
By one that I’ll procure to come to thee,
Where and what time thou wilt perform the rite;
And all my fortunes at thy foot I’ll lay.
And follow thee my lord throughout the world.

Nurse. [Within] Madam! Madam!

Jull. I come, anon.—But if thou mean’st not well,
I do beseech thee—

Nurse. [Within] Madam!

Jull. By and by, I come—

To case thy suit, and leave me to my grief:
To-morrow will I send.

Rom. So thrive my soul—

Jull. A thousand times good night! [Exit, above.

Rom. A thousand times the worse, to want thy light.

Re-enter Juliet, above.

Jull. Hiss! Romeo, hiss! O, for a falconer’s
To lure this tassel-gentle back again! [voice.
Beneath is hoarse, and may not speak aloud;
Else would I tear the cave where Echo lies,
And make her airy tongue more hoarse than mine,
With repetition of my Romeo’s name.

Rom. It is my soul that calls upon my name;
How silver-sweet sound lovers’ tongues by night,
Like softest music to attending ears!

Jull. Romeo! Romeo! My dear?

Jull. At what o’clock to-morrow
Shall I send to thee?

Rom. At the hour of nine.

Jull. I will not fail: it is twenty years till then.
I have forgot why I did call thee back.

Rom. Let me stand here till thou remember it.

Jull. I shall forget, to have thee still stand there,
Remembering how I love thy company.

Rom. And I’ll still stay, to have thee still forget,
Forgetting any other home but this.

Jull. ’Tis almost morning: I should have thee
And yet no farther than a line’s breadth: I gone:
Who lets it hop a little from her hand,
Like a poor prisoner in his twisted gyves,
And with a silk thread plucks it back again,
So loving-jealous of his liberty.

Rom. I would I were thy bird.

Jull. Sweet, so would I.

Yet I should kill thee with much cherishing.
Good night, good night! parting is such sweet sor-
That I shall say good night till it be morning. [row,

Rom. Sleep dwell upon thine eyes, peace in thy breast!
Would I were sleep and peace, so sweet to rest!
Hence will I to my ghostly father’s cell.
His help to crave, and my dear hap to tell. [Exit.
Enter Romeo.

Rom. Good morrow, father.

Fri. L. Benedicite! What earl tongue so sweet saluted me? Young son, it argues a distemper’d head So soon to bid good morrow to thy bed: Care keeps his watch in every old man’s eye, And where care lodges, sleep will never lie; But where unbruised youth with unstuff’d brain Doth couch his limbs, there golden sleep doth reign: Therefore thy earliness doth me assure. Thou art up-roused by some distemperance; Or if not so, then here I hit it right. Our Romeo hath not been in bed to-night.

Rom. That last is true; the sweeter rest was mine.

Fri. L. God pardon sin! wast thou with Rosaline?—Romeo. With Rosaline, my ghostly father? no, I have not eaten of mine own heart’s love.

Fri. L. That’s my good son: but where hast thou been, then?

Rom. I’ll tell thee, ere thou ask it me again. I have been feasting with mine enemy, Where on a sudden one hath wounded me, That one hath wounded: both our remedies Within thy help and holy physic lies, I bear no hatred, blessed man, for, lo, My intercession likewise steads my foe.

Fri. L. Be plain, good son, and homely in thy drift; Riddling confession finds but riddling shrift.

Rom. Then plainly know my heart’s dear love is On the fair daughter of rich Capulet: Isset As mine on hers, so hers is set on mine; And all combined, save what thou must combine By holy marriage: when and where and how We met, we woul’d and made exchange of vow, I’ll not see as we pass; but this I pray, That thou consent to marry us to-day.

Fri. L. Holy Saint Francis, what a change is Is Rosaline, whose thou dost love so dear, There! So soon forsaken? young men’s love then lies Not truly in their hearts, but in their eyes. Jesus save thee, so full of light’s love! Hath wash’d thy sallow cheeks for Rosaline! How much salt water thrown away in waste, To season love, that of it doth not taste! The sun not yet thy sighs from heaven clears, Thy old gums ring yet in my ancient ears; Lo, how they flow! cry to the sky, and say Of an old tear that is not wash’d off yet:

If e’er thou wast thyself and these woes thine, Thou and these woes were all for Rosaline: then, And art thou changed? pronounce this sentence Women may love not, where it is not strength in men.

Rom. Thou child’st me off for loving Rosaline.

Fri. L. For doting, not for loving, pupil mine.

Rom. And bad’st mee bury love.

Fri. L. Not in a grave,

To try the world, and in another out to have.

Rom. I pray thee, chide not: she whom I love now Doth grace for grace and love for love allow; The other did not so.

Fri. L. O, she knew well. Thy love did read by rote and could not spell. But come, young waverer, come, go with me. In one respect I will not hold thee to thy word: For this alliance may so happy prove, To turn your households’ rancour to pure love,

Rom. O, let us hence; I stand on sudden haste.

Fri. L. Wisely and slow; they stumble that run fast.

SCENE IV.—A street.

Enter Benvolio and Mercutio.

Mer. Where the devil should this Romeo be? Come he not home to-night?

Ben. Not to his father’s: I spoke with his man.

Mer. Ah, is that same pale hard-hearted wench, that Rosaline,

Torments him so, that he will sure run mad.

Ben. Tybalt, the kinsman of old Capulet, Hath sent a letter to his father’s house.

Mer. A challenge, on my life.

Ben. Romeo will answer it.

Mer. Any man that can write may answer a letter.

Ben. Nay, he will answer the letter’s master, how he dares, being dared.

Mer. Alas, poor Romeo! he is already dead; stabbed with a white wench’s black eye; shot through the ear with a love-song; the very pin of his heart cleft with the blind bow-boy’s buttock-shaft: and is he a man to encounter Tybalt?

Ben. Why, what is Tybalt?

Mer. More than prince of cats, I can tell you. O, he is the courageous captain of complements. He fights as you sing prick-song, keeps time, distance, and proportion; rests me his minims rest, one, two, and the third in your bosom: the very butcher of a silk button, a dullist, a duellist; a gentleman of the very first house, of the first and second cause: ah, the immortal passado! the punto reverso! the Pen. Which was the Iest?

Mer. The box of such antic, hisping, affecting fantasticoes; these new tuners of accents! ‘By Jesus, a very good blade! a very tall man! a very good whore!’ Why, is not this a lamentable thing, grandison, that we should be thus afflicted with these strange flies, these fashion-mongers, these perdonia-m’s, who stand so much on the new form, that they cannot sit at ease on the old bench? O, their bones, their bones!

Enter Romeo.

Pen. Here comes Romeo, here comes Romeo.

Mer. Without his rod, like a dried herion; O flesh, flesh, how art thou fishified! Now is he for the numbers that Petrarch flew in: Laura to his lady was but a kitchen-wench; marry, she had a better love to be-zyrne her: Dido a dowdy; Cleopatra a million; Helen a holy: all their habits and harlots: Thisbe a gray eye or so, but not to the purpose. Signior Romeo, bon jour! there’s a French sulution to your French sop. You gave us the counterfeit fairly last night.

Rom. Good morrow to you both. Who counterfeiteth the slip, the slip; can you not conceive?
Act II.

Romeo and Juliet.

Scene IV.

Rom. Pardon, good Mercutio, my business was great; and in such a case as mine a man may strain courtesy.

Mer. That's as much as to say, such a case as yours constrains a man to bow in the hams. Rom. Meaning, to court'sy. Mer. Thou hast most kindly hit it. Rom. A most courteous exposition.

Nay, I am the very pink of courtesy.

Mer. Pink for flower.

Rom. Right.

Mer. Why, then is my pump well flowered.

Mer. Well said: follow me this jest now till thou hast worn out thy pump, that when the single sole of it is worn, the jest may remain after the wearing sole singular.

Rom. O single-soled jest, solely singular for the singleness! [fauls. Mer. Come between us, good Bonvolio; my wits Rom. Switch and spurs, switch and spurs; or I'll cry a match.

Mer. Nay, if thy wits run the wild-goose chase, I have done, for thou hast more of the wild-goose in one of thy day's than, I am sure, I have in my whole five: was I with you there for the goose? Rom. Thou wast never with me for any thing when thou was not there for the goose.

Mer. I will bite thee by the ear for that jest.

Rom. Nay, good goose, bite not.

Mer. Why, this is a very bitter sweating; it is a most sharp sauce.

Rom. And is it not well served in to a sweet goose? Mer. O, here's a wit of cheveril, that stretches from an inch narrow to an ell broad! Rom. I stretch it out for that word 'broad,' which added to the goose, proves thee far and wide a broad goose.

Mer. Why, is not this better now than growning for love? now art thou sociable, now art thou Romeo; now art thou what thou art, by art as well as by nature; for this drivelling love is like a great natural, that runs lolling up and down to hide his halfe in a hole.

Ben. Stop there, stop there. [the hair. Mer. Thou desirdest me to stop in my tale against Ben. Thou wouldst else have made thy tale large.

Rom. O, thou art deceived: I would have made it shorter; I was come to the whole depth of my tale; and meant, indeed, to occupy the argument no.

Rom. Here's goodly gear. [longer.

Enter Nurse and Peter.

Nurse. A sail, a sail!

Rom. Two, two; a shirt and a smock.

Nurse. Peter!

Peter. Anon!

Nurse. My fan, Peter.

Rom. Good Peter, to hide her face; for her fan's the fairer face.

Nurse. God ye good morrow, gentlemen.

Rom. God ye good-den, fair gentlewoman.

Nurse. Is it good-den?

Rom. 'Tis no less, I tell you, for the bawdy hand of the dial is now upon the prick of noon.

Nurse. Out upon you! what a man are you!

Rom. One, gentlewoman, that God hath made for himself to marry.

Nurse. By my troth, it is well said; 'for himself to marry'; quoth a? Gentlemen, can any of you tell me where I may find the young Romeo?

Rom. I can tell you; but young Romeo will be out when you have found him than he was when you sought him. I am the youngest of that name, for fault of a worse.

Nurse. You say well.

Rom. Yea, is the worst well? very well too, I' faith; wisely, wisely.

Nurse. If you be he, sir, I desire some confidence with you.

Rom. She will invite him to some supper.

Nurse. A bawd, a bawd, a bawd! So ho!

Rom. What hast thou found thine? Nurse. No bare, sir; unless a bare, sir, in a leuten pie, that is something stale and hour ere it be spent. [Sings.

An old bare hear, And an old bare hear, Is very good news; But a bare that is hour Is too much for a score, When it hours ere it be spent.

Romeo, will you come to your father's? we'll to dinner, thither.

Rom. I will follow you.

Nurse. Marry, farewell! I pray you, sir, what saucy merchant was this, that was so full of his ropey?

Rom. A gentleman. Nurse. That loves to hear himself talk, and will peep more in a minute than he will stand to in a month.

Nurse. And I speak any thing against me, I'll take him down, an' a were bolder than he is, and twenty such Jacks; and if I cannot, I'll find those that shall. Scurvy knife! I am none of his shift-gills; I am none of his shade-man, and I will stand by too, and suffer every knave to use me at his pleasure.

Peter. I saw no man use you at his pleasure; if I had, my weapon should quickly have been out, I warrant you: I dare draw as soon as another man, if I see occasion in a good quarrel, and the law on mine.

Nurse. Now, afore God, I am so vexed, that every part about me quivers. Scurvy knife! Pray you, sir, a word: and as I told you, my young lady made me inquire you out; what she bade me say, I will keep to myself: but first let me tell ye, if ye should lead her into a fool's paradise, as they say, it were a very gross kind of behaviour, as they say: for the gentlewoman is young; and, therefore, if you should deal double with her, truly it were an ill thing to be offered to any gentlewoman, and very weak dealing.

Rom. Nurse, commend me to thy lady and mistress. I will come at heart in. Nurse. Good heart, and, i' faith, I will tell her as much: Lord, Lord, she will be a joyful woman.

Rom. What wilt thou tell her, nurse? thou dost not mark me.

Nurse. I will tell her, sir, that you do protest: which, as I take it, is a gentlemanlike offer.

Rom. Did her devise Some means to come to shiff this afternoon; And there she shall at Friar Laurence' cell Be shirved and married. Here is for thy pains.

Nurse. No, truly, sir; not a penny.

Rom. Go to: I say you shall. [there.

Nurse. The afternoon, sir? well, she shall be. Rom. And stay, good nurse, behind the abbey wall: Within this hour my man shall be with thee, And bring thee cords made like a tackled stair; Which to the high top-gallant of my joy Must be my convoy in the secret night. Farewell; be trusty, and I'll quit thy pains: Farewell; commend me to thy mistress.

Nurse. Now God in heaven bless thee! I thank you, sir.

Rom. What say'st thou, my dear nurse? Nurse. Is your man secret? Did you ne'er hear Two may keep counsel, putting one away? [say. Rom. I warrant thee, my man's as true as steel.

Nurse. Well, sir; my mistress is the sweetest lady—Lord, Lord! when 't was a little prating thing:—O, there is a nobleman in town, one Paris, that would dain thy knife aside; but she, good soul, had as lief see a toad, a very toad, as see him. I anger her sometimes and tell her that Paris is the proper man; but, I'll warrant you, when I say so, she looks as pale as any clout in the verset world. Dost not rosemary andromeo begin both with a letter?
情景。Ay, nurse: what of that? both with an R.
Nurse. Ah, mocker! that's the dog's name; R is for the—No; I know it begins with some other letter:—and she hath the prettiest sentences of it, of you and rosemary, that it would do you good to hear it.
情景. Commend me to thy lady.
Nurse. Ay, a thousand times. [Exit Romeo.] Peter! Pet. Anon?
Nurse. Peter, take my fan, and go before, and pace. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Capulet's orchard.

Enter Juliet.

Jul. The clock struck nine when I did send the
In half an hour she promised to return. [nurse; Perchance she cannot meet me; that's not so.
O, she is late! love's heralds should be thoughts,
Which ten times fatter glide than the sun's beams,
Driving back shadows over louring hills:
Therefore do nimble-pinion'd doves draw love,
And therefore hath the wind-swift Cupid wings.
Now is the sun upon the highest hill
Of this day's journey, and from nine till twelve
Is three long hours, yet she is not come.
Hast she affections and warm youthful blood,
She would be as swift in motion as a ball:
My words would bandy her to my sweet love,
And his to me:
But old folks, many feign as they were dead;
Unwieldy, slow, heavy and pale as lead.
O God, she comes!

Enter Nurse and Peter.

Jul. Honey nurse, what news?
Peter. He's not with me; I sent thy man away.
Nurse. Peter, stay at the gate. [Exit Peter.]
Jul. Now, good sweet nurse,— O Lord, why look'st thou sad?
Though news be sad, yet tell them merrily;
If good, thou shamesst the music of sweet news
By playing it to me with so sorry a face.
Nurse. I am a weary, give me leave awhile:
Fie, how my bones ache! what a jaunt have I had!
Jul. I would thou hadst my bones, and I thy news.
Nay, come, I pray thee, speak; good, good nurse, speak.
Nurse. Jesu, what haste? can you not stay awhile?
Do you not see that I am out of breath?
Jul. How art thou out of breath, when thou hast
To say to me that thou art out of breath? [breath
The excuse that thou dost make in this delay
Is longer than the tale thou dost excuse.
Is thy heart good, or bad? answer to that;
Say either, and I'll stay the circumstance;
Let me be satisfied, is't good or bad?
Nurse. Well, you have made a simple choice; you know not how to choose a man: Romeo! no, no; not he;
though his face be better than any man's, yet his leg excels all men's; and for a hand, and a foot, and a body, though they be not to be talked on, yet they art past compare: he is not the flower of courtesy, but, I'll warrant him, as gentle as a lamb.
Go thy ways, wench; serve God. What, have you dined at home?
Jul. No, no; but all this did I know before.
What says he of our marriage? what of that?
Nurse. Lord, how my head aches! what a head have I!

It beats as it would fall in twenty pieces.
My back o' t' other side; O my back, my back!
Bear bawd your heart for sending me about.
To catch my death with jaunting up and down!
Jul. I' faith, I am sorry that thou art not well.
Sweet, sweet, sweet nurse, tell me, what says my love?
Nurse. O your love says, like an honest gentleman, and a courtier, and a kind, and a handsome, and,
I warrant, a virtuous.—Where is your mother?
Jul. Where is my mother? why, she is within;
Where should she be? How oddly thou repliest!
'Your love says, like an honest gentleman,
Where is your mother?'
Nurse. O God's lady dear!
Are you so hot? marry, come up, I trow;
Is this the poltice for my aching bones?
Henceforward do your messages yourself.
Jul. Here's such a coil! come, what says Romeo?
Nurse. Have you got leave to go to thistoy-day?
Jul. I have.
Nurse. Then lie he you hence to Friar Laurence.
There stays a husband to make you a wife:
Now comes the wanton blood up in your cheeks,
They'll be in scarlet straight at any news.
Hie you to church; I must another way,
To fetch a ladder, by the sun's beams.
Must climb a bird's nest soon when it is dark:
I am the drudge and toil in your delight,
But you shall bear the burden soon at night.
Go: I'll to dinner; hie you to the cell.
Jul. Hie to high fortune! Honest nurse, farewell. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—Friar Laurence's cell.

Enter Friar Laurence and Romeo.

Fri. L. So smile the heavens upon this holy act,
That after hours with sorrow she endure not!
Rom. Amen, amen! but come what sorrow can,
It cannot countervail the exchange of joy
That one short minute gives me in her sight:
Do thou but close our hands with holy words,
Then love-devouring death doth what he dare;
It is enough I may but call her mine.
Fri. L. These violent delights have violent ends
And in their triumph die, like fire and powder,
Which as they kiss consume; the sweetest honey
Is loathsome in his own deliciousness.
And in the taste confounds the appetite:
Therefore love moderately: long love doth so;
Too swift arrives as tardy as too slow.

Enter Juliet.

Here comes the lady: O, so light a foot
Will ne'er wear out the everlasting flint:
A lover may bestride the gossamer;
That idles in the wanton summer air,
And yet not fall; so light is vanity.
Jul. Good even to my ghostly confessor. [both.
Fri. L. Romeo shall thank thee, daughter, for us
Jul. As much to him, else is his thanks too much.
Rom. Ah, Juliet, if the measure of thy joy
Be heaped like mine and that thy skill be more
To blazon it, then sweeten with thy breath
This neighbour air, and let rich music's tongue
Unfold the imagined happiness that both
Receive in either by this dear encounter.
Jul. Come, copyright, and let us hence unknown in words,
Bags of his substance, not of ornament;
They are but beggars that can count their worth;
But my true love is grown to such excess
I cannot sum up sum of half my wealth.
Fri. L. Girl, come with me, and we will make Short work:
For, by your leaves, you shall not stay alone
Till holy church incorporate two in one. [Exeunt.]
ACT III.

SCENE I.—A public place.

Enter Mercutio, Benvolio, Page, and Servants.

Mer. Pray, let's meet. I am heartily tired with this heat; and by the operation of the second cup draws it on the drawer, when indeed there is no need.

Ben. I am like such a fellow?

Mer. Nay, an there were two such, we should have none shortly, for one would kill the other. Thou! why, thou wilt quarrel with a man that hath a hair more, or a hair less, in his beard, than thou hast; thou wilt quarrel with a man for cracking nuts, having no other reason but because thou hast hazel eyes: what eye but such an eye would spy out such a quarrel? Thy head is as full of quarrels as an egg if full of meal, and yet thy head hath been beaten as addle as an egg for quarrelling: thou hast quarrelled with a man for coughing in the street, because he hath wakened thy dog that hath lain asleep in the sun; didst thou not fall out with a tailor for wearing his new doublet before Easter? with another, for tying his new shoes with old riband? and yet thou wilt tutor me from quarrelling.

Ben. An I were so apt to quarrel as thou art, any man should buy the fee-simple of my life for an hour and a quarter.

Mer. The fee-simple! O simple!

Ben. By my head, here come the Capulets.

Mer. By my heel, I care not.

Enter Tybalt and others.

Tyb. Follow me close, for I will speak to them. Gentlemen, good den; a word with one of you.

Mer. And but one word with one of us. couple it with something; make it a word and a blow.

Tyb. You shall find me apt enough to that, sir, and I will give my word as good as yours.

Mer. Could you not take some occasion without Tyb. Mercutio, thou consort'st with Romeo.—

Mer. Consort! what, dost thou make minstrels? an thou make minstrels of us, look to hear nothing but discord: here’s my fiddlestick: here’s that shall make you dance. "Zounds, consort!"

Ben. We talk here in the public humour of men: Either withdraw unto some private place, And reason coldly of your grievances.

Or else depart: here all eyes gaze on us. [gaze]

Mer. Men’s eyes were made to look, and let them I will not budge for no man’s pleasure, I.

Enter Romeo.

Tyb. Well, peace be with you, sir: here comes my man. [cry:]

Mer. But I’ll be hang’d, sir, if he wear your livery. Marry, go before to field, he’ll be your follower; Your worship in that sport may call him by name. Tyb. Romeo, the hate I bear thee can afford No better term than this,—thou art a villain.

Rom. Tybalt, the reason that I have to love thee Doth much excuse the appertaining rage That such a greetings wilt am I none. Therefore hear one: I see thou hast bestow’d on me not. Tyb. Boy, this shall not excuse the injuries That thou hast done me; therefore turn and draw.

Rom. I do protest, I never injured thee, But love thee better than thou canst devise, Till thou shalt know the reason of my love: And so, good Capulet,—which name I tender As dear as I received it of my mother,— Merc. O calm, dishonourable, vile submission! Alla stoecata carries it away.

Tyb. Tybalt, you rat-catcher, will you walk?

Rom. What wouldst thou have with me?

Mer. Good King of cats, nothing but one of your nine lives; I mean to make bold withal, and, as you shall use me hereafter, dry-heat the rest of the eight. Will you pluck your sword out of his picher by the ears? make haste, lest mine be about your ears ere it be out.

Tyb. I am for you. [Drawing.]

Rom. Gentile Mercutio, put thy rapier up.

Mer. Come, sir, your passado. [They fight.]

Rom. Draw, Benvolio; beat down their weapons. Gentlemen, for shame, forbear this outrage! Tybalt, Mercutio, the prince expressly hath Forbidden brawling in Verona streets: Hold, Tybalt! good Mercutio! [Tybalt under Romeo's arm stabs Mercutio, and flies with his followers.]

Mer. I am hurt. A plague o' both your houses! I am sped. Is he gone, and hath nothing? [Exit Page.]

Rom. Courage, man; the hurt cannot be much. Mer. No, 'tis not so deep as a well, nor so wide as a church-door; but 'tis enough. I'll serve: ask for me to-morrow, and you shall find me a grave man. I am peppered, I warrant, for this world. A plague o' both your houses! 'Zounds, a dog, a rat, a mouse, a cat, to scratch a man to death! a brag- gart, a rogue, a villain, that fights by the book of arithmetic! Why the devil came you between us? I was hurt under your arm.

Rom. I thought all for the best.

Mer. Help me into some house. Benvolio, Or I shall faint. A plague o' both your houses! They have made worms' meat of me: I have it, And somaily too: your houses shall be cursed.

[Exeunt Mercutio and Benvolio.]

Rom. This gentleman, the prince’s near ally, My very friend, hath got his mortal hurt In my behalf: my reputation stain’d With Tybalt’s slander.—Tybalt, that an hour Hath been in my kinsman! O sweet Juliet, Thy beauty hath made me effeminate And in my temper soot’d valour’s steel!

Re-enter Benvolio.

Ben. O Romeo, Romeo, brave Mercutio’s dead! That gallant spirit hath aspired the clouds, Which too untimely here did scorn the earth. Rom. This day’s black fate on more days doth de- cline, This but begins the wo’e, others must end. [head] Ben. Here comes the furious Tybalt back again.

Rom. Alive, in triumph! and Mercutio slain! Away to heaven, my soul!—and let it be! And fire-eyed fury be my conduct now!

Re-enter Tybalt.

Now, Tybalt, take the villain back again, That late thou gavest me: for Mercutio’s soul Is but a type of mine; that崔 now is gone. Staying for thine to keep him company: Either thou, or I, or both, must go with him.
Tyb. Thou, wretched boy, that didst consort him,
Shalt with him hence. [Exeunt.]

Rom. This shall determine that. [They fight; Tybalt falls.

Ben. Romeo, away, be gone!
The citizens are up, and Tybalt slain.
Stant not amazed; the prince will doom thee death,
If thou art taken: hence, be gone, away!
Rom. O, I am fortune's fool!
[Exit Romeo.

Enter Citizens, &c.

First Cit. Which way ran he that kill'd Mercutio?
Tybalt, that murderer, which way ran he?
Ben. There lies that Tybalt.
Up, sir, go with me;
I charge thee in the prince's name, obey.

Enter Prince, attended; Montague, Capulet,
Their Wives, and others.

Prin. Where are the vile beginers of this fray?
Ben. O noble prince, I can discover all
The unheky manage of this fatal brawl:
There lies the man, slain by young Romeo,
That slew thy kinsman, brave Mercutio.

La. Cap. Tybalt, my cousin! O my brother's child!
O prince! O cousin! In blood! O, the blood is as silt
Of my dear kinsman! Prince, his thou art true,
For blood of ours, shed blood of Montague.
O cousin, cousin!
Prin. Benvolio, who began this bloody fray?
Ben. Tybalt, here slain, whom Romeo's hand did slay:
Romeo that spoke him fair, bade him bethink
How nice the quarrel was, and urged withal
Your high displeasure: all this uttered
With gentle breath, calm look, leaves humbly bow'd,
Could not take truce with the unruly spleen
Of Tybalt dealt to peace, but that he fills
With piercing steel at bold Mercutio's breast,
Who, all as hot, turns deadly point to point,
And, with a martial scorn, with one hand beats
Cold death aside, and with the other sends
It back to Tybalt, whose dexterity
Retorts it: Romeo he cries aloud, [tongue;
"Hold, friends! part!" as swifter than his
His agile arm beats down their fatal points,
And 'twixt them rushes; underneath whose arm
An envious thrust from Tybalt hit the life
Of stout Mercutio, and then Tybalt fled;
But by and by comes back to Romeo,
Who has his kinsman's heart in revenge,
And to 't they go like lightning, for ere I
Could draw to part them, was stout Tybalt slain,
And, as he fell, did Romeo turn and fly.
This is the truth, or let Benvolvo die.

La. Cap. He is a kinsman to the Montague;
Affection makes him false: he speaks not true:
Some twenty of them fought in this black strife,
And all those twenty could but kill one life,
I beg for justice, which thou, prince, must give;
Romeo slew Tybalt, Romeo must not live.
Prin. Romeo slew him, he slew Mercutio;
Who now the price of his dear blood doth owe?
Mon. Not Romeo, prince, he was Mercutio's friend.
His fault concludes but what the law should end,
The life of Tybalt.

Rom. [aside.] And for that offence
We immediately do exiles him hence:
I have an interest in your hate proceeding,
My blood for your rude brawls doth lie a-bleeding;
But I'll amerce you with so strong a fine
That you shall all repent the less of mine: I will neither patch nor repair your breaches;
Nor tears nor prayers shall purchase our abuses;
Therefore use none: let Romeo hence in haste.

Else, when he's found, that hour is his last.
Bear hence this body and attend our will:
Mercy but murders, pardoning those that kill.
[Exeunt.

SCENE II. — Capulet's orchard.

Enter Juliet.

Jul. Gallop space, you fiery-footed steeds,
Towards Phæbus' lodging; such a waggoner
As Phæbus would whip you to the west,
And bring in cloudy night immediately.
Spread thy close curtain, love-performing night,
That runaway's eyes may wink, and Romeo
Leapt to these arms, untalk'd of and unseen.
Lovers can see to do their amorous rites:
By their own beauties; or, if love be blind,
It best agrees with night.
Come, civil night,
Thou sober-suited matron, all in black,
And learn me how to lose a winning match,
Play'd for a pair of stainless maidenhoods:
Hood my unmanned blood, bathing in my cheeks,
With th'black mitable; till strange love, grown bold,
Think true love acted simple modesty.
Come, night; come, Romeo; come, thou day in night;
For thou wilt lie upon the wings of night
Whiter than new snow on a raven's back. [night.
Come, gentle night, come, loving, black-brow'd
Give me my Romeo; and, when he shall die,
Take him and cut him out in little stars,
And he will make the face of heaven so fine
That all the world will be in love with night
And pay no worship to the garish sun.
O, I have bought the mansion of a love,
But not possess'd it, and, though I am sold,
Not yet enjoy'd: so tedious is this day
As is the night before some festival
To an impatient child that hath new robes
And may not wear them. O, here comes my nurse,
And she brings news: and every tongue that speaks
But Romeo's name speaks heavenly eloquence.

Enter Nurse, with cords.

Now, nurse, what news? What hast thou there?
the cords
That Romeo bid thee fetch?

Nurse. Ay, ay, the cords.
[Throws them down.

Jul. Ay me! what news? why dost thou wring thy hands?
[dead!

Nurse. Ah, well-a-day! he's dead, he's dead, he's
We are undone, lady, we are undone;
Alack the day! It's my dearest friend; he's dead!
Jul. Can heaven be so envious?

Nurse. Romeo can,
Though heaven cannot: O Romeo, Romeo!
Who ever would have thought it? Romeo!

Jul. What devil art thou, that dost torment me?
This torture should be roar'd in dismal hell. [Itthus
Hast Romeo slain himself? say thou but 'I,'
And that bare word 'I' shall poison more
Than the death-darting eye of cockatrice;
I am not I, if there be such an I;
Or those eyes shut, that may the answer 'I.'
If he be slain, say 'I'; or if not, no;
Brief sounds determine of my weal or woe.
[eyes,—

Nurse. I saw the wound, I saw it with mine
God save the mark! — here on his maine breast;
A piteous corse, a bloody piteous corse;
Pale, pale as ashes, all bedaubed with blood.
Ain god so bold? it's wounded at the sight.
Jul. O, break, my heart! poor bankrupt, break at
To prison, eyes, ne'er look on liberty! [once
Vile earth, to earth resign: end motion here:
And thou and Romeo press one heavy bier!

Nurse. [weeping.] Thrice hath the day for thee.
O courteous Tybalt! honest gentleman!
That ever I should live to see thee dead!

Romeo and Juliet. Scene III.

Jul. What storm is this that blows so contrary?
Is Romeo slaughter'd, and Tybalt dead?
My dear-loved cousin, and my dearest lord?
Then, dreadful trumpet, sound the general doom!
For who is living, if those two are gone?

Romeo that kill'd him, he is banish'd: [blood]

Jul. O God! did Romeo's hand shed Tybalt's

"Nurse. It did; it did; alas the day, it did!

Jul. O serpent heart, hid with a flowering face!
Did ever dragon keep so fair a cave?
Beautiful tyrant! foul unkind angel!
Dove-feather'd raven! wolvish-ravening lamb!
Despised substance of distainest show!
Just opposite to what thou justly seem'st,
A damned saint, an honourable villain!
O nature, what hadst thou to do in hell,
When thou didst bow'r the spirit of a friend
In mortal paradise of such sweet flesh?
Was ever book containing such vile matter
So fairly bound? O, that deceit should dwell
In such a gorgeous palace!

"Nurse. There's no trust,
No faith, no honesty in men; all perjured,
All forsworn, all naught, all dissembler.
Ah, where's my man? give me some aqua vitae;
These griefs, these woes, these sorrows make me old.
Sume to come to Romeo!

Jul. Blister'd be thy tongue
For such a wish! he was not born to shame:
Upon his brow shame is ashamed to sit;
For 'tis a throne where honour may be crown'd
Sole monarch of the universal earth.
O, what a beast was I to chide at him!

"Nurse. Will you speak well of him that kill'd your friend?

Jul. Shall I speak ill of him that is my husband?
Ah, poor my lord, what tongue shall smooth thy name,
When I, thy three-hours wife, have mangled it?
But, wherefore, villain, didst thou kill my cousin?
That villain cousin would have kill'd my husband;
Back, foolish tears, back to your native spring;
Your tributary drops belong to woe,
Which you, mistaking, offer up to joy.
My husband lives, that Tybalt would have slain;
And Tybalt's dead, that would have slain my husband;

All this is comfort: wherefore weep I then?
Some word there was, worse than Tybalt's death,
That murder'd me: I would forget it fast;
But, O, it presseth to my memory,
Like damned guilty deeds to sinners' minds:
'Thy'll be dead, and Romeo —banish'd,'
That 'banish'd,' that one word 'banish'd,'
Hath slain ten thousand Tybals. Tybalt's death
Was woe enough, if it had ended there;
Or, if you woe delights in fellowship
And needly will be rank'd with other griefs,
Why follow not, when she said, 'Tybalt's dead,'
Thy father, or thy mother, nay, or both,
Which modern lamentation might have moved?
But with a rear-ward following Tybalt's death,
'Romeo is banish'd,' to speak that word,
Is father, mother, Tybalt, Romeo, Juliet,
All slain, till dead. 'Romeo is banish'd,'
There is no end, no limit, measure, bound,
In that word's death; no words can that woe sound.
Where is my father, and my mother, nurse?

"Nurse. Wakening and waiting over Tybalt's corpse:
Will you go to them? I will bring you thither.

Jul. Wilt thou thy wounds with tears; mine shall be spent.
When theirs are dry, for Romeo's banishment.
Take up those cords; poor ropes, you are beguiled,
Both you and I; for Romeo is exil'd:
He made you for a highway to my bed;

But I, a maid—die maiden-widow'd.
Come, cords, come, nurse; I'll to my wedding-bed;
And death, not Romeo, take my maidenhead!

"Nurse. He to his chamber; I'll find Romeo
To comfort you! I wot well where Juliet
Hath said she will be here at night:
I'll to him; he is hid at Laurence cell.

Jul. O, find him! give this ring to my true knight,
And bid him come to take his last farewell.

[Exeunt.

Exeunt Romeo.

Rom. Father, what news? what is the prince's doom?
What doth this passion crave acquaintance at my hand,
That I yet know not? [Fri. L.* Too familiar
Is my dear son with such sour company:
I bring thee tidings of the prince's doom.

Rom. What less than dooms-day is the prince's doom?

Rom. Ha, banishment! be merciful, say 'death,'
For exile hath more terror in his look,
Much more than death; do not say 'banishment.'

Fri. L. Hence from Verona art thou banish'd:
Be patient: for the world is wide.

Rom. There is no world without Verona walls,
But purgatory, torture, hell itself.
Hence-banish'd is banish'd from the world,
And world's exile is death: then banish'd,
Is death mis-term'd: calling death banishment,
Thou cut'st thy head off with a golden axe,
And smilest upon the stroke that murders me.

Fri. L. O deadly sin! O rude unthankfulness!
Thy fault our law calls death; but the kind prince,
Taking thy part, hath rush'd aside the law,
And turn'd that black word death to banishment:
This is dear mercy, and thou seest it not.

Rom. 'Tis torture, and not mercy: heaven is here,
Where Juliet lives: and every cat and dog
And little mouse, every unworthy thing,
Live here in heaven and may look on her;
But Romeo may not: more validity,
More honourable state, more courtship lives
In currant-flies than Romeo: they may seize
On the white wonder of dear Juliet's hand
And steal immortal blessing from her lips,
Who, even in pure and vestal modesty,
Still blush, as thinking their own kisses sin;
But Romeo may not; he is banish'd:
Flies may do this, but I from this must fly:
They are free men, but I am banish'd.
And say'st thou yet that exile is not death?
Hast thou no poison mix'd, no sharp-hand knive,
No sudden mean of death, though he'er so mean,
But 'banish'd' to kill me? —'banish'd'?
O friar, the damned use that word in hell;
Howlings attend it: how hast thou the heart,
Being a divine, a ghostly confessor,
A sin-absolver, and my friend profess'd,
To mangle me with that word —'banish'd'?

Fri. L. Thou fond mad man, hear me but speak A word; To comfort thee, though thou art banish'd.
ROMEO AND JULIET.

ACT III.

Fri. L. Arise; one knocks; good Romeo, hide thyself.

Fri. L. Where there is no breath of heart-sick groans, Mist-like, intold me from the search of eyes.

Fri. Lark, how they knock! Who's there?

Fri. L. There go my study. And by and by! God's will, What simplicity is! I come, I come!

Fri. L. Who knocks so hard? whence come you? what's your will?

Nurse. [Kneels] Let me come in, and you shall know my errand; I come from Lady Juliet.

Fri. L. Welcome, then.

Enter Nurse.

Nurse. O holy friar, O, tell me, holy friar, Where is my lady's lord, where's Romeo?

Fri. L. There on the ground, with his own tears made drunk.

Nurse. O, he is even in my mistress' case, Just in her case! O woful sympathy! Piteous preachment! Even so lies she, Blubbering and weeping, weeping and blubbering. Stand up, stand up; stand, an you be a man: For Juliet's sake, for her sake, rise and stand; Why should you fall into so deep an O? Romeo. Nurse. Ah sir! ah sir! Well, death's the end Romeo. Spakest thou of Juliet? is she what is with her? Doth she not think me an old murderer, Now I have stain'd the childhood of our joy With blood removed but little from her own? Where is she? and how doth she? and what says My conceal'd lady to our cancel'd love? [weeps.

Nurse. O, she says nothing, sir, but weeps and And now falls on her bed; and then starts up, And Tybalt calls; and then on Romeo cries, And then down falls again.

Fri. L. As if that name, Shot from the deadly level of a gun, Did murder her; as that name's cursed hand Murder'd her kinsman. O, tell me, friar, tell me, In what vile part of this anatomy Doth my name lodge? tell me, that I may sack The hateful mansion.

Fri. L. [Drawing his sword.] Art thou a man? thy form cries out thy art: Thy tears are womanish; thy wild acts denote The unreasonable fury of a beast: Unseemly woman in a seeming man! Or ill-beseeming beast in seeming both! Thou hast done this deed; by my holy order, I thought thy disposition better temper'd. Hast thou slain Tybalt? wilt thou slay thyself? And slay thy lady too that lives in thee, By doing damned hate upon thyself?

Fri. L. Have not thou on thy thirst, the heaven, and earth? Since birth, and heaven, and earth, all three do meet In thee at once: which thou at once wouldst lose. Fie, fie, thou shamest thy shape, thy love, thy wit; Which, like a usurer, abound'st in all, And wast not in that true use indeed Which shouldst with true occupation dye, thy wit, thy noble shape is but a form of wax, Disgressing from the valour of a man; Thy dear love sworn but hollow perjury, Killing that love which thou hast vow'd to cherish; Thy wit, that ornament to shape and love, And in the dis-shape of the ornament, Tho' like powder in a skillless soldier's flask, Is set a-fire by thine own ignorance, And thou dismember'd with thine own defence. What, rouse thee, man! thy Juliet is alive, For whose dear sake thou wast but lately dead; There art thou happy: Tybalt would kill thee, But thou slew'st Tybalt: there art thou happy too: The law that threaten'd death becomes thy friend And turns it to exile; there art thou happy: A pack of blessings lights upon thy back; Happiness courts thee in her best array; But, like a misbehaved and sullen wench, Thou pout'st upon thy fortune and thy love: Take heed, take heed, for such die miserable. Go, get thee to thy love, as was decreed, Ascend her chamber, hence and comfort her: But look thou stay not till the watch be set, For then thou canst not pass to Mantua: Where thou shalt live, till we can find a time To blaze your marriage, reconcile your friends, Beg pardon of the prince, and call thee back With twenty hundred thousand times more joy Than thou went'st forth in lamentation. Go before, and tender welcome to thy lady; And bid her hasten all the house to bed, Which heavy sorrow makes them apt unto: Romeo is coming.

Fri. L. [night] Nurse. O Lord, I could have stay'd here all the To hear good counsel: O, what learning is! My lord, I'll tell my lady you will come. Rome. Do so, and bid my sweet prepare to chide. Nurse. Here, sir, a ring she bid me give you, sir: He you, make haste, for it grows very late. [Exit. Rome. How well my comfort is revived by this! Fri. L. Go hence; good night; and here stands

SCENE IV.—A room in Capulet's house.

Enter Capulet, Lady Capulet, and Paris.

Cap. Things have fall'n out, sir, so unluckily, That we have had no time to move our daughter: Look you, she loved her kinsman Tybalt dearly, And so did I: — We, we were born to die. "Tis very late she 'd not come down to-night: I promise you, but for your company, I would have been a-bed an hour ago.

Par. These times of woe afford no time to woo. Madam, good night: commend me to your daughter.

Lou. Cap. I will, and know her mind early to- night she is mew'd up to her heaviness.

Cap. Sir Paris, I will make a desparate tender Of my child's love: I think she will be ruled In all respects by me; ay, more, I doubt it not.
Scene V. — Capulet’s orchard.

Enter Romeo and Juliet above, at the window.

Jul. Wilt thou be gone? it is not yet near day:
It was the nightingale, and not the lark,
That pierced the fearful hollow of thine ear;
Nightly she sings on yon pomegranate-tree:
Believe me, love, it was the nightingale.
Rom. It was the lark, the herald of the morn,
No nightingale: look, what envious streaks
Do lash the airy simples with th’ irrepressible
Night’s candles burnt out and jocund day
Stands tip-top on the misty mountain tops.
I must be gone and live, or stay and die.
Jul. You light is not day-light, I know it, I:
It is some meteor that the sun exhales,
To be to thee this night a torch-bearer,
And light thee on thy way to Mantua:
Therefore stay yet; thou need’st not to be gone.
Rom. Let me be ta’en, let me be put to death;
I am content, so thou wilt have it so.
I’ll say thou art not the morning’s eye,
’Tis but a pale redness of Cytherea’s brow;
Nor that is not the lark, whose notes do beat
The vanity heen so high on our heads:
I have more care to stay than will to go:
Come, death, and welcome! Juliet wills it so.
How is ‘t, my soul? let’s talk; it is not day.
Jul. It is, it is: hie hence, be gone, away!
It is the lark that sings so out of tune,
Straining harsh discords and unpleasant sharps.
Some say the lark makes sweet division;
This doth not so, for she divideth us:
Some say the lark and o’erhead toad change eyes;
O, no, nor those who have exchanged voices too!
Since arm from arm that voice doth us affray,
Hunting thee hence with hunt’s-up to the day.
O, now be gone; more light and light it grows.
Rom. More light and light; more dark and dark our woes!

Enter Nurse, to the chamber.

Nurse. Madam!
Jul. Nurse? [Ber: Nurse. Your lady mother is coming to your cham-
The day is broke: be wary, look about.]
Nurse. What shall I say to her, my lord, when she shall have lived out life?
Rom. Farewell, farewell! one kiss, and I’ll de-send.
Jul. Art thou gone so? love, lord, ay, husband, friend?
I must hear from thee every day in the hour,
For in a minute there are many days:
O, by this count I shall be much in years
Ere I again behold my Romeo!
Rom. Farewell!
I will omit no opportunity
That may convey my greetings, love, to thee.
Jul. O, think’st thou we shall ever meet again?
Rom. I doubt it not; and all these woes shall
For sweet discourses in our time to come.
[Serve Jul. O God, I have an ill-dining soul!
Methinks I see thee now, thou art below,
As one dead in the bottom of a tomb:
Either my eyesight fails, or thou look’st pale.
Rom. And trust me, love, in my eye so do you;
Dry sorrow drinks our blood. Addien, addien! [Exit.
Jul. O fortune, fortune! all men call thee fickle:
If thou art fickle, what dost thou with him
That is renowned for faith? Be fickle, fortune;
For then, I hope, thou wilt not keep him long;
But send him back.
La. Cap. [Within] No, daughter! are you up?
Jul. Who is ‘t that calls? is it my lady mother?
Is she not down so late, or up so early?
What unaccustom’d cause procures her litter?
Enter Lady Capulet.
La. Cap. Why, how now, Juliet!
Jul. Madam, I am not well.
La. Cap. Evermore weeping for your cousin’s death?
What wilt thou wash him from his grave with tears?
An if thou couldst, thou couldst not make him live;
Therefore, have done: some grief shows much of love.
But much of grief shows still some want of wit.
Jul. Yet let me weep for such a feeling loss.
La. Cap. So shall you feel the loss, but not the Which you weep for.
Jul. Feeling so the loss, I cannot choose but ever weep the friend.
La. Cap. Well, girl, thou wwest not so much for his death,
As that the villain lives which slaughter’d him.
Jul. What villain, madam?
Jul. [Aside] Villain and he be many miles asun-
God pardon him! I do, with all my heart; [ber.—
And yet no more than doth relieve my heart.
La. Cap. That is, because the traitor murderer lives.
[Hands: Jul. Ay, madam, from the reach of these my Would none but I might venge my cousin’s death!£
La. Cap. We will have vengeance for it, fear
Jul. then kid.
Then weep no more. I’ll send to one in Mantua,
Where that same banish’d runagate doth live,
Shall give him such an unaccustom’d dram,
That he shall soon keep Tybalt company:
And then, I hope, thou wilt be satisfied.
Jul. Indeed, I never shall be satisfied:
With Romeo, till I behold him—dead—
Is my poor heart so for a kinsman vex’d:
Madam, if you could find out but a man To bear a poison, I would temper it;
That Romeo should, upon receipt thereof,
Soon sleep in quiet. O, how my heart abhors To hear him named, and cannot come to him,
To wreak the love I bore my cousin
Upon his body that hath slaughter’d him! [a man.
La. Cap. Find thou the means, and I’ll find such
But now I’ll tell thee joyous tidings, girl.
Jul. And joy comes well in such a needy time:
What are they? I beseech your ladyship?
La. Cap. Well, well, thou hast a careful father,
One who, to put thee from thy heaviness, [child;
Hath sorted out a sudden day of joy,
That thou expect’st not nor I look’d not for.
Act III.

Romeo and Juliet.

Scene V.

Jul. Madam, in happy time, what day is that?

La. Cap. Marry, my child, early next Thursday morn.

The gallant, young and noble gentleman,

The County Paris, at Saint Peter's Church,

Shall happily make thee there a joyful bride.

Jul. Now, by Saint Peter's Church and Peter too,

He shall make me there a joyful bride.

I wonder at this haste; that I must wed

Ere he, that should be husband, comes to woo.

I pray you, tell my lord and father, madam,

I will not marry yet; and, when I do, I swear,

It shall be Romeo, whom you know I hate.

Rather than Paris. These are news indeed!

La. Cap. There comes your father; tell him so

yourself,

And see how he will take it at your hands.

Enter Capulet and Nurse.

Cap. When the sun sets, the air doth drizzle dew;

But for the sunset of my brother's son

It rains downright.

How now! a conduit, girl? what, still in tears?

Evermore showering? In one little body

Thou counterfeit'st a bark, a sea, a wind;

For still those eyes, which I may call the sea,

Do eb and flow with tears; the bark thy body is,

Sailing in this salt flood; the winds, thy sighs;

Who, raging with thy tears, and they with them,

Without a sudden calm, will overset

Thy tempest-tossed body. How now, wife!

Have you deliver'd her to your decree?

La. Cap. Ay, sir; but she will none; she gives you

thanks.

I would the fool were married to her grave!

Cap. Soft! take me with you, take me with you, wife.

How! Dost she still she none? dost she not give us thanks?

Is she not proud? dost she not count her blest,

Unworthy as she is, that we have wrought

So worthy a gentleman to be her bridegroom?

Jul. Not proud, you have; but thankful, that you have:

Proud can I never be of what I hate;

But thankful even for hate, that is meant love.

Cap. How now, how now, chlop-logic! What is this?

'Proud,' and 'I thank you,' and 'I thank you not;'

And yet 'not proud,' mistress minion, you,

Think me no thankings, nor proud me no prouds.

But betake your fine looks against Thursday next,

To go with Paris to Saint Peter's Church,

Or I will drag thee on a hurdle thither.

Out, you green-sickness carri'on! out, you baggage!

You tallow-face!

La. Cap. Pie, fie! what, are you mad?

Jul. Good father, I beseech you on my knees,

Hear me with patience but to speak a word.

Cap. Hang thee, young baggage! disobedient wretch!

I tell thee what; get thee to church, o' Thursday,

Or never after look me in the face.

Speak not, reply not, do not answer me;

Myingers itch. Wife, we scarce thought us blest

That God had lent us but this only child;

But now I see this one is too much,

And that we have a curse in having her:

Out on her, hiding!

Nurse. God in heaven bless her!

You are to blame, my lord, to rate her so.

Cap. And why, my lady wisdom? hold your tongue,

Good prudence; smatter with your gossip; go.

Nurse. I speak no treason.

Cap. O, God ye godden.

Nurse. May not one speak?

Cap. Peace, you mumbling fool!

Utter your gravity o'er a gossip's bowl;

For here we need it not.

La. Cap. You are too hot.

Cap. God's bread! it makes me mad:

Day, night, hour, tide, time, work, play,

Alone, in company; still my care hath been

To have her match'd: and having now provided

Of fair demesnes, youthful, and nobly train'd,

Studd'd, as they say, with honourable parts,

Proportion'd as one's thought would wish a man;

And then to have a wretched puling fool,

A whining mannet, in her fortunate tender,

To marry, 'tis I ne'er will wed; I cannot cure,

I am too young; I pray you, get me on me,

But, an you will not wed, I'll pardon you:

Graze where you will, you shall not house with me:

Look to, 't think on 't, I do not use to jest.

Thursday is hear; lay hand on heart, advise:

An you be mine, I'll give you to my friend;

An ye be not, hang, beg, starve, die in the streets.

For, by my soul, I'll ne'er acknowledge thee,

Nor what is mine shall never do thee good;

Trust to 't, betheouk: I 'till not be forsworn.

[Exit.

Jul. Is there no pity sitting in the clouds,

That sees into the bottom of my grief?

O, sweet my mother, cast me not away!

Delay this marriage for a month, a week;

Or, if you do not, make the bridal bed

In that dim monument were Tybalt lies.

La. Cap. Talk not to me, for I'll not speak a word:

Do as thou wilt, for I have done with thee.

[Exit.

Jul. O God! - Nurse, howshall this be prevented?

My husband is on earth, my faith in heaven;

How shall that faith return again to earth,

Unless that husband send me it from heaven

By leaving earth? comfort me, counsel me.

Alack, alack, that heaven should practise stratagems

Upon so soft a subject as myself!

What say'st thou? hast thou not a word of joy?

Some comfort, nurse.

Nurse. Faith, here it is.

Romeo is banish'd; and all the world to nothing,

That he dares ne'er come back to challenge you;

Or, if he do, needs must be by stealth.

Then, since the case so stands as now it doth,

I think it best you married with the county.

O, he's a deadly gentle gentleman.

Romeo is dared out to him: an eagle, madam,

Hath not so green, so quick, so fair an eye

As Paris hath. Beshrew my very heart,

I think you are happy in this second match,

For it excels your first; or if it did not,

Your first is dead; or 'twas as good he were,

As living, and you no use of him.

Jul. Speakest thou from thy heart?

Nurse.

And from my soul too;

Or else beshrew them both.

Jul. Amen!

Nurse.

What?

Jul. Well, thou hast comforted me marvellous much.

Go in; and tell my lady I am gone,

Having displeased my father, to Laurence' cell,

To make confession and to be absolved.

Nurse. Marry, I will; and this is wisely done.

[Exit.

Jul. Ancient damnation! O most wicked fiend!

Is it more sin to wish me thus forsworn,

Or to dispraise my lord with that same tongue

Which she hath praised him with above compare

So many thousand times? Go, console me:

Thou and my bosom henceforth shall be twain.

I'll to the friar, to know his remedy:

If all else fail, myself have power to die.

[Exit.
ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Friar Laurence's cell.

Enter Friar Laurence and Paris.

Fri. L. On Thursday, sir? the time is very short.
Par. My father Capulet will have it so;
And I am nothing slow to slack his haste.

Fri. L. You say so: do not know the lady's Unveil the course, I like the thing. [jum: ;
Par. Immoderately she weeps for Tybalt's death,
And therefore have I little talk'd of love;
For Venn's smiles not in a house of tears.
Now, sir, her father counts it dangerous
That she doth give her sorrow so much away,
And in his wisdom busies our marriage,
To stop the inundation of her tears;
Which, too much mindi'd by herself alone,
May be put from her by society;
Now do you know the reason of this haste.

Fri. L. [Aside] I would I knew not why it should be slow'd.
Look, sir, here comes the lady towards my cell.

Enter Juliet.

Par. Happily met, my lady and my wife!
Jul. That may be, sir, when I may be a wife.
Par. That may be must be, love, on Thursday next.
Jul. What must be shall be.

Fri. L. That's a certain text.
Par. Come you to make confession to this father?
Jul. To answer that, I should confess to you.
Par. Do not deny to him that you love me.
Jul. I will confess to you that I love him.
Par. So will ye, I am sure, that you love me.
Jul. If I do so, it will be of more price.
Being spoke behind your back, than to your face.

Par. Poor soul, thy face is much abused with tears.
Jul. The tears have got small victory by that;
For it was bad enough before their spite. [report.
Par. Thou wrong'st it, more than tears, with that.
Jul. That is no slander, sir, which is a truth;
And what I speak, I speak it to my face. [lit.
Par. Thy face is mine, and thou hast slander'd
Jul. It may be so, for it is not mine own.
Are you at leisure, holy father, now;
Or shall I come to you at evening mass? [now.

Fri. L. My leisure serves me, pensive daughter,
My lord, we must entreat the time alone.
Par. God shield I should disturb devotion!
Juliet, on Thursday early will I reseüe;
Tell Capulet to hear; and keep this holy kiss. [Exit.

Jul. O, shut the door! and when thou hast done so,
Come weep with me; past hope, past cure, past help!

Fri. L. Ah, Juliet, I already know thy grief;
It straitens me past the compass of my wits:
I hear thou must, and nothing may prorogue it,
On Thursday next be married to this county.
Jul. Tell me not, friar, that thou hearest of this,
Unless thou tell me how I may prevent it:
If, in thy wisdom, thou canst give no help,
Do thou but call my resolution wise,
And with this knife I'll help it presently.
God join'd my heart and Romeo's, thou on our hands;
And ere this hand, by thee to Romeo seal'd,
Shall be the label to another deed,
Or my true heart with treacherous revolt
Turn to another, this shall stay them both:
Therefore, out of thy long-experienced time,
Give me a speedy and effectual end.
Twist my extremities and me this bloody knife
Shall play the umpire, arbitrating that
Which the commission of thy years and art
Could to no issue of true honour bring.
Be not so long to speak; I long to die,
If what thou speakest speak not of remedy.

Fri. L. Hold, daughter: I do spy a kind of hope,
Which craves as desperate an execution
As that is desperate which we would prevent.
If, rather than to marry County Paris,
Thou hast the strength of will to say thyself,
Then is it likely thou wilt undertake
Some thing like death to choke away this shame,
That course with death himself to escape from it;
And, if thou darest, I'll give thee remedy.
Jul. O, bid me leap, rather than marry Paris,
From off the battlements of yonder tower;
Or walk in thieves' ways; or bid me hurk
Where serpents are; chain me with roaring bears;
Or shut me nightly in a charnel-house.
O'er-cover'd quite with dead men's rattling bones,
With reeky shanks and yellow chappless skulls;
Or bid me go into a new-made grave
And hide me with a dead man in his shroud;
Things that, to hear them told, have made me tremble.
And I will do it without fear or doubt.
[Jul. To live an unstaíd wife to my sweet love.

Fri. L. Hold, then; go home, be merry, give con-
To marry Paris; Wednesday is to-morrow: [sent
To-morrow night look that thou lie alone;
Let not thy nurse lie with thee in thy chamber:
Take thou with this view beauty and soul,
And this distilled liquor drink thou off;
When presently through all thy veins shall run
A cold and drowsy humour, for no pulse
Shall keep his native progress, but successe:
No warmth, no breath, shall testify thon livest;
The roses in thy lips and cheeks shall fade
To pay ashes, thy eyes' windows fall.
Like death, when he shuts up the day of life;
Each part, deprived of supple government,
Shall, stiff and stark and cold, appear like death:
And in this borrow'd likeness of shrunk death
Thou shalt continue two and forty hours,
And then awake as from a pleasant sleep.
Now, when the bridgroom in the morning comes
To rear thee from thy bed, there art thou dead:
Then, as the manner of our country is,
In thy best robes uncover'd on the bier
Thou shalt be borne to that same ancient vault
Where all the Kindred of the Capulets lie.
In the mean time, against thou shalt awake,
Shall Romeo by my letters know our drift,
And hither shall he come: and he and I
Will watch thy waking, and that very night
Shall Romeo beard that base analytics
And this shall free thee from this present shame;
If no inconstant toy, nor womanish fear,
Abate thy valour in the acting it.

Jul. Give me, give me! O, tell me not of fear!

Fri. L. Hold; get you gone, be strong and pros-
In this resolve: I'll send a friar with speed [perons
To Mantua, with my letters to thy lord.
Jul. Love give me strength! and strength shall help afford.
Farewell, dear father! [Exit.

SCENE II.—Hall in Capulet's house.

Enter Capulet, Lady Capulet, Nurse, and two Servingmen.

Cap. So many guests invite as here are writ.

Sirrah, go hire me twenty cunning cooks.
Sec. Sere. You shall have none ill, sir; for I'll try if they can lick their fingers.

Cap. How canst thou try them so?
Sec. Sere. Marry, sir, 'tis an ill cook that cannot lick his own fingers: therefore he that cannot lick his fingers goes not with me.
Cap. Go, be gone. [Exit Sec. Servant. We shall be much unfurnish'd for this time. What, is my daughter gone to Friar Laurence? Nurse. Ay, forsooth. Cap. Well, he may chance to dosome good on her; A peevish self-will'd harlotry it is. Nurse. See where she comes from shift with merry look. Enter Juliet.

Cap. How now, my headstrong! where have you been gadding?

Jul. Where have you learn'd me to repent the sin Of course of oppos'd立志: To you and your behests, and am enjoin'd By holy Laurence to fall prostrate here, And beg your pardon: pardon, I beseech you. Henceforward I am ever ruled by you.

Cap. Send for the county; go tell him of this; I'll have this knot knelt up to-morrow morning. Jul. I met the youthful lord at Laurence' cell; And gave him what became love I might, Not stepping o'er the bounds of modesty.

Cap. Why, I am glad on 't; this is well: stand up: This is as 't should be. Let me see the county; Ay, marry, go, I say, and fetch him hither. Now, afore God! this reverend holy friar, All our whole city is much bound to him. Jul. Nurse, will you go with me into my closet, To help me sort such needful utensils. As you think fit to furnish me to-morrow?

La. Cap. No, not till Thursday; there is time enough. [to-morrow. Cap. Go, nurse, go with her: we'll to church. [Exeunt Juliet and Nurse.

La. Cap. We shall be short in our provision: 'Tis now near night.

Cap. Tush, I will stir about. And all things shall be well, I warrant thee, wife: Go then to Juliet, help to deck up her; I'll not to bed to-night; let me alone; I'll play the housewife for this once. What, ho! They are all forth. Well, I will walk myself To County Paris, to prepare him up Against to-morrow: my heart is wondrous light, Since this same wayward girl is so reclaim'd. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. — Juliet's chamber.

Enter Juliet and Nurse.

Jul. Ay, those attires are best: but, gentle nurse, I pray thee, leave me to myself to-night; For I have need of many prisons To move the heavens to smile upon my state, Which, well thou know'st, is cross and full of sin.

Enter Lady Capulet.

La. Cap. What, are you busy, ho? need you my help?

Jul. No, madam; we have cull'd such necessaries As are behovful for our state to-morrow: So please you, let me now be left alone. And let the nurse this night sit up with you: For, I am sure, you have your hands full all, In this so sudden business.

Jul. Farewell! God knows when we shall meet again.

I have a faint cold fear thrills through my veins, That almost freezes up the heat of life: I'll call them back again to comfort me: Nurse! what should I do here? My dismal scene I needs must act alone. Come, viat. What if this mixture do not work at all? Shall I be married then to-morrow morning?

No, no; this shall forbid it: lie thou there.

What if it be a poison, which the friar Subly hath minister'd to have me dead, Lest in this marriage he should be dishonour'd, Because he married me before to Romeo? I fear but what yet, no Trumpet shall not, For he hath still been tried a holy man. 410 If, when I am laid into the tomb, I wake before the time that Romeo Come to redeem me? there's a fearful point! Shall I not, then, be stifled in the vault? To whose cold mouth no halitose air breathes in, And there die strangled ere my Romeo comes? Or, if I live, is it not very like, The horrible conceit of death and night, Together with the terror of the place,— As in a vault, an ancient receptacle, Where, for these many hundred years, the bones Of all my buried ancestors are puck'd; Where bloody Tybalt, yet but green in earth, Lies festering in his shroud: where, as they say, At some hours in the night spirits resort; — Alack, alack, is it not like that I, So early thinking, what with kingly smells, And shrieks like mandrakes torn out of the earth, That living mortals, bearing them, run mad: — O, if I wake, shall I not be distraught, Environd with all these hideous fears? And madly play with my forefathers' joints? And pluck the mangled Tybalt from his shroud? And, in this rage, with some great kinsman's bane, As with a club, dash out my desperate brains? O, look! methinks I see my cousin's ghost Seeking out Romeo, that did spit his body Upon a rapier's point: stay, Tybalt, stay! Romeo, I come! this do I drink to thee. [She falls upon her bed, within the curtaine.

SCENE IV. — Hall in Capulet's house.

Enter Lady Capulet and Nurse.

La. Cap. Hold, take these keys, and fetch more spices, nurse. Nurse. They call for dates and quinces in the pastry.

Enter Capulet.

Cap. Come, stir, stir, stir! the second cock hath crow'd. The curfew-bell hath rung, 'tis three o'clock: Look to the laked meats, good Angelica: Spare not for cost. Nurse. Go, you cotquee, go, to get you to bed; faith, you'll be sick to-morrow For this night's watching. Cap. No, not a whit: what! I have watch'd ere now All night for lesser cause, and ne'er been sick. La. Cap. Ay, you have been a mouse-hunt in your time; But I will watch you from such watching now. [Exeunt Lady Capulet and Nurse. Cap. A jealousy-hood, a jealousy-hood! Enter three or four Servingmen, with spits, logs, and baskets. Now, fellow, What's there? First Serv. Things for the cook, sir; but I know not what. Cap. Make haste, make haste. [Exit First Serv.] Sirrah, fetch drier logs: Call Peter, he will shew thee where they are. Nurse. Sir, I have yet meat in my hand that will find out legs, And never trouble Peter for the matter. [Exit Cap. Mass, and well said; a merry whoreson, la! Thou shalt be logger-head. Good faith, 'tis day: The county will be here with music straight,
ACT IV.

ROMEO AND JULIET.

SCENE V.

For so he said he would: I hear him near. [Music within.

Nurse! Wife! What! ho! What, nurse, I say!

Re-enter Nurse.

Go waken Juliet, and go trim her up; I'll go and chat with Paris: hie, make haste, Make haste; the bridgroom he is come already: Make haste, I say. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Juliet's chamber.

Enter Nurse.

Nurse. Mistress! what, mistress! Juliet! fast, I warrant her, she: Why, lamb! why, lady! fie, you sing-a-bed! Why, love, I say! madam! sweetmeat! why, bride! What, not a word? you take your pennycworths now; Sleep for a week; for the next night, I warrant, The County Paris hath set up his rest, That you shall rest but little. God forgive me, Marry, and amen, how sound is she asleep! I must needs wake her. Madam, madam, madam! Ay, let the county take you in your bed; He'll fright you up, I faith. Will it not be? [Undresses the curtains.

What, dress'd! and in your clothes! and down again! I must needs wake you: Lady! lady! lady! Alas, alas! Help, help! my lady's dead! O, well-a-day, that ever I was born! Some aqua vitae, ho! My lord! my lady!

Enter Lady Capulet.

Nurse. What is the matter? Nurse. Look, look! O heavy day! La. Cap. O me, O me! My child, my only life, Revive, look up, or I will die with thee: Help, help! Call help.

Enter Capulet.

Cap. For shame, bring Juliet forth; her lord is come. [the day! Nurse. She's dead, deceased, she's dead; alack La. Cap. Alack the day, she's dead, she's dead, she's dead. Cap. Ha! let me see her: out, alas! she's cold; Her blood is settled, and her joints are stiff; Life and these lips long been separat'd: Death lies on her like an untimely frost Upon the sweetest flower of all the field. Nurse. O lamentable day! La. Cap. [Exeunt Capulet, La. Cap.

Cap. Death, that hath ta'en her hence to make me wail, Ties up my tongue, and will not let me speak.

Enter Friar Laurence and Paris, with Musicians.

Fri. L. Come, is the bride ready to go to church? Cap. Ready to go, but never to return. O son! the night before thy wedding-day Hath Death him with thy wife. There she lies, Flower as she was, deflowered by him. Death is my son-in-law, Death is my heir; My daughter he hath wedded: I will die, And leave him all: life, living, all is Death's. Par. Have I thought long to see this morning's And doth it give me such a sight as this? [face. Nurse. Accursed, unhappier, wretched, hateful, Most miserable hour that ever time saw [day! In lasting labour of his pilgrimage, But one, poor one, one poor and loving child, But one thing to rejoice and solace in, And cruel death hath catch'd it from my sight! Nurse. O woe! O woful, woful, woful day!
beaut you with an iron wit, and put up my iron dag-ger. Answer me like men:
‘When grieving grief the heart doth wound,
I And doleful damps the mind oppress,
Then music with her silver sound’—
why ‘silver sound’? why ‘music with her silver sound’?
What say you, Simon Catling?’
First Mus. Marry, sir, because silver hath a sweet sound.
Pet. Pretty! What say you, Hugh Rebeck?
Sec. Mus. I say ‘silver sound,’ because musicians sound for silver.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Mantu. A street.

Enter Romeo.

Rome. If I may trust the flattering truth of sleep,
My dreams presage some joyful news at hand:
My bosom’s lord sits lightly in his throne;
And all this day an unaccustomed spirit
Lifts me above the ground with cheerful thoughts.
I dreamt my lady came and found me dead—
Strange dream, that gives a dead man leave to think.—
And breathed such life with kisses in my lips,
That I revived, and was an emperor.
Ah me! how sweet is love itself possess’d,
When but love’s shadows are so rich in joy!

Enter Balthasar, boatel.

News from Verona!—How now, Balthasar! Dost thou not bring me letters from the friar? How doth my lady? Is my father well?
How fares my Juliet? That I ask again;
For nothing can be ill. If she be well.
Balth. Then she is well, and nothing can be ill:
Her body sleeps in Capel’s monument,
And her immortal part with angels lives.
I saw her laid low in her kindred’s vault,
And presently took post to tell it you:
O, pardon me for bringing these ill news,
Since you did leave it for my office, sir.
Rome. Is it so? then I defy you, stars! Thou know’st my lodging: let me in, and paper,
And hire post-horses; I will hence to-night.
Balth. I do beseech you, sir, have patience:
Your looks are pale and wild, and do import
Some misadventure.
Rome. Tush, thou art deceived:
Leave me, and do the thing I bid thee do.
Hast thou no letters to me from the friar?
Balth. No, my good lord.
Rome. No matter; get thee gone,
And hire those horses; I’ll be with thee straight.
[Exit Balthasar.

Well, Juliet, I will live with thee to-night.
Let’s see for means: O mischief, thou art swift To enter in the thoughts of desperate men! I do remember an apothecary,—
And hereabout he dwells,—which late I noted In tatter’d weeds, with overwhelming brows, Culling of simples; meagre were his looks, Sharp misery had worn him to the bones: And in his needily shop a tortoise hung, An alligator and stinking skins,
Of ill-shaped fishes; and about his shelves A beggarly account of empty boxes, Green earthen pots, bladders and musty seeds, Remnants of packthread and old cakes of roses, Were thinly scatter’d, to make up a show.
Noting this penny, to myself I said ‘An if a man did need a poison now,

ACT V.

SCENE II. —Friar Laurence’s cell.

Enter Friar John.

Fri. J. Holy Franciscan friar! brother, ho!

Enter Friar Laurence.

Fri. L. This same should be the voice of Friar Welcome from Mantua: what says Romeo? [John.
Or, if his mind be writ, give me his letter.
Fri. J. Going to find a bare-foot brother out, One of our order, to associate me,
Here in thy province visiting the sick, And finding him, the searchers of the town,
Suspecting that we both were in a house Where the infectious pestilence did reign,
Seal’d up the doors, and would not let us forth;
So that my speed to Mantua there was stay’d.
Fri. L. Who bare my letter, then, to Romeo?
Fri. J. I could not send it,—here it is again,—

Whose sale is present death in Mantua,
Here lives a caitiff wretch would sell it him.
O, this same thought did but forerun my need;
And this same needy man must sell it me.
As I remember, this should be the house.
Being holiday, the beggar’s shop is shut.
What, ho! apothecary!

Enter Apothecary.

Ap. Who calls so loud?
Rome. Come hither, man. I see that thou art poor:
Hold, there are forty ducats: let me have
A dram of poison, such soon-speeding gear
As will disperse itself through all the veins
That the life-weary taker may fall dead
And that the trunk may be discharged of breath
As violently as hasty powder fired.
Doth hurry from the fatal cannon’s womb.
Ap. Such mortal drugs I have; but Mantua’s law
Is death to any he that utters them.
Rome. Art thou so bare and full of wretchedness,
And fear’st to die? famine is in thy cheeks,
Need and oppression starveth in thine eyes,
Contempt and beggary hangs upon thy back;
The world is not thy friend nor the world’s law;
The world affords no law to make thee rich;
Then be not poor, but break it, and take this.
Ap. My poverty, sir, doth not wish me;
Rome. But why poverty, and not thy will?
Ap. Put this in any liquid thing you will,
And drink it off: and, if you had the strength
Of twenty men, it would dispatch you straight.
Rome. There is thy gold, worse poison to men’s souls,
Doing more murders in this loathsome world,
Than these poor poisons that thou sayst not sell.
I sell thee poison: thou hast sold me none.
Farewell: buy food, and get thyself in flesh.
Come, cordial and not poison, go with me
To Juliet’s grave: for there must I use thee.

[Exeunt.

ROMEO AND JULIET.

SCENE III.

Not get a messenger to bring it thee,
So fearful were they of infection.

Fri. L. Unhappy fortune! by my brotherhood,
I he let he full of charge
Of dear import, and the neglecting it
May do much danger. Friar John, go hence;
Get me an iron crow, and bring it straight
Unto my cell.

Fri. J. Brother, I 'll go and bring it thee. [Exit.

Fri. L. Now must I go to the monument alone;
Within these three hours will fair Juliet wake:
She will bestrew me much that Romeo
Hath had no notice of these accidents;
But I will write again to Muntua,
And keep her at my cell till Romeo come;
Poor living corse, closed in a dead man's tomb!—[Exit.

SCENE III.—A churchyard; in it a tomb belonging to the Capulets.

Enter Paris, and his Page bearing flowers and a torch.

Par. Give me thy torch, boy; hence, and stand
Yet put it out, for I would not be seen. [Aside:
Under yond yew-trees lay thee all alone,
Holding thine ear close to the hollow ground;
So shall not boy!
Being loose, unfirm, with digging up of graves,
But thou shalt hear it: whist! then to me,
As signal that then hear'st something approach.
Give me those flowers. Do as I bid thee, go.

Page. [Aside] I am almost afraid to stand alone
Here in the churchyard; yet I will adventure.

Retires.

Par. Sweet flower, with flowers thy bridal bed I strew,—
O woe! thy canopy is dust and stones:—
Which with sweet water nightly I will dew,
Or, wanting that, with tears distill'd by moans;
The obsequies that I for thee will keep
Nightly shall be to strew thy grave and weep.

The boy gives warning something doth approach.
What cursed foot wandereth this ways to-night,
To cross my obsequies and true love's rite?
What, with a torch? muttle me, night, awhile. [Retires.

Enter Romeo and Balthasar, with a torch, mattock, &c.

Rom. Give me that mattock and the wrenching
Hold, take this letter; early in the morning [iron
See thou deliver it to my lord and father.
Give me the light; upon thy life, I charge thee,
Whate'er thou hear'st seest, stand all aloof,
And do not interrupt me in my course.
Why I descend into this bed of death,
Is partly to behold my lady's face;
But chiefly to take thence from her dead finger
A precious ring, a ring that I must use
In dear employment: therefore hence, be gone;
But if thou, jealous, dost return to pry
In what I was bade not to intend to do,
By heaven, I will fare thee joint by joint
And strew this hungry churchyard with thy limbs:
The time and my intents are savage-wild,
More fierce and more inexorable
Than empty tigers or the roaring sea.

Balth. I will be gone, sir, and not trouble you.

Rom. So shall thou show me friendship. Take thou that:
Live, and be prosperous: and farewell, good fellow.

Balt. [Aside] For all this same, I 'll hide me here—
His looks I fear, and his intents I doubt. [about:

Retires.

Rom. Thou detestable maw, thou wond'ring of death,
Gorged with the dearest morsel of the earth,
Thus I enforce thy rotten jaws to open,
And, in despite, I 'll cram thee with more food!

Par. This is that banish'd haughty Montague,
That murder'd my love's cousin, with which grief,
It is supposed, the fair creature dieth;
And here is come to do some villanous shame
To the dead bodies: I will apprehend him.

Stop thy mallow'd toil, vile Montague!
Can vengeance be pursued further than death?
Condemned villain, I do apprehend thee:
Obey, and go with me; for thou must die.

Rom. I must indeed; and therefore came I hither.
Good gentle youth, tempt not a desperate man.
Fly hence, and leave me: think upon these gone;
Let them affright thee. I beseech thee, youth,
Put not another sin upon my head;
By urging me to fury: O, be gone!
By heaven, I love thee better than myself;
For I come hither arm'd against myself.
Stay not, be gone: live, and hereafter say,
A madman's mercy bade thee run away.

Par. I do defy thy conjurations,
And apprehend thee for a felon here.

Rom. Will thou provoke me? then have at thee,
[They fight.

Page. O Lord, they fight! I will go call the watch. [Exit.

Par. O, I am slain! [Falls.] If thou be merciful,
Open the tomb, lay me with Juliet.

[Dies.

Rom. In faith, I will. Let me pursue this face.
Mercerio's kinsman, noble County Paris!
What said my man, when my betrothed soul
Did not attend him as we rode? I think
He told me Paris should have married Juliet:—
Said he not so? or did I dream it so?
Or am I mad, hearing him talk of Juliet,
To think it wanteth? O, give me thy hand,
One writ with me in such misfortune's book!
I 'll bury thee in a triumphal grave:
A grave? O, no! a lantern, slaughter'd youth,
For here lies Juliet, and her beauty makes
This vault a feasting presence full of light.

Death, lie thou there, by a dead man inter'd.

[Enters Paris in the tomb.

How oft when men are at the point of death
Have they been merry! which their keepers call
A lightning before death: O, how may I
Call this a lightning? O my love! my wife!
Death, that hath suck'd the honey of thy breath,
What was it then, mothers, that didst EUR
Thou art not conquer'd: beauty's ensign yet
Is crimson in thy lips and in thy cheeks,
And death's pale flag is not advanced there.
Tybalt, liest thou there in thy bloody sheet? O,
What more favour can I do to thee,
Than with that hand that cut thy youth in twain
To Sunder his that was thine enemy?
Forbear me, cousin! Ah, dear Juliet.
Why art thou yet so fair? shall I believe
That unsubstantial death is amorous,
And that the lean abhorred monster keeps
Thine ills to wet with his unwholesome tears?
For fear of that, I still will stay with thee:
And never from this palace of dim night
Depart again: here, here will I remain
With worms that are thy chamber-maids; O, here
Will I set up my everlasting rest,
And shake the yoke ofUSB.

Balth. [Aside] For all this same, I 'll hide me here—
His looks I fear, and his intents I doubt. [about:

Retires.

Rom. Thou desperate pilot, now at once run on
ACT V.

ROMEO AND JULIET.

SCENE III.

The dashing rocks thy sea-sick weary bark!
Here's to my love! [Drinks.] O true apothecary!
Thy drugs are quick. Thus with a kiss I die. [Dies.]

Enter, at the other end of the churchyard, Friar Laurence, with a lantern, crown, and spade.

Fri. L. Saint Francis be my speed! how oft to-night
Have my old feet stumbled at graves! Who's there?
Bal. Here's one, a friend, and one that knows you well. [friend.

Fri. L. BeIsrael upon you! Tell me, good my
What torch is yond, that vainly lends his light
To grubs and eyeless skulls? as I discern,
It burneth in the Capels' monument. [iter.
Bal. It doth so, holy sir; and there's my mas-
One that you love.

Fri. L. Who is it?
Bal. Romeon.

Fri. L. How long hath he been there?
Bal. Full half an hour.

Fri. L. Go with me to the vault.

Bal. I dare not, sir:
My master knows not but I am gone hence;
And fearfully did menace me with death,
If I did stay to look on his intents. [iter me:
Fri. L. Stay, then; I'll go alone. Fear comes
Of much, I fear some ill unlucky thing.

Bal. As I did sleep under this yew-tree here,
I dreamt my master and another fought,
And that my master slew him.

Fri. L. Romeon!

[Advances.

Alack, alack, what blood is this, which stains
The stony entrance of this sepulchre?
What mean these masterless and gory swords
To lie discoulour'd by this place of peace? [Enters the tomb.

Romeo! O, pale! Who else? what, Paris too?
And steel'd in blood? Ay, what an unkind hour
Is guilty of this lamentable chance!
The lady stirs, [Juliet wakes.

Fri. L. I hear some noise. Lady, come from that
Of death, contagion, and unnatural sleep;
Hath thwarted our intents. Come, come away.
Thy husband in thy bosom there lies dead;
And Paris too. Come, I'll dispose of thee
Among a sisterhood of holy nuns:
Stay not to question, for the watch is coming;
Come, go, good Juliet [Noise again], I dare no longer stay.

Jul. Go, get thee hence, for I will not away. [Exit Fri. L.

What's here? a cup, closed in my true love's hand?
Poison, I see, hath been his timeless end.
O charmer all, and left no friendly drop
To help me after? I will kiss thy lips:
Haply some poison yet doth hang on them,
To make me die with a restorative. [Kisses him.
Thy lips are warm.

First Watch. [Within] Lead, boy; which way?

Jul. Yea, noise? then I'll be brief. O happy
Doctor! [Switching Romeo's dagger.
This is thy sheath [Stabs herself]; there rust, and let me die. [Falls on Romeo's body, and dies.

Enter Watch, with the Page of Paris.

Page. This is the place; there, where the torch doth burn.

First Watch. The ground is bloody; search about the churchyard:
Go, some of you, who'er you find attach.

Pitiful sight! here lies the county slain;
And Juliet bleeding, warm, and newly dead,
Who here hath lain these two days buried.
Go, tell the prince: run to the Capulets;
Raise up the Montagues: some others search:
We see the ground whereon these woes do lie;
But the true ground of all these pitious woes
We cannot without circumstance descry.

Re-enter some of the Watch, with Balthasar.

Sec. Watch. Here's Romeo's man; we found him in the churchyard.

First Watch. Hold him in safety, till the prince come hither.

Re-enter others of the Watch, with Friar Laurence.

Third Watch. Here is a friar, that trembles, sighs, and weeps;
We took this mattock and this spade from him,
As he went coming from this churchyard side,
First Watch. A great suspicion: stay the friar too.

Enter the Prince and Attendants.

Prince. What misadventure is so early up,
That calls our person from our morning's rest?

Enter Capulet, Lady Capulet, and others.

Cap. What should it be, that they so shriek abroad?

La. Cap. The people in the street cry Romeo,
Some say some Paris and some Paris, and all run,
With open outcry, toward our monument. [ears.

Prince. What fear is this which startles in our First Watch. Sovereign, here lies the County
Paris slain;
And Romeo dead; and Juliet, dead before,
Wormed and new kild,

Prince. Search, seek, and know how this foul murder comes.

First Watch. Here is a friar, and slaughter'd Romeo's man;
With instruments upon them, fit to open
These dead men's tombs. [Bleeds.

Cap. O heaven! O wife, look how our daughter
This dagger hath mista'en,—for, le, his house
Is empty on the back of Montague,—
And is mis-sheathed in my daughter's bosom,—
La. Cap. O me! this sight of death is as a bell,
That warns my old age to a sepulchre.

Enter Montague and others.

Prince. Come, Montague; for thou art early up,
To see thy son and heir more early down.

Mon. Alas, my liege, my wife is dead to-night;
Grief of my son's exile hath stopp'd her breath:
What further woe conspires against my age?

Prince. Look, and thou shalt see.

Mon. O thou untaught! what manners is in this,
To press before thy father to a grave?

Prince. Seal up the mouth of outrage for a while,
Till we can clear these misgivings.
And know their spring, their head, their true descent;
And then will I be general of your woes,
And lead you even to death: meantime forbear,
And let mischance be slave to patience.
Bring forth the parties of suspicion.

Fri. L. I am the greatest, able to do least,
Yet most suspected, as the time and place
Doth make against me, of this direful murder;
And here I stand, both to impeach and purge
Myself condemned and myself excused.

Prince. Then say at once what thou dost know in this.

Fri. L. I will be brief, for my short date of
Is not so long as is a tedious tale.
Romeo, there dead, was husband to that Juliet;
And she, there dead, that Romeo's faithful wife.
Romeo and Juliet.

ACT V.

Scene III.

Romeo and Juliet.

I married them; and their stol’n marriage-day
Was Tybalt’s dooms-day, whose untimely death
Bann’d the new-made bridegroom from this city,
For whom, and not for Tybalt, Juliet pined.
You, to remove that siege of grief from her,
Betroth’d and would have married her perforce
To County Paris: then comes she to me,
And, with wild looks, bid me devise some means
To rid her from this second marriage,
Or in my cell there would she kill herself.
Then gave I her, so tutor’d by my art,
A sleeping potion; which so took effect
As I intended, for it wrought on her
The form of death: meantime I writ to Romeo,
That he should hither come as this late night,
To help to take her from her borrow’d grave,
Being the time the potion’s force should cease.
But he which bore my letter, Friar John,
Was stay’d by accident, and yesternight
Return’d my letter back. Then all alone
At the prefixed hour of her waking,
Came I conveniently to take her from her kindred’s vault;
Meaning to keep her closely at my cell,
Till I conveniently could send to Romeo;
But when I came, some minute ere the time
Of her awaking, here untimely lay
The noble Paris and true Romeo dead.
She wakes; and I entreated her come forth,
And bear this work of heaven with patience;
But then a noise did scare me from the tomb;
And she, too desperate, would not go with me,
But, as it seemed, did violence on herself.
All this I know; and to the marriage
I was privy: and, if caught in this
Misdemeanor by my fault, let my old life
Be sacrificed, some hour before his time,
Unto the rigour of severest law.

Prince. We still have known thee for a holy man.
Where’s Romeo’s man: what can he say in this?

Benvolio. Here comes the furious Tybalt back again.

Romeo. Alive, in triumph! and Mercutio slain!

Benvolio. Here comes the furious Tybalt back again.

Romeo. Alive, in triumph! and Mercutio slain!

Away to heaven, respective lassiness.
And fire-eyed fury be my conduct now!—
Now, Tybalt, take the villain back again,
That late thou gav’st me; for Mercutio’s soul
Is but a little way above our heads,
Saying for thine to keep him company:
Either thou, or I, or both, must go with him.

Tybalt. Thou, wretched boy, that didst consort him here,
Shalt with him hence.

Romeo. This shall determine that.—Act III., Scene 1.

ACT I.

Enter Poet, Painter, Jeweller, Merchant, and others, at several doors.

Poet. Good day, sir.

Tay. I am glad you're well.

Poet. I have not seen you long: how goes the world?

Poet. Ay, that's well known: but what particular rarity? what strange, which manifold record not matches? See, Magic of bounty! all these spirits thy power hath conjured to attend. I know the merchant.

Pain. I know them both; 'tis other's a jeweller.

Mer. O, 'tis a worthy lord.

Jew. Nay, that's most fix'd.

Mer. A most incomparable man, breathed as it to an untirable and continuant goodness: [were, He passes.

Jew. I have a jewel here—

Mer. O, pray let's see 't: for the Lord Timon, sir?

Jew. If he will touch the estimate: but for that— Poet. [Reciting to himself] 'When we for recompense have praised the vile, It stains the glory in that happy verse Which aptly sings the good.'

Mer. 'Tis a good form. [Looking at the jewel.

What have you there? Pain. A picture, sir. When comes your look forth?

Poet. Upon the heels of my presentment, sir.

Let's see your piece.

Pain. 'Tis a good piece.

Poet. So 'tis: this comes off well and excellent.

Pain. Indifferent.
ACT I.

TIMON OF ATHENS.

SCENE I.

Whose eyes are on this sovereign lady fix'd;
Whom do I personate of Lord Timon's frame,
Whose Fortune with her fiery hand wafts to her;
Whose present grace to present slaves and servants
Translates his rivals.

Pain. 'T is conceived to scope.

This throne, this Fortune, and this hill, methinks,
With one man beckon'd from the rest below,
Bowing his head against the steepy mount
To climb his happiness, would be well express'd
In our condition.

Nay, sir, but hear me on.
All those which were his fellows but of late,
Some better than his value, on the moment
Follow his strides, his lords lillies fill with tendance,
Rain sacrificial whisperings in his ear,
Make sacred even his stirrup, and through him
Drink the free air.

Ay, marry, what of these?

When Fortune in her shift and change of mood
Spurns down her late beloved, all his dependants
Which labour'd after him to the mountain's top
Even on their knees and hands, let him slip down,
Not one accompanying his declining foot.

'T is common:
A thousand moral paintings I can show
That shall demonstrate these quick blows or For.
More pregnantly than words. Yet you do well
To show Lord Timon that mean eyes have seen
The foot above the head.

Trumpets sound. Enter Lord Timon, addressing himself courteously to every author: a Messenger from Ven ditius talking with him; Lucilius and other servants following.

Tim. Imprison'd is he, say you?

Mess. Ay, my good lord: live talents is his debt,
His means most short, his creditors most strait;
Your honourable letter he desires
To those have shut him up; which failing,
Periods his comfort.

Tim. Noble Venitius! Well;
I am not of that feather to shake off
My friend when he must need me. I do know him
A gentleman that well deserves a help:
Which he shall have: I will pay the debt, and free him.
Mess. Your lordship ever binds him.

Tim. Command me to him; I will send his man;
And being enfranchis'd, bid him come to me.
'Tis not enough to help the feeble up,
But to support him after. Fare you well.

Mess. All happiness to your honour! [Exit.

Enter an old Athenian.

Old Ath. Lord Timon, hear me speak.

Tim. Freely, good father.

Old Ath. Thou hast a servant named Lucilius.

Tim. I have so: what of him?

[Exeunt.

Old Ath. Most noble Timon, call the man before
Tim. Attendeth he here, or no? Lucilius!

Luc. Here, at your lordship's service. [creature.

Old Ath. This fellow here, Lord Timon, this thy
By night frequents my house. I am a man
That from my first have been inclined to thrift;
And my estate deserves an heir more raised
Than one which holds a trencher.

Tim. Well; what further?

Old Ath. One only daughter have I, no kin else,
On whom I may confer what I have got:
The maid is fair, o' the youngest for a bride,
And I have bred her at my dearest cost
In qualities of the best. This man of thine
Attempts her love: I prithee, noble lord,
Join with me to forbid him her resort;
Myself have spoke in vain.

Tim. The man is honest.

Old Ath. Therefore he will be, Timon:
His honesty rewards him in itself;
It must not bear my daughter.

Tim. Does she love him?

Old Ath. She is young and fair;
Our own precedent passions do instruct us
What levioly's in youth.

Tim. [To Lucilius.] Love you the maid?

Luc. Ay, my good lord, and she accepts of it.

Tim. Old Ath. If in her marriage my consent be miss-call the gods to witness, I will choose
-ing, Mine heir from forth the beggars of the world,
And dispossess her all.

Tim. How shall she be endow'd.
If she be mated with an equal husband?

Old Ath. Three talents on the present: in future,
This gentleman of mine hath serv'd me long:
To build his fortune I will strain a little,
For 'tis a bold in men. Give him thy daughter:
What you bestow, in him I'll counterpoise,
And make him weigh with her.

Old Ath. Most noble lord,
Paw me not this your honour, she is his. [promise.

Tim. My hand to thee; mine honour on my

Luc. Humly I thank your lordship; never may
That state or fortune fall into my keeping,
Which is not owed to you!

[Exeunt Lucilius and Old Athenian.

Poet. Vouchsafe my labour, and long live your lordship!

Tim. I thank you; you shall hear from me anon:
Go not away. What have you your there, my friend?

Pain. A piece of painting, which I do beseech
Your lordship to accept.

Tim. Painting is welcome. The painting is almost the natural man:
For since dishonour traffics with man's nature,
He is but outside: these pencil'd figures are Even such as they give out. I like your work;
And you shall find it like it: wait attendance
Till you hear further from me.

Pain. The gods preserve ye!

Tim. Well fare you, gentleman: give me your hand;
We must needs dine together. Sir, your jewel
Hath suffer'd under praise.

Joc. What, my lord! despair?

Tim. A mere satire of commendations.

Joc. I should pay you for 't as 'tis extoll'd,
It would unclaw me quite.

Joc. My lord, 'tis rated
As those which sell would give; but you well know.
Things of like value differing in the owners
Are prized by their masters: believe 't, dear lord,
You moral the jewel by the wearing it.

Tim. What mock'd.

Mrr. No, my good lord; he speaks the common
Which all men speak with him.

Tim. Look, who comes here: will you be child?

Enter Apemantus.

Joc. We'll bear, with your lordship.

Mrr. He'll spare none.

Tim. Good morrow to thee, gentle Apemantus!

Apem. Till I be gentle, stay thou for thy good morrow:
I'm honest. [ honest.

Timon. How likest thou this picture, Apemantus?
ApeM. The best, for the innocence.
Timon. Will the lie not well that painted it?
ApeM. He wrought better that made the painter;
and yet he's but a filthy piece of work.

Pain. You're a dog.
ApeM. Thy mother's of my generation: what's she, if I be a dog?

Timon. How dost thou like this jewel, Apemantus?
ApeM. Not so well as plain-dealing, which will not cost a man a doit.
Timon. What dost thou think 'tis worth?
ApeM. Not worth my thinking. How now, poet?
Poet. How now, philosopher?
ApeM. Thou liest.
Poet. Art not one?
ApeM. Yes.
Poet. Then I lie not.
ApeM. Art not a poet?
Poet. Yes.
ApeM. Then thou liest: look in thy last work, where thou hast feigned him a worthy fellow.
Poet. That's not feigned; he is so.
ApeM. Yes. he is worthy of thee, and to pay thee for thy labour: he that loves to be flattered is worthy o' the flatterer. Heaven's, that I were a lord!
Timon. What wouldst do then, Apemantus?
ApeM. 'E'en as Apemantus does now; hate a lord with my heart.
Timon. What, thyself?
ApeM. Ay.
Timon. Wherefore?
ApeM. That I had no angry wit to be a lord.

Art not thou a merchant?
Mer. Ay, Apemantus.
ApeM. Traffic confound thee, if the gods will not
Mer. If traffic do it, the gods do it. [thee

Trumpet sounds. Enter a Messenger.

Tem. What trumpet's that?
Mess. 'T is Alcibiades, and some twenty horse,
All of companionship.
Timon. Pray, entertain them: give them guide to [Exeunt some Attendants.
You must needs dine with me: go not you hence.
Till I have thank'd you; when dinner's done,
Show me this piece. I am joyful of your sights.

Enter Alcibiades, with the rest.

ApeM. Most welcome, sir!

Mer. So, so, there!

Aches contract and starve your supple joints!
That there should be small love 'mongst these sweet knives,
And kill this cowtease? The strain of man's bred out
Into bishop and monkey.
Alcibi. Sir, you have saved my hunger, and I feed
Most hungrily on your sight.

Timon. Right welcome, sir!

Ere we depart, we'll share a bounteous time
In different pleasures. Pray you, let us in.

Enter two Lords.

First Lord. What time o' day is 't, Apemantus?
ApeM. Time to be honest.
First Lord. That time serves still.

ApeM. The more accrued thou, that still omit'st it.

Sec. Lord. Thou art going to Lord Timon's feast?
ApeM. Ay, to see meat fill knives and wine heat
Timon. Shall he not well that paints thee there.
ApeM. Thou art a fool to bid me farewell twice.
Sec. Lord. Why, Apemantus?
ApeM. Shouldst have kept one to thyself, for I mean to give thee none.

First Lord. Hang thyself!

ApeM. Why shouldst do nothing at thy bidding:
make thy requests to thy friend.
Sec. Lord. Away, unpeacable dog, or I'll spurn thee
hence!
ApeM. I will fly, like a dog, the heels o' the ass.

First Lord. He's opposite to humanity. Come, shall we in.

And taste Lord Timon's bounty? he outgoes
The very heart of kindness. [gold.
Sec. Lord. He pours it out; Plutus, the god of

Not tenfold above itself; no gift to him,
But breeds the giver a return exceeding
All use of quittance.

First Lord. The noblest mind he carries

First Lord. I'll keep you company. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A banqueting-room in Timon's house.

Hunting playing loud music. A great banquet served in;
Flavius and others attending: then enter Lord Timon Alcibiades, Lords, Senators, and Ventidius. Then comes, dropping after all, Apemantus, discontentedly, like himself.

Ten. Most honour'd Timon,
It hath pleased the gods to remember my father's
And call him to long peace. [age,
He is gone happy, and has left me rich:
Then, as in grateful virtue I am bound
To your free heart, I do return those talents,
Doubled with thanks and service, from whose help
I derived liberty.

Timon. O, by no means,
Honest Ventidius: you mistake my love:
I gave it freely ever: and there's none
Can truly say he gives, if he receives:
If our betters play at that game, we must not dare
To imitate them: faults that are rich are fair.

Ten. A noble spirit!
Timon. [They all stand ceremoniously looking on Timon.
Ceremony was but devised at first.
To set a gloss on faint deeds, hollow welcomes,
Recanting goodness, sorry ere 't is shown; [none.
But where there is true friendship, there needs
Pray, sit; more welcome are ye to my fortunes
Than my fortunes to me. [They sit.
First Lord. My lord, we always have confess'd it.
ApeM. Ho, ho, confess'd it! hang'd it, have you
Timon. O, Apemantus, you are welcome. [not?
ApeM. No;
You shall not make me welcome:
I come to have thee thrust me out of doors. [there
Timon. Fei, thou'rt a charl; ye've got a humour
Does not become a man: 'tis much to blame.
They say, my lords, 'ira furor brevis est'; but your man is ever angry. Go, let him have a table by himself, for he does neither affect company, nor is he fit, indeed, for it.
ApeM. Let me stay at thine apperil, Timon: I come to observe: I give thee warning on 't.
Timon. I take no heed of thee; thou'rt an Athenian, therefore welcome: I myself would have no power; prithee, let my meat make thee silent.
ACT I.

TIMON OF ATHENS.

SCENE II.

Apen. I scorn thy meat; 'tis would choke me, for I should never flatter thee. O you gods, what a number of men eat Timon, and he sees 'em not! It grieves me to see so many dip their meat in one man's blood; and all the madness is, he cheers them up too. I wonder men dare trust themselves with men; Methinks they should invite them without knives; Good for their meat, and safer for their lives.

There's much example for't: the fellow that sits next him now, parts bread with him, pledges the breath of him in a divided draught, is the readiest man to kill him; So fall to a huge man, I should fear to drink at meals; Lest they should spy my windpipe's dangerous notes; Great men should drink with harness on their throats.

[Triad.]

Tim. My lord, in heart; and let the health go.

Apen. Flow this way! A brave fellow! he keeps his tides well. Those healths will make thee and thy state look ill, Timon. Here's that which is too weak to be a sinner, honest water, which 'ne'er man of the hire:

This and my food are equal; there's no odds: Feasts are too proud to give thanks to the gods.

APEMANUS' GRACE.

Immortal gods, I crave no pelf; I pray for no man but myself: Grant I may never prove so fond, To trust man on his oath or bond; Or a harlot, for her weeping; Or a dog, that seems asleep; Or a keeper with my freedom; Or my friends, if I should need 'em. And ladies, though Old Rich men sin, and I eat root.

Much good dity thy good heart, Apemantus!

Tim. Captain Alecbidas, your heart's in the field now.

Aleib. My heart is ever at your service, my lord.

Tim. You had rather be at a breakfast of enemies than a dinner of friends.

Aleib. So they were bleeding-new, my lord, there's no meat like 'em; I could wish my best friend at such a feast.

Apen. Would all those flatterers were thine enemies then, that then thou mightst kill 'em and bid me to 'em.

First Lord. Mighty but we have that happiness, my lord, that you would once use our hearts, whereby we might express some part of our zeal, we should think ourselves for ever perfect.

Tim. O, no doubt, my good friends, but the gods themselves have provided that I shall have much help from you: how had you been my friends else? why have you that charitable title from thousands, did not you chiefly belong to my heart? I have told you of myself to you than you can with modesty speak in your own behalf; and thus far I confirm you. O you gods, think I, what need we any friends, if we should never have need of 'em? they were the most needless creatures living, should we never have use for 'em, and would most resemble sweet instruments hung up in cases that keep their sounds to themselves. Why, I have often wished myself poorer, that I might come nearer to you. We are born to do benefits: and what better or properer can we call our own than the riches of our friends? O, what a precious comfort 'tis, to have so many; like brothers, commending one another's fortunes. O joy, you have made my heart so full! Mine eyes cannot hold out water, methinks: to forget their faults, I drink to you.

Apen. Thou wcepest to make them drink, Timon.

Sec. Lord. Joy had the like conception in our eyes And at that instant like a babe sprung up. [Hard.

Apen. Ho, ho! I laugh to think that bebe a base. Third Lord. I promise you, my lord, you moved me much.

Apen. Much! [Tucket, within.

Tim. What means that trump?

Enter a Servant.

How now?

Serv. Please you, my lord, there are certain ladies most desirous of admittance.

Tim. Ladies! what can their wills? Serv. There comes with them a forerunner, my lord, which bears that office, to signify their pleasures.

Tim. I pray, let them be admitted.

Enter Cupid.

Cup. Hail to thee, worthy Timon, and to all That of his bounties taste! The five best senses Acknowledge thee their patron: and come freely To gratulate thy plentiful bosom: th'ear, Taste, touch and smell, pleased from thy table rise; They only now come but to feast thine eyes.

Tim. They're welcome all; let 'em have kind admittance: Music, make their welcome! [Exit Cupid. First Lord. You see, my lord, how ample you're beloved.

Music. Re-enter Cupid, with a mask of Ladies as Ape- muns, with lutes in their hands, dancing and playing.

Apen. Hoy-day, what a sweep of vanity comes They dance! they are mad women. [this way! Like madness is the glory of this life. As this part of the world, and church of a little oil and root. We make ourselves fools, to disjoint ourselves; And spend our flatteries, to drink those men Upon whose age we void it up again, With poisonous spite and envy.

Who lives that's not depraved or depraves? Who dies, that bears not one spurn to their graves Of their friends' gift? I should fear those that dance before me now Would one day stamp upon me: 'tis been done; Men shut their doors against a setting sun.

The Lords rise from table, with much adoring of Timon; and to show their loves, each single out an Amazon, and all dance, men with women, a lofty strain or two to the hautboys, and cease.

Tim. You have done our pleasures much grace, fair ladies.

Set a fair fashion on our entertainment, Which was not half so beautiful and kind; You have added worth unto 't and lustre, And entertain'd me with mine own device; I am to thank you for 't.

First Lord. My lord, you take us even at the best. Apen. "Faith, for the worst is filthy; and would not hold taking, I doubt me. Tim. Ladies, there is an idle banquet attends you: Please you to dispose yourselves.

All Ladies. Most thankfully, my lord. [Exit Cupid and Ladies.

Tim. Flavius. Flav. My lord?

Tim. The little casket bring me hither.

Flav. Yes, my lord. More jewels yet! [Escn. There is no crossing him in's humour; Else I should tell him,—well, i' faith, I should. When all's spent, he'll be cross'd then, an he could. "Is pity charity had not eyes behind? That man might ne'er be wretched for his mind. [Exit. First Lord. Where be our men? 611
SCENE I.—A Senator’s house.

Enter Senator, with papers in his hand.

Sen. And late, five thousand: to Varro and to Isidore.

He owes nine thousand: besides my former sum, Which makes it five and twenty. Still in motion Of raging waste? It cannot hold; it will not. If I want gold, steal but a beggar’s dog, And give it Timon, why, the dog coins gold. If it would sell my horse, and buy twenty more Better than he, why, give my horse to Timon, Ask nothing, give it him, it foals me, straight, And able horses. No porter at his gate, But rather one that smiles and still invites All that pass by: it cannot hold; no reason Can found his state in safety. Caphis, ho! Caphis, I say!

ACT II.

TIMON OF ATHENS.

TIm. And now I remember, my lord, you gave
Good words the other day of a bay courser
I rode on: it is yours, because you liked it. [that, Sec. Lord, With more than common thanks I will Third Lord. O, he’s the lordliest of beauty! Tim. And now I remember, my lord, you gave Much wrong, you hate too much of your own merits: Here, my lord, a trifle of our love. [receive it. Sec. Lord. Ay, and with several thanks I will Enter Flavius, with the casket.

Flav. O my friends, [lord, I have one word to say to you: look you, my good
I must entreat you, honour me so much
As to advance this jewel; accept it and wear it, Kind my lord.

First Lord. I am so far already in your gifts,— All. So are we all.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. My lord, there are certain nobles of the senate
Nearly alighted, and come to visit you.

Tim. They are fairly welcome.

Flav. I beseech you your honour, Vouchsafe me a word; it does concern you near.

Tim. Near? why then, another time I’ll hear thee:
I prithee, let’s be provided to show them entertain- Flav. [Aside] I scarce know how. [melt.

Enter a second Servant.

Sec. Serv. May it please your honour, Lord Lucius,
Out of his free love, hath presented to you
Four milk-white horses, trapp’d in silver.

Tim. I shall accept them fairly; let the presents Be worthily entertain’d.

Enter a third Servant.

How now, what news?

Third Serv. Please you, my lord, that honourable gentleman, Lord Lucullus, entreats your company to-morrow to hunt with him, and has sent your honour two brace of greyhounds.

Tim. I’ll hunt with him; and let them be received, Not without fair reward.

Flav. [Aside] What will this come to? He commands us to provide, and give great gifts, And all out of an empty coffers.
Nor will he know his purse, or yield me this, To show him what a beggar his heart is, Being of no power to make his wishes good; His promises fly so beyond his state
That what he speaks is all in debt; he owes For every word: he is so kind that he now Pays interest for ’t; his land’s put to their books.
Well, would I were gently put out of office
Before I were forced out!
Hapker is he that has no friend to feed
Than such that do en’d enemies exceed.
I bleed inwardly for my lord. [Exit. Tim.

Enter Caphis.

Caph. Here, sir; what is your pleasure?

Sen. Get on your cloak, and haste you to Lord Timon.

Importune him for my moneys; be not ceased
With slight denial, nor then silenced when—
‘Command me to your master’—and the cap Plays in the right hand, thus; but tell him,
My uses cry to me, I must serve my turn
Out of my own; I know no days and times are past
And my reliances on his fracted dates
Have snit my credit: I love and honour him,
But must not break my hand to heal his finger;
Immediate are my necks, and my relief
Must not be tuss’d and turn’d to me in words,
But find supply immediate. O you gone?
Put on a most importunate aspect,
ACT II.

TIMON OF ATHENS.

SCENE II.

Enter Flavius, with many bills in his hand.

Flavius. No care, no stop! so senseless of expense,
That he will neither know how to maintain it,
Nor cease his flood of riot: takes no account
How things go from him, nor resumes no care
Of what is to continue: never mind
Was to be so unwise, to be so kind.
What shall be done? he will not hear, till feel:
I must be round with him, now he comes from hunt.

Enter Caphis, and the Servants of Isidore and Varro.

Caph. Good even, Varro: what
Var. Serv. Is't not your business too?
Caph. It is: and yours too, Isidore?
Isid. Serv. It is so.
Caph. Would we were all discharged!
Var. Serv. I fear it.
Caph. Here comes the lord.

Enter Timon, Alcibiades, and Lords, &c.

Tim. So soon as dinner's done, we'll forth again,
My Alcibiades. With me? what is your will?
Caph. My lord, here is a note of certain dues.
Tim. Dues! Whence are you?
Caph. Of Athens here, my lord.
Tim. Go to my steward,
Caph. Please it your lordship, he hath put me off
To the succession of new days this month:
My master is awaked by great occasion
To call upon his own, and humbly prays you
That with your other noble parts you'll suit
In giving him his right.

Tim. Mine honest friend,
I prithee, but repair to me next morning.
Caph. Nay, good my lord,—
Tim. Contain thyself, good friend.
Var. Serv. One Varro's servant, my good lord,—
Isid. Serv. From Isidore:
He humbly prays your speedy payment, [wants—
Caph. If you did know, my lord, my master's Var. Serv. 'Twas due on forfeit, my lord, six
And past.
weeks
Isid. Serv. Your steward puts me off, my lord;
And I am sent expressly to your lordship.
Tim. Give me breath.
I do beseech you, good my lords, keep on;
I'll wait upon you instantly.

Tim. Do so, my friends. See them well entertain'd.

Flavi. Pray, draw near.

[Exit Alcibiades and Lords.

Flavi. Come hither: pray you,
How goes the world, that I am thus enquirer'd
With clamorous demands of date-broke bonds,
And the detention of long-since-dues debted,
Against my honour?

Flavi. Please you, gentlemen,
The time is inrecognizable this business;
Your importunity cease till after dinner,
That I may make his lordship understand
Wherefore you are not paid.

Tim. Do so, my friends. See them well entertain'd.

Flavi. Fray, draw near.

Enter Ape man tus and Fool.

Caph. Stay, stay, here comes the fool with Ape man tus: let's ha' some sport with 'em.
Var. Serv. Hang him, he'll abuse us.
Isid. Serv. A plague upon him, dog!
Var. Serv. How dost, fool?
Apea. Dost dialogue with thy shadow?
Var. Serv. I speak not to thee.
Apea. No, 'tis to thyself. [To the Fool] Come away.
Isid. Serv. There's the fool hangs on your back already.
Apea. No, thou stand'st single, thou rt not on Caph. Where's the fool now? [him yet.
Apea. He last asked the question. Poor rogues, and usurers' men! bawds between gold and want!
All Serv. What are we, Ape man tus?
Apea. Asses.
All Serv. Why?
Apea. That you ask me what you are, and do not know yourselves. Speak to 'em, fool.
Fool. How do you, gentlemen?
All Serv. Gramercies, good fool; how does your mistress?
Fool. She's e'en setting on water to scald such chickens as you are. Would we could see you at Apea. Good! gramerce. [Cornith!

Fool. Look you, here comes my mistress' page.
do you in this wise company? How dost thou,
Ape man tus?
Apea. Would I had a rod in my mouth, that I might answer thee profitably.
Page. Prithee, Ape man tus, read me the superscription of these letters: I know not which is which.
Apea. Canst not read?
Page. No.
Apea. There will little learning die then, that day thou art hanged. This is to Lord Timon; this to Alcibiades. Go; thou wast born a bastard, and thou 'rt a bawd.
Page. Thou wast whelped a dog, and thou shalt shame a dog's death. Answer not; I am gone.

[Exit.

Apea. E'en so thou outrunnest grace. Fool, I will go with you to Lord Timon's.
Fool. Will you leave me there?
Apea. If Timon stay at home. You three serve three usurers?
All Serv. Ay; would they served us!
Apea. So would I,—as good a trick as ever hangman served thief.
Fool. Are you three usurers' men?
All Serv. Ay, fool.
Fool. I think no usurer but has a fool to his servant: my mistress is one, and I am her fool. When men come to borrow of your masters, they approach sadly, and go away merry; but they enter my mistress' house merrily, and go away sadly: the reason of this?
Apea. I could render one.
Apea. Do it then, that we may account thee a whore-master and a knave; which not withstanding, thou shalt be no less esteemed.
Var. Serv. What is a whoremaster, fool?
Fool. A fool in good clothes, and something like thee. Tis a spirit: sometime 't appears like a lord;
sometime like a lawyer; sometime like a philosophe, with two stones more than 's artificial one: he is very often like a knight; and, generally, in all shapes that man goes up and down in from four-score to thirteen, this spirit walks in.
Var. Serv. Thou art not altogether a fool.

ACT II.

TIMON OF ATHENS.

SCENE II.

Unwarily, not ignobly, have I given.
Why dost thou weep? Canst thou the conscience lack?
To whom shall I lack friends? Secure thy heart;
If I would breach the vessels of my love,
And try the argument of hearts by borrowing,
Men and men's fortunes could I frankly use
As I can bid thee speak.

Flav. Assurance bless your thoughts!

Tim. And, in some sort, these wants of mine are crown'd,
That I account them blessings: for by these Shall I try friends: you shall perceive how you
Mistake my fortunes: I am wealthy in my friends.
Within there! Flaminius! Servilius!

Enter Flaminius, Servilius, and other Servants.

Servants. My lord? my lord?

Tim. I will dispatch you severally: you to Lord Lucius;
to Lord Lucillus you: I limited with his honour to-day: you, to Scampronius: commend me to their loves, and, I am proud, say, that my occasions have forced time to use you towards a supply of money: let the request be fifty talents.

Flamin. As you have said, my lord.

Flav. [Aside] Lord Lucillus and Lucinus? H'm! Tim. Go you, sir, to the senators—
Of whom, even to the state's best health, I have Deserved this hearing— but 'tis send o' the instant
A thousand talents to me.

Flav. I have been bold—

For that I knew it the most general way—
To them to use your signet and your name;
But they do so on their heads, and I am here
No richer in return.

Tim. Is 't true? can 't be?

Flav. They answer, in a joint and corporate voice,
That now they are at full, want treasure, cannot Do what they would: are sorry—you are honourable—
But yet they could have wished— they know not—
Something hath been amiss—a noble nature
May catch a wrench— would all were well—'tis pity:

And so, intending other serious matters,
After distasteful looks and these hard fractions,
With certain half-caps and cold-moving knots
They froze me into silence.

Tim. You gods, reward them! Prithée, man, look cheerly.
These old fellows have their ingratitude in them hereditary:
Their blood is caked, 'tis cold; it seldom flows;
'Tis lack of kindly warmth they are not kind;
And nature, as it grows again toward earth,
Is fashion'd for the journey, dull and heavy.
[To a Serv.] Go to Ventidius. [To Flav.] Prithée, be not sad,
Thou art true and honest; ingeniously I speak.
No blame belongs to thee. [To Serv.] Ventidius lately
Buried his father; by whose death he's stepp'd into a great estate: when he was poor,
Inimick'd and in scarcity of friends,
I clear'd him with five talents: greet him from me;
But him suppose some good necessity
Touches his friend, which craves to be remember'd
With those five talents [Exit Serv.]. [To Flav.] That had, give 't these fellows
To whom 't is instant due. Never speak, or think,
That Timon's fortunes mong his friends can sink.
Flav. I could I could not think it: that thought
Is bounty's foe:
Being free itself, it thinks all others so. [Exit.}
Flaminius waiting. Enter a Servant to him.

Flam. I have told my lord of you; he is coming down to you.

Flam. I thank you, sir.

Enter Lucullus.

Luc. Here’s my lord.

Serv. Lucullus. [Aside] One of Lord Timon’s men? a gift, I warrant. Why, this hits right; I dreamt of a silver basin and ever to-night. Flaminius, honest Flaminius; you are very respectively welcome, sir. Fill me some wine. [Exit Serv.]

Luc. And how does that honourable, complete, free-hearted gentleman of Athens, thy very bountiful good lord and master? His health is well, sir. [ter? Luc. I am right glad that his health is well, sir; and what hast thou there under thy cloak, pretty Flaminius?

Flam. Faith, nothing but an empty box, sir; which, in my lord’s behalf, I come to entreat your honour to supply; who, having great and instant occasion to use fifty talents, hath sent to your lordship to furnish him, nothing doubting your present assistance therein.

Luc. Flam. la, la, la! nothing doubting, says he? Alas, good lord! a noble gentleman ’tis, if he would not keep so good a house. Many a time and often I ha’ dined with him, and told him on’t, and come again to supper to him, of purpose to have him spend less, and yet he would embrace no counsel, take no warning by my coming. Every man has his fault, and honesty is his: I ha’ told him on’t, but I could ne’er get him from it.

Enter Servant, with wine.

Serv. Please your lordship, here is the wine.

Luc. Flaminius, I have note thee always wise. Here’s to thee.

Flam. Your lordship speaks your pleasure.

Luc. I have observed thee always for a towardly prompt spirit—give thee thy due—and one that knows what belongs to reason; and canst use the time well, if the time use thee well; good parts in thee. [To Serv.] Get you gone, sirrah [Exit Serv.]. Draw nearer, honest Flaminius. Thy lord’s a bountiful gentleman: but thou art wise; and thou knowest well enough, although thou comest to me, that this is no time to lend money, especially upon bare friendship, without security. Here’s three solitudes for thee: good boy, wink at me, and say thou sawst me not. Fare thee well.

Flam. Is’t possible the world should so much differ, and we alive that lived? Fly dammed baseness, To him that worships thee! [Throwing the money back.]

Luc. Ha! now I see thou art a fool, and fit for thy master. [Exit.

Flam. May these add to the number that may say so! Let molten coin be thy damnation, Thou disease of a friend, and not himself! Has friendship such a faint and milky heart, It turns in less than two nights? O you gods, I feel my master’s passion! this slave, Unto his honour, has my lord’s meat in him: Why should it thrive and turn to nutrient, When he is turn’d to poison? O, may diseases only work upon’t! And, when he’s sick to death, let not that part of Which my lord paid for, be of any power (nature To expel sickness, but prolong his hour! [Exit.

Enter Lucius, with three Strangers.

Luc. Who, the Lord Timon? he is my very good friend, and an honourable gentleman.

First Stran. We know him for no less, though we are but strangers to him. But I can tell you one thing, my lord; and which I hear from common rumour: how Lord Timon’s happy hours are done and past, and his estate shrinks from him.

Luc. Fie, no, do not believe it; he cannot want for money.

Sec. Stran. But believe you this, my lord; that not long ago, one of his men was with the Lord Lucullus to borrow so many talents, nay, urged extremely for’t and showed what necessity belonged to’t, and yet was denied.

Luc. How!

Sec. Stran. I tell you, denied, my lord.

Luc. Well, a strange case was that! now, before the gods, I am ashamed on’t. Denied that honourable man! there was very little honour showed in’t. For my own part, I must needs confess, I have received some small kindnesses from him, as money, plate, jewels and such-like trinkets, nothing comparing to his; yet, had he mislooked and sent to me, I would ne’er have denied his occasion to so many talents.

Enter Servilius.

Luc. Sec. See, by good hap, yonder’s my lord; I have sweat to see his honour. My honoured lord,

[To Lucius. Luc. Servilius! you are kindly met, sir. Fare thee well; commend me to thy honourable virtuous lord, my very exquisite friend.

Sec. May it please your honour, my lord hath sent— Luc. Ha! what has he sent? I am so much enfeebled to that lord; he’s ever sending; how shall I thank him, thickest thou? And what has he sent now?

Sec. Has only sent his present occasion now, my lord; requesting your lordship to supply his instant use with so many talents.

Luc. I know his lordship is but merry with me; He cannot want fifty-five hundred talents. Sec. But in the mean time he wants less, my lord. If his occasion were not virtuous, I should not urge it half so faithfully.

Luc. Dost thou speak seriously, Servilius? Sec. Upon my soul, ’tis true, sir.

Luc. What a wicked beast was I to diminish myself against such a good time, when I might ha’ shown myself honourable! how unluckily it happened, that I should purchase the day before for a little part, and made a great deal of honour! Servilius, now, before the gods, I am not able to do,—the more beast. I say:—I was sending to use Lord Timon myself, these gentlemen can witness: but I would not, for the wealth of Athens, I had done’t now. Commend me bountifully to his good lordship: and I hope his honour will conceive the fairest of me, because I have no power to be kind: and tell him this from me, I count it one of my greatest affections, say, that I cannot pleasure such an honourable gentleman. Good Servilius, will you befriend me so far, as to use mine own words to him?

Sec. Yes, sir, I shall.

Luc. I’ll look you out a good turn, Servilius.

True, as you said, Timon is shrunk indeed; And he that’s once denied will hardly speed. [Exit.

First Stran. Do you observe this, Hostilius?

Sec. Stran. Ay, too well.
First Stron. Why, this is the world's soul; and just of the same piece. Is every flatterer's spirit. Who can call him His friend that dips in the same dish? for, in My knowing, Timon has been the lord's father, And kept his credit with his purse. Supported his estate; nay, Timon's money Has paid his men their wages: he ne'er drinks, But Timon's silver treads upon his lip; And yet—O, see the monstrouness of man When he chair in an unmeetable shape!— He does deny him, in respect of his, What charitable men afford to beggars.

Third Stron. Religion groans at it.

First Stron. For mine own part, I never tasted Timon in my life,

Nor came any of his bounties over me,
To mark me for his friend: yet, I protest,
For his right noble mind, illustrious virtue
And honourable carriage,

Had his necessity made use of me,
I would have put my wealth into donation,
And the best half should have returned to him,
So much I love him: but, I perceive,

Men must learn now with pity to dispense;
For policy sits above conscience. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. — A room in Sempronius' house.

Enter Sempronius, and a Servant of Timon.

Serv. Must he needs trouble me in 't,—hum!—

Love others!
He might have tried Lord Lucius or Lucullus;
And now Ventidius is wealthy too.
Whom he redeem'd from prison: all these
Own their estates unto him.

Serv. My lord,
They have all been touch'd and found base metal, for
They have all denied him.

Serv. How! have they denied him?
Has Ventidius and Lucullus denied him?
And does he send to me? Three—hum!
It shows but little love or judgment in him:
Must I be his last refuge? His friends, like physicians, [me?

Thrive, give him over; must I take the cure upon
Has much disgraced me in 't: I 'm angry at him,
That might have used him, but I see no sense in't,
But his occasions might have wodd me first;
For, in my conscience, I was the first man
That e'er received gift from him:
And does he think so backwardly of me now,
That I'll require it last? No:
So it may prove an argument of laughter
To the rest, and 'mongst lords I be thought a fool.
I'd rather than the worth of thrice the sum,
Had sent me to first, but for my mind's sake;
I'd such a courage to do him good. But now return,
And with their faint reply this answer join;
Who bates mine honour shall not know my coin.

[Exit.

Serv. Excellent! Your lordship's a goodly villain.
The devil knew not what he did when he made man politic; he crossed himself by 't: and I cannot think but, in the end, the villains of man will set him clear. How fairly this lord strives to appear foul:

Takes virous copies to be wicked, like those that under hot ardent zeal would set whole realms on fire:

Of such a nature is his politic love.

This was my lord's best hope; now all are fled,
Save only the gods: now his friends are dead,
Doors, that were ne'er acquainted with their wards

Many a bounteous year, must be employ'd
Now to guard sure their master.

And this is all a liberal course allows;
Who cannot keep his wealth must keep his house.

[Exit.

SCENE IV. — The same. A hall in Timon's house.

Enter two Servants of Varro, and the Servant of Lucius, waiting Titus, Hortensius, and other Servants of Timon's creditors, waiting his coming out.

First Var. Serv. Well met; good morrow, Titus and Hortensius.

Tit. The like to you, kind Varro.

Hor. Lucius!

What, do we meet together?

Luc. Serv. Ay, and I think
One business does command us all; for mine

Is money.

Tit. So is theirs and ours.

Enter Philotus.

Luc. Serv. And Sir Philotus too!

Phl. Good day at once.

Luc. Serv. Welcome, good brother.

Luc. Serv. What do you think the hour?

Phl. Labouring for nine.

Luc. Serv. So much?

Phl. Serv. Is not my lord seen yet?

Luc. Serv. Not yet.

Phl. I wonder on 't: he was wont to shine at seven.

Luc. Serv. Ay, but the days are wax'd shorter with
You must consider that a prodigal course, [him;
Is like the sun's; but not, like his, recoverable.
I fear 't is deepest winter in Lord Timon's purse;
That is, one may reach deep enough, and yet

Find little.

Phl. I am of your fear for that.

Tit. I'll show you how to observe a strange event.
Your lord sends now for money.

Hor. Most true, he does.

Tit. And he wears jewels now of Timon's gift,
For which I wait for money.

Hor. It is against my heart.

Luc. Serv. — Mark, how strange it shows,
Timon in this should pay more than he owes:
And e'en as if your lord should wear rich jewels, And send for money for 'em. [noses:
Hor. I'm weary of this charge, the gods can wit,
I know my lord hath spent of Timon's wealth,
And now ingratitude makes it worse than theft.

First Var. Serv. Yes, mine's three thousand
Crowns; what's yours, mine's five thousand.

Luc. Serv. And mine's five thousand mine.

First Var. Serv. 'Tis much deep: and it should seem by the sun,
Your master's confidence was above mine;
 Else, surely, his had equal'd.

Enter Flaminius.

Tit. One of Lord Timon's men.

Luc. Serv. Flaminius! Sir, a word: pray, is my lord ready to come forth?

Flam. No, indeed, he is not.

Tit. We attend his lordship: pray, signify so much.
Flam. I need not tell him; he knows you are too diligent.

[Exit.

Enter Flavius in a cloak, muffled.

Luc. Serv. Ha! is not that his steward muffled so?

He goes away in a cloud: call him, call him.

Tit. Do you hear, sir?

Sec. Var. Serv. By your leave, sir,—

Flav. What do ye ask of me, my friend?

Tit. We wait for certain money here, sir.

Flav. Ay.

If money were as certain as your waiting,
'T were sure enough.

Why then prefer'st thou not your sums and bills,
When your false masters eat of my lord's meat?
Then they could smile and fawn upon his debts
And take down the interest into their glutonium,
You do yourselves but wrong to stir me up; [maws.
ACT III.

TIMON OF ATHENS.

SCENE V.

Let me pass quietly:
Believe 't, my lord and I have made an end;
I have no more to reckon, he to spend.

Luc. Serv. Ay, but this answer will not serve.

Flar. \[If not serve, 'tis not so base as for you;
For I serve no knaves. [Exit.

First Var. Serv. How! what does his cashiered worship matter?

Sec. Var. Serv. No matter what; he's poor, and that's revenue enough. Who can speak broader than he that has no house to put his head in? such may rail against great buildings.

Enter Servilius.

Tit. O, here's Servilius; now we shall know some answer.

Serv. If I might beseech you, gentlemen, to repair some other hour, I should derive much from 't; for, take 't of my soul, my lord leant wondrously to discontent: his comfortable temper has forsok him;
he's much out of health, and keeps his chamber.

Luc. Serv. Many do keep their chambers are not
And, if it be so far beyond his health,
[sick]
Methinks he should the sooner pay his debts.
And make a clear way to the gods.

Serv. Good gods!

Tit. We cannot take this for answer, sir: [lord!
Flam. [Within] Servilius, help! My lord! my

Enter Timon, in a rage: Flaminius following.

Tim. What, are my doors opposed against my pas-
Have I been ever free, and must my house [sage]
Be my retentive enemy, my gaud?
The place which I have feasted, does it now,
Like all mankind, show me an iron heart?

Luc. Serv. Put in now, Titus.

Tit. My lord, here is my bill.

Luc. Serv. Here's mine.

Hor. And mine, my lord.

Both Var. Serv. And ours, my lord.

Fla. All our bills.

Tim. Knock me down with 'em, cleave me to the
Luc. Serv. Alas, my lord,—
Tim. Cut my heart in sums.

Tim. Mine, fifty talents.

Tit. Tell out my blood.

Luc. Serv. Five thousand crowns, my lord.

Tim. Five thousand drops pays that. What yours?

First Var. Serv. My lord,—

Sec. Var. Serv. My lord,—

Tim. Tear me, take me, and the gods fall upon you! [Exit.

Hor. \[Faith, I perceive our masters may throw their cares at their money: these debts may well be called desperate ones, for a madman owes 'em.

Re-enter Timon and Flavius. [Exit.

Tim. They have e'en put my breath from me, the Creditors?—devils! [slaves.

Flar. My dear lord,—

Tim. What if it should be so?

Flar. My lord,—

Tim. I'll have it so. My steward!

[Flar. Here, my lord.

Tim. So litly? Go, bid all my friends again,
Lucius, Lucullus, and Sempronius:
All, sirrah, all:
I'll once more feast the rascals.

Flar. O my lord, You only speak from your distracted soul;
There is not so much left, to furnish out
A moderate table.

Tim. Be 't not in thy care; go, I charge thee, invite them all: let in the tide
Of knaves once more; my cook and I'll provide.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The same. The senate-house.

The Senate sitting.

First Sen. My lord, you have my voice to it: the Bloody: 'tis necessary he should die: [fault's
Nothing emboldens sin so much as fear.

Sec. Sen. Most true; the law shall bruise him.

Enter Alcibiades, with Attendants.

Alcib. Honour, health, and compassion to the First Sen. Now, captain? [senate

[Alcib. I am an humble suitor to your virtues;
For pity is the virtue of the law,
And none but tyrants use it cruelly.

It pleases time and fortune to lie heavy
Upon a friend of mine, who, in hot blood,

Thath stepp'd into the law, which is past depth
To those that, without heel, do plunge into 't.

He is a man, setting his fate aside,
Of comely virtues:

Nor did he soil the fact with cowardice—
An honour in him which buys out his fault—
But with a noble fury and fair spirit,
Seeing his reputation touch'd to death,
He did oppose his foe:

And with such sober and unmoved passion
He did behave his anger, ere 't was spent,
As if he had but proved an argument.

First Sen. You undergo too strict a paradox,
\[servile

To make an ugly deed look fair.
Your words have took such pains as if they honour'd
To bring manslaughter into form and set quarrelling
Upon the head of valour; which indeed
Is valour misbegot and came into the world
When sects and factions were newly born;

He's truly valiant that can wisely suffer
The worst that man can breathe, and make his wrongs
[lesely,

His outsides, to wear them like his ruin'd, care-
And ne'er prefer his injuries to his heart,
To bring it into danger.
If wrongs be evils and enforce us kill,

What folly 'tis to hazard life for ill?

Alcib. My lord,— [look clear:

First Sen. You cannot make gross sins
To revenge is no valour, but to bear.

Alcib. My lords, then, under favour, pardon me,
If I speak like a captain.

Why do foul—and yours themselves to battle,
And not endure all threats? sleep upon 't,
And let the toes quietly cut their threats,
Without repugnancy? If there be Such valour in the bearing, what make we Abroad? why then, women are more valiant
That stay at home, if bearing carry it,
And the ass more captain than the lion, the felon
Londen with iron wiser than the judge,
If wisdom be in suffering. O my lords,
As you are great, be pitifully good;
Who cannot condemn rashness in cold blood?

To kill, I grant, is sin's extremest gust;
But, in defence, by mercy, 'tis most just.
To be in anger is impiety;
But who is man that is not angry?
Weigh but the crime with this.

Sec. Sen. You breathe in vain.

Alcib. In vain! his service done
At Lacedemon and Byzantium
Were a sufficient brier for his life.

First Sen. What's that?

Alcib. I say, my lords, he has done fair service,
And slain in fight many of your enemies:

How full of valour did he bear himself
In the last conflict, and made plenteous wounds!

Sec. Sen. He has made too much plenty with 'em;
He's a sworn rioter: he has a sin that often
Drowns him, and takes his valour prisoner:

617
First. I am sick of that grief too, as I understand how all things go.

Sec. Lord. Every man here’s so. What would he have born to the world?

First. Lord. A thousand pieces.

Sec. Lord. A thousand pieces!

First. Lord. What of you?

Sec. Lord. He sent to me, sir,—here he comes.

Enter Timon and Attendants.

Tim. With all my heart, gentlemen both; and how fare you?

First. Lord. Ever at the best, hearing well of your lordship.

Sec. Lord. The swallow follows not summer more willing than a dilly.

Tim. [Aside.] Nor more willingly leaves winter; such summer-birds are men. Gentlemen, our dinner will not recompense this long stay: feast your ears with the music awhile, if they will fare so harmoniously to the trumpet’s sound; we shall to’t presently.

First. Lord. I hope it remains not unkindly with your lordship that I returned you an empty mess.

Tim. O, sir, let it not trouble you. [senger.

Sec. Lord. My noble lord,—

Tim. Ah, my good friend, what cheer?

Sec. Lord. My most honourable lord, I am even such a father, that, when your lordship this other day sent to me I was so fortunate a beggar.

Tim. Think not on’t, sir.

Sec. Lord. If you had sent but two hours before,—

Tim. Let it notumber your better remembrance.

[The banquet brought in.] Come, bring in all together.

Sec. Lord. A covered dishes!

First Lord. Royal cheer, I warrant you.

Third Lord. Doubt not that, if money and the season can yield it.

First Lord. How do you? What’s the news?

Third Lord. Alcibiades is banished: hear you of First and Sec. Lord. Alcibiades banished! [It?] Third Lord. Tis so, be sure of it.

First Lord. How! how!

Sec. Lord. If you pray, upon what?

Tim. My worthy friends, will you draw near?

Third Lord. I’ll tell you more anon. Here’s a noble feast to Lord.

Sec. Lord. This is the old man still.

Third Lord. Will ’t hold? will ’t hold?

Sec. Lord. It does: but time will— and so—

Third Lord. I do conceive.

Tim. Each man to his stool, with that spur as he would to the lip of his mistress: your diet shall be as all the gods, to let the meat cool ere we can agree upon the first place: sit, sit. The gods require our thanks.

You great benefactors, sprinkle our society with thankfulness. For your own gifts, make yourselves praised: but reserve still to give, lest your deities be despised. Lead to each man enough, that one need not lend to another; for, were your godheads to borrow of men, men would forsake the gods. Make the meat be beloved more than the man that gives it. Let no assembly of twenty be without a score of villains: if there sit twelve women at the table, let a dozen of them be— as they are. The rest of your fees, O gods—the senators of Athens, together with the common latches of people—what is amiss in them, you gods, make suitable for destruction. For these my present friends, as they are to me nothing, so in nothing bless them, and to nothing are they welcome.

Uncover, dogs, and lap.

Some speak. What does his lordship mean?
SCENE I.—Without the walls of Athens.

Enter Timon.

Tim. Let me look back upon thee. O thou wall, That girldest in those wolves, dive in the earth, And hence not Athens! Matrons, turn incontinent! Obedience fail in children! slaves and fools, Pluck the grave wrinkled senate from the bench, And murdered in their steads! to general filth; Convert o’ the instant, green virgins, Do’t in your parents’ eyes! bankrupts, hold fast; Rather than render back, out with your knives, And cut your trusters’ throats! bounders, steal! Large-headed robbers your grave masters are, And pill by law. Maid, to thy master’s bed; Thy mistres is o’ the brother! Son of sixteen, Pluck the linnit crust from thy old limping sire, With it beat out his brains! Piety, and fear, Religion to the gods, peace, justice, truth, Domestic awe, night-rest, and neighbourhood, Instruction, manners, mysteries, and trades, Degrees, observances, customs, and laws, Decline to your confounding contraries, And let confusion live! Plagues, incident to men, Your potent and infectious fevers heap On Athens, ripe for stroke! Thou cold scatista, Cripple our senators, that their limbs may halt, As lamely as their manners! Lust and liberty Creep in the minds and marrows of our youth, That ’gainst the stream of virtue they may strive, And drown themselves in riot! Itches, blains, Sow all the Athenian bosoms; and their crop Be general leprosy! Breath infect breath, That their society, as their friendship, may Be merely poison! Nothing I’ll bear from thee, But nakedness, thou detestable town! Take thou that too; with multiplying bams! Timon will to the woods; where he shall find The unkindest beast more kinder than mankind. The gods confounded—hear me, you good gods all— The Athenians both within and out that wall! And grant, as Timon grows, his hate may grow To the whole race of mankind, high and low! Amen. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Athens. A room in Timon’s house.

Enter Flavius, with two or three Servants.

First Serv. Hear you, master steward, where’s our master?
Are we undone? cast off? nothing remaining?

Timon. Burn, house! sink, Athens! henceforth hated be
Of Timon, man and all humanity! [Exit.

Re-enter the Lords, Senators, &c.

First Lord. How now, my lords! [fury?
Sec. Lord. Know you the quality of Lord Timon’s
Third Lord. Push! did you see my cap?
Fourth Lord. I have lost my gown.
First Lord. He’s but a mad lord, and nought but humour sways him. He gave me a jewell: other day, and now he has beat it out of my hat: did you see my jewel?
Third Lord. Did you see my cap?
Sec. Lord. Here ’t is,
Fourth Lord. Here lies my gown.
First Lord. Let’s make no stay.
Sec. Lord. Lord Timon’s at.
Third Lord. I feel’t upon my bones.
Fourth Lord. One day he gives us diamonds, next day stones. [Exit.

ACT IV.

Scene IV.

Flav. Alack, my fellows, what should I say to Let me be recorded by the righteous gods, [you?
I am as poor as you.

First Serv. Such a house broke!
So noble a master fall’n! All gone! and not
One friend to take his fortune by the arm,
And go along with him!

Sec. Serv. As we do turn our backs
From our companion throw into his grave,
So his familiars to his buried fortunes
Slink all away, leave their false vows with him,
Like empty purses pick’d; and his poor self,
A dedicated beggar to the air,
With his disease of all-shunn’d poverty,
Walks, like contempt, alone. More of our fellows.

Enter other Servants.

Flav. All broken implements of a ruin’d house,
Third Serv. Yet do our hearts wear Timon’s
Iivery;
That see I by our faces; we are fellows still,
Serving alike in sorrow: lea’d is our bark,
And we, poor mates, stand on the dying deck,
Hearing the surges threat: we must all part
Into this sea of air.

Flav. Good fellows all.
The latest of my wealth I shall share amongst you,
Whenever we shall meet, for Timon’s sake,
Let’s yet be fellows; let’s shake our heads, and say,
As ’twere a knell unto our master’s fortunes,
We have seen better days. Let each take some;
Nay, put out all your hands. Not one word more:
Thus part we rich in sorrow, parting poor.

[Servants embrace, and part several ways.

O, the fierce wretchedness that glory brings us!
Who would not wish to be from wealth exempt,
Since riches point to misery and contempt?
Who would be so mock’d with glory? or to live
But in a dream of friendship?
To have his pomp and all what state compounds
But only painted, like hisvarnish’d friends?
Poor honest lord, brought low by his own heart,
Undone by goodness! Strange, unusual blood,
When man’s worst sin is, he does too much good!
Who, then, dares to be half so kind again?
For bounty, that makes gods, does still men,
My dearest lord, bless’d, to be most accursed,
Rich, only to be wretched, thy great fortunes
Are made thy chief affections. Alas, kind lord!
He’s flung in rage from this ingrateful seat
Of monstrous friends, nor has he with him to

Suppose his life, or that which can command it.
I'll follow and inquire him out.
I'll ever serve his mind with my best will;
While I have gold, I'll be his steward still. [Exit.

SCENE III.—Woods and cave, near the see-shore.

Enter Timon, from the cave.

Tim. O blessed breeding sun, draw from the earth
Rotten humility: below thy sister's orb
Infect the air! Twinn'd brothers of one womb,
Whose procreation, residence, and birth,
Scarce is dividum, touch them with several fortunes;
The greater storms the lesser: not nature,
To whom all sores by siege, can bear great fortune,
But by the hand of fortune. Raise me this beggar, and deny 't that lord;
The senator shall bear contempt hereditary,
The beggar native honour.
It is the pasture lords the rother's sides,
The want that makes him lean. Who dares, who
In purity of mankind stand upright,
In darts, and say 'This man's a flatterer'? if one be,
So are they all; for every grace of fortune
Is smooth'd by that below: the learned pate
Ducks to the golden food: all is oblique;
There's nothing level in our cursed natures,
But direct villany. Therefore, be abhorr'd:
All feast, societies, and throes of man!
His semblable, yea, himself, Timon disdains:
 Destruction tangle mankind! Earth, yield me roots!

Who seeks for better of thee, sauce his palate
With thy most operant poison! What is here
Gold? yellow, glittering, precious gold? No, gods,
I am no idle votarist: roots, you clear heavens!
Thus much of this will make black white, foul fair,
Wrong right, base noble, old young, coward valiant.
Ha, you gods! why this? what this, you gods?

Why, this
Will lug your priests and servants from your sides,
Pluck stout men's plow's from below their heads:
This yellow slave
Will knit and break religions, bless the accursed,
Make the lees leprous adored, place thieves
And give mean titles, and great titles,
With senators on the bench: this is it
That makes the wappen'd widow wed again;
She, whom the sphial-house and unclest sores
Would cast the gorge at, this embalms and spices
To the April day again. Come, dammed earth,
Thou common receptacle of every odds
Among the routs of nations, I will make thee
Do thy right nature. [March after off.] Ha! a drum?
That? no't.
But yet I'll hurry thee: thou'll go, strong thief,
When gouty keepers of thee cannot stand.
Nay, stay thou out for earnest. [Keeping some gold.

Enter Alcibiades, with drum and fife, in warlike manner; Phrynia and Timandra.

Alcib. What art thou there? speak.
Tim. A beast, as thou art. The canker gnaw thy
For showing me again the eyes of man! [heart.
Alcib. What is thy name? Is man so hateful to
That art thyself a man? [thee,
Tim. I am Misanthropeus, and hate mankind.
For thy part, I do wish thou werst a dog,
That I might love thee something. [know thee well;
But in thy fortunes am unlearn'd and strange.
Tim. I know thee too; and more than that I know thee,
I not desire to know. Follow thy drum;
With man's blood paint the ground, gules: gules:
Religious canons are cruel: Then
What should war be? This tell where of thine

Athen.

Hath in her more destruction than thy sword,
For all her cherubin look.

Plen. Thy lips rot off!

Tim. I will not kiss thee; then the rot returns
To thine own lips again.

Athen. How came the noble Timon to this change?

Tim. As the moon does, by wanting light to give:
But then renew I could not, like the moon;
There were no sums to borrow of.

Athen. Noble Timon,
What friendship may I do thee?

Tim. None, but to Maintain my opinion.

Alcib. What is it, Timon?

Tim. Promise me friendship, but perform none:
if thou wilt not promise thee, thou mayst be,
For thou a man! if thou dost perform, confound thee,
For thou an art a man!

Athen. I have heard in some sort of thy miseries.

Tim. Thou sawst them, when I had prosperity.

Athen. I see them now: then was a blessed time.

Tim. As thine is now, held with a brace of harlots;

Timon. Is this the Athenian minion, whom the Voiced so regardly? [world

Tim. Art thou Timandra?

Tim. Yes. [use thee;

Tim. Be a whore still; they love thee not that Give their diseases, leaving with thee their lust.
Make use of thy salt hours; season the slaves
For tubs and baths; bring down rose-checked youth
To the tab-fast and the diet.

Timon. Hang thee, monster!

Alcib. Bardon him, sweet Timandra; for his wits
Are drown'd and lost in his calamities.
I have but little gold of late, brave Timon,
The want whereof doth daily make revolt
In my penurious band: I have heard, and grieved,
How cursed Athens, mindless of thy worth,
Forgetting thy great deeds, when neighbour states,
But for thy sword and fortune, trod upon them.

Tim. I prithee, beat thy drum, and get thee gone.
Alcib. I am thy friend, and pity thee, dear Timon.
Tim. Do thy best to pity him whom thou dost
I had rather be alone. [trouble?

Alcib. Why, fare thee well;

Hast some gold for thee.

Tim. Keep it, I cannot eat it.

Athen. When I have laid proud Athenes on a heap,—

Warr'st thou 'gainst Athenes?

Alcib. Ay, Timon, and have course.

Tim. The gods confound them all in thy conquest;
And thou art not, what thy least conquer'd!

Alcib. Why, me, Timon?

Tim. That, by killing of villains,
Thou wast born to conquer my country.
Put up thy gold: go on,—here's gold,—go on;
Be as a planetary plague, when Jove
Will o'er some high-vice city hang his poison
In the sick air: let not thy sword slip one:
Pity not honour'd age for his white beard;
He is an usurer: strike me the counterfeit matron;
It is her habit only that is honest,
Herself is a vawd: let not the virgin's cheek
Make soft thy trident sword; for those milk-kaps,
That through the window-laws bore at men's eyes,
Are not within the leaf of pity write.

[babe,
But set them down horrible traitors: spare not the

Not doubly pronounced, thou that halt cut.
And mince it sans remorse: swear against objects;
Put armour on thine ears and on thine eyes;
Whose proof, nor yells of mothers, maidens, nor babes,
Nor sight of priests in holy vestments bleeding.
Shall pierce a jot. There's gold to pay thy soldiers:
Make large the confusion, and thy prey spent.
Confounded be thyself. [Speak not, be gone.
Alcib. Hast thou gold yet? I'll take the gold thou givest me, Not all thy counsel. — [upon thee! Tim. Dost thou, or dost thou not, heaven's curse Phr. and Timon. Give us some gold, good Timon: hast thou more? Tim. Enough to make a whore forsware her trade, And to make whores, a bawd. Hold up, you sluts, Your aprons mountant: you are not oatable. — Although, I know, you'll swear; terribly swear Into strong slanders and to heavenly augurs The immortal gods that hear you. — spare your hearts, I'll trust to your conditions: be whores still; And he whose pious breath seeks to convert you, Be strong in whore, allure him, burn him up; Let your close fire predominate his smoke, And the notturncoat; yet may your pains, six months, Be quite contrary: and thatch your poor thin roofs With barthens of the dead; — some that were hung'd. [still; No matter: — wear them, betray with them: where Paint till a horse may mire upon your face: A box of wrinkles! Phr. and Timon. Well, more gold: what then? Belive 't, that we'll do any thing for gold. Tim. Consumptions sow In hollow bones of men; strike their sharp shins, And mar men's spurring. Crack the lawyer's voice, That he may never more be pleaded. Nor sound his quilletts shrilly: hear the flamen, That scolds against the quality of flesh, And not believes himself: down with the nose, Down with it flat; take the bridge quite away Of him that, his particular to foresee, Smells then the general weal: make curl'd-pate ruffians bald! And let the unscurr'd braggarts of the war Derive some pain from you: plague all; That your activity may defeat and quell The source of all erection. There's more gold: Do you damn others, and let this damn you, And ditches grave you all? Phr. and Timon. More counsel with more money, bounteous Timon. Tim. More whores, more mischief first; I have given you earnest, — Alcib. Strike up the drum towards Athens! Fare-Timon. If I thrive well, I'll visit thee again. Timi. If I hope well, I'll never see thee more. Alcib. I never did thee harm. Tim. Yes, thou spakest well of me. Alcib. Call'st thou that harm? Tim. Men daily find it. Get thee away, and take Thy beggles with thee. Alcib. We but offend him. Strike! [Drum beats. Excit. Alcibiades, Phrygia, and Timandra. Tim. That nature, being sick of man'sunkinness, Should yet be hungry! Common mother, thou. [Digging. Whose womb unmeasurable, and infinite breast, Teens, and feeds all: whose self-same mettle, Whereof thy proud child, arrogant man, is put'd, Engenders the black toad and adder blue, The gilded newt and eyeless venom'd worm, With all the abhorred births below crisp heaven Whereon Hyperion's quickening fire doth shine; Yield him, who all thy human sons doth hate, From forth thy plentiful bosom, one poor root! Enseare thy fertile and conceptions womb, Let those beget following thy begetings! Go great with tigers, dragons, wolves, and bears; Teem with new monsters, whom thy upward face Hath to the marbled mansion all above, Never presented! — O, a root. — dear thanks! — Dry up thy marrows, vines, and plough-torn leas; Whereof ingrateful man, with liquorish draughts And morsels unmets, greeches his pure mind. That from it all consideration slips! Enter Apemantus. More man? plague, plague! Apem. I was directed hither: men report Thou dost affect my manners, and dost use them. Tim. 'T is, then, because thou dost not keep a dog, Whom I would imitate: consumption catch thee! Apem. This is in thee a nature but infected; A poor unnam'd melancholy sprouting From change of fortune. Why this spindle? this place? This slave-like habit? and these looks of care? Thy flatterers yet wear silk, drink wine, he soft; Hug their diseased perfumes, and have forgot That ever Timon was. Shame not these woods, By putting on the cunning of a carper. Be thou a flatterer now, and seek to thrive By that which has undone thee: hinge thy knee, And let his very breath, whom thou 'lt observe, Blow off thy cap: praise his most vicious strain, And call it excellent; thou wast told thus: Thou gavest thine ears like tapsters that bad welcome To knaves and all approachers: 'Tis most just That thou turn rascal; hadst thou wealth again, Rascals should have 't. Do not assume my likeness. Tim. Were I like thee, I'd throw away myself. Apem. Then, thou hast cast away thyself, being like thyself; A madman so long, now a fool. What, think'st That the bleak air, thy boisterous chamberlain, Will put thy shirt on warm? will these moss’d trees, That have outlived the eagle, page thy heels, And skip me thou point'st out? will the cold brook, Candiad with ice, cadle thy morning taste, To cure thy o'er-night's surfeit? Call the creatures Whose naked natures live in all the spit, Of wreakful heaven, whose bare unhoused trunks, To the conflicting elements expose, Answer mere nature; but then flatter thee; O, thou shalt find — A fool of thee; depart. Apem. I love thee better now than 'er I did. Tim. I hate thee worse. Apem. Why? Tim. Thou flatterst's misisy. Apem. I flatter not; but say thou art a craftiff. Tim. Why dost thou seek me out? Apem. To vex thee. Tim. Always a villain's office or a fool's. Dost please thyself in 't? Apem. Ay. Tim. What! a knave too? Apem. If thou didst put this sour-cold habit on To castigate thy pride, 't were well; but thou Dost it cuforced; thou 'lst courtier be again, Wert thou not beggar. Willing misisy Outlives incessant pomp, is crown'd before: The one is filling still, never complete; The other, at high wish: best state, contentless, Hath a distracted and most wretched being, Worse than the worst, content, Thou shouldst desire to die, being miserable. Tim. Not by his breath that is more miserable. Thou art a slave, whom Fortune's tender arm With favour never clasped; but bred a dog. Hidst thou, like us from our first swath, proceeded The sweet degrees that this brief world affords To such as may the passive drugs of it. Thyself command, thou wouldst have plunged thyself In general riot; melted down thy youth In different beds of lust; and never learn'd The icy precepts of respect, but follow'd The sugar’d game before thee. But myself, Who had the world as my confectionary,
ACT IV.
TIMON OF ATHENS.

SCENE III.

The months, the tongues, the eyes and hearts of men
At duty, more than I could frame employment,
That numberless upon me stuck as leaves
Do on the oak, love with one winter’s brush
Pelt with their boughs and bat the maples bare
For every storm that blows: I, to bear this,
That never knew but better, is some burden:
Thy nature did commence in suffering, time
Hath made thee hard in’t. Why shouldst thou hate men?

Thou, flatter’d thee: what hast thou given?
If thou wilt curse, thy father, that poor rag,
Must be thy subject, who in spite put stuff
To some she beggar and compounded thee
Poor rogue hereditary. Hence, be gone!
If thou hast not been born the worst of men,
Thou must not have a bean and flatterer.
Art thou proud yet?

Apem. Ay, that I am not thee.

Tim. I, that I was

No prodigal.

Tim. I, that I am one now:
Were all the wealth I have shut up in thee,
I’d give thee leave to hang it. Get thee gone.
That the whole life of Athens were in this!
Thus would I eat it. [Eating a root.

Apem. Here; I will mend thy feast.

Offering him a root.

Tim. First mend my company, take away thyself.

Apem. So I shall mend mine own, by the tick of thine.

Tim. ’Tis not well mended so, it is but bodd’l
If not, I would it were.

Apem. What wouldst thou have to Athens?

Tim. Thou wouldst have a thither in a whirlwind. If thou wilt Tell them there I have gold; look, so I have.

Apem. Here is no use for gold.

Tim. The best and truest;
For here it sleeps, and does no hired harm.

Apem. Where liest o’ nights, Timon?

Tim. Under’s that’s above me.

Apem. Where feed’st thou o’ days, Apemantus?

Apem. Where my stomach finds meat; or, rather,
where I eat it. [Mind!

Tim. Would poison were obedient and knew my

Apem. Where wouldst thou send it?

Tim. To sauce thy dishes.

Apem. The muddled of humanity thou never knewest, but the extremity of both ends; when thou wast in thy gilt and thy perfume, they mocked thee for too much curiosity; in thy rags thou knowest none, but art despised for the contrary. There’s a meedler for thee. eat it.

Tim. On what I hate I feed not.

Apem. Dost hate a meedler?

Tim. Ay, though it look like thee.

Apem. An thou hast hated meddlers sooner, shouldest have loved thyself better now. What man didst thou ever know unthrift that was beheld after his means?

Tim. Who, without those means thou talkest of, didst thou ever know beloved?

Apem. Myself.

Tim. I understand thee; thou hast some means to keep a dog.

What things in the world canst thou nearest compare to thy flatterers?

Tim. Women nearest; but men, men are the things themselves. What wouldst thou do with the world, Apemantus, if it lay in thy power?

Apem. Give it the beasts, to be rid of the men.

Tim. Wouldst thou have thyself fall in the con fusion of men, and remain a beast with the beasts?

Apem. Ay, Timon.

Tim. A beastly ambition, which the gods grant thee! attain to! If thou wert the lion, the fox would beguile thee: if thou wert the lamb, the fox would eat thee! if thou wert the fox, the lion would suspect thee, when peradventure thou wert accused by the ass: if thou wert the ass, thy dizziness would torment thee, and still thou livest but as a breakfast to the wolf: if thou wert the wolf, thy greediness would afflict thee, and oft thou shouldst hazard thy life for thy dinner: wert thou the unicorn, pride and wrath would confound thee and make thine own self the conquest of thy fury: wert thou a bear, thou wouldst be killed by the horse:
when thou a horse, thou wouldst be seized by the leopard: wert thou a leopard, thou wert german to the lion and the spots of thy kindred were jurors on thy life: all thy safety were remotion and thy defence absence. What beast couldst thou be, that were not subject to a beast? and what a beast art already, that seest not thy loss in transformation?

Apem. If thou couldst please me with speaking to me, thou mightst have hit upon it here: the commonwealth of Athens is become a forest of beasts.

Tim. How has the ass broke the wall, that thou art out of the city?

Apem. Yonder comes a poet and a painter:
the plague of company light upon thee! I will fear to catch it and give way; when I know not what else to do, I’ll see thee again.

Tim. When there is nothing living but thee, thou shalt be no more; away! I had rather be a beggar’s dog than Apemantus.

Apem. Thou art the cap of all the fools alive.

Tim. Would thou wert clean enough to spit upon?

Apem. A plague on thee! thou art too bad to curse.

Tim. All villains that do stand by thee are pure.

Apem. That is well; thou art an imbecile but what thou speakst.

Tim. If I name thee.

I’ll beat thee, but I should infect my hands.

Apem. I would my tongue could rot them off!

Tim. Away, thou issue of a mangy dog!

Choler does kill me that thou art alive;

I swound to see thee.

Apem. Would thou wouldst burst!

Tim. Away, Thou tedious rogue! I am sorry I shall lose
A stone by thee.

Beast!

Slave!

Tooth!

Rogues, rogues, rogues!

I am sick of this false world, and will love none.

But even the mere necessities upon’t.

Then, Timon, presently prepare thy grave;

Lye where the light foam of the sea may heat
Thy grave-stone daily: make thee epitaph,
That death in me at others’ lives may laugh. [vorc
[To the gold! O thou sweet king-killer, and dear dis
Twixt natural son and sire! thou bright deliver
Of Hymen’s purest bed! thou valiant Mars! Thou ever young, fresh, loved and delicate wooer,
Whose blush doth flow the consanguineous
That lies on Dian’s lap! thou visible god,
That sober’st close impossibilities,
That tongue, and makest them kiss! that speakest with every to every purpose! O thou touch of hearts!
Think, thy slave man rebels, and by thy virtue
Set them into confounding odds, that beasts
May have the world in empire!

Apem. Would ’t were so!

But not till I am dead. I’ll say thou’st gold:
Thou wilt be throng’d to shortly.

[Exit Apemantus.

Tim. Throng’d to!

Apem. Ay.

Tim. Thy back, I prithee.

Apem. Live, and love thy misery.

Tim. Long live so, and so die. [Exit Apemantus.]

I am quit.

Moe things like men! Eat, Timon, and abhor them.
Enter Banditti.

First Ban. Where should he have this gold? It is some poor fragment, some slender ort of his remainder; the mere want of gold, and the falling-from of his friends, drove him into this melancholy.

Sec. Ban. It is hoised he hath a mass of treasure.

Third Ban. Let us make the assay upon him: if he cheat not, he will supply us easily; if he covetously reserve it, how shall’s get it?

Sec. Ban. True; for he bears it not about him.

First Ban. Is not this he?

Banditti. Where?

Sec. Ban. ’Tis his description.

Third Ban. Here is he.

Banditti. Save thee, Timon.

Tim. Now, thieves?

Banditti. Soldiers, not thieves.

Tim. Both too; and women’s sons.

Banditti. We are not thieves, but men that much do want.

Tim. Your greatest want is, you want much of Why should you want? Behold, the earth hath roots; Within this mile break forth a hundred springs; The oaks bear mast, the briers scarlet hips; The bounteous housewife, nature, on each bush Lays her fullness before you. Want! why want? We cannot live on grass, on berries, As beasts and birds and fishes.

[Enter Timon.]

Tim. Nor on the beasts themselves, the birds, and fishes; You must eat men. Yet thanks I must you con That you are thieves profess’d, that you work not In hollow shapes: for there is boundless theft In limited professions. Rascal thieves. Here’s gold. Go, suck the subtle blood o’ the grape, Till the high fever seethe your blood to froth, And so ‘scape hanging: trust not the physician; His antidotes are poison, and he slays More than you rob; take wealth and lives together: Do villany, do, since you protest to do’t. Like workmen. I’ll example you with thievish: The sun’s a thief, and with his great attraction Robs the vast sea; the moon’s an arrant thief, And her pale fire she snatches from the sun; The sea’s a thief, whose liquid surge resolves The moon into salt tears; the earth’s a thief, That feeds and breeds by a compository stolen From general excrement: each thing’s a thief: The laws, your curb and whip, in their rough power Have unchecked’d theft. Love not yourselves: away, Rob one another. Cut throats: All that you meet are thieves: to Athens go, Break open shops; nothing can you steal, But thieves do lose it; steal no less for this I give you; and gold confound you howso’er! Amen.

[Exit Banditti.]

First Ban. Has almost charmed me from my profession, by persuading me to it.

Sec. Ban. ’Tis in the malice of mankind that he thus advises us; not to have us thrive in our mystery.

Sec. Ban. I’ll believe him as an enemy, and give over my trade.

First Ban. Let us first see peace in Athens; there is no time so miserable but a man may be true.

Enter Flavius. [Excit Banditti.]

Flav. O you gods! Is your despised and ruined man my lord? Full of decay and failing? O monument! And seeds of goodly growth dead? What an alteration of honour Has desperate want made! What viler thing upon the earth than friends Who can bring noblest minds to basest ends! How rarely does it meet with this time’s guise, When man was wish’d to love his enemies! Grant I may ever love, and rather woo Those that would mischief me than those that do! Has caught u by his mind, and, as my lord, Still serve him with my life. My dearest master!

Tim. Away! what art thou?

Flav. Have you forgot me, sir? What dost ask that? I have forgot all men; Then, if thou wantest thou art a man, I have forgot.

Flav. An honest poor servant of yours. [Exit.

Tim. Then I know thee not: I never had honest man about me, I; all I kept were knaves, to serve in meat to villains.

Flav. The gods are witness, You did put me in trust to thee.

Tim. For his undue lord than nine eyes for you.

Flav. What dost thou weep? Come nearer. Then I love thee,

Because thou art a woman, and disclaim’st Flinty mankind; whose eyes do never give But thorough lust and laughter. Pity’s sleeping; Strange times, that weep with laughing, not with weeping!

Flav. I beg of you to know me, good my lord, To accept my grief and whilst this poor wealth lasts To entertain me as your steward still.

Tim. Had I a steward So true, so just, and yet so comfortable? It almost turns my dangerous nature mild. Let me behold thy face. Surely, this man Was born of woman.

Flav. Forgive my general and exceptless rashness, You perpetual-sober gods! I do proclaim One honest man, and I will mistake not—it, but one; No more, I pray— and he’s a steward.

Tim. How fair would I have hated all mankind! And thou redeem’st thyself: but all, save thee, I fell with curses.

Methinks thou art more honest now than wise; For, by opposing and betraying me,

Thou mightst have sooner got another service: For many so arrive at second masters,

Upon their first lord’s neck. But tell me true— For I must ever doubt, though ne’er so sure— Is not thy kindness subtle, covetous, Not a usual kindness and a rich men deal gifts,

Expecting in return twenty for one?

Flav. No, my most worthy master; in whose breast Doubt and suspect, alas, are placed too late: You should have fear’d false times when you did Suspect still comes where an estate is least: [feast; That which the flaxen bow, is merely love, Duty and zeal to your unmatched mind,

Care of your food and living; and, believe it, My most honour’d lord,

For any benefit that points to me,

Either in hope or present, I’ll exchange For this one wish, that you had power and wealth To requite me, by making rich yourself.

Tim. Look thee, ’tis so. Thou singly honest man, Here, take: the gods out of my misery Have sent thee treasure. Go, live rich and happy; But thus condition’d: thou shalt build from men; Hate all, curse all, shew enmity to none, But let the fanatical deed slide from the bone, Ere thou relieve the beggar: give to dogs What thou deny’st to men; let prisons swallow ‘em, Debts wither ‘em to nothing; be men like blasted woods, And may diseases lick up their false bloods: And so farewell and thrive.

Flav. O, let me stay,

And comfort you, my master.

Tim. If thou hast curses, Stay not; fly, whilst thou art blest and free: Ne’er see thee then, and let me ne’er see thee.

[Exit Flavius. Timon retires to his cave.

ACT IV.

TIMON OF ATHENS.

SCENE III.
ACT V.

SCENE I.—The woods. Before Timon's cave.

Enter Poet and Painter; Timon watching them from his cave.

Tim. Let it go naked, men may see 't the better: You that are honest, by being what you are, Make them best seen and known.

Poet. He and myself Have travail'd in the great shower of your gifts, And sweetly felt it. Tim. Aye, you are honest men.

Poet. We are hither to offer you our service. Tim. Most honest men! Why, how shall I requite you?

Can you eat roots, and drink cold water? no.

Both. What we can do, we'll do, to do you service.

Poet. [Aside] Tim. Good honest men! Thon drawst a com Best in all Athens: thou 'rt, indeed, the best; Thou counterfeit'st most lively.

Poet. What have you now to present unto him?

Tim. Nothing else: you shall see him a palm in Athens again, and flourish with the highest. Therefore 'tis not amiss we tender our loves to him, in this supposed distress of his: it will show honestly in us; and is very likely to load our purposes with what they travaill for, if it be a just and true report that goes of his having.

Poet. What have you now to present unto him?

Tim. Nothing at this time but my visitation: or I will promise him an excellent piece.

Poet. I must serve him so too, led him of an intent that's coming toward him.

Tim. Good as the best. Promising is the very air of the time; it opens the eyes of expectation: performance is ever the duller for his act; and, but in the plainer and simpler kind of people, the deed of saying is quite out of use. To promise is most courtly and fashionable; performance is a kind of will or testament which argues a great sickness in his judgment that makes it.

[Timon comes from his cave, behind.]

Tim. [Aside] Excellent workman! thou canst not paint a man so bad as thyself.

Poet. I am thinking what I shall say I have provided for him: it must be a personating of himself; a satire against the softness of prosperity, with a discovery of the infinite flatteries that follow youth and opulence.

Poet. Nay, let's seek him: Then do we sin against our own estate, When we may profit meet, and come too late.

Tim. [Aside] When the day serves, before black-corner'd night, Find what thou want'st by free and offer'd light. Come.

That's worship'lld in a barren temple

Than where sinne feed! [foam,
'Tis thou that rigit'st the bark and plough'st the Settest admir'd reverence in a slave:
To thee be worship!' and thy saints for aye
Be crown'd with plagues that thee alone obey!

Fit I meet them. [Coming forward.

Poet. Hail, worthy Timon!

Tim. Our late noble master!

Poet. Have I once lived to see two honest men?

Tim. Sir, Having often of your open bounty tasted,

Hearing you were retired, your friends fall'n off,

Whose thankless natures—O abhorred spirits!—
Not all the wisps of heaven are large enough:

What! to you,

Whose star-like nobleness gave life and influence
To their whole being! I am rapt and cannot cover

The monstrous talk of this ingratitude

With any size of words.

---

First Sen. Bring us to his cave: It is our part and promise to the Athenians To speak with Timon. At all times alike

Men are not still the same: 'twas time and griefs
That framed him thus; time, with his fairer hand,
Offering the fruits of his former days.
The gentleman may make him. Bring us to him,
And chance it as it may.

Flour. Here is his cave.

TIMON comes from his cave.

Tim. Thou sun, that comfort'st, burn! Speak, and be hanged!
For each true word, a blister! and each false
Be as puncturing to the root of the tongue,
Consuming it with speaking!

First Sen. Worthy Timon,—
Tim. Of none but such as you, and you of Timon.
First Sen. The senators of Athens greet thee,
Tim.
Tim. I thank them; and would send them back
the plague,
Could I but catch it for them.

First Sen. What we are sorry for ourselves in thee.
The senators with one consent of love
Entirely give back to Athens: who have thought
On special dignities, which vacant lie
For thy best use and wearing.

Sec. Sen. They confess
Toward thee forgetfulness too general, gross:
Which now the public body, which doth seldom
Play the recaster, feeling in itself.
A lack of Timon's aid, hath sense, withal
Of its own fault, restraining aid to Timon;
And send forth us, to make their sorrow'sd render,
Together with a recompense more fruitful
Than their offence can weigh down by the dram:
Ay, even such heaps and sums of love and wealth
As shall to thee blot out what wrongs were theirs
And write in thee the figures of their love,
Even to read them thine.

Tim. You witch me in it;
Surprise me to the very brink of tears;
Lend me a fool's heart and a woman's eyes,
And I'll beween these comforts, worthy senators.
First Sen. Therefore, so please thee to return with
And of our Athens, thine and ours, to take [As
The captainship, thou shalt be met with thanks,
Allow'd with absolute power and thy good name
Live with authority: so soon we shall drive back
Of Alcibiades the approaches wild.
Who, like a boar too savage, doth root up
His country's peace.

Sec. Sen. And shak's his threatening sword
Against the walls of Athens.
First Sen. Well, sir I will; therefore, I will, sir; thus:
If Alcibiades kill my countrymen,
Let Alcibiades know this of Timon,
That Timon cares not. But if he sack fair Athens,
And take our goodly aged men by the beards,
Giving our holy virgins to the stain
Of corruption, lastly, mad-brain'd war,
Then let him know, and tell him Timon speaks it,
In pity of our aged and our youth,
I cannot choose but tell him, that I care not,
And let him take't at worst; for their knives care not.
While you have threats to answer; for myself,
There's not a whistle in the murkly camp.
But I do prize it at my love before
The reverend'st threat in Athens. So I leave you
To the protection of the prosperous gods,
As thieves to keepers.

Flour. Stay not, all's in vain.
Tim. Why, I was writing of my epitaph;
It will be seen to-morrow: my long sickness
Of health and beauty now begins to mend,
And nothing brings me all things. Go, live still;
Be Alcibiades your plague, you his,
And last so long enough!

First Sen. We speak in vain.
Tim. But yet I love my country, and am not
One that rejects in the common wreck,
As common ruin doth put it.

First Sen. Commend me to my loving countrymen,—
First Sen. These words become your lips as they pass through them.

Sec. Sen. And enter in our ears like great triumph
In their applauding gates.

Tim. Commend me to them, and tell them that, to ease them of their griefs,
Their fears of hostile strokes, their aches, losses,
Their pangs of love, with other incident throes
That nature's fragile vessel doth sustain
In life's uncertain voyage, I will some kindness do them:
I'll teach them to prevent wild Alcibiades' wrath.
First Sen. I like this well; he will return again.
Tim. I have a tree, which grows here in my close,
That mine own use invites me to cut down,
And shortly must I fell it; tell my friends,
Tell Athens, in the sequence of degree,
From high to low throughout, that whose please
To stop affliction, let him take his haste,
Come hither, ere my tree hath felt the axe,
And hang himself. I pray you, do my greeting.
Flour. Trouble him no further; thus you shall still find him.

Tim. Come not to me again: but say to Athens,
Timon hath made his everlasting mansion
Upon the beached verge of the salt flood;
Who once a day with his embossed froth
The turbulent shafts shall cover: thither come,
And let my grave-stone be your oracle.
Lips, let sour words go by and language end:
What is amiss plague and infection meant!
Graves only be men's works and death their gain!
Sun, hide thy beams! Timon hath done his reign.

Retires to his cave.

First Sen. His discontentments are unremovably
Coupled to nature.

Sec. Sen. Our hope in him is dead; let us return,
And strain what other means is left unto us
In our dear peril.

First Sen. It requires swift foot. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. — Before the walls of Athens.

Enter two Senators and a Messenger.

First Sen. Thou hast painfully discover'd: are his
As full as thy report? [Exeunt.

Mess. I have spoke the least:
Besides, his expedition promises
Present approach.

First Sen. We stand much hazard, if they bring not Mess. I met a courier, one mine ancient friend;
Whom, though in general part we were opposed,
Yet our old love made a particular force.
And made us speak like friends: this man was riding
From Alcibiades to Timon's cave,
With letters of entreaty, which imported
His fellowship 't the cause against your city,
In part for his sake moved.

First Sen. Here come our brothers.

Enter the Senators from Timon.

Third Sen. No talk of Timon, nothing of him expect.
The enemies' drum is heard, and fearful sounding
Doth choke the air with dust: in, and prepare:
Ours is the fall, I fear; our foes the shame. [Exeunt.
SCENE III.—The woods. Timon's cave, and a rude tomb seen.

Enter a Soldier, seeking Timon.

Sold. By all description this should be the place. Who's here? Speak, ho! No answer! What is this? Timon is dead, who hath outstretched his span; Somewhat reard 'tis; there does not live a man. Dead, sure; and this his grave. What's on this tomb I cannot read; the character I'll take with wax: Our captain hath in every figure skill, An aged interpreter, though young in days: Before proud Athens he's set down by this, Whose fall the mark of his ambition is. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—Before the walls of Athens.

Trumpest sound, Enter Alcibiades with his powers.

Alec. Sound to this coward and lascivious town Our terrible approach. [A parley sounded.

Enter Senators on the walls.

Till now you have gone on and fill'd the time With all licentious measure, making your wills The scope of justice; till now myself and such As slept within the shadow of your power Have wander'd with our traversed arms and breathed Our sufferance vainly: now the time is flush, When crouching marble in the bearer strong Cries of itself. Now breathless wrong Shall sit and pant in your great chairs of ease, And pury insolence shall break his wind With fear and horrid flight.

First Sen. Noble and young, When thy first griefs were but a mere conceit, Ere thou hast'd power or we had cause of fear, We sent to thee, to give thy rages balm, To wipe out our ingratitude with loves Above their quantity.

Sec. Sen. So did we woo Transformed Timon to our city's love By humble message and by promised means: We were not all unkind, nor all deserve The common stroke of war.

First Sen. These walls of ours Were not erected by their hands from whom You have received your griefs; nor are they such That these great towers, trophies and schools should For private faults in them. [Fall Sec. Sen.

Nor are they living Who were the motives that you first went out: Shame that they wanted cunning, in excess Hath broke their hearts. March, noble lord, Into our city with thy banners spread: By decimation, and a tithed death— If thy revenge hungre for that food Which nature loathes—take then the destined tenth, And by the hazard of the spotted die Let die the spotted.

First Sen. All have not offended; For those that were, it is not square to take On those that are, revenges: crimes, like hands, Are not inherited. Then, dear countrypeople, Bring in thy ranks, but leave without thy rage: Spare thy Athenian cradle and those kin Which in the bluster of thy wrath must fall With those that have offended: like a shepherd, Approach the fold and call the infected forth, But kill not all together.

Sec. Sen. What thou wilt, Thou rather shalt enforce it with thy smile Than hew to't with thy sword.

First Sen. Set but thy foot Against our rampart gates, and they shall ope; So thou wilt send thy gentle heart before, To say thou 'lt enter friendly.

Sec. Sen. Throw thy glove, Or any token of thine honour else, That thou wilt use the wars as thy redress And not as our confusion, all thy powers Shall make their harbour in our town, till we Have seal'd thy full desire.

Alec. Then there's my glove; Descend, and open your uncharged ports: Those enemies of Timon's and mine own Whom you yourselves shall set out for reproof Fall and no more: and, to tone your fears With my more noble meaning, not a man Shall pass his quarter, or offend the stream Of regular justice in your city's bounds, But shall be render'd to your public laws At heaviest answer.

Both. 'Tis most nobly spoken.

Alec. Descend, and keep your words. [The Senators descend, and open the gates.

Enter Soldier.

Sold. My noble general, Timon is dead; Entomb'd upon the very hem o' the sea; And on his grave-stone this inscription, which With wax I brought away, whose soft impression Interprets for my poor ignorance.

Alec. [Reads the epitaph.] Here lies a wretched corse, of wretched soul bereft: Seek not my name: a plague consume you wicked califiis left! [Fate: Here lie I, Timon; who, alive, all living men did Pass by and curse thy fill, but pass and stay not here thy gait.

These well express in thee thy latter spirits: Though thou alibadi'st in us our human griefs, Scorn'dst their brain's flow and those our droplets which From niggard nature fall, yet rich conceit Taught thee to make vast Neptune weep for aye On thy low grave, on faults forgiven. Dead Is noble Timon: of whose memory Hereafter more. Bring me into your city, And I will use the olive with my sword, Make war beed peace. make peace stint war, make Prescribe to other as each other's leech. [Each Let our drums strike. [Exit.

3d Bandit.—Let us make the assay upon him.—Act IV., Scene iii.

626

Enter Flavius, Marullus, and certain Com- moners.

Flav. Hence! home, idle creatures, get you Is this a holiday? what! know you not, [home: Being mechanical, you ought not walk Upon a labouring day without the sign Of your profession? Speak, what trade art thou? First Com. Why, sir, a carpenter.

Mar. Where is thy leather apron and thy rule? What dost thou with thy best apparel on? You, sir, what trade are you? Sec. Com. Truly, sir, in respect of a fine workman, I am but, as you would say, a cobler.

Sec. Com. A trade, sir, that, I hope, I may use with a safe conscience; which is, indeed, sir, a mender of bad soles.

Mar. What trade, thou knave? thou naughty knave, what trade?

Sec. Com. Nay, I beseech you, sir, be not out with me: yet, if you be out, sir, I can mend you.

Mar. What meanest thou by that? mend me, thou scurvy fellow!

Sec. Com. Why, sir, cobble you.

Flav. Thou art a cobbler, art thou?

Sec. Com. Truly, sir, all that I live by is with the awl: I meddle with no tradesman's matters, nor women's matters, but with awl. I am, indeed, sir, a surgeon to old shoes; when they are in great danger, I recover them. As proper men as ever trod upon neat's leather have gone upon my handiwork.

Flav. But wherefore art not in thy shop to-day? Why dost thou lead these men about the streets?

Sec. Com. Truly, sir, to wear out their shoes, to get myself into more work. But, indeed, sir, we

ACT I.

JULIUS CAESAR.

SCENE II.

Flourish. Enter Caesar; Antony, for the course; Calpurnia, Portia, Decius, Cicero, Brutus, Cassius, and Casca; a great crowd following, among them a Soothsayer.

Cas. Calpurnia!

Cas. Calpurnia! Cal. Here, my lord.

When he doth run his course.安东尼

Ant. Caesar, my lord?

Cas. Forget not, in thy speed, Antony, To touch Calpurnia; for our elders say, The barren, touched in this holy chase, Shall shake off their sterile curse.

Ant. I shall remember:

When Caesar says 'do this,' it is performed.

Cas. Set on; and leave no ceremony out. [Flourish.

Sooth. Caesar!

Cas. Ha! who calls?

Casca. Bid every noise be still: peace yet again!

Cas. Who is it in the press that calls on me?

I hear a tongue, shriller than all the music,

Cry Caesar! Speak; Caesar is turn'd to hear.

Sooth. Beware the ides of March.

Cas. What man is that?

Brut. A soothsayer bids you beware the ides of March.

Cas. Set him before me; let me see his face.

Cass. Fellow, come from the throng; look upon Caesar.

Brut. What say'st thou to me now? speak once

Sooth. Beware the ides of March.

Cas. He is a dreamer; let us leave him; pass.

[Scenic. Exit Casca and Brutus.

Cas. Will you go see the order of the course?

Brut. Not I.

Cas. I pray you, do.

Brut. I am not gome; I do lack some part

Of that quick spirit that is in Antony.

Let me not hinder, Cassius, your desires;

I'll leave you.

Cas. Brutus, I do observe you now of late:

I have not from your eyes that gentleness

And show of love as I was wont to have;

You bear too stubborn and too strange a hand

Over your friend that loves you.

Brut. Cassius, Be not deceived: if I have veil'd my look,

I turn the trouble of my countenance

Merely upon myself. Vexed I am

Of late with passions of some difference,

Conquering them, though I thereof

Which give some soil perhaps to my behaviour;

But let not therefore my good friends be grieved—

Among which number, Cassius, be you one—

Nor construe any further my neglect;

Than that poor Brutus, with himself at war,

Forget the shows of love to other men.

Cass. Then, Brutus, I have much mistook your passion:

By means whereof this breast of mine hath buried

Thoughts of great value, worthy cogitations.

Tell me, good Brutus, can you see your face?

Brut. No, Cassius; for the eye sees not itself,

But by reflection, by some other things.

Cass. 'Tis just:

And it is very much lamented, Brutus,

That you have not such mirrors as will turn

Your hidden worthiness into your eye.

That you might see your shadow. I have heard,

Where many of the best respect in Rome,

Except immortal Caesar, speaking of Brutus

And groaning underneath this age's yoke,

Have wish'd that noble Brutus had his eyes.

Brut. I am heavy, Cassius, and I do not lead me. Cassus. That you would have me seek into myself [sius, For that which is not in me?

Cass. Therefore, good Brutus, be prepared to hear:

And since you know you cannot see yourself

So well as by reflection, 1, your glass,

Will modestly discover to yourself

That of yourself which you yet know not of.

And be not jealous on me, gentle Brutus:

Were I a common laughar, or did use

To state with ordinary oaths my love

To every new protestor; if you know

That I do fawn on men too hard,

And after scandal them, or if you know

That I profess myself in banqueting

To all the rout, then hold me dangerous.

Brut. What means this shouting? I do fear, the Choose Caesar for their king.

Ay, do you fear it?

Then must I think you would not have it so.

Brut. I would not, Cassins; yet I love him well.

But wherefore do you hold me here so long?

What is it that you would impart to me?

If it be an intent towards the general good,

Set honour in one eye and death in the other,

And I will look on both indifferently.

For let the gods so speed me as I love

The name of honour more than I fear death.

Cass. I know that virtue to be in you, Brutus,

As well as I do know your outward favour.

Well, honour is the subject of my story.

I cannot tell what you and other men

Think of this life: but, for my single self,

I had as lief be a dog and wallow in the Dirt; as to be a man and wear my heart in my sleeve.

I was ever a liberal and a free man;

We both have fed as well, and we can both

Endure the winter's cold as well as he:

For once, upon a raw and gusty day,

The troubled Tiber chafing with her shores,

Cesar said to me: 'Darest thou, Cassius, now

Leap in with me into this angry flood,

And swim to yonder point?' Upon the word,

Accorded as I was, I plunged in

And bade him follow; so indeed he did.

The torrent roar'd, and we did buffet it

With lusty sinews, throwing it aside

And stemming it with hearts of controversy:

But ere we could arrive the point proposed,

Cesar cried: 'Help me, Cassins, or I sink!'

1, as Æneas, our great ancestor,

Died from the flames of Troy upon his shoulder.

The old Aeneid bears, so from the waves of Tiber

Did J. H. T. Pope, and a man whose name is

Is now become a god, and Cassius is

A wretched creature and must bend his body,

If Caesar carelessly but nod on him.

He had a fever when he was in Spain,

And when the fit was on him, I did mark

How he did shake: his coward lips did tremble

That same eye whose bend doth awe the world

Did lose his lustre: I did hear him groan:
Ay, and that tongue of his that bade the Romans
Mark him and write his speeches in their books,
Alas, it cried: 'Give me some drink, Titinius,"
As a sick girl. Ye gods, it doth amaze me
A man of such a feeble temper should
So get the start of the majestic world
And before his strength himself should make the world
And him: it makes me weep to see a man
That could be moved to smile at any thing.
Such men as he be never at heart's ease
While they beheld a greater than themselves,
And therefore are they very dangerous.
I rather tell thee what is to be fear'd
Than what to fear. It is no matter to me,
Cæsar on my right hand, for this ear is deaf,
And tell me truly what thou thinkest of him.

Cæcina. You pull'd me by the cloak; would you

Speak with me?

Brut. Ay, Cæcina: tell us what hath chance'd to
That Cæsar looks so sad.

Cæcina. Why, you were with him, were you not?

Brut. I should not then ask Cæcina what had chance'd.

Cæcina. What if there was a crown offer'd him:
And being offer'd him, he put it by with the back of his hand, thus:
And then the people fell a-shouting.

Brut. What was the second noise for?

Cæcina. Why, for that too.

Cas. They shout'd thrice: what was the last cry
Cæcina. Why, for that too. [Exit.

Brut. Was the crown offer'd him thrice?

Cæcina. Ay, marry, was't, and he put it by thrice, every time gentler than other, and at every putting by nine honest neighbours shouted.

Cas. Who offer'd him the crown?

Cæcina. Why, Antony.

Brut. Tell us the manner of it, gentle Cæcina.

Cæcina. I can as well be hanged as tell the manner of it: it was mere folly: I did not mark it.

I saw Mark Antony offer him a crown; - yet 'twas not a crown neither; - it was one of these coronets: - and, as I told you, he put it by once: but, for all that, to my thinking, he would fain have had it. Then he offer'd it to him again; then he put it by again: but, to my thinking, he was very loath to lay his fingers off it. And then he offer'd it the third time; he put it the third time: and still as he refused it, the rabbleshoot bought and clapped their clapped hands and threw up their sweetly night-caps and uttered such a deal of stinking breath because Cæsar refused the crown that it had almost choked Cæsar; for he swomend and fell down at it: and for mine own part, I durst not laugh, for fear of opening my lips and receiving the bad air.

Cas. But, wilt, I pray you: what, did Cæsar swomend?

Cæcina. He fell down in the market-place, and foam'd at mouth, and was speechless.

Brut. 'Tis very like: he hath the falling sickness.

Cas. No, Cæsar hath it not; but you and I

And honest Cæcina: we have the falling sickness.

Cæcina. I know not what you mean by that; but, I am sure, Cæsar fell down. If the rag-tag people did not clap him and kiss him, according as he pleased and displeased them, as they use to do the players in the theatre, I am to true man.

Brut. Who can he be that useth himself?

Cæcina. Marry, before he fell down, when he perceived the common herd was glad he refused the crown, he pluck'd me ope his doublet and offered them his throat to cut. And I had been a man of any occupation, if I would not have taken him at a word, I could not have been among the rogues. And so he fell. When he came to himself again, he said, if he had done or said any thing amiss, he desired their worship to think it was his infirmity. Three or four wenchers, where I stood, cried 'Alas, good soul!' and forgave him with all their hearts; but there's no need to be taken of them; if Caesar had stabbed their mothers, they would have done no less.

Brut. And after that, he came, thus sad, away?

Casca. Ay.

Cas. Did Cicero say anything?

Casca. Ay, he spoke Greek.

Cas. To what effect?

Casca. Nay, an I tell you that, I'll never look you in the face again; but those that understood him smiled at one another and shook their heads; but, for mine own part, it was Greek to me. I could tell you more news too: Marullus and Flavius, for pulling scarfs off Caesar's images, are put to silence.

Fare you well. There was more foolery yet, if I could remember it.

Cas. Will you sup with me to-night, Casca?

Casca. No, I am promised forth.

Cas. Will you dine with me to-morrow?

Casca. Ay, if I be alive and your mind hold and your dinner worth the eating.

Cas. Good, I will. I will respect you.

Casca. Do so, Farewell, both. [Exit.

Brut. What a blunt fellow is this grown to be!

He was quick medal when he went to school.

Cas. So is he now in execution

Of any bold or noble enterprise.

However he puts on this fearful form.

This rudeness is a spice to his good wit,

Which gives men stomach to digest his words

With better appetite.

Brut. And so it is. For this time I will leave you:

To-morrow, if you please to speak with me,

I will come home to you; or, if you will,

Come home to me, and I will wait for you.

Cas. I will do so: till then, think of the world.

[Exit Brutus.]

Well, Brutus, thou art noble; yet, I see,

Thy honourable metal may be wrought

From that it is disposed: therefore it is meet

That noble minds keep ever with their likes;

For who so firm that cannot be seduced?

Caesar doth bear me hard; but he loves Brutus:

If I were Brutus now and he were Cassius,

He should not humour me. I will this night,

In several hands, in at his windows throw,

As if it came from several corners seen

Writing all tending to the great opinion

That Rome holds of his name; wherein obscurely

Cesar's ambition shall be glanced at:

And after this let Caesar seat him sure;

For we will shake him, or worse days endure.

[Exit.]

SCENE III.—The same. A street.

Thunder and lightning. Enter, from opposite sides,

Cassius, with his sword drawn, and Cicero.

Cic. Good even, Cassius: brought you Caesar home?

Why are you breathless? and why stare you so?

Cas. Are not you moved, when all the sway of Shakes like a thing unfirm? O Cicero, earth

I have seen tempests, when the scolding winds

Have rived the knotty eaks, and I have seen

The ambitious ocean swell and rage and foam,

To be exalted with the threatening clouds;

But never till to-night, never till now,

Did I go through a tempest dropping fire.

Either there is a civil strife in heaven,

Or else the world, too scanty with the gods,

Incenses them to send destruction.

Cic. Why, is this the nature of our times?

Cas. A common slave—you know him well by sight—

Hold up his left hand, which did flame and burn

Like twenty torches John'd, and yet his hand,

Nor sensible of fire, remain'd unscorch'd.

Besides—I ha' not since put up my sword—

Against the Capitol I met a lion,

Who glared upon me, and went surly by,

Without annoying me. But several women were drawn

Upon a man with a hundred ghostly women,

Transformed with their fear: who saw they saw

Men all in fire walk up and down the streets.

And yesterday the bird of night did sit

Even at noon-day upon the market-place,

Hooting and shrieking. When these prodigies

Do so come in my met, it is not men:

'These are their reasons: they are natural: 'tis,

For, I believe, they are portentous things

Unto the climate that they point upon.

Cic. Indeed, it is a strange-disposed time:

But men may construe things after their fashion,

Clean from the purpose of the things themselves.

Ces. Caesar to the Capitol to-morrow?

Cicero. He doth: for he did bid Antonius

Send word to you he would be there to-morrow.

Cic. Good—night then, Cassia: this disturbed sky

Is not to walk in.

Cassia. Farewell, Cicero. [Exit Cicero.

Enter Cassius.

Cas. Who's there?

A Roman.

Cas. Who?

Cass. Caesar, by your voice.

Cas. Caesar. Your ear is good. Cassius, what night is Cass. A very pleasing night to honest men. [this!

Cas. Who ever knew the heavens menace so?

Cees. Those that have known the earth so full of Fomiyart, I have walk'd about the streets, [faults.

Submitting me unto the perilous night.

And, thus unbraced, Cassia, as you see,

Have hared my bosom to the thunder-stone;

And when the cross blue lightning seem'd to open

The breast of heaven, I did present myself

Even in the aim and very flash of it. [heavens?

Cass. But wherefore did you go so much to tempt the

It is the part of men to fear and tremble,

When the most mighty gods by tokens send

Such dreadful heralds to astonish us. [life

Cas. You are dull, Cassia, and those sparks of

That should be in a Roman you do want,

Or else you use not. You look pale as gaze

And put on fear and cast yourself in wonder,

To see the strange impatience of the heavens:

But if you would consider the true cause

Why all these fires, why all these gliding ghosts,

Why birds and beasts from quality and kind,

Why old men fool and children calculate,

Why all these things change from their ordinance

Their natures and preformed faculties

To monstrous quality,—why, you shall find

That heaven hath infused them with these spirits,

To make them instruments of fear and warning

Unto some monstrous state.

Now shall I, Cassia, most do thee a man

Most like this dreadful night,

That thunders, lightens, opens graves, and roars

As doth the lion in the Capitol,

A man no mightier than thyself or me

In personal action, yet prodigiously

And fearful, as these strange eruptions are.

Cas. Tis Caesar that you mean; is it not, Cassia?

Cas. Let it be who it is: for Romans now

Have thaws and limbs like to their ancestors;

But, woe the while! our fathers' minds are dead,

And we are governed with our mothers' spirits;

Our valiant fathers, fathers' honor, and

Cassia. Indeed, they say the senators to-morrow

Mean to establish Caesar as a king;

And he shall wear his crown by sea and land,

In every place, save here in Italy.

Cas. I know where I will wear this dagger then;
ACT II.

JULIUS CAESAR.

SCENE I.

Cassius from bondage will deliver Cassius; Therein, ye gods, you make the weak most strong; Therein, ye gods, you tyrants do defeat; Nor stony tower, nor walls of beaten brass, Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron, Can be retentive to the strength of spirit; But life, being weary of these worldly bars, Never lacks power to dismiss itself. If I know this, know all the world besides; That part of tyranny that I do bear I can shake off at pleasure. [Thunder still. Cass.] So can I: So every bondman in his own hand bears The power to cancel his captivity. Cas. And why should Caesar be a tyrant then? Poor man! I know he would not be a wolf, But that he sees the Romans are but sheep; He were no lion, were not Romans hinds. Those that with haste will make a mighty fire Begin it with weak straws: what trash is Rome, What publish and what off, when it serves For the base matter to illuminate So vile a thing as Caesar! But, O grief, Where hast thou led me? I perhaps speak this Before a willing bondman; then I know My answer must be made. But I am arm'd, And dangers are to me indifferent. Cass. You speak to Cassius, and to such a man That is no fleering tell-tale. Hold, my hand: Be factious for redress of all these griefs, And I will set this foot of mine as far As who goes farthest. Cas. There's a bargain made. Now know you, Cassius, I have moved already Some certain of the noblest-minded Romans To undergo with me an enterprise Of honourable-dangerous consequence; And I do know, by this, they stay for me In Pompey's porch: for now, this fearful night, There is no stir or walking in the streets; And the complexion of the element In favour's like the work we have in hand, Most bloody, airy, and most terrible. [haste. Case. Stand close awhile, for here comes one in Cas. 'Tis Cinna; I do know him by his gait; He is a friend. Enter Cinna. Cinna, where haste you so? Cin. To find out you. Who's that? Metellus Cimber? Cas. No, it is Cassca: one incorporate To our attempts. Am I not stay'd for, Cinna? Cin. I am glad on't. What a fearful night is this! There's two or three of us have seen strange sights. Cin. Am I not stay'd for? tell me. Cas. Yes, you are. O Cassius, if you could But win the noble Brutus to our party — Cas. Be you content: good Cinna, take this paper, And look you lay it in the praetor's chair, Where Brutus may but find it: and throw this In at his window; set this up with wax Upon old Brutus' statue: all this done, Repair to Pompey's porch, where you shall find us. Is Decius Brutus and Trebonius there? Cin. All but Metellus Cimber: and he's gone To seek you at your house. Well, I will hie, And so bestow these papers as you bade me. Cas. That done, repair to Pompey's theatre. [Exit Cinna. Come, Cassius, you and I will yet ere day See Brutus at his house: three parts of him Is ours already, and the man entire Upon the next encounter yields him ours. Cass. O, he sits high in all the people's hearts: And that which would appear offence in us, His countenance, like richest alchemy, Will change to virtue and to worthiness. Cin. Him and his worth and our great need of You have right well conceived. Let us go, [him For it is after midnight, and ere day We will awake him and be sure of him. [Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE 1.—Rome. Brutus's orchard.

Enter Brutus.

Bru. What, Lucius, ho! I cannot, by the progress of the stars, Give guess how near to day. Lucius, I say! I would it were my fault to sleep so soundly. When, Lucius, when? awake, I say! what, Lucius! Enter Lucius.

Luc. Call'd you, my lord? Bru. Get me a taper in my study, Lucius: When it is lighted, come and call me here. Luc. I will, my lord. [Exit. Bru. It must be by his death: and for my part, I know no personal cause to spur him on; But for the general. He would be crown'd: How that might change his nature, there's the question. It is the bright day that brings forth the adder; And that craves wary walking. Crown him!— And then, I grant, we put a sting in him, [that— That at a stroke he may so danger with. The abuse of greatness, is, when it disjuncts Remorse from power: and, to speak truth of Caesar, I have not known when his affections sway'd More than his reason. But 'tis a common proof, That lowliness is young ambition's ladder, Whereto the climber-upward turns his face; But when he once attains the upmost round, He then unto the ladder turns his back, Looks in the clouds, scorning the base degrees By which he did ascend. So Caesar may, Then, lest he may, prevent. And, since the quarrel Will bear no colour for the thing he is, Fashion it thus; that what he is, augmented, Would run to these and these extremities: And therefore think him as a serpent's egg, Which, hatch'd, would, as his kind, grow mischief—And kill him in the shell. [tous,

Re-enter Lucius.

Luc. The taper burneth in your closet, sir. Searching the window for a flint, I found This paper, thus seal'd up; and, I am sure, It did not lie there when I went to bed. [Gives him the letter. Bru. Get you to bed again; it is not day, Is not to-morrow, boy, the 1st of March? Luc. I know not, sir. Bru. Look in the calendar, and bring me word. Luc. I will, sir. [Exit. Bru. The exhalations whizzing in the air, Give so much light that I may read by them. [Opens the letter and reads. 'Brutus, thou sleepest: awake, and see thyself. Shall Rome, &c. Speak, strike, redress! Brutus, thou sleepest: awake!']

Such insatieties have been often dropped Where I have took them up.
ACT II.

JULIUS CAESAR.

SCENE I.

'Shall Rome, &c.' Thus must I piece it out: Shall Rome stand under one man's awe? What, My ancestors did from the streets of Rome The Tarquin drive, when he was call'd a king, 'Speak, strike, redress!' Am I entreated To speak and strike? O Rome, I make thee prom- If the redress will follow, thou receivest [ise; Thy full petition at the hand of Brutus!

Re-enter Lucius.

Luc. Sir, March is wasted fourteen days. [Knocking within.

Brut. 'Tis good. Go to the gate; somebody knocks. [Exit Lucius. Since Cassius first did whet me against Caesar, I have not slept. Between the acting of a dreadful thing And the first motion, all the interim is Like a phantasma, or a hideous dream: The Genius and the mortal instruments Are then in council; and the state of man, Like to a little kingdom, suffers then The nature of an insurrection.

Re-enter Lucius.

Luc. Sir, 'tis your brother Cassius at the door, Who doth desire to see you.

Brut. Is he alone?

Luc. No, sir, there are men with him.

Brut. Do you know them?

Luc. No, sir; their hats are pluck'd about their And half their faces buried in their cloaks, [ears, That by no means I may discover them By any mark of favour.

Brut. Let 'em enter. [Exit Lucius.

They are the faction. O conspiracy, Shamest thou to show thy dangerous bower by night, When evils are most free? O, then by day Where wilt thou find a cavern dark enough To mask thy monstrous visage? Seek none, confound it in smiles and affability: [spiry; For if thou path, thy native semblance on, Not Erebus itself were dim enough To hide thee from prevention.

Enter the conspirators, Cassius, Casca, Decius, Cinna, Metellus Cimber, and Trebonius.

Cas. I think we are too bold upon your rest: Good morrow, Brutus; do we trouble you? Brut. I have been up this hour, awake all night. Knows these men, upon a trust with you? Cas. Yes, every man of them, and no man here But honours you; and every one doth wish You had but that opinion of yourself Which every noble Roman bears of you. This is Trebonius.

Brut. He is welcome hither.

Cas. This, Decius Brutus.

Brut. He is welcome too.

Cas. This, Casca; this, Cinna; and this, and Trebonius. They are all welcome. [Imber.

Dec. Here lies the east: dost not the day break Casca. No, [here? On, O, pardon, sir, it doth; and you gray lines That fret the clouds are messengers of day. Casca. You shall confess that you are both de- Here, as I point my sword, the sun arises. [ceived. Which is a great way growing on the south, Weighing the youthful season of the year. Some two months hence up higher toward the north He'll fight his lilies and bright east Stands, as the Capitol, directly here.

Brut. Give me your hands all over; one by one. Cas. And let us swear our resolution.

Brut. No, not an oath; if not enough face of men, The sufferance of our souls, the time's abuse,— If these be motives weak, break off betimes, And every man hence to his idle bed; So let high-sighted tyranny range on, Till each man drop by lottery. But if these, As I am your debtor, be but half your oath To kindle cowards and to steel with valour The melting spirits of women, then, countrymen, What need we any spur but our own cause, To prick us to redress? what other bond Than secret Romans, that have spoke the word, And will not pull their petty fire other oath Than honesty to honesty engaged That this shall be, or we will fall for it? Swear priests and cowards and men cautious, Old feeble carrions and such suffering souls That welcome wrongs; unto bad causes swear Such creatures as men doubt; but do not stain The even virtue of our enterprise, Nor the insuppressive mettle of our spirits, To think that or our cause or our performance Did need an oath: when every drop of blood That every Roman bears, and nobly bears, Is guilty of a several last day, If he do break the smallest particle Of any promise that hath pass'd from him. Cas. But what of Cicero? shall we sound him? I think he will stand very strong with us.

Casca. Let us not leave him out.

Cas. No, by no means.

Met. O, let us have him, for his silver hairs Will purchase us a good opinion And buy men's voices to commend our deeds: it shall be said, his judgment ruled our hands; Our youth and wildness shall no whit appear; But all be buried in his grave vastness. If he will not, let him: for he will never follow any thing That other men begin.

Cas. Then leave him out.

Casca. Indeed he is not fit.

Dec. Shall no man else be touch'd but only Caesar? Cas. Decius, well urged: I think it is not meet, Mark Antony, so well beloved of Caesar, Should outlive Caesar: we shall find of him A shrewd contriver; and, you know, his means, If he improve them, may well stretch so far As to annoy us all: which is Antony and Caesar fall together.

Juli. Our course will seem too bloody, Cains Casca. To cut the head off and then hack the limbs, Like wrath in death and envy afterwards; For Antony is but a limb of Caesar: Let us be sacrificers, but not butchers, Cains. We all stand up against the spirit of Caesar: And in the spirit of men there is no blood: O, that we then could come by Caesar's spirit, And not dismember Caesar! But, alas, Caesar must bleed for it! And, gentle friends, Let's kill him boldly, but not wantonly; Let's carve him as a dish fit for the gods, Not lye him as a carcass fit for hounds: And let our hearts, as subtle masters do, Stir up their servants to an act of rage, And after seem to chide 'em. This shall make Our purpose necessary and not envious: Which is reflecting to the eye itself, We shall be call'd purgers, not murderers. And for Mark Antony, think not of him; For he can do more than Caesar's arm When Caesar's head is off.

Cas. Yet I fear him; For in the ingrafted love he bears to Caesar —

Alas, good Cassius, do not think of him:
If he love Caesar, all that he can do
Is to himself, take thought and die for Caesar:
And that were much he should do, for he is given
To sports, to wilderness and much company.

Treb. There is no fear in him; let him not die; For he will live, and laugh at this hereafter.

Bru. Peace! count the clock.

Cas. The clock hath stricken three.

Treb. 'Tis time to part.

But it is doubtful yet, Whether Caesar will come forth to-day, or no; For he is superstitions grown of late, Quite from the main opinion he held once Of fantasy, of dreams and visionary pomp: It may be, till these apparitions succeed The unaccustom'd terror of this hour, And the persuasion of his augurers, May hold him from the Capitol to-day.

Dec. Never fear that: if he be so resolved, I can o'er-sway him; for he loves to hear That unicorns may be betray'd with trees, And bears with glasses, elephants with holes, Lions with toils and men with flatterers; But when I tell him he hates flatterers, He says he does, being then most flattered.

Let me work; For I can have his humour the true bent, And I will bring him to the Capitol.

Cas. Nay, we will all of us be there to fetch him.

Bru. By the eighth hour: is that the uttermost? Cas. Be that the uttermost, and fall not then.

Met. Caius Ligarius doth bear Caesar hard, Who rais'd him for speaking well of Pompey: I wonder none of you have thought of him.

Bru. Now, good Metellus, go along by him: He loves me well, and I have given him reasons; Seal him but hither, and I'ill fashion him.

Cas. The morning comes upon's; we'll leave you, And, friends, disperse yourselves; but all remember What you have said, and show yourselves true Romans.

Bru. Good gentlemen, look fresh and merrily; Let not our looks put on our purposes, But that it be our earnest intent, With untired spirits and formal constancy: And so good Morrow to you every one.

[Exit all but Brutus.

Por. Brutus, what mean you? whereto raise you? It is not for your health thus to commit [now? Your weak condition to the raw cold morning.

Por. Nor for yours neither. You've ungently, Brutus, Stole from my bed: and yesternight, at supper, You suddenly arose, and walk'd about, Musing and sighing, with your arms across, And when I ask'd you what the matter was, You stared upon me with ungentle looks; I urged you further; then you scratch'd your head, And too impatiently stamp'd with your foot; Yet insisted, yet return'd, yet ask'd,

But, with an angry warrant of your hand, Gave sign for me to leave you; so I did; Fearing to strengthen that impatience Which seem'd too much enkindled, and withal Hoping it was but an effect of humour, Which sometime hath his bizar with every man. It will not let you eat, nor talk, nor sleep,

And could it work so much upon your shape As it hath much prevail'd on your condition, I should not know you, Brutus. Dear my lord, Make me acquainted with your cause of grief.

Bru. I am not well in health, and that is all.

Por. Brutus is wise, and, were he not in health, He would embrace the means to come by it.

Bru. Why, so I do. Good Portia, go to bed.

Por. Is Brutus sick? Or is it physical
To walk unbraced and suck up the humours Of the dank morning? What, is Brutus sick, And will he steal out of his wholesome bed, To dare the vile contagion of the night, And tempt the rheumy and unpurged air To add unto his sickness? Yet, though your friends, You have some sick offence within your mind, Which, by the right and virtue of my place, I ought to know of: and, upon my knees, I charm you, by my once-commended beauty, By all your vows of love and that great vow Which did incorporate and make us one, That you unfold to me, yourself, your half, Why you are heavy, and what men to-night Have had resort to you: for here have been Some six or seven, who did hide their faces Even from darkness.

Bru. Kneel not, gentle Portia.

Por. I should not need, if you were gentle Brutus. Within the bond of marriage, tell me, Brutus, Is it excepted I should know no secrets That appertain to you? Am I yourself But, as it were, in sort or limitation, To keep with you at meals, comfort your bed, And talk to you sometimes? Dwell I but in the suburbs Of your good pleasure? If it be no more, Portia is Brutus' harlot, not his wife.

Bru. You are my true and honourable wife, As dear to me as are the rugged drops That visit my sad heart. [secret.

Por. If this were true, then should I know this I grant I am a woman; but withal
A woman that Lord Brutus took to wife: I grant I am a woman, but withal
A woman well-reputed, Cato's daughter.

Think you she may not stand with me, Being so father'd and so husband'd? Tell me your counsels, I will not disclose 'em:
I have made strong proof of my constancy, Giving myself a voluntary wound Here, in the thigh: can I bear that with patience, And not my husband's secrets?

Bru. O ye gods, Render me worthy of this noble wife! [Knocking within.

Por. Hark, hark! one knocks: Portia, go in awhile; And by and by thin besom shall partake The secrets of my heart.

Luc. Here is a sick man that would speak with you. Bru. Caius Ligarius, that Metellus spake of. Lig. You've safe guarded sorrow from a feeble tongue. Bru. O, what a time have you chose out, brave Lucius, To wear a kervich! Would you were not sick! Lig. I am not sick, if Brutus have in hand Any exploit worthy the name of honour.

Bru. Such an exploit have I in hand, Ligarius, Had you a healthful ear to hear of it.

Lig. By all the gods that Romans now before, I here discard my sickness. Soul of Rome!

633
Brave son, derived from honourable Joins! Thou, like an exerciser last conjured up My mortified spirit. Now bid me run, And I will strive with things impossible; Yea, get the better of them. What's to do? Brum. A piece of work that will make sick men whole.

Jul. But are not some whole that we must make? Brum. That must we also. What it is, my Cæsars, I shall unfold to thee, as we are going To whom it must be done.

Lig. Set on your foot, And with a heart new-fired I follow you, To do I know not what: but it sufficeth That Brutus leads me on.

Brum. Follow me, then. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Cæsar's house.

Thunder and lightning. Enter Cæsar, in his night-gown.

Cæs. Nor heaven nor earth have been at peace to-night: Thrice hath Calpurnia in her sleep cried out, 'Help, ho! they murder Cæsar!' Who's within?

Enter a Servant.

Serv. My lord?

Cæs. Go bid the priests do present sacrifice And bring me their opinions of success.

Serv. I will, my lord. [Exit.

Enter Calpurnia.

Cæs. What mean you, Cæsar? think you to walk You shall not stir out of your house to-day. [forth? Cæs. Cæsar shall forth: the things that threat'nd me

Ne'er look'd but on my back; when they shall see The face of Cæsar, they are vanished.

Cæs. Cæsar, I never stood on ceremonies, Yet now they fright me. There is one within, Besides the things that we have heard and seen, Reconcils most horrid sights seen by the watch. A house hath whelped in the streets; And graves have yawn'd, and yielded up their dead: Fierce fiery warriors fought upon the clouds, In ranks and squadrons and right form of war, Which drizzled blood upon the Capitol: The noise of battle hurtled in the air, Horses did neigh, and dying men did groan, And ghosts did shriek and wail when you had passed about the streets. O Cæsar! these things are beyond all use, And I do fear them.

Cæs. What can be avoided Whose end is purposed by the mighty gods? Yet Cæsar shall go forth; for these predictions Are to the world in general as to Cæsar.

Cæs. When beggars die, there are no comets seen; The heavens themselves blaze forth the death of princes.

Cæs. Cowards die many times before their deaths; The valiant never taste of death but once. Of all the wonders that I yet have heard, It seems to me most strange that men should fear; Seeing that death, a necessary end, Will come when it will come.

Re-enter Servant.

What say the augurers?

Serv. They would not have you to stir forth to Phæren the entrails of an offering forth, [day. They could not find a heart within the beast.

Cæs. The gods do this in shame of cowardice: Cæsar did not by a beast be without a heart. If he should stay at home to-day for fear, No, Cæsar shall not: danger knows full well That Cæsar is more dangerous than he:

We are two lions litter'd in one day, And I the elder and more terrible: And Cæsar shall go forth.

Cal. Alas, my lord, Your wisdom is consum'd in confidence. Do not go forth to-day: call it my fear That keeps you in the house, and not your own. We'll send Mark Antony to the senate-house; And he shall say you are not well to-day: Let me, upon my knee, prevail in this. Cæs. Mark Antony shall say I am not well; And, for thy humour, I will stay at home.

Enter Decius.

Here's Decius Brutus, he shall tell them so.

Dec. Cæsar, all hail! good morrow, worthy Cæsar: I come to fetch you to the senate-house.

Cæs. And you are come in very happy time, To bear my greeting to the senators And tell them that I will not come to-day: Cannot, is false, and that I dare not, falser: I will not come to-day: tell them so, Decius. Cæs. Say he is sick.

Dec. Shall Cæsar send a lie? Have I in conquest stretch'd my arm so far, To be afraid to tell graybeards the truth? Decius, tell them Cæsar will not come.

Dec. Most mighty Cæsar, let me know some cause, Lest I be laugh'd at when I tell them so. Cæs. The cause is in my will: I will not come; That is enough to satisfy the senate. But for your private satisfaction, Because I love you, I will let you know: Calpurnia here, my wife, stays me at home: She dreamt to-night she saw my statue, Which, like a fountain with an hundred spouts, Did run pure blood; and many lusty Romans Came smoking, and did bathe their hands in it: And there they did apply for warnings, and portents, And evils imminent; and on her knee Hath begg'd that I will stay at home to-day.

Dec. This dream is all amiss interpreted; It was a vision fair and fortunate: Your statue spouting blood in many pipes, In which so many smil'd Romans bath'd, Signifies that from you great Rome shall suck Reviving blood, and that great men shall press For tinctures, stains, relics and cognizance. This by Calpurnia's dream is signified.

Dec. And this way have you well expounded it.

Cæs. And this way have I expounded it to-day: And now I must, as I before said, give you that I can say: And know it now: the senate have concluded To give this day a crown to mighty Cæsar. If you shall send them word you will not come, Their minds may change. Besides, it were a mock Apart to be render'd, for some one to say 'Break up then the senate till another time.' When Cæsar's wife shall meet with better dreams? If Cæsar hide himself, shall they not whisper 'Lo, Cæsar is afraid?' Pardon me, Cæsar; for my dear dear love To your proceeding bids me tell you this; And reasons to my love is liable.

Cæs. How foolish do your fears seem now, Cal? I am ashamed I did yield to them. [Punish! Give me my robe, for I will go.

Enter Publius, Brutus, Ligarius, Metellus, Casca, Trebonius, and Cinna.

And look where Publius is come to fetch me. Pub. Good morrow, Cæsar.

Cæs. Welcome, Publius. What, Brutus, are you stirr'd so early too? Good morrow, Cæsar. What, Ligarius? Cæsar was never so much your enemy As that same jugurth which hath made you lean. What is 't o'clock?
ACT III.

Cæsar.

SCENE I.

Cæsar. It is strucken eight.
Ces. I thank you for your pains and courtesy.

Enter Antony.

Sce! Antony, that reveals long o' nights,
Is not withstand ing up. Good morrow, Antony.
Ant. So to most noble Cæsar.
Ces. Bid them prepare within;
I am to blame to be thus waited for.
Now, Cæsars: now, Metellus: what, Trebonius!
I have an hour's talk in store for you;
Remember that you call on me to-day:
Be near me, that I may remember you.
Trebol. Cæsar, I will; [Aside] and so near will I be,
That your best friends shall wish I had been further.
Ces. Good friends, go in, and taste some wine with me;
And we, like friends, will straightway go together.
Brut. [Aside] That every like is not the same, O Cæsar.
The heart of Brutus yearns to think upon! [Exit.]

SCENE III.—A street near the Capitol.

Enter Artemidorus, reading a paper.

Art. 'Cæsar, beware of Brutus; take heed of Cæsius: come not near Cæsar; have an eye to Cinna; trust not Trebonius; mark well Metellus Camden; Decius Brutus loves thee not; thou hast wronged Caius Ligarius. There is but one mind in all these men, and it is against Cæsar. If thou beest not immortal, look about you; security gives way to conspiracy. The mighty gods defend thee! Thy lover, Artemidorus. Here will I stand till Cæsar pass along,
And as a suitor will I give him this,
My heart laments that virtue cannot live
Out of the teeth of emulation.
If thou read this, O Cæsar, thou mayst live;
If not, the Fates with traitors do contrive. [Exit.]

SCENE IV.—Another part of the same street, before the house of Brutus.

Enter Portia and Lucius.

Por. I prithee, boy, run to the senate-house;
Stay not to answer me, but get thee gone:
Why dost thou stay?
Luc. To know my errand, madam.
Por. I would have had thee there, and here again,
Ere I can tell thee what thou shouldst do there.
O constancy, be strong upon my side,
Set a huge mountain 'twixt my heart and tongue!
I have a man's mind, but a woman's might.
How hard it is for women to keep counsel!
Art thou here yet?
Luc. Madam, what should I do?
Run to the Capitol, and nothing else?
And so return to you, and nothing else? [well,
Por. Yes, bring me word, boy, if thy lord look
For he went sickly forth; and take good note
What Cæsar doth, what suitors press to him.
Hark, boy! what noise is that?
Luc. I hear none, madam.
Por. Prithee, listen well;
I heard a bustling rumour, like a fray.
And the wind brings it from the Capitol.
Luc. Sooth, madam, I hear nothing. [Enter the Soothsayer.
Por. Come hither, fellow: which way hast thou
Sooth. At mine own house, good lady. [been?
Por. What is 't o'clock?
Sooth. About the ninth hour, lady.
Por. Is Cæsar yet gone to the Capitol?
Sooth. Madam, not yet; I go to take my stand,
To see him pass on to the Capitol.
Por. Thou hast some suit to Cæsar, hast thou not?
Sooth. That I have, lady; if it will please Cæsar
To be so good to Cæsar as to hear me.
I shall beseech him to betrust himself,
Por. Why, know'st thou any harm's intended
Towards him?
Sooth. None that I know will be, much that I
Fear may chance.
Good morrow to you. Here the street is narrow:
The throng that follows Cæsar at the heels,
Of senators, of practioners, common suitors,
Will crowd a feeble man almost to death:
I'll get me to a place more void, and there
Speak to great Cæsar as he comes along. [Exit.
Por. I must go in. Ay me, how weak a thing
The heart of woman is! O Brutus,
The heavens speed thee in thine enterprise!
Sure, the boy heard me: Brutus hath a suit
That Cæsar will not grant. O, I grow faint.
Run, Lucius, and commend me to my lord;
Say I am merry: come to me again;
And bring me word what he doth say to thee. [Exit severally.
ACT III.

JULIUS CAESAR.

SCENE I.

Re-enter Trebonius.

Cas. Where is Antony?

Tr. Fle'd to his house amazed:

Men, wives and children stare, cry out and run

As if it were daybreak.

Cas. Fates, we will know your pleasures!

That we shall die, we know; 'tis but the time

And death doth always out, that men stand upon.

Cas. Why, he that cuts off twenty years of life

Cuts off so many years of fearing death.

Cas. Grant that, and then is death a benefit:

So are we Caesar's friends, that have abridged

His time of fearing death. Stoop, Romans, stope,

And let us bathe our bloody hands in Caesar's blood:

Up to the elbows, and between our swords:

Then walk we forth, even to the market-place,

And, waving our red weapons o'er our heads,

'Let's all cry 'Peace, freedom and liberty!''

Cas. Stoop, then, and wash. How many ages

Shall this our loft'ry scene be acted over?—

Hence in states unborn and accents yet unknown!

Cas. How many times shall Caesar bleed in sport,

That now on Pompey's basis lies along

No worthier than the dust?

Cas. Ay, every man away:

Brutus shall lead; and we will grace his heels

With the most boldest and best hearts of Rome.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Thus, Brutus, did my master bid me kneel:

Thus did Mark Antony bid me fall down:

And, being prostrate, thus he bade me say:

Brutus is noble, wise, valiant, and honest;

Cesar was mighty, bold, royal, and loving:

Say I love Brutus, and I honour him:

Say I fear'd Caesar, honour'd him and loved him.

If Brutus will vouchsafe that Antony

May safely come to him, and be resolved

How Caesar hath deserved to lie in death,

Mark Antony shall not love Caesar more;

So well as Brutus living; but will follow

The fortunes and affairs of noble Brutus.

Thorough the hazards of this untold state

With all true faith. So says my master Antony.

Bru. Thy master is a wise and valiant Roman;

I never thought him worse;

Tell him, so please him come unto this place,

He shall be satisfied; and, by my honour,

Depart untouch'd.

Serv. I'll fetch him presently. [Exit.

Bru. I know that we shall have him well to friend.

Cas. I wish we may; but yet have I a mind

That fears him much; and my misgiving still

Falls shrewdly to the purpose.

Bru. But here comes Antony.

Re-enter Antony.

Ant. Welcome, Mark Antony.

Ant. O mighty Cesar! dost thou lie so low?

Are all thy conquests, glories, triumphs, spoils,

Shrunk to this little measure? Fare thee well.

I know not, gentle Cesar, what you intend,

Who else must be let blood, who else is rank,

And levelled with the dust?

If I myself am not, let it be told me here;

As Cesar's death hour, nor any instrument

Of half that worth as those your swords, made rich

With the most noble blood of all this world.

I do beseech ye, if you bear me hard

Now, whilst your purpled hands are fresh and smoke,

Fulfil your cursed business. In ten thousand years,

I shall not find myself so apt to die:
ACT III.

JULIUS CAESAR.

SCENE II.

Knowing you how much the people may be moved
By that which he will utter?

By your pardon; I will myself into the pulpit first,
And show the reasons of my Caesar's death:
What Antony shall speak, I will protest:
He speaks by leave and by permission,
And that we are contented Caesar shall
Have all true rites and lawful ceremonies.
It shall advantage more than do us wrong.
Cos. I know not what may fail: I like it not.
Bru. Mark Antony, how Caesar's body,
You shall not in your funeral speech blame us,
But speak all good you can devise of Caesar,
And say you do't by our permission;
Else shall you not have any hand at all
About his funeral: and you shall speak
In the same pulpit wherein I am going,
After my speech is ended.

Ant. Be it so;
I do desire no more.

Bru. Prepare the body then, and follow us.

[Exeunt all but Antony.

Ant. O, pardon me, thou bleeding piece of earth,
That I am meek and gentle with these butchers!
Thou art the ruins of the noblest man
That ever lived in the tide of times.
Woe to the hand that shed this costly blood!
Over thy wounds now do I prophesy:
Many a pity shall henceforth come
Like naked flames from thee out of earth,
Not to the earth again, but to the heaven:
That this foul deed shall smell above the earth
With carrion men, groaning for burial.

Enter a Servant.

You serve Octavius Caesar, do you not?

Serv. I do, Mark Antony.

Ant. Caesar did write for him to come to Rome.

Serv. He did receive his letters, and is coming:
And bid me say to you by word of mouth—
O Caesar!—

Ant. Thy heart is big, get thee away and weep;
Passion, I see, is catching; for mine eyes,
Seeing those heads of sorrow stand in thine,
Began to water. Is thy master coming?

Serv. He lies to-night within seven leagues of Rome.

Ant. Post back with speed, and tell him what hath
Here is a mourning Rome, a dangerous Rome,
No Rome of safety for Octavius yet:
He hence, and tell him so. Yet, stay awhile;
Thou shalt not back till I have borne this corpse
Into the market-place: there shall I try,
In my oration, how the people take
The cruel issue of these bloody men:
According to which, thou shalt discourse
To young Octavius of the state of things.

Lend me your hand. [Exit with Caesar's body.

SCENE II. — The Forum.

Enter Brutus and Cassius, and a throng of Citizens.

Citzens. We will be satisfied: let us be satisfied.

Bru. Then follow me, and give me audience,
Cassius, go you into the other street. [friends.

ACT III.

JULIUS CAESAR.

SCENE I.

And part the numbers.
Those that will hear me speak, let 'em stay here;
Those that will follow Cassius, go with him;
And public reasons shall be rendered
Of Caesar's death.

First Cit. If I shall hear Brutus speak. [reasons, Sec. Cit. I will hear Cassius; and compare their

When severally we hear them rendered.

[Exit Cassius, with some of the Citizens. Brutus goes into the pulpit.

Third Cit. The noble Brutus is ascended: silence! Brut.
Be patient till the last.
Romans, countrymen, and lovers! hear me for my cause, and be silent, that you may hear: believe me for mine honour, and have respect to mine honour, that you may believe: censure me in your wisdom,
and awake your senses, that you may the better judge. If there be any in this assembly, any dear friend of Caesar's, to him I say, that Brutus' love to Caesar was no less than his. If then that friend demand why Brutus rose against Caesar, this is my answer:—Not that I loved Caesar less, but that I loved Rome more. Had you rather Caesar were live by the rule of a slave, than that Caesar were dead, to live all free men? As Caesar loved me, I weep for him: as he was fortunate, I rejoice at it; as he was valiant, I honour him: but, as he was ambitions, I slew him. There is tears for his love; joy for his fortune; honour for his valour; and death for his ambition. Who因而 who base that would be a husbandman? If any, speak: for him I have of-denied. Who is here so rude that would not be a Roman? If any, speak: for him have I offended.
Who is here so vile that will not love his country?
If any, speak: for him have I offended. I pause for a reply.

All. None, Brutus, none.

Brut. Then none have I offended. I have done no more to Caesar than you shall do to Brutus. The question of his death is enrolled in the Capitol; his glory not extenuated, wherein he was worthy, nor his offences enforced, for which he suffered death.

Enter Antony and others, with Caesar's body.

Here comes his body, mourned by Mark Antony:
who, though he had no hand in his death, shall receive the benefit of his dying, a place in the commmonwealth; as which of you shall not? With this I depart,—that, as I slew my best lover for the good of Rome, I have the same dagger for myself, when it shall please my country to need my death.

All. Live, Brutus! live, live! [honour.

First Cit. Bring him with triumph home unto his Sec. Cit. Give him a statue with his ancestors.

Third Cit. Let him be Caesar.

Fourth Cit. Caesar's better parts

Shall be crown'd in Brutus.

First Cit. We'll bring him to his house
With shouts and clamours.

Brut. My countrymen,—
Sec. Cit. Peace, silence! Brutus speaks.
First Cit. Peace, ho!

Brut. Good countrymen, let me depart alone,
And, for my sake, stay here with Antony:
Do grace to Caesar's corpse, and grace his speech
Tending to Caesar's glories; which Mark Antony,
By our permission, is allow'd to make.
I do entreat you, not a man depart.
Save I alone, till Antony have spoke. [Exit.

First Cit. Stay, ho! and let us hear Mark Antony.

Third Cit. Let him go up into the public chair;
We'll hear him. Noble Antony, I go up.

Ant. For Brutus' sake, I am beholding to you.

Fourth Cit. What does he say of Brutus?

Third Cit. He says, for Brutus' sake,
He finds himself beholding to us all.

Fourth Cit. 'T were best he speak no harm of Brutus here.

First Cit. This Caesar was a tyrant.

Third Cit. Nay, that's certain:
We were taught that Rome is rid of him. [say.

Sec. Cit. Peace! let us hear what Antony can

Ant. You gentle Romans,—

Ant. Friends, Romans, countrymen, lend me your ears;—
I come to speak in Caesar's funeral.
He was my friend, faithful and just to me:
But Brutus says he was ambitious;
And Brutus is an honourable man.
You all did see that on the Lupercal
I thrice presented him a kingly crown,
Which he did thrice refuse: was this ambition?
Yet Brutus says he was ambitious;
And, sure, he is an honourable man.
I speak not to disprove what Brutus spoke,
But here I am to speak what I do know.
You all did love him once, not without cause;
What cause withholds you then, to mourn for him?
O judgment! thou art neglected in thy griefs,
And men must die; and their deaths must needs
Be like to theirs that love not men.
My heart is in the coffin there with Caesar,
And I must pause till it come back to me.—

First Cit. Methinks there is much reason in his

Sec. Cit. If thou consider rightly of the matter,
Cesar had great wrong.

Third Cit. Has he, masters? I fear there will a worse come in his place.

Fourth Cit. Mark'd ye his words? He would not take the crown;

Therefore 'tis certain he was not ambitious.

First Cit. If it be found so, some will dare abide it.

Sec. Cit. Poor soul! his eyes are red as fire with weeping. [Antony.

Third Cit. There's not a nobler man in Rome than Fourth Cit. Now mark him, he begins again to Act. sure, yesterday the word of Caesar might

Have spread against the world; now lies he there,
And none so poor to do him reverence.
O masters, if I were disposed to stir
Your hearts and minds to mutiny and rage,
I should do Brutus wrong, and Cassius wrong;
Who, you all know, are honourable men:
I will not do them wrong; I rather choose
To wrong the dead, to wrong myself and you,
Than I will wrong such honourable men.
But here's a pamphlet with the seal of Caesar;
I found it in his closet, 'tis his will:
Let but the Commons hear the sentiment
Which, pardon me, I do not mean to read—
And they would go and kiss dead Caesar's wounds
And dip their napkins in his sacred blood,
Yet, beg a hair of him for memory,
And, dying, mention it within their wills,
ACT III.

JULIUS CAESAR.

SCENE III.

Bequeathing it as a rich legacy Unto their issue.

Fourth Cit. We'll hear the will: read it, Mark. All. The will, the will! we will hear Caesar's will. And, being men, hearing the will of Caesar, It will inflame you, it will make you mad. Pursue your patience, gentle friends, I must not read it; It is not meet you know how Caesar loved you. You are not wood, you are not stones, but men; And, being men, hearing the will of Caesar, It will inflame you, it will make you mad. To such a sudden flood of mutiny, They that have done this deed are honourable: What private griefs they have, alas, I know not. That made them do it: they are wise and honourable, And will not, with nor words, nor worth, I come not, friends, to steal away your hearts: I am no orator, as Brutus is; But, as you know me all, a plain blunt man, That love my friend; and that they know full well That gave me public leave to speak of him: For I have neither that nor words, nor worth, Action, nor utterance, nor the power of speech, To stir men's blood: I only speak right on; I tell you that which you yourselves do know: Show you sweet Caesar's wounds, poor poor dumb mouths, And bid them speak for me: but were I Brutus, And Brutus Antony, there were an Antony Would ruffle up your spirits and put a tongue In every wound of Caesar that should move The stones of Rome to rise and mutiny. All. We'll mutiny. First Cit. We'll burn the house of Brutus. Third Cit. Away, then! come, seek the conspirators. Ant. Yet hear me, countrymen; yet hear me speak. All. Peace, ho! hear Antony. Most noble Antony! Ant. Why, friends, you go to do you know not what, Wherein hath Caesar thus deserved your loves? Alas, you know not: I must tell you then: You have forgot the will I told you of. [the will. All. Most true. The will! Let's stay and hear. Ant. Here is the will, and under Caesar's seal. To every Roman citizen he gives, To every several man, seventy-five drachmas. Sec. Cit. Most noble Caesar! We'll revenge his Third Cit. O royal Caesar! [death. Ant. Hear me with patience. All. Peace, ho! Ant. Moreover, he hath left you all his walks, His private arbours and new-planted orchards, On this side Tiber: he hath left them you, And to your heirs for ever, common pleasures, To walk abroad, and recreate yourselves. Here was a Caesar! when comes such another? First Cit. Never, never, Come, away! we'll burn his body in the holy place, And with the brands fire the traitors' houses. Take up the body. Sec. Cit. Go fetch fire. Third Cit. Pluck down benches. Fourth Cit. Pluck down forms, windows, anything. [Exeunt Citizens with the body. Ant. Now let it work. Mischief, then art afoot, Take thou what course thou wilt! Enter a Servant. How now, fellow? Serv. Sir, Octavius is already come to Rome. Ant. Where is he? Serv. He and Lepidus are at Caesar's house. Ant. And thither will I straight to visit him: he comes upon a wish. Fortune is merry, And in this mood will give us anything. Serv. I heard him say, Brutus and Cassius Are rid like madmen through the gates of Rome. Ant. Belike they had some notice of the people, How I had moved them. Bring me to Octavius. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A street.

Enter Cinna the poet.

Cia. I dreamt to-night that I did feast with Caesar, And things unlike charge my fancy: I have no will to wander forth of doors, Yet something leads me forth.
ACT IV.

JULIUS CAESAR.

SCENE II.

Enter Citizens.

First Cit. What is your name?
Sec. Cit. Whither are you going?
Third Cit. Where do you dwell?
Fourth Cit. Are you a married man or a bachelor?
Sec. Cit. Answer every man directly.
First Cit. Ay, and wisely.
Third Cit. Ay, and truly, you were best.
Cin. What is my name? Whither am I going?
Where do I dwell? Am I a married man or a bachelor? Then, to answer every man directly and briefly, wisely and truly: wisely I say, I am a bachelor.
Sec. Cit. That's as much as to say, they are fools that marry: you'll bear me a bang for that, I fear.
Proceed; directly.
Cin. Directly, I am going to Caesar's funeral.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—A house in Rome.

Antony, Octavius, and Lepidus, seated at a table.

Ant. These many, then, shall die; their names are prick'd. [Hidus?]
Oct. Your brother too must die; consent you, Lep.
Lep. I do consent,—
Lep. Upon condition Publius shall not live,
Who is your sister's son, Mark Antony. [him.]
Ant. He shall not live: look, with a spot I damn
But, Lepidus, go you to Caesar's house;
Fetch the will hither, and we shall determine
How to cut off some change in legacies.
Lep. What, shall I find you here?
Oct. Or here, or at the Capitol. [Exit Lepidus.
Ant. This is a slight unmeritable man,
Meet to be sent on errands: it is fit,
The three-fold world divided, he should stand
One of the three to share it?
Oct.
So you thought him;
And took his voice who should be prick'd to die,
In our black sentence and proscription.
Ant. Octavius, I have seen more days than you;
And though we lay these honours on this man,
To ease ourselves of divers slanderous loads,
He shall but bear them as the ass bears gold,
To groan and sweat under the business,
Either led or driven, as we point the way;
And having brought our treasure where we will,
Then take we down his load, and turn him off,
Like to the empty ass, to shake his cars,
And graze in commons.
Oct.
You may do your will;
But he's a tried and valiant soldier.
Ant. So is my horse, Octavius; and for that I do appoint him store of provender:
It is a creature that I teach to fight,
To wind, to stop, to run directly on,
His corporal motion governed by my spirit.
And, in some taste, is Lepidus but so;
He must be taught and trained and bid go forth;
A barren-spirited fellow; one that feeds
On sheaves, o'ats and barley, which, out of use
And staled by other men, begin his fashion: do not talk of him,
But as a property. And now, Octavius,
Listen great things:—Brutus and Cassius
Are levying powers: we must straight make head:
Therefore the brilliance be combined.
Our best friends made, our means stretch'd;
And let us presently go sit in council,

How covert matters may be best disclosed,
And open perils most answered.
Oct. Let us do so: for we are at the stake,
And bay'd about with many enemies;
And some that smile have in their hearts, I fear,
Millions of mischiefs. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Camp near Sardis. Before Brutus's tent.

Dread. Enter Brutus, Lucilius, Lucius, and Soldiers; Titinius and Pindarus meeting them.

Bru. Stand, ho!
Lucil. Give the word, ho! and stand.
Bru. What now, Lucilius! is Cassius near?
Lucil. He is at hand; and Pindarus is come
To do you salutation from his master.
Bru. He greets me well. Your master, Pindarus,
In his own change, or by ill officers,
Hath given me some worthy cause to wish
Things done, undone: but, if he be at hand,
I shall be satisfied.

Pin.

Bru. I do not doubt
But that my noble master will appear
Such as he is, full of regard and honour.

Pin.

Bru. He is not doubted, a word, Lucilius;
How he received you, let me be resolved.

Lucil. With courtesy and with respect enough;
But not with such familiar instances,
Nor with such free and friendly conference,
As he hath used of old.

Bru. Thou hast described
A hot friend cooling: ever note, Lucilius,
When love begins to sink and decay,
It useth an enforced ceremony.
There are no tricks in plain and simple faith;
But hollow men, like horses not at hand,
Can make gallant show and promise of their mettle;
But when they should endure the bloody spur,
They fall their crests, and, like deceitful jades,
Sink in the trial. Comes his army on? [ter'd;
Lucil. They mean this night in Sardis to be quartered.
The greater part, the horse in general,
Are come with Cassius. [Bru.

Bru. Mark! he is arrived.
[Enter Cassius and his powers.

Cas. Stand, ho!
Bru. Stand, ho! Speak the word along.
First Sol. Stand!
ACT IV.

SCENE III.

JULIUS CAESAR.

Though it do split you; for, from this day forth, I'll use you for my nirth, yea, for my daughter, When you are waspish.

Cas. You say you are a better soldier, Is it come to this? Let it appear so; make your vaunting true, And it shall please me well: for mine own part, I shall be glad to learn of noble men. You wrong me every way: you wrong me, I said, an elder soldier, not a better: [Brutus; Did I say 'better'? If you did, I care not. Cas. When Caesar lived, he durst not thus have moved me. [him. Brut. Peace, peace! you durst not so have tempted Cas. I durst not! Brut. No.

Cas. What, durst not tempt him!

Brut. For your life you durst not. Cas. Do not presume too much upon my love; I may do that I shall be sorry for. Brut. You have done that you should be sorry for. There is no teyror, Cassius, in your threats, For I am armed so strong in honesty That they pass by me as the idle wind, Which I respect not. I did send to you For certain sums of gold, which you denied me: For I can raise no money by vile means: By heaven, I had rather coin my heart, And drop my blood for drachmas, than to wrench From the hard hands of peasants their vile trash By any indirection: I did send To you for gold to pay my legions, Which you denied me; was that done like Cassius? Should I have answer'd Caius Cassius so? When Marcus Brutus grows so covetous, To lock such rascal counters from his friends, Be ready, gods, with all your thunderbolts; Dush him to pieces! Cas. I denied you not. Brut. You did. Cas. I did not: he was but a fool that brought My answer back. Brutus hath rived my heart: A friend should bear his friend's infirmities, But Brutus makes mine greater than they are. Brut. I do not, till you practise them on me. Cas. You love me not. Brut. I do not like your faults. Cas. A friendly eye could never see such faults. Brut. A flatterer's would not, though they do As huge as high Olympus. [Appear Cas. Come, Antony, and young Octavius, come, Revenge yourselves alone on Cassius, For Cassius is awary of the world; Hated by one he loves; braued by his brother; Cheek'd like a bondman; all his faults observed, Set in a note-book, learn'd, and comm'd by rote, To cast into my teeth. O, I could weep My spirit from mine eyes! There is my dagger, and here my naked breast: within, a heart Dearer than Brutus' mine, richer than gold: If that thou be'st a Roman, take it forth; I, that denied thee gold, will give my heart: Strike, as thou didst at Caesar; for, I know, When thou didst hate him worst, thou lovest him Than ever thou lov'dest Cassius. [better Brut. Beate thy dagger: Be angry when you will, it shall have scope: Do what you will, dishonour shall be honour. O Cassius, you are yoked with a lamb That carrieth anger as the flint bears fire; Who, much enforced, shows a hasty spark, And straight is cold again. Cas. Hath Cassius lived To be but mirth and laughter to his Brutus, When grief, and blood ill-temper'd, vexeth him? Brut. When I spoke that, I was ill-temper'd too. 141
ACT IV.

JULIUS CÆSAR.

SCENE III.

Cas. Do you confess so much? Give me your hand.

Brutus. And my heart too. [hand.

Cas. O Brutus!

Brutus. What's the matter?

Cas. Have not you love enough to bear with me, When that rash humour which my mother gave me Makes me forgetful?

Brutus. Yes, Cassius; and, from henceforth, When you are over-ceremonious with your Brutus, He'll think your mother child, and leave you so.

Poet. [Within] Let me go in to see the general.

There is some grudge between 'em, 'tis not meet They be alone.

Lucilius. [Within] You shall not come to them.

Poet. [Within] Nothing but death shall stay me.

Enter Poet, followed by Lucilius, Titinius, and Lucius.

Cas. How now! What's the matter? [mean? Poet. For shame, you generals! what do you Love, and be friends, as two such men should be; For I have seen more years, I'm sure, than ye. Cas. Ha, ha! how vilely falls this evil rhyme! Brutus. Get you hence, sirrah; saucy fellow, hence! Cas. Bear with him, Brutus; 'tis his fashion.

Brutus. I'll know his humour, when he knows his time:

What should the wars do with these juggling fools? Companions, hence!

Cas. Away, away, be gone! [Exit Poet.

Brutus. Lucilius and Titinius, bid the commanders Prepare to lodge their companies to-night.

Cas. And come yourselves, and bring Messala Immediately to us. [with you

Lucilius. [Exeunt Cassius and Titinius.

Cas. How's the state? O Brutus, I do not think you could have been so angry.

Brutus. O Cassius, I am sick of many griefs.

Cas. Of your philosophy you make no use, If you give place to accidental evils.

Brutus. No man bears sorrow better. Portia is dead.

Cas. Ha! Portia!

Brutus. She is dead.

Cas. How 'scaped I killing when I cross'd you so? O insupportable and touching loss!

Upon what sickness?

Ivy. Impatient of my absence,
And grief that young Octavius with Mark Antony Have made themselves so strong:—for with her death That things came:—with this she fell distract,
And her attendants absent, swoln'd her fire.

Cas. And died so?

Ivy. Even so.

Cas. O ye immortal gods!

Re-enter Lucilius with wine and taster.

Lucilius. Speak no more of her. Give me a bowl of
In this I bury all unkindness. Cassius, [wine.
Cas. My heart is thirsty for that noble pledge.

Fill, Lucilius, till the wine over-swell the cup; I cannot drink too much of Brutus' love.

Brutus. Come in, Titinius! [Exit Lucilius.

Re-enter Titinius, with Messala.

Welcome, good Messala.

Now sit we close about this taster here, And call in question our necessities.

Cas. Portia, art thou gone?

Ivy. No; I pray you, Messala, I have here received letters, That young Octavius and Mark Antony Come down upon us with a mighty power, Bending their expedition toward Philippi.

Messala. Myself have letters of the same tenour. Brutus. With what addition?
JULIUS CAESAR.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The plains of Philippi.

Enter Octavius, Antony, and their Army.

Oct. Now, Antony, our hopes are answered: You said the enemy would not come down, But keep the hills and upper regions: It proves not so: their battles are at hand; They mean to warn us at Philippi here. Answering before we do demand of them.

Ant. Tut, I am in their bosoms, and I know Wherefore they do it: they could be content To visit other places; and come down With fearful bravery, thinking by this face To fasten in our thoughts that they have courage; But 'tis not so.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Prepare, you, generals: The enemy comes on in gallant show: Their bloody sign of battle is hung out, And something to be done immediately.

Ant. Octavius, lead your battle softly on, Upon the left hand of the even field.

Oct. Upon the right hand I: keep thou the left. Ant. Why do you cross me in this exigent? Oct. I do not cross you; but I will do so.

Dram. Enter Brutus, Cassius, and their Army: Lucilius, Titinius, Messalla, and others.

Brut. They stand, and would have parley.

Cass. Stand fast, Titinius: we must out and talk.

Mark. Antony, shall we give sign of battle? Ant. No, Cæsar, we will answer on their charge. Make forth; the generals would have some words.

Oct. Stir not until the signal.

Brut. Words before blows: is it so, countrymen? Oct. Not that we love words better, as you do. Brut. Good words are better than bad strokes, Octavius.

Ant. In your bad strokes, Brutus, you give good Witness the hole you made in Cæsar's heart, Crying 'Long live! hail, Cæsar!' Cass. Antony, The posture of your blows are yet unknown; But for your words, they rob the Hybla bees, And leave them honeyless.

Ant. Not stingless too.

Brut. O, yes, and soundless too.

Villains, you have stol'n their buzzing, Antony, And very wisely threat before you sting. [Exeunt Messenger, Octavius, and some of his army.]

Let me see, let me see: is not the leaf turned down Where I left reading? Here it is, I think.

Enter the Ghost of Cæsar.

How ill this taper burns! Ha! who comes here? I think it is the weakness of mine eyes That shapes this monstrous apparition. It comes upon me. Art thou any thing? Art thou some god, some angel, or some devil, That makest my blood cold and my hair to stare? Speak to me what thou art.

Ghost. Thy evil spirit, Brutus.

Brut. Why comest thou?

Ghost. To tell thee how thou shalt see me at Philippi.

Brut. Well; then I shall see thee again.

Ghost. Ay, at Philippi.

Brut. Why, I will see thee at Philippi, then.

[Exit Ghost.

Now I have taken heart thou vanishest:
I'll spirit, I would hold more talk with thee. Boy, Lucius! Vanish! Cæsius! Sirs, awake! Clau. Luc. The strings, my lord, are false. [Dies! Brut. He thinks he still is at his instrument.

Lucius, awake!

Luc. My lord?

Brut. Sleep again, Lucius. Sirrah Cæsius! [To Var.] Fellow thou, awake!

Var. My lord?

Clau. My lord?

Brut. Why did you so cry out, sirs, in your sleep? Var. Clau. Did we, my lord?

Brut. Why?

Clau. Ay: saw you any thing?

Var. No, my lord. I saw nothing.

Clau. No, my lord.

Brut. Go and commend me to my brother Cassius; Bid him set on his powers betimes before, And we will follow.

Var. Clau. It shall be done, my lord.

[Exeunt.}
You show'd your teeth like apes, and fawn'd like hounds,
And bow'd like bondmen, kissing Caesar's feet;
Whilst dann'd Casca, like a cur, behind
Struck Caesar on the neck. O you flatterers!

Cas. Flatterers! Now, Brutus, thank you self:
This tongue had no offend past so to-day,
If Cassius might have ruled.

Oct. Come, come, come the cause: if arguing make us sweat,
The proof of it will turn to redder drops.
Look I draw a sword against conspirators: When think you that the sword goes up again?
Never, till Caesar's three and thirty wounds Be well avenged; or till another Cassius Have added slaughter to the sword of traitors.

Brus. Cassius, thou canst not die by traitors' hands, Unless thou bring'st at them with thee.

Oct. So I hope; I was not born to die on Brutus' sword.

Brus. O, if thou wert the noblest of thy strain,
Young man, thou couldst not die more honourable.

Cas. A peevish schoolboy, worthless of such honours.
Join'd with a masker and a reveller! [our, Ant. Old Cassius still!]

Cas. Why, now, blow wind, swell billow and swim bark!
The storm is up, and all is on the hazard.

Brus. Ho, Lucilius! hark, a word with you. Lucilius.

Cas. Messala!

Cas. This is my birth-day; as this very day
Was Cassius born. Give me thy hand, Messala:
Be thou my witness that against my will,
As Pompey was, am I compell'd to set
Upon one battle all our liberties.

You know that I held Epaminondas strong
And his opinion: now I change my mind,
And partly credit things that do pressage.
Coming from Sardis, on our former ensign
Two mighty eagles fell, and there they perch'd,
Gorging and feeding from our soldiers' hands;
Who to Philippi here consortus us
This morning are they fled away and gone;
And in their steads do ravens, crows and kites,
Fly o'er our heads and downward look on us,
As we were sickly prey: their shadows seem
A canopy most fatal, under which
Our army lies, ready to give up the ghost.

Mrs. Believe not so.

Cas. I but believe it partly;
For I am fresh of spirit and resolved
To meet all perils very constantly.

Brus. Even so, Lucilius.

Cas. Now, most noble Brutus,
The gods to-day stand friendly, that we may,
Lovers in peace, lead on our days to age!
But since the affairs of men rest still incertain,
Let's reason with the worst that may betake
If we do lose this battle, then is this
The very last time we shall speak together:
What are you then determined to do?

Brus. Even by the rule of that philosophy
By which I did blame Cato for the death
When conspired a world, and turn'd it not now,
But I do find it cowardly and vile,
For fear of what might fall, so to prevent
The time of life: arming myself with patience
To stay the providence of some high powers
That govern us below.

Cas. Then, if we lose this battle,
You are contented to be led in triumph
Thorough the streets of Rome?

Brus. No, Cassius, no; think not, thou noble Ro-
That ever Brutus will go bonnet o' Rome;
He bears too great a mind. But this same day
Must end that work the ides of March begun;
And whether we shall meet again I know not.
Therefore our everlasting farewell take;
For ever, and for ever, farewell, Cassius!
If we do meet again, why, we shall smile;
If not, then, this parting was well made.

Cas. For ever, and for ever, farewell, Brutus!
If we do meet again, we 'll smile indeed;
If not, 't is true this parting was well made.

Brus. Why, then, lead on. O, that a man might
The end of this day's business ere it come! [know
But it suffice that the day will end,
And then the end is known. Come, ho! away!

[Exeunt.

SCENE II. — The same. The field of battle.

Alarums. Enter Brutus and Messala.

Brus. Ride, ride, Messala, ride, and give these bills
Unto the legions on the other side. [Loud alarum.
Let them set on at once; for I perceive
But cold demeanour in Octavius' wing,
And sudden push gives them the overthrow.
Ride, ride, Messala: let them all come down.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III. — Another part of the field.

Alarums. Enter Cassius and Titinius.

Cas. O, look, Titinius, look, the villains fly!
Myself have to mine own turn'd enemy;
This ensign here of mine was turning back;
I slew the coward, and did take it from him.

Tit. O Cassius, Brutus gave the word too early;
Who, having some advantage on Octavius,
Took it too eagerly: his soldiers fell to spoil,
Whilst we by Antony are all enclosed.

Enter Pindarus.

Pin. Fly further off, my lord, fly further off;
Mark Antony is in your tents, my lord;
Fly, therefore, noble Cassius, for all on.

Cas. This hill is far enough. Look, look, Titinius;
Are those my tents where I perceive the fire?

Tit. They are, my lord.

Cas. Titinius, if thou lovest me,
Mount thou my horse, and hide thy spurs in him,
'Till he have brought thee up to yonder troops,
And here again: that I may rest assured
Whether yond troops are friend or enemy.

Tit. I will be here again, even with a thought.

Cas. Go, Pindarus, get higher on that hill;
My sight was ever thick: regard Titinius,
And tell me what thou notest about the field.

This day I breathed first: time is come round,
And where I did begin, there shall I end;
My life is run his compass. Sirrah, what news?

Cas. What news?

Pin. [Above] Titinius is enclosed round about
With horsemen, that make to him on the spur;
Yet bet spurs on. Now they are almost on him.
Now, Titinius! Now some light, O, he lights too.

Cas. Come down, behold no more.

O, coward that I am, to live so long,
To see my best friend ta'en before my face!

644
Pindarus descends.

Come hither, sirrah; in Parthia did I take thee prisoner; and then I swore thee, saving of thy life, That whatsoever I did bid thee do,
That shouldst attempt it. Come now, keep thine faith. Now be a freeman: and with this good sword, That thou dost through our Caesar's bowels this bosom, Stand not to answer: here, take thou the hilt! And, when my face is cover'd, as 'tis now, Guide thou the sword. [Pindarus stabat him.] Caesar, thou art revenged, Even with the sword that kill'd thee. [Dies.]

Tit. These tidings will well comfort Cassius.

Mes. Where did you leave him?

Tit. All consolate, with Pindarus his bondman, on this hill. Is not that he that lies upon the ground? Tit. He lies not like the living. O my heart! Mes. Is not that he?

Tit. No, this was he, Messala, but Cassius is no more. O setting sun, As in thy red rays thou dost sink to-night, So in his red blood Cassius' day is set. The sun of Rome is set! Our day is gone; Clouds, dews, and glangers come; our deeds are done! Mistrust of my success hath done this deed, Mistrust of good success hath done this deed. Of grateful error, melancholy's child, Why dost thou show to the unthoughts of men The things that are not? O error, soon conceived, Thou never comest unto a happy birth, But kill'st the mother that engender'd thee! Tit. What, Pindarus? where art thou, Pindarus? Mes. Seek him, Titinius, whilst I go to meet The noble Brutus, thrusting this report Into his ears; I may say, thrusting it: For piercing steel and darts envenomed Shall be as welcome to the ears of Brutus As tidings of this sight.

Tit. Hie you, Messala, and I will seek for Pindarus the while. [Exit Messala.]

Why didst thou send me forth, brave Cassius? Did I not meet thy friends? and did not they Put on my brows this wreath of victory, [shorts] And bid me give it thee? Didst thou not hear their Alas, thou hast misconstrued everything! But, hold thee, take this garland on thy brow; Thy Brutus bid me give it thee, and I Will do his bidding. Brutus, come, come, And see how I regarded Caius Cassius. By your leave, gods:—this is a Roman's part: Come, Cassius' sword, and find Titinius' heart. [Kills himself.

Alarum. Re-enter Messala, with Brutus, young Cato, Strato, Volumnius, and Lucilius.

Brutus. Are yet two Romans living such as these? The last of all the Romans, fare thee well! It is impossible that ever in our times Should brend thy fellow. Friends, I owe more tears To this dead man than you shall see me pay. I shall find time, Cassius. I shall find time. Come, therefore, and to Thasos send his body: His funerals shall not be in our camp, But, as it discomfits us, Lucilius, come, And come, young Cato; let us to the field. Labeo and Flavius, set our battles on: 'Tis three o'clock; and, Romans, yet crevich We shall try fortune in a second fight. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV. — Another part of the field.

Alarum. Enter fighting, Soldiers of both armies; then Brutus, young Cato, Lucilius, and others.

Brut. Yet, countrymen, O, yet hold up your heads! Cato, What bastard dast not? Who will go with me?

I will proclaim my name about the field: I am the son of Marcus Cato, ho! A foe to tyrants, and my country's friend; I am the son of Marcus Cato, ho! Brut. And I am Brutus, Marcus Brutus, I; Brutus, my country's friend; know me for Brutus! [Exit.

Lucil. O young and noble Cato, art thou down? Why, now thou diest as bravely as Titinius; And mayst be honour'd, being Cato's son.

First Sold. Yield, or thou diest.

Lucil. Only I yield to die; There is so much that thou wilt kill me straight; [Offering money, Kill Brutus, and be honour'd in his death.

First Sold. We must not. A noble prisoner! Sec. Sold. Room, ho! Tell Antony, Brutus is ta'en. [general.

First Sold. I'll tell the news. Here comes the Enter Antony.

Brutus is ta'en, Brutus is ta'en, my lord. Ant. Where is he?

Lucil. Safe, Antony; Brutus is safe enough: I dare assure thee without no enemy Shall ever take alive the noble Brutus: The gods defend him from so great a shame! When you do find him, or alive or dead, He will be found like Brutus, like himself. Ant. This is not Brutus, friend; but, I assure you, A prize no less in worth: keep this man safe; Give him all kindness I had rather have Such men my friends than enemies. Go on, And see whether Brutus be alive or dead; And bring us word unto Octavius' tent How everything is changed. [Exeunt.

SCENE V. — Another part of the field.

Enter Brutus, Dardanius, Clitus, Strato, and Volumnius.

Brut. Come, poor remains of friends, rest on this rock. Clit. Statilius show 'd the toil-light, but, my lord, He came not back: he is or ta'en or slain. Brut. Sit thee down, Clitus; slaying the word; It is a deed in fashion. Hark thee, Clitus. [Whispers.

ACT V. JULIUS CÆSAR. SCENE V.

Enter. To kill him, Clitus. Look, he meditates.

Clitus. Now is that noble vessel full of grief;
That it runs over even at his eyes.

Brutus. Come hither, good Volumnius; list a word.

Vol. What says my lord?

Brutus. Why, this, Volumnius: The ghost of Cæsar hath appear'd to me
Two several times by night; at Sardis once,
And, this last night, here in Philippi fields:
I know my hour is come.

Vol. Not so, my lord.

Brutus. Nay, I am sure it is, Volumnius.
Thou seest the world, Volumnius, how it goes;
Our enemies have beat us to the pit:

[Low alarums.
It is more worthy to leap in ourselves,
Than tarry till they push us. Good Volumnius,
Thou know'st that we two went to school together:
Even for that our love of old, I prithee,
Hold thou my sword-hilts, whilst I run on it.

Vol. That's not an office for a friend, my lord.

[Alarum still.

Clitus. Fly, fly, my lord; there is no tarrying here.

Brutus. Farewell to you; and you; and you, Volumnius.

Strato. Thou hast been all this while asleep;
Farewell to thee too, Strato. Countrymen,
My heart doth joy that yet in all my life
I found no man but he was true to me.
I shall have glory by this losing day
More than Octavius and Mark Antony.
By this vile conquest shall attain unto
So fare you well at once: for Brutus's tongue
Hath almost ended his life's history:
Night hangs upon mine eyes: my bones would rest,
That have but labour'd to attain this hour.

[Alarum. Cry within, 'Fly, fly, fly!'

Clitus. Fly, my lord, fly.

Brutus. Hence! I will follow.

[Exeunt Clitus, Dardanius, and Volumnius.

I prithee, Strato, stay thou by thy lord:
Thou art a fellow of a good respect;

Thy life hath had some snatch of honour in it:
Hold then my sword, and turn away thy face,
While I do run upon it. Will thou, Strato?

Strato. Give me your hand first. Fare you well, my lord.

Brutus. Farewell, good Strato. [Runs on his sword.]

Cæsar, now be still:
I kill'd not thee with half so good a will. [Dies.

Alarum. Retreat. Enter Octavius, Antony,
Messala, Lucilius, and the Army.

Octavius. What man is that? [master?]

Messala. My master's man. Strato, where is thy

Strato. Free from the bondage you are in, Messala:
The conquerors can but make a fire of him;
For Brutus only overcame himself,
And no man else hath honour by his death.

Lucilius. So Brutus should be found. I thank thee,

Brutus, That thou hast proved Lucilius' saying true.

Octavius. All that served Brutus, I will entertain them.

Fellow, wilt thou bestow thy time with me?

Strato. Ay, if Messala will prefer me to you.

Octavius. Do so, good Messala.

Messala. How did my master, Strato?

Strato. I held the sword, and he did run on it.

Octavius. Then take him to follow thee,
That did the latest service to my master.

Antony. This was the noblest Roman of them all:
All the conspirators save only he
Did that they did in envy of great Cæsar;
He only, in a general honest thought
And common good to all, made one of them.
His life was gentle, and the elements
So mix'd in him that Nature might stand up
And say to all the world 'This was a man!'

Octavius. According to his virtue let us use him,
With all respect and rites of burial.
Within my tent his bones to-night shall lie,
Most like a soldier, order'd honourably.
So call the field to rest; and let's away,
To part the glories of this happy day. [Exeunt.

SCENE I.—A desert place.

Thunder and lightning. Enter three Witches.

First Witch. When shall we three meet again
In thunder, lightning, or in rain?
Sec. Witch. When the hurlyburly's done,
When the battle's lost and won.
Third Witch. That will be ere the set of sun.
First Witch. Where is the place?
Sec. Witch. Upon the heath.
Third Witch. There to meet with Macbeth.
First Witch. I come, Graymalkin!
Sec. Witch. Fachlock calls.
Third Witch. Anon.
All. Fair is foul, and foul is fair:
Hover through the fog and fiery air.  [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A camp near Forres.

Alarum within. Enter Duncan, Malcolm, Donalbain, Lennox, with Attendants, meeting a bleeding Sergeant.

Dun. What bloody man is that? He can report,
As seemeth by his plight, of the revolt
The newest state.

Mal. This is the sergeant
Who like a good and hardy soldier fought
'Gainst my captivity. Hail, brave friend!
Say to the king the knowledge of the broil
As thou dost leave it.

Sec. Doubtful it stood:
As two spent swimmers, that do cling together
And choke their art. The merciless Macdonwald—
Worthy to be a rebel, for to that
The multiplying villanies of nature
Do swarm upon him—from the western isles
Of kerns and gallowglasses is supplied:
And fortune, on his damned quarrel smiling,
Show'd like a rebel's whore: but all's too weak:
For brave Macbeth—well he deserves that name—
Disdaining fortune, with his brandish'd steel,

Which smoked with bloody execution,
Like valour's minion carved out his passage
Till he faced the slave;
Which ne'er shook hands, nor bade farewell to him,
Till he unseam'd him from the nave to the chaps,
And fix'd his head upon his battlements!

Sec. As whence the sun 'gins his reflection
Shipwrecking storms and direful breakers break,
So from that spring whence comfort seem'd to come
Discomfort swells. Mark, king of Scotland, mark:
No sooner justice had with valour arm'd
Commeil'd these skipping kerns to trust their heels,
But the Norwegian lord surveying vantage,
With furnish'd arms and new supplies of men
Began a fresh assault.

Dun. Dismay'd not this
Our captains, Macbeth and Banquo?
Sec. Yes;
As sparrows eagles, or the hare the lion.
If I say sooth, I must report they were
As cannons overcharged with double cracks, so they Doubly redoubled strokes upon the foe:
Except they meant to bathe in reeking wounds,
Or memorize another Golgotha,
I cannot tell.
But I am faint, my gashes cry for help. [wounds:
Dun. So well thy words become thee as thy
They smack of honour both. Go get him surgeons.

[Exit Sergeant, attended.]

Who comes here? Enter Ross.

Mal. The worthy thane of Ross.
Len. What a haste looks through his eyes! So should he look
That seems to speak things strange.
Ross. God save the king!
Dun. Whence camest thou, worthy thane?
Ross. From Fife, great king;
Where the Norwegian banners flout the sky
And fan our people cold. Norway himself,
With terrible numbers,
Assisted by that most disloyal traitor
The thane of Cawdor, began a dismal conflict;
Till that Belona's bridegroom, lapp'd in proof,
Confronted him with self-comparisons,
Point against point rebellious, arm against arm,
Curbing his lavish spirit: and, to conclude,
The victory fell on us.

Dun. Great happiness!

ROSS. That now
Sweno, the Norways' king, craves composition;—
Nor would we deign him burial of his men
Till he disburse at Saint Colme's inch
Ten thousand dollars to our general use.

Dun. So more than that Cawdor shall desire
Our bosom interest: go pronounce his present death,
And with his former title greet Macbeth.

ROSS. I'll see it done.

Dun. What he hath lost noble Macbeth hath won.

SCENE III.—A heath near Forres.

Thunder. Enter the three Witches.

FIRST WITCH. Where hast thou been, sister?

FIRST WITCH. Sister, where thou?

SECOND WITCH. A sailor's wife had breastnuts in her
And munch'd, and munch'd, and munch'd:—'Give me,' quoth I:

'Argh! thee, witch!' the rump-fed ronyon cries,
Her husband's as to Aleppo gone, master o' the Tiger:
But in a sieve I'll thatther sail,
And, like a rat without a tail,
I'll do, I'll do, and I'll do.

SECOND WITCH. I'll give thee a wind.

FIRST WITCH. Thou 'rt kind.

SECOND WITCH. And I another,

FIRST WITCH. I myself have all the other,
And the very parts they blow,
All the quarters that they know
I'll shipman's card,
I will drain him dry as hay:
Sleep shall neither night nor day
Hang upon his pent-house lid;
He shall live a man abroad;
Weary se'nnights nine times nine
Shall he dwell, peak and pine:
Though his bark cannot be lost,
Yet it shall be temper-tost.

Look what I have.

SECOND WITCH. I'll give thee a drum.

FIRST WITCH. Here I have a pilot's thumb,
Wreck'd as homeward he did come. [Dixon within.

SECOND WITCH. A drum, a drum!

Macbeth doth come.

All. The weird sisters, hand in hand,
Posters of the sea and land,
Thus do go, about:
Thrice to thine and thrice to mine
And thrice again, to make up nine.
Peace! the charm's wound up.

Enter Macbeth and Banquo.

MACBETH. So foul and fair a day I have not seen.

BAN. How far is 'call to Forres? What are
So wither'd and so wild in their attire, [these
That look not like the habitants o' the earth,
And yet are not in 't? Live you or are you aught?
That bear aAth to those who seem to understand
By each at once her chappy finger laying [me,
Upon her skinny lips: you should be women,
And yet your beards forbid me to interpret
That you are so.

MACBETH. Speak, if you can: what are you?

FIRST WITCH. All hail, Macbeth! hail to thee, thane
Of Glamis!

SECOND WITCH. All hail, Macbeth! hail to thee, thane
Of Cawdor!

THIRD WITCH. All hail, Macbeth, thou shalt be king hereafter!

Ban. Good sir, why do you start; and seem to fear
Things that do sound so fair? I' the name of truth,
Are ye fantastical, or that indeed
Which outwardly ye show? your noble partner
You greet with present grace and great prediction
Of noble having and of royal hope,
That he seems rapt withal: to me you speak not.
If you can look into the seeds of time,
And say which grain will grow and which will not,
Speak then to me, who neither beg nor fear
Your favours nor your hate.

FIRST WITCH. Hail!

SECOND WITCH. Hail!

THIRD WITCH. Hail!

FIRST WITCH. Lesser than Macbeth, and greater.

SECOND WITCH. Not so happy, yet much happier.

THIRD WITCH. Thou shalt get kings, though then
So all hail, Macbeth and Banquo! [be none:

FIRST WITCH. Banquo and Macbeth, all hail!

Macb. Stay, you imperfect speakers, tell me more:
By Sinel's death I know I am thane of Glamis;
But how of Cawdor? the thane of Cawdor lives,
A prosperous gentleman; and to be king,
Stands not within the prospect of belief,
No more than to be Cawdor. Say from whence
You owe this strange intelligence? or why
Upon this blasted heath you stop our way
With such prophetic greeting? Speak. I charge you.

Ban. The earth hath bubbles, as the water has,
And these are of them. Whither are they vanish'd?

Macb. Into the air; and what seems corporal
Melted as breath into the wind. Would they had stay'd!

Ban. For such things as these do we speak about?
Or have we eaten on the insane root
That takes the reason prisoner?

Macb. Your children shall be kings.

Ban. You shall be king,

Macb. And thane of Cawdor too: went it not so?

Ban. To the selfsame words and names. Who's Enter Ross and Angus.

Ross. The king hath happily received Macbeth,
The news of thy success; and when he reads
Thy personal venture in the rebels' fight,
His wonder is with his praise doth follow:
Which should be thine or his: silenced with that,
In viewing o'er the rest o' the selfsame day,
He finds thee in the stout Norweyan ranks,
Nothing afeard of what thyself didst make,
Strange images of death. As thick as hail
 Came post with post; and every one did bear
Thy praises in his kingdom's great defence,
And pour'd them down before him.

Ang. We are sent
To give thee from our royal master thanks,
Only to herald thee into his sight,
Not pay thee.

Ross. And, for an earnest of a greater honour,
He bade me, from him, call thee thane of Cawdor:
In which addition, hail, most worthy thane!
For it is thine.

Ang. What, can the devil speak true?

Macb. The thane of Cawdor lives: why do you
In borrow'd robes? [dress me
Ang. Who was the thane lives yet;
But under heavy judgment bears that life
Which he deserveth to lose. Whether he was combined
With those o' Norway, or did like the rebel
With hidden help and vantage, or that with both
He labour'd in his country's wreck, I know not;
Act I. Macbeth. Scene V.

But treasons capital, confess’d and proved,
Have overthrown him.

Macb. [Aside] Glamis, and thane of Cawdor!
The greatest is behind. [To Ross and Angus]
Thanks for your pains. [Kings, To Ban.] Do you not hope your children shall be
When those that gave the thane of Cawdor to me
Promised no less to them?

Macb. That trusted home
Might yet enkindle you unto the crown,
Besides the thane of Cawdor. But ‘tis strange:
And oftentimes, to win us to our harm,
The instruments of darkness tell us truths,
Win us with honest trials, to betray’s
In deepest consequence.

Cousins, a word, I pray you.

Macb. [Aside] Two truths are told,
As happy prologues to the swelling act
Of the imperial theme. — I thank you, gentlemen.
[Aside] This supernatural soliciting
Cannot be ill, cannot be good; if ill,
Why hath it given me earnest of success,
Commencing in a truth? I am thane of Cawdor:
If good, why do I yield to that suggestion
Whose horrid image doth unpaint my hair
And make my seated heart knock at my ribs,
Against the use of nature? Present fears
Are less than horrible imaginings.
My thought, whose murder yet is but fantastical,
Shakes so my single state of man that function
Is smother’d in surmise, and nothing is
But what is not.

Ban. Look, how our partner’s rapt.

Macb. [Aside] It chance will have me king,
why, chance may crown me,
Without my stir.

Ban. New honours come upon him,
Like our strange garments, cleave not to their mould
But with the aid of use.

Macb. Come what may,
Time and the hour runs through the roughest day.

Ban. Worthy Macbeth, we stay upon your leisure.

Macb. Give me your favour: my dull brain was wronged
With things forgotten. Kind gentlemen, your pains
And kindnesses, I conjure you, accept;
The leaf to read them. Let us toward the king.
Think upon what hath chanced, and, at more time,
The laterin having weigh’d it, let us speak
Our free hearts each to other.

Ban. Very gladly.

Macb. Think then, enough. Come, friends. [Exeunt.

Scene IV. — Forres. The palace.

Flourish. Enter Duncan, Malcolm, Donalbain, Lennox, and Attendants.

Ban. Is execution done on Cawdor? Are not
Those in commission yet return’d?

Macb. My liege,
They are not yet come back. But I have spoke
With one that saw him die: who did report
That very frankly he confess’d his treasons,
Implored your highness’ pardon and set forth
A deep repentance: nothing in his life
Became him like the leaving it: he died
As one that had been studied in his death
To throw away the dearest thing he owed,
As ’twere a careless trifle.

There’s no art
To find the mind’s construction in the face:
He was a gentleman on whom I built
An absolute trust.

Enter Macbeth, Banquo, Ross, and Angus.

O worthiest cousin!
The sin of my ingratitude even now
Was heavy on me: thou art so far before
That swiftest wing of reconquest is slow
To overtake thee. Would in deathless deserved,
That the proportion both of thanks and payment
Might have been mine! only I have left to say,
More is thy due than more than all can pay.

Macb. The service and the loyalty I owe,
In doing it, pays itself. Your highness’ part
Is to receive our duties; and our duties
Are to your throne and state children and servants,
Which do but what they should, by doing every thing
Safe toward your love and honour.

Ban. Welcome hither:
I have begun to plant thee; and will labour
To make thee full of growing. Noble Banquo,
That host no less deserved, nor must be known
No less to have done so, let me infold thee
And hold thee to my heart.

Ban. There I grow,
The harvest is your own.

Macb. My worthy Cawdor!

Ban. The rest is labour, which is not used for you:
I’ll be myself the harbinger and make joyful
The bearing of my wife with your approach;
So humbly take my leave.

Macb. [Aside] The Prince of Cumberland! what is a step
On which I must fall down, or else o’erleap,
For in my way it lies. Stars, hide your fires;
Let not light see my black and deep desires:
The eye wink at the hand; yet let that be,
Which the eye fears, when it is done, to see. [Exit.

Ban. True, worthy Banquo; he is full so valiant,
And in his commendations I am fed;
It is a banquet to me. Let’s after him.
Whose care is gone before to bid us welcome:
It is a peerless kinsman.

[Flourish. Exeunt.

Scene V. — Inverness. Macbeth’s castle.

Enter Lady Macbeth, reading a letter.

Lady M. ‘They met me in the day of success; and
I have learned by the perfectest report, they have more in them than mortal knowledge.
When I learned in desire to question them further, they made themselves air, into which they vanished.
While I stood rapt in the wonder of it, came missives from the king, who all-hailed me “Thane of Cawdor;” by which title, before, these weird sisters saluted me, and referred me to the coming on of time, with “Hail, king that shalt be!” This have I thought good to deliver thee, my dearest partner of greatness, that thou mightst not lose the dues of redcing,
by being ignorant of what greatness is promised thee.
Lay it to thy heart, and farewell;’
Glamis thou art, and Cawdor; and shalt be
What thou art promised: yet do I fear thy nature;
It is too full o’ the milk of human kindness
To catch the nearest way: thou wouldst be great;
Art not without ambition, but without [highly]
The illness should attend it: what thou wouldst
That wouldst thou holily; wouldst not play false,
And yet wouldst wrongingly win: thou’ld have,
great Glamis.
That which cries ‘Thus thou must do, if thou have
And that which rather thou dost fear to do [it;
 Than wishest should be undone.' He thee hither, That I may pour my spirits in thine ear; And chastise with the valour of my tongue All that impede thee from the golden round, Which fate and metaphysical aid doth seem To have thee crown'd with.

Enter a Messenger.

What is your tidings?

Lady M. Then 'tis mad to say it: Is not thy master with him? who, were't so, Would have inform'd for preparation. [coming: Mess. So please you, it is true: our flame Is one of my fellows had the speculum in him, Who, almost dead for breath, had scarcely more Than would make up his message.

Lady M. Give him tending; He brings great news. [Exit Messenger.

That creaks the fatal encountering of Duncan Under my battlements. Come, ye spirits That tend on mortal thoughts, unsex me here, And fill me from the crown to the toe top-full Of direst cruelty! make thick my blood; Stop up the access and passage to remorse.

That no compunctions visitings of nature Shall strike my fell purpose, nor keep pace between The effect and it! Come to my woman's breasts, And take my milk for gall, you murdering ministers, Wherever in your sightless substances You wait on nature's mischief! Come, thick night, And pall thee in the dunnest smoke of hell. That my keen knife see not the wound it makes, Nor heaven peep through the blanket of the dark, To cry ' Hold, hold!'

Enter Macbeth.

Great Glamis! worthy Cawdor! Greater than both, by the all-hail hereafter! Thy letters have transported me beyond This ignorant present, and I feel now The future in the instant.

Macb. My dearest love, Duncan comes here to-night; Lady M. And when goes hence? Macb. To-morrow, as he purposes.

Lady M. O, never Shall sun that morrow see! Your face, my thane, is as a book where men May read strange matters. To beguile the time, Look like the time; bear welcome in your eye, Your hand, your tongue: look like the innocent flower, But be the serpent under 't. He that 's coming Must be provided for: and you shall put This night's great business into my dispatch; Which shall to all our nights and days to come Give solely sovereign sway and masterdom.

Macb. We will speak further.

Lady M. Only look up clear; To alter favour ever is to fear: Leave all the rest to me. [Exit.

SCENE VI.—Before Macbeth's castle.

Hautboys and torches. Enter Duncan, Malcolm, Donalbain, Banquo, Lennox, Macduff, Ross, Angus, and Attendants.

Dun. This castle hath a pleasant seat; the air Nimbly and sweetly recommends itself Unto our gentle senses.

Dum. This guest of summer, The temple-haunting martlet, does approve, By his low-travelling, that the heaven's breath Smells wooingly here: no jot, fryce, Buttress, nor coign of vantage, but this bird

Hath made his pendent bed and procreant cradle: Where they most breed and haunt, I have observed, The air is delicate.

Enter Lady Macbeth.

Dun. See, see, our honour'd hostess! The love that follows us sometime is our trouble. Which still we thank as love. Herein I teach you How you shall bid God 'bless us' for your pains, And thank us for your trouble.

Lady M. All our service In every point twice done and then done double Were poor and single business to contend Against those honours deep and broad wherewith You may now load our house: for those of old, And the late dignities heap'd up to them, We rest your heritits.

Dun. Where 's the thane of Cawdor? Weoursed him at the heels, and had a purpose To be his purveyor: but he rides well; And his great love, sharp as his spur, hath holf him To his home before us. Fair and noble hostess, We are your guest to-night.

Lady M. Your servants ever Have theirs, themselves and what is theirs, in comp't, To make their amit at your highness' pleasure, Still to return your own.

Dun. Give me your hand; Conduct me to mine hoste: we love him highly, And shall continue our graces towards him. By your leave, hostess. [Exit.

SCENE VII.—Macbeth's castle.

Hautboys and torches. Enter a sewer, and divers servants with dishes and service, and pass over the stage. Then enter Macbeth.

Macb. If it were done when 'tis done, then 'twere It were done quickly: if the assassination Well could trammel up the consequence, and catch With his surcease success; that but this blow Might be the be-all and the end-all here, But here, upon this knak and shooal of time, We 'd jump the life to come. But in these cases We still have judgment here; that we but teach Bloody instructions, and9d, blood to the sword, To plague the inventor: this even-handed justice Commends the ingredients of our poison'd chalice To our own lips. He 's here in double trust; First, as I am his kinsman and his subject, Strong both against the deed: then, as his host, Who should against his will be murder'd, at the door; Not bear the knife myself. Besides, this Duncan Hath borne his faculties so meek, hath been So clear in his great office, that his virtues Will plead like angels, trumpet-tongued, against The deep damnation of his taking-off; And pity, like a naked new-born babe, Striding the blast, or heaven's cherubin, horsed Upon the sightless couriers of the air, Shall blow the horrid deed in every eye, That tears shall drown the wind. I have no spur To prick the sides of my intent, but only Vaulting ambition, which o'ercasts itself And falls on the other.

Enter Lady Macbeth.

How now! what news?

Lady M. He has almost sup'd: why have you left the chamber?

Macb. Hath he ask'd for me?

Lady M. Know you not he has?

Macb. We will proceed no further in this business: He hath honour'd me of late; and I have bought Golden opinions from all sorts of people, Which would be worn now in their newest gloss, Not cast aside so soon.

ACT II.

MACBETH.

SCENE I.—Court of Macbeth’s castle.

Enter Banquo, and Fleance bearing a torch before him.

Ban. How goes the night, boy? Fle. The moon is down; I have not heard the clock.

Ban. And she goes down at twelve, Fle. I take ’t, ’tis later, sir.

Ban. Hold, take my sword. There’s husbandry in heaven;
Their candles are all out. Take thee that too.
A hearty summons lies like lead upon me,
And yet I would not sleep: merciful powers,
Restrain in me the cursed thoughts that nature
Gives way to in repose!

Enter Macbeth, and a Servant with a torch.

Give me my sword.

Who’s there?

Macb. A friend.

Ban. What, sir, not yet at rest? The king’s a-bed:
He hath been in unusual pleasure, and Sent forth great largess to your offices.
This diamond he gives your wife withal,
By the name of most kind hostess; and shut up
In measureless content.

Macb. Being unprepared, Our will became the servant to defect; Which else should free have wroght.

Ban. All’s well. I dreamt last night of the three weird sisters: To you they have show’d some truth.

Macb. I think not of them: Yet, when we can entertain an hour to serve, We would spend it in some words upon that business, If you would grant the time.

Ban. At your kind’st leisure.

Macb. If you shall cleave to my consent, when’t is, It shall make honour for you.

Ban. So I lose none in seeking to augment it, but still keep

My bosom franchised and allegiance clear, I shall be counsel’d.

Macb. Good repose the while!

Ban. Thanks, sir: the like to you!

[Exit Banquo and Fleance.

Macb. Go bid thy mistress, when my drink is ready, She strike upon the bell. Get thee to bed.

Is this a dagger which I see before me. The handle toward my hand? Come, let me clutch thee.

I have thee not, and yet I see thee still. Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible To feeling as to sight? or art thou but A dagger of the mind, a false creation, Proceeding from the heat-oppressed brain? I see thee yet, in form of palpable As this which now I draw. Thou marshall’st me the way that I was going: And such an instrument I was to use. Mine eyes are made the fools of the other senses, Or else worth all the rest; I see thee still. And on thy blade and dudgeon gouts of blood, Which was not so before. There’s no such thing: It is the bloody business which informs Thus to mine eyes. Now is ’t the one half-world Nature seems dead, and wicked dreams abuse The curtain’d sleep; witchcraft celebrates Pale Hecate’s offerings, and wither’d murder, Alarum’d by his sentinel, the wolf.

Whose howl’d his watch, thus with his stealthy pace, With Tarquin’s ravishing strides, towards his design Moves like a ghost. Thou sure and firm-set earth, Hear not my steps, which way they walk, for fear Thy very stones prophane of my whereabouts. And take the present harvest from the time, Which now suits with it. Whiles I threat, he lives: Words to the heat of deeds too cold blood gives.

[“bell rings.”

I go, and it is done; the bell invites me. Hear it not, Duncan; for it is a knell That summons thee to heaven or to hell.

651

Lady M. We fail! But screw your courage to the sticking-place, And we’ll not fall. When Duncan is asleep— Wherefore the rather shall his day’s hard journey Soundly invite him—his two chamberlains Will I with wine and wassail so converse That memory, the warden of the brain, Shall be a fume, and the receipt of reason A limbeck only: when in swinish sleep Their drenched natures lie as in a death, What cannot you and I perform upon Theunguarded Duncan? what not put upon His spongy officers, who shall bear the guilt Of our great quell?

Macb. Bring forth men-children only; For thy unainted mettle should compose Nothing but makes. Will it not be received, When we have mark’d with blood these sleepy two Of his own chamber and used their very daggers, That they have done it?

Lady M. Who dares receive it other, As we shall make our griefs and chamour roar Upon his death?

Macb. I am settled, and bend up Each corporal agent to this terrible feat. Away, and mock the time with fairest show; False face must hide what the false heart doth know.

[Exeunt.

Lady M. Was the hope drunk Wherein you dress’d yourself? hath it slept since? And wakes it now, to look so green and pale At what it did so freely? From this time Such it account thy love. Art thou afraid To be the same in thine own act and valour As thou art in desire? Wouldst thou have that Which thou esteem’st the ornament of life, And live a coward in thine own esteem, Letting ‘I dare not’ wait upon ‘I would,’ Like the poor cat I the adage?

Macb. Prityye, peace: I dare do all that may become a man; Who dares do more is none.

Lady M. What beast was ’t, then, That made you break this enterprise to me? When you durst do it, then you were a man: And, to be more than you were, you would Be so much more the man. Nor time nor place Did then adhere, and yet you would make both: They have made themselves, and that their fitness now Does make you. You have given suck, and know How tender ’tis to love the babe that milks me: I would, while it was smiling in my face, Have pluck’d my nipple from his boneless gums, And dash’d the brains out, had I so sworn as you Have done to this.

Macb. If we should fail?
SCENE II.—The same.

Enter Lady Macbeth.

Lady M. That which hath made them drunk hath made me bold;
What hath quench'd them hath given me fire.
Hark! 'Peace!
It was the owl that shriek'd, the fatal bellman,
Which gives the stern'st good-night. He is about
The doors are open; and the surfeit'd groans [*it: Do mock their charge with sunrise: I have drug'd their possets.
That death and nature do contend about them,
Whether they live or die.
Lady M. Alack, I am afraid they have awaked.
And 'tis not done. The attempt and not the deed
Confounds us. Hark! I laid their daggers ready;
He could not miss 'em. Had he not resembled
My father as he slept, I had done 't.

Enter Macbeth.

Lady M. I have done the deed. Didst thou not hear a noise? [cries]
Macb. [Within] Who is there? who's there? who's there?
Lady M. A foolish thought, to say a sorry sight.
Macb. There's one did laugh in's sleep, and one cried 'Murder!' [Within: that they did wake each other: I stood and heard
But they did say their prayers, and address'd them
Again to sleep.
Lady M. There are two lodged together.
Macb. One cried 'God bless us!' and 'Amen'
the other;
As they had seen me with these hangman's hands.
Listening their fear, I could not say 'Amen,'
When they did say 'God bless us!'
Macb. Consider it not so deeply.
Macb. But wherefore could not I pronounce
I had most need of blessing, and 'Amen' ['Amen']
Stuck in my throat.
Lady M. These deeds must not be thought
After so many ways; so, it will make us mad.
Macb. Methought I heard a voice cry 'Sleep no more!
Macbeth does murder sleep,' the innocent sleep,
Sleep that knits up the ravelled sleeve of care,
The death of each day's life, sore labour's bath,
Balm of hurt minds, great nature's second course,
Chief nourisher in life's feast.—
Lady M. What do you mean?
Macb. Still it cried 'Sleep no more!' to all the house:
'Glamis hath murder'd sleep, and therefore Cawdor
Shall sleep no more;' 'Macbeth shall sleep no more.'
Lady M. Who was it that thus cried? Why, why, worthy thane,
You do unbid your noble strength, to think
So brazenly of things. Go get some water,
And wash this filthy witness from your hand.
Why dost thou mock these daggers from the place?
They must lie there: go carry them; and smear
The sleepy grooms with blood.
Macb. I 'll go no more:
I am afraid to think what I have done;
Look on't again I dare not.
Lady M. Infirm of purpose!

Give me the daggers: the sleeping and the dead
Are but as pictures: 'tis the eye of childhood
That fears a painted devil. If he do bleed,
I 'll gild the faces of the grooms withal;
For it must seem their guilt.

[Exit. Knocking within.

Whence is that knocking? How is 't with me, when every noise appals me?
What hands are here? ha! they pluck out mine eyes.
Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood
Clean from my hand? No, this my hand will rather
The multitudinous seas incarnadine,
Making the green one red.

Re-enter Lady Macbeth.

Lady M. My hands are of your colour; but I shane
To wear a heart so white. [Knocking within.] I hear a knocking
At the south entrance: retire we to our chamber:
A little water clears us of this deed:
How easy is it, then! Your constancy
Hath left you unattended. [Knocking within.] Hark!
more knocking.
Get on your nightgown, lest occasion call us,
And show us to be watchers. Be not lost
So poorly in your parts.
Macb. To know my deed, 't were best not know myself. [Knocking within.

Wake Duncan with thy knocking! I would thou couldst!
[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same.

Knocking within. Enter a Porter.

Porter. Here's a knocking indeed! If a man were porter of hell-gate, he should have old turning the key. [Knocking within.] Knock, knock, knock!
Who 's there, 'tis the name of Beelzebub! Here's a farmer, that hanged himself on the expectation of plenty: come in time; have nappins know about you; here you'll sweat for it. [Knocking within.] Knock, knock, knock! Who 's there, in the other devil's name? Faith, here's an equivocator, that could swear in both the scales against either scale; who committed treason enough for God's sake, yet could not equivocate to heaven and hell;
[Knocking within.] Knock, knock, knock! Who 's there? Faith, here's an English tailor come hither, for stealing out of a French hose: come in, tailor;
here you may roast your goose. [Knocking within.] Knock, knock, never at quiet! What are you? But this place is too cold for hell. I 'll daintily set it on no further:
I had thought to have let in some of all professions that go the primrose way to the everlasting bonfire. [Knocking within.] Anon, anon!
I pray you, remember the porter. [Opens the gate.

Enter Macduff and Lennox.

Macb. Was it so late, friend, ere you went to bed,
That you do lie so late?
Port. Faith, sir, we were carousing till the second cock; and drink, sir, is a great provoker of three things.
Macb. What three things does drink especially Port. Marry, sir, nose-painting, sleep, and urine.
Lechery, sir, it provokes, and unprovokes; it provokes the desire, but it takes away the performance;
therefore, much drink may be said to be an equivoco-cator with lechery: it makes you drunk, it makes you mad; it sets him on, and it takes him off; it persuades him, and dishonours him; makes him stand to,
and not stand to; in conclusion, equivocates him in a sleep, and, giving him the lie, leaves him.
Macb. I believe drink gave thee the lie last night.
Port. That it did, sir, I the very threat on me:
but I requited him for his lie; and, I think, being 652 too strong for him, though he took up my legs sometime, yet I made a shift to cast him.

Macb. Is thy master stirring?

Enter Macbeth.

Our knocking has awakened him; here he comes.

Len. Good morrow, noble sir.

Macb. Good morrow, both. Len. Is the king stirring, worthy thane?

Macb. Not yet. Len. He did command me to call timely on him: I have almost slipp'd the hour.

Macb. I'll bring you to him. Len. I know this is a joyful trouble to you; But yet 'tis one.

Macb. The labour we delight in physics pain. This is the door.

Macb. I'll make so bold to call, For 'tis my limited service. [Exit. Len. Goes the king hence to-day?

Macb. He does: he did appoint so. Len. The night has been unruly: where we lay, Our chimney's were blown down: and, as they say, Lamentings was heard, if the air; strange screams of And prophesying with accents terrible [death, Of dire combustion and confused events New hatch'd to the woeful time: the obscure bird Glamour'd the livelong night: some say, the earth Was feverous and did shake. Len. Macb. 'Twas a rough night. Len. My young remembrance cannot parallel A fellow to it.

Re-enter Macduff.

Macb. O horror, horror! Tongue nor Cannot conceive nor name thee! [heart

Len. What's the matter?

Macb. Confusion now hath made his master-Most sacrilegious murder hath broke ope [piece! The Lord's anointed temple, and stole thence The life o' the building!

Macb. What is't you say? the life? Len. Mean you his majesty? [sight

Macb. Approach the chamber, and destroy your With a new Gorgon: do not bid me speak; See, and then speak yourselves.

[Exeunt Macbeth and Lennox.

Banquo and Donalbain! Macbeth! awake! Ring the alarum-bell. Murder and treason! Banquo and Donalbain! Macbeth! awake! Shake off this downy sleep, death's counterfeit, And look on death itself! up, up, and see The great dooms image! Macbeth! Banquo! As from your graves rise up, and walk like sprites, To countenance this horror! Ring the bell.

Enter Lady Macbeth.

Lady M. What's the business, That such a hideous trumpet calls to parley The sleepers of the house? speak, speak!

Len. O gentle lady, 'Tis not for you to hear what I can speak: The repetition, in a woman's ear, Would murder as it fell.

Enter Banquo.

O Banquo, Banquo, Our royal master's murder'd! Lady M. Woe, alas! What, in our house?

Ban. Too cruel any where. Dear Duff, I prithee, contradict thyself, And say it is not so.

Re-enter Macbeth and Lennox, with Ross.

Macb. Had I but died an hour before this chance, I had lived a blessed time; for, from this instant, There's nothing serious in mortality; All is but toys: renown and grace is dead; The wine of life is drawn, and the mere lees Is left this vault to brag of.

Enter Malcolm and Donalbain.

Don. What is amiss?

Macb. You are, and do not know 't: The spring, the head, the fountain of your blood Is stopp'd; the very source of it is stopp'd. Macb. Your royal father's murder'd, Mal. Wherefore did you so? Macb. Who can be wise, amazed, tempestuous and fu-
Loyal and neutral, in a moment? No man: [rious, The expedition of my violent heart. Here lay Duncan, His silver skin laced with his golden blood; And his gash'd stabbs look'd like a breach in nature For ruin's wasteful entrance: there, the murderers, Steepp'd in the colours of their trade, their daggers Unmannerly breaoch'd with gore; who could refrain, That had a heart to love, and in that heart Courage to make 's love known?

Lady M. Help me hence, ho! Macb. Look to the lady.

Mal. [Aside to Don.] Why do we hold our tongues, That most may claim this argument for ours?

Don. [Aside to Mal.] What should be spoken here, where our fate, Hid in an auger-hole, may rush, and seize us? Let's away; Our tears are not yet breed'd.

Mal. [Aside to Don.] Nor our strong sorrow Upon the foot of motion, Don. Look to the lady: Lady Macbeth is char'd out.

And when we have our naked fruitless hid, That suffer in exposure, let us meet, And question this most bloody piece of work, To know it further. Fears and scruples shake us: In the great hand of God I stand: and hence Against the undivulged pretence I fight Of treasonous malice.

And so do I. So all.

Macb. All. Macb. Let's briefly put on manly readiness, And meet i' the hall together.

Well contented.

Mal. What will you do? Let's not consort with To show an unfuel sorrows is an office [them: Which the false man choses easy. I'll to England. Don. To Ireland, I: our separated fortune Shall keep us both the safer: where we are, There's daggers in men's smiles: the near in blood, The nearer bloody.

Mal. This murderous shaft that 's shot Hath not yet lighted, and our safest way Is to avoid the aim. Therefore, to horse; And let us not be dainty of leave-taking, But shift away: there's warrant in that theft Which steals itself, when there's no mercy left.

SCENE IV.—Outside Macbeth's castle.

Enter Ross and an old Man.

Old M. Threescore and ten I can remember well: Within the volume of which time I have seen

453
ACT III.

MACBETH.

SCENE I.—Forres. The palace.

Enter Banquo.

Ban. Thou hast it now: King, Cawdor, Glamis, all.
As the weird women promised, and, I fear,
Thou play’st most foully for ’t: yet it was said
It should not stand in thy posterity,
But that myself should be the root and father
Of many kings. If there come truth from them—
As upon thee, Macbeth, their speeches shine—
Why, by the verities on thee made good,
May they not be my oracles as well,
And set me up in hope? But hush! no more.

Sonnet sounded. Enter Macbeth, as king, Lady Macbeth, as queen, Lennox, Ross, Lords, Ladies, and Attendants.

Macb. Here ’s our chief guest.
Lady M. If he had been forgotten,
It had been as a gap in our great feast,
And all-thing unbecoming.
Macb. To-night we hold a solemn supper, sir,
And I ’ll request your presence.

Ban. Let thy highness
Command upon me: to which my duties
Are with a most indissoluble tie
For ever knit.

Macb. Ride you this afternoon?
Ban. Ay, my good lord.

Macb. We should have else desired your good advices.
Which still hath been both grave and preserons,
In this day’s council; but we ’ll take to-morrow.
Is ’t far you ride?

Ban. As far, my lord, as will fill up the time
’Twixt this and supper: go not my horse the better,
I must become a borrower of the night
For a dark hour or two.

Macb. Fail not our feast.
Ban. My lord, I will not.

Macb. We hear, our bloody cousins are bestow’d
In England and in Ireland, not confessing
Their cruel parriade, filling their hearers

Ross. Is’t known who did this more than bloody Macb. Those that Macbeth hath slain. [deed?
Ross. Alas, the day!

What good could they pretend?
Ross. They were suborn’d:
For those things Duncan have I murder’d;
Put rancours in the vessel of my peace
Only for them; and mine eternal jewel
Given to the common enemy of man,
To make them kings, the seed of Banquo kings!
Rather than so, come fate into the list,
And champion me to the utterance! Who ’s there?

With strange invention: but of that to-morrow,
When we’re about, we shall have cause of state
Cruising my joints. Ile you to horse: adieu.
Till you return at night. Goes Flamme with you?
Ban. Ay, my good lord; our time does call upon’s.
Macb. I wish your horses swift and sure of foot;
And so I do commend you to their backs.

Farewell.

[Exit Banquo.

Let every man be master of his time
Till seven at night: to make society
The sweeter welcome, we will keep ourselves
Till supper-time alone: while then, God be with you?

[Exeunt all but Macbeth, and an attendant.

Sirrah, a word with you: attend these men
Our pleasure?

Att. They are, my lord, without the palace gate.

Macb. Bring them before us. [Exit Attendant.

To be thus is nothing:
But to be safely thus.—Our fears in Banquo
Stick deep; and in his royalty of nature
Reigns that which would be fear’d: ’tis much he dares;
And, to that dauntless temper of his mind,
He hath a wisdom that doth guide his valour
To act in safety. There is none but he Whose being I do fear; and, to make him,
My Genius is rebelled: as, it is said,
Mark Antony’s was by Caesar. He child the sisters
When first they put the name of king upon me,
And bore them speak to him; then prophet-like
They hail’d him father to a line of kings:
Upon my head they placed a fruitless crown,
And put a barren sceptre in my grave,
Thence to be wrench’d with an unhand lead,
No son of mine succeeding. If ’t be so,
For Banquo’s issue have I filed my mind:
For them the gracious Duncan have I murder’d;
Put rancours in the vessel of my peace
Only for them; and mine eternal jewel
Given to the common enemy of man,
To make them kings, the seed of Banquo kings!
Rather than so, come fate into the list,
And champion me to the utterance! Who ’s there?
MACBETH.

ACT III. SCENE II.

Reenter Attendant, with two Murderers.

Now go to the door, and stay there till we call.

[Exit Attendant.]

Was it not yesterday we spoke together?

First Mur. It was, so please your highness.

Macb. Well then, now I have considered of my speeches: Know that it was in the times past which held you so under fortune, which you thought had been our innocent self: this I made good to you in our last conference, pass'd in probation with you, how you were borne in hand, how cross'd, the instruments, [ might Who wrought with them, and all things else that to half a soul and to a notion crazed Say 'Thou did'st Banquo?'

First Mur. You made it known to us.

Macb. I did so, and went further, which is now our point of second meeting. Do you find your patience so predominant in your nature That you can let this go? Are you so gospell'd To pray for this good man and for his issue, Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave And beggar'd yours for ever?

First Mur. Most truly, we are men, my liege. Making the catalogue ye go for men: Ashounds and greyhounds, mongrels, spaniels, curs, Sconugs, water-rugs and demi-wolves, are cleft All by the name of dozes: the valued file Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle, The housekeeper, the hunter, every one According to the gift which bounteons nature Hath in him closed: whereby he does receive Particular addition, from the bill That writes them all alike: and so of men. Now, if you have a station in the file, Not 't the worst rank of manhood, say 't; And if we can find that business in your veins Whose execution takes your enemy off, Grapples you to the heart and love of us, Who wear our health but sickly in his life, Whose in which his death were perfect.

Sec. Mur. I am one, my liege, Whom the vile blows and buffets of the world Have so incensed that I am reckless what I do to spite the world.

First Mur. And I another So weary with disasters, 't was with fortune, That I would set my life on any chance, To make all, or be rid on't.

Macb. Both of you

Know Banquo was your enemy.

Both Mur. True, my lord.

Macb. So is he mine; and in such bloody distance, That every minute of his being thrusts Against my near'st of life: and though I could With brawnied power sweep him from my sight And bid my will avouch it, yet I must not For certain friends that are both his and mine, Whose loves I may not drop, but wai his fall Who I myself struck down: and thence it is, That I to your assistance do make love, Masking the business from the common eye For sundry weighty reasons.

Sec. Mur. We shall, my lord, Perform what you command us.

First Mur. Your spirits shine through you. Within this hour at last I will advise you where to plant yourselves: Acquaint you with the perfect spy o' the time, The moment on 't: for 't must be done to-night, And something from the palace: always thought That I require a clearness: and with him — To leave no rules nor itching in the work — Fleetec his son, that keeps him company, Whose absence is no less material to me Than is his father's, must embrace the fate Of that dark hour. Resolve yourselves apart: I'll come to you anon.

Both Mur. We are resolved, my lord.

Macb. I'll call upon you straight; abide within. [Exit Murderers.

It is concluded. Banquo, thy soul's flight, If it find heaven, must find it out to-night. [Exit.

SCENE II. —The palace.

Enter Lady Macbeth and a Servant.

Lady M. Is Banquo gone from court?

Serv. Aye, madam, but returns again to-night.

Lady M. Say to the king, I would attend his For a few words.

[Aloud.]

Madam, I will. [Exit.

Lady M. Nought 's had, all ' s speak, Where our desire is got without content: It ' s safer to be that which we destroy Than by destruction dwell in doubtful joy.

Enter Macbeth.

How now, my lord! why do you keep alone, Of sorriest fancies your companions making, Hating the thoughts which should indeed have died With them they think on? Things without all remedy Should be without regard: what ' s done is done. Macb. We have scotch'd the snake, not kill'd it: She ' ll close and be herself, whilst our poor malice Remains in danger of her former tooth. But let the frame of things disjoint, both the worlds suffer, Ere we will eat our meal in fear and sleep In the afflication of these terrible dreams That shake us nightly: better be with the dead, Whom we cannot outlive; than to be sent to peace, Than on the torture of the mind to lie In restless ecstasy. Duncan is in his grave; After life's fitful fever he sleeps well: Treason has done his worst: nor steel, nor poison, Malice domestic, foreign levy, nothing, Can touch him further.

Lady M. Come on;

Gentle my lord, seek o'er your rugged looks; Be bright and jovial among your guests to-night.

Macb. So shall I, love; and so I pray, be you: Let your remembrance apply to Banquo:

Present him honour, both with eye and tongue: Unsafe the while, that we Must have our honours in these flattering streams, And make our faces vizards to our hearts, Disguising what they are.

Lady M. You must leave this.

Macb. O, full of scrupulous heavy mind, dear wife! Thou know'st that Banquo, and his Fleance, lives. Lady M. But in them nature's copy's not eternve. Macb. There's comfort yet: they are assasalable; Then be thou jovial: ere the sun hath florn His cloister'd flight, ere to black Hecate's summons The shrouded-beart heeleth with his drowsy hams Hath rung night's yawning bell, there shall be done A deed of dreadful note.

Lady M. What's to be done?

Macb. Be innocent of the knowledge, dearest chuck, Till thou applaud the deed. Come, seeing night, Start up the tender eye of pitiful day; And with thy bloody and invisible hand Cancel and tear to pieces that great bond Which keeps me pale! Light thickenes; and the Makes wing to the rocky wold; [crow Good things of day begin to droop and drowse: While night's black agents to their preys do verse. Thou marv'lest at my words: but hold thee still:

MACBETH.

SCENE III.—A park near the palace.

Enter three Murderers.

First Mur. But who did bid thee join with us?

Third Mur. Macbeth.

Sec. Mur. He needs not our mistrust, since he
Our offices and what we have to do
[delivers
To the direction just.

First Mur. Then stand with us.
The west yet glimmers with some streaks of day:
Now spurs the latest traveller apace
To gain the timely inn; and near approaches
The subject of our watch.

Third Mur. Hark! I hear horses.

Ban. [Within] Give us a light there, ho!

Sec. Mur. Then 'tis he: the rest
That are within the note of expectation
Already are 't the court.

First Mur. His horses go about.
Third Mur. Almost a mile: but he does usually,
So all men do, from hence to the palace gate
Make it their walk.

Sec. Mur. A light, a light!

Enter Banquo, and Fleance with a torch.

Third Mur. 'Tis he.

First Mur. Stand to 't.

Ban. It will be rain to-night.

First Mur. Let it come down.
[They set upon Banquo.

Ban. O, treachery! Fly, good Fleance, fly, fly,
Thou mayst revenge. O slave! [by!

[Dies. Fleance escapes.

Third Mur. Who did strike out the light?

First Mur. Was 't not the way?

Third Mur. There 's but one down; the son is fled.

Sec. Mur. We have lost
Best half of our affair.

First Mur. Well, let 's away, and say how much is done. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The same. Hall in the palace.

A banquet prepared. Enter Macbeth, Lady Macbeth, Ross, Lennox, Lords, and Attendants.

Macb. You know your own degrees; sit down:
And last the hearty welcome. [at first
Lords. Thanks to your majesty.
Macb. Ourself will mingle with society,
And play the humble host.
Our hostess keeps her state, but in best our
We will require her welcome.

Lady M. Pronounce it for me, sir, to all our
For my heart speaks they are welcome. [friends;

First Murderer appears at the door.

Macb. See, they encounter thee with their hearts' thanks.
Both sides are even: here I 'll sit 't the midst:
Be large in north; anon we 'll drink a measure
The table round. [Approaching the door.] There 's
Blood upon thy face.

Mur. 'Tis Banquo's then.

Macb. 'Tis better thee without than he within.
Is he dispatch'd?

Mur. My lord, his throat is cut; that I did for him. [he's good

Macb. Thou art the best o' the cut-throats: yet
That did the like for Fleance; if thou didst it,
Thou art the nonceare.

Mur. Most royal sir,
Fleance is escap'd. [perfect,

Macb. Then comes my fit again: I had else been Whole as the marble, founded as the rock,

As broad and general as the casing air:
Now but I am cabin'd, cribb'd, confined, bound in
To saucy doubts and fears. But Banquo's safe?

Mur. Ay, my good lord; safe in a ditch he bides,
With twenty trenched gashes on his head;
The least a death to nature.

Macb. [Thanks for that.
Then the grave serpent lies: the worm that 's fled
Hath nature that in time will venom breed,
No teeth for the present. Get thee gone: to-morrow
We 'll hear, ourselves, again. [Exit Murderer.

Lady M. My royal lord,
You do not give the cheer: the feast is sold
That is not often touch'd, while this is thinking,
"Tis given with welcome: to feed were best at home;
From thence the sauce to meat is ceremony;
Meeting were bare without it.

Macb. Sweet remembrancer!
Now, good digestion wait on appetite,
And health on both!

Len. May 't please your highness sit.

[The Ghost of Banquo enters, and sits in Macbeth's place.

Macb. Here had we now our country's honour roof'd,
Were the graced person of our Banquo present;
Who may I rather challenge for unkindness
Than pity for mischance!

Ross. His absence, sir,
Lays blame upon his promise. Please 't your high-
To grace us with your royal company. [hess
Macb. The table's full.

Len. Here is a place reserved, sir.

Macb. Where?

Len. Here, my good lord. What 's that moves your highness?

Lords. What, my good lord?

Macb. Thou canst not say I did it: never shake
Thy gory locks at me.

Ross. Gentleman, rise: his highness is not well.

Lady M. Sit, worthy friends: my lord is it even thus,
And hath been from his youth: pray you, keep seat;
The fit is momentary; upon a thought
He will again be well: if much you note him,
You shall offend him and extend his passion:
Feed, and regard him not. Are you a man?

Macb. Ay, and a bold one, that dare lock on that
Which might appall the devil.

Lady M. O proper stuff!

This is the very painting of your fear:
This is the air-drawn dagger which, you said,
Led you to Duncan. O, these flaws and starts,
Impostors to true fear, would well become
A woman's story at a winter's fire,
Authorized by her grandam. Shame itself!

Why do you make such faces? When all 's done,
You look but on a stool. [say you?

Macb. Prithhee, see there! beheld! look! lo! how

Why, what care I? If thou canst nod, speak too.
If chamber-houses and our graves must send
Those that we bury back, our monuments
Shall be the maws of kites. [Ghost vanishes.

Lady M. What, quite unmann'd in folly?

Macb. If I stand here, I saw him.

Lady M. Pie, for shame!

Macb. Blood hath been shed ere now, I the olden
Ere human statute purged the gentle weal; [true,
Ay, and since too, murderers have been perform'd
Too terrible for the ear: the times have been,
That, when the brains were out, the man would die,
And there an end; but now they rise again,
With twenty mortal murders on their crowns,
And push us from our stools: this is more strange
Than such a murder is. My worthy lord,
Your noble friends do lack you.

ACT III.

MACBETH.

SCENE VI.

THUNDER. Enter the three Witches, meeting Hecate.

First Witch. Why, how now, Hecate! you look angrily.

Hec. Have I not reason, beldams as you are, Sancie and overbold? How did you dare To trade and traffic with Macbeth In riddles and affairs of death; And I, the mistress of your charms, The close contriver of all harms, Was never call'd to bear my part, Or show the glory of my art? And, which is worse, all you have done Hath been but for a wayward son, Spiteful and wrathful, who, as others do, Loves for his own ends, not for you. But make amends now: get you gone, And at the pit of Acheron Meet me there the morning: thither he Will come to know his destiny: Your vessels and your spells provide, Your charms and everything beside. I am for the air: this night I'll spend Unto a dismal end: that is my part. Great business must be wrought ere noon: Upon the corner of the moon There hangs a vaporous drop profound; I'll catch it ere it come to ground: And that distil'd by magic sleights Shall raise such artificial sprites As by the strength of their illusion Shall draw him on to his confusion: He shall spurn fate, scorn death, and bear His hopes 'bove wisdom, grace and fear: And you all know, security Is mortals' chiefest enemy.

[Music and a song within: 'Come away, come away, &c.]

Hark! I am call'd; my little spirit, see, Sits in a foggy cloud, and stays for me.

SCENE VI. — Forres. The palace.

Enter Lennox and another Lord.

Len. My former speeches have but hit your thoughts; Which can interpret further: only, I say, [Duncan Things have been strangely borne. The gracious Was pitied of Macbeth: marry, he was dead: And the right-valiant Banquo walk'd too late; Whom, you may say, if 't please you. Fleance kill'd, For Fleance fled: men must not walk too late. Who cannot want the thought how monstrous It was for Malcolm and for Donalbain To kill their gracious father? damned fact! How it did grieve Macbeth! did he not straight In pious rage the two delirients tear, That were the slaves of drink and thralls of sleep? Why do not that nobly done?

Lord. For 't would have angered any heart alive To hear the men deny 't. So that, I say, He has borne all things well: and I do think That had he Duncan's sons under his key — [find As, an't please heaven, he shall not — they should What 't were to kill a father; so should Fleance. But, peace! for from broad words and 'cause he His presence at the tyrant's feast, I hear [fall'd. Macduff lives in disgrace: sir, can you tell Where he bestows himself?

Lord. The son of Duncan.

Len. From whom this tyrant holds the due of birth, Lives in the English court, and is received Of the most pious Edward with such grace That the meavoleance of fortune nothing
SCENE I.—A cavern. In the middle, a boiling cauldron.

Thunder. Enter the three Witches.

First Witch. Round about the cauldron go; In the poison'd entrails throw. Toast, that under cold days and nights has thirty-one Sweater'd venom sleeping got, Boil thou first i' the charmed pot. All. Double, double toil and trouble;

Fire burn and cauldron bubble. Sec. Witch. Fillet of a fenny snake, In the cauldron boil and bake; Eye of newt and toe of frog, Wool of bat and tongue of dog, Adder's fork and blind-worm's sting, Lizard's leg and owlet's wing, For a charm of powerful trouble, Like a hell-broth boil and bubble. All. Double, double toil and trouble;

Fire burn and cauldron bubble. Third Witch. Scale of dragon, tooth of wolf, Witches' mummy, maw and gulf Of the ravin's salt-sea shark, Root of hemlock digg'd i' the dark, Liver of blaspheming Jew, Gall of goat, and slips of yew Sliver'd i' the moon's eclipse, Nose of Turk and Tartar's lips, Finger of birth-stangled babe Ditch-deliver'd by a draught, Make the gueul thick and slat: Add thereto a tinger's chandron, For the ingredients of our cauldron. All. Double, double toil and trouble;

Fire burn and cauldron bubble. Sec. Witch. Cool it with a baboon's blood, Then the charm is firm and good.

Enter Hecate to the other three Witches.

Hec. O, well done! I commend your pains; And every one shall share i' the gains: And now about the cauldron sing, Live elves and fairies in a ring, Enchanting all that you put in.

Sec. Witch. By the pricking of my thumbs, Something wicked this way comes. Open locks, Whoever knocks!

Enter Macbeth.

Macb. How now, you secret, black, and midnight What is 't you do? [Hags! 658

ACT IV.

MACBETH.

Lord. He did: and with an absolute 'Sir, not I,' The cloudy messenger turns me his back, And huns, as who should say 'You'll rue the time You'd urge me with this answer.'

Len. And that well might Advise him to a caution, to hold what distance His wisdom can provide. Some holy angel Fly to the court of England and unfold His message ere he come, that a swift blessing May soon return to this our suffering country Under a hand accused!

Lord. I'll send my prayers with him. [Exeunt.
ACT IV.

MACBETH.

SCENE II.

The firstlings of my hand. And even now, To crown my thoughts with acts, be it thought and The castle of Macduff I will surprise; done: Seize upon Fife: give to the edge o' the sword His wife, his babes, and all unfortunate souls Whose traces arm in arm. Now is my soul a beast like a fool; This deed I'll do before this purpose cool. But no more sights! — Where are these gentlemen? Come, bring me where they are. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Fife. Macduff's castle.

Enter Lady Macduff, her Son, and Ross.

L. Macd. What had he done, to make him fly the land?

Ross. You must have patience, madam.

L. Macd. He had none: His flight was madness: when our actions do not, Our fears do make us traitors.

Ross. You know not Whether it was his wisdom or his fear.

L. Macd. Wisdom! to leave his wife, to leave his babes, His mansion and his titles in a place From whence himself does fly? He loves us not; He wants the natural torch: for the poor wren, The most dimmitive of birds, will fight, Her young ones in her nest, against the owl. All is the fear and nothing is the love: As little is the wisdom, where the flight So runs against all reason.

Ross. My dearest coz, I pray you, school yourself: but for your husband, He is noble, wise, judicious, and best knows The hits o' the season. I dare not speak much further; But cruel are the times, when we are traitors And do not know ourselves, when we hold rumour From what we fear, yet know not what we fear, But float upon a wild and violent sea Each way and move. I take my leave of you: Shall not be long but I'll be here again: Things at the worst will cease, or else climb upward To what they were before. My pretty cousin, Blessing upon you!

L. Macd. Father's he is, and yet he's fatherless. Ross. I am so much a fool, should I stay longer, It would be my disgrace and your discomfort; I take my leave at once. [Exit.

Ross. Sirrah, your father's dead: And what will you do now? How will you live?

Son. As birds do, mother.

L. Macd. What, with worms and flies?

Son. With what I get, I mean; and so do they.

L. Macd. Poor bird! thou hast never fear the net The pitfall nor the gin. [her line.

Son. Why should I, mother? Poor birds they are not set for.

My father is not dead, for all your saying.

L. Macd. Yes, he is dead: how will thou do for a father?

Son. Nay, how will you do for a husband?

L. Macd. Why, I can buy me twenty at any market.

Son. Then you'll buy 'em to sell again.

L. Macd. Thou speak'st with all thy wit; and yet, i' faith, With wit enough for thee.

Son. Was my father a traitor, mother?

L. Macd. Ay, that he was.

Son. What is a traitor?

L. Macd. Why, one that swears and lies.

Son. And be all traitors that do so?

L. Macd. Every one that does so is a traitor, and must be hanged in line. [lie?

Son. And must they all be hanged that swear and

L. Macd. Every one.

Son. Who must hang them?

L. Macd. Why, the honest men.
Son. Then the liars and swearers are fools, for there are liars and swearers enow to beat the honest men and hang up them.

L. Macb. Now, God help thee, poor monkey!
But how wilt thou do for a father?

Son. If he were dead, you'd weep for him: if you would not, it were a good sign that I should quickly have a new father.

L. Macb. Poor prattler, how thou talk'st!

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Bless you, fair dame! I am not to you known, though in your state of honour I am perfect. I doubt some danger does approach you heavily: if you will take a homely man's advice, be not found here; hence, with your little ones. To flught you thus, methinks, I am too savage; to do worse to you were felt cruelly, which is too high your person. Heaven preserve you! I dare abide no longer.

[Exit. L. Macb.]

Whither should I fly?
I have done no harm. But I remember now I am in this earthly world; where to do harm is often laudable, to do good sometime accounted dangerous folly: why then, alas, do I put up that womanly defence, to say I have done no harm?

Enter murderers.

What are these faces?
First M. Where is your husband?
L. Macb. I hope, in no place so unsanctified.
Where such as thou mayst find him.
First M. He's a traitor.
Son. Thou liest, thou shag-hair'd villain!
First M. What, you egg?
Young fry of treachery!
Son. He has kill'd me, mother: Run away, I pray you! [Dies.]

Exit Lady Macduff, crying 'Murder!' Exeunt murderers, following her.

SCENE III.—England. Before the King's palace.

Enter Malcolm and Macduff.

Mal. Let us seek out some desolate shade, and there weep our sad bosoms empty.

Macb. Let us rather hold fast the mortal sword, and like good men Bestride our down-fall'n birthplace: each new born New widows howl, new orphans cry, new sorrows Strike heaven on the face, that it resounds As if it felt with Scotland and yeild'd out Like syllable of doleour.

Mal. What I believe I'll wait, What know believe, and what I can retress, As I shall find the time to friend, I will. What you have spoit, it may be so perchance. This tyrant, whose sole name blisters our tongues, Was once thought honest: you have loved him well: He hath not touch'd you yet. I am young; but something You may deserve of him through me, and wisdom To offer up a weak poor innocent lamb To appease an angry god.

Macb. I am not treacherous.

Mal. Parthuce even there where I did find my doubts.

WHY in that rawness left you wife and child, Those precious motives, those strong knots of love, Without leave-taking? I pray you, Let not my jealousy be your dishonours, But mine own safeties. You may be rightly just, Whatever I shall think.

Macb. Bleed, bleed, poor country! Great tyranny! Lay thou thy basis sure, [wrogs: For goodness dare not check thee: weare thou thy The title is affier'd! Fare thee well, lord: I would not be the villain that thou think'st For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp, And the rich East to boot.

Mal. Be not offended: I speak not as in absolute fear of you. I think our country sinks beneath the yoke; It weeps, it bleeds; and each new day a gash Is added to her wounds: I think it will Had there would be hands uplifted in my right; And here from gracious England have I offer Of goodly thousands: but, for all this, When I shall tread upon the tyrant's head, Or wear it on my sword, yet my poor country Shall have more vices than it had before, More suffer and more sundry ways than ever, By him that shall succeed.

Macb. What should he be?

Mal. It is myself I mean: in whom I know All the particulars of vice so grafted That, when they shall be open'd, black Macbeth Will seem as pure as snow, and the poor state Esteem him as a lamb, being compared With my confinless harms.

Macb. Not in the legions Of horrid hell can come a devil more damn'd In evils to top Macbeth.

Mal. I grant him bloody, luxurious, avaricious, false, deceitful, Sudden, malicious, snacking of every sin That has a name: but there's no bottom, none, In my voluptuousness: your wives, your daughters, Your matrons and your maids, could not fill up The cistern of my lust, and my desire.

All continent impediments would o'erbear That did oppose my will: better Macbeth Than such an one to reign.

Macb. Boundless intemperance In nature is a tyranny; it hath been The untimely emptying of the happy throne And fall of many kings, the pride thereof, To take upon him what is yours: you may Convey your pleasures in a spacious plenty, And yet seem cold, the time you may so bhoodwink. We have willing dames enough; there cannot be That vulture in you, to devour so many As will to greatness dedicate themselves, Finding it so inclined. With this there grows In my most ill-composed affection such A stanchess avarice that, were I king, I should cut off the nobles for their lands, Desire his jewels, and this other's house: And my more-having would be as a sauce To make me hunger more: that I should forge Quarrels unjust against the good and loyal, Destroying them for wealth.

Mal. This avarice Sticks deeper, grows with more pernicious root Than summer-seeming lust, and it hath been The sword of our slain kings: yet do not fear; Scotland hath foissos to fill up your will, Of your mere own: all these are portable, With other graces weight'd.

Mal. But you hope none: the king-becoming graces, As justice, verity, temperance, stableness, Bounty, perseverance, mercy, lowliness, Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
ACT IV.

MACBETH.

SCENE III.

I have no relish of them, but abom'd
In the division of each several crime,
Acting it many ways. Nay, had I power, I should Pour out my blood in milk of concord into hell,
Upbraided the universal peace, confound
All unity on earth.

Mac'd. O Scotland, Scotland!

Mal. If such a one be fit to govern, speak
I as I have spoken.

Mac'd. Such was Macduff, this noble passion,
Child of integrity, hath from my soul
Wiped the black scruples, reconciled my thoughts
To thy good truth and honour. Devilish Macbeth
By many of these trains hath sought to win me
Into his power, and modest wisdom plucks me
From ever-credulous baseness; but God above
Deal between thee and me! for even now
I put myself to thy direction, and Unspeak mine own extirpation, here ablaze
The taints and blains I laid upon myself,
For strangers to my nature. I am yet
Unknown to woman, never was forsworn,
Scarcely have coveted what was mine own,
At no time broke my faith, would not betray
The devil to his fellow and delight.

Mal. Such welcome and unwelcome things
'Tis hard to reconcile.

Enter a Doctor.

Mal. Well; more anon.—Comes the king forth,
I pray you.

Doc't. My sir, there are a crew of wretched souls
That stay his cure: their malady convinces
The great assay of art; but at his touch—
Such sanctity hath heaven given his hand—
They presently amend.

Mal. I thank you, doctor. [Exit Doctor.

Mal. What's the disease he means?

Mac'd. 'Tis call'd the evil:
A most miraculous work in this good king;
Which often, since my here-remain in England,
I have seen him do. How he solicits heaven,
Himself best knows: but strangely-visited people,
All swoon and ulcerous, pitiful to the eye,
The mere despair of surgery, he cures,
Hanging a golden stamp about their necks,
Put on with holy prayers; and 'tis spoken,
To the succeeding royalty he leaves
The healing benediction. With this strange virtue,
He has a back-valve of prophecy,
And sundry blessings hang about his throne,
That speak him full of grace.

Enter Ross.

Mal. See, who comes here?

Mal. My countryman: but yet I know him not.

Mac'd. My ever-gentle cousin, welcome hither.

Mal. I know him now. Good God, betimes re-

The means that makes us strangers! [move

Ross. Sir, amen.

Mac'd. Stands Scotland where it did?

Ross. Alas, poor country! Almost afraid to know itself. It cannot Be call'd our mother, but our grave; where nothing,
But who knows nothing, is once seen to smile;
Where sighs and groans and shrieks that rend the air
Are made, not mark'd; where violent sorrow seems
A modern ecstasy: the dead man's knell
Is there scarce ask'd for; and good men's lives
Expire before the flowers in their caps,
Dying or ere they sicken.

Mac'd. O, relation
Too nice, and yet too true!

Mal. What's the newest grief?

Ross. That of an hour's age dost hiss the speaker;
Each minute teems a new one.

Mal. How does my wife?

Mal. Why, well.

Ross. And all my children?

Mal. Well too.

Ross. The tyrant has not batter'd at their peace?

Ross. No; they were well at peace when I did leave 'em.

Mal. Do not still a riddig of your speech: how Ross. Why, I came hither to transport the tidings,
Which I have heavily borne, there ran a rumour
Of many worthy fellows that were out;
Which was to my belief witness'd the rather,
For that I saw the tyrant's power a-foot:
Now is the time of help; your eye in Scotland
Would create soldiers, make our women fight,
To doff their dire distresses.

Mal. Be'th their comfort
We are coming thither: gracious England hath
Lent us good Sward and ten thousand men;
An older and a better soldier none
That Christendom gives out.

Ross. Would I could answer
This comfort with the like! But I have words
That would be how'd out in the desert air,
Where hearing should not latch them.

Mal. What concern they?

Ross. The general cause? or is it a feé-grief
Due to some single breast?

Ross. No mind that's honest
But in it shares some woe; though the main part
Perceiveth to you alone.

Mal. If it be mine,
Keep it not from me, quickly let me have it.

Ross. Let not your ears despire my tongue for ever,
Which shall possess them with the heaviest sound
That ever yet they heard.

Ross. Your castle is surprised; your wife and Ross. Wife, children, servants, all

Ross. That could be found.

Mal. And I must be from thence!

Ross. My wife kill'd too?

Ross. I have said. Be comforted:
Let's make us medicines of our great revenge,
To cure this deadly grief.

Mal. He has no children. All my pretty ones?

Ross. Did you say all? O hell-kite! All?
What, all my pretty chickens and their dam
At one fell swoop?

Mac. Dispute it like a man.

Mac. I shall do so;
But I must also feel it as a man:
I cannot but remember such things were:
That were most precious to me. Did heaven look
And would not take their part? Sinful Macduff,
They were all struck for thee! naught that I can,
Not for their own demerits, but for mine. [now!
Fell slaughter on their souls. Heaven rest them
Mac. Be this the whetstone of your sword; let grief
Convert to anger; blunt not the heart, curate it.

Macduf. O, I could play the woman with mine eyes
And bragart with my tongue! But, gentle heavens,
Cut short all intermission; front to front
Bring thou this fiend of Scotland and myself;
Within my sword's length set him; if he 'scape,
Heaven forgive him too!

This tune goes manly.

Come, go we to the king; our power is ready;
Our lack is nothing but our leave: Macbeth
Is ripe for slacking, and the powers above
Put on their instruments. Receive what cheer you may:
'Tis long that never finds the day. [Exeunt.}

ACT V.

Enter a Doctor of Physic and a Waiting-Gentlewoman.

Doc. I have two nights watched with you, but impossible to trace in your report. When was it she last walked?

Gent. Since his majesty went into the field, I have seen her rise from her bed, throw her nightgown upon her, unlock her closet, take forth paper, told it, write upon it, read it, afterwards seal it, and again return to bed; yet all this while in a most fast sleep.

Doc. A great perturbation in nature, to receive at once the benefit of sleep, and do the effects of watching!
In this slumber agitation, besides her walking and other actual performances, what, at any time, have you heard her say?

Gent. That, sir, which I will not report after her.

Doc. You may to me: and 'tis most meet you should.

Gent. Neither to you nor anyone; having no wit ness to confirm my speech.

Enter Lady Macbeth, with a taper.

Lady. Lo you, here she comes! This is her very guise; and, upon my life, fast asleep. Observe her; stand close.

Doc. How came she by that light?

Gent. Why, it stood by her: she has light by her continually; 'tis her command.

Doc. You see, her eyes are open.

Gent. Ay, but her sense is shut.

Doc. What is it she does now? Look, how she rubs her hands.

Gent. It is an acenstomated action with her, to seem thus washing her hands: I have known her continue in this a quarter of an hour.

Lady M. Yet here's a spot.

Doc. Hark! she speaks: I will set down what comes from her, to satisfy my remembrance the more strongly.

Lady M. O, damned spot! out, out, I say!—One:
two: why, then 'tis time to do.—'Tis hellish lurkly!—
Fie, my lord, fie! a soldier, and afraid? What need we fear who knows it, when none can call our power to account?—Yet who would have thought the old man to have had so much blood in him.

Doc. Do you mark that?

Lady M. The thane of Fife had a wife; where is she now?—What, will these hands ne'er be clean?
—No more o' that, my lord, no more o' that; you mar all with this starting.

Doc. Go to, go to; you have known what you should not.

Gent. She has spoke what she should not, I am sure of that: heaven knows what she has known.

Lady M. Here's the smell of the blood still: all the SCENE II.—The country near Dunsinane.

Dunsinane. Enter Menteith, Caithness, Angus, Lennox, and Soldiers.

Menteith. The English power is near, led on by Malhis uncle Siward and the good Macduff: [colun,
Revenues burn in them: for their dear causes
Would to the bleeding and the grim alarm
Excite the mortified man.

Angus. Near Birnam wood
Shall we well meet them: that way are they coming.

Caith. Who knows if Donalbain be with his brother?

Len. For certain, sir, he is not: I have a file
Of all the gentry: there is Siward's son,
And many unrough youths that even now
Protest their first of manhood.

Macbeth. What does the tyrant?

Caith. Great Dunsinane he strongly fortiies:
Some say he's mad; others that lesser hate him
Do call it valiant fury: but, for certain,
He cannot buckle his distemper'd cause
Within the belt of rule.

Angus. Now does he feel
His secret murders sticking on his hands;
Now minutely revolts upbraid his faith-brach;
Doct. Macbeth minister to himself.

Macb. Throw physic to the dogs; I'll none of it. Come, put mine armour on; give me my staff. Seyton, send out. Doctor, the Thames fly from me. Come, sir, dispatch. If thou couldst, doctor, cast The water of my land, find her disease, And purge it to a sound and pristine health, The would applaud thee to the very echo. That should applaud again.—Pull 't off, I say.— What rhubarb, cyme, or what purgative drug. Would scour those English hence? Hear'st thou of them?

Doct. Ay, my good lord; your royal preparation Makes us hear something.

Macb. Bring it after me. I will not be afraid of death and bane, Till Birnam wood come to Dunsinane.

Doct. [Aside] Were I from Dunsinane away and Profit again should hardly draw me here. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—Country near Birnam wood.

Drum and colours. Enter Malcolm, Lord Siward and his Son, Macduff, Menteith, Caithness, Angus, Lennox, Ross, and Soldiers, marching.

Mel. Consins, I hope the days are near at hand That chambers will be safe.

Ment. We doubt it nothing.

Sic. What wood is this before us?

Ment. The wood of Birnam. Mel. Let every soldier Hew him down a bough And bear 't before him: thereby shall we shadow The numbers of our host and make discovery Err in report of us.

Soldiers. We learn no other but the confident tyrant Keeps still in Dunsinane, and will endure Our setting down before 't.

Mel. It is his main hope: For where there is advantage to be given, Both more and less have given him the revolt, And none serve with him but constrained things Whose hearts are absent too.

Macb. Let our just censures Attend the true event, and put we on Industrious soldiership.

Sic. The time approaches That will with due decision make us know What we shall say we have and what we owe. Thoughts speculative their unsure hopes relate, But certain issue strokes must arbitrate: Towards which advance the war. [Exit.}

SCENE V.—Dunsinane. Within the castle.

Enter Macbeth, Seyton, and Soldiers, with drum and colours.

Macb. Hang out our banners on the outward walls; The cry is still 'They come:' our castle's strength Will laugh a siege to scorn; here let them lie Till famine and the ague eat them up: [ours. Were they not forced with those that should be We might have met them careful, beard to beard, And beat them backward home.

Sey. It is the cry of women, my good lord. [Exit. Macb. I have almost forgot the taste of fears: The time has been, my senses would have cool'd To bear a most at-shriek; and my fell of hair Would at a small treatise rise and stir As life were in 't; I have supp'd full with horrors; Direness, familiar to my slaughterous thoughts, Cannot once start me...
ACT V.

MACBETH.

SCENE VIII.

Re-enter Seyton.

Wherefore was that cry?

Sey.  The queen, my lord, is dead.

Macb.  She should have died hereafter;

There would have been a time for such a word.

To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,

Creeps in this petty pace from day to day

To the last syllable of recorded time,

And all our yesterdays have lighted fools

The way to dusty death.  Out, out, brief candle!

Life's but a walking shadow, a poor player

That struts and frets his hour upon the stage

And then is heard no more: it is a tale

Told by an idiot, full of sound and fury,

Signifying nothing.

Enter a Messenger.

Thou comest to use thy tongue; thy story quickly.

Mess.  Gracious my lord,

I should report that which I say I saw,

But know not how to do it.

Macb.  Well, say, sir.

Mess.  As I did stand my watch upon the hill,

I look'd toward Birnam, and anon, methought,

The wood began to move.

Macb.  Liar and slave!

Mess.  Let me endure your wrath, if 't be not so:

Within this three mile may you see it coming;

I say, a moving grove.

Macb.  If thou speakest false,

Upon the next tree shalt thou hang alive.

Till famine cling thee: if thy speech be sooth,

I care not if thou dost for me as much.

I pull in resolution, and begin

To doubt the equivocation of the fiend

That lies like truth: 'Fear not, till Birnam wood

Do come to Dunsinane;' and now a wood

Comes toward Dunsinane.  Arm, arm, and out!

If this which he avouches do appear,

There is no flying hence nor tarrying here,

I gin to be aweary of the sun,

And wish the estate o' the world were now undone.

Ring the alarm-ball! Blow, wind! come, wrack!

At least we'll die with harness on our back.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VI. — Dunsinane. Before the castle.

Deav and colours. Enter Malcolm, old Siward,

Macduff, and their Army, with bagues.

Mal.  Now near enough; your leafy screens throw down

And show like those you are.  You, worthy uncle,

Shall, with my cousin, your right-noble son,

Lead our first battle: worthy Macduff and we Shall take upon 's what else remains to do,

According to our order.

Sic.  Fare you well.

Do we but find the tyrant's power to-night,

Let us be beaten, if we cannot fight.  [all breath,

Macd.  Make all our trumpets speak; give them

Those clamorous harbingers of blood and death.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VII. — Another part of the field.

Alarums. Enter Macbeth.

Macb.  They have tied me to a stake; I cannot fly,

But, bear-like, I must fight the course.  What's he

That was not born of woman?  Such a one

Am I to fear, or none.

Enter young Siward.

Yo. Sic.  What is thy name?

Macb.  Thou'lt be afraid to hear it.

Yo. Sic.  No: though thou call'st thyself a hotter

Than any is in hell.

My name's Macbeth.

Yo. Sic.  The devil himself could not pronounce

More hateful to mine ear.

[Exeunt.

Yo. Sic.  Thou liest, abhorred tyrant: with my

I'll prove the lie thou speakest.

[Exeunt.

Macb.  They were born of woman.

But swords I smile at, weapons laugh to scorn,

Brandish'd by man that 's of a woman born.

[Exit.

Alarums. Enter Macduff.

Macd.  That way the noise is.  Tyrant, show thy face!

If thou be'st slain and with no stroke of mine,

My wife and children's ghosts will haunt me still.

I cannot strike at wretched kerns, whose arms

Are hired to bear their staves; either thou, Macbeth,

Or else my sword with an unbatter'd edge

I shall take again undeeded.  There thou shouldst be;

By this great clatter, one of greatest note

Seems bruited.  Let me find him, fortune!

And more I beg not.

Alarums.

Enter Malcolm and old Siward.

Sic.  This way, my lord; the castle's gently

render'd:

The tyrant's people on both sides do fight;

The noble thanes do bravely in the war;

The day almost itself professes yours,

And little is to do.

Mal.  We have met with foes

That strike beside us.

Sic.  Enter, sir, the castle.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VIII. — Another part of the field.

Enter Macbeth.

Macb.  Why should I play the Roman fool, and die

On mine own sword? whiles I see lives, the gashes

Do better upon them.

Enter Macduff.

Macd.  Turn, hell-hound, turn!

Macb.  Of all men else I have avoided thee:

But get thee back; my soul is too much charged

With blood of thine already.

Macd.  I have no words:

My voice is in my sword: thou bloodier villain

Than terms can give thee out!

[Exeunt.

Hon.  As easy mayst thou the intrenchant air

With thy keen sword impress as make me bleed:

Let fall thy blade on vulnerable crests;

I bear a charmed life, which must not yield

To one of woman born.

Macd.  Despair thy charm;

And let the angel whom thou still hast served

Tell thee, Macduff was from his mother's womb

Untimely ripp'd.

Macd.  Accursed be that tongue that tells me so,

For it hath cow'd my better part of man!

And be these juggling fiends no more believed,

That palter with us in a double sense;

That keep the word of promise to our ear,

And break it to our hope.  'I'll not fight with thee.'

Macd.  Then yield thee, coward.

And live to be the show and gaze o' the time:

We 'll have thee, as our rarer monsters are,

Painted upon a pole, and underwritten,

'Here may you see the tyrant.'

[Exeunt.

I will not yield,

To kiss the ground before young Malcolm's feet,

And to be baited with the rabble's curse.

Though Birnam wood be come to Dunsinane,

And thou opposed, being of no woman born,
Yet I will try the last. Before my body
I throw my warlike shield. Lay on, Macduff,
And damn'd be him that first cries 'Hold, enough!'

[Exeunt, fighting. Alarums.

Retreat. Flourish. Enter, with drum and colours, Malcolm, old Siward, Ross, the other Thanes, and Soldiers.

Mal. I would the friends we miss were safe arrived.

Sic. Some must go off: and yet, by these I see,
So great a day as this is cheaply bought.

Mal. Macduff is missing, and your noble son.

Ross. Your son, my lord, has paid a soldier's debt.
He only lived but till he was a man;
The which no sooner had his prowess confirm'd
In the unshrinking station where he fought,
But like a man he died.

Sic. Then he is dead?

Ross. Ay, and brought off the field: your cause of sorrow
Must not be measured by his worth, for then
It hath no end.

Sic. Had he his hurts before?

Ross. Ay, on the front.

Sic. Why then, God's soldier be he!

Had I as many sons as I have hairs,
I would not wish them to a fairer death:
And so, his knell is knoll'd.

Mal. He's worth more sorrow,
And that I'll spend for him.

Sic. He's worth no more:
They say he parted well, and paid his score:
And so, God be with him! Here comes never comfort.

Re-enter Macduff, with Macbeth's head.

Mal. Hail, king! for so thou art: behold, where stands
The usurper's cursed head: the time is free:
I see thee compass'd with thy kingdom's pearl,
That speak my salutation in their minds;
Whose voices I desire aloud with mine;
Hail, King of Scotland!

Al. Hail, King of Scotland! [Flourish.

Mal. We shall not spend a large expense of time
Before we reckon with your several loves: [Junet,
And make us even with you. My thanes and kinsmen—
Henceforth be earls, the first that ever Scotland
In such an honour named. What's more to do,
Which would be planted newly with the time,
As calling home our exiled friends abroad
That dêd the snares of watchful tyranny;
Producing forth the cruel ministers
Of this dead butcher and his head-like queen,
Who, as 'tis thought, by self and violent hands
Took off her life; this, and what needful else
That calls upon us, by the grace of Grace,
We will perform in measure, time and place:
So, thanks to all at once and to each one,
Whom we invite to see us crown'd at Scone.

[Flourish. Exeunt.

ACT I.

SCENE I. — Elsinore. A platform before the castle.

Francisco at his post. Enter to him Bernardo.

Fran. Nay, answer me: stand, and unfold yourself.

Ber. Long live the king!

Fran. Bernardo?

Ber. He.

Fran. You come most carefully upon your hour.

Ber. ’Tis now struck twelve; get thee to bed, Francisco. [cold,

Fran. For this relief much thanks: ’tis bitter cold. I am sick at heart.

Ber. Have you had quiet guard?

Fran. Not a mouse stirring.

Ber. Well, good night.

If you do meet Horatio and Marcellus,
The rivals of my watch, bid them make haste.

Fran. I think I hear them. Stand, he! Who’s there?

Enter Horatio and Marcellus.

Hor. Friends to this ground,

Mar. And liegemen to the Dane.

Fran. Give you good night.

Mar. O, farewell, honest soldier: Who hath relieved you?

Fran. Bernardo has my place.

Give you good night. [Exit.

Mar. Holla! Bernardo!

Ber. Say, What is Horatio there?

Hor. A piece of him.

Ber. Welcome, Horatio: welcome, good Marcellus.

Mar. What, hast thou any thing appear’d again to thee: I have seen nothing.

Mar. Horatio says ’tis but our fantasy, And will not let belief take hold of him. Touching this dreadful sight, twice seen of us: Therefore I have entrereated him along

With us to watch the minutes of this night; That if again this apparition come, He may approve our eyes and speak to it.

Hor. Tush, tush, ’t will not appear.

Ber. Sit down awhile; And let us once again assail your ears, That are so fortified against our story What we have two nights seen.

Hor. Well, sit we down, And let us hear Bernardo speak of this.

Ber. Last night of all, When yond same star that’s westward from the pole Had made his course to illumine that part of heaven Where now it burns, Marcellus and myself, The bell then beating one. —

Enter Ghost.

Mar. Peace, break thee off; look, where it comes again!

Ber. In the same figure, like the king that’s dead.

Mar. Thou art a scholar: speak to it, Horatio.

Ber. Looks it not like the king? mark it, Horatio. [wonder

Hor. Most like: it harrows me with fear and horror. It would be spoke to.

Mar. Question it, Horatio.

Hor. What art thou that wast usurp’st this time of Together with that fair and warlike form [night, In which the majesty of buried Denmark Did sometimes march? by heaven I charge thee, Mar. It is offended. [speak!

Ber. See, it stalks away!

Hor. Stay! speak, speak! I charge thee, speak! [Exit Ghost.

Mar. ’Tis gone, and will not answer. [pale

Ber. How now, Horatio! you tremble and look: Is not this something more than fantasy? What think you on’t?

Hor. Before my God, I might not this believe Without the sensible and true avouch Of mine own eyes.

Mar. Is it not like the king?
Act I. Hamlet. Scene II.

Hor. As thou art to thyself: Such was the very armour he had on When he the ambitious Norway overcame; So round'd he once, when, in an angry parle, He smote the sledged Polackes on the ice.

'Tis strange. [hour.

Mar. Thus twice before, and jump at this dead With martial stalk hath he gone by our watch.

Hor. [Sake.] Shalt I speak at it when my part is done? But in the gross and scope of my opinion, [not] This bodes some strange eruption to our state.

Mar. Good now, sit down, and tell me, he that knows, Why this same strict and most observant watch So imprisonment of the subject doth contain; And why such daily cast of brazen cannon, And foreign mart for implements of war; Why such impress of shipwrights, whose sore task Does not divide the Sunday from the week; What might be toward, that this swary haste Doth make the night joint-labourer with the day: Who 's that can inform me? That can I; At least, the whisper goes so. Our last king, Whose image even but now appear'd to us, Was, as you know, by Fortinbras of Norway, Thereto prick'd on by a most emulat prize; Dared this assault in which our valiant Hamlet— For so this side of our known world esteem'd him— Did slay this Fortinbras; who, by a seal'd compact, Well ratify'd by law and heraldry, Did forfeit, with his life, all those his lands Which he stood seiz'd of, to the conqueror: Against the which, a moiety competent Was gaged by our king; which had return'd To the inheritance of Fortinbras, Had he been vanquish'd; as, by the same covenant, And carriage of the article design'd, His fell to Hamlet. Now, sir, young Fortinbras, Of quenched blood yet hot and full, Hath in the skirts of Norway here and there Shark'd up a list of lawless resolute, For food and diet, to some enterprise That hath a stomach in 't; which is no other As it doth well appear unto our state— But to recover of us, by strong hand And terms compulsory, those foresaid lands So by his father lost: and this, I take it, Is the main motive of our preparations. The source of this our watch and the chief head Of this post-haste and romage in the land. [Barr'd. I think but to so: Well may it sort that this portentious figure Comes armed through our watch; so like the king That was and is the question of these wars. Hor. A mote it is to trouble the mind's eye. In the most high and pulpy state of Rome, A little the most mightiest he fell. The graves stood tenantless and the sheeted dead Did squeak and gibber in the Roman streets: As stars with trains of fire and dews of blood, Disasters in the sun; and the moist star Upon whose Influence Neptune's empire stands Was sick almost to doomsday with eclipse: And even the like precurse of fierce events, As harbingers preceding still the fates And prologue to the omen coming on, Have heaven and earth together demonstrated Unto our calamities and countrymen.— But soft, behold! lo, where it comes again!

Re-enter Ghost.
I'll cross it, though it blast me. Stay, illusion! If thou hast any sound, or use of voice, Speak to me: It is the duty that is set thee. What none good thing to be done, That may to thee do ease and grace to me, Speak to me:

[Cock crows. If thou art privy to thy country's fate, Which, happily, foreknowing may avoid. O, speak! Or if thou hast upheaved in thy life Extorted treasure in the womb of earth, For which, they say, you spirits oft walk in death, Speak of it: stay, and speak! Stop it, Marcellus. Hor. Mar. 'T is here! [Exit Ghost. We do it wrong, being so majestic, To offer it the show of violence; For it is, as the air, invulnerable, And our vain blows malicious mockery. Hor. It was about to speak, when the cock crew. Hor. And then it started like a guilty thing Upon a fearful summons. I have heard, The cock, that is the trumpet to the morn, Doth with his lofty and shrill-sounding strain Awake the god of day; and, at his warning, Whether in sea or fire, in earth or air, The extravagant and erring spirit hies To his confine: and of the truth herein This present object must make manifest. Mar. It faded on the crowing of the cock. Some say that ever 'gainst that season comes Wherein our Saviour's birth is celebrated, The bird of dawning singeth all night long: And then, they say, no spirit dares abroad; The nights are wholesome: then no planets strike No fairy takes, nor witch hath power to charm, So hallow'd and so gracious is the time. Hor. So have I heard and do in part believe it. But, look, the morn, in russet mantle clad, Walks o'er the dew of you high eastward hill: Break we our watch; and by my advice, Let us impart what we have seen to-night Unto young Hamlet; for, upon my life, This spirit, dumb to us, will speak to him. Do you consent we shall acquaint him with it, As needful in our loves, fitting our duty? Mar. Let 's do 't, I pray; and this morning know Where we shall find him most conveniently. [Exeunt.

Scene II.—A room of state in the castle.

Enter the King, Queen, Hamlet, Polonius, Laertes, Voltimand, Cornelius, Lords, and Attendants.

King. Though yet of Hamlet our dear brother's The memory be green, and that it us besitt'd [death To bear our hearts in grief and our whole kingdom To be contracted in one brow of woe, Yet so far hath discretion fought with nature That we with wisest sorrow think on him, Together with remembrance of our own. Therefore our sometime sister, now our queen, The imperial jointress to this warlike state, Have we, as 't were with a defeated joy,— With an auspicious and a dropping eye, With mirth in funeral and with dirge in marriage, In equal scale weighing delight and dole.— Taken to wife: nor have we herein barr'd Your better wisdoms, which have freely gone With this affair along. For all, our thanks. Now follows, that you know, young Fortinbras, Holding a weak supposal of our worth, Or thinking our late dear brother's death Our state to be disjoint and out of frame, Colleagued with the dream of his advantage, He hath not fail'd to pester us with message, Importing the surrender of those lands Lost by his father, with all bonds of law, To our most valiant brother so worth for him. Now for ourself and for this time of meeting: —

667
Thus much the business is: we have here writ To Norway, uncle of young Fortinbras,— Who, impotent and bed-rid, scarcely hears Of this his nephew's purpose,—to suppress His further gait herein; in that the levies, The lists and full proportions, are all made Out of his subject: and we here dispatch You, good Cornelius, to him, and to young Polonius, For bearers of this greeting to old Norway; Giving to you no further personal power To business with the king, more than the scope Of these debated articles allow.

Farewell, and let your haste commend your duty. [Exit Voltaian and Cornelius.

And now, Laertes, what's the news with you? You told us of some suit; what is't, Laertes? You cannot speak of reason to the Dane, And lose your voice: what wouldst thou beg, Laertes, That shall not be my offer, not thy asking? The head is not more native to the heart, The hand more instrumental to the mouth, Than is the throne of Denmark to thy father. What wouldst thou have, Laertes?

Laert. My dread lord,

Your leave and favour to return to France:

From whence though willingly I came to Denmark,

To show my duty in your coronation,

Yet now, I must confess, that duty done,

My thoughts and wishes bend again toward France

And how them to your gracious leave and pardon.

King. Have you your father's leave? What says Polonius?

Pol. He hath, my lord, wrung from me my slow By laboursome petition, and at last

Upon his will I seal'd my hard consent:

I do beseech you, give him leave to go.

King. Take thy fair hour, Laertes; time be thine,

And thy best graces spend it at thy will!

But now, my cousin Hamlet, and my son,—

Ham. [Aside] A little more than kin, and less than kind.

King. How is it that the clouds still hang on you? Ham. Not so, my lord; I am too much in the sun.

Queen. Good Hamlet, cast thy nighted colour off,

And let thine eye look like a friend on Denmark.

Do not for ever with thy vailed lids
Seek for thy noble father in the dust:

That thou dost think thee dead, that all lives must die,
Passing through nature to eternity.

Ay, madam, it is common.

Queen. If it be,

Why seems it so particular with thee? 'T seems,' Ham. Seems, madam! nay, it is; I know not 'Twould be alone my mirth, good mother,

Nor customary suits of solemn black,

Nor windy suspension of forced breath,

No, nor the fruitful river in the eye,

Nor the dejected 'haviour of the Visage,

Together with all forms, moods, shapes of grief,

That can denote me truly; these indeed seem,

For they are actions that a man might play:

But I have that within which passion show;

These but the trappings and the suits of woe.

King. 'Tis sweet and commendable in your nature, Hamlet,

To give these mourning duties to your father:

But, you must know, your father lost a father:

That father lost, lost his, and the survivor bound In filial obligation for some term

To do obsequious sorrow: but to perserve

In obstinate compliance is a course

Of infinite hardiness, and utter vanity;

It shows a will most incorrect to heaven,

A heart unfortified, a mind impatient,

An understanding simple and un schoold: For what we know must be and is as common As any the most vulgar thing to sense;

Why should we in our peevish opposition Take it to heart? fie! 'tis a fault to heaven,

A fault against the dead, a fault to nature,

To reason most absurd: whose common theme Is death, not grief, and our desire that such A weep which hath this cried, From the first corse till he that died today. 'This must be so.' We pray you, throw to earth This unprevailing woe, and think of us

As of a father: for let the world take note, You are the most immediate to our throne;

And with that nobility which is your own,

Than that which dearest father bears his son,

Do I impart toward you. For your intent In going back to school in Wittenberg, It is most retrograde to our desire:

And we beseech you, bend you to remain Here, in the cheer and comfort of our eye,

Our chiefest courtier, cousin, and our son.

Queen. Let not thy mother lose her prayers, Hamlet:

I pray thee, stay with us; go not to Wittenberg.

Ham. I shall in all my best obey you, madam.

King. Why, 'tis a loving and a fair reply;

Be as our father, Denmark; Denmark, come:

This gentle and unforeord accords of Hamlet.

Sits smiling to my heart: in grace whereof,

No jocund health that Denmark drinks to-day,

But the great cannon to the clouds shall tell,

And the king's rouse the heavens shall bruif again,

Re-sounding earthy thunder. Fare away.

[Exeunt all but Hamlet.

Ham. O, that this too solid flesh would melt,

Thaw and resolve itself into a dew!

Or that the Everlasting had not fix'd

His canon 'gainst self-slaughter! O God! God! How weary, stale, flat, and unprofitable

Seem to me all the uses of this world!

Fie on't! ah fie! it is an unweeded garden,

That grows to seed; things rank and gross in nature

Possess it merely. That it should come to this!

But two months dead: nay, not so much, not two:

So excellent a king; that was, to this,

Hyperion to a satyr; so loving to my mother

That he might not beteem the winds of heaven

To visit her face too roughly. Heaven and earth!

Must I remember? why, she would hang on him,

As if increase of appetite had grown

By what it fed on: and yet, within a month—

Let me not think on't—Fruity, thy name is woman—

A little month, or ere those shoes were old

With which she follow'd my poor father's body,

Like Niobe, all tears:—why she, even she

O God! a beast, that wants discourse of reason,

Would have mournd longer—married with my uncle,

My father's brother, but no more like my father

Than I to Hercules: within a month:

Ere yet the salt of most unriехouteous tears

Had left the flint in her galled eyes,

She married. O, most wicked speed, to post

With such dexterity to incestuous sheets!

It is not nor it cannot come to good:

But break, my heart; for I must hold my tongue.

Enter Horatio, Marcellus, and Bernardo.

Hor. Hail to your lordship!

Ham. I am glad to see you well:

Horatio,—or I do forget myself. Ever.

Hor. The same, my lord, and your poor servant

Ham. Sir, my good friend; I'll change that name with you:

And what make you from Wittenberg, Horatio? Marcellus?
Act I.

Hamlet. What, look'd he frowningly?

Hor. A countenance more in sorrow than in anger.

Ham. Pale or red?

Hor. Nay, very pale.

Ham. Encourage me, and fix'd his eyes upon you?

Hor. Most constantly.

Ham. Would I had been there.

Hor. It would have much amazed you.

Ham. Very like, very like. Stay'd it long?

Hor. While one with moderate haste might tell a hundred.

Mar. Longer, longer.

Hor. Not when I saw 't.

Ham. His beard was grizzled,—no?

Hor. It was, as I have seen it in his life,

A sable silver'd.

Ham. I will watch to-night;

Perechance 't will walk again.

Hor. I warrant it will.

Ham. If it assume my noble father's person,

I'll speak to it, though hell itself should gape

And bid me hold my peace. It is not all,

If you have hitherto conceal'd this sight,

Let it be tenable in your silence still;

And whatsoever else shall hap to-night,

Give it an understanding, but no tongue:

I will requite your loves. So, fare you well:

Upon the platform, 'twixt eleven and twelve,

I'll visit you.

All. Our duty to your honour.

Ham. Your loves, as mine to you: farewell.

[Exeunt all but Hamlet.

Enter Laertes and Ophelia.

Laer. My necessities are embark'd: farewell;

And sister, as the winds give benefit

And convoy is assistant, do not sleep,

But let me hear from you.

Opf. Do you doubt that?

Laer. For Hamlet and the trilling of his favour,

Hold it a fashion and a toy in blood,

A violet in the youth of privity nature,

Forward, not permanent, sweet, not lasting,

The perfume and suppliance of a minute;

No more.

Opf. No more but so?

Laer. Think it no more;

For nature, crescent, does not grow alone

In thaws and bulk, but, as this temple waxes,

The inward service of the mind and soul

Grows wide within. Perhaps he loves you now,

And now no soil nor cantle doth besmirch

The virtue of his will: but you must fear,

His greatness weigh'd, his will is not his own;

For he himself is subject to his birth;

He may not, as unvalued persons do,

Carve for himself: for on his choice depends

The safety and health of this whole state;

And therefore must his choice be circumscribed

Unto the voice and yielding of that body

Whereof he is the head. Then if he says he loves

It fits your wisdom so far to believe it

you, for

As he in his particular act and place

May give his settling deed, which is no further

Than the main voice of Denmark goes withal.

Then weigh what loss your honour may sustain,

If with too credent ear you list his songs,

Or lose your heart, or your chaste treasure open

To his unstammer'd importunity.
ACT I.

HAMLET.

SCENE IV.

Fear it, Ophelia, fear it, my dear sister, And keep you in the rear of your affection, Out of the shot and danger of desire. The leastest maid is prodigal enough, If she unmask her beauty to the moon; Virtue itself 'scapes not calumnious strokes: The emptiest babbler, as being still young, Too oft before their buttons be disclosed, And in the morn and liquid dew of youth Contagions blastments are most imminent. Be wary then; best safety lies in fear: Youth to itself rebels, though none near, The vastness of the matter and the lesson, As watchman to my heart. But, good my brother, Do not, as some ungracious pastors do, Show me the steep and thorny way to heaven; Whiles, like a puff'd and reckless libertine, Himself the primrose path of dalliance treads, And reck not his own rede.

Laert. O, fear me not. I stay too long: but here my father comes.

Enter Polonius.

A double blessing is a double grace; Occasion smiles upon a second leave.

Pol. Yet here, Laertes! abroad, abroad, for shame! The wind sits in the shoulder of your sail, And you are stay'd for. There! my blessing with And these few precepts in thy memory: [tbe! See thou character. Give thy thoughts no tongue, Nor any unproportion'd thought his act, Be thou familiar, but by no means vulgar. Those friends thou hast, and their adoption tried, Grapple them to thy soul with hoops of steel; But do not dull thy palm with entertainment Of each new-hatch'd, unledged comrade. Beware Of council but of friends; theirs is the voice, Bear't that the opposed may beware of thee. Give every man thy ear, but few thy voice; Take each man's censure, but reserve thy judgment. Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy, But not express'd in fancy; rich, not gaudy; For the apparel oft proclaims the man, And they in France of the best rank and station Are of a most select and generous chief in that. Neither a borrower nor a lender be: For loan oft loses both itself and friend, And borrowing dulls the edge of husbandry. This above all: to thine own self be true, And it must follow, as the night the day, Thou canst not then be false to any man. Farewell: my blessing season this in thee!

Laer. Most humbly do I take my leave, my lord.

Pol. The time invites you; go; your servants tend.

Laer. Farewell, Ophelia; and remember well What I have said to you.

Oph. 'Tis in my memory lock'd, And you yourself shall keep the key of it.

Laer. Farewell.

[Exit Polonius.]

Pol. What is 't, Ophelia, he hath said to you? Oph. No business, something touching the Lord.

Pol. Marry, well bethought!

[Hamlet. 'Tis told me, he hath very oft of late Given private time to you; and you yourself Have of your audience been most free and bountiful, If it be so, as so 'tis put on me,

[teous; And that in way of caution, I must tell you,

You shall not understand yourself so clearly As it behoves my daughter and your honour. What is between you? give me up the truth. He hath, my lord, of late made many tenders Of his affection to me.

Oph. I do not know, my lord, what I should think.

Pol. Ophel. I do not, my lord, what I should think.

Pol. I shall teach you: think yourself a baby; That you have ta'en these tenders for true pay. Which are not sterling. Tender yourself more dearly; Or — not to crack the wind of the poor phrase, Running it thus — you'll tender me a fool. Oph. I have been importuned with love in honourable fashion.

Pol. Ay, fashion you may call it; go to, go to. Oph. And hath given countenance to his speech, my lord, With almost all the holy vows of heaven. [know, Pol. Ay, springes to catch woodcocks. I do When the blood burns, how prodigal the soul Lends the tongue vows: these blazes, daughter, Giving more light than heat, extinct in both, Even in their promise, as it is a-making, You must not take for fire. From this time Be somewhat scatter'd of your maiden presence; Set your entertainments at a higher rate Than a command to parley. For Lord Hamlet, Believe so much in him, that he is young, And with a larger tether may he walk Than may be given you: in few, Ophelia, Do not believe his vows for they are brokers, Not of that dye which their investments show, But mere importers of unholy suits, Breathing like sanctified and pious bawds, The better to beguile. This is for all: I would not, in plain terms, from this time forth, Have you so slender any way, as to take words As to give words or talk with the Lord Hamlet. Look to 't, I charge you; come your ways. Oph. I shall obey, my lord.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—The platform.

Enter Hamlet, Horatio, and Marcellus.

Hor. The air bites shrewdly; it is very cold.

Hor. It is a nipping and an eager air.

Hor. What hour now?

Hor. No, it is struck.

Hor. Indeed? I heard it not; then it draws near.

Wherein the spirit held his wont to walk.

What does this mean, my lord?

Rouse. The clocks doth wake to-night and take his keepers's soul, and the swaggering up-springing reeds; And, as he drains his draughts of Rhinensis down, The kettle-drums and trumpet thus bray out The triumph of his pledge.

Hor. Is it a custom?

Hor. Ay, marry, is 't: But to my mind, though I am native here And to the manner born, it is a custom More honour'd in the breach than the observance. This heavy-headed revel east and west Makes us traduced and tax'd of other nations: They clepe us drunkards, and with swinish phrase Soil our addition: and indeed it takes From our achievements, though perform'd at height, The pith and narrow of our attribute. So, oft it chances in particular men, That for some vicious mole of nature in them, As, in their birth — wherein they are not guilty, Since nature cannot choose his origin — By the o'er-growth of some complexion, Oft breaking down the pales and forts of reason, Or by some habit that too much o'er-leavens The form of plausible manners, that these men, Carrying, I mean the stamp of one defect, Being nature's livery, or fortune's star,— Their virtues else — be they as pure as grace, As infinite as man may undergo — Shall in the general censure take corruption From that particular fault: the dram of eale.
Act I.

Hamlet. Scene V.

Doth all the noble substance of a doubt
To his own scandal.

Hor. Look, my lord, it comes!

Enter Ghost.

Ham. Angels and ministers of grace defend us!
Be thou a spirit of health or goblin damn’d,
Bring with thee airs from heaven or blasts from hell,
Be thy intents wicked or charitable,
Thou comest in such sacred attitudes as I,
That I will speak to thee: I’ll call thee Hamlet,
King, father, royal Dane: O, answer me!
Let me not burst in ignorance; but tell
Why thy canonized bones, hearsed in death,
Have burst their sarcofagum; why the sepulchre,
Wherein we saw thee quietly inter’d,
Hath oped his ponderous and marble jaws,
To cast thee up again. What may this mean,
That thou, dead corse, again in complete steel
Revisit’st thus the glimpses of the moon,
Making night hideous; and we fools of nature
So horribly to shake our disposition?

With thoughts beyond the reaches of our souls?
Say, why is this? wherefore? what should we do?

[Ghost beckons Hamlet.]

Hor. It beckons you to go away with it,
As if it some impartation did desire
To be alone.

Mar. Look, with what courteous action
It waves you to a more removed ground:
But do not go with it.

Hor. No, by no means.

Ham. It will not speak; then I will follow it.

Hor. Do not, my lord.

Ham. Why, what should be the fear?
I do not set my life at a pin’s fee;
And for my soul, what can it do to that,
Being a thing immortal as itself?

It waves me forth again: I’ll follow it.

Hor. What if it tempt you toward the flood, my lord,
Or to the dreadful summit of the cliff,
That beetles o’er his base into the sea,
And there assume some other horrible form,
Which might deprive your sovereignty of reason
And draw you into madness? think of it:
The very place puts toys of desperation,
Without more motive, into every brain
That looks so many fathom’s to the sea
And hears it roar beneath.

Ham. It waves me still.

Go on; I’ll follow thee.

Mar. You shall not go, my lord.

Ham. Hold off your hands.

Hor. Be ruled; you shall not go.

Ham. My fate cries out,
And makes each petty artery in this body
As hardy as the Nevan’s hump’s nerve.

Still am I call’d. Unhand me, gentlemen.
By heaven, I’ll make a ghost of him that lets me!
I say, away! Go on; I’ll follow thee.

[Exit Ghost and Hamlet.]

Hor. He waxes desperate with imagination.

Mar. Let’s follow; ’tis not fit thus to obey him.

Hor. Have after. To what issue will this come?

Mar. Something is rotten in the state of Den.

Hor. Heaven will direct it.

Mar. Nay, let’s follow him. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Another part of the platform.

Enter Ghost and Hamlet.

Ham. Where wilt thou lead me? speak; I’ll go
Ghost. Mark me. [no further.

Ham. I will.

Ghost. My hour is almost come,
When I to sulphurous and tormenting flames
Must render up myself.

Ham. Alas, poor ghost!

Ghost. Pity me not, but lend thy serious hearing
To what I shall unfold.

Ham. Speak: I am bound to hear.

Ghost. So art thou to revenge, when thou shalt
Ham. What? [hear.

Ghost. I am thy father’s spirit,
Doom’d for a certain term to walk the night,
And for the day confined to fast in fires,
Till the foul crimes done in my days of nature
Are burnt and purged away. But that I am forbid
To tell the secrets of my prison-house,
I could a tale unfold whose lightest word
Would harrow up thy soul, freeze thy young blood,
Make thy two eyes, like stars, start from their
Thy knitted and conical locks to part [spheres,
And each particular hair to stand an end,
Like quills upon the fretful porpentine;
But this eternal blazon must not be
To ears of flesh and blood. List, list, O, list!
If thou dost love thy dear father love—

Ham. O God!

Ghost. Revenge his foul and most unnatural
Ham. Murder! [murder.

Ghost. Murder most foul, as in the best it is;
But this most foul, strange and unnatural.

Ham. Haste me to know ’t, that I, with wings as
Of mediation or the winds of love, [swift
May sweep to my revenge.

Ghost. I find thee apt:
And dullest shouldst thou be than the fat weed
That roots itself in ease on Lethe wharf,
Wouldest thou not stir in this. Now, Hamlet, hear:
The will of my most seeming-virtuous queen:
O Hamlet, what a thing of God is there!
From me, whose love was of that dignity
That it went hand in hand even with the vow
I made to her in marriage, and to decline
Upon a wretched whose natural gifts were poor
To those of mine; canst thou, by charity,
As if never will be moved,
Though lewdness court it in a shape of heaven,
So lust, though to a radiant angel link’d,
Will sate itself in a celestial bed,
And prey on garlish
But, soft! me thinks I scent the morning air;
Brief let me be—Sleeping within my orchard,
My custom always of the afternoon,
Upon my secure hour thy uncle stole,
With juice of cursed hebenon in a vial,
And in the porches of my ears did pour
The leperous distillation: whose effect
Hath such an enmity with blood of man
That swift as quicksilver it courses through
The natural gates and alleys of the body,
And with a sudden vigour it doth possess
And curd, like eager droppings into milk,
The thin and wholesome blood: so did it mine;
And a most instant tetter hawk’d about,
Most lazur-like, with vile and loathsome crust,
All my smooth body.

Thus was I, sleeping, by a brother’s hand
Of life, of crown, of queen, at once dispatch’d:
Cut off even in the blossoms of my sin,
Unhousel’d, disappointed, unanel’d,
ACT II.

HAMLET. SCENE I.

No reckoning made, but sent to my account
With all my imperfections on my head;
O, horrible! O, horrible! most horrible!
If thou best nature in thee, bear it not;
Let not the royal bed of Denmark be
A conch for luxury and damned incest.
But, howsoever thou pursueth this act,
Taint not thy mind, nor let thy soul contrive
Against thy mother aught: leave her to heaven
And to those thorns that in her bosom lodge.
To prick and sting her. Fare thee well at once!
The glow-worm shows the matin to be near,
And 'gin to pale his effectual fire:
Adieu, adieu! Hamlet, remember me.

[Exeunt Hamlet, Ophelia, and other attendants.

HAMLET. Hor. What is 't, my lord? we will.

[Enter Horatio and Marcellus.

Hor. How is 't, my noble lord?

Ham. O, wonderful! What news, my lord?

Hor. Good my lord, tell it.

Ham. No; you'll reveal it.

Hor. Not I, my lord, by heaven.

Ham. How say you, then; would heart of man once
But you'll be secret? [think it?

Hor. Ay, by heaven, my lord.

Ham. There's me'er a villain dwelling in all Den-
But he's an arrant knave. [mark

Hor. There needs no ghost, my lord, come from
To tell us this. [the grave

Ham. Why, right; you are i' the right;
And so, without more circumstance at all,
I hold it fit that we shake hands and part:
You, as your business and desire shall point you;
For every man has business and desire.
Such as it is; and for mine own poor part,
Look you, I'll go pray. [lord.

Hor. These are but wild and whirling words, my

[Exeunt.

SCENE I. — A room in Polonius' house.

Enter Polonius and Reynaldo.

Pol. Give him this money and these notes, Rey-
Rey. I will, my lord. [hast.

Pol. You shall do marvellously wise, good Rey-
Before you visit him, to make inquire [hast,
Of his behaviour.

Reyn. My lord, I did intend it. [sir,

Pol. Marry, well said; very well said. Look you,
Enter Ophelia.

How now, Ophelia! what’s the matter?

Oph. O, my lord, my lord, I have been so affrighted

Pol. With what, i’ th’ name of God?

Oph. My lord, as I was sewing in my closet,

Lord Hamlet, with his doublet all unbraced;

No hat upon his head; his stockings foul’d,

Ungarter’d, and down-gyved to his ankle;

Tale as his shirt; his knees knocking each other;

And with a look so pitious in purport

As if he had been loosed out of hell

To speak of horrors,—he comes before me.

Pol. Mad for thy love?

Oph. My lord, I do not know;

But truly, I do fear it.

Pol. What said he?

Oph. He took me by the wrist and held me hard;

Then goes he to the length of all his arm;

And, with his other hand thus o’er his brow,

He falls to such perusal of my face

As he would draw it. Long stay’d he so;

At last, a little shaking of mine arm

And thrice his head thus waving up and down,

He raised a sigh so pitious and profound

That it did seem to shatter all his bulk

And end his being: that done, he lets me go;

And, with his other hand over his shoulder turn’d,

He seem’d to find his way without his eyes;

For out o’ doors he went without their help,

And, to the last, bend’d their light on me.

Pol. Come, go with me: I will go seek the king.

This is the very ecstacy of love.

Whose violent property bestows itself

And leads the will to desperate undertakings

As oft as any passion under heaven

That does afflict our natures. I am sorry.

What, have you given him any hard words of late?

Oph. No, my good lord, but, as you did command.

I did repel his letters and denied

His access to me.

Pol. That hath made him mad.

I am sorry that with better heed and judgment

I had not quoted him; I fear’d he did trifle,

And meant to wrench thee; but, beshrew my jealous nature!

To cast beyond ourselves in our opinions

As it is common for the younger sort

To lack discretion. Come, go we to the king:

This must be known; which, being kept close, might move

More grief to hide than hate to utter love. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—A room in the castle.

Enter King, Queen, Rosencrantz, Guildenstern, and Attendants.

King. Welcome, dear Rosencrantz and Guildenstern. Moreover that we much did long to see you, [stern] the need we have to use you did provoke

Our hasty sending. Something have you heard

Of Hamlet’s transformation; so call it, sith nor the exterior nor the inward man

Resembles that it was. What it should be

More than his father’s death, that thus hath put

So much from the understanding of himself, [him]

I cannot dream of: I entreat you both,

That, being of so young days brought up with him,

And sith so neighbour’d to his youth and haviour,

That you within your life you must stay here in our court

Some little time: so by your companies

To draw him on to pleasures, and to gather,

So much as from occasion you may glean,

Whether aught, to us unknown, afflicts him thus,

That, open’d, lies within our remedy. [you;

Queen. Good gentlemen, he hath much talk’d of
ACT II.

HAMLET.

SCENE II.

And sure I am two men there are not living
To whom be more others. If it will please you
To show us so much bounty that we may
As to expend your time with us awhile,
For the supply and profit of our hope.
Your visitation shall receive such thanks
As fits a king's remembrance.

Ros. Such as my majesties shall give me leave,
That both your majesties may have of us,
Put your dread pleasures more into command
Than to entreaty.

Gaut. But we both obey,
And here give up ourselves, in the full bent
To lay our service freely at your feet,
The ambassadors from Norway, my good

Queen. Thanks, Rosencrantz and gentle Guilden-

Quea. Thanks, Guildenstern and gentle Rosen

And I beseech you instantly to visit [crantz:
My too much changed son. Go, some of you,
And bring these gentlemen where Hamlet is.

Heavens make our presence and our practices
Pleasant and helpful to him !

Av, amen ! [Exit Rosencrantz, Guildenstern, and some

Enter Polonius.

Pol. The ambassadors from Norway, my good
Are joyfully return'd, [lord, Thon still hast been the father of good news.

Pol. Have I, my lord? I assure my good liege,
I hold my duty, as I hold my soul,
Both to my God and to my gracious king:
And think, or use this brain of mine
Hunts not the trail of policy so sure
As it hath used to do, that I have found
The very cause of Hamlet's lunacy.

King. O, speak of that; that do I long to hear.

Pol. Give first admittance to the ambassadors;
My news shall be the fruit to that great feast.

King. Thyself do grace to them, and bring them
in. [Exit Polonius.

He tells me, my dear Gertrude, he hath found
The head and source of all your son's disenter.

Queen. I doubt it is no other but the main;
His father's death, and our overhasty marriage.

King. Well, we shall sift him.

Re-enter Polonius, with Voltimand and Cor nellus.

Welcome, my good friends!

Say, Voltimand, what from our brother Norway?

Volt. Most fair return of greetings and desires.

Pol. Upon our first, he sent out to suppress
His nephew's levies; which to him appear'd
To be a preparation 'gainst the Polack:
But, better look'd into, he truly found
It was against your highness; whereat grieved,
That so his sickness, age and impotence
Was falsely borne in hand, sends out arrests
On Fortinbras; which, he, in brief, obeys;
Receives reliefs from Norway, and in fine
Makes vows to for his uncle never more.

Pol. To give the assay of arms against your majesty.

Whereon old Norway, overcome with joy,
Gives him three thousand crowns in annual fee,
And his commission to employ those soldiers,
So levied as before, against the Polack:
With an entreaty, herein further shown,
[Giving a paper,
That it might please you to give quiet pass
Through your dominions for this enterprise,
On such regards of safety and allowance
As therein are set down.

King. If it be commend'd, it likes us well;
And at our more consider'd time we'll read,
Answer, and think upon this business.

Meantime we thank you for your well-looked labour:
Go to your rest; at night we'll feast together.
Most welcome home! [Exit Voltimand and Cornelius.

Pol. This business is well ended.

My liege, and madam, to expostulate
What majesty should be, what duty is,
Why day is day, night night, and time is time,
Were nothing but to waste night, day and time.
Therefore, since brevity is the soul of wit,
And tediousness the limbs and outward flourishes,
I will be brief; your noble son is mad;
Mad call I it: for, to define true madness,
What is 't but to be nothing else but mad?
But let that go.

Queen. More matter, with less art.

Pol. Madam, I swear I use no art at all.
That he is mad, 'tis true: 'tis true 'tis pity;
And pity 'tis is 'tis a foolish figure;
But farewell it. for I will use no art.
Mad let us grant him, then; and now remains
That we find out the cause of this effect,
Or rather say, the cause of this defect,
For this effect defective comes by cause:
Thus it remains, and the remainder thus.

Perpend, I have a daughter — have while she is nine —
Who, in her duty and obedience, mark,
Hath given me this: now gather, and surmise.

[Reads.

That to the celestial and my soul's idol, the most bea-
tiiful Ophelia,

That's an ill name, a vile phrase; 'beautiful' is a vile phrase, but you shall hear. Thus:

[Reads.

In her excellent white bosom, these, &c.

Queen. Come this from Hamlet to her?

Pol. Good madam, stay awhile; I will be faithful.

[Reads.

'Doubt thou the stars are fire;

'Doubt that the sun doth move;

'Doubt truth to be a liar;

But never doubt I love.

'O dear Ophelia, I am ill at these numbers; I have not art to reckon my griefs; but that I love thee best, O most, best, believe it. Alas! Thine evermore, and everlastingly, whilst this machine is to him, Hamlet,This, in obedience, hath my daughter shown me,
And more above, hath his solicitings,
As they fell out by time, by means and place,
All given to mine ear.

King. But how hath she Received his love?

Pol. What do you think of me?

King. As of a man faithful and honourable.

Pol. I would fain prove so. But what might you think?

When I had seen this hot love on the wing—
As I perceived it, I must tell you that,
Before my daughter told me — what might you,
Or my dear majesty your queen here, think,
If I had play'd the desk or table-book,
Or given my heart a winking, mute and dumb,
Or look'd upon this love with idle sight;
What might you think? No, I went round to work
And my young mistress thus I did bespeak:

'Lord Hamlet is a prince, out of thy star;
This must not be; and then I precepts gave her,
That she should lock herself from his resort,
Admit no messenger, receive no tokens,
Which done, she took the fruits of my advice;
And he, requited — a short tale to make —
Fell into a sadness, then into a fast,
Thence to a watch, thence into a weakness,
Then to a lightness, and, by this declension, into the madness wherein now he raves,
And all we mourn for.
Do you think 'tis this? [that—]

It may be, very likely. — I'd fain know

That I have positively said 'Tis so,

When it proved otherwise?

Not that I know.

[Pointing to his head and shoulder] Take this from this, if this be otherwise:

If circumstances lead me, I will find

Where truth is hid, though it were hid indeed

Within the centre.

How may we try it further?

You know, sometimes he walks four hours

Here in the lobby.

[Together

Do so he does indeed.

At such a time I'll loose my daughter to be:

You and I behind an arras then;

Mark the encounter: if he love her not

And be from his reason fall'n thereon,

Let me be no assistant for a state,

But keep a farm and carters.

We will try it.

But, look, where sadly the poor wretch comes reading.

I'll board him presently.

[Exit King, Queen, and Attendants.

Enter Hamlet, reading.

O, give me leave:

How does my good Lord Hamlet?

Well, God-a-mercy.

Do you know me, my lord?

Excellent well; you are a fishmonger.

Not I, my lord.

Then I would you were so honest a man.

Honest, my lord!

Ay, sir: to be honest, as this world goes,

is to keep one's pickPocket out of ten thousand.

That's very true, my lord.

For if the sun breed maggots in a dead dog, being a god kissing carriion,—Have you a daughter?

I have, my lord.

Let her not walk 'tis the sun: conception is a blessing; but not as your daughter may conceive.

Friend, look to 't.

[Aside] How say you by that? Still harping on my daughter: yet he knew me not at first; he said I was a fishmonger: he is far gone, far gone:

and truly in my youth I suffered much extremity

for love; very near this, I'll speak to him again.

What do you read, my lord?

Words, words, words.

What is the matter, my lord?

Between who?

I mean, the matter that you read, my lord.

Slanders, sir: for the satirical rogue says here that old men have grey beards, that their faces are wrinkled, their eyes purging thick amber

and plum-tree gun and that they have a plentiful lack of wit, together with most weak hands: all which,

though I most powerfully and potently believe,

yet I hold it not honesty to have it thus set down, for yourself, sir, should be old as I am, if like a crab

you could go backward.

[Aside] Though this be madness, yet there is method in 't. Will you walk out of the air, my lord? Into my grave, and find [lord?]

or 'tis an air. [Aside] How pregnant sometimes his replies are! A happiness that often madness hits on, which reason and sanity could not so prosperously be delivered of. I will leave him, and suddenly contrive the means of meeting between him and my daughter.—My honorable lord, I will most humbly take my leave of you.

You cannot, sir, take from me any thing that I will more willingly part withal: except my life, except my life, except my life.

Fare you well, my lord.

These tedious old fools!

Eenter Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.

You go to seek the Lord Hamlet: there he

My honoured lord!

My most dear lord!

My excellent good friends! How dost thou,

Ah, Rosencrantz! Good hails, how do ye both?

As the indifferent children of the earth.

Happy, in that we are not over-happy;

On fortune's cap we are not the very button.

Nor the soles of her shoe?

Neither, my lord.

Then you live about her waist, or in the middle of her favours?

' Faith, her privates we.

In the secret parts of fortune? O, most true: she is a strumpet. What's the news?

None, my lord, but that the world's grown happier.

Then is doomsday near: but your news is not true. Let me question more in particular:

what have you, my good friends, deserved at the hands of fortune, that she sends you to prison hither?

Prison, my lord!

Denmark's a prison.

Then is the world one.

A goodly one; in which there are many conines, wards and dungeons, Denmark being one of the worst.

We think not so, my lord.

Why, then, 'tis use to you; for there is nothing either good or bad, but thinking makes it so: to me it is a prison.

Why then, your ambition makes it one;

'tis too narrow for your mind.

O God, I could be bounded in a nut-shell and count myself a king of infinite space, were it not that I have bad dreams.

Which dreams indeed are ambition, for the very substance of the ambitions is merely the shadow of a dream.

A dream itself is but a shadow.

Truly, and I hold ambition of so airy and light a quality that it is but a shadow's shadow.

Then are our beggars bodies, and our monarchs and outstretched heroes the beggar's shadows.

Shall we to the court? for, by my fay, I cannot reason.

We'll wait upon you.

No such matter: I will not sort you with the rest of my servants, for, to speak to you like an honest man, I am most dreadfully attended. But, in the beaten way of friendship, what make you at Elsinore?

To visit you, my lord: no other occasion.

Beggar that I am, I am even poor in thanks; but I thank you; and sure, dear friends, my thanks are too dear a halfpenny. Were you not sent for? Is it your own inclination? Is it a true visitation? Come, deal justly with me: come:

come: nay, speak.

What should we say, my lord?

Why, any thing, but to the purpose. You were sent for; and there is a kind of confession in your looks which your modesties have not craft enough to colour: I know the good king and queen

have at your heart.
Ros. To what end, my lord?

Ham. That you must teach me. But let me conjure by the most sacred pledges of our fellowship, by the constancy of our youth, by the obligation of our ever-preserved love, and by what more dear a better proposer could charge you withall, to be even and direct with me, whether you were sent for, or no?

Ros. [Aside to Claud.] What say you?

Ham. [Aside] Nay, then. I have an eye of you.—If you love me, hold not off.

Claud. My lord, we are sent for.

Ham. I will tell you why; so shall my anticipation prevent your discovery, and your secrecy to the king and queen mould no feather. I have of late but half an hour—no, lest all my mirth, for-gone all custom of exercises; and indeed it goes so heavily with my disposition that this goodly frame, the earth, seems to me a sterile promontory, this most excellent canopy, the air, look you, this brave o’erhanging firmament, this majestical roof fretted with golden fire, why, it appears no other thing to me than a foul and pestilent congregation of vapours. What a piece of work is a man! how noble in reason! how infinite in faculty! in form and moving how express and admirable! in action how like an angel! in apprehension how like a god! the beauty of the world! the paragon of animals! And yet, to me, what is this quintessence of dust? man delights not me: no, nor woman neither, though by your smiling you seem to say so.

Ros. My lord, there was no such stuff in my thoughts.

Ham. Why did you laugh then, when I said ‘man delights not me’?

Ros. To think, my lord, if you delight not in man, what lewd entertainment the players shall receive from you: we coted them on the way; and litter are they coming, to offer you service.

Ham. He that plays the king shall be welcome; his majesty shall have tribute of me; the adventurous knight shall use his foil and target; the lover shall not sigh gratis; the humorous man shall end his part in peace; the clown shall make those laugh whose lungs are tickled o’t he sere; and the lady shall say her mind trebly, or the blank verse shall halt for’t. What players are they?

Ros. Even those you were wont to take delight in, the tragedians of the city.

Ham. How chances it they travel? their residence, both in reputation and profit, was better be at home always.

Ros. I think their inhibition comes by the means of the late innovation.

Ham. Do they hold the same estimation they did when I was in the city? are they so follow’d?

Ros. No, indeed, are they not.

Ham. How comes it? do they grow rusty?

Ros. Nay, their endeavour keeps in the wonted pace: but there is, sir, an aery of children, little eyases, that cry out on the top of question, and are most tyrannically coddled for’t: these are now the fashion, and so berattle the common stages—so they call them—that many wearing rapiers are afraid of goose-quills and dare scarce come thither.

Ham. What, are they children? who maintains ‘em? how are they educated? Will they pursue the quality no longer than they can slug? will they not say afterwards, if they should grow themselves to call them actors, it is for want? as their means are no better— their writers do them wrong, to make them exclaim against their own succession?

Ros. ‘Faith, there has been much to do on both sides; and the nation holds it no sin to tarre them to controversy: there was, for a while, no money bid for their plays: and, unless the poet and the player went to cuffs in the question.

Ham. Is’t possible?

Gaut. O, there has been much throwing about of

Ham. Do the boys carry it away? [brawls.

Ham. What do they do, my lord; Hercules and his load too.

Ham. It is not very strange; for mine uncle is king of Denmark, and those that would make mows at him while my father lived, give twenty, forty, fifty, an hundred duets a-piece for his picture in little. Look you, there is something in this more than natural, if philosophy could find it out.

Gaut. There are the players.

Ham. Gentlemen, you are welcome to Elsinore. Your hands, come then: the appurtenance of welcome and ceremony which we owe you, shall be done to you in order: for we shall comply with you in this garb, lest my extent to the players, which, I tell you, must show fairly outward, should more appear like entertainment than yours. You are welcome: but my uncle-father and aunt-mother are deceived.

Gaut. In what, my dear lord?

Ham. I am but mad north-north-west: when the wind is southerly I know a hawk from a handsaw.

Enter Polonius.

Pol. Well he with you, gentlemen!

Ham. Mark you, Guildenstern, and you too; at each ear a hearer: that great baby you see there is not yet out of his swaddling-clouts.

Ros. Happily he’s the second time come to them; for they say an old man is twice a child.

Ham. I will prophesy he comes to tell me of the players: mark it. You say right, sir: o’ Monday morning: ‘twas so indeed.

Pol. My lord, I have news to tell you.

Ham. My lord, I have news to tell you. When Roscius was an actor in Rome,—

Pol. The actors are come hither, my lord.

Ham. But, buzz.

Pol. Upon mine honour,—

Ham. Then came each actor on his ass,—

Pol. The best actors in the world, either for tragedy, comedy, history, pastoral, pastoral-comical, historical-pastoral, tragical-historical, tragical-comical-historical-pastoral, scene indivisible, or poem unlimited: Seneca cannot be too heavy, nor Plautus too light. For the law of writ and the liberty, these are the only men.

Ham. O Jephthah, judge of Israel, what a treasure habes thou?

Pol. What treasure had he, my lord?

Ham. Why, ‘One fair daughter, and no more, The which he loved passing well.’

Pol. [Aside] Still on my daughter.

Ham. Am I not? the right, old Jephthah?

Pol. If you call me Jephthah, my lord, I have a daughter that I love passing well.

Ham. Nay, that follows not.

Pol. What follows, then, my lord?

Ham. Why, ‘As by lot, God wot,’ and then, you know.

‘It came to pass, as most like it was,— the first row of the pious chanson will show you more; for look, where my abridgment comes.

Enter four or five Players.

You are welcome, masters; welcome, all. I am glad to see thee well. Welcome, good friends. O, my old friend! thy face is valanced since I saw thee last: comest thou to be heard in Denmark? What, my young lady and mistress! By ’r lady, your face is nearer to heaven than when I saw you last, by the altitude of a chopine. Pray God, your voice, like a piece of uncurrent gold, be not cracked within the ring. Masters, you are all wel-

of. We'll e'en to't like French falconers, fly at any thing we see: we'll have a speech straight: come, give us a taste of your quality; come, a passionate speech.

First Play. What speech, my lord?

Ham. I heard thee speak me a speech once, but it was never acted; or, if it was, not above once; for the play, I remember, pleased not the million: 'twas cavilare to the general: but it was—as I was—repealing, and others, whose judgments in such matters cried in the top of mine—an excellent play, well digested in the scenes, set down with as much modesty as cunning. I remember, one said there were no sallets in the lines to make the matter savoury, nor no matter in the phrase that might fit the author of affectation: but called it an honest method, as wholesome as sweet, and by very much more handsome than fine. One speech in it I chiefly loved: 'twas Aeneas' tale to Didon; and thereabout of it especially, where he speaks of Priam's slaughter: if it live in your memory, begin this line: let me see, let me see—

'The rugged Pyrrhus, like the Illyrian beast,'—it is not so:—it begins with Pyrrhus:

'The rugged Pyrrhus, he whose sable arms,
Black as his purpose, did the night resemble
When he lay encompass the enchanted horse,
How countless and bewildering his composure smoulders With heraldry more dismal: head to foot
Now is he total gules; hideously trick'd!
With blood of fathers, mothers, daughters, sons,
Baked and impastied with the parching streets,
That lend a tyrannous and damned light To the lord's murder: toasted in wrath and fire;
And thus o'ersized with coagulate gore,
With eyes like carbuncles, the hellish Pyrrhus
Old grandsire Priam seeks.'

So, proceed you.

Pol. For God, my lord, well spoken, with good accent and good discretion.

First Play. 'Anon he finds him
Striking too short at Greeks; his antique sword,
Rebellions to his arm, lies where it falls,
Repealing to command: unequal match'd,
Pyrrhus at Priam drives; in rage strikes wide;
Rouseth the whist and whine with his fell sword
The unminded father falls. Then senseless li-
Seeming to feel this blow, with flaming top [mum,
Stoops to his base, and with a hideous crash
Takes prisoner Pyrrhus' ear: for, lo! its sword,
Whipping the milk of his milky head
Of reverence, Priam seem'd i'the air to stick:
So, as a painted tyrant, Pyrrhus stood,
And like a neutral to his will and matter,
Did nothing.

But, as we often see, against some storm,
a silence in the heavens, the rack stand still,
The bold winds speechless and the orb below
As hush as death, anon the dreadful thunder
Doth rend the region, so, after Pyrrhus' pause,
Aroused vengeance sets him new a-work;
And never did the Cyclops' hammers fall
On Jove's armour forged for proof eterne
With less remorse than Pyrrhus' bleeding sword
Now falls on Priam.

Out, out, thou strangler, Fortuné: All you gods,
In general synod, take away her power;
Break all the spokes and fellies from her wheel,
And bowl the round nave down the hill of heaven,
As low as to the earth!

Pol. This is too long.

Ham. It shall to the barber's, with your beard.

Prithee, say on: he's for a jig or tale of basely, or he sleeps: say on: come to Hecuba.

First Play. 'But who, O, who had seen the mob-

Hecuba. 'The mobbed queen?'

Pol. That's good; 'mobbed queen' is good.

First Play. Run barefoot up and down, threatening
Times With bissone rhenus: a clout upon that head
Where late the diadem stood, and for a robe,
About her neck and all o'er-teemed joints,
A blanket, in the alarm of fear caught up;
Who this had seen, with tongue in venom steep'd,
'Gainst Fortune's state's base treason have pronounced:
But if the gods themselves did see her then
When she saw Pyrrhus make malicious sport
In mincing with his sword her husband's limbs,
The instant burst of clamour that she made,
Unless thyself or mine player bet at all,
Would have made null the burning eyes of
And passion in the gods.'

Ham. It's well; I'1l have thee speak out the rest soon. Good my lord, will you see the players well bestowed? Do you hear, let them be well used; for they are the abstract and brief chronicles of the time: after your death you were better have a bad epitaph than their ill report while you live.

Pol. My lord, I will use them according to their due;

Ham. God's bodykins, man, much better: use every man after his desert, and who should scarce whipping? Use them after your own honour and dignity: the less they deserve, the more merit is in your bounty. Take them in.

Pol. Come, sirs.

Ham. Follow him, friends: we'll hear a play to morrow. [Exit Polonius with all the players but the First.] Dost thou hear me, old friend; can you play the Murder of Gonzago?

First Play. Ay, my lord.

Ham. We'll ha't to-morrow night. You could, for a need, study a speech of some dozen or sixteen lines, which I would set down and insert in't, could you not?

First Play. Ay, my lord.

Ham. Very well. Follow that lord; and lock you mock him not. [Exit First Player.] My good friends, I'1l leave you till night; you are welcome to Elsinore.

Ros. Good my lord!

Ham. Ay, so, God be wi'ye: [Exit Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.] Now I am alone. O, what a rogue and peasant slave am I! Is it not better to endure the ills we have than fly to others which we know not of? But in a fiction, in a dream of passion, Could force his soul so to his own conceit That from her working all his visage wann'd, Tears in his eyes, distraction in his aspect, A broken voice, and his whole function suitting With forms to his conceit? and all for nothing! For Hecuba! What's Hecuba to him, or he to Hecuba, That he should weep for her? What would he do, Had he the motive and the cue for passion That I have? He would drown the stage with tears And cleave the general ear with horrid speech, Make mad the guilty and appall the free, Confound the ignorant, and amaze indeed The very faculties of eyes and ears. Yet I,

A dull and muddy-mettled rascal, peak,
Like John-a-dreams, uppregnant of my cause,
And can say nothing; no, not for a king,
Upon whose property and most dearest life
A damn'd defeat was made. Am I a coward? Who calls me villain? breaks my pate across? Plucks off my beard, and blows it in my face?
Tweaks me by the nose? gives me the lie I the throat,

ACT III.

HAMLET.

SCENE I.—A room in the castle.

Enter King, Queen, Polonius, Ophelia, Rosen-Grantz, and Guildenstern.

King. And can you, by no drift of circumstance, Get from him why he puts on this confusion, Grating so harshly all his days of quiet With turbulent and dangerous lunacy? Ros. He does confess he feels himself distracted; But from what cause he will by no means speak. Guild. Nor do we find him forward to be sounded, But, with a crafty madness, keeps aloof. When we would bring him on to some confession Of his true state. Queen. Did he receive you well? Ros. Most like a gentleman. Guild. But with much forcing of his disposition. Ros. Niggard of question; but, of our demands, Most free in his reply. Queen. Did you assay him To any pastime? Ros. Madam, it so fell out, that certain players We o'er-ranged on the way; of these we told him; And there did seem in him a kind of joy To hear of it; they are about the court, And, as I think, they have already order This night to play before him. Pol. 'Tis most true: And he beseech'd me to entreat your majesties To hear and see the matter. King. With all my heart; and it doth much content me To hear him so inclined. Good gentlemen, give him a further edge, And drive his purpose on to these delights. Ros. We shall, my lord. [Exit. Rosenrantz and Guildenstern.

Sweet Gertrude, leave us too;

For we have closely sent for Hamlet hither, That he, as 't were by accident, may here Affront Ophelia: Her father and myself, lawful espials, Will so bestow ourselves that, seeing, unseen, We may of their encounter frankly judge, And gather by him, as he is behaved, It 't be the ambition of his love or no That thus he suffers for.

Queen. I shall obey you. And for your part, Ophelia, I do wish That your good beauties be the happy cause Of Hamlet's wildness: so shall I hope your virtues Will bring him to his wonted way again, To both your honours.

Oph. Madam, I wish it may. [Exit Queen. Have by the very cunning of the scene
Been struck so to the soul that presently They have prochlin'd their misdeeds; For murder, though it have no tongue, will speak With most miraculous organ. I'll have these players

Play something like the murder of my father Before mine uncle: I 'll observe his looks; I 'll ent him to the quick: if he but blech, I know my course. The spirit that I have seen May be the devil: and the devil hath power To assume a pleasing shape; yea, and perhaps Out of my weakness and my melancholy, As he is very potent with such spirits, Abuses me to damn me: I 'll have grounds More relative than this: the play 's the thing Wherein I 'll catch the conscience of the king. [Exit.

Pol. Ophelia, walk you here. Gracious, so please you, We will bestow ourselves. [To Ophelia] Read on this book; That show of much an exercise may colour Your loneliness. We are oft to blame in this,— 'T is too much proved— that with devotion's visage And pious action we do sugar o'er the devil himself. [Asself] O, 'tis too true! Enter Hamlet.

Ham. To be, or not to be: that is the question: Whether 't is nobler in the mind to suffer The slings and arrows of outrageous fortune, Or to take arms against a sea of troubles, And by opposing end them? To die: to sleep; No more; and by a sleep to say we end The heart-ache and the thousand natural shocks That flesh is heir to, 't is a consummation Devoutly to be wish'd. To die, to sleep:— To die, to sleep: ay, there's the rub; For in that sleep of death what dreams may come When we have shuffled off this mortal coil, Must give us pause: there's the respect That makes calamity of so long life; For who would bear the whips and scorns of time, The oppressor's wrong, the proud man's contumely, The pangs of despised love, the law's delay, The insolence of office and the spurns That patient merit of the unworthy takes, When he himself might his quietus make With bare bodkin? who would fardels bear, To grunt and sweat under a weary life, But that the dread of something after death, The undiscover'd country from whose bourn No traveller returns, puzzles the will And makes us rather bear those ills we have Than fly to others that we know not of? That for a very Philips son of a Philips bear To grunt and sweat under a weary life, But that the dread of something after death, The undiscover'd country from whose bourn No traveller returns, puzzles the will And makes us rather bear those ills we have Than fly to others that we know not of? That for a very Philips son of a Philips bear To grunt and sweat under a weary life, But that the dread of something after death, The undiscover'd country from whose bourn No traveller returns, puzzles the will And makes us rather bear those ills we have Than fly to others that we know not of? HAMLET.

SCENE II.

Re-enter King and Polonius.

King. Love! his affections do not that way tend; Nor what he spake, though it lack'd form a little, Was not of such a strain as that which o'er his O'er which his melancholy sits on brood; [soul, And I do doubt the hatch and the disclose Will be some danger: for to prevent, I have in quick determination Thus set it down: he shall with speed to England, For the demand of our neglected tribute; Haply the seas and countries different With variable objects shall expell This something-settled matter in his heart, Wherein his brains still beating puts him thus From fashion of himself. What think you on't? Pol. It shall do well for you. The origin and commencement of his grief Sprung from neglected love. How now, Ophelia! You need not tell us what Lord Hamlet said; We heard it all. My lord, do as you please; But, if you hold it up, after the play Let your quick mother all alone entreat him To show his grief: let her be round with him; And I'll be placed, so please you, in the ear Of all their conference. If she find him not, To England send him, or confine him where Your wisdom best shall think.

Ham. It shall be so. Madness in great ones must not unwatch'd go.

SCENE II.—A hall in the castle. [Exeunt.

Enter Hamlet and Players.

Ham. Speak the speech, I pray you, as I pronounced it to you, trippingly on the tongue: but if you mouth it, as many of your players do, I had as lief the town-crier spoke my lines. Nor do I swear the air too much with your hand, thus, but use all gently; for in the very torrent, tempest, and as I may say, the whirlwind of passion, you must acquire and beget a temperance that may give it smoothness. O, it offends me to the soul to hear a robustious periwig-pated fellow pass a passion to tatters, to very rags, to split the ears of the groundlings, who for the most part are capable of nothing but theillusory, the overdone, the improvident, and noised I would have such a fellow whipped for thus profaning Tereant; it out-heroids Herod: pray you, avoid it.

First Play. I warrant your honour.

Ham. Be not too tame neither, but let your own discretion be your tutor: suit the action to the word, the word to the action: with this special observance, that you o'erstep not the modesty of nature: for anything so overdone is from the purpose of playing, whose end, both at the first and now, was and is, to hold, as 't were, the mirror up to nature; to show virtue her own feature, scorn her own image, and the very age and body of the time his form and pressure. Now this overdone, or come tardy off, though it make the mask slip, cannot but make the judicious grieve: the censure of the which one must in your allowance o'erweigh a whole theatre of others. O, there be players that have seen play, and heard others praise, and that highly, not to speak it profanely, that either having the accent of Christians nor the gait of Christian, pagan, nor man. have so struttèd and bellowed that I have thought some of nature's journeymen had made men and not made them well; they imitated humanity so abominably.

First Player. Some, we have reformed that indifferently with us, sir.

Ham. O, reform it altogether. And let those that play your clowns speak no more than is set down for them; for there be of them that will themselves laugh, to set on some quantity of barren spec-
Ham. It was a brute part of him to kill so capital a soul there. Be the players ready?

Enter Polonius, Rosencrantz, and Guildenstern.

Pol. And the queen too, and that presently.
Ham. Bid the players make haste. [Exit Polonius.] Will you two help to hasten them?
Ros. We will, my lord.

Ham. What ho! Horatio!

Enter Horatio.
Hor. Here, sweet lord, at your service.
Ham. Horatio, thou art e'en as just a man As 'er my conversation coped within.
Hor. O, my dear lord.—
Ham. Nay, do not think I flatter; For what advancement may I hope from thee That no revenue hast but thy good spirits, To feed and clothe thee? Why should the poor be flatter'd?
No, let the candid tongue lick absurd pomp, And crook the pregnant hinges of the knee Where thrift may follow fawning. Dost thou hear? Since my dear soul was mistress of her choice And could of men distinguish, her election Hath seal'd thee for herself; for thou hast been As one, in suffering all, that suffers nothing; A man that fortune's buffets and rewards Hast ta'en with equal thanks: and blest are those Whose blood and judgment are so well commingled, That they are not a pipe for fortune's finger To sound what wild step she please. Give me that man That is not passion's slave, and I will wear him In my heart's core, ay, in my heart of heart. Give him heedful note; For I mine eyes will rivet to his face, And after we will both our judgments join In censure of his seeming.

Hor. Well, my lord: If he steal aught in the whilst this play is playing, And beare detecting, I will pay the theft.

Ham. Excellent, faith; of the chameleon's dish: I eat the air, promise-crammed; you cannot feed eponos so.

King. I have nothing with this answer, Hamlet; the theme you slip.

Pol. That did I, my lord; and was accounted a Ham. What did you enact? [good actor.
Pol. I did enact Julius Cesar: I was killed i' the Capitol; Brutus killed me.

[Exeunt Players.

Enter Polonius, Rosencrantz, and Guildenstern.

Pol. And the queen too, and that presently.
Ham. Bid the players make haste. [Exit Polonius.] Will you two help to hasten them?
Ros. We will, my lord.

Ham. What ho! Horatio!

Enter Horatio.
Hor. Here, sweet lord, at your service.
Ham. Horatio, thou art e'en as just a man As 'er my conversation coped within.
Hor. O, my dear lord.—
Ham. Nay, do not think I flatter; For what advancement may I hope from thee That no revenue hast but thy good spirits, To feed and clothe thee? Why should the poor be flatter'd?
No, let the candid tongue lick absurd pomp, And crook the pregnant hinges of the knee Where thrift may follow fawning. Dost thou hear? Since my dear soul was mistress of her choice And could of men distinguish, her election Hath seal'd thee for herself; for thou hast been As one, in suffering all, that suffers nothing; A man that fortune's buffets and rewards Hast ta'en with equal thanks: and blest are those Whose blood and judgment are so well commingled, That they are not a pipe for fortune's finger To sound what wild step she please. Give me that man That is not passion's slave, and I will wear him In my heart's core, ay, in my heart of heart. As I do thee.—Something too much of this.— There is a play to-night before the king; One scene of it comes near the circumstance Which I have told thee of my father's death: I pricked, when thou sawest that act afore, Even with the very comment of thy soul Observe mine uncle: if his occul'ted guilt Do not itself unkeenel in one speech, It is a damned ghost that we have seen, And my imaginations are as foul As Vulcan's sifthy. Give him heedful note; For I mine eyes will rivet to his face, And after we will both our judgments join In censure of his seeming.

Hor. Well, my lord: If he steal aught in the whilst this play is playing, And beare detecting, I will pay the theft.
Ham. They are coming to the play; I must be Get you a place. [idle: Denish March. A flourish. Enter King, Queen, Polonius, Ophelia, Rosencrantz, Guildenstern, and others.

King. How fares our cousin Hamlet?
Ham. Excellent, faith; of the chameleon's dish: I eat the air, promise-crammed; you cannot feed eponos so.

King. I have nothing with this answer, Hamlet; the theme you slip.

Ham. No, nor mine now. [To Polonius] My lord, you played once i' the university, you say?
Pol. That did I, my lord; and was accounted a Ham. What did you enact? [good actor.
Pol. I did enact Julius Cesar: I was killed i' the Capitol; Brutus killed me.
Make us again count o’er ere love be done! But, woe is me, you are so sick of late, So you from a state of former great health, That I distrust you. Yet, though I distrust, Discomfit you, my lord, it nothing must: For women’s fear and love holds quantity; In neither aught, or in extremity.

Now, what my love is, proof hath made you know; And as my love is sized, my fear is short: Where love is great, the littlest doubts are fear; Where little fears grow great, great love grows there. [shortly too;]

P. King. Faith, I must leave thee, love, and My operant powers their functions leave to do: And thou shalt live in this fair world behind, Honour’d, beloved; and hapy one as kind For husband shall thou —
P. Queen. O. confound the rest! Such love must needs be treason in my breast: In second husband let me be accurst! None wert the second but who kill’d the first.

Ham. [Aside] Wormwood, wormwood. [move
P. Queen. The instances that second marriage Are base respects of thrift, but none of love: A second time I kill my husband dead, When second husband kisses me in bed. [speak: But what we do determine oft we break. Purpose is but the slave to memory, Of violent birth, but poor validity: Which now, like fruit unripe, sticks on the tree; But fall, unshaken, when they mellow be. Most necessary ’tis that we forget To pay ourselves what to ourselves is debt: What to ourselves in passion we propose, The passion ending, doth the purpose lose. The violence of either grief or joy Their own enacts with themselves destroy: Where joy most renews, grief doth most lament; Grief joy, joy griefes, on slender incident. This world is not for aye, nor ’tis not strange That even our loves should with our fortunes change;

For ’t is a question left us yet to prove, Whether love lead fortune, or else fortune love. The great man down, you mark his favourite flies; The poor advanced makes friends of enemies. And hitherto doth love on fortune tend; For who not needs shall never lack a friend, And who in want a hollow friend doth try, Doth by seasons his heart, this engine try. But, orderly to end where I begun, Our wills and fates do so contrary run That our devices still are overthrown; [own: Our thoughts are ours, their ends none of our So think thou wilt no second husband wed; But die thy thoughts when thy first lord is dead.
P. King. No earth to me give food, no heaven light! Sport and repose lock from me day and night! To desperation turn my trust and hope! An anchor’s cheer in prison be my scope! Enchanted eyes that blanks the face of joy Meet what I do would have well and it destroy! Both here and hence pursue me lasting strife, If, once a widow, ever I be wife! Ham. If she should break it now! P. King. ’T is deeply sworn. Sweet, leave me Here, in the garden, with my my wife. My spirits grow dull, and fain I would beguile The tedious day with sleep. [Sleeps.]
P. Queen. Sleep rock thy brain; And never come mischance between us twain! [Exit.]

Ham. Madam, how like you this play? Queen. The lady protests too much, methinks. Ham. 0, but she’ll keep her word.

King. Have you heard the argument? No offence in ’t? Ham. No, they do but jest, poison in jest, offeuce i’ the world.

King. What do you call the play? Ham. The Mouse-trap. Marry, how? Tropically. This play is the image of a murder done in Vienna: Gonzago is the duke’s name; his wife, Baptista; you and see anon; ’t is a curious piece of work: but what o’ that? your majesty and we that have free souls, it touches us not: let the galled jade wince, our withers are unwrung.

Enter Lucianus.

This is one Lucianus, nephew to the king.
Oph. You are as good as a chorus, my lord.
Ham. I could interpret between you and your love, if I could see the puppets dallying.
Oph. You are keen, my lord, you are keen.
Ham. It would cost you a groaning to take off my edge.
Oph. Still better, and worse.
Ham. So you must take your husbands. Begin, murderer; pax, leave thy triable faces, and begin.
Come: ’tis the creaking raven doth bellow for revenge;
Luc. Thoughts black, hands apt, drugs fit, and P. time agreeing;
Confederate treason, else no creature seeing; Thou mixture rank, of midnight weeds collected, With Hecate’s ban three blasts thrice inflamed, Thy natural magic and dire property, On wholesome life usurp immediately.

[Pour the potion into the sleeper’s ears.
Ham. He poisons him! the garden for estate.
His name’s Gonzago: the story is extant, and writ in choice Italian: you shall see anon how the murderer gets the love of Gonzago’s wife.
Oph. The king rises.
Ham. What, frightened with false fire!
Queen. How fares my lord?
P. Give o’er the play.
King. Give me some light: away!
All. Lights, lights, lights!

[Exeunt all but Hamlet and Horatio.

Ham. Why, let the stricken deer go weep, The hart ungalled play; For some must watch, while some must sleep: So runs the world way.

Would not this, sir, and a forest of feather—if the rest of my fortunes turn Turk with me—with two Provincial roses on my razed shoes, get me a fellowship in a crew of players, sir?
Hor. Half a share.
Ham. A whole one, 1.
For thou dost know, O Damon dear,
This realm dismantled was
Of Jove himself; and now reigns here
A very—pajock.
Hor. You might have rhymed.
Ham. O good Horatio, I’ll take the ghost’s word for a thousand pound. Didst perceive?
Hor. Very well, my lord.
Ham. Upon the talk of the poisoning?
Hor. I did very well note him.
Ham. Ah, ha! Come, some music! come, the recorders!
For if the king like not the comedy,
Why then, before, he likes it not, perdy.
Come, some music!

Re-enter Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.

Gui. Good my lord, vouchsafe me a word with
Ham. Sir, a whole history.
[you.
Gud. The king, sir,—
Ham. Ay, sir, what of him?
Gud. Is in his retirement marvellous distempered,
Ham. With drink, sir?

631
Pol. By the mass, and 1 is like a camel, indeed.

Ham. Methinks it is like a weasel.

Pol. It is backed like a weasel.

Ham. Or like a whale?

Pol. Very like a whale.

Ham. Then I will come to my mother by and by. They feel me to the top of my bent. I will come by and by.

Pol. I will say so.

Ham. By and by is easily said. [Exit Polonius.]

Leave me, friends. [Exit all but Hamlet.]

Tis now the very witching time of night,
When churchyards yawn, and specters walk their rounds.
Contagion to this world: now could I drink hot
And do such bitter business as the day
Would quake to look on. Soft! now to my mother,
O heart, lose not thy nature; let not ever
The soul of Xerxes enter this firm bosom:
Let me be cruel, not unnatural:
I will speak daggers to her, but use none;
My tongue and soul in this be hypocrites;
How in my words soever she be shent,
To give them seals never, my soul, consent! [Exit.]

SCENE III.—A room in the castle.

Enter King, Rosencrantz, and Guildenstern.

King. I like him not, nor stands it safe with us
To let his madness range. Therefore prepare you;
I your commission will forthwith dispatch,
And he to England shall along with you:
The terms of our estate may not endure
Hazard so dangerous as doth hourly grow
Out of his lunacies.

Gud. We will ourselves provide:
Most holy and religious fear it is
To keep those many minds that are safe
That live and feed upon your majesty.

Ros. The single and peculiar life is bound,
With all the strength and armour of the mind,
To keep itself from noyance; but much more
That spirit upon whose weal depend and rest
The lives of many. The cease of majesty
Dies not alone; but, like a gulf, doth draw
What's near it with it; it is a massy wheel,
Fix'd on the summit of the highest mount.
To whose huge spokes ten thousand lesser things
Are mortised and adjoint'd; which, when it fails,
Each such small piece of it in consequence,
Attends the boisterous ruin. Never alone
Died the king sigh, but with a general groan.

King. Arm you, I pray you, to this speedy voyage;
For we will letters put upon this fear,
Which now goes too free-footed.

Ros. We will haste us.

Ham. Do you see yonder cloud that's almost in shape of a camel?

Pol. By the mass, and 1 is like a camel, indeed.

Ham. Methinks it is like a weasel.

Pol. It is backed like a weasel.

Ham. Or like a whale?

Pol. Very like a whale.

Ham. Then I will come to my mother by and by.

King. Arm you, I pray you, to this speedy voyage;
For we will letters put upon this fear,
Which now goes too free-footed.

Ros. We will haste us.
And, like a man to double business bound,
I stand in pause where I shall first begin,
And both neglect. What if this cursed hand
Were thicker than itself with brother's blood,
Is there not something strange in our proceedings?
To wash it white as snow? Wherefore serves mercy
But to confront the visage of offence?
And what's in prayer but this two-fold force,
To be forstalled ere we come to fall?
Or pardon'd being down? Then I'll look up:
My fault is past. But, O, what form of prayer
Can serve my turn? 'Forgive me my foul murder'?
That cannot be: since I am still possess'd
Of those effects for which I did the murder,
My crown, mine own ambition and my queen.
May one be pardon'd and retain the offence?
In the corrupted currents of this world:
Offence's gilded hand may show by justice,
And oft 'tis seen the wicked prize itself
Buys out the law: but 'tis not so far:
There is no shuffling, there the action lies
In his true nature; and we ourselves compell'd,
Even to the verylenth and forehead of our faults.
To give in evidence. What then? what rests?
Try what repentance can: what can it not?
Yet what can it when one can not repent?
O wretched state! O bosom black as death!
O limed soul, that, struggling to be free
Art more engaged! Help, help, poor assay! A Bow, stubborn knees; and, heart with strings of Steel, be soft as sinews of the new-born babe!
All may be well. [Retires and kneels.

Enter Hamlet.

Ham. Now might I do it pat, now he is praying;
And now I'll do't. And so he goes to heaven;
And so am I revenged: That would be scann'd:
A villain kills my father; and for that,
I, his sole son, do this same villain send
To heaven.
O, this is hire and salary, not revenge.
He took my father grossly, full of bread;
With all his crimes broad blown, as blush as May;
And how his audit stands who knows save heaven?
But in our circumstance and course of thought,
'Tis heavy with him: and am I then revenged,
To take him in the purging of his soul,
When he is fit and season'd for his passage?
No!
Up, sword; and know thou a more horrid hent:
When he is drunk asleep, or in his rage,
Or in the farthest prospect of revenge:
At gaming, swearing, or about some act
That has no relish of salvation in 't;
Then trip him, that his heels may kick at heaven,
And that his soul may be as damn'd and black
As hell, whereeto it goes. My mother stays:
This physic but prolongs thy sickly days. [Exit.

King. [Treading] My words fly up, my thoughts remain below:
Words without thoughts never to heaven go.

Enter Queen and Polonius.

Pol. He will come straight. Look you lay home
him:
Tell him his pranks have been too broad to bear with,
And that your grace hath screen'd and stood be-under him.

Ham. [Within] Mother, mother, mother!

Queen. [Within] I'll warrant you, Bear me not: withdraw. I hear him coming.

Enter Hamlet.

Ham. Now, mother, what's the matter?

Queen. Hamlet, thou hast thy father much of fenced.

Ham. Mother, you have my father much of fenced.

Queen. Come, come, you answer with an idle tongue.

Ham. Go, go, you question with a wicked tongue.

Queen. Why, how now, Hamlet!

Ham. What's the matter now?

Queen. Have you forgot me?

Ham. No, by the rood, not so; You are the queen, your husband's brother's wife; And—would it were not so!—you are my mother.

Queen. Nay, then, I'll act those to you that can speak.

Ham. Come, come, and sit you down; you shall
You go not till I set you up a glass
Where you may see the utmost part of you.

Queen. What will thou do? thou wilt not murder
Help, help, ho!

Pol. [Behind?] What, ho! help, help, help!

Ham. [Drawing] How now! a rat? Dead, for a ducat, dead! [Makes a pass through the arras.

Queen. O me, what hast thou done?

Ham. Nay, I know not:
Is it the king?

Queen. O, what a rash and bloody deed is this!

Ham. A bloody deed! almost as bad, good mother,
As kill a king, and marry with his brother.

Queen. As kill a king!

Ham. Ay, lady, 't was my word,

Thou wretched, rash, intruding fool, farewell!
I took thee for thy better: take thy fortune;

Thou find'st to be too busy is some danger.

Leave wringing of your hands: peace! sit you down,
And let me wring your heart; for so I shall,
If it be made of penetrable stuff,
If damned custom have not brass'd it so
That it is proof and bulwark against sense.

Queen. What have I done, that thou dar'st wag thy tongue

In noise so rude against me?

Ham. Such an act

That blurs the grace and blush of modesty,

Call's virtue hypocrite, takes off the rose

From the fair forehead of an innocent love

And sets a blaster there, makes marriage-vows

As false as dier's oaths: O, such a deed

As from the body of contraction plucks

The very soul, and sweet religion makes

A ransom of words: heaven's face doth glow;

Yea, this solidity and compound mass,

With tristful visage, as against the doom,

Is thought-sick at the act.

Ay me, what act,

That roars so loud, and thunders in the index?

Ham. Look here, upon this picture, and on this,

The counterfeit presentment of two brothers.

See, what a grace was seated on this brow:

Hyperion's curls; the front of Jove himself;

An eye like Mars, to threaten and command;

A station like the herald Mercury,

New-lighted on a heaven-kissing hill;

A combination and a form indeed,

Where every god did seem to set his seal,

To give the world assurance of a man.

This was the very body of the deed, for what fol-

Here is your husband: like a mildew'd ear, [low's:

Blasting his wholesome brother. Have you eyes?

Could you on this fair mountain leave to feed,

And batten on this moor? Ha! have you eyes?

You cannot call it love; for at your age

The hey-day in the blood is tame, it's humble,
Hamlet.

And waits upon the judgment: and what judgment
Would step from this to this? Sense, sure, you have,
Else could you not have motion; but sure, that sense
Is asleep and in a kind of suspended state,
Nor sense to ecstasy was 'er so thrill'd
But it reserved some quantity of choice,
To serve in such a difference. What devil was't
That thus hath cozen'd you at goodman-blind?
Eyes without feeling, feeling without sight.
Ears without hands or eyes, smelling sans all,
Or but a sickly part of one true sense
Could not so move. O shame! where is thy blush?
Rebellions hell, if thou canst muthe in a matron's bones,
To flaming youth let virtue be as wax.
And melt in her own fire: proclaim no shame
When the compulsive ardour gives the charge.
Since frost itself as actively doth burn
And reason panders will.

Queen. O Hamlet, speak no more:
Thou turn'st mine eyes into my very soul;
And there I see such black and grained spots
As will not leave their tint.

Ham. Nay, but to live
In the rank sweat of an enshamed bed,
Stew'd in corruption, honeying and making love
Over the nasty sty,—

Queen. O, speak to me no more;
These words, like daggers, enter in mine ears;
No more, sweet Hamlet!

Ham. A murderer and a villain;
A slave that is not twentieth part the tithe
Of your precent lord; a vice of kings;
A eutpurse of the empire and the rule.
That from a shelf the precious diadem stole,
And put it in his pocket!

Queen. No more!

Ham. A king of shreds and patches.—

Enter Ghost.

Save me, and hovers e're me with your wings,
You heavenly guards! What would your gracious
Queen. Alas, he's mad! [figure?]

Ham. Do you not come your tardy son to chide,
That, lapsed in time and passion, lets go by
The important acting of your dread command? O, say!

Ghost. Do not forget: this visitation
Is but to whet thy almost blunted purpose.
But, look, amazement on thy mother sits:
O, step between her and her fighting soul;
Conceit in weakest bodies strongest works:
Speak to her, Hamlet.

Ham. How is it with you, lady?
Queen. Alas, how is't with you.
That you do bend your eye on vacancy
And with the incorporeal air do hold discourse?
Forth at your eyes your spirits wildly peep;
And, as the sleeping soldiers in the alarm,
Your bedded hair, like life in excrement,
Starts up, and stands an end. O gentle son,
Upon the heat and flame of thy distemper
Sprinkle cool patience. Wheresoe'er you look?

Ham. On him, on him! Look how pale he glares!
His form and cause conjinion'd, preaching to stones,
Would make them capable. Do not look upon me;
Lest with this piteous action you convert
My stern effects: then what I have to do
Will want true colour; tears perchance for blood.

Queen. To whom do you refer this?

Ham. Do you see nothing there?

Queen. Nothing at all; yet all that is I see.
Ham. Nor did you nothing hear?

Queen. No, nothing but ourselves,

Ham. Why, look you there! look, how it steals away!

My father, in his habit as he lived!
Look, where he goes, even now, out at the portal!

[Exit Ghost.

Queen. This is the very coinage of your brain:
This bodiless creation ecstasy
Is very cunning in.

Ham. Ecstasy!
My pulse, as yours, doth temperately keep time,
And makes as healthful music: it is not madness
That I have utter'd: bring me to the test,
And I the matter will re-word; which madness
Would gamboled from. Mother, for love of grace,
Lay not that flattering触动 to your soul.
That not your trespass, but my madness speaks:
It will but skin and film the merciless place,
Whilst rank corrup'ssion, unseen, shall Infests unseen. Confess yourself to heaven;
Recollect what's past; avoid what is to come;
And do not spread the compost on the weeds,
To make them ranker. Forgive me this my virtue;
For in the fatness of these pursy times
Virtue itself of vice must pardon beg.
Yea, curb and woo for leave to do him good.

Queen. O Hamlet, thou hast cleft my heart in twain.

Ham. O, throw away the worser part of it,
And live the purer with the other half.

Queen. Good night: but go not to mine uncle's bed;
Assume a virtue, if you have it not.
That monster, custom, who all sense doth eat,
Of habits devil, is angel yet in this,
That to the use of actions fair and good
He likewise gives a frock or livery,
That tepidly is put on. Refrain to-night,
And that shall lead a kind of easiness
To the next abstinence: the next more easy;
For use almost can change the stamp of nature,
And either... the devil, or throw him out.
With wondrous potency. Once more, good night:
And when you are desirous to be blest,
I'll blessing beg of you. For this same lord,

[Pointing to Polonius, I do repent: but heaven hath pleased it so,
To punish me with this and this with me,
That I must be their scourge and minister.
I will bestow such words and such a mile
The death I gave him. So, again, good night.
I must be cruel, only to be kind:
Thus bad begins and worse remains behind.
One word more, good lady.

Queen. What shall I do?

Ham. Not this, by no means, that I bid you do:
Let the blow king tempt you again to bed:
Pinch watch on your cheek; call you his mouse;
And let him, for a pair of reechy kisses,
Or puddling in your neck with his damn'd fingers,
Make you to revel all this matter out,
That I essentially am not in madness,
But mad in craft. 'T were good you let him know;
For who, that's but a queen, fair, sober, wise,
Would from a pock'd, from a bat, a gib,
Such dear concernings hide? who would do so?
No, in despite of sense and secrecy,
Unpeg the basket on the house's top,
Let the birds fly, and, like the famous ape,
To try conclusions, in the basket creep,
And break your own neck down.

Queen. Be thou assured, it words he made of
And breath of life, I have no life to breathe
What thou hast said long.

Ham. I must to England; you know that?

Queen. Alack,
I had forgot: 'tis so conclude on.

Ham. There's letters seal'd: and my two school-fellows,
Whom I will trust as I will adders fang'd,
They bear the mandate; they must sweep my way,
And marshal me to knavery. Let it work; For 't is the sport to have the engine Host with his own petar; 't shall go hard But I will delve one yard below their mines, And blow them at the moon: O, 'tis most sweet, When in one line two craftz directly meet. This man shall set me packing:

I'll lug the guts into the neighbour room. Mother, good night. Indeed this counsellor is now most still, most secret and most grave, Who was in life a foolish prating knave. Come, sir, to draw toward an end with you. Good night, mother. [Exeunt severally; Hamlet dragging in Polonius.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—A room in the castle.

Enter King, Queen, Rosencrantz, and Guildenstern.

King. There's matter in these sighs, these profound heaves:
You must translate: 't is fit we understand them.
Where is your son?
Queen. Bestow this place on us a little while. [Exeunt Rosencrantz and Guildenstern. Ah, my good lord, what have I seen to-night!
King. What, Gertrude? How does Hamlet? Queen. Mad as the sea and wind, whan both con-join. Which, when he's in his lawless fit, [end Behind the arras hearing something stirr,
Whips out his rapier, cries, 'A rat, a rat!' And, in this brainish apprehension, kills
The unseen old man.
King. O heavy deed! It had been so with us, had we been there:
His liberty is full of threats to all;
To you yourself, to us, to every one.
Alas, how shall this bloody deed be answered?
It will be kild to us, whose providence
Should have kept short, restrain'd and out of haunt,
This mad young man: but so much was our love,
We would not understand what was most fit;
But, like the owner of a foul disease,
To keep it from divulging, let it feed
Even on the pith of life. Where is he gone?
Queen. To draw apart the body he had kill'd:
O'er whom his very madness, like some ore
Among a mineral of metals base,
Shows itself pure: he weeps for what is done.
King. O Gertrude, come away! The sun no sooner shall the mountains touch,
But we will ship him hence: and this vile deed
We mouth with all our majesty and skill,
Both countenance and excuse. No, Guildenstern!
Re-enter Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.

Friends both, go join you with some further aid:
Hamlet in madness hath Polonius slain,
And from his mother's closet hath he drag'd him:
Let see him out; speak fair, and bring the body
Into the chapel. I pray you, haste in this.
[Exeunt Rosencrantz and Guildenstern. Come, Gertrude, we'll call up our wisest friends;
And let them know, both what we mean to do,
And what's unadorn'd done.
Whose whisper o'er the world's diameter,
'As level as the cannon to his blank,
Transports his poison'd shot, may miss our name,
And hit the woundless air. O, come away!
My soul is full of discord and dismay. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Another room in the castle.

Enter Hamlet.

Ham. Safely stowed.
Ros. [Within] Hamlet! Lord Hamlet!
ACT IV.

HAMLET.

SCENE V.

Ham. Goes it against the main of Poland, sir, or for some frontier? Cap. 'Tis much to speak, and with no addition, we go to strive for a little patch of ground. That hath in it no profit but the name. To pay five ducats, five, I would not farm it; nor will it yield to Norway or the Pole.

A maker rate, should it be sold in fee.

Ham. Why, then the Polack never will defend it. Cap. Yes, it is already garrison'd. [ducats]

Ham. Two thousand souls and twenty thousand
Will not debate the question of this straw:
This is the imposthume of much wealth and peace, that inward breaks, and shows no cause without: why the heat's so hectic, I do not know, but this I do, I will freely thank you, sir.

Cap. God be wi' you, sir.

Ham. Will 't please you go, my lord?

Ham. I'll be with you straight. Go a little before.

[Exeunt all except Hamlet.]

How all attendances do inform against me, and spur my dull revenge! What is a man, if his chief good and market of his time be but to sleep and feed? a beast, no more. Sure, he that made us with such large discourse, looking before and after, gave us not that capability and god-like reason to fast in us unused. Now, whether it be bestial oblivion, or some craven scuffle of thinking too precisely on the event, [from A thought which, quarter'd, hath but one part wise—] And ever three parts coward, I do not know why yet I live to say 'this thing's to do'; Sith I have cause and will and strength and means To do't. Examples gross as earth exhort me: Witness this army of such mass and charge Led by a gentle and tender prince, whose spirit with divine ambition puff'd Makes mouths at the invisible event, Expressing what is mortal and sure To all that fortune, death and danger dare, Even for an egg-shell. Rightly to be great Is not to stir without great argument, But greatly to find quarrel in a straw When honour's at the stake. How stand I then, That have a father kill'd, a mother stain'd, Excitements of my reason and my blood, And let all sleep? while, to my shame, I see The imminent death of twenty thousand men, That, for a fantasy and trick of fame, Go to their graves like beds, fight for a plot Where each man Winner is but he that causes Which is not tomb enough and continent To hide the slain? O, from this time forth, My thoughts be bloody, or be nothing worth! [Exit.]

SCENE V.—Elsewhere. A room in the castle.

Enter Queen, Horatio, and a Gentleman.

Queen. I will not speak with her.

Gent. She is importunate, indeed distinct: her mood will needs be pitied.

Queen. What would she have? Gent. She speaks much of her father: says she hears [her heart:] There's tricks 'i the world; and hems, and beats Spurros enviously at straws; speaks things in doubt, That carry but half sense: her speech is nothing, Yet the unshap'd use of it doth move all the collection: the collection, the collection at it, And both the words up fit to their own thoughts; Which, as her winks, and nods, and gestures yield them, [thought.] Indeed would make one think there might be Though nothing sure, yet much unhappily. Why, there's good she was spoken with; for she may strew

Dangerous conjectures in ill-breeding minds.

End.
ACT IV.

HAMLET.

SCENE V.

Queen. Let her come in. [Exit Horatio.

To my sick soul, as sin's true nature is, Each hour in his exchange must be a grief: So full of artless jealousy is guilt, It spills itself in fearing to be split.

Re-enter Horatio, with Ophelia.

Oph. Where is the beauteous majesty of Denmark?

Queen. How now, Ophelia?

[Song] How should I your true love know
From another one?

By his cockle hat and staff,
And his sandal shoon.

Queen. Alas, sweet lady, what imports this song?

[Song] He is dead and gone, lady,
He is dead and gone;
At his head a grass-green turf,
At his heels a stone.

Queen. Nay, but, Ophelia,—

Oph. Pray you, mark.

[Song] While his shroud as the mountain snow,—

Enter King.

Queen. Alas, look here, my lord.

Oph. [Song] Larded with sweet flowers;
Whoso to the grave did go
With true-love showers.

King. How do you, pretty lady?

Oph. Well, God 'lil you! They say the owl was a baker's daughter. Lord, we know what we are, but know not what we may be. God be at your table!

King. Conceit upon her father.

Oph. Pray you, let 's have no words of this: but when they ask you what it means, say you this:

[Song] To-morrow is Saint Valentine's day,
All in the morning betime,
And a maid at your window,
To be your Valentine.
Then up he rose, and don'd his clothes,
And dipp'd the chamber-door;
Let in the maid, that out a maid
Never depart'd more.

King. Pretty Ophelia! [end on t:

Oph. Indeed, 1a, without an oath, I'll make an [Song] By Gis and by Saint Charity,
Alack, and fie for shame!
Young men will do 't, if they come to 't;
By cook, they are to blame.
Quoth she, before you troubled me,
You promised me to wed.
So would I '1 done, by yonder sun,
An thou hadst not come to my bed.

King. How long hath she been thus?

Oph. I hope all will be well. We must be patient: but I cannot choose but weep, to think they should lay him i' the cold ground. My brother shall know of it: and so I thank you for your good counsel. Come, my coach! Good night, ladies; good night, sweet ladies; good night, good night. [Exit.

King. Follow her close; give her good watch. I pray you. [Exit Horatio.

O, this is the poison of deep grief: it springs All from her father's death. O Gertrude, Gertrude, When sorrows come, they come not single spies, But in battalions. First, her father slain; Next, your son gone; and he most violent author Of his own just remove; the people maddened, Thick and unwholesome in their thoughts and whisper.

For good Polonius' death; and we have done but In hunger-monger to inter him; poor Ophelia Divided from herself and her fair judgment, Without whose witty pictures, or mere beasts: Last, and as much containing as all these. Her brother is in secret come from France;

Feeds on his wonder, keeps himself in clouds, And wants not buzzers to infect his ear With pleasant speeches of his father's death; Wherein necessity, of matter beggar'd, Will nothing stick our person to arrange In ear and ear. O my dear Gertrude, this, Like to a murdering-piece, in many places Gives me superfluous death. [Aside.

Queen. Alack, what noise is this?

King. Where are my Switzers? Let them guard the door.

Enter another Gentleman.

What is the matter? Save yourself, my lord:
The ocean, overpeering of his list, Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste Than young Laertes, in a riotous head. O'erears your officers. The rabble call him lord; And, as the world were now but to begin, Antiquity forgot, custom not known, The rafters and props of every word, They cry 'Choose we: Laertes shall be king:' Caps, hands, and tongues, applaud it to the clouds: 'Laertes shall be king, Laertes king!'

Queen. How cheerfully on the false trail they cry! O, this harshenter, you false deliverant!

King. The doors are broke. [Noise within.

Enter Laertes, armed; Danses following.

Lac. Where is this king? Sirs, stand you all Danses. No, let's come in. [without.

Lac. I pray you, give me leave.
Danses. We will, we will.

[They retire without the door.

Lac. I thank you: keep the door. O thou vile Give me my father!

Queen. Calmly, good Laertes.

Lac. That drop of blood that's calm proclaims me bastard.

Cries cuckold to my father, brands the harlot Even here, between the chaste unsullied brow Of my true mother.

King. What is the cause, Laertes, That thy rebellion looks so giant-like? Let him go, Gertrude; do not fear our person: There's such divinity doth hedge a king, That treason can but peep to what it would, Acts little of his will. Tell me, Laertes, Why thou art thus incensed. Let him go, Gertrude.

Danses. When.

Lac. Where is my father?

King. Dead.

Queen. But not by him.

Lac. Let him demand his fill. [with:

King. How came he dead? I'll not be juggled To hell, allegiance! yows, to the blackest devil! Conscience and grace, to the profoundest pit! I dare damnation. To this point I stand, That both the worlds I give to negligence. Let come what comes; only I'll be revenged Most thoroughly for my father.

King. Who shall stay you?

Lac. My will, not all the world;

And for my means, I'll husband them so well, They shall go far with little.

King. Good Laertes.

Lac. None but his enemies.

King. Will you know them then?

Lac. To his good friends thus wile I'll que my Like the kind life-rendering pelican, [arms; Repast them with my blood.

King. Why, now you speak
ACT IV.

HAMLET.

SCENE VII.

Like a good child and a true gentleman.
That I am guiltless of your father's death,
And am most sensible in grief for it,
It shall as level to your judgment piece
As day does to your eye.

Danes. [Within] Let her come in.

Laco. How now! what noise is that?

Re-enter Ophelia.

O heat, dry up my brains! tears seven times salt,
Burn out the sense and virtue of mine eye!
By heaven, thy madness shall be paid by weight,
Till our scale turn the beam. O rose of May!
Dear maid, kind sister, sweet Ophelia!
O heavens! is't possible, a young maid's wits
Should be as mortal as an old man's life?
Nature is fine in love, and where 'tis fine,
It sends some precious instance of itself.
After the thing it loves.

Oph. [Sings]

They bore him barefaced on the bier;
Hey nonny nonny, hey nonny;
And in his grave rain'd many a tear:—
Fare well now, my dove! [revenge.

Laco. Hadst thou thy wits, and didst persuade
It could not move thus. [Sings]

Oph. [Sings] You must sing a down-a down-a,
An you call him a down-a.
O, how the wheel becomes it! It is the false steward,
That stole his master's daughter.

Laco. This nothing 's more than matter.

Oph. There's rosemary, that's for remembrance;
pray, love, remember; and there is pausies, that's for thoughts.

Laco. A document in madness, thoughts and remembrance fitted.

Oph. There's fennel for you, and columbines;
there's rue for you; and here's some for me; we may call it herb-grace o' Sundays: O, you must wear your rue with a difference. There's a daisy: I would give you some violet's, but they withered all when my father died: they say he made a good end,—

Laco. Thought and affliction, passion, hell itself,
She turns to favour and to prettiness.

Oph. [Sings] And will he not come again?
And will he not come again?
No, no, he is dead:
Go to thy dead husband:
He never will come again.

His beard was as white as snow,
All haxen was his pohl:
He is gone, he is gone,
And God ha' mercy on his soul!

And of all Christian souls, I pray God. God be wi' ye. [Exit.

Laco. Is it so? have you this, O God?

King. Laertes. I must commune with your grief,
Or you deny me right. Go but apart,
Make choice of whom your wisest friends you will,
And they shall hear and judge 'twixt you and me:
If by direct or by collateral hand
They find us touch'd, we will our kingdom give,
Our crown, our life, and all that we call ours,
To you in satisfaction; but if not,
Be you content to lend your patience to us,
And we shall jointly labour with your soul
To give it due content.

Let this be so;
His means of death, his obscure funeral—
No trophy, sword, nor hatchment o'er his bones,
No noble rite nor formal ostentation—

Cry to be heard, as 'twere from heaven to earth,
That I must call in question.

King. So you shall;
And where the offence is let the great axe fall.
I pray you, go with me. [Exit.

SCENE VI. —Another room in the castle.

Enter Horatio and a Servant.

Hor. What are they that would speak with me?
Serv. Sailors, sir: they say they have letters for you.

Hor. Let them come in. [Exit Servant. I do not know from what part of the world I should be greeted, if not from Lord Hamlet.

Enter Sailors.

First Sail. God bless you, sir.

Hor. Let him bless thee too.

First Sail. He shall, sir. [Aside. There's a letter for you, sir: it comes from the ambassador that was bound for England; if your name be Horatio, as I am let to know it is.

Hor. [Reads] Horatio, when thou shalt have overlooked this, give these fellows some means to the king: they have letters for him. Ere we were two days old at sea, a pirate of very warlike appointment gave us chase. Finding ourselves too slow of sail, we put on a compelled valour, and in the grapple I boarded them: on the instant they got clear of our ship; so I alone became their prisoner. They have dealt with me like thieves of mercy: but they knew what they did; I am to do a good turn for them. Let the king have the letters I have sent: and repair thon to me with as much speed as thou wouldst fly death. I have words to speak in thine ear which shall make thee dumb; yet are they much too light for the beauteous matter. These good fellows will bring thee where I am. Rosen-crantz and Guildenstern hold their course for England: of them I have much to tell thee. Farewell.

'He that knowest thine, HAMLET.'

Come, I will make you way for these your letters; and do 't the speedier, that you may direct me To him from whom you brought them. [Exit.

SCENE VII.—Another room in the castle.

Enter King and Laertes.

King. Now must your conscience my acquaintance seal,
And you must put me in your heart for friend,
Sith you have heard, and with a knowing ear,
That he which hath your noble father slain
Pursued my life.

Laert. It well appears; but tell me
Why you proceeded not against these feats,
So criminal and so capital in nature,
As by your safety, wisdom, all things else,
You mainly were stirr'd up.

King. O, for two special reasons;
Which may to you, perhaps, seem much unsinew'd,
But yet to me they are strong. The queen his mother
Lives almost by his looks; and for myself—
My virtue or my plague, be it either which—
She 's so conjunctive to my life and soul,
That, as the star moves not but in his sphere,
I could not but by her. The other motive,
Why to our public count I might not go,
Is the great love the general gender bear him;
Who, dipping all his faults in their affection,
Would, like the spring that turneth wood to stone,
Convert his gyves to graces; so that my arrows,
Too slight and slender for so large a shaft,
Would have reverted to my bow again,
And not where I had aim'd them.

Laert. And so have I a noble father lost;
ACT IV.

HAMLET.

SCENE VII.

A sister driven into desperate terms,
Whose worth, if praises may go back again,
Stood challenger on mount of all the age.
For her perfection; but my revenge will come.

King. Break not thy sleep for that: you must not think
That we are made of stuff so flat and dull
That we can let our beard be shock with danger
And think it pastime. You shortly shall hear more:
I loved your father, and we love ourselves;
And that, I hope, will teach you to imagine—

Enter a Messenger.

How now! what news?

Mess. Letters, my lord, from Hamlet:
This to your majesty; this to the queen.
King. From Hamlet! who brought them?
Mess. Sailors, my lord; they say; I saw them not:
They were given me by Claudius: he received them
Of him that brought them.

King. Laertes, you shall hear them.

Leaves us. [Exit Messenger.

[Reads.] High and mighty, You shall know I am set naked on your kingdom. To-morrow shall I be leaf to see your kindy eyes: when I shall, first asking your pardon thereunto, recount the occasion of my sudden and more strange return.

What should this mean? Are all the rest come back? Or is it some abuse, and no such thing?

Lear. Know you the hand?

King. 'Tis Hamlet's character. 'Naked!'
And in a postscript here, he says 'alone.'
Can you advise me?

Lear. I'm lost in it, my lord. But let him come;
It warms the very sickness in my heart,
That I shall live and tell him to his teeth,
'Thus didst thou.'

King. If it be so, Laertes—
As how should it be so? how otherwise?
Will you be ruled by me?

Ay, my lord;
So you will not o'errule me to a peace.

King. To thine own peace. If he be now return'd,
As checking at his voyage, and that he means
No more to undertake it, I will work him
To another plot, now ripe for my device.
Under the which he shall not choose but fall:
And for his death no wind of blame shall breathe,
But even his mother shall uncharge the practice
And call it accident.

Lear. My lord, I will be ruled;
This rather, if you could devise it so
That I might be the organ.

King. It falls right.
You have been talk'd of since your travel much,
And that in Hamlet's hearing, for a quality
Wherein, they say, you shine: your sum of parts
Did not together pluck such envy from him
As did that one, and that, in my regard,
Of the unworthiest siege.

Lear. What part is that, my lord?

King. A very riland In the cap of youth,
Yet needful too; for youth no less becomes
The light and careless livery that it wears
Than settled age his sables and his weeds, [since,
Importing health and graveness. Two months
Here was a gentleman of Normandy:—
I've seen myself, and served against, the French,
And they can well on horseback; but this gallant
Had his chariot: in it, he drew unto his seat;
And to such wondrous doing brought his horse,
As he had been incorpored and demi-natured
With the brave beast: so far he topp'd my thought,
That I, in forgery of shapes and tricks,
Come short of what he did.

King. A Norman was't?

Lear. A Norman.

Lear. Upon my life, Lamond.

King. The very same.

Lear. I know him well: he is the brooch indeed
And gem of all the nation.

King. He made confession of you,
And gave you such a masterly report
For art and exercise in your defence
And for your rapier most especially,
That he cried thou, 'twould be a sight indeed,
If one could catch you: the skirmers of their nation,
He swore, had neither motion, guard, nor eye,
If you opposed them. Sir, this report of his
Did Hamlet so envenom with his envy
That he could nothing do but wish and beg
Your sudden coming o'er, to play with him.

Now, out of this,—

Lear. What out of this, my lord?

King. Laertes, was your father dear to you?
Or are you like the painting of a sorrow,
A face without a heart?

Lear. Why ask you this?

King. Not that I think you did not love your
But that I know love is begun by time; [father;
And that I see, in passages of proof,
Time qualifies the spark and fire of it.
There lives within the very flame of love
A kind of vick or snuff that will abate it;
And nothing is at like a youth's good will;
For goodness, growing to a plurality,
Dies in his own too much: that we would do,
We should do when we would; for this 'would'
And hath abatements and delays as many [changes
As there are tongues, are lands, are accidents;
And then this 'should' is like a spendthrift sigh,
That hurts by easing. But, to the quick o' the ulcer:

Hamlet comes back: what would you undertake,
To show yourself your father's son in deed
More than in words?

Lear. To cut his throat i' the church.

King. No place, indeed, should murder sanctuarize:
[ites.
Revenge should have no bounds. But, good Learer—Will you do this, keep close within your chamber.
Hamlet return'd shall know you are come home:
We'll put up those shall praise your excellence
And set a double varnish on the fame
The Frenchman gave you, bring you in fine together
And wager on your heads: he, being remiss,
Most generous and free from all contriving,
Will not peruse the foils; so that, with ease,
Or with a little singling you may choose
A sword untied, and in a pass of practice
Require him for your father.

Lear. I will do 't:
And, for that purpose, I'll anoint my sword.

I bought an union of a mountebank,
So mortal that, but dip a knife in it
Where it draws blood no cataplasm so rare,
Collected from all simples that have virtue
Under the moon, can save the thing from death
That is but scratch'd withal: I'll touch my point
With this contagion, that, if I gill him slightly,
It may be death.

King. Let's further think of this;
Weigh what convenience both of time and means
May fit us to our shape: if this should fail, [ance,
And that our drift look through our bad perform-
T'were better not assay'd: therefore this project
Should have a back or second, that might hold,
If this should blast in proof. Soft! let me see:
We'll make a solemn wager on your Cummings:
I ha' t:
When in your motion you are hot and dry—
As make your bouts more violent to that end—
And that he calls for drink, I' ll have prepared him
ACT V.

HAMLET.

SCENE I.—A churchyard.

Enter two Clowns, with spears, &c.

First C.) Is she to be buried in Christian burial that willfully seeks her own salvation? Sec. C.) I tell thee she is; and therefore make her grave straight: the crown'er hath sat on her, and finds it Christian burial.

First C.) How can that be, unless she drowned herself in her own defence? Sec. C.) Nay, but hear you, Goodman Delver.—First C.) Give me leave. Here lies the water; good: here stands the man; good: if the man go to this water, and drown himself, it is, will he, will he, he goes,—mark you that; but if the water come to him and drown him, he drowns not himself: argal, he that is not guilty of his own death shortens not his own life.

Sec. C.) But is this law? First C.) Ay, marry, is 't: crown'er's quest law. Sec. C.) Will you have the truth on 't? If this had not been a gentlewoman, she should have been buried out o' Christian burial.

First C.) Why, there thou say'st: and the more pity that great folk should have countenance in this world to drown or hang themselves, more than their even Christian. Come, my spade. There is no ancient gentlemen but garderons, ditchers, and grave-makers: they hold up Adam's profession.

Sec. C.) Was he a gentleman? First C.) He was the first that ever bore arms. Sec. C.) Why, he had none.

First C.) What art a heathen? How dost thou understand the Scripture? The Scripture says 'Adam digged': could he dig without arms? I'll put another question to thee: if thou answerest me not to the purpose, confess thyself—Sec. C.) Go to.

First C.) What is he that builds stronger than either the mason, the shipwright, or the carpenter? Sec. C.) The gallows-maker; for that frame outlives a thousand tenants.

First C.) I like thy wit well, in good faith: the gallows does well; but how does it well? it does well to those that do ill: now thou dost ill to say

Which time she chanted snatches of old tunes; As one incapable of her own distress, Or like a creature native and indelude Unto that element: but long it could not be Till that her preparations, heavy with their drink, Pull'd the poor wretch from her melodious lay To muddied death.

Lear. Alas, then, she is drown'd? Queen. Drown'd, drown'd.

Lear. Too much of water hast thou, poor Ophelia, And this thy mirth, and this thy jocund joy: But yet it is our trick: nature her custom holds, Let shame say what it will: when these are gone, The woman will be out. Adieu, my lord: I have a speech of fire, that shall burn blazes, But that this folly douts it. [Exit. King. Let's follow, Gertrude: How much I had to do to calm his rage! Now fear I this will give it start again; Therefore let's follow. [Exeunt.

ACT V.
First Clo. [Sings] A package, and a spade, a spade,
For and a shrouding sheet:
O, a pit of clay for to be made
For such a guest is meet.

Ham. There's another; why may not that be the skull of a lawyer? Where be his quiddities now, his quills, his cases, his tenures, and his tricks? why does he suffer this rude knave now to knock him about the scounce with a dirty shovell, and will not tell him of his action of battery? Ham! This fellow might be in'time a great layer of land, with his statutes, his recognizances, his actions, and his recoveries: is this the fine of his fines, and the recovery of his recoveries, to have his fine pate full of fine dirt? will his vouchers vouch him no more of his purchases, and double ones too, than the length and breadth of a pair of indentures? The very conveyances of his lands will hardly lie in this box; and must the inheritor himself have no more, ha?
Hor. Not a jot more, my lord.
Ham. Is not parchment made of sheep-skins?
Hor. Ay, my lord, and of calf-skins too.
Ham. They are sheep and calves which seek out assurance in them, and will speak to this fellow. Whose grave's this, sirrah?
First Clo. Mine, sir.
[Shakes the skull.]
O, a pit of clay for to be made
For such a guest is meet.
Ham. I think it be thine, indeed; for thou liest in't.
First Clo. You lie out on 't, sir, and therefore it is not yours: for my part, I do not lie in 't, and yet it is mine.
Ham. Thou dost liie in 't, to be in 't and say it is thine: 't is for the dead, not for the quick; therefore thou liest.
First Clo. 'Tis a quick lie, sir; 't will away again, from me to you.
Ham. What man dost thou dig it for?
First Clo. For no man, sir.
Ham. What woman, then?
First Clo. For none, neither.
Ham. Who is to be buried in 't?
First Clo. One that was a woman, sir; but, rest her soul, she's dead.
Ham. How absolute the knave is! we must speak by the card, or equivocation will undo us. By the Lord, Horatio, these three years I have taken a note of it; the age is grown so picked that the toe of the peasant comes so near the heel of the courtier, he galls his kibe. How long hast thou been a grave-maker?
First Clo. Of all the days i' the year, I came to't that day that our last king Hamlet overcame Fortinbras.
Ham. How long is that since?
First Clo. Cannot you tell that? every fool can tell that: it was the very day that young Hamlet was born; he that is mad, and sent into England.
Ham. Ay, marry, why was he sent into England?
First Clo. Why, because he was mad: he shall recover his wits there; or, if he do not, 'tis no great matter there.
Ham. Why?
First Clo. 'Twill not be seen in him there; that thou art mad as he.
Ham. How came he mad?
First Clo. Very strangely, they say.
Ham. How strangely?
First Clo. Faith, e'en with losing his wits.
Ham. Upon what ground?

Enter Horatio, Hamlet, Laertes, and the mourning clergy of Denmark: I have been sexton here, man and boy, thirty years. [rot?]

First Clo. I' faith, if he be not rotten in the earth, as we have many pokey corpses now that will scarce hold the laying in — he will some eight years or nine year: a tanner will last you nine year.

Ham. Why he more than another?
First Clo. Why, sir, his hide is so tanned with his trade, that he will keep out water a great while: and your water is a sore discoverer of your whoreson dead body. Here's a skull now; this skull has lain in the earth three and twenty years.

Ham. Whose was it?
First Clo. A whoreson mad fellow's it was: who do you think it was?
Ham. No man, I think not.
First Clo. A pestilence on him for a mad rogue! a' poured a flagon of Rheinish on my head once. This same skull, sir, was Yorick's skull, the king's jester.
Ham. This?
First Clo. E'en that.
Ham. Let me see. [Takes the skull.] Alas, poor Yorick! I knew him, Horatio: a fellow of infinite jest, of most excellent fancy: he hath borne me on his back a thousand times; and now, how abhorred in my imagination it is! my gorge rises at it. Here are the jester's lips that I have kissed I know not how oft. Where be your gibes now? your gambols? your songs? your flashes of merriment, that were wont to set the table on a roar? Not one now, to mock your own grinning? quite chap-fallen? Now get you to my lady's chamber, and tell her, let her paint an inch thick, to this favour she must come; make her laugh at that. Frithere, Horatio, tell me one thing.

Ham. What's that, my lord?

First Clo. Dost thou think Alexander look'd o' this fashion? the earth?
Ham. E'en so.

First Clo. And smelt so? pah! [Puts down the skull.

Ham. E'en so, my lord.

Ham. To what base uses we may return, Horatio? Why may not imagination trace the noble dust of Alexander, till he find it stopping a bung-hole?

Hor. T were to consider too curiously, to consider so.

Ham. No, faith, not a jot; but to follow him thither with modesty enough, and likelihood to lead us thither, thus: Alexander died, Alexander was buried. Alexander returned into dust; the dust is earth; of earth we make loaf; and why of that loaf, whereto he was converted, might they not stop a beer-barrel?

Imperious Caesar, dead and turn'd to clay, Might stop a hole to keep the wind away; O, that that earth, which kept the world in awe, Should patch a wall to expel the winter's flaw! But soft! but soft! aside: here comes the king.

Enter Priests, &c. in procession; the Corpse of Ophelia, Laertes and Mourners following; King, Queen, their trains, &c.

The queen, the courtiers: who is this they follow? And with such maine rites? This doth betoken The corse they follow did with desperate hand Forsoo it's own life: 'tis of some estate. Couch we awhile, and mark.

Hor. [Retiring with Horatio.

Ham. That is Laertes, A very noble youth: mark.

Laer. What ceremony else?

Ham. That is Laertes,

A merry grave-makers' order.

Laer. What ceremony else?

Ham. That is Laertes,

A merry grave-makers' order.

Laer. What ceremony else?

Ham. That is Laertes,

A merry grave-makers' order.

Laer. What ceremony else?

Ham. That is Laertes,

A merry grave-makers' order.

Laer. What ceremony else?

Ham. That is Laertes,

A merry grave-makers' order.

Laer. What ceremony else?

Ham. That is Laertes,
Let Hercules himself do what he may,
The cat will mew and dog will have his day.  [Exit.]

King. I pray you, good Horatio, wait upon him.

[To Laertes] Strengthen your patience in our last night's speech;
We'll put the matter to the present push.

Good Gertrude, set some watch over your son.
This grave shall have a living monument:
An hour of quiet shortly shall we see;
Till then, in patience our proceeding be.  [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. — A hall in the castle.

Enter Hamlet and Horatio.

Ham. So much for this, sir: now shall you see the other;
You do remember all the circumstance?
Hor. Remember it, my lord!

Ham. Sir, in my heart there was a kind of fighting,
That would not let me sleep: methought I lay
Worse than the mortises in the bilboes. Rashly,
And praised be rashness for it, let us know,
Our indiscretion sometimes serves as well,
When our deep plots do pull; and that should teach
There's a divinity that shapes our ends,
As rough-hew them how we will.

Hor. That is most certain.

Ham. Up from my cabinet,
My sea-gown scar'd about me, in the dark
Groped I to find out them; had my desire,
Finger'd their packet, and in fine withdrew
To mine own room again: making so bold,
My fears forgetting manners, to unsel
Their grand commission; where I found, Horatio,—
O royal knavery! — an exact command,
Larded with many several sorts of reasons
Importing Denmark's health and England's too,
With, did she not, each bug and goblin in my life,
That, on the supervise, no leisure bated,
No, not to stay the grinding of the axe,
My head should be struck off.

Hor. Is't possible?

Ham. Here's the commission: read it at more leisure.
But wilt thou hear me how I did proceed?
Hor. I beseech you.

Ham. Being thus bet-netted round with villainies,—
Ere I could make a prologue to my brains,
They had begun the play — I sat me down,
Devising a new commission, wrote it fair;
I once did hold it, as our statists do,
A baseness to write fair and labour'd much
How to forget that learning, but, sir, now
It did me yeoman's service: wilt thou know
The effect of what I wrote?

Hor. Ay, good my lord.

Ham. An earnest conjuration from the king,
As England was his faithful tributary,
As love between them like the palm might flourish,
As peace should still her wheaten garland wear
And stand a comma 'twixt their anities,
And many such-like 'As's of great charge,
That, on the view and knowing of these contents,
Without debatement further, more or less,
He should the bearers put to sudden death,
Not shriving-time allow'd.

Hor. How was this seal'd?

Ham. Why, even in that was heaven ordain'd,
I had my father's signet in my purse,
Which was the model of that Danish seal;
Folded the writ up in form of the other,
Subscribed it, gave 't the impression, placed it safely,
The changeling never known. Now: the next day
Was on the sea-fight; and what to this was sequent
Thou know'st already.

Hor. So Guildenstern and Rosencrantz go to't.
Ham. Why, man, they did make love to this employment;
They are not near my conscience; their defeat
Does by their own misinination grow:
'Tis dangerous when the base nature comes
Between the pass and fell incensed points
Of mighty opposites.

Hor. Why, what a king is this!

Ham. Does it not, thinks 'tis thee, stand me now upon—
He that hath kill'd my king and whored my mother,
Populous between the election and my hopes,
Thrown out his angle for my proper life,
And with such covenage,—'tis not perfect conscience,
To quit him with this arm? and is 't not to be damm'd,
To let this canker of our nature come
In further evil? [and

Hor. It must be shortly known to him from Eng—
What is the issue of the business there.

Ham. It will be short: the interim is mine;
And a man's life's no more than to say 'One.'
But I am very sorry, good Horatio,
That to Laertes I forget myself;
For, by the image of my cause, I see
The person of his: 'twill court his favours;
But, sure, the bravery of his grief did put me
Into a torrowing passion.

Hor. Peace! who comes here?

Enter Osric.

Osr. Your lordship is right welcome back to Denmark.

Ham. I humbly thank you, sir. Dost know this water-fly?

Hor. Sir, my good lord.

Ham. That state is the more gracious; for 'tis a vicen to know him. He hath much land, and fertile:
let a beast be lord of beasts, and his crib shall stand at the king's mess: 'tis a chough; but, as I say, spacious in the possession of dirt.

Osr. Sweet lord, if your lordship were at leisure,
I should impart a thing to you from his majesty.

Ham. I will receive it, sir, with all diligence of spirit. Put your bonnet to his right use; 'tis for the head.

Osr. Thank your lordship, it is very hot.

Ham. No, believe me, 'tis very cold; the wind is portentous.

Osr. It is indifferent cold, my lord, indeed.

Ham. But yet methinks it is very sultry and hot for my complexion.

Osr. Exceedingly, my lord: it is very sultry,—as 'twere,—I cannot tell how. But, my lord, his majesty led me signify to you that he has laid a great wager on your head: sir, this is the matter,—

Ham. I beseech you, remember—

[Hamlet moves him to put on his hat.

Osr. Nay, good my lord; for mine ease, in good faith. Sir, here is newly come to court Laertes; believe me, an absolute gentleman, full of most excellent differences, of very soft society and great showing: indeed, to speak feelingly of him, he is the card or calendar of gentry, for you shall find in him the continent of what part a gentleman would see.

Ham. Sir, his deformity nothing pernicious in you;
though, I know, to divide him inventorially would dizzy the arithmetic of memory, and yet but yawn neither, in respect of his quick sail. But, in the verity of exultation, I take him to be a soul of great article; and his infusion of such dæth and thriving, to make true division of him, his semblable is his mirror; and who else would trace him, his unchangeable, nothing more.

Osr. Your lordship speaks most infallibly of him.

Ham. The concurrence, sir? why do we wrap the gentleman in our more raver breath?

Osr. Sir?

Hor. Is 't not possible to understand in another tongue? You will do 't, sir, really.

Ham. What imports the nomination of this gentleman?

Osr. Of Laertes?

Hor. His purse is empty already; all's golden words are spent.

Osr. Of him, sir.

Osr. I know you are not ignorant—

Ham. I would you did, sir; yet, in faith, if you did, it would not much approve me. Well, sir?

Osr. You are not ignorant of what excellence
Laertes is—

Ham. I dare not confess that, lest I should compare with him in excellence; but, to know a man well, were to know himself.

Osr. I mean, sir, for his weapon: but in the imputation laid on him by them, in his need he's un-followed.

Ham. What's his weapon?

Osr. Rapier and dagger.

Ham. That's two of his weapons: but, well.

Osr. The king, sir, hath wagered with him six Barbary horses against the which he has imposed,
as I take it, six French rapiers and poniards, with their assigns, as girdle, hangers, and so: three of the carriages, in faith, are very dear to fancy,
very responsive to the hills, most delicate carriages,
and of very liberal conceit.

Ham. What call you the carriages?

Hor. I knew you must be edified by the margent ere you had done.

Osr. The carriages, sir, are the hangers.

Ham. The phrase would be more german to the matter, if we could carry cannon by our sides: I would it might be hangers till then. But, on: six Barbary horses against six French swords, their assigns, and three liberal-conceited carriages; that's the French bet against the Danish. Why is this
'imposted,' as you call it?

Osr. The king, sir, hath laid, that in a dozen passes between yourself and him, he shall not exceed you three hits: he hath laid on twelve for nine;
and it would come to immediate trial, if your lordship would vouchsafe the answer.

Ham. How if I answer 'no'?

Osr. I mean, my lord, the opposition of your person in trial.

Ham. Sir, I will walk here in the hall: if it please his majesty, 'tis the breathing time of day with me; let the foils be brought, the gentleman willing, and the king hold his purpose, I will win for him an I can: if not, I will gain nothing but my shame and the odd hits.

Osr. Shall I re-deliver you e'en so?

To this effect, sir; after what flourish your nature will.

Osr. I commend my duty to your lordship.

Ham. Yours, yours. [Exit Osric.] He does well to commend it himself; there are no tongues else for 's turn.

Hor. Thislapwing runs away with the shell on his head.

Ham. He did comply with his digg, before he sucked it. Thus has he—and many more of the same levy that I know the distress'd dotes on, so only got the time of the time and outward habit of encounter; a kind of yeasty collection, which carries them through and through the most fond and winnow'd opinions; and do but blow them to their trial, the bubbles are out.

Enter a Lord.

Lord. My lord, his majesty commanded him to you by young Osric, who brings back to him, that you attend him in the hall: he sends to know if 633

HAMLET.

ACT V. SCENE II.

King. I do not fear it; I have seen yea both; But since he is better'd, we have therefore odds.
Laer. This is too heavy, let me see another.
Ham. This likes me well. These foils have all a length? [They prepare to play.
Osr. Ay, my good lord.
Ham. I wish the mom's wine upon that table.
If Hamlet give the first or second hit,
Or quit in answer of the third exchange,
Let all the battlements their ordinance fire;
The king shall drink to Hamlet's better breath;
And in the cup an union shall he throw,
Richer than that which four successive kings
In Denmark's crown have worn. Give me the cups;
And let the kettle to the trumpet speak,
The trumpet to the cannonner without,
The cannons to the heavens, the heavens to earth,
Now the king drinks to Hamlet,' Come, begin:
And you, the judges, bear a wary eye.
Ham. Come on, sir.
Laer. Come, my lord. [They play.
Ham. One.
Laer. No.
Ham. Judgment.
Osr. A hit, a very palpable hit.
Laer. Well; again.
King. Stay, give me drink. Hamlet, this pearl
Here's to thy health;
Ham. I'll play this bout first; set it by awhile.
Come. [They play.] Another hit: what say you?
Laer. A touch, a touch, I do confess.
King. Our son shall win.
Queen. He's fat, and scent of breath.
Here, Hamlet, take my napkin, rub thy brows:
The queen carouses to thy fortune, Hamlet.
Ham. Good madam! Gertrude, do not drink.
Queen. I will, my lord: I pray you, pardon me.
King. [Aside] It is the poison'd cup; it is too late.
Ham. I dare not drink yet, madam; by and by.
Queen. Come, let me wipe thy face.
Laer. My lord, I'll hit him now.
King. I do not think 't.
Laer. [Aside] And yet 'tis almost against my conscience.
Ham. Come, for the third, Laertes; you bat daily;
I pray you, pass with me your best violence;
I am not only a youth, but a man of mettle;
Laer. Say you so? come on. [They play.
Osr. Nothing, neither way.
Laer. Have you at now! [Leeates wounds Hamlet; then, in succession, they change rapiers, and Hamlet wounds Laertes.
King. Part them; they are incensed.
Ham. Nay, come, again. [The Queen falls.
Osr. Look to the queen there, ho!
Hor. They bleed on both sides. How is it, my Queen. [Aside] Is it? Laertes?
Laer. Why, as a woodcock to mine own springe,
I am justly kill'd with mine own treachery. [Osric;
Ham. How does the queen?
Queen. She swoons to see them bleed.
Queen. No, no, the drink, the drink, the—O my dear
Hamlet,—
The cup I drink! I am poison'd!
[Dies.
Ham. O villainy! Ho! let the door be lock'd!
Treachery! Seek it out.
Laer. It is here, Hamlet: Hamlet, thou art slain;
No medicine in the world can do thee good;
In thee there is not half an hour of life;
The treacherous instrument is in thy hand,
Unsheathed and envenom'd: the foul practice
Hath turn'd itself on me; lo, here I lie,
Never to rise again: thy mother's poison'd!
I can no more: the king's the blame.
Act V.

Scene II.

Hamlet. The point! — even venom'd too!
Then, venom, to thy work.
[Stabs the King.
All. Treason! treason!
King. O, yet defend me, friends; I am but hurt.

Hamlet. Here, thou incestuous, murderous, damned Drink off this potion. Is thy union here?
[Dane, Follow my mother.

Laer. He is justly served;
It is a poison temper'd by himself.
Exchange forgiveness with me, noble Hamlet:
Mine and my father's death come not upon thee,
Nor thine on me!

Ham. Heaven make thee free of it! I follow thee.
I am dead, Horatio. Wretched queen, adieu!
You that look pale and tremble at this chance,
That are but mutes or audience to this act,
Had I but time — as this fell sergeant, death,
Is strict in his arrest — O, I could tell you —
But let it be. Horatio, I am dead;
Thou livest; report me and my cause aright
To the unsatisfied.

Hor. Never believe it:
I am more an antique Roman than a Dane:
Here's yet some liquor left.

Ham. As thou 'rt a man,
Give me the cup: let go; by heaven, I'll have't.
O good Horatio, what a wounded name,
Things standing thus unknown, shall live behind
If thou dost ever hold me in thy heart,
Absert thee from felicity awhile,
And in this harsh world draw thy breath in pain,
To tell my story.

Osr. Young Fortinbras, with conquest come from
To the ambassadors of England gives [Poland, This warlike volley.

Ham.
O, I die, Horatio:
The potent poison quite o'er-crowns my spirit:
I cannot live to hear the news from England;
But I do prophesy the election lights
On Fortinbras: he has my dying voice;
So tell him, with the occurrences, more and less,
Which have solicited. The rest is silence.

Hor. Now cracks a noble heart. Good night, sweet prince;
And flights of angels sing thee to thy rest!
Why does the drum come hither?

Enter Fortinbras, the English Ambassadors, and others.

Fort. Where is this sight?

SCENE—Britain.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—King Lear's palace.

Enter Kent, Gloucester, and Edmund.

Kent. I thought the king had more affected the Duke of Albany than Cornwall.

Glou. It did always seem to us: but now, in the division of the kingdom, it appears not which of the dukes he values most; for equalities are so weighed, that curiosity in neither can make choice of either's moiety.

Kent. Is not this your son, my lord?

Glou. His breeding, sir, hath been at my charge: I have so often blush'd to acknowledge him, that now I am bailed to it.

Kent. I cannot conceive you.

Glou. Sir, this young fellow's mother could; whereupon she grew round-womb'd, and had, indeed, sir, a son for her cradle eye she had a husband for her bed. Do you smell a fault?

Kent. I cannot wish the fault undone, the issue of it being so proper.

Glou. But I have, sir, a son by order of law, some year elder than this, who yet is no dearer in my account: though this knave came something suddenly into the world before he was sent for, yet was his mother fair; there was good sport at his making, and the whoreson must be acknowledged. Do you know this noble gentleman, Edmund?

Edmu. No, my lord.

Glou. My lord of Kent: remember him hereafter as my honourable friend.

Edmu. My services to your lordship.

Kent. I must love you, and sue to know you better.

Edmu. Sir, I shall study deserving.

Glou. He hath been out nine years, and away he shall again. The king is coming.

Servet. Enter King Lear, Cornwall, Albany, Goneril, Regan, Cordelia, and Attendants.

Lear. Attend the lords of France and Burgundy.

Glou. I shall, my liege. [Gloucester, Lear.

Lear. Meantime we shall express our darker purpose.

Give me the map there. Know that we have divided In three our kingdom: and 'tis our fast intent To shake all cares and business from our age; Confering them on younger strengths, while we Unburthen'd shall wander toward our death. Our son of Cornwall: And you, our no less loving son of Albany, [Wall, We have this hour a constant will to publish Our daughters' several dowers, that future strife May be prevented now. The princes, France and Burgundy,

Great rivals in our youngest daughter's love, Long have our heart have made their amorous sojourn, And here are to be answer'd. Tell me, my daughter, Since now we will divest us, both of rule, [ters,— Interest of territory, cares of state,— Which of you shall we say doth love us most? That we our largest bounty: ye extend Where nature doth with merit challenge. Goneril, Our eldest-born, speak first.

Gon. Sir, I love you more than words can wield the matter; Dearer than eye-sight, space, and liberty; Beyond what can be valued, rations or rare; No less than life, with grace, health, beauty, honour; As much as child e'er loved, or father found; A love that makes breath poor, and speech unable; Beyond all manner of so much I love you.

Cor. [Aside] What shall Cordelia do? Love, and be silent. [This, Lear. Of all these bounds, even from this line to With shadowy forests and with champains rich'd, With plenteous rivers and wide-skirted meads, We make thee lady: to thine and Albany's issue Be this perpetual. What says our second daughter, Our dearest Regan, wife to Cornwall? Speak.

Reg. Sir, I am made Of the self-same metal that my sister is, And prize me at her worth. In my true heart I find she names my very deed of love; Only she comes too short: that I profess Myself an enemy to all other joys, Which the most precious square of sense possesses; And in my dear highness' love.
Cor. [Aside] Then poor Cordelia!
And yet not so: since, I am sure, my love's
More hearty than their hand's.
Lear. To thee and thine hereditary ever
Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom;
No less in space, validity, and pleasure.
Than that confer'd on Goneril. Now, our joy,
Although the last, not least: to whose young love
The vines of France and milk of Burgundy
Strive to be interest'd; what can you say to draw
A third more opulent than your sisters? Speak.
Cor. Nothing, my lord.
Lear. Nothing will come of nothing: speak again.
Cor. Unhappy that I am. I cannot leave
My heart into my mouth: I love your majesty
According to my bond; nor more nor less.
Lear. How, how, Cordelia! mend your speech a
Lest it may mar your fortunes. [little, Cor.
You have begot me, bred me, loved me: I
Return those duties back as are right fit,
Obey you, love you, and most honour you.
Why have my sisters husbands, if they say
They love you all? Haply, when I shall weal,
That is the time that maketh to my heart
Half my love with him, half my care and duty;
Sure, I shall never marry like my sisters,
To love my father all.
Lear. But goes thy heart with this?
Cor. Ay, good my lord.
Lear. So young, and so untender? Cor. So young, my lord, and true.
Lear. Let it be so; thy truth, then, be thy dower:
For, by the sacred radiance of the sun,
The mysteries of Hecate, and the night;
By all the operation of the orbs
From whom we do exist, and cease to be;
Here I disclaim all my paternal care,
Propinquity and property of blood,
And as a stranger to my heart and me [Scythian,
Hold thee, from this, for ever. The barbarous
Or he that makes his generation messes
To gorge his appetite, shall to my bosom
Be as well neighbour'd, pitied, and relieved,
as thou my sometime daughter.
Kent. Good my liege,—
Lear. Peace, Kent! Come not between the dragon and his wrath.
I love her best, and thought to set my last
On her kind nursery. Hence, and avoid my sight!
So be my grave my peace, as here I give [stirs? Her father's heart from her! Call France; who Call Burgundy, Cornwall and Albany,
With my two daughters' dowers digest this third:
Let pride, which she calls plainness, marry her.
I do invest you jointly with my power,
Pre-eminence, and all the large effects [course,
That troup with majesty, Ourself, by monthly
With reservation of an hundred knights,
By you to be sustain'd, shall our abode
Make with you by due turns. Only we still retain
The name, and all the additions to a king;
The sway, revenue, execution of the rest,
Beloved sons, be yours; which to confirm,
This coronet part betwixt you. [Giving the crown.
Kent. [Royal Lear,
Whom I have ever honour'd as my kind
Loved as my father, as my master, lov'd, as my great patron thought on in my prayers,—
Lear. The bow is bent and drawn, make from the shaft.
Kent. Let it fall rather, though the fork invade
The heart where heat may be Kent unmannerly.
When Lear is mad. What will thou do, old man?
Think'st thou that do'st ad to speak,
When power to flattering bow's? To plainness hon-our's bond.
When majesty falls to folly. Reverse thy doom;
And, in thy best consideration, check [ment,
This hideous rashness: answer my life my judg-
Thy youngest daughter does not love thee least;
Nor are those empty-hearted whose low sound
Revers no hollowness.
Lear. Kent, on thy life, no more.
Kent. My life I never held but as a pawn
To wage against thine enemies; nor fear to lose it,
Thy safety being the motive.
Lear. Out of my sight!
Kent. See better, Lear; and let me still remain
The true blank of thine eye.
Lear. Now, by Apollo,—
Kent, Thou swarest thy gods in vain.
Lear. O, vassal! miscreant! [Laying his hand on his sword.
Alb. ] Dear sir, forbear.
Corn. ] Kent Do;
Kill thy physician, and the fee bestow
Upon thy foul disease. Revoke thy doom;
Or, whilst, I can vent clamour from my throat,
I'll tell thee thou dost evil.
Lear. Hear me, recreant! On thine allegiance, hear me!
Since thou hast sough't to make us break our vow,
Which we durst never yet, and with strain'd pride
To come between our sentence and our power,
Which nor our nature nor our place can bear,
Our potency made good, take thy reward.
Five days we do allot thee, for provision
To shield thee from diseases of the world;
And on the sixth to turn thy hated back
Upon our kingdom: if, on the tenth day following,
Thy banish'd shall be found in our dominions,
The moment is thy death! Away! by Jupiter,
This shall not be revoked. [appear.
Kent. Fare thee well, king: sith thus thou wilt
Freedom lives hence, and banishment is here.
[To Cordelia] The gods to their dear shelter take thee.
That justly think'st, and hast most rightly said!
[To Regan and Goneril] And your large speeches
May your deeds approve,
That good effects may spring from words of love.
Thus Kent, O princes, bids you all adieu;
He'll shape his old course in a country new. [Exit. (Flourish. Re-enter Gloucester, with France, Burgundy, and Attendants.
Glo. Here's France and Burgundy, my noble lord.
Lear. My lord of Burgundy,
We first address towards you, who with this king
Hath rival'd for our daughter: what, in the least,
Will you require in present dow'r with her,
Or cease your quest of love?
Burgundy. Most royal majesty,
I crave no more than hath your highness offer'd,
Nor will you tender less.
Lear. Right noble Burgundy,
When she was dear to us, we did hold her so;
But now her price is fall'n. Sir, there she stands:
If sought within that little seeming substance,
Or all of it, with our displeasure pleased,
And nothing more, may fitle like your grace,
She there, and she is yours.
Burgundy. I know no answer.
Lear. Will you, with those infirmities she owes,
Unfriend'd, new-adopted to our hate, [sooth, Dower'd with our curse, and stranger'd with our take her, or leave her?
Burgundy. Pardon me, royal sir;
Election makes not up on such conditions.

697
KING LEAR.

ACT I.

Scene II.

LEAR. Then leave her, sir; for, by the power that made me,
I tell you all her wealth. [To France] For you, great king,
I would not from your love make such a stray,
To match you where I hate; therefore beseech you
To avoid this fault of a more worthy way
Than on a wretch whom nature is ashamed
Almost to acknowledge her.

France. This is most strange,
That she, that even but now was your best object,
The argument of your praise, balm of your age,
Most beloved, dearest, should in this time
Commit a thing so monstrous, to dismantle
So many folds of favour. Sure, her offence
Must be of such unnatural degree,
That monsters it, or your fore-vouch’d affection
Fall’n into taint: which to believe of her,
Must be a faith that reason without miracle
Could never plant in me.

Cor. Yet beseech your majesty,—
If for I want that glib and oily art,
To speak and purpose not; since what I well intend,
I’ll do’t before I speak,—that you make known
It is no vicious blot, murder, or foulness,
No misuse nor rottenness nor dis honest step,
That hath deprived me of your grace and favour;
But even for want of that for which I am richer,
A still-soliciting eye, and such a tongue
As I am glad I have not, though not to have it
Hath lost me in your liking.

LEAR. Better than [better,
Hadst not been born than not to have pleased me
France. Is it but this,—a tardiness in nature
Which often leaves the history unspoke
That it intends to do? My lord of Burgundy,
What say you to the lady? Love’s not love
When it’sungiled with favors that stand
Aloof from the entire point. Will you have her?
She is herself a dowry.

Bar. Royal Lear,
Give but that portion which you yourself proposed,
And here I take Cordelia by the hand,
Duchess of Burgundy.

LEAR. Nothing: I have sworn; I am firm.

Bar. I am sorry, then, you have so lost a father
That you must lose a husband.

Cor. Peace be with Burgundy!

LEAR. Since that respects of fortune are his love,
I shall not be his wife.

France. Fairest Cordelia, that art most rich, being poor;
Most choice, forsaken; and most loved, despised
Thee and thy virtues here I seize upon:
Be it lawful I take up what’s cast away. [neglect
Gods, gods! It’s strange that from their colds
My love should kindle to inflamed respect.
Thy dowerless daughter, king, thrown to my chance,
Is queen of us, of ours, and our fair France:
Not all the dukes of waterish Burgundy
Can buy this unprized precious maid of me.
But I’ll darewell, Cordelia, though unkind;
Then lost here, a better where to find.
[for we
LEAR. Thou hast her, France; let her be thine;
Have no such daughter, nor shall ever see
That face of hers again. Therefore be gone
Without our grace, our love, our benison.

COME, noble Burgundy.

[Flourish. Exeunt all but France, Gonewill, Regan, and Cordelia.

France. Bid farewell to your sisters.

Cor. The jewels of our father, with wash’d eyes
Cordelia leaves you: I know you what you are;
And like a sister am most loath to call
Your fathers sons, though named. Use well our father:
To your professed bosoms I commit him:
But yet, alas, stood I within his grace,

I would prefer him to a better place.
So, farewell to you both.

Reg. Prescribe not our duties.

Gon. Let your study
To be content your lord, who hath received you
At fortune’s alma. You have obedience scant
And well are worthy the want that you have wanted.
Cor. Time shall unfold what plaited cunning hides;
Who cover faults, at last shame them derides.
Well may you prosper!

France. [Exit. Come, my fair Cordelia.

Gon. Sister, it is not a little I have to say of what most nearly appertains to us both. I think our father will hence to-night.

Reg. That’s most certain, and with you; next month with us.

Gon. You see how full of changes his age is; the observation we have made of it hath not been little: he always loved our sister most; and with what poor judgment he hath now cast her off appears too grossly.

Reg. 'Tis the infirmity of his age: yet he hath ever but seldom known himself.

Gon. The best and soundest of his time hath been but rash; then must we look to receive from his age, not alone the imperfections of long-engrafted condition, but therewithal the unruly waywardness that inform and cholerous years bring with them.

Reg. Such unconstant starts are we like to have from him as this of Kent’s banishment.

Gon. There is further compliment of leave-taking between France and him. Pray you, let’s hit together: if our father carry authority with such dispositions as he bears, this last surrender of his will but offend.

Reg. We shall further think on’t.

Gon. We must so do something, and I the heat.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Earl of Gloucester’s castle.

Enter Edmund, with a letter.

Edm. Thou, nature, art my goddess; to thy law
My services are bound. Wherefore should I
Stand in the plague of custom, and permit
The curiosity of nations to deprive me,
For that I am some twelve or fourteen moonshines
Lag of a brother? Why bastard? wherefore base?
When my dimensions are as well compact,
My mind as generous, and my shape as true,
As honest madam’s issue? Why brand they us
With base? with baselessness? bastardy? base, base?
Who, in the lusty stealth of nature, take
More composition and fierce quality
Than doth, within a dull, staid, tired bed,
Go to the creating a whole tribe of fools,
Got ‘twixt asleep and wake? Well, then,
Legitimate Edgar, I must have your hand;
Our father’s love is to the bastard Edmund
As to the legitimate: fine word,—legitimate!
Well, my legitimate, if this letter speed,
And my invention thrive, Edmund the base
Shall top the legitimate. I grow; I prosper;
Now, gods, stand up for bastards!

Enter Gloucester.

Glov. Kent banish’d thus! and France in choler piered!
And the king gone to-night! subscribed his power!
Confirmed to exhibition! All this done;
Upon the god! Edmund, how now! what news?
Edm. So please your lordship, none.

[Putting up the letter.

Glov. Why so earnestly seek you to put up that
Edm. I know no news, my lord.

[letter?}
Edg. You know the character to be your brother’s?

Edm. If the matter were good, my lord, I durst swear it were his; but, in respect of that, I would faint think it were not.

Edm. It is his.

Edm. It is his hand, my lord; but I hope his heart is not in the contents.

Glou. Hath he never heretofore sounded you in this business?

Edm. Never, my lord: but I have heard him oft maintain it to be fit, that, sons at perfect age, and fathers declining, the father should be as ward to the son, and the son manage his revenue.

Glou. O villain, villain! His very opinion in the letter! Abhorred villain! Unnatural, detested, base, villain! worse than brutish! Go, sirrah! seek him! I’ll apprehend him: abominable villain! Where is he?

Edm. I do not well know, my lord. If it shall please you to suspend your indignation against my brother till you can derive from him better testimony of his intent, you shall run a certain course: where, if you violently proceed against him, missing his purpose, it would make a great gap in your own honour, and shake in pieces the heart of his obedience. I dare pawn down my life for him, that he hath wrote this to feel my affection to your honour, and to no further pretence of danger.

Glou. Think you so?

Edm. If your honour judge it meet, I will place you where you shall hear us confer of this, and by an auricular assurance have your satisfaction; and that without any further delay than this very evening.

Glou. Nor is not, sure.

Glou. To his father, that so tenderly and entirely loves him. Heaven and earth! Edmund, seek him out; wind me into him, I pray you; frame the business after your own wisdom. I would unstate myself in a wise resolution.

Edm. I will seek him, sir, presently; convey the business as I shall find means, and acquaint you...
ACT I.

KING LEAR.

SCENE IV.

I am no honest man if there be any good meaning towards you; I have told you what I have seen and heard: but faintly, nothing like the image and horror of it: pray you, away.

Edg. Shall I hear from you anon?

[Exit Edgar.

A credulous father! and a brother noble,
Whose nature is so far from doing harms,
That he suspects none; on whose foolish honesty
My practices ride easy! I see the business.

Let me, if not by birth, have lands by wit:
With all with's me that I can fashion fit.

[Exit.

SCENE III. — The Duke of Albany’s palace.

Enter Goneril, and Oswald, her steward.

Gon. Did my father strike my gentleman for chiding of his fool?

Osw. Yes, madam.

Gon. By day and night he wrongs me; every hour
He flashes into one gross crime or other,
That sets us all at odds: I’ll not endure it:
His knights grow riotous, and himself upriseth us
On every trifle. When he returns from hunting,
I will not speak with him; say I am sick:
If you come slack of former services,
You shall do well; the fault of it I’ll answer.

Osw. He’s coming, madam; I hear him.

[Exit.

Gon. Put on what weary negligence you please,
You and your fellows; I’ll have it come to quest
If he dislike it, let him to our sister.
[Exeunt.

Whose mind and mine, I know, in that are one,
Not to be over-ruled. Idle old man,
That still would manage those authorities
That he inith given away! Now, by my life,
Old fools are babes again; and must be used
With checks as flattering,—when they are seen
Remember what I tell you.

Osw. Well, madam. [Exit.

Gon. And let his knights have colder looks among
What grows of it, no matter; advise your fellows so:
I would breed from hence occasions, and I shall,
That I may speak: I’ll write straight to my sister,
To hold my very course. Prepare for dinner.

SCENE IV.—A hall in the same.

Enter Kent, disguised.

Kent. If but as well I other accents borrow,
That can my speech define, my good intent
May carry through itself to that full issue
For which I raved my likeness. Now, banish’d Kent,
If thou canst serve where thou dost stand condemn’d,
So may it cope, thy master, whom thou lov’st,
Shall find thee full of labours.

[Exeunt.

Horns within. Enter Lear, Knights, and Attendants.

Lear. Let me not stay a jot for dinner; go get it ready.

[Exit an Attendant.] How now! what art

Kent. A man, sir.

Thou?

Lear. What dost thou profess? what wouldst thou with us?

Kent. I do profess to be no less than I seem;
To serve him truly that will put me in trust; to love him that is honest; to converse with him that is wise, and says little; to fear judgment; to fight when I cannot choose; and to eat no fish.

Lear. What art thou?

Kent. A very honest-hearted fellow, and as poor as he is.

Lear. If thou be as poor for a subject as he is for a king, thou art poor enough. What wouldst thou?

Kent. Service.

Lear. Who wouldst thou serve?

Kent. You.

Lear. Dost thou know me, fellow?

Kent. No, sir; but you have that in your countenance which I would fain call master.

Lear. What’s that?

Kent. Authority.

Lear. What services canst thou do?

Kent. I can keep honest counsel, ride, run, mar a curious tale in telling it, and deliver a plain message bluntly: that which ordinary men are fit for,
I am qualified in; and the best of me is diligence.

Lear. How old art thou?

Kent. Not so young, sir, to love a woman for singing, nor so old as to dote on her for anything: I have years on my back forty eight.

Lear. Follow me; thou shalt serve me: if I like thee no worse after dinner, I will not part from thee yet. Dinner, ho, dinner! Where’s my knave? my fool? Go you, and call my fool hither.

[Exit an Attendant.

Enter Oswald.

You, you, sirrah, where’s my daughter?

Osw. So please you.

Lear. What’s this fellow there? Call the chaplains here.

Re-enter Knight.

How now! where’s that mongrel?

Kent. He says, my lord, your daughter is not

Lear. Why came not the slave back to me when I called him?

Kent. Sir, he answered me in the roundest manner, he would not.

Lear. He would not!

Kent. My lord, I know not what the matter is;
but, to my judgment, your highness is not entertained with that ceremonious affection as you were wont; there’s a great abatement of kindness appears as well in the general dependants as in the duke himself also and your daughter.

Lear. Ha! sayest thou so?

Kent. I beseech you, pardon me, my lord, if I be mistaken; for my duty cannot be silent when I think your highness wronged.

Lear. Thou but rememberest me of mine own conception: I have perceived a most faint neglect of late; which I have rather blamed as mine own jealous curiosity than as a very prejudice and purpose of unkindness: I will look further into it.
But where’s my fool? I have not seen him this two days.

Kent. Since my young lady’s going into France, sir, the fool hath much pined away.

Lear. No more of that; I have noted it well.
Go you, and tell my daughter I would speak with her.

Lear. Do you handy looks with me, you rascal?

Osw. I’ll not be struck, my lord.

Kent. Nor tripped neither, you base foot-ball player.

Lear. I thank thee, fellow; thou servest me, and I will love thee well.

Kent. Come, sir, arise, away! I’ll teach you differences: away, away! If you will measure your blackest length again, tarry; but away! go to;
have you wisdom? so.

[Pushes Oswald out.
ACT I.

LEAR.  Now, my friendly knave, I thank thee: there's earnest of thy service. [Giving Kent money.

Enter Fool.

Fool.  Let me hire him too? here's my coxcomb.

LEAR.  How now, my pretty knave! how dost thou?  Fool.  Sirrah, you were best take my coxcomb.

KENT.  Why, fool?  Fool.  Why, for taking one's part that's out of favour: nay, an thou cast not smile as the wind sits, thou'lt catch cold shortly: there, take my coxcomb: why, this fellow has banished two on 's daughters, and did the third a blessing against his will; if thou follow him, thou must needs wear my coxcomb. How now, sirrah! Would I had two coxcombs and two daughters!

LEAR.  Why, my boy?  Fool.  If I gave them all my living, I'd keep my coxcombs myself. There's mine; beg another of thy daughters.

LEAR.  Take heed, sirrah; the whip.

Fool.  Truth's a dog must to kennel: he must be whipped out. What! Lady the brach may stand by the fire and sink.

LEAR.  A pestilent gall to me!  Fool.  Sirrah, I'll teach thee a speech.

LEAR.  Do.

Fool.  Mark it, sirrah: Have more than thou showest, Speak less than thou knowest, Lead less than thou owest, Ride more than thou goest, Learn more than thou trowest: Leave thy drink and thy where, And keep in-door, And thou shalt have more Than two tens to a score.

KENT.  This is nothing, fool.

Fool.  Then 'tis like the breath of an unfei'd lawyer; you gave me nothing for 't. Can you make no use of nothing, sirrah?

LEAR.  Why, no boy; nothing can be made out of nothing.

[To Kent] Prithée, tell him, so much the rest of his hand comes: he will not believe a fool.

LEAR.  A bitter fool.

Fool.  Dost thou know the difference, my boy, between a bitter fool and a sweet fool?

LEAR.  No, lat; teach me.

Fool.  That lord that counsel'd thee To give away thy land, Come place him here by me, Do thou for him stand: The sweet and bitter fool Will presently appear; The one in motley here, The other found out there.

LEAR.  Dost thou know the fool, boy?

Fool.  All thy other titles thou hast given away; that thou was born with.

KENT.  This is not altogether fool, my lord.

Fool.  No, faith, lords and great men will not let me; if I had a monopoly out, they would have part on 't: and ladies too, they will not let me have all fool to myself; they'll be matching. Give me an egg, sirrah, and I'll give thee two crows.

LEAR.  What two crows shall they be?

Fool.  Why, after I have cut the egg i' the middle, and eat up the meat, the two crows of the egg. When thou clowest thy crow' in the middle, and gavest thyself thy bones, thou art ass on thy back over the dirt: thou hastt little wit in thy bald crown, when thou gavest thy golden one away. If I speak like myself in this, let him be whipped that first finds it so.

[Singing] Fools had ne'er less wit in a year; For wise men are grown foppish, They know not how their wits to wear, Their manners are so aspish.

LEAR.  When were you wont to be so full of songs, sirrah?

Fool.  I have used it, sirnecle, ever since thou madest thy daughters thy mothers: for when thou gavest them the rod, and put'st down thine own breeches, [Singing] Then they for sudden joy did weep, And I for sorrow sung.

That such a king should play bo-peep, And go the fools among.

Prithée, nuncle, keep a schoolmaster that can teach thy fool to lie: I would fain learn to lie.

LEAR.  An you lie, sirrah, we'll have you whipped.

Fool.  I marvel what feel thou and thy daughters are: they'll have me whipped for speaking true, thou hast me whipped for lying; and sometimes I was whipped for holding my peace. I had rather be any kind o' thing than a fool: and yet I would not be thee, nuncle; thou hast paled thy wit o' both sides, and left nothing i' the middle: here comes one o' the pairings.

Enter Goneril.

LEAR.  How now, daughter! what makes that frontlet on? Me-thinks you are too much of late i' the brown.

Fool.  Thou wast a pretty fellow when thou hast'd no need to care for her frowning; now thou art an O without a figure: I am better than thou art now; I am a fool, thou art nothing. [To Gon.] Yes, forsooth. I will hold my tongue; so your face bids me, though you say nothing. Mum, mum.

LEAR.  Be that keep nor cut nor cram, Weary of all, shall want some.

GON.  Not only, sir, this your all-licensed fool, But other of your insolent retaines Do hourly carp and quarrel; breaking forth In rank and not-to-be-endured riots. Sir, I had thought, by making this well known unto you, To have found a safe redress; but now grow fearful, By what yourself too late have spoke and done, That you protect this course, and put it on By your allegiance; which if you should, the fault Would not 'scape censure, nor the redresses sleep, Which, in the tender of a wholesome yeal, Might in their working do you that offence, Which else were shame, that then necessity Will call discreet proceeding.

Fool.  For, you traw, nuncle, The hedge-sparrow and the cuckoo so long, That it's had it head bit off by it young. So, out went the candle, and we were left darkling.

LEAR.  Are you our daughter?

GON.  Come, sir. I would you would make use of that good wisdom, Whereof I know you are fraught, and put away These dispositions, that of late transform you From what you rightly are.

FOOL.  May not an ass know when the cart draws the horse? Whoop, Jug! I love thee.

LEAR.  Doth any here know me? This is not Lear. Doth Lear walk thus? speak thus? Where are his Either his notion weakens, his discernings [eyes] Are lethargied — Ha! waking? 'tis not so. Who is it that can tell me who I am?

FOOL.  Lear's shadow.

LEAR.  I would learn that: for, by the marks of sovereignty and reason, I should be false persuaded I had daughters.

FOOL.  Which they will make an obedient father.

LEAR.  Your name, fair gentlewoman?

GON.  This admiratio' sir, is much o' the favour 701

Pierce every sense about thee! Old fond eyes,
Beweep this cause again, I'll pluck ye out,
And cast you, with the waters that you lose,
To temper clay. Yea, is it come to this?
Let it be so; yet have I left a daughter.
Who, I am sure, is kind and comfortable:
When she shall hear this of thee, with her nails
She'll play thy wolfsish visage. Thou shalt find
That I'll resume the shape which thou dost think
I have cast off for ever: thou shalt, I warrant thee.
[Exeunt Lear, Kent, and Attendants.
Gon. Do you mark that, my lord?
Alb. I cannot be so partial, Goneril,
To the great love I bear you.—
Gon. Pray you, content. What, Oswald, ho!
[To the Fool] You, sir, more knave than fool, after your master.
Fool. Nuncle Lear, nuncle Lear, tarry and take the fool with thee.
A fox, when one has caught her,
And such a daughter,
Should sure to the slaughter,
If my cap would buy a kilter:
So the fool follows after.
[Exit.
Gon. This man hath good counsel:— a hundred knaves!
'Tis politic and safe to let him keep
At point a hundred knaves; yes, that, on every
Each being his fancy, each complaint, dislike.
He may enguar his dotage with their powers,
And hold our lives in mercy. Oswald, I say!
Alb. Well, you may fear too far.
Gon. Safer than trust too far:
Let me still take away the harms I fear,
Not fear still to be taken: I know his heart.
What be hath utter'd I have writ my sister:
If she sustain him and his hundred knights,
When I have shewn't the unfitness,—
Re-enter Oswald.
How now, Oswald!
What, have you writ that letter to my sister?
Osw. Yes, madam.
Gon. Take you some company, and away to horse:
Inform her full of my particular fear;
And thereto add such reasons of your own
As may not meet it more. Get you gone;
And hasten your return. [Exit Oswald.] No, no,
my lord,
This milky gentleness and course of yours
Though I condemn not, yet, under pardon,
You are much more attain'd for want of wisdom
Than praised for the wantonness of valour.
Alb. How far your eyes may pierce I cannot tell:
Striving to better, oft we mar what 's well.
Gon. Nay, then—
Alb. Well, well; the event.
[Exeunt.
SCENE V. — Court before the same.
Enter Lear, Kent, and Fool.
Lear. Go you before to Gloucester with these letters.
Acquaint my daughter no further with any things ye know than comes from her demand out of the letter. If your diligence be not speedy,
I shall be there afore you.
Kent. I will not sleep, my lord, till I have deliver'd your letter.
[Exit.
Fool. If a man’s brains were in’s heels, were’t not in danger of knewes?
Lear. Ay, ho!
Fool. Then, I prithee, be merry; thy wit shall ne’er go slipseshed.
Lear. Ha, ha, ha!
Fool. Shalt see thy other daughter will use thee kindly: for though she’s as like this as a crab’s like an apple, yet I can tell what I can tell.
ACT II.

KING LEAR.

SCENE I. — The Earl of Gloucester's castle.

Enter Edmund, and Curan meets him.

Edm. Save thee, Curan.

Cur. And you, sir. I have been with your father, and given him notice that the Duke of Cornwall and Regan his duchess will be here with him this night.

Edm. How comes that?

Cur. Nay, I know not. You have heard of the news abroad; I mean the whispered ones, for they are yet but ear-kissing arguments?

Edm. Not I: pray you, what are they?

Cur. Have you heard of no likely wars toward, 'twixt the Dukes of Cornwall and Albany?

Edm. Not a word.

Cur. You may do, then, in time. Fare you well, sir.

[Exit.]

Edm. The duke be here to-night? The better! This weaves itself perfide into my business. [Dest! My father hath set guard to take my brother; And I have one thing, of a queasy question, Which I must act: briefness and fortune, work! Brother, a word; descendent, brother, I say!

Enter Edgar.

My father watches: O sir, fly this place; Intelligence is given where you are hid; You have now the good advantage of the night; Have you not spoken 'gainst the Duke of Cornwall?

He's coming hither; now, 'tis the night, 'tis the haste, And Regan with him; have you nothing said Upon his party 'gainst the Duke of Albany? Advise yourself.

Edg. I am sure on't, not a word.

[Exit Edgar.]

Some blood drawn on me would begot opinion [Wounds his arm.]

Of my more fierce endeavour: I have seen drunkards Do more than this in sport. Father, father! Stop, stop! No help.

Enter Gloucester, and Servants with torches.

Glo. Now, Edmund, where's the villain? [out. Edm. Here stood he in the dark, his sharp sword Mumbling of wicked charms, conjuring the moon To stand auspicious mistress,—

Glo. But where is he?
Enter Cornwall, Regan, and Attendants.
Corn. Now how my noble friend! since I came hither,
Which I can call but now, I have heard strange news.
Reg. If it be true, all vengeance comes too short.
Which can pursue the offender. How dost, my lord?
Glou. O, madam, my old heart is crack'd, it's split asunder!
Reg. What, did my father's godson seek your life?
He whom my father named? your Edgar?
Glou. O, lady, lady, shame would have it hid!
Reg. Was he not companion with the riuosous
That tend upon my father? [knaves
Corn. When not, madam: 'tis too bad, too bad.
Edw. Yes, madam, he was of that consort.
Reg. No marvel, then, though he were ill affected;
'Tis they have put him on the old man's death,
To have the expense and waste of his revenues.
I have this present evening from my sister
Been well informed of them; and with such cautions,
That if they come to sejourn at my house,
I'll not be there.
Corn. Nor I, assure thee, Regan.
Edmund, I hear that you have shown your father
A child-like office.
Edw. 'Twas my duty, sir.
Glou. He did bewray his practice, and received
This hurt you see, striving to apprehend him.
Corn. Is he pursued?
Glou. Ay, my good lord.
Corn. If he be taken, he shall never more
Be fear'd of doing harm: make your own purpose,
How in my strength you please. For you, Edmund,
Whose virtue and obdience doth this instant
So much commend itself, you shall be ours;
Natures of such deep trust we shall much need;
You we first seize on.
Edw. I shall serve you, sir,
Truly, moreover else.
Glou. For him I thank your grace.
Corn. You know not why we came to visit you.—
Reg. Thus out of season, threading dark-eyed night:
Occasions, noble Gloucester, of some pique,
Where we must have use of your advice;
Our father he hath writ, so hath our sister,
Of differences, which I best thought it fit
To answer from our home; the several messengers
From hence attend dispatch. Our good old friend,
Lay comforts to your bosom; and bestow
Your own security to our business,
Which craves the instant use.
Glou. I serve you, madam:
Your graces are right welcome. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. — Before Gloucester's castle.

Enter Kent and Oswald, severally.
Osw. Good dawning to thee, friend; art of this house?
Kent. Ay.
Osw. Where may we set our horses?
Kent. I the more.
Osw. Prithee, if thou lovest me, tell me.
Kent. I love thee not.
Osw. Why then, I care not for thee.
Kent. If I had thee in Lipsbury pinfold, I would make thee for care for me.
Osw. What dost thou use me thus? I know thee
Kent. Fellow, I know thee. [not.
Osw. What dost thou know me for?
Kent. A knife; a rascal; an eater of broken meats; a base, proud, shallow, beggarly, threesuit ed, hundred-pound, filthy, worsted-stocking knife; a lively-sword, action-taking knife, a threepence, glass-gazing, superserviceable, finical rogue; one trunk-inheriting slave; one that would be a bawd, in way of good service, and art nothing but the composition of a knife, beggarly, threesuit ed, and the son and heir of a monkey bite; one whom I will beat into clamorous whining, if thou deniest the least syllable of thy addition.
Osw. Why, what a monstrous fellow art thou, thus to rail on one that is neither known of thee nor known to me?
Kent. What a brazen-faced varlet art thou, deny thou knowest me! Is it two days ago since I tripped up thy heels, and beat thee before the king? Draw, you rogue: for, though it be night, yet the moon shines; I'll make a sop o' the moonshine of you; draw, you whoreson cullionly barber-monger, you murthering knave.
Osw. Away! I have nothing to do with thee.
Kent. Draw, you rascal; you come with letters against the king; and take vanity the puppet's part against the royalty of her father; draw, you rogue, or I'll so carbuncle your shanks; draw, you rascal; come your ways.
Osw. Help, ho! murder! help!
Kent. Strike, you slake; stand, rogue, stand;
you neat slake, strike. [Beating him.
Osw. Help, ho! murder! murder!

Enter Edmund, with his riper drawn. Cornwall, Regan, Gloucester, and Servants.
Edw. How now! What's the matter?
Kent. With you, Goodman boy, an you please: come, I'll flesh ye; come on, young master.
Glou. Weapons! arms! What's the matter here?
Corn. Keep peace, upon your lives: He dies that strikes again. What is the matter?
Reg. The messengers from our sister and the Corn. What is your difference? speak. [king.
Osw. I am scarce in breath, my lord.
Kent. No marvel, you have so bestowed your valour. You cowardly rascal, nature disowns in thee: a tailor made thee. —[a man?
Corn. Thou art a strange fellow: a tailor make Kent. Ay, a tailor, sir: a stone-cutter or a painter could not have made him so ill, though he had been but two hours at the trade.
Corn. Tell me, how grew your quarrel?
Osw. This ancient ruffian, sir, whose life I have suspected at suit of his grey beard,—
Kent. Thou whoreson ruffian! thou unnecessary letter! My lord, if you will give me leave, I will tread this unbidled villain into mortar, and dub the wall with him, sir. Farewell, my beard.
Corn. Peace, sirrah! — [you wagtail? You beastly knave, know you no reverence?
Kent. Yes, sir; but anger hath a privilege.
Corn. Why art thou angry? — [swords
Kent. That such a slave as this should wear a
Who wears no honesty. Such sinning rogues as Like rats, oft bite the holy cords a-twain — [these,
Which are too intrinsick t' unuse: smooth every
That in the natures of their lords' rebel; — [passion
Bring oil to fire, snow to their colder moods;
 Renege, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks
With every gale, and vary of their masters,
Knowing nought, like dogs, but following.
A plague upon your epileptic visages! Smile you my speeches, as I were a fool?
Goose, if I had you upon Sarum plain,
I'll drive ye cackling home to Camelot.
Corn. What. What, thou art mad, old fellow?
Kent. No contraries hold more antipathy
Than I and such a knave. — [his offence?
Corn. Why dost thou call him knave? What's Kent. His countenance likes me not. — [nor his,
Corn. He may be shame, does unhappier,
Kent. Sir, 'tis my occupation to be plain:
I have seen better faces in my time
Than stands upon any shoulder that I see
Before me at this instant.

Cor. This is some fellow, who, having been praised for bluntness, doth affect
A saucy roughness, and constrains the garb
Quite to his nature; he cannot flatter. He
An honest mind and plain, he must speak truth!
As they will take it, so: if not, he's plain. [Exit
These kind of knaves I know, which in this plain-
Labour more craft and more corrupter ends
Than twenty silly ducking observers
Think to match their stuff alone.
Kent. Sir, in good sooth, in sincere verity,
Under the allowance of your great aspect,
Whose influence, like the wreath of radiant fire
On flickering Phæbus' front.—

Cor. What mean'st by this? Kent. To go out of my dialect, which not to discom-mand so much. I know, sir. I am no flatterer: he
That beguiled you in a plain accent was a plain knave; which for my part I will not be, though I should win your displeasure to entreat me to it.

Cor. What was the offence you gave him? Kent. I have never gave him any.
It pleased the king his master very late
To strike at me, upon his misconstruction;
When he, conjunct, and flattering his displeasure,
Tripp'd me behind; being down, insulted, rail'd,
And put upon such a deal of man,
That worthied him, got praises of the king
For him attempting who was self-subdu'd;
And, in the flesheum of this dread exploit,
Drew on me here again.
Kent. None of these rogues and cowards
But Ajax is their fool.

Cor. Fetch forth the stocks! You stubborn ancient knave, you reverend braggart,
We'll teach you—

Kent. Sir, I am too old to learn:
Call not your stocks for me: I serve the king;
On whose employment I was sent to you:
You shall do small respect, show too bold malice
Against the grace and person of my master,
Stocking his messenger.

Cor. Fetch forth the stocks! As I have life
And honour,
There shall he sit till noon.
[too,

Reg. 'Till noon! till night, my lord; and all night
Kent. Why, madam, if you were your father's dog,
You should not use me so.

Reg. Sir, being his knave, I will.

Cor. This is a fellow of the self-same colour
Our sister speaks of. Come, bring away the stocks!

Glou. Let me beseech your grace to close
His fault is much, and the good king his master
Will check him for 't; your purposed low correction
Is such as basest and contemned'st wretches
For pilgrimages and most common trespasses
Are punish'd with: the king must take it ill,
That's so slightly valued in his messenger,
Should I have him thus restrain'd?

Cor. I'll answer that.

Reg. My sister may receive it much more worse,
To have her gentleman abused, assaulted,
For following her affairs. Put in his legs.

Come, my good lord, away,
[Exit all but Gloucester and Kent.

Glou. I am sorry for thee, friend; 'tis the duke's pleasure,
Whose disposition, all the world well knows,
Will not be rul'd nor stop'd: I'll entreat he, thee.

Kent. Pray, do not, sir: I have watched and travel'd hard;
Some time I shall sleep out, the rest I'll whistle.

A good man's fortune may grow out at heels:
Give you good morrow! Glou. The duke's to blame in this: 'twill be ill

[Exit.

Kent. Good king, that must approve the common
Thou out of heaven's beneficence comest
Saw, to the warm sun: he cannot flatter. He Approach, thou beacon to this under globe,
That by thy comfortable beams I may
Peruse this letter! Nothing almost sees miracles
But misery: I know 'tis from Cordelia,
Who hath most fortunately been inform'd
Of my obscure course; and shall find time
From this enormous state, seeking to give Losses their remedies. All weary and o'erwatch'd,
To take vantage, heavy eyes, not to behold
This shameful lodging.

Fortune, good night: smile once more; turn thy wheel!

SCENE III.—A wood.

Enter Edgar.

Edg. I heard myself proclaim'd;
And by the happy hollow of a tree
Escaped the hunt. No port is free: no place,
That guard, and most unusual vigilance,
Does not attend my taking. While I may 'scape,
I will preserve myself: and am bethought
To take the basest and most poorest shape
That ever penury, in contempt of man,
Brought near to bestial: my face I'll grime with filth;
Blanket my loins; elf all my hair in knots;
And with presented nakedness out-face
The winds and persecutions of the sky.
The country gives me proof and precedent
Of bedlam beggars, who, with roaring voices,
Strike in their numb'd and mortified bare arms
Pins, wooden pricks, nails, sprigs of rosemary:
And with this horrid object, from low farms,
Poor pelting villages, sheep-cotes, and mills,
Sometime with lunatic fans, sometime with prayers,
Enforce their charity. Poor Turlgyod! poor Tom! That
's something yet: Edgar I nothing am.

SCENE IV.—Before Gloucester's castle. Kent in the stocks.

Enter Lear, Fool, and Gentleman.

Lear. 'Tis strange that they should so depart
From home.
And not send back my messenger.

Gent. As I learn'd,
The night before there was no purport in them
Of this remove.

Kent. Hail to thee, noble master!

Lear. Ha! Ha! Ha!
Makest thou this shame thy pastime?

Kent. No, my lord.
Fool. Ha! ha! he wears cruel garters. Horses are tied by the heads, dogs and bears by the neck, monkeys by the loins, and men by the legs: when a man's over-lusty at legs, then he wears wooden nether-stocks.

Lear. What's he that hath so much thy place missing?—To set thee here?

Kent. It is both he and she; Your son and daughter.

Lear. No.
Kent. Yes.
Lear. No, I say.
Kent. I say, yea.
Lear. No, no, they would not.
Kent. Yes, by heaven.
Lear. By Jupiter, I swear, no.
Kent. By Juno, I swear, ay.
Lear. They durst not do't;
They could not, would not do; 'tis worse than murder,
To do upon respect such violent outrage;
Resolve me, with all modest haste, which way
Thou mightstst deserve, or they impose, this usage,
Coming from us.

Kent. My lord, when at their home
I did commend your highness' letters to them,
Ere I was risen from the place that show'd
My duty kneeling, came there a reckoning post,
Saying 'twas my haste, half breathless, pouncing forth
From General his mistress salutations;
Deliver'd letters, spite of intermission,
Which presently they read: on whose contents,
They summon'd up their meny, straight took horse;
Commanded me to follow, and attend
The vessels of their agent; gave me cold looks:
And meeting here the other messenger,
Whose welcome, I perceived, had poison'd mine,—
Being the very fellow that of late
Display'd so sanguine against your highness,—
Having more man than wit about me, drew:
He raised the house with loud and coward cries.
Your son and daughter found this trespass worth
The shame which here it suffers.

Fool. Winter's not gone yet, if the wild-geese fly that way,
Fathers that wear rags,
Do make their children blind;
But fathers that bear bags
Shall see their children kind.
Fortune, that arrant whore,
Ne'er turns the key to the poor.
But, for all this, thou shalt have as many dolours
For thy daughters as thou canst tell in a year.

Lear. O, how this mother swells up toward my heart!
Hysterica passio, down, thou climbing sorrow,
Thy element's below! Where is this daughter?

Kent. With the earl, sir, here within.

Lear. Follow me not: Stay here.

Kent. Made you no more offence but what you speak of?

Lear. None.

How chance the king comes with so small a train?

Fool. An thou hadst been set i' the stocks for that question, thou hast as well deserved it.

Lear. Why, fool?

Fool. We'll set thee to school to an ant, to teach thee there's no labouring i' the winter. All that follow their noses are led by their eyes but blind men; and there's not a nose among twenty but can smell of that's stinking. Let go thy hold when a great wheel runs down a hill, lest it break thy neck with following it; but the great one that goes up the hill, let him draw thee after. When a wise man gives thee better counsel, give me mine again: I would have none but knaves follow it, since a fool gives it.

That sir which serves and seeks for gain,
And follows but for form.
Will pack when it begins to rain,
And leave thee in the storm.
But I will tarry; the fool will stay,
And let the wise man fly:
The knave turns fool that runs away;
The fool no knave, percy.

Kent. Where learned you this, fool?

Fool. Not i' the stocks, fool.

Re-Enter Lear with Gloucester.

Lear. Deny to speak with me? They are sick? they are weary?
They have travelled all the night? Mere flesches;
The images of revolt and flying off.
Fetch me a better answer.

Glou. My dear lord,
You know the fiery quality of the duke;
How unremovable and fixed he is
In his own counsel.

Lear. Vengeance! plague! death! confusion! Fiery? what quality? Why, Gloucester, Gloucester, I'd speak with the Duke of Cornwall and his wife.

Glou. Well, my good lord, I have inform'd them so.

Lear. Inform'd them! Dest thou understand me, Glou. Ay, my good lord.

Lear. The king would speak with Cornwall; the dear father

Reg. Would with his daughter speak, commands her ser-
Are they inform'd of this? My breath and blood! Fiery? the fiery duke? Tell the hot duke that—
No, but not yet: may be he is not well.
Infamity doth still neglect all office
Whereo'er our health is bound; we are not ourselves
When nature, being oppress'd, commands the mind
To suffer with the body: I'll forbear;
And as I fall in with my master reader will,
To take the indisposed and sickly fit
For the sound man. Death on my state! wherefore

Looking on Kent. Should he sit here? This act persuades me
That this renouncement of the duke and her
Is practicable. Give me my servant forth.
Go tell the duke and 's wife I'll speak with them,
Now, presently: bid them come forth and hear me,
Or at their chamber-door I'll beat the drum
Till it cry sleep to death.

Glou. I would have all well betwixt you.

Lear. O, me, my heart, my rising heart! but, down,

Fool. Cry to it, numbe, as the cockney did to the eels when she put 'em i' the paste alive; she knap-
ked 'em o' the coaxcombs with a stick, and cried
'Down, wantsons, down!' 'Twas her brother that,
in pure kindness to his horse, buttered his hay.

Enter Cornwall, Regan, Gloucester, and Servants.

Lear. Good morrow to you both.

Corn. Hail to your grace!

Reg. I am glad to see your highness.

Lear. Regan, I think you are; I know what reason
I have to think so: if thou shouldst not be glad,
I would divorce me from thy mother's tomb,
Sepulchring an adultress. [To Kent] O, are you
Some other here for that?—Beloved Regan. [Fre?]
Thy sister's taught: O Regan, she hath tied
Sharp-tooth'd unkindness, like a vulture, here:

Points to his heart. I can scarce speak to thee: thou 'lt not believe
With how depraved a quality—O Regan!

Reg. I pray you, sir, lake patience: I have hope
You less know how to value her desert
Than she to scent her duty.

Lear. Say, how is that?

Reg. I cannot think my sister in the least
Would fall her obligation: if, sir, perseverance
She have restrain'd the riots of your followers,
'Tis on such ground, and to such wholesome end,
As clears her from all blame.

Lear. My curses on her!

Reg. O, sir, you are old;
Nature in you stands on the very verge
Of her confine: you should be mired and led
By some discretion, that discerns your state
Better than you yourself. Therefore, I pray you,
That to our sister you do make return;
Say you have wrong'd her, sir.

Lear. Ask her forgiveness?
Do you but mark how this becomes the house?  'Dear daughter, I confess that I am old; [Kneeling. Age is unnecessary: on my knees I beg That you'll vouchsafe me rainment, bed, and food.'
Rey. Good sir, no more: these are unsightly tricks: Return you to your sister.

Lear. This's never, Regan: She hath alighted not half my train; Look'd black upon me; struck me with her tongue, Most serpent-like, upon the very heart: All the stored vengances of heaven fall On her ingrateful top. Strike her young bones, You taking airs, with lameness!

Rey. Fie, sir, fie!

Lear. You nimble lightnings, dart your blinding Into her scornful eyes! Infect her beauty, [flames You ten-suck'd fogs, drawn by the powerful sun, To fall and blast her pride!
Rey. O the best gods! so will you wish on me, When the rash mood is on.

[curse:
Lear. No, Regan, thou shalt never have my Thy tender-hefted nature shall not give Thee o'er to harshness: her eyes are fierce; but thine Do comfort and not burn. 'Tis not in thee To grudge my pleasures, to cut off my train, To bendy hasty words; to count my sizes, And in conclusion to oppose the bolt Against my coming in: thou better know'st The offices of nature, bond of childhood, Effects of courtesy, dues of gratitude; Thy half o' the kingdom last thou not forgot, Wherein I thee endow'd.'
Rey. Good sir, to the purpose.

Lear. Who put my man i' the stocks?

Corn. What trumpet's that?
Rey. I know't, my sister's: this approves her That she would soon be here.

Enter Oswald.

Is thy lady come?

Lear. This is a slave, whose easy-borrow'd pride Dwells in the fickle grace of her he follows, Out, varlet, from my sight!

Corn. What means your grace?

Lear. Who stock'd my servant? Regan, I have good hope [heavens, Thou didst not know on't. Who comes here? O

Enter Goneril.

If you do love old men, if your sweet sway Allow obedience, if yourselves are old, Make it your cause; send down, and take my part! [To Gon.] Art not ashamed to look upon this beard? O Regan, wilt thou take her by the hand?

Gon. Why not by the hand, sir? How have I All's not offence: that indiscretion finds [offended] And dotage terms so.
Lear. O sides, you are too tough: Will you yet hold? How came my man i' the stocks? Corn. I set him there, sir: but his own disorders Deserved much less advancement.
Lear. You! I did you?
Rey. I pray you, father, being weak, seem so. If, till the expiration of your mouth, You will return and sojourn with my sister, Dismissing half your train, come then to me: I am now from home, and out of that provision Which shall be needful for your entertaining.
Lear. Return to her, and fifty men dismiss'd? No, rather I abjure all roofs, and choose To wage against the enmity of the air; To be a coward with the wolf and owl.— Necessity's sharp pinch! Return with her? Why, the boldest men, that darest not take Our youngest born, I could as well be brought To knee his throne, and, squire-like, pension beg To keep base life about. Return with her? Persuade me rather to be slave and minister To this detested groom.

Gon. At your choice, sir.

Lear. I prithee, daughter, do not make me mad: I will not trouble thee, my child: farewell! We'll no more meet, no more see one another: But yet the time they lives, my blood, my daughter; Or rather a disease that's in my flesh, Which I must needs call mine: thou art a boil, A plague-sore, an embossed carbuncle, In my corrupted blood. But I'll not chide thee; Let shame come when it will, I do not call it: I do not know but the thunder's ever shook it. Nor tell tales of thee to high-judging Jove: Mend when thou canst; be better at thy leisure: I can be patient: I can stay with Regan, And my hundreds knights.

Rey. Not altogether so: I look'd not for you yet, nor am provided For your fit welcome. Give ear, sir, to my sister: For those that mingle reason with your passion Must be content to think you old, and so — But she knows what she does.

Lear. Is this well spoken?

Rey. I dare avouch it, sir; and yet, fifty followers? Is it not well? What should you need of more? Yea, or so many, sith that both charge and danger Speak 'gainst so great a number? How, in one Should many people, under two commandis, [house, Hold unity? 'T is hard: almost impossible.

Gon. Why might not you, my lord, receive attendances From those that she calls servants or from mine?
Rey. Why not, my lord? If then they chanced to slack you, We could control them. If you will come to me,— For now I spy a danger, I entreat you To bring but five and twenty: to no more Will I give place or notice.

Lear. I gave you all—

Rey. And in good time you gave it.

Lear. Made you my guardians, my depositaries: But kept a reservation to be follow'd With such a number. What, must I come to you With five and twenty, Regan? said you so? Rey. And speak 't again, my lord; no more with me.

[ramour'd.

Lear. Those wicked creatures yet do look well— When others are more wicked; not being the worst Stands in so dismal rank. [To Gon.] I'll go with thee; Thy fifty yet doth double five-and-twenty, And thou art twice her love.

Gon. Hear me, my lord:

What need you five and twenty, ten, or five, To follow in a house where two so many Have a command to tend you?
Rey. What need one?

Lear. O, reason not the need: our poorest beggars Are in the poorest thing superfluous: Allow not nature more than nature needs, Man's life as cheap as beast's: thou art a lady; If only to go warm were beggars? Why, nature needs not what those gorgeous wear'st, Which scarcely keeps thee warm. But, for true need,—

Heavens, give me that patience, patience! I see you here, you gods, a poor old man, As full of grief as age: wretched in both! If it be you that stir these daughters' hearts Against their father, fool me not so much To bear it tamely; touch me with noble anger, And let not women's weapons, water-drops, Drawer my man's cheeks! No, you unnatural hags, I will have such revenges on you both That all the world shall—I will do such things,—
ACT III.

KING LEAR.

SCENE II.

Re-enter Gloucester.

Glo. The king is in high rage.

Corn. Whither is he going?

Glo. He calls to horse; but will I know not whither.

Corn. 'Tis best to give him way: he heads him—

Glo. My lord, entreat him by no means to stay.

Glo. Ack, the night comes on, and the bleak

Do sorely ruffle: for many miles about

There's scarce a bush.

Reg. O, sir, to wilful men,

The injuries that they themselves procure

Must be their schoolmasters. Shut up your doors:

He is attended with a desperate train;

And what they may incense him to, being apt

To have his ear abused—wisdom hides fear.

Night. Shut up your doors, my lord; 'tis a wild

My Regan counsels well: come out o' the storm. [Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A heath.

Storm still.

Enter Kent and a Gentleman, meeting.

Kent. Who's there, besides foul weather?

Gent. One minded like the weather, most unquiet.

Kent. I know you. Where's the king? [Elyy.

Gent. Contending with the trestful element;

Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea,

Or swell the curdled waters' bore the main,[hair.

That things might change or cease; tears his white

Which the impetuous blasts, with eyeless rage,

Catch in their fury, and make nothing of;

Strives in his little world of man to out-burn

The to-and-fro-conflicting wind and rain. [couch.

This night, wherein the cab-drawn bear would

The lion and the belly-pinched wolf

Keep their fur dry, mummified he runs,

And bids what will take all.

Kent. But who is with him?

Gent. None but the fool; who labours to out-jest

His heart-struck injuries.

Kent. Sir, I do know you;

And dare, upon the warrant of my note,

Commend a dear thing to you. There is division,

Although as yet the face of it be cover'd

With mutual cunning; 'twixt Albany and Cornwall;

Who have—as who have not, that their great stars

Throned and set high?—servants, who seem no less,

Which are to France the spies and speculations

Intelligent of our state; what hath been seen,

Either in smellies and packings of the dukes,

Or the hard rein which both of them have borne

Against the old kind king; or something deeper;

Whereof perchance these are but furnishings:

But, true it is, from France there comes a power

Into this scatter'd kingdom; who already,

Wise in our negligence, have secret feet

In some of our best ports, and are at point

To show their open banner. Now to you:

If on my credit you dare build so far

To make your speed to Dover, you shall find

Some that will thank you, making just report

Of how unnatural and bemadding sorrow

The king hath cause to plain.

I am a gentleman of blood and breeding;

And, from some knowledge and assurance, offer

This office to you.

Kent. I will talk further with you.

Gent. No, do not.

For confirmation that I am much more

708
For there was never yet fair woman but she made mouths in a glass.

Lear. No, I will be the pattern of all patience; I will say nothing.

Kent. Who's there?
Fool. Marry, here's grace and a cod-piece; that's a wise man and a fool.

[Enter Kent and Fool.]

Kent. Aha, sir, are you here? things that love

Love not such nights as these: the wrathful skies

Gallow the very wanderers of the dark,

And make them keep their caves; since I was man,

Such sheets of fire, such bursts of horrid thunder,

Such groans of roaring wind and rain. I never Remember to have heard: man's nature cannot carry

The afflication nor the fear.

Lear. Let the great gods,

That keep this dreadful pother over our heads,

Find out their enemies now. Tremble, thou wretch,

That last within this teemed crimes;

Unwhipp'd of justice: hide thee, thou bloody hand;

Thou perjured, and thou simian of virtue

That art incestuous: calf, to pieces shake,

That under covert and conception seeming

Hast practised on man's life: close pent-up guilts,

Rive your concealing continents, and cry

These dreadful stormers grace. I am a man

More sin'd against than sinning.

Kent. Alack, b劳ed-headed!

Graceless my lord, hard by here is a noble;

Some friendship will it lend you 'gainst the tempest;

Repose you there: while I to this hard house —

More harder than the stones whereof 'tis mixed;

Which even but now, demanding after you,

Denied me to come in — return, and force

Their scant ed courtesy.

Lear. My wits begin to turn.

Come on, my boy: how dost, my boy? art cold?

I am cold myself. Where is this straw, my fellow?

The art of our necessities is strange; [hoyled]

That can make vile things precious. Come, your Poor fool and knave, I have one part in my heart

That's sorry yet for thee.

Fool. [Shaking] He that has and a little tiny wit, —

With he'y, ho, the wind and the rain. —

Must make content with his fortunes fit,

For the rain it raineth every day.

Lear. True, my good boy. Come, bring us to

And let us sit and look on. [Enter Lear and Kent.

Fool. This is a brave night to cool a courtzan.

I'll speak a prophecy ere I go:

When priests are more in word than matter;

When brewers mar their malt with water;

When nobles are their tailors' tatters;

Not velvet burn'd, but wench's suits;

When every case in law is right;

No squire in debt, nor no poor knight;

When slender do not live in tongues;

Nor outpurses come not to thongs;

When usurers tell their gold i' the field;

And beds and widows make churches build;

Then shall the realm of Albion

Come to great confusion;

Then comes the time, who lives to see 't,

That going shall be used with feet.

This prophecy Merlin shall make; for I live before his time.

[Exit.]

SCENE III.—Gloucester's castle.

Gloucester, Lear, Kent, and Fool.

Gloucester. Alack, alack, Edward, I like not this unnatural dealing. When I desired their leave that I might pity them, they took from me the use of mine own house: charged me, on pain of their perpetual displeasure, neither to speak of him, entreat for him, nor any way sustain him.

Edg. [Within] Most savage and unnatural!

Glou. Go to; say you nothing. There's a division betwixt the dukes; and a worse matter than that: I have received a letter this night; 'tis dangerous to be spoken. I have locked the letter in my bosom; these injuries the king, therefore, will be revenged home; there's part of a power already footed: we must incline to the king. I will seek him, and privily relieve him: go you and maintain talk with the duke, that my charity be not of him perceived: if he ask for me, I am ill, and gone to bed. Though I die for it, as no less is threatened me, the king my old master must be relieved. There is some strange thing toward, Edmund; pray you, be careful.

[Exit.]

SCENE IV.—The heath. Before a hovel.

Enter Lear, Kent, and Fool.

Kent. This courtesy, forbid thee, shall the duke

Instantly know; and of that letter too;

This seems a fair deserving, and must draw me

That which my father losses; no less than all:

The younger rises when the old doth fall.

[Exit.]

SCENE IV.—The heath. Before a hovel.

Enter Lear, Kent, and Fool.

Kent. Here is the place, my lord; good my lord,

The tyranny of the open night's too rough [enter:

For nature to endure.

Lear. Let me alone.

Kent. Good my lord, enter here.

Lear. Will break my heart?

Kent. I had rather break mine own. Good my lord, enter.

[Ignis storm.]

Lear. Thou think'st 'tis much that this content

Invades us to the skin: so 'tis to thee;

But where the greater malady is fix'd,

The lesser is scarce felt. Thou 'st slain a bear;

But if thy flight lay toward the raging sea,

Thou 'st meet the bear i' the mouth. When the mind

The body's delicate: the tempest in my mind

Doth from my senses take all feeling else

Save what beats there. Final ingratitude!

Is it not as this mouth should tear this hand

For lifting food to 't? But I will punish home:

No, I will weep no more. In such a night

To shut me out! Pour on; I will endure.

In such a night as this! O Regan, Goneril!

Your old kind father, whose frank heart gave all, —

O, that we wise lies; let me shun that;

No more of that.

Kent. Good my lord, enter here.

Lear. Pray thee, go in thyself; seck thine own case;

This tempest will not give me leave to ponder

On things would hurt me more. But I 'll go in.

[to the Fool] Aha, boy; go first. You houseless poverty. —

Nay, get thee in. I 'll pray, and then I 'll sleep.

[Fool goes in.]

Poor naked wretches, wherefore se' ye here?

That hide the pelting of this pitiless storm,

How shall your houseless heads and unfed sides,

Your loof'd and window'd raggedness, defend you

From seasons such as these? O, I have ta'en

Too little care of this! Take physic, pourp;

Expose thyself to feel what wretches feel,

That thou mayst shake the superflux to them,

And show the heavens more lust:

Edg. [Within] Fathom and half, fathom and half! Poor Tom!

Fool. Come not in here, nuncle, here's a spirit.

Help me, help me!

Kent. Give me thy hand. Who's there?

Fool. A spirit, a spirit: he says his name's poor Tom.

Kent. What art thou that dost grumble there? the straw? Come forth.
Enter Edgar disguised as a madman.

Edg. Away! the foul fiend follows me! Through the sharp hawthorn blows the cold wind. Hush! to thy cold bed, and warm thee.

Lear. Hast thou given all to thy two daughters? And art thou come to this!—

Edg. To become so poor Tom! whom the foul fiend hath led through fire and through flame, and through ford and whirlpool, o'er bog and quagmire; that hath lied under his pillow, and halters in his pew; set ratsbane by his porridge; made him proud of heart, to ride on a bay trotting-horse over four-arched bridges, to course his own shallows and intermerest; live there, run here, a-cold,—O, do de, do de, do de. Bless thee from whirlwinds, star-blasting, and taking! Do poor Tom some charity, whom the foul fiend vexes: there could I have him now,—and, there and there again, and there. [Storm still.

Lear. What, have his daughters brought him to this pass? Couldst thou save nothing? Didst thou give them law. Nay, he reserved a blanket, else we had been all shamed, fair Lear. Now, all the plagues that in the pestilential plague, God blazed women's light on thy daughter! Kent. He hath no daughters, sir. Kent. Death, traitor! nothing could have subdued To such a lowness but his unkind daughters. Is it the fashion, that discards fathers Should have thus little mercy on their flesh? Juristic punishment! It was this flesh begot Those pelican daughters.

Edg. Pilktock sat on Pilktock-hill: Hallow, hallow, hoo, too! Foot. This cold night will turn us all to fools and madmen.

Edg. A reckless heed o' the foul fiend: obey thy parents; keep thy word justly; swear not; commit not with man's sworn spouse; set not thy sweet heart on proud array. Tom's a-cold.

Lear. What hast thou been?

Edg. A serving-man, proud in heart and mind; that cursed my hairy; wore gloves in my rap; served the least of my mistress' heart, and did the act of darkness with her; swore as many oaths as I speak words, and broke them in the sweet face of heaven: one that slept in the contriving of lust, and waked to do it: wine loved I deeply, dice dearly; and in woman out-paramour'd the Turk: false of heart, light of body of hand: log in sloth, fox in stealth, wolf in greediness, dog in madness, lion in prey. Let not the cracking of shoes nor the rustling of silks betray thy poor heart to woman: keep thy foot out of brothels, thy hand out of packets, thy pen from leaders' books, and defy the foul fiend! Still through the hawthorn blows the cold wind: Says snam, mum, ha, no, nouncy. Dolphin my boy, my boy, sessa! let him trot by. [Storm still.

Lear. Why, thou wert better in thy grave than to answer with thy uncovered body this extremity of the skies. Is man no more than this? Consider him well. Thou owest the worm no silk, the least no hide, the sheep no wool, the cat no perfume. Ha! here's three on's are sophisticated! Thou art the thing itself: unaccommodated man is no more but such a poor, bare, forked animal as thou art. Off, off, you leadings! come, unbutton.

[Fur. Prithee, name me, be contented; 'tis a naughty night to swim in. Now a little fire in a wild field were like an old leecher's heart; a small spark, all the rest on 's body cold. Look, here comes a walking fire.

Enter Gloucester, with a torch.

Edg. This is the foul fiend Filibartiwigbiet: he begins at curfew, and walks till the first cock; he gives the web and the pin, squints the eye, and makes the hare-lip; mildews the white wheat, and hurts the poor creature of earth. S. Withold tootled thrice the old; He wore the night-marle, and her nine-fold; Bid her alight, And her troth plight, And, aroutin thee, witch, aroutin thee! Kent. How fares your grace?

Lear. What's he here?—Kent. What is 't you seek? Glo. What are you there? Your names? Edg. Poor Tom; that eats the swimming frog, the toad, the tadpole, the wall-newt and the water; that in the fury of his heart, when the foul fiend rages, eats cow-dung for saflets; swallows the old rat and the ditch-dog; drinks the green mantle of the standing pool; who is whipped from tilting to tithing, and stock-punished, and imprisoned; who hath had three suits to his back, six shirts to his body, horse to ride, and weapon to wear; But mice and rats, and such small deer, Have been Tom's food for seven long year. Beware the following. Peace, Sunklin; peace, thou fiend!

Glo. What, hath thy grace no better company? Edg. The prince of darkness is a gentleman: Mote he 's call'd, and Mahu. Kent. Glo. Our flesh and blood is green so vile, my lord, That it doth hate what gets it.

Edg. Poor Tom's a-cold.

Glo. Go in with me: my duty cannot suffer To obey in all your daughters' hard commands. Though their injustice be to bar my doors, And let this tyrannous night take hold upon you, Yet have I ventured to come seek you out, And bring you where both fire and food is ready. Lear. First let me talk with this philosopher.

What is the cause of thunder? [House. Kent. Good my lord, take his offer; go into the Lear. I'll talk a word with this same learned What is your study? [Thee.

Kent. Good my lord, take his offer; go into the Lear. I'll talk a word with this same learned What is your study? [Thee.

Edg. How to prevent the fiend, and to kill vermin. Lear. Let me ask you one word in private. Kent. Importune him once more to go, my lord; His wits begin to unsettle.

Glo. What, hast thou blamed him? [Storm still. Edg. His daughters seek his death: ah, that good Kent! He said it would be thus, poor lanish'll man! Thou say'st the king grows mad; I'll tell thee, friend, I am almost mad myself: I had a son, Now outlaw'd from my blood; he sought my life, But lately, very late: I loved him, friend; No father's son dearer: truth to tell thee, The grief hath craze'd my wits. What a night's this? I do beseech your grace.—

Lear. O, cry you mercy, sir.

Noble philosopher, your company. Edg. Tom's a-cold.

Glo. In, fellow, there, into the hovel: keep thee Lear. Come, let's in all. Kent. This way, my lord. Lear. With him;

I will keep still with my philosopher.

Kent. Good my lord, sooth him; let him take their fellow.

Glo. Take heed you on. Kent. Sirrah, come on; go along with us. Lear. Come, good Athenian.

Glo. No words, no words: hush.

Edg. Child Rowland to the dark tower came, His word was still.—Fie, toil, and tum. I smell the blood of a British man. [Exeunt.

ACT III.

KING LEAR.

SCENE V.—Gloucester's castle.

Enter Cornwall and Edmund.

Corn. I will have my revenge ere I depart his house.

Edm. How, my lord, I may be censured, that nature thus gives way to loyalty, something fears me to think of.

Corn. I now perceive, it was not altogether your brother's evil disposition made him seek his death; but a provoking merit, set a-work by a reprovable badness in himself.

Edm. How malicious is my fortune, that I must repent to be just! This is the letter he spoke of, which approves him an intelligent party to the advantages of France. O heavens! that this treason were not, or not I the detector!

Corn. Go with me to the duness.

Edm. If the matter of this paper be certain, you may have mighty business in hand.

Corn. True or false, it hath made thee earl of Gloucester. Seek out where thy father is, that he may be ready for our apprehension.

Edm. And this comforting the king, it will stuff his suspicion more fully.—I will persevere in my course of loyalty, though the conflict be sore between that and my blood.

Corn. I will lay trust upon thee; and thou shalt find a dearer father in my love. [Exit.

SCENE VI.—A chamber in a farmhouse adjoining the castle.

Enter Gloucester, Lear, Kent, Fool, and Edgar.

Glou. Here is better than the open air; take it thankfully. I will piece out the comfort with what addition I can: I will not be long from you.

Kent. All the power of his wits have given way to his impatience: the gods reward your kindness!

[Exit Gloucester.

Edg. Fratetetta calls me; and tells me Nero is an anger in the lake of darkness. Pray, innocent, and beware the foul fiend.

Fool. Prithree, unnec, tell me whether a madman be a gentleman or a yeoman?

Lear. A king, a king!

Edg. No, he's a yeoman that has a gentleman to his son; for he's a mad yeoman that sees his son a gentleman before him.

Lear. To have a thousand with red burning spires Come hissing in upon 'em,—

Edg. The foul fiend bites my back.

Fool. He's mad that trusts in the tameness of a wolf, a horse's health, a boy's love, a whore's oath. Lear. It shall be done: I will arraign them straight. [To Edgar] Come, sit thou here, most learned justice. [She foxes!]

[To the Fool] Thou, spicent sir, sit here. Now, you Fool. You look, where he stands and glares! Wantest thou my joint trial, madam?

Come o'er the bourn, Bessy, to me,—

Fool. Her boat hath a leak, And she must not speak

Why she dare not come over to thee.

Edg. The foul fiend haunts poor Tom in the voice of a nightingale. Dog-dance cries in Tom's belly for two white herring. Creak not, black angel; I have no food for thee.

Kent. How do you, sir? Stand you not so amazed? Will you lie down and rest upon the cushions? Lear. I'll see their trial first. Bring in the evildoer.

[To Edgar] Thou robed man of justice, take thy [To the Fool] And then, his yeoke-fellow of equity, Bench by his side: [To Kent] you are o' the con- sit you too. [Mission,

Edg. Let us deal justly.

Sickest or wakest thou, jolly shepherd? Thy sheep be in the corn;

And for one blast of thy miniskin mouth, They sheep shall take no harm.

Pur! the cat is gray.

Lear. Arraing her first; 'tis Gonerielle. I here take my oath before this honourable assembly, she kicked the poor king her father.

Fool. Come hither, mistress. Is you name Gon-

Lear. She cannot deny it. [Exit Fool. Lear. Cry you mercy, I took you for a joint-stead.

Fool. And here's another, whose wap'rd looks proclaim What store her heart is made on. Stop her there! Arms, arms, sword, fire! Corruption in the place! False justice, why hast thou let her scape? Edg. Bless thy five wits, sir, thou hast not.

Kent. O pity! Sir, where is the patience now, That you so oft have boasted to retain?

Edg. [Aside] My tears begin to take his part so They'll mar my counterfeiting. [much, Lear. The little dogs and all, Tom, Blanche, and Sweet-heart, see, they bark at me. Edg. Tom will throw his head at them. Avant, you curs!

By thy mouth or black or white,

Tooth that poisons it if it bite;

Mastiff, greyhound, mongrel grim,

Hound or spaniel, or whelp or lynx,

Or bobtail tickle or trundle-tail,

Tom will make them weep and wail:

For, with throwing thus my head,

Dogs leap the hatch, and all are fled.

De de, de, de. Sessa! Come, march to wakes and fairs and market-towns. Poor Tom, thy horn is dry.

Lear. Then let them anatomicize Regan; see what breeds about her heart. Is there any cause in nature that makes these hard hearts? [To Edg.] You, sir, I entertain for one of my hundred; only I do not like the fashion of your garments: you will say they are Persian attire; but let them be changed.

Kent. Now, good my lord, lie here and rest awhile.

Lear. Make no noise, make no noise; draw the curtains: so, so, so. We'll go to supper this morning. So, so, so.

Fool. And I'll go to bed at noon.

Re-enter Gloucester.

Glou. Come hither, friend: where is the king my master?

Kent. Here, sir; but trouble him not, his wits are gone. Glou. Good friend, I prithee, take him in thy arms; I have overheard a plot of death upon him:

There is a litter ready; lay him in't, [meet And drive towards Dover, friend, where thou shalt Both welcome and protection. Take up thy master: If thou shouldst daily half an hour, his life, With thine, and all that offer to defend him, Stand in assured loss: take up, take up, And follow me, that will to some provision Give thee quick conduct.

Kent. Oppressed nature sleeps:

This rest might yet have balm'd thy broken senses, Which, if convenience will not allow,

Stand in hard ware. [To the Fool] Come, help to bear thy master;

Thou must not stay behind.

Glou. Come, come, away.

[Exit all but Edgar.

Edg. When we our better see bearing our woes,
We scarcely think our miseries are ours.
Who alone suffers suffers most in the mind,

Leaving free things and happy shows behind:

But then the mind much sufferance doth o'erstep,

When grief hath mates, and bearing fellowship.
ACT III.

KING LEAR.

SCENE VII.

Glou., I have a letter guessingly set down.
Which came from one that's of a neutral heart,
And not from one opposed.
Corn.

Reg.

And false.

Corn.

Where hast thou sent the king?

Glou. To Dover.

Reg. Wherefore to Dover? Wast thou not charged

Corn. Wherefore to Dover? Let him first answer

Glou. I am tied to the stake, and I must stand the

Reg. Wherefore to Dover, sir?

Glou. Because I would not see thy cruel nails

Pinch out his poor old eyes: nor thy fierce sister

In his anointed flesh stick boarish Fangs.

The sea, with such a storm as his bare head

In hell-black night endured, would have buoy'd

And quench'd the stell'd fires.

Yet, poor old heart, he holp the heavens to rain.

If wolves had at thy gate how'd I that stern time.

Thou shouldst have said 'Good porter, turn the key,'

All cruels else subscribe: but I shall see

The winged vengeance overtake such children.

Corn. See 't shall thou never. Fellows, hold the

Upon those eyes of thine I'll set my fowr [chair.

Glou. He that will think to live till he be old,

Give me some help! O cruel! O you gods!

Reg. One side will mock another; the other too.

Corn. If you see vengeance.—

First Serr. Hold your hand, my lord:

I have serv'd you ever since I was a child;

But better service have I never done

Than now to bid you hold.

Reg.

First Serr. If you did wear a beard upon your chin,

I'd shake it on this quarrel. What do you mean?

Corn. My villain!

First Serr. Nay, then, come on, and take the chance of anger.

Thus!

Reg. Give me thy sword. A peasant stand up

[Takes a sword, and runs at him behind.

First Serr. O, I am shame! My lord, you have one eye left.

To see some mischief on him. O!

[Dies.

Corn. Lest it see more, prevent it. Out, vile jelly!

Where is thy lustre now?

[Edmund?

Glou. All dark and comfortless. Where's my son

Edmund, enkindle all the sparks of nature.

To quell this horrid act.

Reg. Out, treacherous villain!

That call'd on him that hates thee: it was he

That made the overthrow of my treasons to us;

Who is too good to pity thee.

Glou. O my follies! then Edgar was abused.

Kind gods, forgive me that, and prosper him!

Reg. Go thrust him out at gates, and let him smell

His way to Dover. [Exit one with Gloucester.] How is't, my lord? how look you?

Corn. I have receiv'd a hurt: follow me, lady.

Turn out that eyeless villain: throw this slave

Upon the dunghill. Regan, I bleace apace.

Untimely comes this hurt; give me your arm.

[Exit Cornwall, led by Regan.

Sec. Serr. I'll never care what wickedness I do,

If this man come to good.

Third Serr.

If she live long,

And in the end meet the old course of death.

Women will all turn monsters.

[Bedlam

To lead him where he would: his roguish madness

Allows itself to any thing.

Third Serr. Go thou: I'll fetch some flax and whites of eggs

To apply to his bleeding face. Now, heaven help him!

[Exeunt severally.

How light and portable my pain seems now.
When that which makes me bend makes the king
He chid'd as I father'd: Tom, away!

Bow. Mark the high noises: and thyself bewray,

When false opinion, whose wrong thought defiles

thee,

In thy just proof, repeals and reconcile thee.

What will hap more to-night, safe 'scape the king!

Lark, lark.

SCENE VII.—Gloucester's castle.

Enter Cornwall, Regan, Goneril, Edmund, and Servants.

Corn. Post speedily to my lord your husband:
show him this letter: the army of France is landed.

Seek out the villain Gloucester.

[Exeunt some of the Servants.

Reg. Hang him instantly.

Gon. Pluck out his eyes.

Corn. Leave him to my displeasure. Edmund, keep you our sister company: the revenues we are bound to take upon your traitorous father are not fit for your beholding. Advise the duke, where you are going, to a most destinate preparation: we are bound to the like. Our posts shall be swift and intelligent betwixt us. Farewell, dear sister:

farewell, my lord of Gloucester.

Enter Oswald.

How now! where's the king?

[Exhence.

Osw. My lord of Gloucester hath convey'd him
Some live or six and thirty of his knights,

Hot quarestirs after him, met him at gate:

Who, with some other of the lords dependants,

Are gone with him towards Dover; where they boast

To have well-amended friends.

Corn. Get horses for your mistress.

Gon. Farewell, sweet lord, and sister.

Corn. Edmund, farewell.

[Exeunt Goneril, Edmund, and Oswald.

Go seek the traitor Gloucester.

Pinion him like a thief, bring him before us.

[Exeunt other Servants.

Though well we may not pass upon his life

Without the form of justice, yet our power

Shall do a courtesy to our wrath, which men

May blame, but not control. Who's there? the traitor?

Enter Gloucester, brought in by two or three.

Reg. Ingratiate fox! 'tis he.

Corn. Bind fast his corky arms.

Glou. What mean your graces? Good my friends, consider

You are my guests: do me no foul play, friends.

Corn. Bind him, I say.

Glou. Unmerciful lady as you are, I'm none.

Corn. To this chair bind him. Villain, thou shalt find —

Glou. By the kind gods, 'tis most ignobly done

To pluck me by the beard.

Reg. So white, and such a traitor!

Glou.

Naughty lady,

These hairs, which thou dost ravish from my chin,

Will quicken, and accuse thee: I am your host:

With robbers' hands my hospitable favours

You should not ruffle thus. What will you do?

Corn. Come, sir, what letters had you from France?

Reg. Be simple answerer, for we know the truth.

Corn. And what confederacy have you with the traitors

Late footed in the kingdom?

Reg. To whose hands have you sent the lunatic

Speak.
ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The heath.

Enter Edgar.

Edg. Yet better thus, and known to be contemned,
Than still contemned and chatter'd. To be worst,
The lowest and most dejected thing of fortune,
Stands still in esperance, lives not in fear:
The lamentable change is from the best;
The worst returns to laughter. Welcome, then,
Thou unsubstantial air that I embrace!
The wretch that thou hast blown unto the worst
Owes nothing to thy blasts. But who comes here?

Enter Gloucester, led by an Old Man.

My father, poorly led? World, world, O world!
But that thy strange mutations make us hate thee,
Life would not yield to age.

Old Man. O, my good lord. I have been your tenant, and your father's tenant, these fourscore years.

Glos. Away, get thee away; good friend, be gone:
Thy comforts do me no good at all;
Their may hurt.

Old Man. Alack, sir, you cannot see your way.

Glou. I have no way, and therefore want no eyes;
I stumble when I fall oft 'tis seen,
Our means secure us, and our mere defects,
Prove our commodities. O dear son Edgar,
The food of thy abused father's wrath!
Might I but live to see thee in my touch,
I'd say I had eyes again!

Old Man. Here! How now! Who's there?

Edg. [Aside] O gods! Who 'tis can say 'tis am at
I am worse than e'er I was. [the worst?]

Old Man. 'Tis poor mad Tom.

Edg. [Aside] And worse I may be yet; the worst
So long as we can say 'This is the worst.' [is not Old Man. Fellow, where goes? Glou.

Is it a beggar-man?

Old Man. Madman and beggar too.
Glos. He has some reason, else he could not beg.
I the last night's storm I such a fellow saw:
Which made me think a man a worm; my son
Came then into my mind; and yet my mind
Was then scarce friends with him; I have heard more since.
As flies to wanton boys, are we to the gods,
They kill us for their sport.

Edg. [Aside] How should this be?
Bad is the trade that must play fool to sorrow,
Angrily and others. — Bless thee, master!

Glou. Is that the naked fellow?

Old Man. Ay, my lord.

Glos. Then, prithee, get thee gone: if, for my sake,
Thou wilt 'treat us, hence a mile or twain,
'T the way toward Dover, do it for ancient love;
And bring some covering for this naked soul,
Who I'll entreat to lead me.

Old Man. Alack, sir, he is mad.
Glou. 'Tis the times' plague, when madmen lead the blind.

Do as I bid thee, or rather do thy pleasure;
Above the rest, be gone.

Old Man. I'll bring him the best 'parel' that I have,
Come on 't' will.

Glos. Sirrah, naked fellow.—

Edg. Poor Tom's a-cold. [Aside] I cannot daub it further.

Glos. Come hither, fellow.

Edg. [Aside] And yet I must. — Bless thy sweet eyes, they bleed.

Glou. Know'st thou the way to Dover?

Edg. Both stile and gate, horse-way and footpath. Poor Tom hath been scared out of his good wits; bless thee, good man's son, from the foul fiend!
Like fiends have been in poor Tom at once; of last as Obidicut; Hobbiddiances prince of dullness;
Mahn, of stealing; Modo, of murder; Flibberti-gibbet, of mopping and mowing, who since pos-esses chambermaids and waiting-women. So, bless thee, master!

Glou. Here, take this purse, whom the heavens' plagues
Have humbled to all strokes: that I am wretched
Makes thee the happier: heavens, deal so still!
Let the superfluous and lust-dictated man,
That slaves your ordinance, that will not see
Because he doth not see it, and the eye seeth more quickly
So distribution should undo excess,
And each man have enough. Dost thou know

Edg. Ay, master.

Dover?

Glou. There is a cliff, whose high and bending head
Looks fearfully in the confined deep:
Bring me before the very brink of it.

Edg. And I will repair the misery thou dost bear
With something rich about me: from that place
I shall no leading need.

Edg. Give me thy arm.

Poor Tom shall lead thee. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Before the Duke of Albany's palace.

Enter Goneril and Edmund.

Gon. Welcome, my lord! I marvel our mildness
Not met us on the way.

Edm. [Aside] Then shall you go no further.
It is the coward terror of his spirit,
That dares not undertake: he'll not feel wrongs
Which tie him to an answer. Our wishes in the way
May prove effects. Back, Edmund, to my brother;
Hasten his musters and conduct his powers;
I must change arms at home, and give the distaff
Into my husband's hands, feel his trusty servant.
Shall pass between us: ere long you are like to hear,
If you dare venture in your own behalf,
A mistress's command. Wear this; spare speech;
I will give thee a favour.

Decline your head; this kiss, if it durst speak,
Would stretch thy wits up into the air:
Conceive, and fare thee well.

Edm. Yours in the ranks of death.

Gon. My most dear Gloucester!

Oscar. Madam, here comes my lord.

Gon. I have been worth the whistle.

Enter the Duke of Albany.

Duke. O Goneril! You are not worth the dist which the rude wind
Blows in your face. I fear your disposition:
That nature, which contains its origin,
Cannot be border'd certain in itself:
She that herself will sliver and disbranch
From her material sap, perfere must wither
And come to deadly use.

Gon. No more; the text is foolish.

KING. Hearken! to the vile seem vile;
Filius savour but themselves. What have you done?
Tigers, not daughters! What have you perform'd?
A father, and a gracious aged man,
All whose reverence even the head-hagg'd bear would
Most barbarous, most degenerate! have you maddened?
Could my good brother suffer you to do it?
A man, a prince, by him so benefitted!
If the heavens do not their visible spirits
Send quickly down to tame these vile offences,
It will come,

Hereafter, perforce prey on itself,
Like monsters of the deep.

Gon. That bear's a check for blows, a head for wrongs;
Who hast not in thy brows an eye discerning
Thine honour from thy suffering; that know'st
Fools do these villains pity who are punish'd?
Ere they have done their mischief. Where's thy drum?
France spreads his banners in our noisless land;
With plumed helm thy sayer begins threats;
When thou, a moral fool, sit'st still, and erst
'Alack, why does he so?'

Alb. See thyself, devil!

Proper deformity seems not in the field
So horrid as in woman.

Gon. O vain fool! - shame,
Alb. Thou chang'd and self-cover'd thing, for
Be-monster not thy feature. Were 't my fitness
To let these hands obey my blood,
They are apt enough to dislocate and tear
Thy flesh and bones: however thou art a fiend,
A woman's shape doth shield thee.

Gon. Marry, your manhood now -

Enter a Messenger.

Alb. What news? [read;]
Mess. O, my good lord, the Duke of Cornwall's
Shin by his servant, going to put out
The other eye of Gloucester.

Alb. Gloucester's eyes!

Mess. A servant that he bred, thrill'd with revenge.
Opposed against the act, bending his sword
To his great master; who, threat'ning enraged,
Flew on him, and amongst them fell'd him dead;
But not without that harmful stroke, which since
Hath practis'd him after.

Alb. This shows you are above,
You justices, that these our neter crimes
So speedily can venge! But, O poor Gloucester!
Lost he his other eye?

Mess. Both, both, my lord.

This letter, madam, craves a speedy answer;
'Tis from your sister.

Gon. [Aside.] One way I like this well;
But being widow, and my Gloucester with her,
May all the building in my fancy plumc
Upon my hateful life: another way;
The news is not so tart - I'll read, and answer.

Alb. Where was his son when they did take his Mess. Come with my lady hither.
Alb. He is not here.

Mess. No, my good lord; I met him back again.
Alb. Knows he the wickedness? [him;]
Mess. Ay, my good lord; I was inform'd against
And quit the house on purpose, that their punish-
Might have the freer course.

Mess. Gloucester, I live
To thank thee for the love thou show'dst the king,
And to revenge thine eyes. Come hither, friend;
Tell me what more thou know'st. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—The same. A tent.

Enter, with drum and colours, Cordelia, Doctor, and Soldiers.

Cor. Alack, 'tis he: why, was he met even now
As mad as the vex'd sea; singing aloud;
Crownd with rank furrier and furrow-weeds.
With bur-locks, hemlock, nettles, cuckoo-flowers,
Darnel, and all the idle weeds that grow
In our sustaining corn. A century send forth; Search every acre in the high-grown field, And bring him to our eye. [Exit an Officer.] What can man's wisdom In the restoring his bereaved sense? He that helps him take all my outward worth. Doct. There is means, madam: Our foster-nurse of nature is repose, The which he lacks; that to provoke in him, Are many simples operative, whose power Will close the eye of anguish. Cor. All best secrets, All you unpublislh'd virtues of the earth, Spring with my tears! be abait and remedeiate In the good man's distress! Seek, seek for him; Lest his ungodv'n rage dissolve the life That wants the means to lead it.

Enter a Messenger.

Mrs. News, madam; The British powers are marching litherward. Cor. 'Tis known before; our preparation stands In expectation of them. O dear father, It is thy business that I go about; Therefore great France My mourning and important tears hath pitted, No blown ambition doth our arms incite, But love, dear love, and our aged father's right: Soon may I hear and see him! [Exeunt.

SCENE V. — Gloucester's castle.

Enter Regan and Oswald. Reg. But are my brother's powers set forth? Osir. Ay, madam. Reg. Himself in person there? Osir. Madam, with much ado: Your sister is the better soldier. Reg. Lord Edmund speak not with your lord at home? Osir. No, madam, [him] Reg. What might import my sister's letter to Osir. 1 know not, lady. Reg. 'Faith, he is posted hence on serious matter. It was great ignorance, Gloucester's eyes being out, To let him live: where he arrives he moves All hearts against us: Edmund, I think, is gone, In pity of his misery, to dispatch His nighted life: moreover, to desery The strength of the enemy. [Letter. Osir. 1 must needs after him, madam, with my Reg. Our troops set forth to-morrow: stay with the ways are dangerous. [us; Osir. I may not, madam: My lady charged my duty in this business. Reg. Why should she write to Edmund? Might not you Transport her purposes by word? Beilike, Something — I know not what: I'll love thee much, Let me mislead the letter. Osir. Madam, I had rather — Reg. 1 know your lady does not love her husband; I am sure of that: and at her late being here She gave strange oaths and most speaking looks To noble Edmund. I know you are of her bosom. Osir. 1, madam? Reg. I speak in understanding: you are, I know 't; Therefore I do advise you, take this note: My lord is dead; Edmund and I have talk'd; And more convenient is he for my hand Than for your lady's: you may gather more, If you do find him, pray you, give him this; And when your mistress hears thus much from you, I pray, desire her call her wisdom to her. So, fare you well. If you do chuse to hear of that blind traitor, Preferment falls on him that cuts him off.

Osw. Would I could meet him, madam! I should What party I do follow. [Show Reg. Fare thee well. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI. — Fields near Dover.

Enter Gloucester, and Edgar dressed like a peasant.

Glou. When shall we come to the top of that same hill? [bourn.

Eng. You do climb it up it now: look, how we la- Glou. Methinks the ground is even.

Eng. Horrible steep.

Hark, do you hear the sea?

Glou. No, truly.

Eng. Why, then, your other senses grow imperfect By your eyes' anguish.

Glou. So may it be, indeed: Methinks thy voice is alter'd; and thou speak'st In better phrase and matter than thou didst.

Eng. You're much deceived: in nothing am I But in my garments. [changed, Glou. Methinks you're better spoken.

Eng. Come on, sir; here's the place: stand still. How fearful And dizzy 'tis, to cast one's eyes so low! The crows and choughs that wing the midday air Show scarce so gross as beetles: half-way down Hangs one that gathers shamphre, dreadful trade! Methinks he seems no bigger than his head: The fishermen, that walk upon the beach, Appear like mice; and yond tall anchoring bark, Diminu'd to her cock; her cock, a buoy Almost too small for sight: the murmuring surge, That on the unnumber'd dle pebbles clashes, Cannot be heard so high. I'll look no more; Lest my brain turn, and the deficient sight Topple down headlong. Glou. Set me where you stand. Eng. Give me your hand: you are now within a foot Of the extreme verge; for all beneath the moon Would I not leap upright.

Glou. Here, friend, 's another purse; in it a jewel. Well worth a poor man's taking; fairies and gods Prosper it with thee! Go thou farther off; But me farewell, and let me hear thee going. Eng. Now fare thee well, good sir. Glou. With all my heart. Eng. Why do I trifle thus with his despair Is done to cure it.

Glou. [Kneeling] O you mighty gods! This world I do renounce, and, in your sights, Shake impatiently my great affliction off! If I could bear it longer, and not fall To quarrel with your great opposeless wills, My snuff and leathir'd part of nature should Burn itself out. If Edgar live, O, bless him! Now, fellow, fare thee well. [He falls forward. Eng. Gone, sir; farewell. And yet I know not how conceit may rob The treasury of life, when life itself Yields to the theft: had he been where he thought, By this, had thought been past. Alive or dead? Ha, you sir! friend! Here you, sir! speak! Thus might he pass indeed: yet he revives. What are you, sir?

Glou. Away, and let me die. Eng. Hadst thou been aught but gossamer, feathered, So many fathom down precipitating, jery, air, Thou'st shiver'd like an egg: but thou dost breathe Hast heavy substance; blest'st not; speak'st art Ten masts at each make not the altitude [sound. Which than hast perpendicularly fell: Thy life's a miracle. Speak yet again.

Glon. But have I fall'n, or no?

Edg. From the dredgeament of this chalky bourn,
Look up a-height; the shrill-gorged lark so far
Cannot be seen or heard: do but look up.

Glon. Alack! I have no eyes.

Is wretchedness depr'd that benefit,
To end itself by death? 'T was yet some comfort,
When misery could beguile the tyrant's rage,
And frustrate his proud will.

Edg. Give me your arm: Up! How is 't? Feel you your legs? You
Glon. Too well, too well. [stand.

Edg. This is above all strangeness,
Upon the crown o' the cliff, what thing was that
Which parted from you?

Glon. A poor unfortunate beggar.

Lear. As I stood here below, methought his eyes
Were two full moons; he had a thousand noses.
Horns whelk'd and waved like the enrigged sea;
It was some fiend; therefore, thou happy father,
Think that the clearest gods, who make them hence-
Of men's impossibilities, have preserved thee. [exits
Glon. I do remember now: henceforth I' ll bear
Affliction till it do cry out itself
'Enough, enough,' and die. That thing you speak
I took it for a man; often 't would say [of,
'The fiend, the head;' he led me to that place.
Edg. Bear free and patient thoughts. But who comes here?

Enter Lear, fantastically dressed with wild flowers.
The safer sense will ne'er accommodate His master thus.

Lear. No, they cannot touch me for coinage; I am the king himself.

Edg. O, the side-piercing sight!

Lear. Nature's above art in that respect. There's your press-money. That fellow handles his bow like a crow-keeper: draw me a clothier's yard.
Look, look, a mouse! Peace, peace; this piece of toasted cheese will do 't. There's my gambol; I'll prove it on a giant. Bring up the brown hills. O, well bow'd, bird! 't the clout, 't the clout: hewgh!
Give the word,

Edg. Sweet marigoram.

Lear. Pass.

Glon. I hum that voice.

Lear. Ha! General, with a white beard! They flattered me like a dog; and told me I had white hairs in my beard ere the black ones were there.
To say 'ay' and 'no' to every thing that I said!—
'Ay' and 'no' too was no good divinity. When the rain came to wet me once, and the wind to make me clatter; when the thunder would not peace at my bidding; there I found 'em, there I smelt 'em out. Go to, they are not men' o' their words; they told me I was every thing;'t is a lie, I am not awake-proof.

Glon. The trick of that voice I do well remember that king?

Lear. Ay, every inch a king:
When I do stare, see how the subject quakes.
I pardon that man's life. What was thy cause?
Adultery?

Thou shalt not die: die for adultery! No:
The v turn goes to; and the small gilded fly
Does lecher in my sight.
Let copulation thrive; for Gloucester's bastard son
Was kinder to his father than my daughters
Got 'twixt the lawful sheets.
To 't, luxury, pel-mell! for I lack soldiers.
Behold the vong simpitzer of eyes,
Whose face between her forks presages snow;
That minces virtue, and does shake the head.
To hear of pleasure's name;
The fitchew, nor the soiled horse, goes to 't
With a more riotous appetite.

[Enter a Gentleman, with Attendants.

Gent. O, here he is: lay hand upon him. Sir,
Your most dear daughter—

Lear. No rescue? What, a prisoner? I am even
The nature of fortune. Use me well:
You shall have ransom. Let me have surgeons;
I am cut to the brains.

Gent. You shall have any thing.

Lear. No seconds? all myself?
Why, this would make a man a man of salt,
To use his eyes for garden water-pots, Ay, and laying autumn's dust.

Good sir,—

Lear. I will die bravely, like a bridgework. What! I will be jovial: come, come; I am a king, My masters, know you that.

Gent. Sir, I am sure you are my lord, and we obey you. Lear. Then there's life in 't. Nay, if you get it, you shall get it with running.

[Exit running; Attendants follow.]

Gent. A sight most pitiful in the meanest wretch, Past speaking of a king! Thou hast one daughter, Who redeems nature from the general curse Which twain have brought her to.

Edg. Hall, gentle sir. Gent. Sir, speed you: what's your will?

Edg. Do you hear aught, sir, of a battle toward? Gent. Most sure and vulgar: every one hears that, Which can distinguish sound.

But, by your favour, How near's the other army?

Gent. Near and on speedy front; the main descent Stands on the hourly thought.

Edg. I thank you, sir; that's all.

Gent. Though that the queen on special cause is Her army is moved on.

[Here, Edg.]

Edg. I thank you, sir.

[Exit Gent.]

Glow. You ever-gentle gods, take my breath from Let not my worse spirit tempt me again [me: To die before you please!

Edg. Well pray you, father.

Glow. Now, good sir, what are you? [blows; Edg. A most poor man, made tame to fortune's Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows, Am pregnant to good pity. Give me your hand, I'll lead you to some biding.

Glow. Hearty thanks:

The bounty and the benison of heaven To boot, and boot!

Enter Oswald.

Osw. A proclaim'd prize! Most happy! That eyeless head of thine was first framed flesh To raise my fortunes. Thou old unhappy traitor, Briefly thyself remember: the sword is out That must destroy thee.

Glow. Now let thy friendly hand Put strength enough to 't.

[Edgar interposes. Osw. Wherefore, bold peasant, Darest thou support a publish'd traitor? Hence; Lest that the infection of his fortune take Like hold on thee. Let go his arm.

Edg. Chill not let go, zir, without further 'casion. Osw. Let go, slave, or thou diest!

Edg. Good gentleman, go your gait, and let poor valiant pass. A cloud ha' bin锌aggered out of my life, 't would not ha' bin so long as 't is by a Vortnight. Nay, come near then th' old man; keep out, che vor ye, or ise try whether your costard or my ballow be the harder; chill be plain with you.

Osw. On, daughgill!

Edg. Chill pick your teeth, zir: come; no matter, vor your foins.

[They fight, and Edgar knocks him down. Osw. Slave, thou hast slain me: villain, take my If ever thou wilt thrive, bury my body: [purse: And give me the letters which thou had'st about me To Edmund Earl of Gloucester: seek him out. Upon the British party: O, untimely death! [Dies. Edg. I know thee well; a serviceable villain; As duteous to the vices of thy mistress As badness would desire.

Glow. What is he dead?

Edg. Sit you down, father; rest you. Let's see these pockets: the letters that he speaks of May be my friends. He's dead; I am only sorry

Had he no other death's-man. Let us see: Leave, gentle wax; and, manners, blame us not: To know our enemies' minds, we'd rip their hearts; Their papers, is more lawful.

[Reads:] Let our reciprocal vows be remembered. You have many opportunities to cut him off: if you will want, time and place will be faithfully offered. There is nothing done, if he return the conqueror: then am I the prisoner, and his bed my goad; from the loathed warmth whereof deliver me, and supply the place for your labour.

'Your — wife, so I would say —

'Affectionate servant,

'Goneril,

'O undistinguish'd space of woman's will!' A plot upon her virtuous husband's life; And the exchange my brother! Here, in the sands, Thee I'll take up, the post unsanctified Of murderous lechers: and in the mature time With this ungracious paper strive the sight Of the death-practised duke: for him 't is well That of thy death and business I can tell.

Glow. The king is mad: how stiff is my vile sense, That I stand up, and have ingenuous feeling Of my huge sorrows! Better I were distract: And should my thoughts be sever'd fearfully, my griefs, And woes by wrong imaginations lose The knowledge of themselves.

Edg. Give me your hand:

[Drum afar off. Far off, methinks, I hear the beaten drum: Come, father, I'll bestow you with a friend.]

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VII.—A tent in the French camp. Lear on a bed asleep, soft music playing; Gentleman, and others attending.

Enter Cordelia, Kent, and Doctor.

Cor. O, thou good Kent, how shall I live and work, To match thy goodness? My life will be too short, And every measure fail me.

Kent. To be acknowledged, madam, is o'erpaid. All my reports go with the modest truth; Nor more nor less.'d, but so.

Cor. Be better suited: These weeds are memories of those worser hours: I prithee, put them off.

Kent. Pardon me, dear madam; Yet to be known shortened my made intent: My boon I make it, that you know me not Till time and I think meet.

Cor. Then be't so, my good lord. [To the Doctor] How does the king?

Doctor. Madam, sleeps still.

Cor. O you kind gods, Cure this great break in his abused nature! The tumult and jarring senses, O, wind up Of this child-changed father!

Doctor. So please your majesty That we may wake the king; he hath slept long.

Cor. Be govern'd by your knowledge, and proceed I the sway of your own will. Is he array'd?

Gent. Ay, madam; in the heaviness of his sleep We put fresh garments on him.

Doctor. Be by, good madam, when we do awake him; I doubt not of his temperance.

Cor. Very well, [there!

Doctor. Please you, draw near. Londer the music Cor. O my dear father! Restoration hang Thy medicine on my lips; and let this kiss Repair those violent harms that my two sisters Have in thy reverence made!

Kent. Kind and dear princess! Cor. Had you not been their father, these white flakes Had challenged pity of them. Was this a face

717
To be opposed against the warring winds?
To stand against the deep dread-bolted thunder
In the most terrible and nimble stroke
Of quick, cross lightning? to watch—poor perdu!—
With this thin helm? Mine enemy's dog.
Though he had hit me, should I have stood that night
Against my fire; and wast thou fain, poor father,
To hovel thee with swine, and rogues forlorn
In short and mystic straw? Alack, alack!
'Tis wonder that thy life and wits at once
Had not concluded all. He wakes; speak to him.

Doc. Madam, do you; 'tis fittest [majesty]?
Cor. How does my royal lord? How fay's your Lear. You do me wrong to take me out o' the Thou art a soul in bliss; but I am bound [grave:
Upon a wheel of fire, that mine own tears
Do scale like molten lead.

Cor. Sir, do you know me?

Lear. You are a spirit, I know: when did you die?

Cor. Still, still, far wide!

Lear. He's scarce awake: let him alone awhile.
Lear. Where have I been? Where am I? Fair daylight?

I am mightily abused. I should e'en die with pity,
To see another thus; I know not what to say,
I will not swear these are my hands: let 's see;
I feel this pin prick. Would I were assured
Of my condition!

Cor. O, look upon me, sir, and hold your hands in benediction o'er me:
No, sir, you must not kneel.

Lear. Pray, do not mock me; I am a very foolish fond old man,
Fourscore and upward, not an hour more nor less;
And, to deal plainly, I fear I am not in my perfect mind.

Methinks I should know you, and know this man;
Yet I am doubtful: for I am mainly ignorant
Of what place this is; and all the skill I have Remembers not these garments: nor I know not Where I did lodge last night. Do not laugh at me;
For, as I am a man, I think this lady
To be my child Cordelia.

Lear. And so I am, I am.

Cor. Be your tears wet? yes, 'faith. I pray, weep
When you have poison for me, I will drink it. [not:
I know you do not love me; for your sisters
Have, as I do remember, done me wrong:
You have some cause, they have not.

Cor. Lear. Am I in France?

Kent. In your own kingdom, sir.

Lear. Do not abuse me.

Doc. Be comforted, good madam: the great rage
You see, is kill'd in him: and yet it is danger
To make him even over the time he has lost.
Desire him to go in: trouble him no more
Till further settling.

Cor. Will 't please your highness walk?

Lear. You must bear with me: pray you now, forget and forgive: I am old and foolish. [Exeunt all but Kent and Gentleman.

Gent. [Aside] Sir, that the Duke of Cornwall was so slant?

Kent. Most certain, sir.

Gent. Who is conductor of his people?

Kent. As 'tis said, the bastard son of Gloucester.

Gent. They say Edgar, his banished son, is with the Earl of Kent in Germany.

Kent. Report is changeable. 'Tis time to look about: the powers of the kingdom approach apace.

Gent. The arbitration is like to be bloody.

Fare you well, sir.

Kent. My point and period will be thoroughly wrought,

Or well or ill, as this day's battle's fought. [Exit.
ACT V.

KING LEAR.

SCENE III.

Edm. The enemy’s in view; draw up your powers. Here is the guess of their true strength and forces By diligent discovery; but your haste Is now urgent on you.

Edm. To both these sisters have I sworn my love; Each jealous of the other, as the stung. Are of the adorer. Which of them shall I take? Both one? or neither? Neither can be enjoy’d, If both remain alive: to take the widow Exasperates, makes me all her sister Goneril; And hardly shall I carry out my scheme. Her husband being as myself, and then we’ll use His countenance for the battle; which being done, Let her who would be rid of him devise His speedy taking off. As for the mercy Which he intends to Lear and to Cordelia, The battle done, and they within our power, Shall never see his pardon; for my state Stands on me to defend, not to debate.

SCENE II.—A field between the two camps.

Enter Edgar within. Enter, with drum and colours, Lear, Cordelia, and Soldiers, over the stage; and censed.

Enter Edgar and Gloucester.

Edg. Here, father, take the shadow of this tree For your good host: pray that the right may thrive: If ever I return to you again, I’ll bring you comfort.

Glou. Grace go with you, sir!

[Exit Edgar.

Enter Edgar and retreat within. Enter Edgar.

Edg. Away, old man; give me thy hand; away! King, Lear, and his daughters, and his hand to�:

Give me thy hand; come on.

Glou. No farther, sir; a man may rot even here.

Edg. What, in all thoughts again? Men must endure Their going hence, even as their coming hither; Hapiness is all: come on.

Glou. And that’s true too.

[Exit.

SCENE III.—The British camp near Dover.

Enter, in conference, with drum and colours, Edmund; Lear and Cordelia, prisoners; Captain, Soldiers, etc.

Edm. Some officers take them away; good guard, Until their greater pleasures first be known That are to censure them.

Cord. We are not the first Who, with best meaning, have incurred the wrong. For thee, oppressed king, am I cast down; Myself could else out-frown false fortune’s frown. Shall we not see these daughters and these sisters? Lear. No, no, no, no! Come, let’s away to prison: We two alone will sing like birds in the cage: When thou dost ask me blessing, I’ll kneel down, And ask of thee forgiveness: so we’ll live, And pray, and sing, and tell old tales, and laugh At gilded butterflies, and hear poor rogues Talk of court news: and we’ll talk with them too, Who loses and who wins; who’s in, who’s out; And take upon it the mystery of things, As if we were God’s spies: and we’ll wear out, In a wall’d prison, packs and sets of great ones, That cebb and flow by the moon.

Edm. Take them away.

Lear. Upon such sacrifices, my Cordella, (thee?) The gods themselves throw incense. Have I caught Her that parts us shall bring a brand from heaven, And give us hence like foxes. Wise thine eyes: The good-years shall devour them, flesh and fell, ere they shall make us weep: we’ll see ‘em starve first.

Come,

[Exit Lear and Cordelia, guarded.

Edm. Come,ither, captain; hard.

Take thou this note [giving a paper]; go follow them to prison:

One step I have advanced thee: if thou dost As this instructs thee, thou dost make thy way To noble fortunes: know thou this, that men Else as he is: to be tender-minded Do not become a sword: thy great employment Will not bear question; either say thou ‘tis don’t, Or thrive by other means.

Capt. I’ll do’t, my lord.

Edm. About it: and write happy when thou hast Marks, I say, instantly; and carry it so done. As I have set it down. Now show

Capt. I cannot draw a cart, nor eat dried oats; If it be man’s work, I’ll do’t.

Flourish. Enter Albany, Goneril, Regan, another Captain, and Soldiers.

Alb. Sir, you have shewn to-day your valiant strain, And fortune led you well: you have the captives That were the opposites of this day’s strife: We do require them of you, to use them As we shall find their merits and our safety May equally determine.

Edm. Sir, I thought it fit To send the old and miserable king To some recommendation and appointed guard; Whose age has charms in it, whose title more, To pluck the common bosom on his side, And turn our impress’d lances in our eyes [queen, Which do command them. With him I sent the My reason all the same: and they are ready To-morrow, or at further space, to appear Where you shall hold your session. At this time We sweat and bleed: the friend hath lost his friend; And the best quarrels, in the heat, are cured By those that have their sharpness. The question of Cordelia and her father Requires a litter place.

Alb. Sir, by your patience, I hold you but a subject of this war, Not as a brother.

Reg. That’s as we list to grace him. Methinks our pleasure might have been demanded, Ere you had spoke so far. He led our powers; Bore the commission of my place and person; The which immedialcy may well stand up, And call itself your brother.

Not so hot: In his own grace he doth exalt himself, More than in your addition.

Reg. By me invested, he compeers the best.

Gon. That were the most, if he should husband Reg. Jesters do oft prove prophets.

Gon. Hollo, hollo! That eye that told you so look’d but a-squint.

Reg. Lady, I am not well; else I should answer From a full-flowing stomach. General, Take thou my soldiers, prisoners, patrimony; Dispose of them, of me; the walls are thine: Witness the world, that I create thee here My lord and master.

Gon. Mean you to enjoy him?

Alb. The let-alone lies not in your good will, And he by himself.

Reg. [To Edmund] Let the drum strike, and prove my thine.

Alb. Stay yet; hear reason. Edmund, I arrest thee On capital treason: and, in thine attaint, Thisgildedserpent [pouncing to Gon.], Foryourclaim, I hear it in the interest of my wife: fair sister, Tis she is sub-contracted to this lord, And I, her husband, contradict your bans.

ACT V.

KING LEAR.

SCENE III.

If you will marry, make your loves to me,
My lady is besoke.

Gon.

An interlude!  [pet sound;

Alb. Thou art arm'd, Gloucester; let the trump

If none appear to prove upon thy head

Thy heinous, manifest, and many treasons,

There is my pledge [throwing down a glove]; I'll prove it on thy heart,

Ere I taste bread, thou art in nothing less

Than I have here proclaim'd thee.

Edg.

Sick, O, sick!

Gon. [Aside] If not, I'll never trust medicin.

Edm. There's my exchange [throwing down a glove] what in the world he is

That names me traitor, villain-like he hes:

Call by thy trumpet: he that dares approach,

On him, on you, who not? I will maintain

My truth and honour firmly.

Alb. A herald, ho!

Edm. A herald, ho, a herald!

Alb. Trust to thy single virtue: for thy soldiers,

All levied in my name, have in my name

Their discharge.

Trio.

My sickness grows upon me.

Alb. She is not well; convey her to my tent.

[Exit Edgar, tel.

Enter a Herald.

Come hither, herald.—Let the trumpet sound,—

And read out this.

Cpt. Sound, trumpet!

Her. [Reads] If any man of quality or degree within the lists of the army will maintain upon

Edmund, supposed Earl of Gloucester, that he is a manifold traitor, let him appear by the third sound of the trumpet: he is bold in his defence.

Edm. Sound!

Her. Again!

[First Trumpet.

Her. Again!

[Second Trumpet.

[Third Trumpet.

Enter Edgar, at the third sound, arm'd, with a trumpet before him.

Alb. Ask him his purposes, why he appears

Upon this call o' the trumpet.

Her.

What are you?

Your name, your quality? and why you answer

This present summons?

Edm.

Know, my name is lost;

By treason's tooth bare-gnawn and canker-bit:

Yet am I noble as the adversary

I come to cope.

Alb.

Which is that adversary?

Edm. What's he that speaks for Edmund Earl of Gloucester?

Edm. Himself: what say'st thou to him?

Edg.

Draw thy sword,

That, if my speech offend a noble heart,

Thy arm may do thee justice: here is mine.

Behold, it is the privilege of mine honours,

My oath, and my profession; I protest,

Maugre thy strength, youth, place, and eminence,

Despite thy victor sword and fire-new fortune,

Thy valour and thy heart, thou art a traitor;

False to thy gods, thy brother, and thy father:

Conspirant 'gainst this high-Illustrious prince;

And, from the extremest upward of thy head

To the descent and dust below thy foot,

A most toad-spotted traitor.  Say thou 'No,'

This sword, this arm, and my best spirits, are bent

To prove upon thy heart, whereeto I speak,

Thou heed.

Edm. In wisdom I should ask thy name;

But, since thy outside looks so fair and warlike,

And that thy tongue some say of breeding breathes,

What safe and nicely I might well delay

By rule of knighthood, I disdain and spurn:

Back do I toss these treasons to thy head;

With the hell-hatted lie o'whelm thy heart;

Which, for they yet glance by and scarcely bruise,

This sword of mine shall give them instant way.

Where they shall rest for ever. Trumpets, speak!

Alb. Save him, save him!

Gon.

This is practice, Gloucester:

By the law of arms thou wast not bound to answer

An unknown opposite; thou art not vanquish'd,

But cozen'd and beguil'd.

Shut thy mouth, dame, or with this paper shall I stop it:

Hold, sir:

Thou worse than any name, read thine own evil:

No tearing, lady; I perceive you know it.

[Give's the letter to Edmund.

Gon. Say, if I do, the laws are mine, not thine:

Who can arraign me for't?

Alb. Most monstrous! oh!

Know'st thou this paper?

Gon. Ask me not what I know.

[Exit.

Alb. Go after her; she's desperate; govern her.

Edm. What you have charged me with, that have

I done.

And more—much more; the time will bring it out:

'T is past, and so am I. But what art thou

That hast this fortune on me? If thou 'rt noble,

I do forgive thee.

Edg.

Let's exchange charity.

I am no less in blood than thou art. Edmund;

If more—more than thou hast weighed in me.

My name is Edgar, and thy father's son,

The gods are just, and of our pleasant vices

Make instruments to plague us:

The dark and vicious place where thee he got

Cost him his eyes.

Edg.

Thou hast spoken right; 't is true;

The wheel is come full circle; I am here.

Alb. Methought thy very gait did prophesy

A royal nobleness: I must embrace thee:

Let sorrow split my heart, if ever

Did hate thee or thy father.

Edg.

Worthy prince, I know 't.

Alb. Where have you hid yourself?

How have you known the miseries of your father?

Edg. By nursing them, my lord. List a brief tale;

And when 't is told, O, that my heart would burst!

The bloody proclamation to escape;

That foul, that so near—O, our lives' sweetness!

That we the pain of death would hourly die

Rather than die at once!—taught me to shift

Into a madman's rags; to assume a semblance

That very dogs disdain'd; and in this habit

Met I my father with his bleeding rings.

Their precious stones new lost: became his guide,

Led him, begg'd for him, saved him from despair;

Never—O fault!—reveal'd myself unto him,

Until some half-hour past, when I was arm'd:

Not sure, though hoping, of this good success,

I ask'd his blessing, and from first to last

Told him my pilgrimage; but his face, his heart,

Alack, too weak the conflict to support!

'Twixt two extremes of passion, joy and grief,

Burst smilingly.

Edm. This speech of yours hath moved me,

And shall perchance do good: but speak you on;

You look as you had something more to say.

Alb. If there be more, more would I hold it in;

For I am almost ready to dissolve,

Hearing of this.

Edg.

This would have seem'd a period

To such as love not sorrow; but another,

To amplify too much, would make much more,

And too extremely.

Whilst I was big in clamour came there in a man,

Who, having seen me in my worst estate,

Shun'd my abhor'd society; but then, finding

Who 't was that so endured, with his strong arms

He fasten'd on my neck, and bellow'd out

As he'd burst heaven; threw him on my father;

720
Enter a Gentleman, with a bloody knife.

Gent. Help, help, O, help!

What kind of help?

Edg. Speak, man.

Edg. What means that bloody knife?

Gent. 'Tis hot, it smokes;

It came even from the heart of—O, she's dead!

KENT. Who dead? speak, man.

Gent. Your lady, sir, your lady; and her sister

By her is poisoned; she hath confess'd it.

Edg. I was contracted to them both: all three

Now marry in an instant.

Enter Kent.

KENT. O, is this he?

The time will not allow the compliment

Which very manneres urges.

KENT. I am come

To bid my king and master aye good night:

Is he not here?

KENT. Great thing of us forgot!

Speak, Edmund, where's the king? and where's

See'st thou this object, Kent? [Cordelia?

The bodies of Goneryll and Regan are brought in.

KENT. Alack, why thus?

Edg. Yet Edmund was beloved:

The one, the other poison'd for my sake,

And after slew herself.

Edg. Even so. Cover their faces.

Edg. I pant for life: some good I mean to do,

Despite of mine own nature. Quickly send,

Be brief in it, to the castle: for my writ

Is on the life of Lear and on Cordelia:

Now send in time.

Edg. Run, run, O, run!

Edg. To who, my lord? Who hath the office? send

Thy token of reprieve.

Edg. Well thought on: take my sword,

Give it the captain.

Edg. Has he thee, for thy life.

[Exit Edgar.

Edg. He hath commission from thy wife and me

To hang Cordelia in the prison, and

To lay the blame upon her own despair,

That she for'd herself.

Edg. The gods defend her! Bear him hence

While.

Re-enter Lear, with Cordelia dead in his arms;

Edgar, Captain, and others following.

LEAR. Howl, howl, howl, howl! O, you are men

Of stones!

Had I your tongues and eyes, I'd use them so

That heaven's vault should crack. She's gone for

I know when one is dead, and when one lives: [ever!

She's dead as earth. Lend me a looking-glass;

If that her breath will mist or stain the stone,

Why, then she lives.

KENT. Is this the promised end?

Edg. Or image of that horror?

KENT. Fall, and cease!

LEAR. This feather stirs; she lives! if it be so,

It is a chance which does redeem all sorrows

That ever I have felt.

SCENE — Venice: a sea-port in Cyprus.

[For an Analysis of the Plot of this Play, see page Lxv.]

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Venice. A street.

Enter Roderigo and Iago.

Rod. Tush! never tell me; I take it much unkindly
That thou, Iago, who hast had my purse
As if the strings were thine, shouldst know of this.
Iago. Sblood, but you will not hear me:
If ever I did dream of such a matter,
Abhor me. [Exit.

Rod. Thou told'st me thou didst hold him in thy Iago. Despise me, if I do not. Three great ones of the city
In personal suit to make me his lieutenant,
Off-capp'd to him: and, by the faith of man,
I know my price, I am worth no worse a place:
But he, as loving his own pride and purposes,
Evades them, with a bombast circumstance
Horribly stuff'd with epithets of war;
And, in conclusion,
Nonsuits my mediators; for, 'Certs,' says he,
'I have already chose my officer.'
And what was he?

Forsoth, a great arithmetician,
One Michael Cassio, a Florentine,
A fellow almost damn'd in a fair wife;
That never set a squadron in the field,
Nor the division of a battle knows
More than a spinner; unless the bookish theoretic
Wherein the jogged consuls can propose
As masterly as he: mere prattle, without practice,
Is all his soldiership. But he, sir, had the election:
And I, of whom his eyes had seen the proof
At Rhodes, at Cyprus and on other grounds.

Christian and heathen, must be kee'd and cal'md
By debitor and creditor: this counter-caster,
He, in good time, must his lieutenant be; [scent.
And I — God bless the mark! — his Moorship's an-

Rod. By heaven, I rather would have been his hangman. [service.

Iago. Why, there's no remedy; 'tis the curse of Preferment goes by letter and affection;
And not by old gradation, where each second
Stood heir to the first. Now, sir, be judge yourself, OTHELLO.

ACT I.

Brabantio appears above, at a window.

Bra. What is the reason of this terrible summons? What is the matter there?

Iago. Signior, is all your family within?

Bra. Are your doors lock'd?

Iago. Why, wherefore ask you this?

Bra. 'Zounds, sir, you're robb'd; for shame, put on your gown.

Your heart is burst, you have lost half your soul;

Even now, now, very now, an old black ram

Is tapping your white ewe. Arise, arise;

Awake the snorting citizens with the bell;

Or else the devil will make a grandise of you.

Arise, I say.

Bra. What, have you lost your wits?

Iago. My name is Roderigo.

Bra. The worser welcome: I have charged thee not to haunt about my doors:

In honest plainness thou hast heard me say

My daughter is not for thee; and now, in madness,

Being full of supper and distempering draughts,

Upon malicious bravery, dost thou come

To start my quiet.

Rod. Sir, sir, sir,—

But thou must needs be sure

My spirit and my place have in them power

To make this bitter to thee.

Bra. Patience, good sir,

What tell'st thou me of robbing? this is

My house is not a grange.

[Venice.

Iago. Most grave Brabantio,

In simple and pure soul I come to you.

Iago. 'Zounds, sir, you are one of those that will not serve God, if the devil bid you. Because we come to do you service and you think we are ruffians, you'll have your daughter covered with a Barbary horse; you'll have your nephews neigh to you; you'll have courser for cousins and gennets for Germans.

Bra. What profane wretch art thou?

Iago. I am one, sir, that comes to tell you your daughter and the Moor are now making the feast with two backs.

Bra. Thou art a villain.

Iago. Thou shalt answer; I know thee, Roderigo.

[You.

Rod. Sir, I will answer any thing. But, I beseech If 't be your pleasure and most wise consent,

As partly I find it is, that your fair daughter,

At this odd-even and dull watch o' the night,

Transported, with no worse or better guard

But with a knife of common hire, a gondolier,

To the gross claps of a lascivious Moor.—

If this be known to you and your allowance,

We then have done you bold and saucy wrongs;

But if you know not this, my manners tell me

We have your wrong rebuke. Do not believe

That, from the sense of all civility,

I thus would play and trifle with your reverence;

Your daughter, if you have not given her leave,

I say again, hath made a gross revolt;

Tying her duty, beauty, wit and fortunes

In an extravagant and wheeling stranger

Of here and every where. Straight satisfy yourself:

If she be in her chambers your house,

Let loose on me the justice of the state

For thus defiling you.

Bra. Strike on the tinder, ho! Give me a taper! call up all my people!

This accident is not unlike my dream:
Belief of it oppresses me already.

Light, I say! light! [Exit above.

Iago. Farewell; for I must leave you:

It seems not need, nor wholesome to my place,

To be produced—as, if I say but none.

Against the Moor: for, I do know, the state,

However this may gall him with some chcek,

Cannot with safety cast him, for he's embark'd

With such loud reason to the Cyprus wars,

Which even now stand in act, that, for their souls,

Another of his fathoms they have none,

To lead their business: in which regard,

Though I do hate him as I do hell-pains,

Yet, for necessity of present life,

I must show out a flag and sign of love, [find him,
Which is indeed but sign. That you shall surely

Lead to the Sagittary the raised search;

And there will I be with him. So, farewell. [Exit.

Enter, below, Brabantio, and Servants with torches.

Bra. It is too true an evil: gone she is;

And what's to come of my distracted time

Is sought but bitterness. Now, Roderigo,

Where didst thou see her? O unhappy girl!

With the Moor, say'st thou? Who would be a father!

How dost thou know 'tis she? O, she deceives me

Past thought! What said she to you? Get more tapers.

Raise all my kindred. Are they married, think you?

Rod. Truly, I think they are. [the blood!

Bra. O'heaven! How got she out? O treason of Fathers, from hence trust not your daughters' minds

By what you see them act. Is there not curius

By which the property of youth and maidhood

May be abused? Have you not read, Roderigo;

Of some such thing?

Rod. Yes, sir, I have indeed.

Bra. Call up my brother. O, would you had had her!

Some one way, some other. Do you know

Where we may apprehend her and the Moor?

Rod. I think I can discover him, if you please

To get good guard and go along with me. [call;

Bra. Pray you, lead on. At every house I'll

May command at most. Get weapons, ho!

And raise some special officers of night.

On, good Roderigo! I'll deserve your pains.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Another street.

Enter Othello, Iago, and Attendants with torches.

Iago. Though in the trade of war I have slain
Yet do I hold it very stuff o' the conscience. [then,
To do no contrived murder: I lack iniquity
Sometimes to do me service; nine or ten times
I had thought to have yeeld'd him here under the Oth. 'Tis better as it is. [ribbs.

Iago. Nay, but he prated,

And spoke such surly and provoking terms

Against your honour

That, with the little godliness I have,

I did full hard forbear him. But, I pray you, sir,

Are you fast married? Be assured of this,

That the magnifico is much beloved.

And hath in his effect a voice potential

As double as the duke's; he will divide you;
Or put upon you what restraint and grievance

The law, with all his might to enforce it on,

Will give him cable.

Oth. Let him do his spite; My services which I have done the signior
Shall out-tongue his complaints. 'Tis yet to know,—

Which, when I know that boasting is an honour,

I shall promulgate—I fetch my life and being

From men of royal siege, and my demerits

723
May speak unbonneted to as proud a fortune
As this that I have reach’d; for know, Iago,
But that I love the gentle Desdemona,
I would not my unhoused free condition
Put into circumscription and confine [on?] For the sea’s worth. But, look! what lights come
Iago. Those are the raised father and his friends:
You were best go in.
Oth. Not I; I must be found:
My parts, my title and my perfect soul
Shall maniﬁed me righteously. Is it they?
Iago. By Janus, I think no.

Enter Cassio, and certain Ofﬁcers with torches.

Oth. The servants of the duke, and my lieutenant.
The goodness of the night upon you, friends!
What is the news?
Cas. The duke does greet you, general,
And he requires your haste-post-haste appearance,
Even on the instant.

Oth. What is the matter, think you?

Cas. Something from Cyprus, as I may divine:
It is the hour of heat: the galleys
Have sent a dozen sequent messengers
This very night at one another’s heels,
And many of the consuls, raised and met,
Are at the duke’s already: you have been hotly called for;
When, being late at your lodging to be found,
The senate hath sent about three several quests
To search you out.

Oth. ’Tis well I am found by you.
I will but spend a word here in the house,
And go with you. [Exit.

Cas. Ancient, what makes he here?

Iago. Faith, he to-night hath bearden a land carack:
If it prove lawful prize, he’s made for ever.

Cas. I do not understand.

Iago. He’s married.

Cas. To whom?

Iago. Marry, to—Come, captain, will you go?
Oth. Have with you.

Iago. Here comes another troop to seek for you.

Iago. It is Brabantio. General, be advised;
He comes to bad intent.

Enter Brabantio, Rodrigo, and Ofﬁcers with torches and weapons.

Oth. Holla! stand there!
Rod. Signior, it is the Moor.

Br. Down with him, thief! [They draw on both sides.
Iago. You, Rodrigo! come, sir, I am for you.

Oth. Keep up your bright swords, for the dolt will rust them.

Good signior, you shall more command with years
Than with your weapons.

Br. Or thou foul thief, where hast thou stow’d my daughter?
Damm’d as thou art, thou hast enchanted her;
For I’ll refer me to all things of sense,
If she in chains of magic were not bound,
Whether a maid so tender, fair and happy,
So opposite to marriage that she shunn’d
The wealthy curled darlings of our nation,
Would ever have, to incur a general mock,
Run from her guardance to the sooty bosom
Of such a thing as thou, to fear, not to delight.
Judge me the world, if ’tis not gross in sense
That thou hast practis’d on her with foul charms,
Abused her delicate youth with drugs or minerals
That weaken motion: I’ll have’t disputed on;
’Tis probable and palpable to thinking.
I therefore apprehend and do attach thee
For an abuser of the world, a practiser
Of arts inhibited and out of warrant.
Lay hold upon him: if he do resist,
Subdue him at his peril.

Oth. Hold your hands,
Both you of my inclining, and the rest:
Were it my eye to ﬁght, I should have known it
Without a prompter. Where will you that I go
To answer this your charge?

Bro. To prison, till ﬁt time
Of law and course of direct session
Call thee to answer.

Oth. What if I do obey?
How may the duke be therewith satisﬁed,
Whose messengers are here about my side,
Upon some present business of the state
To bring me to him?

Bro. ’Tis true, most worthy signior;
The duke’s in council, and your noble self,
I am sure, is sent for.

Bro. How! the duke in council!
In this time of the night! Bring him away:
Mine’s not an idle cause: the duke himself,
Or any many others of the state,
Cannot but feel this wrong as it were their own;
For if such actions may have passage free,
Bond-slaves and pagans shall our statesmen be.

SCENE III.—A council-chamber.

The Duke and Senators sitting at a table; Ofﬁcers attending.

Duke. There is no composition in these news
That gives them credit.

First Sen. Indeed, they are disproportion’d;
My letters say a hundred and seven galleys.

Duke. And mine, a hundred and forty.

Sec. Sen. And mine, two hundred.

But though they jump not on a just account,—
As in these cases, where the aim reports,
’Tis o’ft with difference—yet do they all conﬁrm
A Turkish ﬂeet, and bearing up to Cyprus.

Duke. Nay, it is possible enough to judgment:
I do not so secure me in the error,
But the main article I do approve
In fearful sense.

First Ofﬁc. A messenger from the galleys.

Enter a Sailor.

Duke. Now, what’s the business?

Sail. The Turkish preparation makes for Rhodes;
So was I bid report here to the state
By Signior Angelo.

Duke. How say you by this change?

First Sen. This cannot be,
By no assay of reason: ’tis a pageant,
To keep us in false gaze. When we consider
The importance of Cyprus to the Turk,
And let ourselves again but understand,
That as it more concerns the Turk and Rhodes,
So may he with more facile question bear it,
For that it stands not in such warlike brace,
But altogether lacks the abilities
This, that Rhodes is dress’d in: if we make thought of
We must not think the Turk is so unskilful
To leave that latest which concerns him ﬁrst,
Neglecting an attempt of ease and gain,
To wake and wage a danger proﬁtless.

Duke. Nay, in all conﬁdence, he’s not for Rhodes.

First Ofﬁc. Here is more news.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The Ottomites, reverend and gracious,
Steering with due course towards the isle of Rhodes.
Have there injointed them with an after ﬂeet.

First Sen. Ay, so I thought. How many, as you guess?
Mess. Of thirty sail: and now they do re-stem
Their backward course, bearing with frank appearance
Their purposes toward Cyprus. Signior Montano,
Your trusty and most valiant servitor,
With his true duty recommends you thus,
And prays you to believe in him.
Duke. It is certain, then, for Cyprus.
Marcus Luciecios, is not he in town?
First Sen. He's now in Florence.
Duke. Write from us to him; post-post-haste dispatch.
[Moor.
First Sen. Here comes Brabantio and the valiant
Enter Brabantio, Othello, Iago, Roderigo, and Officers.
Duke. Valiant Othello, we must straight employ
Against the general enemy Ottoman. [You
To Brabantio] I did not see you; welcome, gentle signor;
We lack'd your counsel and your help to-night.
Bro. So did I yours. Good your grace, pardon me;
Neither my place nor aught I heard of business
Hath raised me from my bed, nor doth the general
Take thought on me, for my particular grief. [care
Is of so flood-gate and ocean-bearing nature
That it engulfs and swallows other sorrow.
And it is still itself.
Duke. Why, what's the matter?
Bro. My daughter! O, my daughter!
Duke and Sen. Dead?
Bro. Ay, to me;
She is abused, stol'n from me, and corrupted
By spells and medicines brought of mountebanks;
For nature so preposterously to err,
Being not deficient, blind, or lame of sense,
Sans witchcraft could not.
Duke. What is it in this foul proceeding
Hath thus beguil'd your daughter of herself
And you of her, the bloody book of law
You shall yourself read in the bitter letter:
After your own sense, yet, though our proper son
Stood in your action.
Bro. Humbly I thank your grace.
Here is the man, this Moor, whom now, it seems,
Your special mandate for the state-affairs
Hath hither brought.
Duke and Sen. We are very sorry for't.
Duke. [To Othello] What, in your own part, can you say to this?
Bro. Nothing, but this is so.
Oth. Most potent grace, and reverend signors,
My very noble and approved good masters,
That I have ta'en away this old man's daughter,
It is most true: true, I have married her:
The very head and front of my offending
Hath this extent, no more. Rude and I in my speech,
And little bless'd with the soft phrase of peace:
For since these arms of mine had seven years' pith,
Till now some nine moons wasted, they have used
Their dearest action in the tender field,
And little of this great world can I speak.
More than pertains to feats of broil and battle,
And therefore little shall I grace my cause
In speaking for myself. Yet, by your gracious
I will a round unvarnish'd tale deliver [patience,
Of my whole course of love; what drugs, what charms
What conjuration and what mighty magic,
For such proceeding I am charged withal,
I won his daughter.
Bro. A maiden never bold;
Of spirit so still and quiet, that her motion
Blush'd at herself; and she, in spite of nature,
Of years, of country, credit; every thing.
To fall in love with what she fear'd to look on!
It is a judgment main'd and most imperfect
That will confess perfection so could err
Against all rules of nature, and must be driven
To find out practices of cunning hell,
Why this should be. I therefore vouch again
That with some mixtures powerful o'er the blood,
Or with some drain conjured to this effect,
He wrought upon her.
Duke. To vouch this, is no proof,
Without more wider and more overt test
Than these thin habits and poor likelihoods
Of modern seeming do prefer against him.
First Sen. But, Othello, speak:
Did you know indirek and forced purses
Subdue and poison this young lady's affections?
Or came it by request and such fair question
As soul to soul affordeth?
Oth. I do beseech you,
Send for the lady to the Sagittary,
And let her speak of me before her father:
If you do find me foul in her report,
The trust, the office I do hold of you,
Not only take away, but let your sentence
Even fall upon my life.
Oth. Ancient, conduct them; you best know the place.
[Exeunt Iago, Roderigo, and Attendants.
And, till she come, as truly as to heaven
I do confess the vices of my blood,
So justly to your grave ear I'll present
How I did thrive in this fair lady's love,
And she in mine.
Duke. Say it, Othello,
Oth. Her father loved me; oft invited me;
Still question'd me the story of my life,
From year to year, the battles, sieges, fortunes,
That I have pass'd.
I ran it through, even from my boyish days,
To the very instant that he made me tell it;
Wherein I spoke of most disastrous chances,
Of moving accidents by flood and field, [breach,
Of hair-breadth escapes if the imminent deadly
Of being taken by the insolent foe
And sold to slavery, of my redemption thence
And pertinace in my travels' history;
Wherein of antres vast and deserts idle, [heaven,
Rough quarries, rocks and hills whose heads touch
Was my hint to speak, — such was the process;
And of the Cannibals that each other eat,
The Anthropophagi and men whose heads
Do grow beneath their shoulders. This to hear
Would Desdemona seriously incline;
But still the house-affairs would draw her thence:
Which ever as she could with haste dispatch,
She'd come again, and with a greedy ear
Devour up my discourse: which I observing,
Took once a plain hour, and found good means
To draw from her a prayer of earnest heart
That I would all my pilgrimage dilate.
Whereof by parcels she had something heard,
But not intuitively: I did consent,
And often did beguile her of her tears,
When I did speak of some disgrace, and stroke
That my youth suffer'd. My story being done,
She gave me for my pains a world of sighs:
She swore, in faith, 'twas strange, 'twas passing;
'T was pitiful, 'twas wondrous pitiful: [strange,
She wish'd she had not heard it, yet she wish'd
That heaven had made her such a man: she thank'd me,
And bade me, if I had a friend that loved her,
I should but teach him how to tell my story,
And that would woo her. Upon this hint I spake:
She love me for the dangers I had pass'd,
And I love her that she did pity them.
This only is the witchcraft I have used:
Here comes the lady; let her witness it.

725
Enter Desdemona, Iago, and Attendants.

Duke. I think this tale would win my daughter Good Brabantio, [too.
Take up this mangled matter at the best:
Men do their broken weapons rather use Than their bare hands.

Oth. I pray you, hear her speak:
If she confess that she was half the woorer,
Destruction on my head, if my bad blame
Light on the man! Come hither, gentle mistress;
Do you perceive in all this noble company Where most you owe obedience?

Duke. What would you, Desdemona?

Des. That I did love the Moor to live with him, My downright violence and storm of fortunes May trumpet to the world: my heart's subdued Even to the very quality of my lord;

Duke. I saw Othello's visage in his mind,
And to his honours and his valiant parts
Did my soul and fortunes consecrate,
So that, dear lords, if I be left behind, A moth of peace, and he go to the war, The rites for which I love him are befel me, And I a heavy intern shall support.

By his dear absence. Let me go with him.

Oth. Let her have your voices, Vouch with me, heaven, I therefore beg it not, To please the palate of my appetite, Nor to comply with heat— the young affects To me in due season — your presence, But to be free and bounteous to my mind: And heaven defend your good souls, that you think I will your serious and great business scant For she is with me; no, when light-wing'd toys Of feather'd Cupid seal with Wanton dullness Your speculative and offered instruments, That my discords corrupt and taint my business, Let housewives make a skille of my helme, And all indigne and base adversities Make head against my estimation!

Oth. Be it as you shall privately determine, Either for her stay or going: the affair cries haste, And speed must answer her.

First Sen. You must away to-night.

Oth. With all my heart.

Duke. At nine i' the morning here we'll meet Othello, leave one officer behind, [again: And he shall our commission bring to you; With such things else of quality and respect As doth import you.

Oth. So please your grace, my ancient; A man he is of honesty and trust;
To his conveyance I assign my wife, With what else needful your good grace shall think To be sent after me.

Duke. Let it be so.
Good night to every one. [To Brabant. And, noble If virtue no delightsily lack, [signior, Your son-in-law is far more fair than black. [well.

First Sen. Adieu, brave Moor; use Desdemona.

Oth. Look to her, Moor, if thou hast eyes to see: She has deceived her father, and may thee.

[Exeunt Duke, Senators, Officers, &c.

Oth. My life upon her faith! Honest fago, My Desdemona must I leave to thee: I prithee, let thy wife attend on her; And bring them after in the best advantage.

Come, Desdemona; I have but an hour Of love, of worldly matters and direction, To spend with thee: we must obey the time.

[Exeunt Othello and Desdemona.

Rad. Iago.—

Iago. What say'st thou, noble heart? Rad. What will I do, thinkest thou? Iago. Why, go to bed, and sleep. Rad. I will incontinently drown myself. Iago. If thou dost, I shall never love thee after. Why, thou silly gentleman in mind. Rad. It is silliness to live when to live is torment; and then have we a prescription to die when death is our physician.
Iago. O villainous! I have looked upon the world for four times seven years; and since I could distinguish betwixt a benefit and an injury, I never found but that knowledge did love himself. Ere I would say, I would drown myself for the love of a gullish hen, I would change my humanity with a baboon.

Rod. What should I do? I confess it is my shame to be so fond: but it is not in my virtue to amend it.

Iago. Virtue! a fig! 'tis in ourselves that we are thus or thus. Our bodies are our gardens, to which our wills are gardeners; so that if we will plant nettles, or sow lettuce, set hyssop and weed up thyme, supply it with one gender of herbs, or distract it with many, either to have it sterile with idleness, or manifold with industry, why, the power and corrigible authority of this lies in our wills. If the balance of our lives had not one scale of reason to oppose another of sensuality, the blood and base-ness of our natures would conduct us to most preposterous conclusions; but we have reason to cool our raging motions, our carnal stings, our unbitld lusts, whereof I take this that you call love to be a sect or accon.

Rod. It cannot be.

Iago. It is merely a lust of the blood and a permission of the will. Come, be a man. Draw thyself! draw cats and blind puppies. I have pressed me thy friend and I confess me thus to thy deserving with cables of pernicious toughness: I could never better stead thee than now. Put money in thy purse; follow thou the wars; defeat thy favour with an unserved beard; I say, put money in thy purse. It cannot be that Desdemona should long confine her love to the Moor, — put money in thy purse, — nor he his to her: it was a violent com- mencement, and thou shalt see an answerable se- questration; — put but money in thy purse. These Moors are changeable in their wills: — till thy purse with money; — the food that to him now is as luscious aslocusts, shall be to him shortly as bitter as coqueluntna. She must change for youth: when she is sated with his body, she will find the error of her choice: she must have change, she must: therefore put money in thy purse. If thou wilt needs damn thyself, do it a more delicate way than drowning. Make all the money thou canst; if sanctimoney and a frail vow betwixt an erring barbarian and a supersubtle Venetian be not too hard for my wits and all the tribe of hell, thou shalt enjoy her; therefore make money. A pox of drowning thyself! it is I who have told thee so often, and I re-tell thee again and again, I hate the Moor: my cause is hearted; thine hath no less reason. Let us be conjunctive in our revenge against him; if thou canst cuckold him, thou dost thyself a pleasure, me a sport. There are many events in the womb of time which will be de- livered. Traverse! go, provide thy money. We will have more of this to-morrow. Adieu.

Rod. Where shall we meet i' the morning?

Iago. At my lodging.

Rod. I'll be with thee betimes.

Iago. Go to; farewell. Do you hear, Roderigo?

Rod. What say you?

Iago. No more of drowning, do you hear?

Rod. I am changed; I'll go sell all my land.

[Exit.]

Iago. Thus do I ever make my soul my purse: For I mine own gain'd knowledge should profane, If I would times expend with such a snipe, But for my sport and profit. I hate the Moor; And it is thought abroad, that 'twixt my sheets He has done my office: I know not if it be true; But I, for mere suspicion in that kind, Will do as if for surety. He holds me well; The better shall my purpose work on him. Cassio's a proper man: let me see now: To get his place and to plume up my will In double knavery — How, how? — Let's see: — After some time, to abuse Othello's ear That he is too familiar with his wife. He hath a person and a smooth dispose To be suspected, framed to make women false. The Moor is of a free and open nature, That thinks men honest that but seem to be so, And will as tenderly be led by the nose As asses are. I have 't. It is engender'd. Hell and night Must bring this monstrous birth to the world's light.

[Exit.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Sea-port in Cyprus. An open place near the quay.

Enter Montano and two Gentlemen.

Mon. What from the cape can you discern at sea?

First Gent. Nothing at all: it is a high-wrought I cannot, 'twixt the heaven and the main, [blood; Desecrily a sail.

Mon. Methinks the wind hath spoke aloud at land; A fuller blast ne'er shook our battlements: If it hath rul'd him so upon the sea, What ribs of oak, when mountains melt on them, Can hold the mortise? What shall we hear of this? Sec. Gent. A segregation of the Turkish fleet; For do but stand upon the foaming shore, The chidden billow seems to pelt the clouds; The mad-shaked surge, with high and monstrous wave, Seems to cast water on the burning bear, And quench the guards of the ever-fixed pole; I never did like medestation view On the engulfed flood.

Mon. If that the Turkish fleet

Be not unshelter'd and embay'd, they are drown'd; It is impossible they bear it out.

Enter a third Gentleman.

Third Gent. News, lads! our wars are done. The desperate tempest hath so bung'd the Turks, That their designament halts: a noble ship of Venice Hath seen a grievous wreck and sufferance On most part of their fleet.

Mon. How! is this true?

Third Gent. The ship is here put in, A Veronesa; Michael Cassio, Lieutenant to the warlike Moor Othello, Is come on shore: the Moor himself at sea, And is in full commission here for Cyprus.

Mon. I am glad on 't; 'tis a worthy governor.

Third Gent. But this same Cassio, though he speak of comfort Touching the Turkish loss, yet he looks sadly, And prays the Moor be safe; for they were parted With foul and violent tempest.

Mon. Pray heavens he be; For I have served him, and the man commands

737
Like a full soldier. Let’s to the seashore, ho!
As well to see the vessel that’s come in
As to throw out our eyes for brave Othello,
Even till we make the main and the aerial blue
An indistinct regard.

Third Gent. Come, let’s do so;
For every minute is expectancy
Of more arrivance.

Enter Cassio.

Cas. Thanks, you, the valiant of this warlike isle,
That so approve the Moor! O, let the heavens
Give him defence against the elements,
For I have lost him on a dangerous sea.

Mon. Is he well ship’d?

Cas. His bark is stoutly timber’d, and his pilot
Of very expert and approved allowance;
Therefore my hopes, not surfeited to death,
Stand in bold cure.

[Act II. Scene I.]

Enter Desdemona, Emilia, Iago, Roderigo, and Attendants.

O, behold,
The riches of the ship is come on shore!
Ye men of Cyprus, let her have your knees,
Hail to thee, lady! and the grace of heaven,
Before, behind thee and on every hand,
Enwheel thee round!

Des. I thank you, valiant Cassio,
What tidings can you tell me of my lord?
Cas. He is not yet arrive’d: nor know I aught
But that he’s well and will be shortly here,
Des. Oh, but fear! How hast thou lost thy company?
Cas. The great contention of the sea and skies
Parted our fellowship—But, hark! a sail.

[Enter a fourth Gentleman.]

Sec. Gent. They do discharge their shot of cour.
Our friends at last.

Sec. Gent. I pray you, sir, go forth,
And give us truth who ’tis that is arrived.

Sec. Gent. I shall.

Mon. But, good lieutenant, is your general wive?
Cas. Most fortunately: he hath achieved a maid
That paragons description and wild fame;
One that excels the quirks of blazoning pens,
And in the essential vesture of creation
Does tire the ingener.

Sec. Gent. They give their greeting to the citadel:
This likewise is a friend.

Cas. See for the news. [Exit Gentleman.
Good ancient, you are welcome. [To Emilia] Welcome, mistress:
Let it not gall your patience, good Iago,
That I extend my manners; ’tis my breeding
That gives me this bold show of courtesy.

Iago. Sir, would you give her so much of her lips
As of her tongue she oft bestows on me,
You’ll have enough.

Des. Alas, she has no speech.

Iago. In faith, too much:
I find it still, when I have list to sleep.
Marry, before your ladyship, I grant,
She puts her tongue a little in her heart,
And chides with thinking.

Emil. You have little cause to say so. [doors,

Iago. Come on, come on: you are pictures out of Bells in your parlours, wild-cats in your kitchens,
Saints in your injuries, devils being offended,
Players in your housewifery, and housewives in your
Des. O, he upon thee, slanderer! [doors.

Iago. Nay, it is true, or else I am a Turk:
You rise to play and go to bed to work.

Emil. You shall not write my praise.

Iago. No, let me not.

Des. What wouldst thou write of me, if thou shouldst praise me?

Iago. O gentle lady, do not put me to it:
For I am nothing, if not critical.

Des. Come on, assay. There’s one gene to the Iago. Ay, madam. [harbour?

Des. I am not merry; but I do beguile
The thing I am, by seeming otherwise.
Come, how wouldst thou praise me?

Iago. I thought it best, but I am about my invention
Comes from my pate as birdlime deceives from frize:
It plucks out brains and all; but my Muse labours,
And thus she is deliver’d.

If she be fair and wise, and fairness and wit,
The one’s for use, the other useth it.

Iago. With what?—: so.

Des. Well praised! How she be black and Iago. If she be black, and thereto have a wit,
She’ll find a white that shall her blackness fit.

Des. Worse and worse.

Emil. How if fair and foolish?

Iago. She never yet was foolish that was fair;
For even her folly helped her to her heir.

Des. These are old fond paradoxes to make fools laugh i’ the alehouse. What miserable praising heath you for her that’s foul and foolish?

Iago. There’s none so foul and foolish therunto.
But doth foul pranks which fair and wise ones do,
Des. O heavy ignorance! thou praisest the worst best.
But what praise couldst thou bestow on a
Des. A deserving woman indeed, one that, in the authority of her merit, did justly put on the vouch of very malice itself?

Iago. She that was ever fair and never proud,
Had tongue at will and yet was never loud,
Never lack’d gold and yet went never gay,
Fled from her wish and yet said ‘Now I may,’
She that being anger’d, her revenge being high,
Bade her wrong stay and her displeasure fly,
She that in wisdom never was so fruitful
To change the cuckoos head for the sullen’s tail,
She that could think and never disclose her mind,
See suitors following and not look behind,
She was a wight, if ever such wight were,—

Des. To do what?

Iago. To suckle fools and chronicle small beer.

Des. O, but fear! How hast thou lost thy company? Do not learn of him, Emilia, though he be thy husband.
How say you, Cassio? is he not a most profane and liberal counsellor?
Cus. He speaks hone, madam; you may refresh him more in the soldier than in the scholar.

Iago. [Aside] He takes him by the palm; ay, well said, whisper: with as little a web as this will I ensnare as great a fly as Cassio. Ay, smile upon her, do; I will give thee in thine own courtship. You say true; 'tis so, indeed; if such tricks as these strip you out of your lieutenant, it had been better you had not kissed your three fingers so oft, which now again you are most apt to play the sir in. Very good; well kissed! an excellent courtesy! 'tis so, indeed. Yet again your fingers to your lips? would they were cyster-pipes for your sake!

Des. Lo, where he comes! Enter Othello and Attendants.

Oth. O my fair warrior! Des. My dear Othello! Oth. It gives me wonder great as my content To see you here before me. O my soul's joy! If after every tempest come such calms, May the winds blow till they have waken'd death! And let the labouring bark climb hills of seas Olympos-high and thick again as low As hell & heavy! If it were now to die, 'twere now to be most happy; for, I fear, My soul hath her content so absolute That not another comfort like to this Succeeds in unknown fate.

Des. The heavens forbid But that our loves and comforts should increase, Even as our days do grow!

Oth. Amen to that, sweet powers! I cannot speak enough of this content: It stops me here; it is too much of joy; And this, and this, the greatest discords be [Kissing her.

That e'er our hearts shall make!

Iago. [Aside] O, you are well tuned now! But I'll set down the pegs that make this music, As honest as I am.

Oth. Come, let us to the castle.

News, friends; our wars are done, the Turks are drown'd.

How does my old acquaintance of this isle? Honey, you shall be well desired in Cyprus; I have found great love amongst them. O my I prattle out of fashion, and I dole [sweet, In my own congealing. I pray, my good Iago, Go to the bay and disembark my officers; Bring thou the master to the citadel; He is a good one, and his worthiness Does challenge much respect. Come, Desdemona, Once more, well met at Cyprus.

Iago. Do thou meet me presently at the haven. Come hither. If thou be'st valiant,—as, they say, base men being in love have then a nobility in their natures more than is native to them,—list me. The lieutenant to-morrow watches on the court of guard;—first, I must tell thee this—Desdemona is directly in love with him.

Rod. With him? why, 'tis not possible.

Iago. Lay thy finger thus, and let thy soul be instructed. Mark me with what violence she first loved the Moor, but for bragging and telling her father,—'tis apt and of great credit; The Moor, howbeit that I endure him not, Is of a constant, loving, noble nature, And I dare think he'll prove to Desdemona A most dear husband. Now, I do love her too; Not out of absolute lust, though peradventure I stand accountant for as great an sin, But partly led to diet my revenge, For that I do suspect the lusty Moor Hath leap'd into my seat; the thought whereof Doth, like a poisonous mineral, gnaw my inwards; And nothing can or shall content my soul Till I am come within him for wife, or failing so, yet that I put the Moor At least into a jealousy so strong

That judgment cannot cure. Which thing to do, If this poor trash of Venice, whom I trash For his quick hunting, stand the putting on, I'll have our Michael Cassio on the lip,
Abuse him to the Moor in the rank garb—
For I fear Cassio with my night-cap too—
Make the Moor thank me, love me and reward me,
For making him egregiously an ass
And practising upon his peace and quiet
Even to madness. ‘T is here, but yet confused:
Knavery’s plain face is never seen till used. [Exit.

SCENE II.—A street.

Enter a Herald with a proclamation; People following.

Her. It is Othello’s pleasure, our noble and valiant general, that, upon certain tidings now arrived, importing the mere perdition of the Turkish fleet, every man put himself into triumph; some to dance, some to make bonfires, each man to what sport and revels his addiction leads him: for, besides these beneficial news, it is the celebration of his nuptial. So much was his pleasure should be proclaimed. All offices are open, and there is full liberty of feasting from this present hour of five till the bell have told eleven. Heaven bless the isle of Cyprus and our noble general Othello! [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A hall in the castle.

Enter Othello, Desdemona, Cassio, and Attendants.

Oth. Good Michael, look you to the guard to-night: Let’s teach ourselves that honourable stop, Not to outsport discretion.
Cas. Iago hath direction what to do; But, notwithstanding, with my personal eye Will I look to’t.
Oth. Iago is most honest. Michael, good night: to-morrow with your earliest Let me have speech with you. [To Desdemona] Come, my dear love, The purchase made, the fruits are to ensue; That profit’s yet to come ‘twixt me and you. Good night. [Exeunt Othello, Desdemona, and Attendants. Enter Iago.

Cas. Welcome, Iago; we must to the watch.
Iago. Not this hour, lieutenant; ’t is not yet ten o’ the clock. Our general cast us thus early for the love of his Desdemona: who let us not therefore blame; he hath not yet made wanton the night with her; and she is sport for Jove.
Cas. She’s a most exquisite lady.
Iago. And I’ll warrant she’ll play the full of game, [tune.
Cas. Indeed, she’s a most fresh and delicate creature.
Iago. What an eye she has! methinks it sounds a parley of provocation. [modest.
Cas. An inviting eye; and yet methinks right.
Iago. And when she speaks, is it not an alarm?
Cas. She is indeed perfection.
Iago. Well, happiness to their sheets! Come, lieutenant, I have a stoup of wine; and here without are a brace of Cyprus gallants that would fain have a measure to the health of black Othello.
Cas. Not to-night, good Iago: I have very poor and unhappy brains for drinking; I could well wish courtesy would invent some other custom of entertainment.
Iago. O, they are our friends; but one cup: I’ll drink for you.
Cas. I have drunk but one cup to-night, and that was credibly qualified too; and, behold, what innovation it makes here: I am unfortunate in the incontinence, and dare not task my weakness with any more.
Iago. What, man! ’t is a night of revels: the gallants desire it.
Cas. Where are they?
Iago. Here at the door: I pray you, call them in.

Cas. I’ll do’t; but it dislikes me. [Exit.
Iago. If I can fasten but one cup upon him, With this provocation, and he drinks to-night already, He’ll be as full of quarrel and offence
As my young mistress’ dog. Now, my sick fool Roderigo,
Whom love hath turn’d almost the wrong side out,
To Desdemona hath to-night caroused Potations pot-de-lau; and he drinks to-night;
Three lads of Cyprus, noble swelling spirits,
That hold their honours in a wary distance,
The very elements of this warlike isle,
Have I to-night fluster’d with drinking cups,
And they watch too. Now, ’mongst this flock of cowards,
Am I to put our Cassio in some action
That may offend the isle. — But here they come:
If consequence do but approve my dream,
My boat sails freely, both with wind and stream.

Re-enter Cassio; with him Montano and Gentleman; Servants following with wine.
Cas. ’Fore God, they have given me a rouse already.
Mon. Good faith, a little one; not past a pint, as I am a soldier.
Iago. Some wine, ho! [Sing] And let me the canakin clink, clink;
And let me the canakin clink:
A soldier’s a man;
A life’s but a span:
Why, then, let a soldier drink.

Some wine, boys! [Cas. ’Fore God, an excellent song.
Iago. I learned it in England, where, indeed, they are most potent in potting: your Dane, your German, and your swag-bellied Hollander.—Drink, ho! — are nothing to your English.

Iago. ’S is your Englishman so expert in his drink?
Cas. Why, he drinks you, with facility, our Dane dead drunk; he swears not to overthrow your Alcmeon; he gives your Hollander a vomit, ere the next pottle can be filled.
Cas. To the health of our general! [tace.
Mon. I am for it, lieutenant; and I’ll do you justice.
Iago. O sweet England! King Stephen was a worthy peer,
His breeches cost him but a crown;
He held them sixpence all too dear,
With that he call’d the tailor lown.
He was a wight of high renown,
And thou art but of low degree;
’Tis his own that pull the country down;
Then take thine and cloath about thee.

Some wine, ho! [Other.
Cas. Why, this is a more exquisite song than the other.
Iago. Will you hear’t again?
Cas. No: for I hold him to be unworthy of his place that does those things. Well, God’s above all; and there be souls must be saved, and there be souls must not be saved.
Iago. ’Tis true, good lieutenant.
Cas. For mine own part,—no offence to the general, nor any man of quality, I hope to be saved.
Iago. And so do I too, lieutenant.
Cas. Ay, but, by your leave, not before me: the lieutenant is to be saved before the ancient. Let’s have no more of this; let’s to our affairs.—Forgive us our sins! — Gentlemen, let’s to our business. Do not think, gentlemen, I am drunk: this is my ancient, this is my right hand; and this is my left: I am not drunk now; I can stand well enough, and speak well enough.

All. Excellent well.
Cas. Why, very well then; you must not think then that I am drunk. [Exit.
Mon. To the platform, masters; come, let’s set the watch.
OThello, the Moor of Venice. — Act ii., Scene iii.
Iago. You see this fellow that is gone before;
He is a soldier fit to stand by Caesar
And give direction: and do but see his vice;
"Tis to his virtue a just emulation,
The one as long as the other: 'tis pity of him.
I fear the trust Othello puts him in,
On some old time of his infirmity,
Will shake this island.

Mon. But is he often thus?

Iago. 'Tis evermore the prologue to his sleep:
He'll watch the hordego a double set;
If drink rock not his cradle.

Mon. It were well
The general were put in mind of it.
Perhaps he sees it not; or his good nature
Prizes the virtue that appears in Cassio,
And looks not on his evils: is not this true?

Enter Roderigo.

Iago. [Aside to him] How now, Roderigo! I pray you, after the lieutenant; go. [Exit Roderigo.

Mon. And 'tis great pity that the noble Moor
Should hazard such a place as his own second
With one of such an ingrate infirmity:
It were an honest action to say
So to the Moor.

Iago. [Aside] Not I, for this fair island:
I love Cassio well; and would do much
To cure him of this evil — But, hark! what noise?
[Cry within: 'Help! help!]

Re-enter Cassio, driving in Roderigo.

Cas. You rogue! you rascal!

Mon. What's the matter, lieutenant?

Cas. A knife teach me my duty!
I'll beat the knife into a twiggen bottle.

Rrod. Beat me!

Cas. Dost thou prise, rogue?

Nay, good lieutenant;

[Staying him.

I pray you, sir, hold your hand.

Cas. Or I'll knock you o'er the mazzard.

Mon. Come, come, you're drunk.

Cas. I'm drunk! [Exit Roderigo.

Iago. [Aside to Roderigo] Away, I say; go out, and cry a mutiny.

[Exit Roderigo.

Nay, good lieutenant,— alas, gentlemen; —
Help, ho! — Lieutenant,— sir,—Montano,—sir;—
Help, masters! — Here's a goodly watch indeed!

Who's that which rings the bell? — Diablo, ho!
The town will rise: God's will, lieutenant, hold!
You will be shamed for ever.

Re-enter Othello and Attendants.

Oth. What is the matter here?

Mon. Zounds, I bleed still; I am hurt to the death.

[Polites.

Oth. Hold, for your lives! — gentleman,—

Iago. Hold, ho! Lieutenant,— sir,—Montano,—
Have you forgot all sense of place and duty?
Hold! the general speaks to you; hold, hold, for shame!

[This? Oth. Why, how now, ho! from whence ariseth
Are we turn'd Turks, and to ourselves do that
Which heaven hath forbid the Ottomites?
For Christian shame, put by this barbarous brawl: —
He that is next to carve for his own rage
Holds his soul light; he dies upon his motion.
Silence that dreadful bell: it frights the isle
From her propriety. What is the matter, masters?

Iago, that look'st dead with grieving,
Speak, who began this? on thy love, I charge thee.

Iago. I do not know; but I am very much
In quarter, and in terms like bride and groom [now,

Devesting them for bed; and then, but now —
As if some planet had unwitted men —
Swords out, and lifting one at other's breast,
In opposition blazon'd, —

Any beginning to this peevish odds,
And would in action glorious I had lost
Those legs that brought me to a part of it! —
Oth. How comes it, Michael, you are thus forget?

Cas. I pray you, pardon me; I cannot speak.

Oth. Worthy Montano, you were wont be civil;
The gravity and stillness of your youth
The world hath noted, and your name is great
In mouths of wisest censure: that's the matter,
That you unkee your reputation thus
And spend your rich opinion for the name
Of a night-drummer? — here's an answer to it.

Mon. Worthy Othello, I am hurt to danger:
Your officer, Iago, can inform you, —

While I spare speech, which something now offends
Of all that I do know: nor know I aught
By me that 's said or done amiss this night;
Unless self-charity be sometimes a vice,
And to defend ourselves it be a sin
When violence assails us.

Oth. Now, by heaven,
My blood begins my safer guides to rule;
And passion, leaving my best judgment collie'd,
Assays to lead the way in bloody stir,
Or do but lift this arm, the best of you
Shall sink in my rebuke. Give me to know
How this foul rout began, who set it on;
And he that is approved in this offence
Though he had sworn with me, both at a birth,
Shall lose me. — What? in a town of war,
Yet wild, the people's hearts breathing of fear,
To manage private and domestic quarrel,
In night, and on the court and guard of safety!
'Tis monstrous. Iago, who began it?

Mon. If partially ailed, or leagued in office,
Thou dost deliver more or less than truth,
Thou art no soldier.

Iago. Touch me not so near:
I had rather have this tongue cut from my mouth
Than it should do offense to Michael Cassio;
Yet, I persuade myself, to speak the truth
Shall nothing wrong him. Thus it is, general;
Montano and myself being now agreed,
There comes a fellow crying out for help;
And Cassio following him with determined sword,
To execute upon him. Sir, this gentleman
Steps in to Cassio, and entreats his pause:
Myself the crying fellow did pursue,
Lest by his clamour some villain fall out —
The town might fall in fright: he, swift of foot,
Outran my purpose; and I return'd the rather
For that I heard the clink and fall of swords,
And Cassio high in oath; which fill to-night
I ne'er might say before. When I came back —
For this was brief — I found them close together,
At blow and thrust; even as again they were
When you yourself did part them.

More of this matter cannot I report:
But men are men; the best sometimes forget:
Though Cassio did some little wrong to him,
As men in rage strike those that wish them best,
Yet surely Cassio, I believe, received
From him that fled some strange indignity,
Which patience could not pass.

Oth. I know, Iago,
They honesty and love doth mine this matter,
Making it light to Cassio. Cassio, I love thee;
But never more be officer of mine.

Re-enter Desdemona, attended.

Look, if my gentle love be not raised up!
I 'll make thee an example.

Des. What's the matter?
Oth. All 's well now, sweet Dream: come away to bed.
Sic. For your hurts, myself will be your surgeon;
Lead him off.
Iago. Montano, who is he led off.
Com. Desdemona: 'tis the soldiers' life To have their halny slumbered waked with strife.
Iago. What are you hurt, lieutenant?
Com. Ay, past all surgery.
Iago. Marry, heaven forbid!
Com. Reputation, reputation, reputation! O, I have lost my reputation! I have lost the immortal part of myself, and what remains is bestial. My reputation, Iago, my reputation!
Iago. As I am an honest man, I thought you had received some bodily wound; there is more sense in that than in reputation. Reputation is an idle and most false imposition; oft got without merit, and lost without deserving; you have lost no reputation at all, unless you repulse yourself such a loser. What, man! there are ways to recover the general again: you are but now cast in his mood, a punishment more in policy than in malice; even so as one would beat his offendeless dog to afford an imperious lion: sue to him again, and he's yours.
Com. I will rather sue to be despised than to deceive so good a commander with so slight, so drunken, and so indiscreet an officer. Drunk! and speak parrot! and squabble! swagger? swear? and discourse fustian with one's own shadow? O thou invisible spirit of wine, if thou hast no name, to be known by, let us call thee devil!
Iago. What was he that you followed with your sword? What had he done to you?
Com. I know not.
Iago. Is 't possible?
Com. I remember a mass of things, but nothing distinctly; a quarrel, and nothing wherefore. O God, that men should put an enemy in their mouths to steal away their brains! that we should, with joy, pleasure, revel and applause, transform ourselves into beasts!
Iago. Why, but you are now well enough: how came you thus recovered?
Com. It hath pleased the devil drunkenness to give place to the devil wrath: one imperfection shows me another, to make me frankly despise myself.
Iago. Come, you are too severe a moralist: as the time, the place, and the condition of this country stands. I could heartily wish this had not beenfallen; but, since it is as it is, mends it for your own good.
Com. I will ask him for my place again; he shall tell me I am a drunkard! Had I as many months as Hydra, such an answer would stop them all. To be now a sensible man, by and by a fool, and presently a beast! O strange! Every inordinate cup is unbloshed and the ingredient is a devil.
Iago. Come, come, good wine is a good familiar creature, if it be well used: exclaim no more against it. And, good lieutenant, I think you think I love you.
Com. I have well approved it, sir. I drink!
Iago. You or any man living may be drunk at a time, man. I'll tell you what you shall do. Our good man is now the general: I may say so in this respect, for that he hath that look and given up himself to the contemplation, mark, and denotement of her parts and graces: confess yourself freely to her; importune her help to put you in your place again: she is of so free, so kind, so apt, so blessed a disposition, she holds it a vice in her goodness, to do more than she is requested: this broken joint between two friends, the husband entreat her to splinter; and, my fortunes against any lay worth naming, this crack of your love shall grow stronger than it was before.
Com. You advise me well.
Iago. I protest, in the sincerity of love and honest kindness.
Com. I think it freely: and betimes in the morning I will beseech the virtuous Desdemona to undertake for me: I am desolate of my fortunes if they check me here.
Iago. You are in the right. Good night, lieutenant; I must to the watch.
Com. Good night, honest Iago.
Iago. And what's he then that says I play the When this advice is free I give and honest, [villain? Probal to thinking and indeed the course To win the Moor again? For 'tis most easy The inclining Desdemona to subdue In any honest suit: she's framed as fruitful As the free elements. And then for her To win the Moor — were 't to renounce his baptism, All seals and symbols of redeemed sin, His soul is so enfefted to her love, That so, as I will make, unmake, do what she list, Even as her appetite shall play the god With his weak function. How am I then a villain To counsel Cassio to this parallel course, * Directly to his good? Divinity of hell! When devils will the blackest sin put on, They do suggest at first with heavenly shows, As I do now: for whiles this honest fool Plies Desdemona to repair his fortunes And she for him pledges strongly to the Moor, I'll pour this pestilence into his ear, That she repels him for her body's lust; And by how much she strives to do him good, She shall undo her credit with the Moor. So will I turn her virtue into pitch, And out of her own goodness make the net That shall enmesh them all.
Re-enter Roderigo.
Rod. I do follow here in the chase, not like a hound that hunts, but one that fills up the cry. My money is almost spent; I have been to-night exceedingly well engaçd; and I think the issues will be I shall have so much experience for my pains, and so, with no money at all and a little more wit, return again to Venice.
Iago. How poor are they that have not patience! What would did ever heal but by degrees? Thou know'st we work by wit, and not by witchcraft; And wit depends on dilatory time. Does 't not go well? Cassio hath beaten thee, And thou, by that small hurt, hast cashier'd Cassio: Though other things grow fair against the sun, Yet fruits that blossom first will first be ripe: Content thyself awhile. By the mass, 'tis morning; Pleasure and action make the hours seem short. Retire thee; go where thou art billeted: Away, I say; thou shalt know more hereafter: Nay, get thee gone. [Exit Roderigo. ] Two things are to be done: My wife must move for Cassio to her mistress; I'll set her on; Myself the while to drive the Moor apart, And bring him jump when he may Cassio find Soliciting his wife: ay, that's the way: Dull not device by coldness and delay. [Exit.
ACT III.

SCENE I.—Before the castle.

Enter Cassio and some Musicians.

Cas. Masters, play here; I will content your pains;
Something that's brief; and bid 'Good morrow, general.' [Music.

Enter Clown.

Clo. Why, masters, have your instruments been in Naples, that they speak 't' the nose thus?

First Mus. How, sir, how!

Clo. Are these, I pray you, wind-instruments?

First Mus. Ay, marry, are they, sir.

Clo. O, thereby hangs a tale, sir.

First Mus. Whereby hangs a tale, sir.

Clo. Marry, sir, by many a wind-instrument that I know. But, masters, here's money for you: and the general so likes your music, that he desires you, for love's sake, to make no more noise with it.

First Mus. Well, sir, we will not.

Clo. If you have any music that may not be heard, to't again: but, as they say, to hear music the general does not greatly care.

First Mus. We have none such, sir.

Clo. Then put up your pipes in your bag, for I'll away; go; vanish into air; away!

[Exeunt Musicians.

Cas. Dost thou hear, my honest friend?

Clo. No, I hear not your honest friend; I hear you.

Cas. Prittle, keep up thy quictets. There's a poor piece of gold for thee: if the gentleman that attends the general's wife be stirring, tell her there's one Cassio entreats her a little favour of speech: will thou do this?

Clo. She is stirring, sir: if she will stir hither, I shall seem to notify unto her.

Cas. Do, good my friend. [Exit Clown.

Enter Iago.

Iago. In happy time, Iago.

Iago. You have not been a-bed, then?

Cas. Why, no; the day had broke

Before we parted; I have made bold, Iago,
To send in to your wife: my suit to her
Is, that she will to virtuous Desdemona
Procure me some access.

Iago. I'll send her to you presently;
And I'll devise a mean to draw the Moor
Out of the way, that your converse and business
May be more free.

Cas. I humbly thank you for 't. [Exit Iago.] I never knew
A Florentine more kind and honest.

Enter Emilia.

Emil. Good morrow, good lieutenant: I am sorry
For your displeasure; but all will sure be well.
The general and his wife are talking of it;
And she speaks for you stoutly: the Moor replies,
That he who hurt is of great fame in Cyprus
And great affinity and that in wholesome wisdom
He might not but refuse you, but he protests he loves you
And needs no other suitor but his likings
To take the safest occasion by the front
To bring you in again.

Cas. Yet, I beseech you,
If you think fit, or that it may be done,
Give me advantage of some brief discourse
With Desdemona alone.

Emil. Pray you, come in;
I will bestow you where you shall have time
To speak your bosom's tale.

Cas. I am much bound to you. [Exit Clown.

ACT III.

SCENE II.—A room in the castle.

Enter Othello, Iago, and Gentlemen.

Oth. These letters give, Iago, to the pilot;
And by him do my duties to the senate:
That done, I will be walking on the works;
Repair there to me.

Iago. Well, my good lord, I'll do't.

Oth. This fortification, gentlemen, shall we see 't?

Gent. We'll wait upon your lordship. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The garden of the castle.

Enter Desdemona, Cassio, and Emilia.

Des. Be thou assured, good Cassio, I will do
All my abilities in thy behalf.

Emil. Good madam, do: I warrant it grieves my husband.
As if the case were his.

Des. O, that's an honest fellow. Do not doubt,
But I will have my lord and you again
[Cassio, As friendly as you were.

Cas. Bounteous madam, Whatever shall become of Michael Cassio,
He's never any thing but your true servant.

Des. I know it: I thank you. You do love my lord.
You have known him long; and be you well assured
He shall in strangeness stand no further off
Than in a politic distance.

Cas. Ay, but, lady,
That policy may either last so long,
Or feed upon such nice and waterish diet,
Or breed itself so out of circumstance,
That, I being absent and my place supplied,
My general will forget my love and service.

Des. Do not doubt that: before Emilia here
I give thee warrant of thy place; assure thee,
If I do vow a friendship, I'll perform it
To the last article: my lord shall never rest;
I'll watch him tame and talk him out of patience;
His bed shall seem a school, his board a shrift;
I'll intermingle every thing he does
With Cassio's suit: therefore be merry, Cassio;
For thy solicitor shall rather die
Than give thy cause away.

Emil. Madam, here comes my lord.

Cas. Madam, I'll take my leave.

Des. Why, stay, and hear me speak.

Emil. Madam, not now: I am very ill at ease,
Until for mine own purposes.

Cas. I do believe 't was he.

Des. How now, my lord!
I have been talking with a suitor here,
A man that languishes in your displeasure.

Oth. Who is 't you mean?

Des. Why, your lieutenant, Cassio. Good my lord,
If I have any grace or power to move you,
His present reconciliation take;
For if he be not one that truly loves you,
That err in ignorance and not in cunning,
I have no judgment in an honest face:
I prithee, call him back.

Oth. Went he hence now?

Des. Ay, sooth; so humbled.
ACT III.

OTHELLO.

Scene III.

That he hath left part of his grief with me, To suffer with him. Good love, call him back. Oth. Not now, sweet Desdemona; some other time. Des. But shall't not shortly. Oth. The sooner, sweet, for you. Des. Shall't be to-night at supper? Oth. No, not to-night. Des. To-morrow dinner, then? Oth. I shall not dine at home; I meet the captains at the citadel. [Exeunt Desdemona and Emilia. Oth. Excellent wretch! Perdition catch my soul, But I do love thee! and when I love thee not, Chaos is come again.

Iago. My noble lord,—

Oth. What dost thou say, Iago?

Iago. Did Michael Cassio, when you woo'd my lady, Know of your love?

Oth. He did, from first to last: why dost thou ask?

Iago. But for a satisfaction of my thought;

Not other harm.

Oth. Why of thy thought, Iago?

Iago. I did not think he had been acquainted with her.

Oth. O, yes; and went between us very oft.

Iago. Indeed! [in that?] Oth. Indeed! ay, indeed: discern'st thou aught
Is he not honest?

Iago. Honest, my lord!

Oth. Honest! ay, honest.

Iago. My lord, for aught I know.

Oth. What dost thou think?

Iago. Think, my lord!

Oth. Think, my lord!

By heaven, he echoes me, As if there were some monster in his thought Too hideous to be shown. Thou dost mean some- thing: I heard thee say even now, thou likedst not that, When Cassio left my wife: what didst not like? And when I told thee he was of my counsel In my whole course of wooing, thou criedst 'Indeed!' And didst contract and purish thy brow together, As if thou then hadst shut up in thy brain Some horrible conceit: if thou dost love me, Show me thy thought.

Iago. My lord, you know I love you.

Oth. And for I know thou'st full of love and honesty, And weigh'st thy words before thou givest them breath, Therefore these stops of thine fright me the more: For such things in a false disloyal knave Are tricks of custom, but in a man that's just They are close delusions, working from the heart That passion cannot rule.

Iago. For Michael Cassio, I dare be sworn I think that he is honest.

Oth. I think so too.

Iago. Men should be what they seem; Or those that be not, let them seem none! Oth. Certain, men should be what they seem. Iago. Why, then, I think Cassio's an honest man.

Oth. Nay, yet there's more in this: I prithee, speak to me as to thy thinkings, As thou dost runmate, and give thy worst of the worst of words. Good my lord, pardon me: Though I am bound to every act of duty, I am not bound to that all slaves are free to. [false; Utter my thoughts? Why, say they are vile and As where 's that palace whereinto foul things Sometimes intrude not? who has a breast so pure, But such as uncleanly apprehensions * Keep leets and hay-days and in session sit With meditations lawful?

Oth. Thou dost conspire against thy friend, Iago, If thou but think'st him wrong'd and makest his ear A stranger to thy thoughts.

Iago. I do beseech you— Though I perchance am vicious in my guess, As, I confess, it is my nature's plague To spy into abuses, and off my jealousy Shapes faults that are not—that your wisdom yet, From one that so imperfectly conceits, Would take no notice, nor build yourself a trouble Out of his scattering and unsure observance. It were not for your quiet nor your good, Nor for my manhood, honesty, or wisdom, To let you know my thoughts.

Oth. What dost thou mean?

Iago. Good name in man and woman, dear my Is the immediate jewel of their souls: [lord, Who steals my purse steals trash; 't is something, nothing;

'T was mine, 't is his, and has been slave to thou- But he that riches me from my good name [sands; Bids me of that which enriches him And makes me poor indeed.

Oth. By heaven, I'll know thy thoughts.

Iago. You cannot, if my heart were in your hand; Nor shall not, whilst 't is in my custody.

Oth. Ha! Iago. O, beware, my lord, of jealousy: It is the green-eyed monster which doth mock The meat it feeds on: that cuckold lives in bliss Who, certain of his fate, loves not his wronger; But, O, what damned minutes tells he o'er Who dotes, yet doubts, suspects, yet strongly loves! Oth. O misery!

Iago. Poor and content is rich and rich enough, But riches finite is as poor as winter To him that ever fears he shall be poor. Good heaven, the souls of all my tribe defend From jealousy! Oth. Why, why is this? Iago. Think'st thou I 'd make a life of jealousy, To follow still the changes of the moon With fresh suspicions? [No; to be once in doubt Is once to be resolved: exchange me for a goat, When I shall turn the business of my soul
To much exsufflicate and blown surmises, fons
Matching thy inference, 'T is not to make me
Say my wife is fair, feeds well, loves company,
Is free of speech, sings, plays and dances well;
Where virtue is, these are more virtuous;
Nor from mine own weak merits will I draw
The smallest fear or doubt of her revolt;
For her I have no cause, nor chose me. No, Iago;
I'll see before I doubt; when I doubt, prove;
And on the proof, there is no more but this,—
Away at once with love or jealousy!—

Iago. I am glad of it; for now I shall have reason
To show the love and duty that I bear you
With a bounder spirit; therefore, as I am bound,
Receive it from me. I speak not yet of proof.
Look to your wife; observe her well with Cassio;
Wear your eye thus, not jealous nor secure;
I would not have your free and noble nature,
Out of self-beauty, be abused; look to 't;
I know your country disposition well;
In Venice they do let heaven be saved the pranks
They dare not show their husbands' they; their best conscience
Is not to leave 't undone, but keep 't unknown.

Oth. Dost thou say so? I do believe her father, marrying you;
And when she seemed to shrike and fear your looks,
She loved them most.

Oth. And so she did. Iago.

Why, go to then;
She that, so young, could give out such a seeming,
To see her father's eyes up close as an owl—
He thought 'twas witchcraft—but I am much to Humblly do beseech you of your pardon [blame;
For too much loving you.

Oth. I am bound to thee for ever. Iago.
I see this hath a little dash'd your spirits.
Oth. Not a jot, not a jot. Iago.

I hope you will consider what is spoke
Comes from my love. But I do see you're moved:
I am to pray you not to strain my speech
To grosser issues nor to larger reach
Than to suspicion.

Oth. I will not.

Iago. Should you do so, my lord,
My speech should fall into such vile success
As my thoughts attain not at. Cassio's my worthy
My lord, I see you've moved. [Friend

Oth. No, not much moved: I do not think but Desdemona's honest. [Think so! Iago.
Long live she so! and long live you to
Oth. And yet, how nature erring from itself,— Iago. Ay, there's the point: as — to be bold with
Not to affect many proposed matches [you
Of her own choice, complexion, and degree.
Where things nature tends
Foh! one may smell in such a will most rank,
Foul disproportion, thoughts unnatural.
But pardon me; I do not in position
Distinctly speak of her; though I may fear
Her will, recoil'd to her better judgment,
May fall to match you with her country forms
And happily repent.

Oth. Farewell, farewell:
If more than dost perceive, let me know more;
Set on thy wife to observe: leave me, Iago. Iago. [Going My lord, I take my leave. [doubtless
Oth. This is now my marriage with great suspicion
Sees and knows more, much more, than he unfold.
Iago. [Returning My lord, I would I might ent-treat your honour
To scan this thing no further; leave it to time:
Though it be fit that Cassio have his place,
For, as I tell you, this honest creature
Sees and knows more, much more, than he unfold.
Yet, if you please to hold him off awhile.
You shall by that perceive him and his means:

Note, if your lady strain his entertainment
With any strong or vehement importunity;
Much will be seen in that. In the mean time,
Let me be thought too busy in my cares —
As worthy cause I have to fear I am —
And hold her free, I do beseech your honour.

Oth. Fear not my government.

Iago. I once more make my leave. [Exit.

Oth. This fellow's of exceeding honesty,
And knows all qualities, with a learned spirit,
Of human dealings. If I do prove her haggard,
Though that her jesses were my dear heart-strings,
I'd whistler off and let her down the wind,
To prey at fortune — Haply, for I am black.
And have not those soft parts of conversation
That chamberers have, or for I am declined
Into the vale of years,—yet that's not much —
She's gone, I am abused; and my belief
Must be to loathe her. O curse of marriage,
That we can call these delicate creatures ours,
And not their appetites! I had rather be a toad,
And live upon the vapour of a dungeon,
Than keep a corner in the thing I love
For others' uses. Yet, 'tis the plague of great ones;
Praegnotive are they less than the base;
We die unshannable, like death; —
Even then this forked plague is fatal to us
When we do quicken.

Re-enter Desdemona and Emilia.

Des. How now, my dear Othello!
Your dinner, and the generous islanders
By you invited, do attend your presence.

Oth. I am to blame.

Des. Why do you speak so faintly?

Oth. I have a pain upon my forehead here.

Des. 'Tis with watching; 't will away
Let me but bind it hard, within this hour [again:
It will be well.

Oth. Your napkin is too little;

[He puts the handkerchief from him; and it drops.
Let it alone. Come, I'll go in with you.

Des. I am very sorry that you are not well.

[Exeunt Othello and Desdemona.

Emil. I am glad I have found this napkin:
This was her first remembrance from the Moor:
My wayward husband hath a hundred times
Woo'd me to steal it; but she so loves the token,
For he conjured her she should ever keep it,
That she reserves it evermore about her
To kiss and talk to. 'T will have the work ta'en out,
And give 't Iago: what he will do with it
Heaven knows, not I;

I nothing but to please his fantasy.

Re-enter Iago.

Iago. How now! what do you here alone?

Emil. Do not you chide; I have a thing for you.

Iago. A thing for me? it is a common thing —

Emil. Ha!

Iago. To have a foolish wife.

Emil. O, is that all? What will you give me now
For that same handkerchief?

Iago. What handkerchief?

Emil. That handkerchief?

Iago. Why, that the Moor first gave to Desdemona;
That which so often you did bid me steal.

Iago. Hast stol'n it from her?

Emil. No, 'tis faith; she let it drop by negligence.
And, to the advantage, I, being here, took 't up.

Look, here it is.

Iago. A good wench; give it me.

Emil. What will you do with 't, that you have been
To have me filech it?

[so earnest

375
Iago. [Snatching it.] Why, what's that to you?

Oth. If it be not for some purpose of import, Give't me again: poor lady, she'll run mad When she shall lack it.

Iago. Be not acknowledged; 'tis I have use for it.

Go, leave me. [Exit Emilia.]

I will in Cassio's lodging lose this napkin, And with this find it. 'Tis light as air Are to the jealous confirmations strong. As proofs of holy writ: this may do something. The Moor already changes with my poison; Dangerous conceits are, in their natures, poisons, Which at the first are scarce found to distaste, But when a little獲得 the blood, Burn like the mines of sulphur. I did say so: Look, where he comes!

Re-enter Othello.

Not poppy, nor mandragora, Nor all the drowsy syrups of the world Shall ever medicine thee to that sweet sleep Which thou owest yesterday.

Oth. Ha! ha! false to me? Iago. Why, how now, general! no more of that. Oth. Avante! be gone! thou hast set me on The swear 'tis too much abused [rack: Than but to know 't a little.

Iago. How now, my lord!

Oth. What sense had I of her stol'n hours of lust? I saw 't not, thought it not, it harmed not me: I slept the next night well, was free and merry; I found not Cassio's kisses on her lips: He that is robb'd, not wanting what is stol'n, Let him not know 't, and he's not robb'd at all.

Iago. I am sorry to hear this.

Oth. I had been happy, if the general camp, Pioneers and all, had tasted her sweet body, So she had been mine. O, now, for ever Farewell the tranquil mind! farewell content! Farewell the plumed troop, and the big wars, That make ambition virtue! O, farewell! Farewell the necking steed, and the shrill trump, The spirit-stirring drum, the ear-piercing life, The royal banner, and all quality, Pride, pomp and circumstance of glorious war! And, O you mortal engines, whose rude threats The immortal Jove's dread clamours counterfeit, Farewell! Othello's occupation's gone! Iago. Is 't possible, my lord? Oth. Vellon, be sure thou gave my love a whore, Be sure of it; give me the collar proof; Or, by the worth of man's eternal soul, Thou hadst better have been born a dog Than answer my waked wrath.

Iago. Is 't come to this?

Oth. Make me to see 't; or, at the least, so prove That the probition bear no hinge nor loop [It, To hang a doubt on; or oven upon thy life!

Iago. My noble lord.

Oth. If thou dost slander her and torture me, Never pray more; abandon all remorse; On horror's head horrors accumulate; Do deeds to make her heart worse, all earth amazed; For nothing canst thou to damnation add Greater than that.

Iago. O grace! O heaven forgive me!

Are you a man? have you a soul or sense? God be with you; take mine office. O wretched fool, That livest to make thee keep his family! O monstrous world! Take note, take note, O world, To be direct and honest is not safe. I thank you for this profit; and from hence I'll love no friend, sith love breeds such offence. Oth. Vellon, be sure thou hast no money Oth. Iago. I should be wise, for honesty's a fool And loses that it works for.

By the world, I think my wife be honest and think she is not; I think that thou art just and think thou art not. I'll have some proof. Her name, that was as fresh As Dion's visage, is now begrimed and black As mine own face. If there be cords, or knives, Poison, or fire, or suffocating streams, I'll not endure it. Would I were satisfied! Oth. Death and damnation! O! Iago. It were a tedious difficulty, I think, To bring them to that prospect: damn them then, If ever mortal eyes do see them bolster More than their own! What then? how then? What shall I say? Where's satisfaction? It is impossible you should see this, Were they as prime as goats, as hot as monkeys, As salt as wolves in pride, and fools as gross As ignorance made drunk. But yet, I say, If imputation and strong circumstances, That lead direct to the door of truth, Will give you satisfaction, you may have 't. Oth. Give me a living reason she's 'disloyal.

Iago. I do not like the office: But, sith I am enter'd in this cause so far, Prick'd to 't by foolish honesty and love, I will go on. I lay with Cassio lately; And, being troubled with a raging tooth, I could not sleep. There are a kind of men so loose of soul, That in their sleep's will mutter their affairs: One of this kind is Cassio. In sleeping Othello, let us be wary, let us hide our loves; And then, sir, would he gripe and wring my hand, Cry 'O sweet creature!' and then kiss me hard, As if he phrack'd up kisses by the roots That grew upon my lips: then laid his leg Over my thigh, and sigh'd, and kiss'd; and then cried 'Curse'd fate that gave thee to the Moor!' Oth. O monsters! monstrous!

Iago. Nay, this was but his dream. Oth. But this denoted a foregone conclusion: 'Tis a shrewd doubt, though it be but a dream. Iago. This may help to thicken other proofs That do demonstrate thy woman. Oth. I'll tear her all to pieces. Iago. Nay, but be wise: yet we see nothing done: She may be honest yet. Tell me but this, Have you not sometimes seen a handkerchief Spotted with strawberries in your wife's hand? Oth. I gave her such a one: I was my first gift.

Iago. I know not that; but such a handkerchief— I am sure it was your wife's—did I to-day See Cassio wipe his beard with.

Oth. If it be that,— Iago. If it be that, or any that was hers, It speaks against her with the other proofs. Oth. O, that the slave had forty thousand lives! One is too poor, too weak for my revenge. Now do I see 'tis true. Look here, Iago; All my fond love thus do I blow to heaven. Iago. What, exchange? Arose, black vengeance, from thy hollow cell! Yield up, O love, thy crown and hearted throne To tyrannous hate! Swell, bosom, with thy fraught, For 'tis of aspies' tongues!

Oth. Ye shall have that.

Iago. Ye shall have that. Yet be content. Oth. O, blood, blood, blood!

Ne'er feels retiring ebb, but keeps due on
To the Propontic and the Hellespont,
Even so my bloody thoughts, with violent pace,
Shall ne'er look back, ne'er ebb to humble love,
Till that a capable and wide revenue
Swallow them up. Now, by yond marble heaven,

[Enter Desdemona, Emilia, and Clown.

Des. Do you know, sirrah, where Lieutenant Cassio lies?

Clo. I dare not say he lies any where.

Des. Why, man?

Clo. He's a soldier, and for one to say a soldier lies, is stabbing.

Des. Go to: where lodges he?

Clo. To tell you where he lodges, is to tell you where I lie.

Des. Can any thing be made of this?

Clo. I know not where he lodges, and for me to devise a lodging and say he lies here or he lies there, were to lie in mine own throat.

Clo. Can you inquire him out, and be edified by report?

Clo. I will catechize the world for him; that is, make questions, and by them answer.

Des. Seek him, bid him come hither: tell him I have moved my lord on his behalf, and hope all will be well.

Clo. To do this is within the compass of man's wit; and therefore I will attempt the doing it. [Exit. Des. Where should I lose that handkerchief?

Emil. I know not, madam. [Emilia.

Des. Believe me, I had rather have lost my purse

Full of crusadoes: and, but my noble Moor

Is true of mind and made of no such baseness

As jealous creatures are, it were enough

To put him to ill thinking.

Emil. Is he not jealous?

Des. Who, he? I think the sun where he was

Drew all such humours from him. [Emilia.

Look, where he comes. Des. I will not leave him now till Cassio

Be call'd to him. Enter Othello.

How is't with you, my lord?

Oth. Well, my good lady. [Aside] O, hardness to dissemble!

How do you, Desdemona?

Des. Give me your hand: this hand is moist, my lady.

Des. This yet hath felt no age nor known no sorrow.

Oth. This argues fruitfulness and liberal heart;

Hot, hot, and moist: this hand of yours requires
A sequester from liberty, fasting and prayer.

Much castigation, excision devout;

For here's a young and sweating devil here,

That commonly rebels. 'Tis a good hand,

A frank one.

Des. You may, indeed, say so;

For 't was that hand that gave away my heart.

Oth. A bloody hand! the hearts of old gave

But our new healthy is hands of hearts. [Hands;

Des. I have sent to bid Cassio come speak with you.

Oth. I have a salt and sorry rheum offends me;

Lend me thy handkerchief.

Des. Here, my lord.

Oth. That which I gave you.

Des. I have it not about me.

Oth. Not?

Des. No, indeed, my lord.

That is a fault.

That handkerchief

Did an Egyptian to my mother give;

She was a charmer, and could almost read [kept it,

The thoughts of people: she told her, while she

'T would make her amiable and sublime my father

Entirely to her love, but if she lost it

Or made a gift of it, my father's eye

Should hold her loathed and his spirits should hunt

After new fancies: she, dying, gave it me;

And bid me, when my fate would have me wife,

To give it her. I did so: and take heed on 't;

Make it a darling like your precious eye;

To lose 't or give 't away were such perdition

As nothing else could match.

Des. Is't possible?

Oth. 'Tis true: there's magic in the web of it:

A sibyl, that had number'd in the world

The sum to course two hundred compasses,

In her prophetic forgery sew'd the work;

The worms were hallow'd that did breed the silk;

And it was dyed in mummy which the skilful

Conserved of maidens' hearts.

Des. Indeed! is 't true?

Oth. Most veritable; therefore look to 't well,

Des. Then would to God that I had never seen 't!

Oth. Ha! wherefore?

Des. Why do you speak so startingly and rash? Oth. Is't lost? is 't gone? speak, is it out o' the Des. Heaven bless us! [way?

Oth. Say you?

Des. It is not lost; but what an if it were?

Oth. Now!

Des. I say, it is not lost.

Oth. Fetch 't, let me see 't.

Des. Why, so I can, sir, but I will not now.

This is a trick to put me from my suit;

Pray you, let Cassio be received again.

Oth. Fetch me the handkerchief: my mind mis-

Des. Come, come; [gives.

You'll never meet a more sufficient man.

Oth. The handkerchief!

I pray, talk me of Cassio.

Oth. The handkerchief!

Des. A man that all his time

Hath founded his good fortunes on your love,

Shared dangers with you,—

Oth. The handkerchief!

Des. In sooth, you are to blame.

Oth. Away! [Exit. Emil. Is not this man jealous?

Des. I ne'er saw this before.

Sure, there's some wonder in this handkerchief:

I am most unhappy in the loss of it.

Emil. 'Tis not a year or two shows us a man:

They are all but stomachs, and we all but food;

37
They eat us hungerly, and when they are full,
They belch us. Look you, Cassio and my husband!

Enter Cassio and Iago.

Iago. There is no other way: 'tis she must do 't.
And, lo, the happiness! go, and importune her.

Des. How now, good Cassio! what's the news with you?

Cas. Madam, my former suit; I do beseech you
That by your virtuous means I may again
Exist, and be a member of his love
Whom I with all the office of my heart
Entirely honour: I would not be delay'd,
If my offence be of such mortal kind
That nor my service past, nor present sorrows,
Nor purposed merit in futurity,
Can ransom me into his love again,
But to know so must be my benefit;
So shall I clothe me in a forced content,
And shut myself up in some other course,
To fortune's alms.

Des. Alas, thrice-gentle Cassio!
My advocacy is not now in tune:
My lord is not my lord; nor should I know him,
Were he in favour as in honour alter'd.
So help me every spirit sanctified,
As I have spoken for you all my best
And stood within the blank of his displeasure
For my free speech! you must awhile be patient:
What I can do I will; and more I will
Than for myself I dare: let that suffice you.

Iago. Is my lord angry?

Des. He went hence but now,
And certainly in strange unquietness.

Iago. Can he be angry? I have seen the cannon,
When it hath blown his ranks into the air,
And, like the devil, from his very arm
Puff'd his own brother: — and can he be angry?

Des. Something of moment then: I will go meet him:
There's matter in 't indeed, if he be angry.

Des. I prithee, do so. [Exit Iago.

Enter Cassio and Emilia.

Iago. Will you think so?

Cas. Think so, Iago!

Iago. To kiss in private?

Cas. An unauthorized kiss.

Iago. Or to be kissed with her friend in bed
An hour or more, not meaning any harm?

Cas. Naked in bed, Iago, and not mean harm!
It is hypocrisy against the devil:
They that mean virtuously, and yet do so, [heaven.

Des. The devil their virtue tempts, and they tempt
And no conception nor no jealous toy

Des. Alas the day! I never gave him cause.

Iago. But jealous souls will not be answer'd so;
They are not ever jealous for the cause,
But jealous for they are jealous: 'tis a monster
Begot upon itself, born on itself.

Des. Heaven keep that monster from Othello's

Iago. Lady, amen. [Exit Iago.

Des. I will go seek him. Cassio, walk hereabout:
If I do find him fit, I'll move your suit
And seek to effect it to my uttermost.

Cas. I humbly thank your ladyship.
[Exit Desdemona and Emilia.

Enter Bianca.

Bian. Save you, friend Cassio!

Cas. What make you from home?

Enter Othello.

Cas. How is it with you, my best fair Bianca?
I faith, sweet love, I was coming to your house.

Enter Othello.

Bian. And I was going to your lodging, Cassio.
What, keep a week away? seven days and nights?

Enter Othello.

Cas. Eight score eight hours! and lovers' absent hours,
More tedious than the dial eight score times?

Bian. O weary reckoning!

Cas. Pardon me, Bianca:
I have this while with leaden thoughts been press'd;
But I shall, in a more continue time,
Strike off this scope of absence. Sweet Bianca.

Bian. Take me this work out.

Bian. O Cassio, whence came this?
This is some token from a newer friend;
To the felt absence now I feel a cause:
Is 't come to this? Well, well.

Cas. Go to, woman!

Bian. Throw your vile guesses in the devil's teeth.

Cas. From whence you have them. You are jealous now
That this thing is from some mistress, some remembrance:
No, in good truth, Bianca.

Bian. Why, whose is it?

Cas. I know not, sweet: I found it in my chamber;
I like the work well: ere it be demanded — [her.
As like enough it will — I 'll have it copied.
Take it, and do 't; and leave me for this time.

Bian. Leave you! wherefore?

Cas. I do attend here on the general;
And think it no addition, nor my wish,
To have him see me woman'd.

Bian. Why, I pray you?

Cas. Not that I love you not.

Bian. But that you do not love me.
I pray you, bring me on the way a little,
And say if I shall see you soon at night.

Bian. 'Tis but a little way that I can bring you;
For I attend here; but I 'll see you soon.

Bian. 'Tis very good; I must be circumstanced.

[Exit Bianca.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Cyprus. Before the castle.

ACT IV.

OTHELLO.

Scene I.

Iago. Ay, what of that?

Oth. That’s not so good now.

Iago. If I had said I had seen him do you wrong? What, or heard him say, as knaves be such abroad, who having, by their own importunate suit, or voluntary doting of some mistress, convinced or supplied them, cannot choose but they must blab—

Oth. Hath he said any thing?

Iago. He hath, my lord; but be you well assured, no more than he’ll unswear.

Oth. What hath he said?

Iago. ’Faith, that he did— I know not what he.

Oth. What? what?

Iago. Lie—

Oth. With her?

Iago. With her, on her; what you will.

Oth. Lie with her! lie on her! We say lie on her, they believe her. Lie with her! that’s subsome.—Handkerchief—confessions—handkerchief!—To confess, and he hanged for his labour;—first, to be hanged, and then to confess.—I tremble at it. Nature would not invest herself in such shadowy passion without some instruction. It is not words that shake me thus. Fish! noses, ears, and lips.—Is it possible?—Confess—handkerchief!—O devil! [Falls in a trance.]

Iago. Work on. My medicine, work! Thus credulous fools are, and many worthy and chaste dames even thus. All guiltless, meet reproach. What, ho! my lord! My lord, I say! Othello!

Enter Cassio.

Iago. How now, Cassio!

Cass. What’s the matter?

Iago. My lord is fall’n into an epilepsy; this is his second fit; he had one yesterday.

Cass. Rub him about the temples.

Iago. No, forbear; the lethargy must have his quiet course: if he not, he foams at mouth and by and by breaks out to savage madness. Look, he stirs: do you withdraw yourself a little while, he will recover straight: when he is gone, I would on great occasion speak with you.

[Exit Cassio.]

Iago. How is it, general? have you not hurt your head?

Oth. Dost thou mock me?

Iago. I mock you! no, by heaven. Would you not be his forbearance like a man!

Oth. A horned man’s a monster and a beast.

Iago. There’s many a beast in heaven, and many a civil monster.

Oth. Did he confess it?

Iago. Good sir, be a man; think every bearded fellow that’s but yoke!

May draw with you; there’s millions now alive that nightly lie in those who are not confessors.

Which they dare swear peculiar; your case is better, ’tis the spite of hell, the fiend’s arch-mock, to tip a wanton in a secure couch, and to suppose her chaste! No, let me know; and knowing what I am, I know what she shall be.

Oth. O, thou art wise; ’tis certain.

Iago.

Oth. Stand you awhile apart;

Confine yourself but in a patient list,

Whilst you were here overwhelmed with your grief—

A passion most unsuiting such a man—

Cassio came hither: I shifted him away, and hid good sense upon your estate,

Bade him anon return and here speak with me;

The which he promised. Do but enrage yourself, and mark the fleers, the gibes, and notable scorns, that dwell in every region of his face:

For I will make him tell the tale anew,

Where, how, how oft, how long ago, and when

He hath, and is again to cope your wife:

I say, but mark his gesture. Marry, patience;

Or I shall say you are all in all in spleen,

And nothing of a man.

Oth. Dost thou hear, Iago?

Iago. I will be found most cunning in my patience; but—dost thou hear?—most bloody.

Oth. That’s not amiss; but yet keep time in all. Will you withdraw?

[Othello retires.]

Now with I question Cassio of Bianca.

A housewife that by selling her desires \[Speaking hoar.\] Now, if this suit lay in Bianca’s heart, quickly should you speed!

[Power.]

Cass. Alas, poor cautif!

Oth. Look, how he laughs already!

Iago. I never knew woman love man so.

Cass. Alas, poor rogue! I think, I faith, she loves

Oth. Now he denies it faintly, and laughs it out.

Iago. Do you hear, Cassio?

Oth. Now he importunes him to tell it over; go to; well said, well said.

Iago. She gives it out that you shall marry her;

Do you intend it?

Oth. Ha, ha, ha!

Iago. Do you triumph, Roman? do you triumph?

Cass. I marry her! what’s a customer! Prithee, bear some charity to my wit; do not think it so unwholesome. Ha, ha, ha!

Oth. So, so, so, so—they laugh that win.

Iago. ’Faith, the cry goes that you shall marry

Cass. Prithee, say true.

Iago. I am a very villain else.

Oth. Have you scented me? Well,

Cass. This is the monkey’s own giving out: she is persuaded I will marry her, out of her own love and flattery, not out of my promise.

Oth. Iago beckons me: now he begins the story.

Cass. She was here even now; she haunts me in every place. I was the other day walking on the sea-bank with certain Venetians; and thither comes the hauble, and, by this hand, she falls me thus about my neck—

Oth. Crying ‘O dear Cassio!’ as it were: his gesture importune!

Cass. So hangs, and lolls, and weeps upon me; so hales, and pulls me: ha, ha, ha!

Oth. Now he tells how she plucked him to my chamber. O, I see that nose of yours, but not that dog I shall throw it to.

Cass. Well, I must leave her company.

Iago. Before me! look, where she comes.

Cass. ’Tis such another fitchew! marry, a perfumed one.

Enter Bianca.

What do you mean by this haunting of me?

Bian. Let the devil and his dam haunt you! What did you mean by that same handkerchief you gave me even now? I was a fine fool to take it. I must take out the work.—A likely piece of work, that you should find it in your chamber, and not know who left it there! This is some minx’s token, and I must take the work? There; give it your hobby-horse; whereasover you had it, I'll take out no work on't.

Cas. How now; my sweet Bianca! how now! how now, my lady?

Oth. By heaven, that should be my handkerchief! Bian. An you'll come to supper to-night, you may; an you will not, come when you are next prepared for. [Exit.

Iago. After her, after her.

Cas. Faith, I must; she'll rail in the street else.

Iago. Will you sup there?

Cas. 'Faith, I intend so.

Iago. Well, I may chance to see you; for I would very fain speak with you.

Cas. Prithew, come; will you? [Exit Cassio.

Iago. How shall I murder him, Iago? Iago. Did you perceive how he laughed at his Iago. And did you see the handkerchief?

Oth. Was that mine?

Iago. Yours, by this hand; and to see how he prizes the foolish woman your wife! she gave it him, and he hath given it his whore.

Oth. I would have him nine years a-killing. A fine woman! a fair woman! a sweet woman! Iago. Nay, you must forget that.

Oth. Hang her! I do but say what she is: so delicate with her needle: an admirable musician: O! she will sing the savageness out of a bear: of so high and plenteous wit and invention:

Iago. She's the worse for all this.

Iago. O, a thousand thousand times: and then,
of so gentle a condition!

Iago. Ay, too gentle.

Oth. Nay, that's certain: but yet the pity of it.

Iago. O Iago, the pity of it, Iago!

Iago. If you are so fond over her iniquity, give her patent to offend; for, if it touch not you, it comes near me.

Oth. I will chop her into messes; cuckold me!

Iago. O, 'tis foul in her.

Iago. With mine other!

Iago. That's fouler.

Oth. Get me some poison, Iago; this night: I'll not expostulate with her; lest her body and beauty unprovoke my mind again: this night, Iago.

Iago. Do it not with poison, strangle her in her bed, even the bed she hath contaminated.

Oth. Good, good: the justice of it pleases: very good.

Iago. And for Cassio, let me be his undertaker: you shall hear more by midnight.

Oth. Excellent good. [A trumpet within.] What trumpet is that same?

Iago. Something from Venice, sure. 'Tis Lodovico.

[Lodovico, Desdemona, and Attendants Enter Lodovico, Desdemona, and Attendants. Ld. Save you, worthy general!

Oth. With all my heart, sir.

Lod. The duke and senators of Venice greet you.

Oth. I kiss the instrument of their pleasures.

Iago. I am very glad to see you, signior; Welcome to Cyprus.

Lod. I thank you. How does Lieutenant Cassio?

Iago. Lives, sir.

Des. Cousin, there's fall'n between him and my

An unkind breach: but you shall make all well.

Oth. Are you sure of that?

Des. My lord?

Oth. [reads] 'This fail you not to do, as you

Lod. He did not call; he's busy in the paper.

Is there division 'twixt my lord and Cassio?

Des. A most unhappy one: I would do much

To tone them, for the love I bear to Cassio.

Oth. Fire and brimstone! My lord?

Oth. Are you wise?

Des. What, is he angry?

Lod. May be the letter moved him;

For, as, I think, they do command him home,

Deputing Cassio in his government.

Oth. Trust me, I am glad on't.

Des. Indeed!

Des. My lord?

Oth. I am glad to see you mad.

Des. Why, sweet Othello,—

Oth. [Striking her] Devil!

Des. I have not deserved this.

[Venice, Lod. My lord, this would not be believed in

Though I should swear I saw 't: it is very much;

Make her amends; she weeps.

Oth. O devil, devil! If that the earth could teem with woman's tears,
Each drop she falls would prove a crocodile.

Out of my sight!

Des. I will not stay to offend you. [Going.

Lod. Truly, an obedient lady:

I do beseech your lordship, call her back.

Oth. Mistress!

Des. My lord?

Oth. What would you with her, sir?

Des. Who, I, my lord?

Oth. Ay; you did wish that I would make her Sir, she can turn, and turn, and yet go on. [turns: And turn again; and she can weep, sir, weep;

And she's obedient, as you say, obedient.

Very obedient. Proceed you in your tears.

Concerning this, sir,—O well-painted passion! I am commanded home. Get you away;
I'll send for you anon. Sir, I obey the mandate, And will return to Venice. [Exeunt.

[Exit Desdemona.

Cassio shall have my place. And, sir, to-night,
I do entreat that we may sup together:
You are welcome, sir, to Cyprus,—Goats and Monkeys. [Exit.

Lod. Is this the noble Moor whom our full coven
Call all in all sufficient? Is this the nature
Whom passion could not shake? whose solid vir
The shot of accident, nor dart of chance, [tie.
Could neither graze nor pierce?

Iago. He is much changed.

Lod. Are his wits safe? is he not light of brain?

Iago. He's that he is: I may not breathe my censure.

What he might be,—if what he might he is not——
I would to heaven he were!

Lod. What, strike his wife?

Iago. 'Faith, that was not so well; yet would I
That stroke would prove the worst! [knew
Lod. Is it his use?
Or did the letters work upon his blood,
And new-create this fault?

Iago. Alas, alas! It is not honesty in me to speak.
What I have seen and known. You shall observe
And his own courses will denote him so [him,
That I may save my speech: do but go after,
And mark how he continues.

Lod. I am sorry that I am deceived in him.

[Exeunt.
SCENE II. — A room in the castle.

Enter Othello and Emilia.

Oth. You have seen nothing then?

Emil. Nor ever heard, nor ever did suspect.

Oth. Yes, you have seen Cassio and she together.

Emil. But then I saw no harm, and then I heard each syllable that breath made up between them.

Oth. What, did they never whisper?

Emil. Never, my lord.

Oth. Nor send you out o' the way?

Emil. Never.

Oth. To fetch her fan, her gloves, her mask, nor

Emil. Never, my lord. [nothing]

Oth. That's strange.

Emil. I dart, my lord, to wager she is honest,

Lay down my soul at stake: if you think other,

Remove your thought: it doth abuse your bosom.

If any wretch have put this in your head,

Let heaven requite it with the serpent's curse!

For, if she be not honest, chaste, and true,

There's no man happy; the purest of their wives

Is foul as slander.

Oth. Bid her come hither; go. [Exit Emilia.]

She says enough; yet she's a simple bawd

That cannot say as much. This is a subtle whore,

A closet base and key of villainous secrets;

And yet she'll kneel and pray; I have seen her do't.

Enter Desdemona with Emilia.

Des. My lord, what is your will?

Oth. Pray, clench, come hither.

Des. What is your pleasure then?

Oth. Let me see your eyes;

Look in my face.

Des. What horrible fancy's this?

Oth. [To Emilia] Some of your function, mistress;

Leave procurers alone and shut the door;

Cough, or cry 'hem,' if any body come;

Your mystery, your mystery: nay, dispatch. [Exit Emilia.]

Des. Upon my knees, what doth your speech

I understand a fury in your words. [import]

But not the words.

Oth. Why, what art thou?

Des. Your wife, my lord; your true

And loyal wife.

Oth. Come, swear it, damn thyself;

Lest, being like one of heaven, the devils themselves

Should fear to seize thee: therefore do double

Swear thou art honest. [blam'd]

Des. Heaven doth truly know it.

Oth. Heaven truly knows that thou art false as hell. [I false?]

Des. To whom, my lord? with whom? how am

Oth. O Desdemona! away! away! away! away.

Des. Alas the heavy day! Why do you weep?

Am I the motive of these tears, my lord?

If haply you my father do suspect

An instrument of this your calling back,

Lay not your blame on me: if you have lost him,

Why, I have lost him too.

Oth. Had it pleased heaven

To try me with affliction: had they rain'd.

All kinds of sores and shame on my bare head,

Steep'd me in poverty to the very lips,

Given to captivity me and my utmost hopes.

I should have found in some place of my soul

A drop of patience: but, alas, to make me

A fixed figure for the time of scorn

To point his low unmoving finger at!

Yet could I bear that too; well, very well;

But there, where I have garner'd up my heart,

Where either I must live, or bear no life;

The fountain from which my current runs,

Or else dries up; to be discarded thence!

Or keep it as a cistern for foul toads [there,

To knot and gender in! Turn thy complexion

Patience, thou young and rose-lipp'd cherubin,—

Ay, there 's look grum as hell!]

Des. I hope my noble lord esteems me honest.

Oth. O, ay; as summer flies are in the shambles,

That quicke even with blowing. O thou weed,

Who art so lovely fair and smell'st so sweet

That the sense aches at thee, would thou hastad

never been born!]

Des. Alas, what ignorant sin have I committed?

Oth. Was this fair paper, this most goodly book,

Made to write ' where ' upon? What committed!

Committed! O thou public commoner!

I should make very forges of my cheeks,

That would to etchers burn up modestly,

Did I but speak thy deeds. What committed!

Heaven stops the nose at it and the moon winks,

The bawdy wind that kisses all it meets

Is hush'd within the hollow value of earth,

And will not hear it. What committed!

Indulgent stropnet! By heaven, you do me wrong.

Oth. Are not you a strumpet?

Des. No, as I am a Christian:

If to preserve this vessel for my lord

From any other foul unlawful touch

Be not to be a strumpet, I am none.

Oth. What, not a whore?

Des. No, as I shall be saved.

Oth. Is't possible?

Des. O, heaven forgive us!

Oth. I cry you mercy, then:

I took you for that cunning whore of Venice

That married with Othello. [Raising his voice]

You, mistress,

That have the office opposite to Saint Peter,

And keep the gate of hell!

Re-enter Emilia.

You, you, ay, you!

We have done our course; there's money for your pains:

I pray you, turn the key and keep our counsel.

[Exit.]

Emil. Alas, what does this gentleman conceive?

How do you, madam? how do you, my good lady?

Des. Faith, half asleep.

Emil. Good madam, what's the matter with my

Des. With who?

[lord?]

Emil. Why, with my lord, madam.

Des. Who is thy lord?

Emil. He that is yours, sweet lady.

Des. I have none: do not talk to me, Emilia;

I cannot weep; nor answer have I none,

But what should go by water. Prithhee, to-night

Lay on my bed my wedding sheets: remember;

And call thy husband hither.

Emil. Here's a change indeed! [Exit.]

Des. 'Tis meet I should be used so, very meet.

How have I been behaved, that he might stick

The smallest opinion on my least misuse?

Re-enter Emilia with Iago.

Iago. What is your pleasure, madam? How is 't with you?

Des. I cannot tell. Those that do teach young

Do it with gentle means and easy tasks: [habes

He might have 'd me so; for, in good faith,

I am a child to chiding.

Iago. What's the matter, lady?

Emil. Alas, Iago, my lord hath so bewhored her,

Thrown such despite and heavy terms upon her,

As true hearts cannot bear.

Des. Am I that name, Iago?

Iago. What name, fair lady?
ACT IV.

OTHELLO.

SCENE III.

Des. Such as she says my lord did say I was.

Iago. He called her whore: a beggar in his drink

Could not have laid such terms upon his callat.

Des. Why did he do this? Where? What? -

Des. I do not know; I am sure I am none such.

Iago. Do not weep, do not weep. Alas the day!

Des. How hath she forsook so many noble matches,

Her father and her country and her friends,

To be call'd whore? would it not make one weep?

Des. It is my wretched fortune.

Iago. Beshrew him for't! How comes this trick upon him?

Des. Nay, heaven doth know,

Iago. I will be hang'd, if some eternal villain,

Some busy and insinuating rogue,

Some cunning, covetous slave, to get some office,

Have not devised this slander: I 'll be hang'd else.

Iago. Fie, there is no such man; it is impossible.

Des. If any such there be, heaven pardon him!

Iago. A halter pardon him! and hell gnaw his bones!

[pats?]

Why should he call her whore? who keeps her com-

The Moor's abused by some most villainous knave,

Some base notorious knave, some scurril fellow,

O heaven, that such companions thou'ldst unfold,

And put in every honest hand a whip

To lead the rascals naked through the world

Even from the east to the west!

Iago. Speak within door.

Des. O, file upon them? Some such squire he was

That turn'd your wit the seamy side without,

And made you to suspect me with the Moor.

Iago. You are a fool; go to.

Des. O good Iago,

What shall I do to win my lord again?

Good friend, go to him; for, by this light of heaven,

I know not how I lost him. Here I kneel:

It's ever my will did trespass against his love.

Either in discourse of thought or actual deed,

Or that mine eyes, mine ears, or any sense,

Delighted them in any other form;

Or that I do not yet, and ever did,

And ever will—though he do shake me off

To beggarly divortion—love him dearly,

Comfort forswearing, when making him my slave.

And his unkindness may defeat my life,

I cannot say 'whore'? It does abhor me now I speak the word;

To do the act that might the addition earn

Not the world's mass of vanity could make me

And I pray you, be content: 'tis but his humour:

The business of the state does him offence,

And he does chide with you.

Des. If 't were no other—

Iago. 'Tis but so, I warrant.

[Trumpets within.]

Hark, how these instruments summon to supper!

The messengers of Venice stay the meat:

Go in, and weep not: all things shall be well.

[Exit Desdemona and Emilia.]

Enter Roderigo.

How now, Roderigo! Iago.

Des. I do not find that thou dealest justly with me.

Iago. What in the contrary?

Roderigo. Every day thou dost me with some device, Iago; and rather, as it seems to me now,

keest from me all convenience than suppliest me with the least advantage of hope. I will indeed no longer endure it, nor am I yet persuaded to put up in peace what already I have foolishly suffered.

Iago. Will you hear me, Roderigo?

Roderigo. Faith, I have heard too much, for your words and performances are no kin together.

Iago. You charge me most unjustly.

742

Rod. With nought but truth. I have wasted myself out of my means. The jests you have had from me to deliver to Desdemona would half have extirpated a vatorist; you have told me she hath received them and returned me expectations and comforts of sudden respect and acquaintance, but I find none.

Iago. Well! go to; very well.

Rod. Very well! go to! I cannot go to, man; nor 't is my custom: I say, no; I think it is scurrv, and begin to find myself fooled in it.

Rod. Very well.

Iago. I tell you 't is not very well. I will make myself known to Desdemona: if she will return me my jewels, I will give over my suit and repent my foolish action; if not, assure yourself I will seek satisfaction of you.

Iago. You have said now.

Rod. Ay, and said nothing but what I protest intendment of doing.

Iago. Why, now I see there's matter in thee, and even from this instant do build on thee a better opinion than ever before. Give me thy hand, Roderigo: thou hast taken against me a most just exception; but yet, I protest, I have dealt most directly in thy affair.

Iago. It hath not appeared.

Iago. I grant indeed it hath not appeared, and yet I condescend not with wit and judgment. But, Roderigo, if thou hast that in thee indeed, which I have greater reason to believe now than ever, I mean purpose, courage and valour, this night show it: if thou the next night following enjoy not Desdemona, take me from this world with treason and devise engines for my life.

Rod. What is it? is it within reason and compass?

Iago. Sir, there is especial commission come from Venice to depute Cassio in Othello's place.

Iago. Is that true? why, then Othello and Desdemona return again to Venice.

Iago. O, no; he goes into Mauritania and takes away with him the fair Desdemona, unless his abode be lingered here by some accident: wherein none can be so determinate as the removing of Cassio.

Iago. How do you mean, removing of him?

Iago. I grant indeed it hath not appeared, and yet I condescend not with wit and judgment. But, Roderigo, if thou hast that in thee indeed, which I have greater reason to believe now than ever, I mean purpose, courage and valour, this night show it: if thou the next night following enjoy not Desdemona, take me from this world with treason and devise engines for my life.

Rod. And that you would have me to do?

Rod. Ay, if you dare do yourself a profit and a right. He sups to-night with a harlotry, and 'tuther will I go to him: he knows not yet of his honourable fortune. If you will watch his going thence, which I will fashion to fall out between twelve and one, you may take him at your pleasure: I will be near to second your attempt, and he shall fall between us. Come, stand not amazed at it, but go along with me; I will show you such a necessity in his death that you shall think yourself bound to put it on him. It is now high supper-time, and the night grows to waste: about it.

Rod. I will hear further reason for this.

Iago. And you shall be satisfied. [Exit.

SCENE III. — Another room in the castle.

Enter Othello, Lodovico, Desdemona, Emilia, and Attendants.

Lod. I do beseech you, sir, trouble yourself no further.

Oth. I'll pardon me; 't will do me good to walk.

Lod. Madam, good-night; I humbly thank your ladyship.

Des. Your honour is most welcome.

Oth. Will you walk, sir?

Des. My lord?
Act V.

Scene I. — Cyprus. A street.

Enter Iago and Roderigo.

Iago. Here, stand behind this bulk; straight will he come; wear thy good rapier bare, and put it home: quick, quick; fear nothing; I'll be at thy elbow. It makes us, or it mars us: think on that, and fix most firm thy resolution.

Roderigo. I have at thy hand: be bold, and take thy stand.

Iago. I have no great devotion to the deed; and yet he hath given me satisfying reasons; 'tis but a man gone. Forth, my sword: he dies.

If I court thee women, you'll coach with me men.—

So, get thee gone: good-night. Mine eyes do itch; doth that bode weeping?

Emilia. Tis neither here nor there.

Des. I have heard it said so. O, these men, these men!

Dost thou in conscience think,—tell me, Emilia,—

That there be women do abuse their husbands in such gross kind?

Emilia. If there be some such, no question.

Des. Wouldst thou do such a deed for all the Emilia. Why, would not you? [world?] Des. No, by this heavenly light! Emilia. Nor I neither by this heavenly light:

I might do 't as well 't the dark.

[world?]

Des. Wouldst thou do such a deed for all the Emilia. The world's a huge thing: it is a great

For a small vice.[price]

Des. In troth, I think thou wouldst not.

Emilia. In troth, I think I should: and 'tis, when I had done. Marry, I would not do such a thing for a joint-ring, nor for measures of lawn, nor for gowns, petticoats, nor caps, nor any petty exhibition: but, for the whole world,—why, who would not make her husband a cuckold to make him a monarch? I should venture purgatory for 't.

Des. Beshrew me, if I would do such a wrong

For the whole world.

Emilia. Why, the wrong is but a wrong! the world; and having the world for your labour, 'tis a wrong in your own world, and you might quickly make it right.

Des. I do not think there is any such woman.

Emilia. Yes, a dozen; and as many to the vantage as would store the world they played for.

But I do think it is their husbands' faults

If wives do fall: say that they slack their duties, and pour our treasures into foreign laps, or else break out in peevish jealousies, throwing restraint upon us: or say they strike us, or scant our former having in despite:

Why, we have galls, and though we have some grace, yet have we some revenge. Let husbands know their wives have sense like them: they see and smell, and have their palates both for sweet and sour, as husbands have. What is it that they do, when they change us for others? Is it sport? I think it is: and doth affection breed it? I think it doth: is 't frailty that thus errs? It is so too: and have we not affections, desires for sport, and frailty, as men have? Then let them use us well: else let them know, the ills we do, their ills instruct us so. [send,

Des. Good night, good night: heaven me such uses Not to pick bad from bad, but by bad mend! [Exeunt.}
Enter Cassio.

Rod. I know his gait; 'tis he. — Villain, thou diest! [Makes a pass at Cassio.

Cas. That thrust had been mine enemy indeed, But that my coat is better than thou know'st: I will make proof of thine.

Oth. The voice of Cassio: Iago keeps his word. Rod. O, villain that I am! Oth. [Enter Lodovico and Gratiano. It is even so. Cas. O, help, ho! light! a surgeon! These may be counterfeits: let's think 'tis unsafe To come in to the cry without more help.

Enter Iago, with a light. Gra. Here's one comes in his shirt, with light and weapons.

Iago. Whose's there? whose noise is this that cries on murder?

Rod. We do not know.

Iago. Did not you hear a cry? Gra. Here, here! for heaven's sake, help me!

Iago. What's the matter? Gra. This is Othello's ancient, as I take it. Rod. The same indeed: a very valiant fellow. Iago. What are you here that cry so grievously? Cas. Iago? O, I am spoil'd, undone by villains! Give me some help. (To Cassio. Iago. O me, lieutenant! what villains have done Cas. I think that one of them is hereabout. And cannot make away.

Iago. O treacherous villains! What are you there? come in, and give some word. [To Lodovico and Gratiano.

Iago. Marry, heaven forbid! Light, gentlemen: I'll bind it with my shirt. [Exit.

Enter Bianca.

Bian. What is the matter, ho? who is 't that cried? Iago. Who is 't that cried! Bian. O my dear Cassio! my sweet Cassio! O Cassio, Cassio, Cassio! [pect Iago. O notable strumpet! Cassio, may you sus- Who they should be that have thus mangled you? Cas. No. [Seek you. Iago. I am sorry to find you thus; I have been to Iago. Lend me a garter. So. O, for a chair, To bear him easily hence!

Bian. Alas, he faints! O Cassio, Cassio, Cassio! Iago. Gentlemen all, I do suspect this trash To be a party in this injury.

[Asi.s and Roderigo are borne off. Iago. Cassio and Roderigo are borne off. Stay you, good gentlemen. Look you pale, mistress? Do you perceive the gavesty of her eye? Nay, if you scare, we shall hear more anon." Behold her well: I pray you, look upon her: Do you see, gentlemen? nay, guiltiness will speak, Though tongues were out of use.

Enter Emilia.

Emil. 'Las, what's the matter? what's the matter, husband? Iago. Cassio hath here been set on in the dark By Roderigo and fellows that are scaped: He's almost slain, and Roderigo dead.

Emil. Alas, poor Cassio! alas, good Cassio! Iago. This is the fruit of whooping. Prithhee, Emilia, Go know of Cassio where he supp'd to-night. [To Bianca.] What, do you shake at that? Bian. He supped at my house; but I therefore shake not.

Iago. O, did he so? I charge you, go with me. Emil. Fie, fie upon thee, strumpet! Bian. I am no strumpet; but of life as honest As you that thus abuse me.

Emil. As I! fie! fie upon thee! Iago. Kind gentlewomen, let's go see poor Cassio dressed.

Come, mistress, you must tell's another tale. Emilia, run you to the citadel, And tell my lord and lady what hath hap-p'd. Will you go on? I pray. [Aside] This is the night That either makes me or fordoes me quite. [Exit.]

SCENE II. — A bedchamber in the castle: Desdemona in bed asleep; a light burning.

Enter Othello.

Oth. It is the cause, it is the cause, my soul,— Let me not name it to you, you chaste stars! —
ACT V.

OTHELLO.

SCENE II.

It is the cause. Yet I'll not shed her blood; Nor scar that whiter skin of hers than snow, And smooth as monument alabaster. Yet she must die, else she'll betray more men. Put out thy light, and then put out the light: If I quench thee, thou flaming minister, I can again thy former light restore, Should I repent me: but once put out thy light, Thou cunningst pattern of excelling nature, I know not where is that Promethean heat [rose, That can thy light reframe. When I have pluck'd thee, I cannot give it vital growth again. It must needs wither: I'll smell it on the tree, [Kissing her.

Ah, baimy breath, that dost almost persuade Justice to break her sword! One more, one more. Be thus when thou art dead, and I will kill thee, And love thee after. One more, and this the last: So sweet was ne'er so fatal. I must weep, But they are cruel tears: this sorrow's heavenly; It strikes where it doth love. She wakes.

Des. Who's there? Othello?

Oth. Ay, Desdemona.

Des. Will you come to bed, my lord?

Oth. Have you pray'd to-night, Desdemona?

Des. Ay, my lord.

Oth. If you betheen yourself of any crime Unreconciled as yet to heaven and grace, Solicit for it straight.

Des. Alas, my lord, what do you mean by that? Oth. Well, do it, and be brief: I will walk by: I would not kill thy unprepareth spirit: No; heaven forlend! I would not kill thy soul.

Des. Talk you of killing?

Oth. Ay, I do. Then heaven

Have mercy on me!

Des. If you say so, I hope you will not kill me.

Oth. Hark!

Des. And yet I fear you; for you are fatal then Whenyour eyes roll so why I should fear I know not, Since guiltiness I know not; but yet I feel fear.

Oth. Think on thy sins.

Des. They are loves I bear to you.

Oth. Ay, and for that thou diest.

Des. That death's unnatural that kills for loving. Alas, why gawr you so your mother lip? Some bloody passion shakes thy very frame: These are portents: but yet I hope, They do not point on me.

Oth. Peace, and be still!

Des. I will so. What's the matter? [thee

Oth. That handkerchief which I so loved and gave Thou gavest to Cassio.

Des. No, by my life and soul!

Send for the man, and ask him.

Oth. Sweet soul, take heed, Take heed of perjury: thou art on thy death-bed. Des. Ay, but not yet to die. Yes, presently: Therefore confess thee freely of thy sin; For to deny each article with oath Cannot remove nor choke the strong conception That I do quarrel withal. Thou art to die. Des. Then Lord have mercy on me!

Oth. I say, amen.

Des. And have you mercy too? I never did Offend you in my life; never loved Cassio But with such general warranty of heaven As I might love: I never gave him token, O perjured woman! thou dost stone my heart, And makest me call what I intend to do A murder, which I thought a sacrifice: I saw the handkerchief.

Des. He found it then;

I never gave it him: send for him hither; Let him contest a truth. He hath confess'd.

Des. What, my lord?

Oth. That he hath used thee.

Oth. He will not say so.

Des. No, his mouth is stopp'd; Honest Iago hath ta'en order for 't.

Oth. O! my fear interprets: what, is he dead?

Des. He had all his hairs been lives, my great revenge Had stomach for them all.

Des. Alas! he is betray'd and I undone, [face? Oth. Out, strumpet! weep'st thou for him to my Des. O, banish me, my lord, but kill me not!

Oth. Down, strumpet!

Des. Kill me to-morrow; let me live to-night!

Oth. Nay, if you strive,—

Des. But half an hour! Being done, there is no pause.

Des. But while I say one prayer!

Oth. It is too late.

Emil. [Within] My lord, my lord! what, ho! my lord, my lord! [dead? Oth. What noise is this? Not dead? not yet quite I that am cruel am yet merciful; I would not have thee linger in thy pain:

So, so.

Emil. [Within] What, ho! my lord, my lord!

Oth. Who's there?

Emil. [Within] O, good my lord, I would speak a word with you!

Oth. Yes: it is Emilia. By and by. She's dead. 'T is like she comes to speak of Cassio's death. — The noise was here. Ha! no more moving? Still as the grave. Shall she come in? I would have

I think she stirs again: — no. What's best to do? If she come in, she'll sure speak to my wife: My wife! my wife! what wife? I have no wife. O, insupportable! O heavy hour! Methinks it should be now a huge eclipse Of sun and moon, and that the affrighted globe Should yarn at alteration.

Emil. [Within] I do beseech you That I may speak with you, O, good my lord.

Oth. I had forgot thee: O, come in, Emilia: soft; by and by. Let me the curtains draw.

Where art thou? [Unlocks the door.

Enter Emilia.

What's the matter with thee now?

Oth. It is the very error of the moon; She comes more nearer earth than she was wont, And makes men mad.

Emil. Cassio, my lord, hath kill'd a young Venetian Cal'd Rodrigo. Oth. Rodrigo kill'd!

And Cassio kill'd!

Emil. No, Cassio is not kill'd.

Oth. Not Cassio kill'd: then murder's out of tune, And sweet revenge grows harsh.

Des. O, falsely, falsely murder'd!

Oth. Nobody: I myself. Farewell! Command me to my kind lord: O, farewell! [Dies. Oth. Why, how should she be murder'd?
Emil. Alas, who knows?
Oth. You heard her say herself, it was not I.
Emil. She said so: I must needs report the truth.
Oth. She's, like a liar, gone to burning hell:
'Tis proper I obey him, but not now.
Perchance, Iago, I will not go home.
Oth. O! O! O! [He falls on the bed.]
Emil. Nay, lay thee down and roar;
For thou hast kill'd the sweetest innocent
That ever did lift up eye.
Oth. 'Rising. O, she was foul! I scarce did know you, uncle: there lies your niece, Whose breath, indeed, these hands have newly
I know this act shows horrible and grim. [stop'd;]
Gra. Poor Desdemona! I am glad thy father's deal;
Thy match was mortal to him, and pure grief
Shore his old thread in twain: did he live now,
This sight would make him do a desperate turn,
Yea, curse his better angel from his side,
And fall to reprobation.
Oth. 'Tis pitiful: but yet Iago knows
That she with Cassio hath the act of shame
A thousand times committed; Cassio confess'd it;
And she did gratify his amorous works
With that recognition and pledge of love
Which I first gave her: I saw it in his hand:
It was a handkerchief, an antique token
My father gave my mother.
Emil. O, heaven! O heavenly powers!
Iago. Come, hold your peace.
Emil. 'T will out, 't will out: I peace!
No, I will speak as liberal as the north:
Let heaven and men and devils, let them all,
All, all, cry shame against me, yet I'll speak.
Iago. Be wise, and get you home. I will not.
[He goes.
Gra. [Speaking.]
Iago offers to stab Emilia.
Fie!
A sword upon a woman? [ speech's at Emil. O thou dull Moor! that handkerchief thou
I found by fortune and did give my husband;
For often, with a solemn earnestness,
More than indeed belong'd to such a trifle,
He begg'd of me to steal it.
Iago. Villainous whore!
Emil. She give it Cassio! no, alas! I found it,
And I did give't my husband.
Iago. Fifth, thou liest!
Emil. By heaven, I do not, I do not, gentlemen.
O murderous coxcomb! what should such a fool
Do with so good a woman?
Oth. Are there no stones in heaven
But what serve for the thunder?—Precious villain!
[He runs at Iago: Iago, from behind, stabs
Emilia, and cries.
Gra. The woman falls; sure, he hath kill'd his wife.
Emil. Ay, ay: O, lay me by my mistress's side.
Gra. He's gone, but his wife's kill'd...[weapon,
Mont. 'T is the notorious villain. Take you this
Which I have here recover'd from the Moor:
Come, guard the door without: let him not pass,
But kill him rather. 'Til after that same villain,
For 'tis a dammed slave.
[Exeunt Montano and Gratiano.
Oth. I am not valiant neither,
But every puny whisper gets my sword:
But why should honour outlive honesty?
Let it go all.
Emil. What did thy song boole, lady?
Hark: canst thou hear me? I will play the swan,
And die in music. [Stinging] Willow, willow, willow...—
Moor, she was chaste: she loved thee, cruel Moor;
So come my soul to bliss, as I speak true;
So speaking as I think, I die, I die.
[Dies.
ACT V.

OTHELLO. SCENE II.

Oth. I have another weapon in this chamber;— It is a sword of Spain, the ice-brook's temper:— O, here it is. Uncle, I must come forth, [clear: Gera. [Within] If thou attempt it, it will cost thee This in thy hand weapon; and perish more suffer.

Oth. Look in upon me then and speak with me, Or, naked as I am, I will assault thee.

Re-enter Grisson.

Gris. What is the matter? Oth. Behold, I have a weapon; A letter never did itself sustain Upon a soldier's thigh: I have seen the day, That, with this little arm and this good sword, I have made my way through more impediments Than twenty times your stop: but, O vain boast! Who can control his fate? 'tis not so now. Be not afraid, though you do see me well'd; Here is my journey's end, here is my butt, And very sea-mark of my utmost sail. Do you go back dismay'd? 'tis a lost fear; Man but a rush against Othello's breast, And he retires. Where should Othello go? Now how's my thou look now? O till'starr'd wench! Pale as thy smoke! when we shall meet at comit, This look of thine will hurl my soul from heaven, And fiends will snatch at it. Cold, cold, my girl! Even like thy chastity. O cursed slave! Whipp me, ye devils! From the possession of this heavenly sight! Blow me about in winds! roast me in sulphur! Wash me in steep-down gulfs of liquid fire! O Desdemona! Desdemona! dead! Oh! Oh! Oh!

Enter Lodovico, Montano, Cassio carried in a chair, and Officers with Iago, prisoner.

Lod. Where is this rash and most unfortunate man?

Oth. That's he that was Othello: here I am.

Lod. Where is that viper? bring the villain forth. Oth. I look down towards his feet: but that's a If that thou be st a devil, I cannot kill thee, [Table: Wounds Iago.

Lod. Wrench his sword from him.

Iago. I bleed sir; but not kill'd.

Oth. I am not sorry neither: I'd have thee live; For in my sense, 'tis happiness to die.

Lod. O thou Othello, that wilt once so good, Fall'n in the practice of a damned slave, What shall be said to thee?

Oth. Why, any thing: An honourable murderer, if you will; For nought I did in hate, but all in honour. Lod. This wretch hath part confess'd his villainy: Did you and he consent in Cassio's death?

Oth. Ay.

Cas. Dear general, I never gave you cause.

Oth. I do believe it, and I ask you pardon. Will you, I pray, demand that demni-devil Why he hath thus ensnared my soul and body? Iago. Demand me nothing: what you know, you know:

From this time forth I never will speak word. Lod. What, not to pray?

Gri. To weapon Torments will ope your lips.

Oth. Well, thou dost best.

Lod. Sir, you shall understand what hath befall'n, Which, as I think, you know not. Here is a letter Found in the pocket of the slain Roderoato;

And here another; the one of them imports The death of Cassio to be undertook By Roderoato.

Oth. O villain! Otpertoao. Most heathenish and most gross! Lod. Now here's another discontented paper, Found in his pocket too; and this, it seems, Roderoato meant to have sent this damned villain; But that like Iago in the interim Came in and satisfied him.

Oth. O the pernicious calf! How came you, Cassio, by that handkerchief That was my wife's?

Cas. I found it in my chamber: And he himself confess'd but even now That there he dropp'd it for a special purpose Which was wont to his desire. Oth. O fool! fool! fool! Cas. There is besides in Roderoato's letter, How he upbraids Iago, that he made him Brave me upon the watch; whereas it came That I was cast: and even but now he spoke, After long seeming dead, Iago hurt him, Iago set him on.

Lod. You must forsake this room, and go with us: Your power and your command is taken off, And Cassio rules in Cyprus. For this slave, If there be any cunning cruelty That can torment him much and hold him long, It shall be his. You shall close prisoner rest, Till that the nature of your fault be known To the Venetian state. Come, bring him away.

Oth. Soft you; a word or two before you go. I have done the state some service, and they know't. No more of that. I pray you, in your letters, When you shall these unlucky deeds relate, Speak of me as I am; nothing extenuate, Nor set down aught in malice: then must you speak Of one that loved not wisely but too well; Of one not easily jealous, but being wrong'd Perplex'd in the extreme: of one whose hand Like the base Indian, threw a pearl away wiser, Richer than all his tribe; of one whose subded Albiet unused to the melting mood, Drop tears as fast as the Arabian trees Their medicinal gun. set down this; And say besides, that in Aleppo once, Where a malignant and a turban'd Turk Beat a Venetian and traduced the state, I took by the throat the circumcised dog, And smote him, thus: [Stabs himself.

Lod. O bloody period!

Cas. All that's spoke is marri'd.

Oth. I kiss'd thee ere I kill'd thee: no way but Killing myself, to die upon a kiss. [tis; [Falls on the bed, and dies.

Cas. This did I fear, but thought he had no For he was great of heart. [weapon; Lod. [To Iago] O Spartan dog; More fell than anguish, hunger; or the sea! Look on the tragic loading of this bed; This is thy work: the object poisons sight; Let it be hid. Gratiano, keep the house, And seize upon the fortunes of the Moor, For they succeed on you. To you, lord governor, Remains the censure of this hellish villain; The time, the place, the torture: O, enforce it! Myself will stand abroad; and to the state This heavy act with heavy heart relate. [Exeunt. 747

ACT I.

SCENE I.— Alexandria. A room in Cleopatra’s palace.

Enter Demetrius and Philio.

Philo. Now, but this dotage of our general’s Overflows the measure; those his goodly eyes,
That o’er the files and musters of the war
Have glow’d like plated Mars, now, head, now turn,
The office and devotion of their view.
Upon a tawny front; his captain’s heart,
Which in the scuffles of great tights hath burst
The buckles on his breast, reneges all temper,
And is become the bellows and the fan
To cool a gipsy’s lust.
Flourish. Enter Antony, Cleopatra, her Ladies, the Train, with Eunuchs forming file.

Look, where they come:
Take but good note, and you shall see in him
The triple pillar of the world transform’d
Into a strumpet’s fool; behold and see.

Cleo. If it be love indeed, tell me how much.

Ant. There’s beggary in the love that can be reckond.

Cleo. I’ll set a bourn how far to be beloved.

Ant. Then must thou needs find out new heaven,
new earth.

Enter an Attendant.

Att. News, my good lord, from Rome.

Ant. Grates me: the sum.

Cleo. Nay, hear them, Antony:
Fulvia perchance is angry; or, who knows
If the scarce-bearded Caesar have not sent
His powerful mandate to you, ‘Do this, or this;
Take in that kingdom, and enfranchise that;
Perform ’t, or else we damn thee.’
ACT I.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

SCENE I.

The qualities of people. Come, my queen; Last night you did desire it; speak now to us.

[Enter Antony and Cleopatra.]

Ant. Is there no one? But Antony prised so slight? Phœ. Sir, sometimes, when he is not Antony, He comes too short of that great property Which still should go with Antony.

Ant. I am full sorry That he approves the common liar, who Thus speaks of him at Rome: but I will hope Of better deeds to-morrow. Rest you happy! [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Another room.

Enter Charmian, Iras, Alexas, and a Soothsayer.

Char. Lord Alexas, Iras, Alexas, most anything Alexas, almost most absolute Alexas, where's the soothsayer that you praised so to the queen? O, that I knew this husband, which, you say, must charge his horns with garlands!

Alex. Soothsayer!

Alex. Show him your hand.

Enter Enoobarbus.

Eno. Bring in the banquet quickly; wine enough Cleopatra's health to drink.

Char. Good sir, give me good fortune.

Sooth. I make not, but foresee.

Char. Pray, then, foresee me one.

Sooth. You shall be yet far fairer than you are.

Char. He means in flesh.

Iras. No, you shall paint when you are old.

Char. Wrinkles forbid!

Alex. Vex not his presence; be attentive.

Char. Hush!

Sooth. You shall be more beloved than beloved.

Char. I had rather heat my liver with drinking.

Alex. Nay, hear him.

Char. Good now, some excellent fortune! Let me be married to three kings in a forenoon, and widow them all; let me have a child at fifty, to whom Herod of Jewry may do homage: find me to marry me with Octavius Caesar, and companion me with my mistress.

Sooth. You shall outlive the lady whom you serve.

Char. O excellent! I love long life better than fags [Things? fortune Sooth. You have seen and proved a fairer former Than that which is to approach.

Char. Then be like my children shall have no names; prithee, how many boys and wenches must I have?

Sooth. If every of your wishes had a womb, And fertile every wish, a million.

Char. Out, fool! I forgive thee for a witch.

Alex. You think none but your sheets are privy to your wishes.

Char. Nay, come, tell Iras hers.

Alex. We'll know all our fortunes.

Eno. Mine, and most of our fortunes, to-night, shall be—drunk to bed. [Exit.

Iras. There's a palm presages chastity, if nothing Char. Even as the o'erflowing Nile presages famine.

Iras. Go, you wild bedfellow, you cannot soothsay.

Char. Nay, if an oily palm be not a fruitful prog nostication, I cannot scratch mine car. Prithee, tell her but a worky-day fortune.

Sooth. Your fortunes are alike.

Iras. But how, but how? give me particulars.

Sooth. I have said.

Iras. Am I not an inch of fortune better than she? Char. Well, if you were but an inch of fortune better than I, where would you choose it?

Iras. Now on my husband's nose.

Char. Our worse thoughts heavens meed! Alexas,—come, his fortune, his fortune! O, let him marry a woman that cannot go, sweet Isis, I beseech thee! and let her die too, and give him a worse! and let worst follow worse, till the worst of all follow him laughing to his grave, fifty-fold a cuckold! Good Isis, hear me this prayer, though thou deny me a matter of more weight; good Isis, I beseech thee!

Iras. Amen. Dear goddess, hear that prayer of the people! for, as it is a heart-breaking to see a handsome man loose-witted, so it is a deadly sorrow to behold a fool knife uncuckolded; therefore, dear Isis, keep decorum, and fortune him accordingly!

Char. Amen.

Alex. Lo, now, if it lay in their hands to make me a cuckold, they would make themselves whores, but they 'ld do't!

Char. Not he; the queen.

Enter Cleopatra.

Cleo. Saw you my lord?

Eno. Cleopatra.

Char. Was he not here?

Cleo. No, madam.

Cleo. He was disposed to mirth; but on the sudden A Roman thought hath struck him. Enoobarbus!

Eno. Madam?

Cleo. Seek him, and bring him hither. Where's Alexas?

Alex. Here at your service. My lord approaches. Cleopatra. We will not look upon him: go with us.

[Exeunt.

Enter Antony with a Messenger and Attendants.

Mess. Fulvia thy wife first came into the field.

Ant. Against my brother Lucius?

Mess. Ay:

But soon that war had end, and the time's state Made friends of them, joining their force against Caesar; Whose better issue in the war, from Italy, Upon the first encounter, drove them.

Ant. Well, what worst?

Mess. The nature of bad news infects the teller.

Ant. When it concerns the foot or coward. On: Things that are past are done with me. 'Tis thus; Who tells me true, though in his tale he death, I hear him as he flatter'd.

Labienus—

This is stiff news—hath, with his Parthian force, Extended Asia from Ephræmus; His conquering banner shook from Syria To Lydia and to Ionia; Whilst—

Ant. Antony, thou wouldst say,—

Mess. O, my lord! Ant. Speak to me home, mince not the general tongue.

Name Cleopatra as she is call'd in Rome; Rail thon in Fulvia's phrase; and taunt my faults With such full license as both truth and malice Have power to utter. O, then we bring forth wars, When our quick minds lie still; and our ills told us Is as our earing. Fare thee well awhile.

Mess. At your noble pleasure. [Exit. Ant. From Sicyon, ho, the news! Speak there! First Att. The man from Sicyon,—is there such an Sec. Att. He stays upon your will. [one? Ant. Let him appear. These strong Egyptian fetters I must break, Or lose myself in dotage.
Enter another Messenger.

What are you?

Sec. Mess. Fulvia thy wife is dead.

Ant. Where died she?

Sec. Mess. In Sicily: Her length of serious, with what else more serious Importeth thee to know, this bears. [Gives a letter.]

Ant. Forbear me. [Exit Sec. Messenger.

There's a great spirit gone! Thus did I desire it: What our contempt doth often hurt from us, We wish it ours again; the present pleasure, By revolution lowering, does become The opposite of itself: she's good, being gone; The hand could pluck her hair that shoved her on. I must from this enchanting queen break off: Ten thousand harms, more than the Ibs I know, My idleness doth hatch. How now! Enobarbus!

Re-enter Enobarbus.

Eno. What's your pleasure, sir?

Ant. I must with haste from hence.

Eno. Why, then, we kill all our women: we see how mortal an unkindness is to them; if they suffer our departure, death's the word.

Ant. I must be gone. Eno. Under this public occasion, let women die: it were pity to cast them away for nothing: though, between them and a great cause, they should be esteemed nothing. Cleopatra, catching but the least noise of this, dies instantly; I have seen her die twenty times upon far poorer moment: I do think there is mettle in death, which commits some loving act upon her, she hath such a celerity in dying. Ant. She is cunning past man's thought.

Eno. Alack, sir, no; her passions are made of nothing but the finest part of pure love: we cannot call her winds and waters sighs and tears; they are greater storms and tempests than almanacs can report; this cannot be cunning in her; if it be, she makes a shower of rain as well as Jove.

Ant. Would I had never seen her!

Eno. O, sir, you had then left unseen a wonderful piece of work; which not to have been blest withal would have discredited your travel.

Ant. Fulvia is dead.

Eno. Sir?

Ant. Fulvia is dead.

Eno. Fulvia! Ant. Dead.

Eno. Why, sir, give the gods a thankful sacrifice. Where it belielseth their deities to take the wife of a man from him, it shows to man the tailors of the earth; comforting therein, that when old robes are worn out, there are members to make new. If there were no more women but Fulvia, then had you indeed a cut, and the case to be lamented: this grief is crowned with consolation; your old smock brings forth a new petticcoat: and indeed the tears live in an onion that should water this sorrow.

Ant. The business she hath broached in the state Cannot endure my absence.

Eno. And the business you have broached here cannot be without you; especially that of Cleopatra's, which wholly depends on your abode.

Ant. No more light answers. Let our officers Have notice what we purpose. I shall break The cause of our experience to the queen, And get her leave to part. For not alone The name of Fulvia with more urgent touches, Do strongly speak to us; but the letters too Of many our contriving friends in Rome Petition us as at home: Sextus Pompeius Hath given the dare to Caesar, and commands The empire of the sea; our slippery people, Whose love is never link'd to the deserter

Till his deserts are past, begin to throw Pompey the Great and all his dignities Upon his son; who, high in name and power, Higher than both in blood and life, stands up For the main soldier: whose quality, going on, The sides of the world may danger: much is breeding, Which, like the courser's hair, hath yet but life, And not a serpent's poison. Say, our pleasure, To such whose place is under us, requires Our quick remove from hence.

Eno. I shall do't.

SCENE III.—The same. Another room.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iris, and Alexas.

Cleo. Where is he?

Char. I did not see him since.

Cleo. See where he is, who's with him, what he did not send you: if you find him sad, [does Say I am dancing: if in mirth, report That I am sudden sick: quick, and return.]

Exeunt. [Exit Alexas.

Char. Madam, methinks, if you did love him You do not hold the method to enforce [clearly, The like from him.

Cleo. What should I do, I do not? Char. In each thing give him way, cross him in nothing.

Cleo. Thou teachest me to look: the way to lose him, Char. Tempt him not so far too; I wish, forbear: In time we hate that which we often fear. But here comes Antony.

Enter Antony.

Cleo. I am sick and sullen.

Ant. I am sorry to give breathing to my purpose.—

Cleo. Help me away, dear Charmian; I shall fail: It cannot be thus long, the sides of nature Will not sustain it.

Ant. Now, my dearest queen,—

Cleo. Pray you, stand farther from me,

Ant. What's the matter?

Cleo. I know, by that same eye, there's some good news.

What says the married woman? You may go: Would she had never given you leave to come! Let her be gone. But I do see is I that keep you here: I have no power upon you; hers you are.

Ant. The gods best know,—

Cleo. O, never was there queen So mightily betray'd yet! at the first I saw the treasons planted.

Ant. Cleopatra,— [true

Cleo. Why should I think you can be mine and Though you in swearing shake the throne of gods, Who have been false to Fulvia? Rictous madness, To be entangled with those mouth-made vows, Which break themselves in swearing!

Ant. Most sweet queen,—

Cleo. Nay, pray you, seek no colour for your going, But bid farewell, and go: when you sued staying, Then was the time for words: no going then; Eternity was in our lips and eyes, Bliss in our brows' bent; none our parts so poor, But was a race of heaven: they are so still, Or thou, the greatest soldier of the world, Art turn'd the greatest liar.

Ant. How now, lady!

Cleo. I would I had thy inches; thou should'st know There were a heart in Egypt.

Ant. Hear me, queen: The strong necessity of time commands Our services awhile: but my full heart Remains in use with you. Our Italy Shines o'er with civil swords: Sextus Pompeius Makes his approaches to the port of Rome: Equality of two domestic powers
This is the news: he fishes, drinks, and wastes
The haughty in revel; is not more manlike
Than Cleopatra; nor the queen of Ptolemy
More womanly than he; hardly gave audience, or Vouchsafed to think he had partners: you shall
A man who is the abstract of all faults [find there
That all men follow.

Lep. I must not think there
Evils enow to darken all his goodness:
His faults in him seen as the spots of heaven,
More fiery by night's blackness; hereditary,
Rather than purchased; what he cannot change,
Than what he chooses.

Cas. You are too diligent:
Let us grant, it is
Access to the bed of Ptolemy;
Not to give a kingdom for a mirth: to sit
And keep the turn of tipping with a slave;
To reel the streets at noon, and stand the buffet
With knaves that smell of sweat: say this becomes
As his composure must be rare indeed [him:—
When these things cannot blench, —yet must
No way excuse his sois, when we do hear] Antony
So great weight in his lightness. If he fill'd
His vacancy with his voluptuousness,
Full surfeits, and the dryness of his bones,
Call on him for 't: but to confound such time,
That first stirs him with sport, and speaks it loud
As his own state and ours,—'tis to be chid
As we rate boys, who, being native in knowledge,
Pawn their experience to their present pleasure,
And so rebel to judgment.

Enter a Messenger.

Lep. Here's more news.

Miss. Thy biddings have been done; and every
Most noble Caesar, shalt thou have report [hour,
How's that abroad. Pompey is strong at sea;
And it appears he is beloved of those
That only have feared Caesar: to the ports
The discontent's repair, and men's reports
Give him much wrong'd.

Cas. I should have known no less.
It hath been taught us from the primul state,
That he which is was wish'd until he were: [love,
And the cobb'd man, ne'er loved till we'v'r
Come's deird by being lack'd. This common body,
Like to a vagabond flag upon the stream.
Goes to and back, haekeying the varying tide,
To rot itself with motion.

Miss. Caesar, I bring thee word,
Mecranites and Menas, famous pirates, [wound
Make the sea serve them, to which they ear
And with keels of every kind: many hot inroads
They make in Italy; the borders maritime
Lack blood to think on't, and flush youth revolt;
No vessel can peep forth, but 'tis as soon
Taken as seen: for Pompey's name strikes more
Th' who could his war resisted.

Antony.

Leave thy lascivious wassails. When thou once
Wast beaten from Modena, where thou slew'st
Hirtius and Pansa. consuls, at thy heel
Did famine follow: whom thou fought'st against,
Though dauntly brought up, with patience more
Than savages could suffer: thou didst drink
The stale of horses, and the gilded puddle
Which beasts would cough at: thy palate then did
The roughest berry on the rudest hedge; [deign
Thou, like the stag, when snow the pasture sheets,
The barks of trees thou brows'dst: on the Alps
It is reported thou didst eat strange flesh.
Which some did die to look on: and all this—
It wound's thine honour that I speak it now—
Was borne so like a soldier, that thy cheek
So much as lank'd not.

Lep. 'Tis pity of him.

Cas. Let his shames quickly

751
Drive him to Rome: 'tis time we twain
Did show ourselves 't he field; and to that end
Assemble we immediate council: Pompey
Thrive in our leniency.

To-morrow, Caesar,
I shall be furnish'd to inform you rightly
Both what by sea and land I can be able
To front this present time.

Cle. Tell which encounter,
It fall my business too. Farewell.

Cleo. Farewell, my lord: what you shall know
Of stirs abroad, I shall beseech you, sir, [mean time
To let me be partaker.

Cas. Doubt not, sir; [Exeunt.

I knew it for my bond.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iris, and Mardian.

Cleo. Charmian!
Char. Madam?
Cleo. Ha, ha!

Give me to drink mandragora.

Char. Why, madam?
Cleo. That I might sleep out this great gap of My Antony is away.

Char. Madam, I trust, not so.
Cleo. Thou, eunuch Mardian!

Mar. What's your highness' pleasure?
Cleo. Not now to hear thee sing; I take no pleasure
In aught an eunuch has; 'tis well for thee, [are
That, being unseemly'd, thy frerer thoughts
May not fly forth of Egypt. Hast thou affections?

Mar. Yes, gracious madam.
Cleo. Indeed!

Mar. Not in deed, madam: for I can do nothing
But what indeed is honest to be done:
Yet have I fierce affections, and think
What Venus did with Mars.

Cleo. O Charmian,
Where think'st thou he is now? Stands he, or sits
Or does he walk? or is he on his horse? [he?
O happy horse, to bear the weight of Antony!
Do bravely, horse! for wert 'st thou whom thou
The demi-Atlas of this earth, the arm
[movest?
And burgomest of men. He's speaking now.
Or murmuring 'Where's my serpent of old Nile?'
For so he calls me: now I feed myself
With most delicious poison. Think on me,
That am with Phoebus' numerous phænix black,
And wrinkled deep in time? Broad-fronted Caesar,
When thou wast here above the ground, I was
A morsel for a monarch: and great Pompey
Would stand and make his eyes grow in my brow;

There would he anchor his aspect and die
With looking on his life.

Enter Alexas, from Cesar.

Alex. Sovereign of Egypt, hail!
Cleo. How much unlike art thou Mark Antony?
Yet, coming from him, that great medicine hath
With his faint gilded thee.

How goes it with my bray? Mark Antony?

Alex. Last thing he did, dear queen.

Cleo. He kiss'd,—the last of many doubled kisses,—
This orient pearl. His speech sticks in my heart.

Cleo. Mine ear must pluck it hence.
Alex. 'Good friend,' quoth he,
'Say, the firm Roman to great Egypt sends
This treasure of an officer: at whose foot,
To mend the petty present, I will piece
Her opulent throne with kingdoms; all the east,
Say thou, shall call her mistress.' So he nodded,
And soberly did mount an arm-gaunt steed,
Who neigh'd so high, that what I would have spoke
Was beastly dumb'd by him.

Cleo. What, was he sad or merry?
Alex. Like to the time o' the year between the ex-
Of hot and cold, he was nor sad nor merry. [tremes
Cleo. O well-divided disposition! Note him,
Note him; good Charmian, 'tis the man; but note him
Was not sad, for he would shine on those
That make their looks by his; he was not merry,
Which seem'd to tell them his remembrance lay
In Egypt with his joy: but between both:
O heavenly mingle! Be'st thou sad or merry,
The violence of either thee becomes,
So does it no man else. Meth'st thou my posts?

Alex. Ay, madam, twenty several messengers:
Why do you send so thick?

Cleo. Who's that born day
When I forget to send to Antony,
Shall die a beggar. Ink and paper, Charmian.
Welcome, my good Alexas. Did I, Charmian,
Ever love Caesar so?

Char. O that brave Caesar!
Cleo. Be chocked with such another emphasis!
Say, the brave Antony.

Char. The valiant Caesar!
Cleo. By Isis, I will give thee bloody teeth,
If thou with Caesar paragon again
My man of men.

Char. By your most gracious pardon,
I sing but after you.

Cleo. My sald days,
When I was green in judgment: cold in blood,
To say as I said then! But, come away;
Get me ink and paper:
He shall have every day a several greeting,
Or I' ll unpeople Egypt.

[Exeunt.]
Salt Cleopatra, soften thy wan'd lip!
Let witchcraft join with beauty, lust with both!
Tie up the libertine in a field of feasts,
Keep his brain funning; Epicurean cooks
Sharpen with careless savor his appetite;
That sleep and feeding may prologue his honour
Even till a Lethe'd dulness!

Enter Varrius.

How now, Varrius? This is most certain that I shall deliver:
Mark Antony is every hour in Rome
Expected: since he went from Egypt 'tis
A sign to further travel.

Pom. I could have given less matter
A better ear. Menas, I did not think
This amorous surfeiter would have don'd his helm
For such a petty war; his soldiership
Is twice the other twins: but let us rear
The higher our opinion, that our stirring
Can from the lap of Egypt's widow pluck
The ne'er-just-warded Antony.

Men. I cannot hope
Cesar and Antony shall well greet together:
His wife that's dead did trespass to Cesar;
His brother warr'd upon him; although, I think,
Not moved by Antony.

Pom. I know not, Menas,
How lesser enmities may give way to greater.
Were 't not that we stand up against them all,
'T were pregnant they should square between themselves:
For they have entertained cause enough
To draw their swords: but how the fear of us
May cement their divisions and bind up
The petty difference, we yet not know.
Be 't as our gods will have it! It only stands
Our lives upon to use our strongest hands.

Come, Menas. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Rome. The house of Lepidus.

Enter Enobarbus and Lepidus.

Lep. Good Enobarbus, 'tis a worthy deed,
And shall become you well, to entreat your captain
To soft and gentle speech.

Eno. I shall entreat him
To answer like himself: if Cesar move him,
Let Antony look over Cesar's head
And speak as loud as Mars. By Jupiter,
Were I the wearer of Enobarbus' beard,
I would not shave 't to-day.

Lep. 'Tis not a time
For private stomaching.

Eno. Every time
Serves for the matter that is then born in 't.

Lep. But small to greater matters must give way.

Eno. Not if the small come first.

Lep. Your speech is passion:
But, pray you, stir no embers up. Here comes
The noble Antony.

Enter Antony and Ventidius. Eno. And yonder, Cesar.

Enter Caesar, Mecenas, and Agrippa.

Ant. If we compose well here, to Parthia:
Hark, Ventidius. Cesar. I do not know,
Mecenas; ask Agrippa.

Lep. Noble friends,
That which combined us was most great; and let not
A leaner action rend us. What's amiss,
May it be gently heard: when we debate
Our trivial difference loud, we do commit
Murder in healing wounds: then, noble partners,
The rather, for I earnestly beseech,

Touch you the sourest points with sweetest terms,
Nor curstness grow to the matter.

Ant. 'T is spoken well.
Were we before our armies, and to fight,
I should do thus. [Flourish. Cesar. Welcome to Rome.

Ant. Thank you.

Ant. I learn, you take things ill which are not so,
Or being, concern you not.

Cesar. I must be laugh'd at,
If, or for nothing or a little, I
Should say myself offended, and with you
Chiefly in the world; more laugh'd at, that I should Once name you derogately, when to sound your name
It not concern'd me.

Ant. My being in Egypt, Caesar,
What was 't to you?

Cesar. No more than my residing here at Rome
Might be to you in Egypt: yet, if you there
Did practise on my state, your being in Egypt
Might be my question.

Ant. How intend you, practised?

Cesar. You may be poss'd to catch at mine intent
By what did here befal me. Your wife and brother
Made wars upon me; and their contestation
Was theme for you, you were the word of war.

Ant. You do mistake your business; my brother
Did urge me in his act: I did inquire it; [never
And have my learning from some true reports,
That drew their swords with you. Did he not rather Discredit my authority with yours:
And make the wars alike against my stomach,
Having alike your cause? Of this my letters
Before did satisfy you. If you'll patch a quarrel,
As matter whole you have not to make it with,
It must not be with this.

Cesar. You praise yourself
By laying defects of judgment to me; but
You patch'd up your excuses.

Ant. Not so, not so;
I know you could not lack, I am certain on 't,
Very necessity of this thought, that I,
Your partner in the cause 'gainst which he fought,
Could not with graceful eyes attend those wars
Which fronted mine own peace. As for my wife,
I would you had her spirit in such another;
The third of the world is yours; which with a snaffle
You may pace easy, but not such a wife.

Eno. Would we had all such wives, that the men
Might go to wars with the women!

Ant. So much uncurbable, let garboils, Caesar,
Made out of her impatience, which not wanted
Shrewdness of policy too, I grieved grant
Did you too much disquiet; for that you must
But say, I could not help it.

Cesar. I wrote to you
When rioting in Alexandria; you
Did pocket up my letters, and with taunts
Did gibe my missive out of audience.

Ant. Sir,
He fell upon me ere admitted: then
Three kings I had newly feasted, and did want
Of what I was i' the morning: but next day
I told him of myself; which was as much
As to have ask'd him pardon. Let this fellow
Be nothing of our strife; if we contend,
Out of our question wipe him.

Cesar. You have broken
The article of your oath; which you shall never Have tongue to charge me with.

Ant. Soft, Caesar! No,

Lepidus, let him speak:
The honour is sacred which he talks on now,
Supposing that I lack'd it. But, on, Caesar; The article of my oath.

Ces. To lend me arms and aid when I required.

The which you both denied.

Ant. Neglected, rather.

And then when poison'd hours had bound me up From mine own knowledge. As nearly as I may, I'll play the penitent to you; but mine honesty Shall not make poor my greatness, nor my power Work without it. Truth is, that Fulvia, To have me out of Egypt, made wars here; For which myself, the ignorant motive, do So far ask pardon as belits mine honour

To stoop in such a case.

Lep. 'Tis noble spoken.

Mec. If it might please you, to enforce no further The griefs between ye: to forget them quite Were to remember that the present need Speaks to atone you.

Lep. Worthily spoken, Mecenas.

Eao. Or, if you borrow one another's love for the instant, you may, when you hear no more words of Pompey, return it again: you shall have time to wrangle in which you have nothing else to do.

Ant. Thou art a soldier only: speak no more.

Eao. That truth should be silent I had almost forgot.

No more.

Ant. You wrong this presence; therefore speak Eao. Go to, then: your considerate stone.

Ces. I do not much dislike the matter, but The manner of his speech; for 't cannot be We shall remain in friendship, our conditions So differing in their acts. Yet, if I know What hope should hold us stanch, from edge to O' the world I would pursue it.

Mec. Speak, Agrippa.

Agr. Thou hast a sister by the mother's side, Admired Octavia: great Mark Antony Is now a wadier.

Ces. Say not so, Agrippa:

If Cleopatra heard you, your reproof Were well deserved of rushness.

Ant. I am not married, Caesar: let me hear Agrippa further speak.

Agr. To hold you in perpetual amity, To make you brothers, and to knit your hearts With an unslipping knot, take Antony Octavia to his wife: whose beauty claims No worse a husband than the best of men; Whose virtue and whose general graces speak That which none else can utter. By this marriage, All little jealousies, which now seem great, And all great fears, which how import their dangers, Would then be nothing: truths would be tales. Where now half tales be truths: her love to both Would, each to other and all loves to both, Draw after her. Pardon what I have spoke; For 'tis a studied, not a present thought, By duty ruminated.

Ant. Will Caesar speak?

Ces. Not till he hears how Antony is touch'd With what is spoke already.

Ant. What power is in Agrippa,

If I would say, 'Agrippa, be it so,' To make this good?

Ces. The power of Caesar, and His power unto Octavia.

Ant. May I never

To this good purpose, that so fairly shows, Dream of impediment! Let me have thy hand: Further this act of grace: and from this hour The heart of brothers govern in our loves And sway our great designs!

Ces. There is my hand.

A sister I bequeath you, whom no brother Did ever love so dearly: let her live

To join our kingdoms and our hearts; and never Fly off our loves again!

Lep. Happily, amen!

Ant. did not think to draw my sword 'gainst Pompey.

For he hath laid strange courtesies and great Of late upon me: I must thank him only, Lest my remembrance suffer ill report; At heel of that, defy him.

Lep. Time calls upon's:

Of us must Pompey presently be sought, Or else he seeks out us.

Ant. Where lies he?

Ces. About the mount Missenum.

Ant. What is his strength by land?

Ces. Great and increasing: but by sea

He is an absolute master.

So is the fame.

Would we had spoke together! Hasten we for it:

Yet, ere we put ourselves in arms, dispatch we The business we have talk'd of.

Ces. With most gladness;

And do invite you to my sister's view, Where she doth straight I'll lead you.

Ant. Let us, Lepidus,

Not lack your company.

Lep. Noble Antony,

Nobt sickness should detain me.

[Flourish. Exeunt Cesart Antoagy, and

Mec. Welcome from Egypt, sir.

Eao. Half the heart of Caesar, worthy Mecenas! My honourable friend, Agrippa!

Agr. Good Enobarbus!

Mec. We have cause to be glad that matters are so well digested. You stayed well by't in Egypt.

Eao. Ay, sir; we did sleep day out of countenance, and made the night light with drinking.

Mec. Eight wild-bears roasted whole at a breakfast, and but twelve persons there; is this true?

Eao. This was but as a fly by an eagle: we had many more monstrous matter of feast, which worthyly deserved noting.

Mec. She's a most triumphant lady, if report be square to her.

Eao. When she first met Mark Antony, she pursed up his heart, upon the river of Cydnus.

Agr. There she appeared indeed; or my reporter devises well for her.

Eao. I will tell you.

The large she sat in, like a burnish'd throne,

Burn'd on the water: the poop was beaten gold;

Purple the sails, and so perfumed that [silver, The winds were love-sick with them: the oars were Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke, and made The water which they beat to follow faster.

As amorous of their strokes. For her own person, It beggar'd all description: she did lie In her pavilion — cloth-of-gold of tissue— O'er-picturing that Venus where we saw The fairest workman make: on each side her Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids, With divers-colour'd fans, whose wind did seem To blow the delicate cheeks which they did cool, And what they undertook.

Agr. Eao. Her gentlewomen, like the Nereides, So many mermaids, tended her i' the eyes, And made their beds adornings: at the helm A seeming mermaid steers: the silken tackle Swell with the touches of those flower-soft hands, That barely frame the ollce. From the large A strong invisible flame lights the sense Of the adjacent whirls. The city cast Her people out upon her; and Antony, Enthroned i' the market-place, did sit alone, Whistling to the air; which, but for vacancy,
ACT II.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

SCENE V.

Had gone to gaze on Cleopatra too
And made a gap in nature.

Agr. Rare Egyptian!
Enol. Upon her landing, Antony sent to her,
Invited her to supper: she refused.
It should be better he became her guest;
Which she entreated: our courteous Antony,
Whom n'er the word of "No" woman heard speak,
Being hark'd to ten times over, goes to the feast,
And for his ordinary pays his heart
For what his eyes eat only.

Agr. Royal wench!
She made great Caesar lay his sword to bed:
He plough'd her, and she crop'd.

Enol. I saw her once
Hop forty paces through the public street;
And having lost her breath, she spoke, and pant'd,
That she did make defect perfection,
And, breathless, power breathe forth.

Mec. Now Antony must leave her utterly.

Enol. Never: he will not:
Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale
Her infinite variety; other women cloy
The appetites they feed: but she makes hungry
Where most she satisfies: for viest things
Become themselves in her; that the holy priests
Bless her when she is riggish.

Mec. If beauty, wisdom, modesty, can settle
The heart of Antony, Octavia is
A blessed lottery to him.

Agr. Let us go.
Good Enobarbus, make yourself my guest
Whilst you abide here.

Enol. Humbly, sir, I thank you. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same. Caesar's house.

Enter Antony, Caesar, Octavia between them,
And Attendants.

Ant. The world and my great office will some-
Divide me from your bosom. [times
Octa. All which time
Before the gods my knee shall bow my prayers
To them for you.

Ant. Good night, sir. My Octavia,
Read not my memsies in the world's report:
I have not kept my square; but that to come
Shall all be done by the rule. Good night, dear lady.
Good night, sir.

Octa. Good night. [Exeunt Caesar and Octavia.

Enter Soothsayer.

Ant. Now, sirrah: you do wish yourself in Egypt?
Sooth. Would I had never come from thence, nor Thither! [you
Ant. If you can, your reason?
Sooth. I see it in
My motion, have it not in my tongue: but yet
Hie you to Egypt again.

Ant. Say to me,
Whose fortunes shall rise higher, Caesar's or mine?

Sooth. Caesar's.

Ant. Therefore, O Antony, stay not by his side:
Thy demon, that's thy spirit which keeps thee, is Noble, courageous, high, unmatchable,
Where Caesar's is not; but, near him, thy angel Becomes a fear, as being o'erpower'd: therefore
Make space enough between you.

Ant. Speak this no more.

Sooth. To none but thee; no more, but when to
If thou dost play with him at any game, [thee.
Thou art sure to lose; and, of that natural lack,
He beats thee 'gainst the odds; thy lustre thickens,
When he shines by: I say again, thy spirit
Is all afraid to govern thee near him;
But, be away, 'tis noble.

Ant. Get thee gone:
Say to Ventidius I would speak with him:

[Exit Soothsayer.

He shall to Partulia. Be it art or hap,
He hath spoken true: the very dice obey him;
And in our sports my better cunning fainst
Under his chance: if we draw lots, he speeds;
His cocks do win the battle still of mine,
When it is all to nought: and his quails ever
Beat mine, inhoop'd, at odds. I will to Egypt;
And though I make this marriage for my peace,
I' the cast my pleasure lies.

Enter Ventidius.

O, come, Ventidius,
You must to Partulia: your commission's ready;
Follow me, and receive it. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The same. A street.

Enter Lepidus, Mecenas, and Agrippa.

Lep. Trouble yourselves no further: pray you,
Your generals after. [Exeunt

Ant. Sir, Mark Antony
Will e'en but kiss Octavia, and we'll follow.
Lep. Till I shall see you in your soldier's dress,
Which will become you both, farewell.
Mec. As I conceive the journey, be at the Mount
Before you, Lepidus.
Lep. Your way is shorter;
My purposes do draw me much about:
You'll win two days upon me.
Mec. [Exit.

Ant. Sir, good success!

Lep. Farewell. [Exeunt.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Ira, and Alexas.

Cleo. Give me some music; music, and food
Of us that trade in love.

Attend. The music, lo!

Enter Mardian, the Eunuch.

Cleo. Let it alone; let's to billiards: come,
Charmian.

Charm. My arm is sore: best play with Mardian.

Cleo. As well a woman with an eunuch play'd
As with a woman. Come, you'll play with me, sir?

Mard. As well as I can, madam.

Cleo. And when good will is show'd, though 't
Come too short,
The actor may plead pardon. I'll none now:
Give me mine angle; we'll to the river: there,
My music playing far off. I will betray
Tawny-finn'd bushes; my bended hook shall pierce
Their sliny jaws; and, as I draw them up,
I'll think them every one an Antony,
And say 'Ah, ha! you're caught!'

Charm. 'Twas merry when
You wager'd on your angling: when your diver
Did hang a salt-fish on his hook, which he
With hervency drew up.

Cleo. That time.—O times! —
I laugh'd him out of patience: and that night
I laugh'd him into patience: and next morn,
Ere the ninth hour, I drank him to his bed;
Then put my tires and mantles on him, whilst
I wore his sword Philippan.

Enter a Messenger.

O, from Italy!
Ram thou thy fruitful tidings in mine ears!
That long time have been barren.

Mrs. Madam, madam,—
Cleo. Antonius dead! — If thou say so, villain,
Thou kill'st thy mistress: but well and free,
ACT II.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

SCENE VI.

If thou so yield him, there is gold, and here
My honest veins to kiss; a hand that kings
Have lipp’d and trembled kissing.
Mess. First, madam, he is well.
Cleo. Why, there’s more gold.

But, sirrah, mark, we use
To say the dead are well: bring it to that,
The good and give thee will I melt and pour
Down thy ill–uttering throat.
Mess. Good madam, hear me.
Cleo. Well go to, I will;
But there’s no goodness in thy face: if Antony
Be free and healthful,—so far a favour
To transport such good tidings! If not well,
Thou shouldst come as a Fury crown’d with
Not like a formal man. [snakes.
Mess. Will ‘t please you hear me?
Cleo. I have a mind to strike thee ere thou speakest.
Yet, if thou say Antony lives, is well,
Or friends with Caesar, or not captive to him,
I’ll set thee in a shower of gold, and hail
Rich pearls upon thee.
Mess. Madam, he’s well.
Cleo. Well said.
Mess. And friends with Caesar.
Cleo. The more an honest man.
Mess. Caesar and he are greater friends than ever.
Cleo. Make thee a fortune from me.
Mess. But yet, madam,—
Cleo. I do not like ‘But yet,’ it doth alloy
The good precedence: lie upon ‘But yet!’
‘But yet’ is as a gaoler to bring forth
Some monstrous malefactor. Priflee, friend,
Pour out the pack of matter to mine ear. [Cesar;
The good and bad together: he’s friends with
In state of health thou sayst; and thou sayst free.
Mess. Free, madam! no; I made no such report:
He’s bound unto Octavia.
Cleo. For what good turn?
Mess. For the best turn in the bed.
Cleo. I am pale, Charmian.
Mess. Madam, he’s married to Octavia.
Cleo. The most infectious pestilence upon thee!
[Strikes him down.
Mess. Good madam, patience.
Cleo. What say you? Hence, [Strikes him again.
Horrible villain! or I’ll spur my thine eyes
Like–balls before me: I’ll unhair thy head:
[She hates him up and down.
Thou shalt be whipp’d with wine, and slow’d in brine,
Smarting in lingering pike.
Mess. Gracious madam,
I that do bring the news made not the match.
Cleo. Say ’tis not so, a province I will give thee,
And make thy fortunes proud: the blow thou hast
Shall make thy peace for moving me to rage;
And I will hoist thee with what gift beside Thy modesty can beg.
Mess. He’s married, madam.
Cleo. Rogue, thou hast lived too long.
Mess. Nay, then I’ll run.
What mean you, madam? I have made no fault.
[Exit.

Cleo. Good madam, keep yourself within your
The man is innocent.
Mess. Some innocents escape not the thunderbolt.
Melt Egypt into Nile! and kindly creatures
Turn all to serpents! Call the slave again:
Though I am mad, I will not bite him: call.
Char. He is afeard to come.
Cleo. I will not hurt him.

[Exit Charmian.

These hands do lack nobility, that they strike
A meaner than myself; since I myself
Have given myself the cause.
To scourge the ingratitude that despiteful Rome
Cast on my noble father.

Ces. Take your time.

Ant. Thou canst not fear us, Pompey, with thy sails;
We'll speak with thee at sea: at land, thou know'st
How much we do o'er-count thee.

Ant. At land, indeed, but since then.

Ces. Thou dost o'er-count me of my father's house:
But, since the cuckoo builds not for himself,
Remain in't as thou mayst.

Lep. Be pleased to tell us—
For this is from the present—how you take
The offers we have sent you.

Ces. There's the point.

Ant. Which do not be entreated to, but weigh
What it is worth embraced.

Ces. And what may follow,

Pom. You have made me offer
Of Sicily, Sardinia; and I must Rid all the sea of pirates; then, to send Measures of wheat to Rome: this 'greeed upon,
To part with un hath'd edges, and bear back
Our tattered unites.

Pom. I know, then,
I came before you here a man prepared
To take this offer: but Mark Antony
Put me to some impatience: though I lose
The praise of it by telling, you must know,
When Caesar and your brother were at blows,
Your mother came to Sicily and did find
Her welcome friendly.

Ant. I have heard it, Pompey;
And am well studied for a liberal thanks
Which I do owe you.

Pom. Let me have your hand:
I did not think, sir, to have met you here. [you
Ant. The beds! if the cast are soft; and thanks to
That call'd me timeelier than my purpose hitter;
For I have gain'd by't.

Ces. Since I saw you last,
There is a change upon you.

Pom. Well, I know not
What counts harsh fortune casts upon my face;
But in my bosom she never come,
To make my heart her vassal.

Lep. Well met here.

Pom. I hope so, Lepidus. Thus we are agreed:
I crave your composition may be written,
And seal'd between us.

Ces. That's the next to do.

Pom. We'll feast each other ere we part; and Draw lots who shall begin. [let's

Ant. That will I, Pompey.

Pom. No, Antony, take the lot: but, first
Or last, your fine Egyptian cookery
Shall have the fame. I have heard that Julius Grew fat with feasting there. [Cesar

Ant. You have heard much.

Pom. I have fair meanings, sir.

Ant. And fair words to them,

Pom. Then so much have I heard:
And I have heard, Apollodorus carried—

Eno. No more of that: he did so.

Pom. What, I pray you?

Eno. A certain queen to Caesar in a mattress.

Pom. I know thee now: how farest thou, soldier?

Eno. Well; and we'll amuse to do; for, I perceive,
Four feasts are toward.

Pom. Let me shake thy hand;
I never hated thee: I have seen thee fight,
When I have envied thy behaviour.

Eno. Sir, I never loved you much; but I lau' praised ye,
When you have well deserved ten times as much
As I have said you did.

Pom. Enjoy thy plainness,
It nothing ill becomes thee.
Aboard my galley I invite you all:
Will you lead, lords?

Ces. Ant. Lep. Show us the way, sir.

Pom. [Aside] Thy father, Pompey, would never have made this treaty.—You and I have known.

Eno. At sea, I think.

[sc. Men. We have, sir.

Eno. You have done well by water.

Men. And you by land.

Eno. I will praise any man that will praise me;
though it cannot be denied what I have done by Men. Nor what I have done by water. [land.

Eno. Yes, something you can deny for your own safety: you have been a great thief by sea.

Men. And you by land.

Eno. There I deny my land service. But give me your hand, Menas: if our eyes had authority, here they might take two thieves kissing.

Men. All men's faces are true, what so'mer their hands are.

Eno. But there is never a fair woman has a true
Men. No slander; they steal hearts. [face.

Eno. We came hither to fight with you.

Men. For my part, I am sorry it is turned to a drinking. Pompey doth this day laugh away his fortune.

Eno. If he do, sure, he cannot weep 'tack again.

Men. You've said, sir. We looked not for Mark
Antony here: pray you, is he married to Cleopatra?

Eno. Caesar's sister is called Octavia. [cellus.

Men. True, sir; she was the wife of Cains Mar.

Eno. But she is now the wife of Marcus Antonius.

Men. Pray ye, sir?

Eno. 'Tis true.

Men. Then is Caesar and he for ever knit together.

Eno. If I were bound to divine of this unity, I would not prophesy so.

Men. I think the policy of that purpose made more in the marriage than the love of the parties.

Eno. I think so too. But you shall find, the land that seems to tie their friendship together will be the very stronger of their amity: Octavia is of a holy, cold, and still conversation.

Men. Who would not have his wife so?

Eno. Not he that himself is not so; which is Mark Antony: He will to his Egyptian dish again;
then shall the sighs of Octavia blow the fire in Cesar; and, as I said before, that which is the strength of their amity shall prove the immediate author of their variance. Antony will use his affection where it is: he married but his occasion be.

Men. And thus it may be. Come, sir, will you abroad? I have a health for you. [in Egypt.

Eno. I shall take it, sir: we have used our throats.

Men. Come, let's away. [Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—On board Pompey's galley, off

Mission.

Music plays. Enter two or three Servants with a banquet.

First Serv. Here they'll be, man. Some o' their plants are ill-rooted already; the least wind i' the world will blow them down.

Sec. Serv. Lepidus is high-coloured.

First Serv. They have made him drink alms-drink.

Sec. Serv. As they pinch one another by the disposition, he cries out: 'No more;' reconciles them to his entreaty, and himself to the drink.

First Serv. But it raises the greater war between him and his discretion.
ACT II. ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA. SCENE VII.

Sen. Serv. Why, this it is to have a name in great men's fellowship: I had as lief have a reed that will do no service as a partisan I could not love.

First Serv. To be called into a huge sphere, and not to be seen to move in 't, are the holes where eyes should be, which pitifully disaster the cheeks.

A servant sounded. Enter Caesar, Antony, Lepidus, Pompey, Agrippa, Meccenas, Enobarbus, Menas, with other captains.

Ant. [To Caesar] Thus do they, sir: they take the flow o' the Nile
By certain scales 't the pyramid; they know,
By the height, the lowness, or the mean, if dearth
Or plenty in any height; the higher
The more it promises: as it ebbs, the seedsman
Upon the slime and oze scatters his grain,
And shortly comes to harvest.

Lep. You've strange serpents there.

Ant. Ay, Lepidus.

Lep. Your serpent of Egypt is bred now of your mind by the operation of your sun: so is your croco-

Ant. They are so.

Pom. Sit.—and some wine! A health to Lepidus!

Lep. I am not so well as I should be, but I'll be'er out.

Eno. Not till you have slept; I fear you'll be in till then.

Lep. Nay, certainly, I have heard the Ptolemies' pyramids are very good things; without contradiction, I have heard that.

Men. [Aside to Pom.] Pompey, a word.

Pom. [Aside to Men.] Say in mine ear: what's it?

Men. [Aside to Pom.] Forsake thy seat, I do
beesech thee, captain,
And hear me speak a word.

Pom. [Aside to Men.] Forbear me till anon.

This wine for Lepidus?

Lep. What manner o' thing is your crocodile?

Ant. It is shaped, sir, like itself; and it is as bread as it hath breathed: it is just so high as it is, and moves with it own organs: it lives by that which nourisheth it; and the elements once out of it, transmigrates.

Lep. What colour is it of?

Ant. Of it own colour too.

Lep. 'T is a strange serpent.

Ant. 'T is so. And the tears of it are wet.

Ces. Will this description satisfy him?

Ant. With the health that Pompey gives him, else be it a very enigma.

Pom. [Aside to Men.] Go hang, sir, hang! Tell me of that? away!

Do as I bid you. Where's this cup I call'd for?

Men. [Aside to Pom.] If for the sake of merit thou will hear me,
Rise from thy stool. You tell me.

Pom. [Aside to Men.] I think thou'rt mad. The matter?

Men. I have ever held my cap off to thy fortunes.

Pom. Thou hast served me with much faith.

What's else to say?

Be jolly, lords.

Ant. These quick-sands, Lepidus,
Keep off them, for you sink.

Men. Will thou be lord of all the world?

Pom. What say'st thou?

Men. Will thou be lord of the whole world?

What's twice.

Pom. How should that be?

Men. But entertain it,
And, though thou think me poor, I am the man
Will give thee all the world.

Pom. Hast thou drunk well?

Ant. No, Pompey, I have kept me from the cup.
Thou art, if thou dar'st, in the earthli' joye:

Whate'er the ocean pales, or sky inclins,
Is thine, if thou wilt ha'.

Pom. Show me whiche way.

Men. These three world-slayers, these compet-
Are in thy vessel: let me cut the cable:

Pom. And, when we are put off, fall to their throats:
All there is thine.

Ant. Ah, this thou shouldn't have done,
And not have spoke on 't! In me 'tis villany;
In thee 't had been good service. Thou must know,
'T is not my profit that does lead mine honour;
Mine honour, it. Repeat that 'er thy tongue
Hath so betray'd thine act: being done unknown,
I should have found it afterwards well done;
But must condemn it now. Desist, and drink.

Men. [Aside] For this,
I'll never follow thy puff'd fortunes more.
Whoseeks, and will not take when once 'tis offer'd,
Shall never find it more.

Pom. This health to Lepidus!

Ant. Bear him ashore. I'll pledge it for him.

Eno. Here's to thee, Menas!

Pom. Enobarbus, welcome!

Pom. Fill till the cup be hid.

Eno. There's a strong fellow, Menas.

[Pointing to the Attendant who carries off
Lepidus]

Men. Why?

Pom. Eo. A' bears the third part of the world, man;

Men. The third part, then, is drunk: would it
That it might go on wheels!

Eno. Drink thou: increase the reels.

Men. Come.

Pom. This is not yet an Alexandrian feast.

Ant. It ripens towards it. Strike the vessels, ho!

Here is to Caesar!

Ces. I could well forbear't.

It's monstrous labour, when I wash my brain,
And it grows fouler.

Ant. Be a child o' the time.

Ces. Possess it, I'll make answer:
But I had rather fast from all four days
Than drink so much in one.

Eno. Ha, my brave emperor! [To Antony.

Shall we dance now the Egyptian Bacchanale,
And celebrate our drink?

Pom. Come, let's all take-hands,

Till that the conquering wine hath steep'd our sense
In soft and delicate Lethe.

Eno. All take hands.

Make battery to our ears with the loud music:
The while I'll place you: then the boy shall sing;
The holding every man shall bear as loud
As his strong sides can volley.

[Music plays. Enobarbus places them hand in hand.

THE SONG.

Come, thou monarch of the vine,
Plump'gy Bacchus with pink eyn!

In thy fats our cares be drown'd,
With thy grapes our hairs be crown'd:

Cup us, till the world go round,
Cup us, till the world go round!

Ces. What would you more? Pompey, good night. Good brother.

Let me request you off: our graver business
Frowns at this levity. Gentle lords, let's part:

You see we have burnt our cheeks: strong Enobarb
Is weaker than the wine: and mine own tongue
Splits what it speaks: the wild disguiseth almost Anfick'd us all. What needs more words? Good

Good Antony, your hand.

Pom. I'll try you on the shore.

Ant. And shall, sir: give's your hand.

Pom. O Antony,
ACT III.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

SCENE I. — A plain in Syria.

Enter Ventidius as it were in triumph, with Silius, and other Romans, Officers, and Soldiers; the dead body of Pacorus borne before him.

Ven. Now, darting Parthia, art thou struck; and now Pleased fortune does of Marcus Crassus' death Make me revenger. Bear the king's son's body Before our army. Thy Pacorus, Orodes, Part this for Marcus Crassus.

Sil. Noble Ventidius, Whilst yet with Parthian blood thy sword is warm, The fugitive Parthians follow; spur through Media, Mesopotamia, and the shelters whither The routed fly: so thy great captain Antony Shall set thee on triumphal chariots and Put garlands on thy head.

Ven. O Silius, Silius, I have done enough; a lower place, note well, May make too great an act: for learn this, Silius; Better to leave undone, than by our deed Acquire too high a fame when we serve's way. Caesar and Antony have ever won More in their officer than person: Sossins, One of my place in Syria, his lieutenant, For quick accumulation of renown, Which he achieved by the minute, lost his favour. Who does it! the wars more than his captain can Become his captain's captain; and ambition, The soldier's virtue, rather makes choice of loss, Than gain which darkens him. I could do more to do Antonius good, But 'twould offend him; and in his offence Should my performance perish.

Sil. Thou hast, Ventidius, that Without the which a soldier, and his sword, [touy? Grants scarce distinction. Thou wilt write to An- Ven. I'll humbly signify what in his name, That magical word of war, we have effected; How, with his banners and his well-paid ranks, The ne'er-yet-beaten horse of Parthia We have jaded out o'the field.

Sil. Where is he now?

Ven. He purposeth to Athens: whither, with what haste The weight we must convey with 's will permit, We shall appear before him. On, there; pass along! [Exeunt.

SCENE II. — Rome. An ante-chamber in Caesar's house.

Enter Agrippa at one door, Enobarbus at another.

Agr. What, are the brothers parted? [gone; Eno. They have dispatch'd with Pompey, he is The other three are scaling. Octavius weeps To part from Rome; Caesar is sad; and Lepidus, Since Pompey's feast, as Menas says, is troubled With the green sickness.

These drums! these trumpets, flutes! what! Let Neptune hear we bid a loud farewell To these great tollows: sound and be hang'd, sound One! [Sound a flourish, with drums.

ACT III.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

SCENE V.

Ces. No, sweet Octavia, You shall hear from me still; the time shall not
Out-go my thinking on you.
Ant. Come, sir, come;
I'll wrestle with you in my strength of love:
Look, here I have you; thus I let you go,
And give you to the gods.
Ces. Adieu; be happy!
Lep. Let all the number of the stars give light
To thy fair way!
Cleo. Farewell, farewell! [Kisses Octavia.
Ant. Farewell! [Trumpets sound, Exeunt.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Ira, and Alexandas.

Cleo. Where is the fellow?
Alex. Half afeard to come.
Cleo. Go to, go to,
Enter the Messenger as before.
Come hither, sir.
Alex. Good majesty,
Herod of Jewry dare not look upon you
But when you are well pleased.
Cleo. That Herod's head
I'll have: but how, when Antony is gone [near.
Through whom I might command it? Come thou
Mess. Most gracious majesty,—
Cleo. Didst thou behold Octavia?
Mess. Ay, dread queen.
Cleo. Where?
Mess. Madam, in Rome;
I look'd her in the face, and saw her led
Between her brother and Mark Antony.
Cleo. Is she as tall as me?
Mess. She is not, madam.
Cleo. Didst hear her speak? is she shrill-tongued or low?
Mess. Madam, I heard her speak; she is low-voiced.
Cleo. That's not so good: he cannot like her long.
Charm. Like her! O Isis! 'tis impossible.
Cleo. I think so, Charmian; dull of tongue, and dwarfish!
What majesty is in her gait? Remember,
It e'er thou look'dst on majesty.
Mess. She creeps;
Her motion and her station are as one;
She shows a body rather than a life,
A statute than a breather.
Cleo. Is this certain?
Mess. Or I have no observance.
Charm. Three in Egypt
Cannot make better note.
He's very knowing;
I do perceive 't: there's nothing in her yet:
The fellow has good judgment.
Charm. Excellent.
Cleo. Guess at her years, I prithee.
Mess. She was a widow,—
Cleo. Widow! Charmian, hark.
Mess. And do I think she's thirty. [round?
Cleo. Bear'st thou her face in mind? 'tis long or Mess. Round even to faultiness.
Cleo. For the most part, too, they are foolish that are so.
Her hair, what color?
Mess. Brown, madam; and her forehead
As low as she would wish it.
Cleo. There's gold for thee.
Thou must not take my former sharpness ill;
I will employ thee back again; I find thee
Most fit for business; go make thee ready;
Our letters are prepared. [Exit Messenger.
Charm. A proper man.

Cleo. Indeed, he is so: I repent me much
That so I harried him. Why, methinks, by him,
This creature's no such thing.
Charm. Nothing, madam.
Cleo. The man hath seen some majesty, and shall I ask it.
Charm. Hath he seen majesty? Isis else defend,
And serving you so long! [Charmian:
Cleo. I have one thing more to ask him yet, good
But 'tis no matter; thou shalt bring him to me
Where I will write. All may be well enough.
Charm. I warrant you, madam. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Athens. A room in Antony's house.

Enter Antony and Octavia.

Ant. Nay, nay, Octavia, not only that,—
That were excusable, that, and thousands more
Of semblable import,—but he hath waged
[it New wars 'gainst Pompey; made his will, and read
To public ear:
Spoke scantily of me: when perforce he could not
But say me terms of honour, cold and sickly
He vented them; most narrow measure lent me:
When the best hint was given him, he not took 't,
Or did it from his teeth.
Oct. O my good lord,
Believe not all: or, if you must believe,
Stoichieth not all. A more unhappy lady,
If this division chance, ne'er stood between,
Praying for both parts:
The good gods will mock me presently,
When I shall pray. 'O, bless my lord and husband!'
Undo that prayer, by crying out as loud,
'0, bless my brother!' Husband win, win brother,
Prays, and destroys the prayer; no midway
Twist these extremes at all.

Ant. Gentile Octavia,
Let your best love draw to that point, which seeks
Best to preserve it: if I lose mine honour,
I lose myself: better I were not yours
Than yours so branchless. But, as you requested,
Yourself shall go between: the mean time, lady,
I'll raise the preparation of a war
Shall shain your brother: make your soonest haste;
So your desires are yours.
Oct. Thanks to your lord.
The Jove of power make me most weak, most weak,
Your reconquer! Wars twixt you twain would be
As if the world should cleave, and that slain men
Should solder up the rift.
Ant. When it appears to you where this begins,
Turn your displeasure that way; for our faults
Can never be so equal, that your love
Can equally move with them. Provide your going;
Choose your own company, and command what cost
Your heart has mind to. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The same. Another room.

Enter Enobarbus and eros, meeting.

Eros. How now, friend Eros!
Eros. There's strange news come, sir.
Eros. What, man?
Eros. Cesar and Lepidus have made wars upon Pompey.
Eros. This is old: what is the success?
Eros. Cesar, having made use of him in the wars against Pompey, presently denied him rivalry:
would not let him partake in the glory of the action:
and not resting here, accuses him of letters he had formerly wrote to Pompey; upon his own appeal, seizes him: so the poor third is up, till death enlarge his confines. [more; Eros. Then, world, thou hast a pair of chaps, no
And throw between them all the food thou hast,
They'll grind the one the other. Where's Antony?
ACT III.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

SCENE VII.

Eros. He's walking in the garden—thus; and spurts
The rush that lies before him; cries, 'Fool Lepidus!' And threats the throat of that his officer
The murder'd Pompey.

Ero. Our great navy's rigg'd.
Eros. For Italy and Caesar. More, Domitian;
My lord desires you presently: my news
I might have told hereafter.

Eros. But let it be. Bring me to Antony.

[Exeunt.

Enter Caesar, Agrrippa, and Mecenas.

Caes. Concerning Rome, he has done all this, and
In Alexandria; here's the manner of 't; [more,
'the market-place, on a tribunal silver'd,
Cleopatra and himself in chairs of gold
Were publicly entroned: at the feet sat
Cesarian, whom they call my father's son,
And all the unlawful issue that their lust
Since then hath made between them. Unto her
He gave the establishment of Egypt; made her
Of lower Syria, Cyprus, Lydia, Alexandria.

Mec. This in the public eye? [recess.
Caes. I, the common show-place, where they ex-
Hibited he there proclaimed the kings of kings:
Great Media, Parthia, and Armenia.
He gave to Alexander; to Ptolemy he assign'd
Syria, Cilicia, and Phoenicia: she
In the habitations of the goddess Isis
That day appear'd; and oft before gave audience,
As 'tis reported, so.

Mec. Let Rome be thus Inform'd.
Agr. Who, quesy with his insolence
Already, will their good thoughts call from him.
Caes. The people know it: and have now received
His accusions.

Agr. Who does he accuse?
Caes. Caesar; and that, having in Sicily
Sixtus Pompeius spoil'd, we had not rated him
His part o' the isle; then does he say, he lent me
Some shipping unstock'd: lastly, he frets
That none of the triumvirs
Should be deposed; and, being, that we detain
All his revenue.

Agr. Sir, this should be answer'd.
Caes. 'Tis done already, and the messenger gone.
I have told him, Lepidus was grown too cruel:
That he his high authority abused,
Ignor'd, and did deserve his change: for what I have con-
I grant him part; but then, in his Armenia,
And other of his conquer'd kingdoms, I
Demand the like.

Mec. He'll never yield to that.
Caes. Nor must not then be yielded to in this.

Enter Octavia with her train.

Oct. Hail, Caesar, and my lord! hail, most dear
Caesar!
Caes. That ever I should call thee castaway!
Oct. Ye have not call'd me so, nor have you cause.
Caes. Why have you stol'n upon us thus? You
Like Caesar's sister: the wife of Antony [come not Should have an army for an usher, and
The neighs of horse to tell of her approach
Long ere she did appear; the trees by the way
Should have borne men; and expectation fainted
Leaving for what it had not may, the dust
Should have ascended to the roof of heaven,
Raised by your populous troops: but you are come
A market-maid to Rome; and have prevented
The ostentation of our love, which, left unshown,
Is often left unloved: we should have met you
By sea and land; supplying every stage
With an augmented greeting.

Oct. Good my lord,
To come thus was I not constrain'd, but did
On my free will. My lord, Mark Antony
Hearing that you prepared for war, acquainted
My grieved ear withal; whereon, I begg'd
His pardon for return.

Caes. Which soon he granted,
Being an obstruct 'tween his lust and him.

Oct. Do not say so, my lord, in me;
Caes. I have eyes upon him,
And his affairs come to me on the wind.
Where is he now?

Caes. No, my most wronged sister! Cleopatra
Hath nod'd him to her. He hath given his empire
Up to a whore; who now are levying
The kings o' the earth for war: he hath assembled
Bocchus, the king of Libya; Archelaus,
Of Cappadocia; Philadelphos, king
Of Paphlagonia; the Thracian king, Adallas;
King Malechus of Armenia; King of Punt;
Herod of Jewry; Mithridates, king
Of Comagene; Polemon and Amyntas,
The kings of Mede and Lycaonia,
With a more larger list of sceptres.

Oct. Ay me, most wretched,
That have my heart parted betwixt two friends
That do afflict each other!

Caes. Welcome hither:
Your letters did withhold our breaking forth;
Till we perceived, both how you were wrong led,
And we in negligent danger. Cheer your heart:
Be you not troubled with the thing which drives
O'er your content these strong necessities;
But let determined things to destiny
Hold unbewail'd their way. Welcome to Rome;
Nothing more dear to me. You are abused
Beyond the mark of thought: and the high gods,
To do you justice, make them ministers
Of us and those that love you. Best of comfort;
And ever welcome to us.

Agr. Welcome, lady.
Mec. Welcome, dear madam.
Each heart in Rome does love and pity you:
Only the adulterous Antony, most large
In his abominations, turns you off;
And gives his potent regiment to a trull,
That noises it against us.

Oct. Is it so, sir?
Caes. Most certain. Sister, welcome: pray you,
Be ever known to patience: my dear sister.[Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—Near Actium. Antony's camp.

Enter Cleopatra and Enoobarus.

Cleo. I will be even with thee, doubt it not.
Eno. But why, why, why?
Cleo. Thou hast forspoke my being in these wars,
And say'st it is not fit.

Eno. Well, is it, is it?
Cleo. If not denounced against us, why should not we
Be there in person?

Eno. [Aside] Well, I could reply:
If we should serve with horse and mares together,
The horse were merely lost; the mares would hear
A soldier and his horse.

Cleo. What is 't you say?
Eno. Your presence needs must puzzle Antony;
Take from his heart, take from his brain, from 's time,
What should not then be spared. He is already Traduced for levity; and 'tis said in Rome

761
ACT III.  ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.  SCENE X.

That Phoebus an enmarch and your maids
Manage this war.
Cleo. Sink Rome, and their tongues rot.
That speak against us! A charge we hear 'tis the war,
And, as the president of my kingdom, will Appear there for a man. Speak not against it;
I will not stay behind.

Eno. Nay, I have done.

Here comes the emperor.

Enter Antony and Caius.  Cleopatra.

Ant. Is it not strange, Cannius,
That from Tarentum and Brundusium
He could so quickly cut the Ionian sea,
And take in Turyne? You have heard on 't, sweet?
Cleo. Celerity is never more admired
Than by the negligent.

Ant. A good rebuke,
Which might have well become the best of men,
To taunt at slackness. Cannius, we
Will fight with him by sea.
Cleo. By sea! what else?

Can. Why will my lord do so?

Ant. For that he dares us to.
Eno. So bath my lord dared him to single fight.
Can. Ay, and to wage this battle at Pharsalia,
Where Caesar fought with Pompey: but these offers,
Which serve not for his vantage, he shakes off;
And so should you.

Eno. Your ships are not well mann'd;
Your mariners are muleseters, reapers, people
Ingross'd by swift impress; in Caesar's fleet
Are those that often have against Pompey fought:
Their ships are yare; yours, heavy: no disgrace
Shall fall you for refusing him at sea,
Being prepared for land.

Ant. By sea, by sea.
Eno. Most worthy sir, you therein throw away
The absolute soldieryship you have by land;
Distract your army, which doth most consist
Of war-mark'd footmen; leave unexecuted
Your own renowned knowledge; quite forgo
The way which promises assurance; and
Give up yourself merely to chance and hazard,
From him security.

Ant. I'll fight at sea.
Can. I have sixty sails, Cæsar none better.
Ant. Our overplus of shipping will we burn:
And, with the rest full- mann'd, from the head of Actium
Beat the approaching Cæsar. But if we fail,
We then can do 't at land.

Enter a Messenger.

Thy business?

Mess. The news is true, my lord: he is descried;
Cæsar has taken Turyne.

Ant. Can he be there in person? 't is impossible;
Strange that his power should be, Cannius,
Our nineteen legions thou shalt hold by land,
And our twelve thousand horse. We'll to our ship:
Away, my Thetis!

Enter a Soldier.

How now, worthy soldier!
Sold. O noble emperor, do not fight by sea;
Trust not to rotten planks: do you mislike
This sword and these my wonsals? Let the Egyptian
And the Phœnicians go a-ducking: we [Gians
Have used to conquer, standing on the earth,
And fighting foot to foot.

Ant. Well, well: away!

Sold. By Hercules, I think I am 't the right.
Can. Soldier, thou art: but his whole action
Not in the power on 't: so our leader's led, [grows
And we are women's men.

Sold. You keep by land
The legions and the horse whole, do you not? Can. Marcus Octavius, Marcus Justeius, Publicola, and Caius, are for land;
But we keep whole by land. This speed of Cæsar's
Carries beyond belief.

Ant. While he was yet in Rome, His power went out in such distractions as Bequeathed all his slaves.
Can. Who's his lieutenant, hear you? Sold. They say, one Taurus.
Can. Well I know the man.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The emperor calls Cannius. Can. With news the time's with labour, and throst forth.
Each minute, some.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VIII.—A plain near Actium.

Enter Caesar, and Taurus, with his army, marching.

Ces. Taurus!
Taur. My lord?
Ces. Strike not by land; keep whole: provoke
Till we have done at sea. Do not exceed
The precept of this scroll: our fortune lies
Upon this jump.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IX.—Another part of the plain.

Enter Antony and Enobarbus.  Ant. Set we our squadrons on the side o' the hill,
In eye of Caesar's battle; from which place
We may the number of the ships behold,
And so proceed accordingly.

[Exeunt.

SCENE X.—Another part of the plain.

Cannius marcheth with his land army one way over the stage; and Taurus, the lieutenant of Cæsar, the other way. After their going in, is heard the noise of a sea-fight.

Alarum.  Enter Enobarbus.

Eno. Naught, naught, all naught! I can behold
The Antonian, the Egyptian admiral: he longer:
With all their sixty, fly and turn the rudder:
To see 't mine eyes are blasted.

Enter Scarus.

Scur. Gods and goddesses,
All the whole synod of them!

Eno. What's thy passion?
Scur. The greater castle of the world is lost
With very ignorance; we have kis'd away
Kingdoms and provinces.

Eno. How appears the fight?
Scur. On our side like the token'd pestilence,
Where death is sure. You ribandied nag of Egypt,—
Whom lepresy o'ertake!—'t the midst o' the fight,
When vantage like a pair of twins appear'd,
Both as the same, or rather ours the elder,
The breese upon her, like a cow in June,
Hoists sails and flies.

Eno. That I behold:
Mine eyes did sicken at the sight, and could not Endure a further view.

Scur. She once being loof'd,
The noble ruin of her magic, Antony,
Claps on his sea-wing, and, like a doting mallard,
Leaving the fight in height, flies after her:
I never saw an action of such shame:
Experience, manhood, honour, ne'er before
Died violate so itself.

Eno. Alack, alack!
Enter Canidius.

Can. Our fortune on the sea is out of breath, And sinks most lamentably. Had our general Been what he knew himself, it had gone well: O, he has given example for our flight, Most grossly, by his own! Can. Why, then, are you thereabouts? Why, then, good night indeed.

Enter Cleopatra led by Charmian and Iras; Eros following.

Ant. I have offended reputation, A most unmeasurable. Eros. Sir, the queen. Ant. O, whither hast thou led me, Egypt? See, How I convey my shame out of thine eyes By looking back what I have left behind 'Stroy'd in dishonour. Cleo. O my lord, my lord, Forgive my fearful sails! I little thought You would have follow'd.

Ant. Egypt, thou know'st too well My heart was to thy rudder tied by the strings, And thou shouldest tow me after; o'er my spirit Thy full supremacy thou know'st, and that Thy beck might from the bidding of the gods Command me. Cleo. O, my pardon! Ant. Now I must To the young man send humble treaties, dudge And palter in the shifts of lowness: who With half the bulk o' the world play'd as I pleased, Making and marring fortunes. You did know How much you were my companion; and that My sword, made weak by my affection, would Obey it on all cause.

Cleo. Pardon, pardon!

Ant. Fall not a tear, I say; one of them rates All that is won and lost: give me a kiss; Even this repays me. We sent our schoolmaster: Is he come back? Love, I am full of heel. [Knows some wine, within there, and our viands. Fortune We scorn her most when most she offers blows.

[Exit.]

SCENE XI.—Egypt. *Ces. Enter Caesar, Dolabella, Thyreus, with others. Ces. Let him appear that's come from Antony. Know you him? Dol. Caesar, 'tis his schoolmaster: An argument that he is pleck'd, when hither He sends so poor a pinion of his wing, Which had superfluous kings for messengers Not many moons gone by. Enter Euphronius, ambassador from Antony. Ces. Approach, and speak. Euphr. Such as I am, I come from Antony: I was of late as petty to his ends As is the morn-dew on the myrtle-leaf To his grand sea. Ces. Be 't so: declare thine office. Euphr. Lord of his fortunes he salutes thee, and Requires to live in Egypt: which not granted, He lessens his requests; and to thee sues To let him breathe between the heavens and earth, A private man in Athens: this for him. Next, Cleopatra does confess thy greatness: Submits her to thy might; and of thee craves The circle of the Ptolemies for her heirs, Now hazarded to thy grace.

Ces. For Antony, I have no ears to his request. The queen Of audience nor desire shall fail, so she From Egypt drive her all-disgraced friend, Or take his life there: this if she perform, She shall not sue unheard. So to them both.

Euphr. Fortune pursue thee!

Ces. Bring him through the bands. [Exit Euphronius.]

[To Thyreus] To try thy eloquence, now 'tis time: dispatch; From Antony win Cleopatra: promise, And in our name, what she requires; add more, From thine invention, offers: women are not In their best fortunes strong: but want will procure The ne'er-touch'd vestal: try thy cunning, Thyreus; ACT XIII.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

SCENE XIII.—Alexandria. Cleopatra's palace.

Enter Cleopatra, Enobarbus, Charmian, and Iras.

Cleo. What shall we do, Enobarbus?

Eno. Thou art in much mind now, and hast an answer ready.

Cleo. What is Antony or we in fault for this?

Eno. Antony only, that would make his will Lord of his reason. What though you fled
From that great face of war, whose several ranges
Frighted each other? why should he follow?
The itch of his affection should not then
Have nick'd his captainship; at such a point,
When half to half the world opposed, he being
The meered question: 't was a shame no less
Than was his loss, to course your flying flags,
And leave his navy gazing.

Cleo.

Enter Antony with Euphronius, the Ambassador.

Ant. Is that his answer?

Euph. Ay, my lord.

Ant. The queen shall then have courtesy, so she Will yield us up.

Euph. He says so.

Ant. Let her know 't.

To the boy Cesar send this grizzled head,
And he will fill thy wishes to the brim
With principalties.

Cleo. That head, my lord?

Ant. To him again: tell him he wears the rose
Of youth upon him; from which the world should note
Something particular: his coin, ships, legions,
May be a coward's; whose ministers would prevail
Under the service of a child as soon
As I the command of Cesar: I dare him therefore To lay his gay conversion and success
And answer me declined, sword against sword,
Ourselves alone. I'll write it: follow me.

[Exit Antony and Euphronius.

Eno. [Aside] Yes, like enough, high-battleed Cesar will Unstate his happiness, and be staged to the show,
Against a swordier! I see men's judgments are
A parcel of their fortunes; and things outward
Do draw the inward quality after them,
To suffer all alike. That he should dream,
Knowing all measures, the full Cesar will Answer his emptiness! Cesar, thou hast subdued
His judgment too.

Enter an Attendant.

Att. A messenger from Cesar,

Ant. What, an offering of ceremony? See, my women!
Against the blown rose may they stop their nose
That kneel'd unto the buds. Admit him, sir.

[Exit Attendant.

Eno. [Aside] Mine honesty and I begin to square.

The loyalty well held to foils does make
Our faith mere folly: yet he that can endure
To join his allegiance a falling lord,
Does conquer him that did his master conquer,
And earns a place i' the story.

Enter Thyrreus.

Cleo. Cesar's will?

Thyr. Hear it apart.

Cleo. None but friends: say boldly,

764

Thyr. So, ha! They are friends to Antony.

Eno. He needs as many, sir, as Cesar has;
Or needs not use. If Cesar please, our master
Will leap to be his friend: for us, you know
Whose he is we are, and that is, Cesar's.

Thyr. So, Thus then, thou most renowned: Cesar entreats,
Not to consider in what case thou stand'st,
Further than he is Cesar.

Cleo. Go on: right royal.

Thyr. He knows that you embrace not Antony
As you did love, but as you fear'd him.

Cleo. O! Thyr. The scars upon your honour, therefore, he Does pity, as constrained blemishes,
Not as deserved.

Cleo. He is a god, and knows
What is most right: mine honour was not yielded,
But conquer'd merely.

Eno. [Aside] To be sure of that,

I will ask Antony. Sir, sir, thou art so leeky,
That we must leave thee to thyinking; for Thy dearest quit thee.

Thyr. Shall I say to Cesar
What you require of him? for he partly begs
To be desired to give. It much would please him,
That of his fortunes you should make a staff
To lean upon; but it would warm his spirits,
To hear from me you had left Antony,
And put yourself under his shroud,
The universal landlord.

Cleo. What's your name?

Thyr. My name is Thyrreus.

Cleo. Most kind messenger, Say to great Cesar this: in deputation
I kiss his conquering hand: tell him, I am prompt
To lay my crown at 's feet, and there to kneel;
Tell him, from his all-obeying breath I hear
The doom of Egypt.

Thyr. 'Tis your noblest course.

Wisdom and fortune combating together,
If that the former dare but what it can,
No chance may shake it. Give me grace to lay
My duty on your hand.

Cleo. Your Cesar's father oft,
When he hath mus'd of taking kingdoms in,
Bestow'd his lips on that unworthy place,
As it rain'd kisses.

Re-enter Antony and Enobarbus.

Ant. Favours, by Jove that thunders! What art thou, fellow?

Thyr. One that but performs
The bidding of the fullest man, and worthiest
To have command obey'd.

Eno. [Aside] You will be whipp'd.

Ant. Approach, there! Ah, you kites! Now, gods
And devils! - [Hic!] Authority melts from me: of late, when I cried
Like boys unto a muss, kings would start forth,
And cry 'Your will?' Have you no ears? I am Antony yet.

Enter Attendants.

Take hence this Jack, and whip him.

Eno. [Aside] 'Tis better playing with a lion's Then with an old one dying. [whelp Ant.

Moon and stars!

Whip him. 'Went twenty of the greatest tributaries
That do acknowledge Cesar, should I find them
So sancy with the hand of she here,—what's her
Since she was Cleopatra? Whip him, fellows,
Till, like a boy, you see him cringe his face,
And whine aloud for mercy: take him hence.

Thyr. Mark Antony?

Ant. Tug him away: being whipp'd,
ACT IV.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

SCENE I.

Bring him again; this Jack of Caesar’s shall Bear us an errand to him. [Exit Attendents with Thyruses.

You were half blasted ere I knew you; ha! Have I my pillow left unpeck’d? I have been in Rome, Forborne the getting of a lawful race And by a gem of women, to be abused By one that looks on feeders?

Cleo. Good my lord,—

Ant. You have been a jollyger ever:
But when we in our viciousness grow hard— O misery on’t!—the wise gods see our eyes; In our own filth drop our clear judgments; make Adore our errors; laugh at’s, while we strat To our confusion.

Cleo. O, is’t come to this?

Ant. To let a fellow that will take rewards And say, ‘God quit you!’ be familiar with My playfellow, your hand; this kingly seal And plighter of high hearts! O, that I were Upon the hill of Basan, to outrear The horned herd! for I have savage cause; And to proclaim it civilly, were like A halter’d neck which does the hangman thank For being yare about him.

Re-enter Attendents with Thyruses.

Is be whipp’d?

First Att. Soundly, my lord.

Ant. Cried he? and begg’d at a pardon?

First Att. He did ask favour.

Ant. If that thy father live, let him repent Thou was not made his daughter; and be thou sorry To follow Caesar in his triumph, since Thou hast been whipp’d for following him: henceforth

The white hand of a lady fever thee, Shake thou to look on ’t. Get thee back to Caesar, Tell him thy entertainment; look, thou say He makes me angry with him; for he seems Proud and disdainful, harping on what I am, Not what he knew I was; he makes me angry; And at this time most easy ’t is to do’t.

When my good stars, that were my former guides, Have empty left their orbs, and shot their fires Into the abyss of hell, if he dislike My speech and what is done, tell him he has Hipparchus, my enfranchised bondman, whom He may at pleasure whip, or hang, or torture, As he shall like, to quite me: urge it thou: Hence with thy stripes, begone! [Exit Thyruses.

Cleo. Have you done yet?

Ant. Alack, our terrene moon Is now eclipsed; and it portends alone The fall of Antony!

Cleo. I must stay his time.

Ant. To flatter Caesar, would you mingle eyes With one that ties his points?

Cleo. Not know me yet?

Ant. Cold-hearted toward me?

Cleo. Ah, dear, if I be so,
From my cold heart let heaven engerdail bali, And poison it in the source; and the first stone Drop in my neck: as it determines, so Dissolve my life! The next Casarion smile Till by degrees the memory of my womb, Together with my brave Egyptians all, By the dissanguing of this pelleted storm, Lie graveless, till the flies and gnats of Nile Have buried them for prey!

Ant. I am satisfied.

Cesar sits down in Alexandria; where I will oppose his fate. Our force by land Hath nobly held; our seavenly too Have knit again, and fleet, threatening most seallike. Where hast thou been, my heart? Doest thou hear, If from the field I shall return once more [lady? To kiss these lips, I will appear in blood; I and my sword will earn our chronicle: There’s hope in’t yet.

Cleo. That’s my brave lord!

Ant. I will be treble-bew’d, hearted, breathed, And fright malignantly: for when mine hours Were nice and lucky, men did ransom lives Of me for jests: but now I’ll set my teeth, And send to darkness all that stop me. Come, Let’s have one other gaudy night: call to me All my sad captains: fill our bowls once more; Let’s knock the midnight bell.

Cleo. It is my birthday:

I had thought to have held it poor; but, since my lord Is Antony again, I will be Cleopatra.

Ant. We will yet do well.

Cleo. Call all his noble captains to my lord.

Ant. Do so, we’ll speak to them; and to-night I’ll force The wine peep through their scars. Come on, my queen:

There’s sus in’t yet. The next time I do fight, I’ll make death love me; for I will content Even with his pestilent sethye.

[Exeunt all but Eadubrins.

Eadubr. Now he’ll outstare the lightning. To be furious, Is to be frighted out of fear; and in that mood The dove will peck the eegride; and I see still, A diminution in our captain’s brain Restores his heart: when valour preys on reason, It eats the sword it fights with. I will seek Some way to leave him. [Exit.
ACT IV.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

Enter Antony, Cleopatra, Enobarbus, Charmian, Iras, Alexas, with others.

Ant. He will not fight with me, Domitius.

Eoro. No.

Ant. Why should he be not? [Time, Eoro. He thinks, being twenty times of better for,
He is twenty men to one.

By sea and land I'll fight: or I will live,
Or bathe my dying honour in the blood
Shall make it live again. Wou 't thou fight well?
Eoro. I 'll strike, and cry ' Take all,'

Well said; come on,
Call forth my household servants: let 's to-night
Be beauteous at our meal.

Enter three or four Servitors.

Give me thy hand,
Thou hast been rightly honest:— so hast thou;—
Thou,—and thou,—and thou:—you have served me
And yours have been your fellow soldiers.

[Cleo. [Aside to Eoro.] What means this?

Eoro. [Aside to Cleo.] 'T is one of those odd tricks
Which sorrow shoots
Out of the mind.

Ant. Well, my good fellows, wait on me to-night: Scamnot not my cups; and make as much of me
As when mine empire was your fellow too,
And suffer'd my command.

Cleo. [Aside to Eoro.] What does he mean?

Eoro. [Aside to Cleo.] To make his followers weep.

Ant. Tend me to-night;
May be it is the period of your duty:
Haply you shall not see me more; or if,
A mangled shadow: perchance to-morrow
You 'll serve another master. I look on you
As one that takes his leave. Mine honest friends,
I turn you not away; but, like a master
Married to your good service, stay till death.

Tend me to-night two hours, I ask no more,
And the gods yield you for't!

Eoro. What mean you, sir,
To give them this discomfort? Look, they weep;
And I, an ass, an onion-eyed: for shame,
Transform us not to women.

Ant. Ho, ho, ho! Now the witch take me, if I meant it thus!
Grace grow where those drops fall! My hearty friends,
You take me in too dorous a sense;
For I spake to you for your comfort; did desire you
To burn this night with torches know, my hearts,
I hope well of to-morrow; and will lead you
Where rather I 'lI expect victorious life
Than death and honour. Let 's to supper, come,
And drown consideration. [Exit,]

SCENE III.—The same. Before the palace.

Enter two Soldiers to their guard.

First Sold. Brother, good night: to-morrow

Sec. Sold. It will determine one way: fare you well.

Heard you of nothing strange about the streets?

First Sold. Nothing. What news?

Sec. Sold. Bello 't is but a rumour. Good night

First Sold. Well, sir, good night.

Enter two other Soldiers.

Sec. Sold. Soldiers, have careful watch.

Third Sold. And you. Good night, good night,

[They place themselves in every corner of the stage.

Fourth Sold. Here we; and if to-morrow
Our navy thrive, I have an absolute hope
Our landmen will stand up.

Third Sold. 'T is a brave army,
And full of purpose.

Music of the harness as under the stage.

Fourth Sold. Peace! what noise?

First Sold. List, list!

Sec. Sold. Hark!

First Sold. Music 't the air.

Third Sold. Under the earth.

Fourth Sold. It signs well, does it not?

Third Sold. No.

First Sold. Peace, I say! What should this mean?

[Music, Sec. Sold. 'T is the god Hercules, whom Antony
Now leaves him.

First Sold. Walk; let 's see if other watchmen
Do hear what we do? [They advance to another post.

Sec. Sold. How now, masters! All. [Speaking together] How now!
How now! do you hear this?

First Sold. Ay; is 't not strange?

Third Sold. Do you hear, masters? do you hear?

First Sold. Follow the noise so far as we have Let 's see how it will give off. [Quarter;

Content. 'T is strange. [Exit,]

SCENE IV.—The same. A room in the palace.

Enter Antony and Cleopatra, Charmian, and others attending.

Ant. Eros! mine armour, Eros! Sleep a little.

Cleo. Ant. No, my chieft. Eros, come; mine armour, Eros!

Enter Eros with armour.

Come, good fellow, put mine iron on:
If fortune be not ours to-day, it is Because we brave her: come.

Cleo. Nay, I 'lI help too.

What 's this for?

Ah, let be, let be! thou art
The armourer of my heart: false, false; this, this.
Cleo. Sooth, la, I 'lI help: thus it must be.

Ant. Well, well;
We shall thrive now. Seest thou, my good fellow?
Go put on thy defences.

Eros. Briefly, sir.

Cleo. Is not this buckled well?

Ant. Rarely, rarely; He that unbuckles this, till we do please
To daft 't for our repose, shall hear a storm.

Thou finolest, Eros; and my queen 's a squire
More tight at this than thou dispatch. O love,
That thou couldst see my wars to-day, and knew'st
The royal occupation! thou shouldst see
A workman in 't.

Enter an armed Soldier.

Good morrow to thee; welcome:
Thou look'st like him that knows a warlike charge:
To business that we love we rise betime,
And go 't with delight.

Sold. A thousand, sir.

Early though 't be, have on their riveted trim,
And at the port expect you.

[Shout. Trumpets flourish.

Enter Captains and Soldiers.

Cpt. The morn is fair. Good morrow, general.

All. Good morrow, general.
Scene VIII.

Enter a Soldier of Caesar's.

Sold. Enobarbus, Antony

Hath after thee sent all thy treasure, with
His bounty overplus: the messenger
Came on my guard: and at thy tent is now
Unloading of his mules.

Ant. I give it you.

Sold. Mock not, Enobarbus,

I tell you true: best you safed the bringer
Out of the host: I must attend mine office,
Or would have done't myself. Your emperor
Continues still a Jove.

Eros. I am alone the villain of the earth,

And feel I am so most. O Antony,
Thou mine of bounty, how wouldst thou have paid
My better service, when my turpitude
Thou dost so crown with gold? This blows my heart.

If swift thought break it not, a swifter mean
Shall outstrive thought: but thought will not, I
I fight against thee! No: I will go seek
Some ditch wherein to die; the foulest best fits
My latter part of life.

Scene VII.—Field of battle between the camps.

Drums. Enter Antony, and Scarsus wounded.

Scarsus. O my brave emperor, this is fought indeed!

Hath we done so at first, we had driven them home
With clouts about their heads.

Antony. Thou blest'st apeace.

Scarsus. I have a wound here that was like a T,
But now 'tis made an H.

They do retire.

Scarsus. We'll beat 'em into bench-holes: I have yet
Room for six scotches more.

Enter Eros.

Eros. They are beaten, sir; and our advantage
For a fair victory, [serves Scarsus.

Let us score their backs,
And snatch 'em up, as we take hares, behind:
'Tis sport to maul a runner.

I will reward thee
Once for thy sprightly comfort, and ten-fold
For thy good valour. Come thee on.

Scarsus. I'll halt after. [Exeunt.

Scene VIII.—Under the walls of Alexandria.

Drums. Enter Antony, in a march; Scarsus, with others.

Antony. We have beat him to his camp: run one before,

And let the queen know of our gists. To-morrow,
Before the sun shall set, we will spill the blood
That has to-day escaped. I thank you all;
For doughty-handed are you, and have fought
Not as you served the cause, but as 't had been
Each man's like mine; you have shown all Hectors.
Enter the city, clip your wives, your friends,
Tell them your feats; whilst they with joyful tears
Wash the conglomeration from your wounds; and kiss
The honour'd gashes whole. [To Scarsus] Give me thy hand;

Enter Cleopatra, attended.

To this great fairy I'll commend thy acts,
Make her thanks'blest thee. [To Cleopatra.] O thou day

Of the world,
ACT IV. ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA. SCENE X.

Demurely wake the sleepers. Let us bear him To the court of guard; he is of note: our hour Is fully out.

Third Sold. Come on, then;
He may recover yet. [Exeunt with the body.]

SCENE XI.—Between the two camps.

Enter Antony and Scævus, with their army.

Ans. Their preparation is to-day by sea;
We please them not by land.

Scæv. For both, my lord.

Ant. I would they 'd fight i' the fire or i' the air;
We 'd fight there too. But this it is; our foot
Upon the hills adjoining to the city
Shall stand with us: order for sea is given;
They have put forth the haven...
Where their appointment we may best discover,
And look on their endeavour. [Exeunt.]

SCENE XII.—Another part of the same.

Enter Caesar, and his army.

Ces. But being charged, we will be still by land.
Which, as I take 't, we shall: for his best force Is forth to man his galleys. To the vales,
And hold our best advantage. [Exeunt.

SCENE XIII.—Another part of the same.

Enter Antony and Scævus.

Ant. Yet they are not join'd: where yond pine does stand,
I shall discover all: I 'll bring thee word
Straight, how 'tis like to go. [Exit.

Scæv. Swallows have built
In Cleopatra's sails their nests: the augurers
Say they know not, they cannot tell; look grimly,
And dare not speak their knowledge. Antony
Is valiant, and dejected: and, by starts,
His fretted fortunes give him hope, and fear,
Of what he has, and has not. [Exit after off, as at a sea-fight.

Re-enter Antony.

Ant. All is lost;
This foul Egyptian hath betrayed me:
My fleet hath yielded to the foe; and yonder
They cast their caps up and earose together.
Like friends long lost. Triple-turn'd whore! 't is Hast sold me to this novice; and my heart
[Thou Makes only wars on thee. Bid them all fly;
For when I am revenged upon my charm,
I have done all. Bid them all fly; begone.

O sun, thy uprise shall I see no more;
Fortune and Antony part here; even here
Do we shake hands. All come to this? The hearts
That spaniel'd me at heels, to whom I gave
Their wishes, do discandily, melt their sweets
On blossoming Caesar; and this pine is bark'd,
That overtopp'd them all. Betray'd I am:
O this false soul of Egypt! this grave charm,—
Whose eye beck'd forth my wars, and call'd them home;
Whose bosom was my crownet, my chief end,—
Like a right gypsy, hath, at fast and loose,
Beguiled me to the very heart of loss.
What, Eros, Eros!

Enter Cleopatra.

Ah, thou spell! Avaunt!

Cle. Why is my lord enraged against his love?

Ant. Vanish, or I shall give thee thy deserving,
And blench Cæsar's triumph. Let him take thee,
And hoist thee up to the shouting plebeians:
Follow his chariot, like the greatest spot
Of all thy sex: most monster-like, be shown
For poor'st diminutives, for doits; and let Patient Octavia plough thy visage up
With her prepared nails.

\[Exit Cleopatra.\]

If it be well to live; but better 't were
Thou fell'st into my fury, for one death
Might have prevented many, Eros, ho!
The shirt of Nessus is upon me: teach me,
Alices, thou mine ancestor, thy page;
Let me lodge Lichas on the horns of the moon;
And with those bands, that grasp'd the heaviest club,
Subdue my worthiest self. The witch shall die;
To the young Roman boy she hath sold me, and I fall
Under this plot; she dies for 't. Eros, ho! \[Exit.\]

SCENE XIII.—Alexandria. Cleopatra’s palace.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, and Mardian.

\[Chor.\] Help me, my women! O, he is more mad
Than Telamion for his shield; the bear of Thessaly
Was never so enboss’d.

\[Char.\] To the monument! There lock yourself, and send him word you are dead.

The soul and body rive not more in parting
Than greatness going off.

\[Chor.\] To the monument; Mardian, go tell him I have slain myself:
Say, that the last I spoke was ‘Antony,’
And word it, prithee, piteously: hence, Mardian,
And bring me how he takes my death. To the monument! \[Exit.\]

SCENE XIV.—The same. Another room.

Enter Antony and Eros.

\[Eros.\] Sometimes we see a cloud that’s dragonish;
A vapour sometime like a bear or lion,
A tower’d citadel, a pendent rock,
A forked mountain, or blue promontory
With trees upon ‘t, that nod unto the world,
And mock our eyes with air; thus hast seen these
They are black vespur’s pageants.

\[Ant.\] Ay, my lord.

\[Eros.\] That which is now a horse, even with a thought
The rack dislimns, and makes it indistinct,
As water is in water.

\[Eros.\] It does, my lord.

\[Ant.\] My good knave Eros, now thy captain is Even such a body: here I am Antony:
Yet cannot hold this visible shape, my knave,
I made these wars for Egypt; and the queen,—
Whose heart I thought I had, for she had mine;
Which whilst it was mine had annex’d unto ‘t
A million more, now lost,—she, Eros, has Pack’d cards with Caesar, and false-play’d my glory
Unto an enemy’s triumph.

Nay, weep not, gentle Eros; there is left us
Ourselves to end ourselves.

\[Enter Mardian.\]

\[Mardian.\] O, thy vile lady!

\[Ant.\] She has robb’d me of my sword.

\[Mardian.\] No, Antony;
My mistress loved thee, and her fortunes mingled
With thine entirely.

\[Mardian.\] Death of one person can be paid but once.
And that she has discharged: what thou wilt do
Is done unto thy hand; the last she spake
Was: ‘Antony! most noble Antony!’
Then in the midst a tearing great lid break
The name of Antony; it was divided
Between her heart and lips: she render’d life,
Thy name so buried in her.

\[Ant.\] Dead, then? Dead.

\[Ant.\] Unarm, Eros; the long day’s task is done,
And we must sleep. \[To Mar.\] That thou departest hence safe,
Does pay thy labour richly; go. \[Exit Mardian.\]

\[Mardian.\] Off, pluck off:
The seven-fold shield of Ajax cannot keep
The battery from my heart. O, cleave, my sides!
Heart, once be stronger than thy continent,
Crack thy frail case! Apace, Eros, apace.
No more a soldier: bruised pieces, go;
You have been noble borne. From me awhile.

\[Exit Eros.\]

I will o’ertake thee, Cleopatra, and Weep for my pardon. So it must be, for now
All length is torture: since the torch is out,
Lie down, and strain no further: now all labour
Wars what it does; yea, very force entangles
Itself with strength; seal then, and all is done.
Eros!—I come, my queen:—Eros!—Stay for me:
Where souls do couch on flowers, we’ll hand in hand,
And with our sprightly port make the ghosts gaze;
Dido and her Aeneas shall want troops,
And all the haunts be ours. Come, Eros, Eros!

\[Re-enter Eros.\]

\[Eros.\] What would my lord?

\[Ant.\] Since Cleopatra died,
I have lived in such dishonour, that the gods
Detest my baseness. I, that with my sword
Quarter’d the world, and o’er green Neptune’s back
With ships made cities, condemn myself to lack
The courage of a woman: less noble mind
Than she which by her death our Caesar tells
‘I am conqueror of myself. Thou art sworn, Eros,
That, when the exigent should come, which now
Is come indeed, when I should see behind me
The inevitable prosecution of Disgrace and horror, that, on my command,
Thou then wouldest kill me: do ‘t; the time is come:
Thou strikest not me, ’tis Caesar thou defeat’st.
Put colour in thy cheek.

The gods withhold me!

Shall I do that which all the Parthian darts,
Though enmity, lost aim, and could not?

\[Ant.\] Eros,
Wouldest thou be window’d in great Rome and see
Thy master thus with pleas’d arms, bending down
His corrigible neck, his face seduced
To penetrative shame, whilst the wheel’d seat
Of fortunate Caesar, drawn before him, branded
His baseness that ensured?

\[Eros.\] I would not see ‘t.

\[Ant.\] Come, then; for with a wound I must be cured.
Draw that thy honest sword, which thou hast worn
Most useful for thy country.

\[Eros.\] O, sir, pardon me!

\[Ant.\] When I did make thee free, sworest thou not then
To do this when I bade thee? Do it at once;
Or thy precedent services are all
But accidents unpurposed.

\[Eros.\] Turn from me, then, that noble countenance,
Wherein the worship of the whole world lies.

\[Ant.\] Lo thee! \[Turning from him.\]

\[Eros.\] My sword is drawn.

\[Ant.\] Then let it do at once
The thing why thou hast drawn it.

\[Eros.\] My dear master,
My captain, and my emperor, let me say,
Before I strike this bloody stroke, farewell.

\[Ant.\] ’T is said, man; and farewell.

\[Ant.\] Now, Eros.
ACT IV.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

SCENE XV.

Eros. Why, there then: thus I do escape the sorrow
Of Antony's death. [Kills himself.
Ant. Thrice-nobler lives kow, help, die, Noliest to The A[prithee. carry and.' How let but

First Guard. What's the noise? Ant. I have done my work ill, friends: O, make Of what I have begun. [an end
Sec. Guard. The star is fall'n.
First Guard. And time is at his period.
All. Ahas, and woe!
Ant. Let him that loves me strike me dead.
First Guard. Not I. Sec. Guard. Nor I.
Third Guard. Nor any one. [Exeunt Guard.

This sword but shown to Cesar, with this tidings, Shall enter me with him.

Enter Diomedes.

Dio. Where's Antony?
Der. There, Diomed there.

Ant. Art thou there, Diomed? Draw thy sword, and give me Suffering strokes for death.

Dio. My mistress Cleopatra sent me to thee.
Ant. When did she send thee?
Dio. Now, my lord.
Ant. Where is she?
Dio. Lock'd in her monument. She had a prophesying fear Of what hath come to pass: for when she saw — Which never shall be found — you did suspect She had disposed with Caesar, and that your rage Would not be purged, she sent you word she was dead; But, fearing since how it might work, hath sent Me to proclaim the truth; and I am come, I dread, too late. [prithee.
Ant. Too late, good Diomed: call my guard, I Dio. What, he, the emperor's guard! The guard, Come, your lord calls!

Enter four or five of the Guard of Antony.
Ant. Bear me, good friends, where Cleopatra abides; 'Tis the last service that I shall command you. First Guard. Woe, woe, are we, sir, you may not live to wear All your true followers out.
All. Most heavy day!
Ant. Nay, good my fellows, do not please sharp fate To grace it with your sorrows: bid that welcome Which comes to punish us, and we punish it Seeming to bear it lightly. Take me up: I have led you oft; carry me now, good friends, And have my thanks for all. [Exit, bearing Antony.

SCENE XV.—The same. A monument.

Enter Cleopatra, and her maids aloft, with Charmian and Iras.

Cleo. O Charmian, I will never go from hence.
Charm. Be comforted, dear madam.
Cleo. No, I will not:

All strange and terrible events are welcome, But comforts we despise; our size of sorrow, Proportion'd to our cause, must be as great As that which makes it.

Enter, below, Diomedes.

Dio. How now! is he dead?
Ant. His death's upon him, but not dead. Look out o' the other side your monument; His guard have brought him thither.

Enter, below, Antony, borne by the Guard
Cleo. O sun, Burn the great sphere thou movest in! darkling stand The varying shore o' the world. O Antony, Antony, Antony! Help, Charmian, help, Iras, help; Help, friends below; let's draw him hither.
Ant. Peace! Not Caesar's valour hath o'erthrown Antony, But Antony's hath triumphed on itself. Cleo. So it should be, that none but Antony Should conquer Antony: but woe 'tis so! Ant. I am dying, Egypt, dying; only I here importune death awhile, until Of many thousand kisses the poor last I lay upon thy lips.
Cleo. I dare not, dear,— Dear my lord, pardon, I dare not. Lest be taken: not the imperious show Of the full-fortuned Cesar ever shall Be brooch'd with me; if knife, drugs, serpents, have Edge, sting, or operation, I am safe: Your wife Octavia, with her modest eyes And still conclusion, shall acquire no honour Demurring upon me. But come, come, Antony,— Help me, my women,—we must draw thee up: Assist, good friends.
Ant. O, quick, or I am gone.
Cleo. Here's sport indeed! How heavy weigis Our strength is all gone into heaviness, [my lord! That makes the weight; had I great Juno's power, The strong-wing'd Mercury should fetch thee up, And set thee by Jove's side. Yet come a little,— Wishes were ever foils. — O, come, come, come; [They have Antony aloft to Cleopatra. And welcome, welcome! die where thou hast lived: Quicken with kisses: had my lips that power, Thus would I wear them out.
All. A heavy sight!
Ant. I am dying, Egypt, dying: Give me some wine, and let me speak a little. Cleo. No, let me speak; and let me rail so high, That the false housewife Fortune break her wheel, Provoked by my offence.
Ant. One word, sweet queen: Of Cesar seek your honour, with your safety. O! Cleo. They do not go together.
Ant. Gentle, hear me: None about Cesar trust but Proculus, Cleo. My resolution and my hands I'll trust; None about Cesar.
Ant. The miserable change now at my end Lament nor sorrow at; but please your thoughts In feeding them with those my former fortunes Wherein I lived, the greatest prince o' the world. The noblest; and do now not basely die, Nor cowardly put off my helmet to My countryman,—a Roman by a Roman Vainly vanquish'd. Now my spirit is going; I can no more.
Cleo. The crown o' the earth doth melt. My lord! O, wither'd is the Garland of the war,
ACT V.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

SCENE II.

The soldier's pole is fall'n: young boys and girls Are level now with men; the odds is gone, And there is nothing left remarkable Beneath the visiting moon. [Faints. Char. O, quietness, lady! Iris. She is dead too, our sovereign. Char. Lady! Iris. Char. O madam, madam, madam! Iris. Madam! Char. O madam, madam, madam! Iris. Royal Egypt, Empress! Cleo. Peace, peace, Iris! [minded Cho. No more, but e'en a woman, and cometh By such poor passion as the maid that milks And does the meanes't chores. It were for me To throw my sceptre at the injurious gods;

To tell them that this world did equal theirs Till they had stol'n our jewel. All's but naught; Patience is softish, and impatience does Become a dog that's mad: then is it sin To rush into the secret house of death. Ere death dare come to us? How do you, women? What, what! good cheer! Why, how now, Char- Mynoble girls! Ah, women, women, look, [mian! Our lamp is spent, it's out! Good sir, take heart; We'll bury him: and then, what's brave, what's Let's do it after the high Roman fashion, [noble. And make dear Cæsar, fly. Come, away: This case of that huge spirit now is cold; Ah, women, women! come: we have no friend But resolution, and the briefest end. [Exeunt; those above bearing off Antony's body.

ACT V.

Enter Cæsar, Agrippa, Dolabella, Mecenas, Gallus, Proculeius, and others, his council of war.

Cæs. Go to him, Dolabella, bid him yield; Being so frustrate, tell him he mocks The praises that he makes. Dol. Cæsar, I shall. [Exeit.

Enter Decretas, with the sword of Antony.

Cæs. Wherefore is that? and what art thou that Appear thus to us? [Darest

Decretas. I am call'd Decretas; Mark Antony I served, who best was worthy Best to be served; whilst he stood up and spoke, He was my master; and I wore my life To spend upon his haters. If thou please To take me to thee, as I was to him I'll be to Cæsar: if thou pleasest not, I yield thee up my life.

Cæs. What is't thou say'st? Dcr. I say, O Cæsar, Antony is dead.

Cæs. The breaking of so great a thing should make A greater crack: the round world Should have shook lions into civil streets, And citizens to their dens: the death of Antony Is not a single doom; in the name by A motley of the world.

Dcr. He is dead, Cæsar; Not by a public minister of justice, Nor by a hired knife: but that self hand, Which writ his honour in the acts it did, Hath, with the courage which the heart did lend it, Splitted the heart. This is his sword; I robb'd his wound of it; beheld it stain'd With his most noble blood.

Cæs. Look you sad, friends? The gods rebuke me, but it is tidings To wash the eyes of kings.

Agr. And strange it is, That nature must compel us to lament Our most persisted deeds.

Cæs. His taints and honours Waged equal with him.

Agr. A rarer spirit never Did steer humanity: but you, gods, will give us Some faults to make us men. Cæsar is touch'd. Mcr. When such a spacious mirror's set before He needs must see himself. [him, Cæs. O Antony! I have follow'd thee to this: but we do lance Diseases in our bodies: I must perform Have shown to thee such a declining day, Or look on time; we could not stand together In the whole world: but yet let me lament,

With tears as sovereign as the blood of hearts, That thou, my brother, my competitor In top of all design, my mate in empire, Friend and companion in the front of war, The arm of mine own body, and the heart Where mine his thoughts did kindle,—that our stars, Unreconcilable, should divide Our equalness to this. Hear me, good friends,— But I will tell you at some meeter season:

Enter an Egyptian.

The business of this man looks out of him: We'll hear him what he says. Whence are you? Egy. A poor Egyptian yet. Cæsar, I proceed The quality of her passion shall require, Lest, in her greatness, by some mortal stroke She do defeat us: for her life in Rome Would be eternal in our triumph: go, And with your speediest bring us what she says, And how you find of her.

Pro. Cæsar, I shall. [Exeit.

Cæs. Let him alone, for I remember now How he's employ'd: he shall in time be ready. Go with me to my tent; where you shall see How hardly I was drawn into this war; How calm and gentle I proceeded still In all my writings: go with me, and see What I can show in this.

SCENE II.—Alexandria. A room in the monument.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, and Iris.

Che. My dosolation does begin to make A better life. 'Tis pity to be Cæsar; Not being Fortune, he's got Fortune's knife, A minister of her will: and it is great To do that thing that ends all other deeds; Which shackles accidents and bolts up change; Which sleeps, and never palates more the dugs, The beggar's nurse and Cæsar's.
Enter, to the gates of the monarch, Proculeius, Gallus, and Soldiers.

Pro. Caesar sends greeting to the Queen of Egypt; And bids thee study on what fair demands Thou mean'st to have him grant thee.

Cleo. What's thy name?

Pro. My name is Proculeius.

Cleo. Antony Did tell me of you, bade me trust you; but I do not greatly care to be deceived, That have no use for trusting. If your master Would have a queen his beggar, you must tell him, That majesty, to keep decorum, must No less beg than a kingdom: if he please To give me conquer'd Egypt for my son, He gave me so much of mine own, as I Will kneel to him with thanks.

Pro. Be of good cheer; You're fall'n into a princely hand, fear nothing: Make your full reference freely to my lord, Who is so full of grace, that it flows over On all that need: let me report to him Your sweet dependency; and you shall find A conqueror that will pray in aid for kindness, Where he for grace is kneel'd to.

Cleo. Pray you, tell him I am his fortune's vassal, and I send him The greatness he has got. I hourly learn A doctrine of obedience; and would gladly Look him in the face.

Pro. This I'll report, dear lady. Have comfort, for I know your plight is pitied Of him that caused it.

God. You see how easily she may be surprised: [Here Proculeia and two of the Guard ascend the monumet by a ladder placed against a window, and, having descended, come behind Cleopatra. Some of the Guard unbar and open the gates.]

[To Proculeius and the Guard] Guard her till Caesar come. [Exit.]

Cleo. Quick, quick, good hands.

Dolabella.

Cleo. Do not yourself such wrong, who are in this Relieved, but not betray'd.

Cleo. What, of death too,

That rids our dogs of languish?

Cleo. Do not abuse my master's bounty by The undoing of yourself: let the world see His nobleness well acted, which your death Will never let come forth.

Cleo. Where art thou, death?

Pro. O, temperance, lady! Cleo. Sir, I will eat no meat, I'll not drink, sir:

If idle talk will once be necessary,

I'll not sleep neither: this mortal house I'll ruin,

Do Caesar what he can. Know, sir, that I

Will not wait pinion'd at your master's court;

Nor once be classtised with the sober eye

Of dull Octavius. Shall they hoist me up

And show me to the shouting varletie

Of censoring Rome? Rather a ditch in Egypt Be good grave unto me! rather on Niles' fond

Lay me stark naked, and let the water-dies

Blow me into abhorring! rather make

My country's high pyramids my gibbet,

And hang me up in chains!

Pro. You do extend These thoughts of horror further than you shall Find cause in Caesar.

Enter Dolabella.

Dol. What thou hast done thy master Caesar knows, And he hath sent for thee: for the queen, I'll take her to my guard.

Cleo. So, Dolabella, I shall content me best: be gentle to her. [please, [To Cleo. To Caesar I will speak what you shall If you'll employ me to him.

Cleo. Say, I would die.

Cleo. Do. Most noble empress, you have heard of me? Cleo. I cannot tell.

Dol. Cleo. No matter, sir, what I have heard or known. You laugh when boys or women tell their dreams; Is't not your trick?

Cleo. I understand not, madam.

Dol. Cleo. I dream'd there was an Emperor Antony: O, such another sleep, that I might see But such another man!

Dol. If it might please ye,— Cleo. His legs bestrid the ocean: his rear'd arm Crested the world; his voice was propertied As all the tuned spheres, and that to friends; But when he meant to quail and shake the orb, He was as rattling thunder. For his bounty, There was no winter in't; an autumn 'twas That grew the more by reaping: his delights Were dolphin-like; they show'd his back above The element they lived in: in his bribery [were Walk'd crowns and crowne'ts; realms and islands As plates dropp'd from his pocket.

Cleo. Cleopatra! Cleo. Think you there was, or might be, such a man As this I dream'd of?

Dol. Gentle madam, no.

Cleo. You lie, up to the hearing of the gods. But, if there be, or ever were, one such, It's past the size of dreaming: nature wants stuff To vie strange forms with fantasy; yet, to imagine An Antony, were nature's piece 'gainst fancy, Condemning shadows quite.

Dol. Hear me, good madam. Your loss is as yourself, great; and you bear it As answering to the weight: would I might never Overtake pursued success. But I do feel, By the rebound of yours, a grief that smites My very heart at root.

Cleo. I thank you, sir.

Know you what Caesar means to do with me?

Dol. I am loath to tell you what I would you knew.

Cleo. Nay, pray you, sir,—

Dol. Though be he honourable,—

Cleo. He'll lead me, then, in triumph?

Dol. Madam, he will: I know it. [Cesar!]

Dol. [Flourish and shout within, Make way there:]

Enter Caesar, Gallus, Proculeius, Mecenas, Selencus, and others of his Train.

Ces. Which is the Queen of Egypt?

Dol. It is the emperor, madam. [Cleopatra kneels.

Ces. Arise, you shall not kneel: I pray you, rise; rise, Egypt.

Cleo. Sir, the gods Will have it thus: my master and my lord I must obey.

Ces. Take to you no hard thoughts: The record of what injuries you did us, Though written in our flesh, we shall remember As this but done by chance.

Cleo. Sole sir o' the world, I cannot project mine own cause so well
To make it clear; but do confess I have
Bidden laden with like triflities which before
Have often shamed our speech.
Ces. Cleopatra, know,
We will extenuate rather than enforce:
If you apply yourself to our intents,
Which towards you are most gentle, you shall find
A benefit in this change; but if you seek
To lay on me a cruelty, by taking
Antony's course, you shall bereave yourself
Of my good purposes, and put your children
To that destruction which I 'll guard them from,
'Fth thereon you rely. 'T'll take my leave. [and we,
Cleo. Antony, through all the world: 'tis yours;
Your sentecnes and your signs of conquest, shall Hang in what place you please. Here, my good lord.
Ces. You shall advise me in all for Cleopatra.
Cleo. This is the brief of money, plate, and jewels,
I am possess'd of: 'tis exactly valued;
Not petty things admitted. Where's Selenus?
Sel. Here, madam. [lord,
Cleo. This is my treasurer: let him speak, my Upon his peril, that I have reserved
To my self nothing. Speak the truth, Selenus.
Sel. Madam,
I had rather seal my lips, than, to my peril,
Speak that which is not.
Cleo. What have I kept back?
Sel. Enough to purchase what you have made known.
Ces. Nay, blush not, Cleopatra; I approve
Your wisdom in the deed.
Cleo. See, Caesar! O, behold,
How pomp is follow'd! mine will now be yours;
And, should we shift estates, yours would be mine.
The ingratitude of this Selenus does
Even make me wail: O slave, of no more trust
Than love; that's hired! What, goest thou back?
Thou shalt.
Go back, I warrant thee; but I'll catch thine eyes,
Though they had wings: slave, soulless villain, dog! O rarely base!
Ces. Good queen, let us entreat you.
Cleo. O Caesar, what a wounding shame is this,
That thou, vouchsafing here to visit me,
Doing the honour of thy lordliness
To one so meek, that mine own servant should Parcel the sum of my disgraces by Addition of his envy! Say, good Caesar,
That I some lady tirles have reserved,
Immoveable toys, things of such dignity
As we greet modern friends withal; and say,
Some nobler token I have kept apart.
For Livia and Octavia, to induce
Their mediation; must I be unfolded
With one that I have bred? The gods! it smites
Me with the breadth, [To Selenus] Prithie, go
Or I shall show the cinders of my spirits [hence;
Through the ashes of my wight: wert thou a man,
Thou wouldst have mercy on me.
Ces. Forbear, Selenus. [Exit Selenus.
Cleo. Be it known, that we, the greatest, are misl Investors
For things that others do; and, when we fall,
We answer others' merits in our name,
Are therefore to be pitied.
Cleo. Cleopatra, [edged,
Not what you have reserved, nor what acknowledged;
But we 'll the roll of conquest: still be 't yours,
Bestow it at your pleasure; and believe,
Cesar's no merchant, to make prize with you
Of things that merchants sold. Therefore be cheer'd;
Make not your thoughts yet your prisons: no, do;
For we intend so to dispose you as Queen, yourself shall give us counsel. Feed, and sleep:
Our care and pity is so much upon you,
That we remain your friend; and so, adieu.
Cleo. My master, and my lord!
Ces. [Flourish. Except Caesar and his train.
Cleo. He words me, girls, he words me, that I should not.
Be noble to myself: but, hark thee, Charmian.
[Whispers Charmian.
Iros. Finish, good lady; the bright day is done,
And we are for the dark.
Cleo. He thee again:
I have spoke already, and it is provided;
Go put it to the haste.
Charm. Madam, I will.
Re-enter Dolabella.
Dol. Where is the queen?
Charm. Behold, sir. [Exit.
Cleo. Dolabella!
Dol. Madam, as thereto sworn by your command,
Which my love makes religion to obey,
I tell you this: Caesar through Syria
Intends his journey; and within three days
You with your children will be send before;
Make your best use of this: I have perform'd
Your pleasure and my promise.
Cleo. I shall remain your debtor.
Dol. I your servant.
Adieu, good queen; I must attend on Caesar,
Cleo. Farewell, and thanks. [Exit Dolabella.
Dol. Now, Iras, what think'st thou?
Thou, an Egyptian puppet, shall be shown
In Rome, as well as I: mechanic slaves,
With greasy aprons, rules, and hammers, shall Uplift us to the view; in their thick breaths,
Rank of gross diet, shall we be enclosed,
And forced to drink their vapour.
Iros. Of the gods forbid!
Cleo. Nay, 'tis most certain. Iras: saucy victors
Will catch at us, like strumpets; and scald rhymer
Ballad us out o' time: the quick comedians,
Extemporally will stage us, and present
Our Alexandrian revels; Antony
Shall be brought drunken forth, and I shall see
Some squeaking Cleopatra bawd my greatness
I' the posture of a whore... O the good gods!
Iros. I'll never see 't: for, I am sure, my nails
Are stronger than mine eyes.
Cleo. Why, that's the way
To fool their preparation, and to conquer
Their most absurd intents.
Re-enter Charmian.
Guard. Here is a rural fellow
That will not be denied, his highness' presence:
He brings you figs.
Cleo. Let him come in. [Exit Guardman.
Guard. What poor an instrument
May do a noble deed! he brings me liberty.
My resolution's placed, and I have nothing
Of woman in me: now from head to foot
I am marble-constant; now the fleeting moon
No planet is of mine.
Re-enter Guardman, with Clown bringing in a basket.
Guard. This is the man.

Cleo. Avoid, and leave him. [Exit Guardsman.]

Have then the pretty woman of Nium there, That kills and pain the spot?

Cleo. Truly, I have him: but I would not be the party that should desire you to touch him, for his biting is immortal; those that do die of it do seldom or never recover.

Cleo. Rememberest thou any that have died on’t?

I heard of one of them no longer than yesterday: a very honest woman, but something given to lie; as a woman should not do, but in the way of honesty: how she died of the biting of it what pain she felt: truly, she makes a very good report of the worm; but perhaps all that they say, shall never be saved by half that they do: but this is most fallible, the worm’s an odd worm.

Cleo. Get thee hence; farewell.

Cleo. I wish you all joy of the worm. [Setting down his basket.]

Cleo. Farewell.

Cleo. You must think this, look you, that the worm will do his kind.

Cleo. Ay, ay; farewell.

Cleo. Look you, the worm is not to be trusted but in the keeping of wise people; for, indeed, there is no goodness in the worm.

Cleo. Take thou no care; it shall be needed.

Cleo. Very good. Give it nothing, I pray you, for it is not worth the feeding.

Cleo. Will it eat me?

Cleo. You must not think I am so simple but I know the devil himself will not eat a woman: I know that a woman is a dish for the gods, if the devil dress her not. But, truly, these same whoreson devils do the gods great harm in their women: for in every ten that they make, the devils mar five.

Cleo. Well, get thee gone; farewell.

Cleo. Yes, forsooth: I wish you joy o’ the worm. [Exeunt.]

Re-enter Iras with a robe, crown, &c.

Cleo. Give me my robe, put on my crown; I have Immortal longings in me: now no more The juice of Egypt’s grape shall moist this lip: Yare, yare, good Iras; quick. Methinks I hear Antony call; I see him run me loose To praise my noble act; I hear him mock The luck of Cleopatra, which the gods give men To excuse their after wrath: husband, I come: Now to that name my courage prove my title! I am an object of other elements I give to baser life. So; have you done? Come then, and take the last warmth of my lips Farewell, kind Charmian; Iras, long farewell.

Have I the aspic in my lips? Dost fall?

If thou and nature can so gently part, The stroke of death is as a lover’s pinch, Which hurts, and is desired. Dost thou lie still? If thou vanishest, thou tell’st the world It is not worth leave-taking. [Say.]

Cleo. Dissolve, thick cloud, and rain; that I may The gods themselves do weep.

Cleo. This proves me base: If she first meet the curbed Antony, He’ll make demand of her, and spend that kiss Which is my heaven to have. Come, thou mortal wretch, Cleo. O eastern star! Peace, peace!

Dost thou not see my baby at my breast, That sucks the nurse asleep?

Char. O, break! O, break!

Cleo. As sweet as balm, as soft as air, as gentle,—

O Antony,—Nay, I will take thee too:

—Applying another asp to her arm.

What should I stay,—

Char. In this vile world? So, fare thee well.

Now boast thee, death, in thy possession lies A less unparallel’d. Downy windows, close; And golden Phoebeus never be beheld Of eyes again so royally! Your crown’s a awry; I’ll mend it, and then play.

Enter the Guard, rushing in.

First Guard. Where is the queen?

Char. Specialilly, wake her not.

First Guard. Cæsar hath sent —

Char. Too slow a messenger.

First Guard. [Applying asp.]

Char. O, come apace, dispatch! I partly feel thee.

First Guard. Approach, ho! All’s not well:

Cæsar’s begun. [Falls him.]

Sec. Guard. There’s Dolabella sent from Cæsar.

First Guard. What work is here! Charmian, is this well done?

Char. It is well done, and fitting for a princess Descended of so many royal kings.

Ah, soldier! Re-enter Dolabella.

Dol. How goes it here?

Sec. Guard. All dead.

Dol. Cæsar, thy thoughts Touch their effects in this: thyself art coming To see performed the dread act which thou So soughtst to hinder.

[Within. A way there, a way for Cæsar!]

Re-enter Cæsar and all his train, marching.

Dol. O sir, you are too sure an augurer; That you did fear is done.

Cæs. Bravest at the last, She level’d at our purposes, and, being royal, Took her own way. The manner of their deaths? I do not see them bleed.

Dol. Who was last with them?

First Guard. A simple countryman, that brought This was his basket. [Her tigs.]

Cæs. Poison’d, then.

First Guard. This Charmian lived but now; she stood and spake: I found her trimming up the diadem On her head mistress; tremblingly she stood And on the sudden drop’d.

Cæs. O noble weakness! If they had swallow’d poison, ’t would appear By external swelling: but she looks like sleep, As she would catch another Antony In her strong toil of grace.

Dol. Here, on her breast, There is a vent of blood and something blown: The like is on her arm.

First Guard. This is an aspic’s trail: and all these fig-leaves Have slime upon them, such as the aspic leaves Upon the eyebrows of Nile.

Cæs. Most probable That so she died; for her physician tells me She hath pursued conclusions infinite Of easy ways to die. Take up her bed; And let her women from the monument: She shall be buried by her Antony: No grave upon the earth shall clasp in it A pair so famous. High events as these Strike those that make them; and their story Is no less in pity than his glory which Brought them to be lamented. Our army shall In solemn show attend this funeral; And then to Rome. Come, Dolabella, see High order in this great solemnity. [Exit.]
ACT I.

SCENE I.—Britain. The garden of Cymbeline’s palace.

Enter Two Gentlemen.

First Gent. You do not meet a man but frowns:
our bloods
No more obey the heavens than our courtiers
Still seem as does the king.

Sec. Gent. But what’s the matter?

First Gent. His daughter, and the heir of ’s kingdom, whom
He purposed to his wife’s sole son—a widow
That late he married—hath refer’d herself
Unto a poor but worthy gentleman; she’s wedded;
Her husband banish’d; she imprison’d: all
Is outward sorrow; though I think the king
Be touch’d at very heart.

Sec. Gent. None but the king?

First Gent. He that hath lost her too; is so is the queen,
That most desired the match; but not a courtier,
Although they wear their faces to the bent
Of the king’s looks, hath a heart that is not Glad at the thing they scowl at.

Sec. Gent. And why so? [thing

First Gent. He that hath miss’d the princess is a
Too bad for bad report: and he that hath her—
I mean, that married her, alack, good man!
And therefore banish’d—is a creature such
As, to seek through the regions of the earth
For one his like, there would be something failing
In him that should compare. I do not think
So fair an outward and such stuff within Endows a man but he.

Sec. Gent. You speak him far.

First Gent. I do extend him, sir, within himself,
Crush him together rather than unfold
His measure duly.

Sec. Gent. What’s his name and birth?

First Gent. I cannot delve him to the root: his father
Was call’d Sicilius, who did join his honour
Against the Romans with Cassiebean,
But had his titles by Tenantium whom
He served with glory and admired success,
So gain’d the sur-addition Leonatus:
And had, besides this gentleman in question,
Two other sons, who in the wars of the time
Died with their swords in hand; for which their father,
Then old and fond of issue, took such sorrow
That he quit being, and his gentle lady,
Big of this gentleman our theme, deceased
As he was born. The king he takes the babe
To his protection, calls him Posthumus Leonatus,
Breed him and makes him of his bed-chamber,
Puts to him all the learnings that his time
Could make him the receiver of; which he took,
As we do air; fast as ’t was minister’d,
And in’s spring became a harvest, lived in court—
Which rare it is to do—most praised, most loved,
A sample to the youngest, to the more mature
A glass that feasted them, and to the graver
A child that guided dotards: to his mistress,
For whom he now is banish’d, her own price
Proclaims how she esteem’d him and his virtue;
By her election may be truly read
What kind of man he is.

Sec. Gent. I honour him
Even out of your report. But, pray you, tell me,
Is she sole child to the king?

First Gent. His only child.
He had two sons: if this be worth your hearing,
Mark it: the eldest of them at three years old,
I’ the swathing-clothes the other, from their nursery
Were stol’n, and to this hour no guess in knowledge
Which way they went.

Sec. Gent. How long is this ago?

First Gent. Some twenty years. [convey’d,

Sec. Gent. That a king’s children should be so
So slackly guarded, and the search so slow,
That could not trace them!}
ACT I.

CYMBELINE.

SCENE I.

First Gent. Howsoe'ER 't is strange, Or that the negligence may well be laugh'd at, Yet is it true, sir.

Sec. Gent. I do well believe you.

First Gent. We must forbear: here comes the gentleman,
The queen, and princess. [Exit.

Enter the Queen, Posthumus, and Imogen.

Queen. No, be assured you shall not find me, After the slander of most stepmothers, [daughter, Evil-eyed unto you: you're my prisoner, but Your gaoler shall deliver you the keys That lock up your restraint. For you, Posthumus, So soon as I can win the offended king, I will be known your advocate: marry, yet The fire of rage is in him, and 't is good You leant unto his sentence with what patience Your wisdom may inform you.

Post. Please your highness, I will from hence to-day. You know the peril. I'll fetch a turn about the garden, pitting The pangs of bard'd affections, though the king Hath charged you should not speak together. [Exit.

Imo. Dissembling courtesy! How fine this tyrant Can tinkle where she wounds? My dearest husband, I something fear my father's wrath: but nothing— Always reserved my holy duty—what His rage can do on me: you must be gone; And I shall here abide the hourly shot Of angry eyes, not comforted to live, But that there is this jewel in the world That I may see again.

Post. My queen! my mistress! O lady, weep no more, lest I give cause To be suspected of more tenderness Than doth become a man. I will remain The loyal'st husband that did ever plight troth: My residence in Rome at one Philario's, Who to my father was a friend, to me Known but by letter: thither write, my queen, And with mine eyes I'll drink the words you send, Though ink be made of gall.

Re-enter Queen.

Queen. Be brief, I pray you: If the king come, I shall incur I know not How much of his displeasure. [Aside Yet I'll move him To walk this way: I never do him wrong, But he does buy my injuries, to be friends; Pays dear for my offences. [Exit.

Post. Should we be taking leave As long a term as yet we have to live, The loathness to depart would grow. Adieu! Imo. Nay, stay a little: Were you but riding forth to air yourself, Such parting were too petty. Look here, love; This diamond was my mother's: take it, heart; But keep it till you woo another wife, When Imogen is dead.

Post. How, how! another? You gentle gods, give me but this I have, And sear up my embracements from a next With bonds of death! [Putting on the ring.] Remain, remain thon here While sense can keep it on. And, sweetest, fairest, As I my poor self did exchange for you, To your so infinite loss, so in our trible I still win of you: for my sake wear this; It is a manacle of love; 't is call to Upon this fairest prisoner.

Imo. [Putting a bracelet upon her arm. O the gods!

When shall we see again?

Enter Cymbeline and Lords.

Post. Alack, the king! Cym. Thou basest thing, avoid! hence, from my sight! If after this command thou fraught the court With thy unworthiness, thou diest: away! Thou 'rt poison to my blood.

Post. The gods protect you! And bless the good remainders of the court! I am gone. [Exit.

Imo. There cannot be a pinch in death More sharp than this. Cym. O disloyal thing, That shouldst repair my youth, thou hast A year's age on me. Imo. I beseech you, sir, Harm not yourself with your vexation: I am senseless of your wrath; a touch more rare Subdues all pangs, all fears. Cym. Past grace? obedience? Imo. Past hope, and in despair; that way, past grace. Cym. That mightst have had the sole son of my Imo. O blist, that I might not! I chose an eagle, And did avoid a puttock. [my throne Cym. Thou took'st a beggar; wouldst have made A seat for baseness. Imo. No: I rather added A lustre to it. Cym. O thou vile one! Sir, It is your fault that I have loved Posthumus: You bred him as my playfellow, and he is A man worth any woman, overbuys me Almost the sum he pays.

Imo. What, art thou mad? Cym. Almost, sir; heaven restore me! Would I A neat-herd's daughter, and my Leonatus [were Our neighbour shepherd's son! Cym. Thou foolish thing! Re-enter Queen.

They were again together: you have done Not after our command. Away with her, And pen her up. Bequeen your patience. Peace, Dear lady daughter, peace! Sweet sovereign, Leave us to ourselves; and make yourself some Out of your best advice. [comfort Nay, let her languish A drop of blood a day: and, being aged, Die of this folly! [Exit Cymbeline and Lords. Quees. Fie! you must give way.

Enter Pisanio.

Here is your servant. How now, sir! What news? Pis. My lord your son drew on my master. Queen. No harm, I trust, is done? Pis. There might have been, But that my master rather play'd than fought And had no help of anger; they were parted By gentlemen at hand. Queen. I am very glad on't. Pis. Your son's my father's friend; he takes his To draw upon an exile! O brave sir! [part. I would they were in Afric both together; Myself by with a needle, that I might prick The goer-tack. Way came you from your master? Pis. On his command; he would not suffer me To bring him to the haven; left these notes Of what commands I should be subject to, When 't pleased you to employ me.

Queen. This hath been. Your faithful servant: I dare lay mine honour He will remain so.
Cymbeline.

ACT I.

I humbly thank your highness.
Queen. Pray, walk awhile.

II. About some half-hour hence, I pray you, speak with me: you shall at least Go see my lord aboard: for this time leave me.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same. A public place.

Enter Cloten and two Lords.

First Lord. Sir, I would advise you to shift a shirt: the violence of action hath made you reek as a sacrifice: where air comes out, air comes in: there’s none abroad so wholesome as that you vent.

Cloten. If my shirt were bloody, then to shift it.

Have I hurt him?

Sec. Lord. [Aside] No, faith: not so much as his patience.

First Lord. Hurt him! his body’s a passable curass, if he be not hurt: it is a thoroughfare for steel, if it be not hurt.

Sec. Lord. [Aside] His steel was in debt; it went o’ the backside the town.

Cloten. The villain would not stand me.

Sec. Lord. [Aside] No; but he fled forward still, toward your face.

First Lord. Stand you! You have land enough of your own; but he added to your having; gave you some ground.

Sec. Lord. [Aside] As many inches as you have oceans. Puppets!

Cloten. I would they had not come between us.

Sec. Lord. [Aside] So would I, till you had measured how long a fool you were upon the ground.

Cloten. And that she should love this fellow and refuse me!

Sec. Lord. [Aside] If it be a sin to make a true election, she is damned.

First Lord. Sir, as I told you always, her beauty and her brain go not together: she’s a good sign, but I have seen small reduction of her wit.

Sec. Lord. [Aside] She shines not upon fools, lest the reflection should hurt her.

Cloten. Come, I’ll to my chamber. Would there had been some hurt done!

Sec. Lord. [Aside] I wish not so; unless it had been the fall of an ass, which is no great hurt.

Cloten. You’ll go with us?

First Lord. I’ll attend your lordship.

Cloten. Nay, come, let’s go together.

Sec. Lord. Well, my lord.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A room in Cymbeline’s palace.

Enter Imogen and Pisanio.

Imo. I would thou g sav’st unto the shores o’ the haven,
And question’d every sail: if he should write,
And I not have it, ’twere a paper lost,
As offer’d mercy is. What was the last
That he spake to thee?

Pisanio. It was his queen, his queen!

Imo. Then waved his handkerchief?

Pisanio. And kiss’d it, madam.

Imo. Senseless linen! happier thence than I!

And that was all?

Pisanio. No, madam; for so long
As he could make me with this eye or ear
Distinguish him from others, he did keep
The deck, with glove, or hat, or handkerchief,
Still waving, as the fits and stirs of his mind
Could best express how slow his soul sail’d on,
How swift his ship.

Imo. Thou shouldst have made him
As little as a crow, or less, ere left
To after-eye him.

Pisanio. Madam, so I did.

Imo. I would have broke mine eye-strings; crack’d
To look upon him, till the diminution [them, but
Of space had pointed him sharp as my needle,
Nay, follow’d him, till he had melted from
The smallness of a great to air; and then
Have turn’d mine eye and wept. But, good Pisanio,
When shall we hear from him?

Pisanio. De be assure, madam,
With his next vantage.

Imo. I did not take my leave of him, but had
Most pretty things to say: ere I could tell him
How I would think on him at certain hours
Such thoughts and such, or I could make him swear
The shes of Italy should not betray
Mine interest and his honour, or have charged him,
At the sixth hour of morn, at noon, at midnight,
To encounter with me: fit, for then
I am in heaven for him; or ere I could Give him that parting kiss which I had set
Betwixt two charming words, comes in my father
And like the tyrannous breathing of the north
Shakes all our buds from growing.

Enter a Lady.

Lady. The queen, madam, Desires your highness’ company.

Imo. Those things I bid you do, get them dis-
I will attend the queen.

Pisanio. Madam, I shall. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Rome. Philario’s house.

Enter Philario, Iachimo, a Frenchman, a Dutchman, and a Spaniard.

Iach. Believe it, sir, I have seen him in Britain: he was then of a crescent note, expected to prove so worthy as since he hath been allowed the name of; but I could then have looked on him without the help of admiration, though the catalogue of his endowments had been tabulated by his side and I to peruse him by items.

Phil. You speak of him when he was less furnished than now he is with that which makes him both without and within.

French. I have seen him in France: we had very many there could behold the sun with as firm eyes as.

Iach. This matter of marrying his king’s daughter, wherein he must be weighed rather by her value than his own, words him, I doubt not, a great deal from the matter.

French. And then his banishment.

Iach. Ay, and the approbation of those that weep this lamentable divorce under her colours are wonderfully to extend him; be it but to fortify her judgment, which else an easy battery might lay flat, for taking a beggar without less quality. But how comes it he is sojourning with you? How creeps acquaintance?

Phil. His father and I were soldiers together; to whom I have been often bound for no less than my life. Here comes the Briton: let him be so entertained amongst you as suits, with gentlemen of your knowing, to a stranger of his quality.

Enter Posthumus.

I beseech you all, be better known to this gentleman: whom I commend to you as a noble friend of mine: how worthy he is I will leave to appear hereafter, rather than story him in his own hearing.

French. With me have known together in Orleans.

Post. Since when I have been debtor to you for courtesies, which I will be ever to pay and yet pay still.

French. Sir, you o’er-rate my poor kindness: I was glad I did atone my countryman and you: it had been pity you should have been put together with so mortal a purpose as then each bore, upon importance of so slight and trivial a nature.

777

Post. Not,pardon, sir, I was then a young traveller; rather summoned to go even with what I heard than in my every action to be guided by others' experiences: but upon my mended judgment—if I offend not to say it is mended—my quarrel was not altogether slight.

Iach. Faith, you both be put to the arbitrement of sword, and such two that would by all likelihood have confounded one the other, or have fallen both.

Iach. Can we, with manners, ask what was the difference?

Post. Safely, I think: 'twas a contention in public, which may, without contradiction, suffer the report. It was much like an argument that fell out last night, where each of us fell in praise of our country mistresses; this gentleman at that time vouching—and upon warrant of bloody affirmation—his to be more fair, virtuous, wise, chaste, constant-qualifying and less attemptable than any the rarest of our ladies in France.

Iach. That lady is not now living, or this gentleman's opinion by this worn out.

Post. She holds her virtue still and I my mind.

Iach. You must not so far prefer her 'fore ours of Italy.

Post. Being so far provoked as I was in France, I would shatter her nothing, though I profess myself her adorer, not her friend.

Iach. As far and as good—a kind of hand-in-hand comparison—had been something too fair and too good for any lady in Britain. If she went before others I have seen, as that diamond of yours outlustres many I have beheld, I could not but believe she excelled many; but I have not seen the most precious diamond that is, nor you the lady.

Post. I praised her as I rated her: so do I my stone.

Iach. What do you esteem it at?

Post. More than the world enjoys.

Iach. Either your unparagoned mistress is dead, or she's outprized by a trifle.

Post. You are mistaken; the one may be sold, or given, if there were wealth enough for the purchase, or no more. Nothing is not a thing for sale, and only the gift of the gods.

Iach. Which the gods have given you?

Post. Which, by their graces, I will keep.

Iach. You may wear her in title yours; but, you know, strange fowl light upon neighbouring ponds.
Your motto too was: 'Come, to be bought only by your price of unparagoned sports; the one is but frail and the other casual; a cunning thief, or a that way accomplished courtier, would hazard the winning both of first and last.

Post. Your Italy contains none so accomplished a courtier to convince the honour of my mistress, if, in nothing but lose of that, you term her frail.
I do nothing but you have store of thieves; notwithstanding, I fear not my ring.

Phi. Let us leave here, gentlemen.

Post. Sir, with all my heart. This worthy signior,
I think what makes no stranger of me; we are familiar at first.

Iach. With five times so much conversation, I should get ground of your fair mistress, make her back, even to the yielding, had I admittance and opportunity to friend.

Post. I do, no.

Iach. I dare thereupon pawn the moiety of my estate to your ring; which, in my opinion, o'er-values it something: but I make my wager rather against your confidence than her reputation: and, to bar your offence herein too, I durst attempt it again in any heart in this world.

Post. You are a great deal abused in too bold a persuasion; and I doubt not you sustain what you're worthy of by your attempt.

Iach. Why, this, Post: a repulse: though your attempt,
as you call it, deserve more; a punishment too.

Phi. Gentlemen, enough of this: it came in too suddenly; let it die as it was born, and, I pray you,
be better acquainted.

Iach. Yours; whom in constancy you think stands so safe. I will lay you ten thousand ducats to your ring, that, commend me to the court where you kind I'll have thee more advantage than the opportunity of a second conference, and I will bring from thence that honour of hers which you imagine so reserved.

Post. I will wage against your gold, gold to It:
my ring I hold dear as my finger; 'tis part of it.

Iach. You are afraid, and there'm the wiser. If you buy ladies' flesh at as much a dram, you cannot preserve it from tainting: but I see you have some religion in you, that you fear.

Post. This is but a custom in your tongue; you bear a graver purpose, I hope.

Iach. I am the master of my speeches, and would undergo no other spoken, I swear.

Post. Will you? I shall but lend my diamond till your return; let there be covenants drawn between 's: my mistress exceeds in goodness the huelessness of your unworthy thinking: I dare you to this match: here's my ring.

Phi. I will have it no lay.

Iach. By the gods, it is one. If I bring you no sufficient testimony that I have enjoyed the dearest bodily part of your mistress, my ten thousand ducats are yours; so is your diamond too: I if I come off, and leave her in such honour as you have trust-in, she your jewel, this your jewel, and my gold are yours: provided I have your commendation for my more free entertainment.

Post. I embrace these conditions; let us have articles betwixt us. Only, thus far you shall answer: if you make your voyage upon her and give me directly to understand you have prevailed,
I am no further your enemy; she is not worth our debate: if she remain unseduced, you not making it appear otherwise, for your ill opinion and the assault you have made to her chastity you shall answer me with your sword.

Iach. So then, I have a covenant: we will have these things set down by lawful counsel, and straight away for Britain, lest the bargain should catch cold and starve: I will fetch my gold and have our two wagers recorded.

Post. Agreed.

[Exeunt Posthumus and Iachino.

Phi. Will this hold, think you?

Phi. Signior Iachino will not from it. Pray, let us follow 'em.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Britain. A room in Cymbeline's palace.

Enter Queen, Ladies, and Cornelius.

Queen. Whiles yet the dew's on ground, gather those flowers;
Make haste: who has the note of them?

First Lady. Post, madam. [Exeunt.

Queen, Dispatch.

Now, master doctor, have you brought those drugs?
Cor. Pleaseth your highness, ay; here they are,
madam: [Presenting a small box.
But I beseech your grace, without offence—
My conscience bids me ask—wherefore you have Commanded of me these most poisonous com-

[778]
Which are the movers of a languishing death;
But though slow, deadly?

Queen. I wonder, doctor,
Thou ask'st me such a question. Have I not been Thy pupil long? Hast thou not learn'd me how
To make perfumes? distil? preserve? yea, so
That our great king himself doth woo me oft
For my confections? Having thus far proceeded,— Unless this with such a villain - is 't not meet
That I did amplify my judgment in
Other conclusions? I will try the forces
Of these thy compounds on such creatures as
We count not worth the hanging, but none human,
To try the vigour of them and apply
Alchymists to their art: and let them gather
Their several virtues and effects.
Cor. Your highness
Shall from this practice but make hard your heart:
Besides, the seeing these effects will be
Both noisome and infectious.
Queen. O, content thee.

Enter Pisanio.
[Aside] Here comes a flattering rascal; upon him
Will I first work: he's for his master,
And enemy to my son. How now, Pisanio!
Doctor, your services for this time is ended;
Take your own way.
Cor. [Aside] I do suspect you, madam;
But you shall do no harm.
Queen. [To Pisanio] Fear thee, a word. [she has Cor. [Aside] I do not like her. She doth think
Strange lingering poisoses: I do know her spirit,
And will not trust one of her malice with
A drug of such damn'd nature. Those she has
Will stupify and dull the sense awhile: [dogs,
Which first, perchance, she'll prove on cats and Then afterward up higher: but there is
No danger in what show of death it makes,
More than the locking up the spirits a time,
To be more fresh, reviving. She is fool'd
With a most false effect; and I the truer,
So to be false with her.
Queen.

No further service, doctor,
Until I send for thee.
Cor. I humbly take my leave. [Exit.
Queen. Weeps she still, say'st thou? Dost thou think in time
She will not quench and let instructions enter
Where folly now possesses? Do thou work:
When thou bring me word she loves my son,
I'll make thee to the instant thou art then
As great as is thy master, greater, for
His fortunes all lie speechless and his name
Is at last gasp: return he cannot, nor Continue where he is; to shift his being
Is to exchange one misery with another,
And every day that comes comes to decay
A day's work in him. What shall thou expect,
To be dependant on a thing that leas,
Who cannot be new built, nor has no friends,
So much as but to prop him? [The Queen drops the Pisanio take it up.]
Thou know'st not what? but take it for thy labour:
It is a thing I made, which hath the king
Five times redeem'd from death: I do not know
What is more cordial. Nay, I prithee, take it;
It is an earnest of a further good
That I mean to thee. Tell thy mistress how
The case stands with her; do's as from thyself.
Think what a chance thou changest on, but think
Thou hast thy mistress still, to look, my son,
Who shall take notice of thee? I'll move the king
To any shape of thy preferment such
As thou 'lt desire; and then myself, I chiefly,
That all to thee on this desert, and beyond
To load thy merit richly. Call my women;

Think on my words. [Exit Pisanio.
Not to be shook: the agent for his master,
And the remembrancer of her to hold
The hand-fast to her lord. I have given him that Which, if he take, shall quite unpeopple her
Of liegers for her sweet, and which she after,
Except she bend her humour, shall be assured
To taste of too.

Re-enter Pisanio and Ladies.
So, so; well done, well done:
The violets, cowslips, and the primroses,
Bear to my closet. Fare thee well, Pisanio;
Talk on my words. [Exit Queen and Ladies.
Pis. And shall do:
But when to my good lord I prove untrue,
I'll chose myself: there's all I'll do for you. [Exit.

SCENE VI.—The same. Another room in the palace.

Enter Imogen.
Iio. A father cruel, and a step-dame false;
A foolish suitor to a wedded lady.
That hath her husband banish'd?—o, that husband!
My suprême crown of grief! and those repeated
Vexations of it! Had I been thief-stol'n,
As my two brothers, happy! but most miserable
Is the desire that's glorious: blest be those,
How mean see'er, that have their honest wills,
Which seasons comfort. Who may this be? Fie!

Enter Pisanio and Iachimo.
Pis. Madam, a noble gentleman of Rome,
Comes from my lord with letters.

Lch. Change you, madam?
The worthy Leonatus is in safety
And gretets your highness dearly. [Presents a letter.
Iio. Thanks, good sir; [rich
You're kindly welcome.
Lch. [Aside] All of her that is out of door most
If she be furnish'd with a mind so rare,
She is alone the Arabian bird, and I
Have lost the wager. Boldness be my friend!
Arm me, audacity, from head to foot!
Or, like the Parthian, I shall flying fight;
Rather, directly fly.
Iio. [Reads] 'He is one of the noblest note to whose kindnesses I am most infinitely tied. Reflect on him accordingly, as you value your trust—— Leonatus,'

So far I read aloud:
But even the very middle of my heart
Is warm'd by the rest, and takes it thankfully.
You are as welcome, worthy sir, as I
Have words to bid you, and shall find it so
In all that I can do.

Lch. Thanks, fairest lady.
What are men mad? Hath nature given them eyes
To see this vaulted arch, and the rich crop
Of sea and land, which can distinguish 'twixt
The fiery orbs above and the twin'd stones
Upon the number'd beach? and can we not Partition make with spectacles so precious
'Twixt fair and foul?

Iio. What makes your admiration?

Lch. It cannot be I the eye, forapes and monkeys
Would snatch two by the tail, and she would clatter this way and Contend with mows the other; nor I 'the judgment,
For idiots in this case of favour would
Be wisely definite; nor I 'the appetite;
Sluttish to such neat excellence opposed
Should make desire vomit emptines,
Not so allured to test.

Iio. What is the matter, trow?

Lch. The cloyed will,
That satiate yet unsatisfied desire, that tug
Both ill'd and running, ravening first the lamb
Longs after for the garbage.

Ino. What, dear sir, thus rap'st thou? Are you well?

Iach. Thanks, madam; well. [To Pisarnio] Be seech you, sir, desire
My man's abode where I did leave him: he
Is strange and peevish.

Pis. I was going, sir,
To give him welcome. [Exit.

Ino. Continues well my lord? His health, be seech you?

Iach. Well, madam.

Ino. Is he disposed to mirth? I hope he is.

Iach. Exceeding pleasant; none a stranger there
So merry and so gamsome: he is call'd
The Briton reveller.

Ino. When he was here,
He did incline to sadness, and oft-times
Not knowing why.

Iach. I never saw him sad.

There is a Frenchman his companion, one
An eminent Monsieur, that, it seems, much loves
A Gallian girl at home: he furnaces
The thick sighs from him, whiles the jolly Briton —
Your lord, I mean — laughs from a free lungs, cries
"O.

Can my sides hold, to think that man, who knows
By history, report, or his own proof,
What woman is, yea, what she cannot choose
But must be, will his free hours languish for Assured bondage?

Ino. Will my lord say so?

Iach. Ay, madam, with his eyes in flood with
It is a recreation to be
[laughter: And hear him mock the Frenchman. But, heavens
Some men are much to blame. [know
Ino. Not he, I hope.

Iach. Not he: but yet heaven's bounty towards him might
Be used more thankfully. In himself, 'tis much;
In you, which I account his beyond all talents,
Whilst I am bound to wonder, I am bound
To pity too.

Ino. What do you pity, sir?

Iach. Two creatures heartily.

Ino. Am I one, sir?

You look on me; what wretch discern you in me
Deserves your pity?

Lamentable! What, To hide me from the radiant sun and solace
I' the dungeon by a snuff?

Ino. I pray you, sir,
Deliver with more openness your answers
To my demands. Why do you pity me?

Iach. That others do —
I was about to say — enjoy your — But
It is an office of the gods to venge it,
Not mine to speak on't.

Ino. You do seem to know
Something of me, or what concerns me; pray you,—
Since doubting things go ill often hurts more
Than to be sure they do; for certainties
Either are past remedies, or, timely knowing,
The remedy then born — discover to me
What both you spur and stop.

Iach. Had I this cheek
To bathe my lips upon; this hand, whose touch,
Whose every touch, would force the feeler's soul
To the oath of loyalty; this object, which Takes prisoner the wild motion of mine eye,
Fixing it only here; should I, d'arm'd then,
Slaver with lips as common as the stairs
That mount the Capitol; join gripes with hands
Made hard with hourly falsehood — falsehood, as
With labour; then by-peeping in an eye

Base and unlustreous as the smoky light
That's fed with stinking tallow: it were fit
That all the plagues of hell should at one time
Encounter such revolt.

Ino. My lord, I fear,
Has forgot Britain.

Iach. And himself. Not I,
Inclined to this intelligence, pronounce
The beggary of his change: but 'tis your graces
That from my moste conscience to my tongue
Charm this report out.

Ino. Let me hear no more.

Iach. O dearest soul! your cause doth strike my heart
With pity, that doth make me sick. A lady
So fair, and fasten'd to an empery, [ner'd
Would make the great'st king double, — to be part-
With tomboys hired with that self-exhibition
Which your own coffer yields! with devised ventures
That play with all infirmities for gold
Which rottenness can lend nature! such bold stuff
As well might poison poison! Be revenged;
Or she that bore you was no queen, and you
Recoil from your great stock.

Ino. Revenged!

How should I be revenged? If this be true, —
As I have such a heart that both mine ears
Must not in haste abuse — if it be true,
How should I be revenged?

Iach. Should he make me live,
Like Diana's priest, between cold sheets,
Whiles he is vaulting variable rumps,
In your desire, upon your purée! Revenget.
I dedicate myself to your sweet pleasure,
More noble than runagate to your bed,
And will continue fast to your affection,
Still close as sure.

Ino. What, ho, Pisarnio!

Iach. Let me my service tender on your lips.

Ino. Away! I do condemn mine ears that have
So long attended thee. If thou wert honourable,
Thou wouldst have told this tale for virtue, not
For such an end thou seekst, — as base as strange.
Thou wrong'st a gentleman, who is as far
From thy report as thou from honour, and Solicit'st here a lady that disdains
Thee and the devil alike. What ho, Pisarnio!

The king my father shall be made acquainted
Of thy assault: if he shall think it fit,
A saucy stranger in his court to part
As in a Romish stew and to expound
His beastly mind to us, he hath a court
He little cares for and a daughter who
He not respects at all. What, ho, Pisarnio!

Iach. O happy Leonatus! I may say:
The credit that thy lady hath of thee
Deserves thy trust, and thy most perfect goodness
Her assured credit. Blessed live you long!
A lady to the worthiest sir that ever
Country call'd his! and you his mistress, only
For the most worthiest fit! Give me your pardon.
I have spoke this, to know if your affiance
Were deeply rooted; and shall make your lord,
That which he is, new o'er: and he is one
The truest manner'd; such a holy witch
That he enchains societies into him;
Half all men's hearts are his.

Iach. You make amends.

Iach. He sits 'mongst men like a descended god:
He hath a kind of honour sets him off,
More than a mortal seeming. Be not angry,
Most mighty princess, that I have adventured
To try your fancy, of a fair sir, I that Honour'd with confirmation your great judgment
In the election of a sir so rare.

Which you know cannot err: the love I bear him

780
Made me to fan you thus, but the gods made you,
Unlike all others, chafless. Pray, your pardon.

Ino. All's well, sir: take my power I the court for yours.

Ich. My humble thanks. I had almost forgot
To entreat your grace but in a small request,
And yet of moment too, for it concerns
Your lord; myself and other noble friends,
Are partners in the business.

Clo. Pray, what is 't?

Ich. Some dozen Romans of us and your lord—
The best feather of our wing—have mingled sums
To buy a present for the emperor;
Which I, the factor for the rest, have done
In France; 'tis plate of rare device, and jewels Of rare and exquisite form; their values great,
And I am something curious, being strange,
To have them in safe stowage: may it please you
To take them in protection?

Ino. Willingly;
And pawn mine honour for their safety: since
My lord hath interest in them, I will keep them
In my bedchamber.

Ino. They are in a trunk,
Attended by my men: I will make bold
To send them to you, only for this night:
I must abate to-morrow.

Ino. O, no, no.

Ich. Yes, I beseech you, shall short my word
By lengthening my return. From Gallia
I cross'd the seas on purpose and on promise
To see your grace.

Ino. I thank you for your pains:
But not away to-morrow!

Ich. O, I must, madam:
Therefore I shall beseech you, if you please.
To greet your lord with writing, do't to-night:
I have outstayed my time: which is material
To the tender of our present.

Ino. I will write.
Send your trunk to me; it shall safe be kept,
And truly yielded you. You're very welcome.

[Exit.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Britain. Before Cymbeline's palace.

Enter Cloten and two Lords.

Clo. Was there ever man had such luck! when I
Kissed the jacks, upon an up-cast to be lift away! I
Had a hundred pound on 't: and then a whoreson
Jackstraws must take me up for swearing: as if I
Borrowed mine oats of him and might not spend
Them at my pleasure.

First Lord. What got he by that? You have Broke his pate with your bowl.

Sec. Lord. [Aside] If his wit had been like him
That broke it, it would have run all out.

Clo. When a gentleman is disposed to swear,
It is not for any standers-by to curtail his oaths, ha?

Sec. Lord. No, my lord; [Aside] nor crop the Ears of them.

Clo. Whoreson dog! I give him satisfaction?
Would he had been one of my rank!

Sec. Lord. [Aside] To have smelt like a fool.

Clo. I am not vexed more at any thing in the Earth: a posx on 't! I had rather not be so noble as I am; they dare not fight with me, because of the Queen my mother: every Jack-slash hath his belly-of feathers, and I must go up and down like a cock that nobody can match.

Sec. Lord. [Aside] You are cock and capon too;
And you crow, cock, with your comb on.

Clo. Sayest thou?

Sec. Lord. It is not fit your lordship should undertake every companion that you give offence to.

Clo. No, I know that: but it is I should commit offence to my inferiors.

Sec. Lord. Ay, it is fit for your lordship only.

Clo. Why, so I say.

First Lord. Did you hear of a stranger that's come to court to-night?

Clo. A stranger, and I not know on 't!

Sec. Lord. [Aside] He's a strange fellow himself,
And knows it not.

First Lord. There's an Italian come; and, 'tis thought, one of Leonatus's friends.

Clo. Leonatus! a banished rascal; and he's Another, whatsoever he be. Who told you of this stranger?

First Lord. One of your lordship's pages.

Clo. Is it fit I went to look upon him? is there no derogration in 't?

Sec. Lord. You cannot derogate, my lord.

Clo. Not easily, I think.
ACT II.

SCENE III.

Perfumes the chamber thus: the flame of the taper Bows toward her, and would under-weep her lids, To see the enclosed lights, now canopied Under these windowes, white and azure lined With blue of heaven’s own tint. But my design, To note the chamber: I will write all down: Such and such pictures; there the window: such The adornment of her bed: the arms; figures, Why, such and such; and the contents of the story. Ah, but some natural notes about her body, Above ten thousand tender movables Would testify, to enrich mine inventory. O sleep, thou ape of death, lie dull upon her! And be her sense but as a monument, Thus in a chapel lying! Come off, come off: Taking off her bracelet, As slippery as the Gordian knot was hard! 'Tis mine; and this will witness outwardly, As strongly as the conscience does within, To the melding of her lord. On her left breast A mole cinque-spotted, like the crimson drops I'th the bottom of a cowslip; here's a voucher, Stronger than ever law could make: this secret Will force him think I have pick'd the lock and ta'en The treasure of her honour. No more. To what end? Why should I write this down, that's riveted, Screw'd in my memory? She hath been reading late The tale of Tereus: here the leaf's turned down Where Philomel gave up. I have enough: To the trunk again, and shut the spring of it. Swift, swift, you dragons of the night, that dawning May bare the raven’s eye! I lodge in thee; Though this a heavenly angel, hell is here. [Clock strikes.

One, two, three: time, time! [Goes into the trunk. The scene closes.

SCENE III.—An ante-chamber adjoining Imogen's apartments.

Enter Cloten and Lords.

First Lord. Your lordship is the most patient man in the world, the most cold that ever turned up

Clo. It would make any man cold to lose, [ace.

First Lord. But not every man patient after the noble temper of your lordship. You are most hot and furious when you win.

Clo. Winning will put any man into courage. If I could get this foolish Imogen, I should have gold enough. It's almost morning, is't not?

First Lord.

Clo. I would this music would come: I am advised to give her music o’ mornings; they say it will penetrate.

Enter Musicians.

Come on; tune: if you can penetrate her with your fingerling, so: we'll try with tongue too: if none will do, let her remain; but I'll never give over. First, a very excellent good conceited thing; after, a wonderful sweet air, with admirable rich words to it: and then let her consider.

SONG.

Hark, hark! the lark at heaven's gate sings, And Phoebus' gins arise, His steeds to water at those springs On chafed flowers that lies; And winking Mary-buds begin To ope their golden eyes. With every thing that pretty is, My lady's sweet, arise: Arise, arise.

Clo. So, get you gone. If this penetrate, I will consider your music the better: if it do not, it is a vice in her ears, which horse-hairs and calves'guis,
ACT II.

CYMBELINE.

SCENE IV.

IO. Good morrow, sir. You lay out too much pains For purchasing but trouble: the thanks I give Is telling you that I am poor of thanks - And scarce can spare them.

CLO. Still, I swear I love you. If you but said so, 'twere as deep with me: If you swear still, your recompense is still That I regard it not.

CLO. This is no answer. [silent.]

IO. But that you shall not say I yield being I would not speak. I pray you, spare me: 'faith, I shall not find equal discourtesy To your best kindness: one of your great knowing Should learn, being taught, forbearance.

CLO. To leave you in your madness, 'twere my will not.

IO. Fools are not mad folks. [sin.

CLO. Do you call me fool?

IO. As I am mad, I do: If you'll be patient, I'll no more be mad; That cures us both. I am much sorry, sir, You put me to forget a lady's manners, By being so verbal: and learn now, for all, That I, which know your heart, do here pronounce, By the very truth of it, I care not for you, And am so near the lack of charity - To accuse myself - I hate you; which I had rather You felt than make 't my boast.

CLO. You sin against obedience, which owe your father. For the contract you pretend with that base wretch, One bred of alms and foster'd with cold dishes, With scraps o' the corrt, it is no contract, none: And though it be allow'd in meaner parties - Yet who than he more mean? - to knit their souls, On whom there is no more dependency But brats and beggary, in self-figured knot; Yet you are curb'd from that enlargement by The consequence o' the crown, and must not soil The precious note of it with a base slave, A bidding for a liver, a squire's cloth, A wantler, not so eminent.

IO. Profane fellow! Wert thou the son of Jupiter and no more But what thou art besides, thou wert too base To be his groom: thou wert dignified enough, Even to the point of envy, if 'twere made Comparative for your virtues, to be styled The under-hangman of his kingdom, and hated For being preferr'd so well.

CLO. The south-fog rot him! He never can meet more mischance than come To be but named of thee. His meanest garment, That ever hath but clipp'd his body, is dearer In my respect than all the hairs above thee, Were they all made such men. How now, Pisanio!

Enter Pisanio.

CLO. 'HIS garment!?' Now the devil —

IO. To Dorothy my woman kis thee presently—

CLO. 'His garment!'

IO. I am spredit with a fool, Frighted, and anger'd worse: go bid my woman Search for a jewel that too casually Hath left mine arm: it was thy master's: 'shrew me, If I would lose it for a revenue Of any king's in Europe. I do think I saw 't this morning: confident I am Last night 't was on mine arm; I kiss'd it: I hope it be not gone to tell my lord That he kiss'd ought but he.

Pis. 'T will not be lost.

IO. I hope so: go and search. [Exit Pisanio.

CLO. You have abused me: 'His meanest garment!'

IO. Ay, I said so, sir; If you will make 't an action, call witness to 't.

CLO. I will inform your father.

IO. Your mother too: She's my good lady, and will conceive, I hope, But the worst of me. So, I leave you, sir, To the worst of discontent. [Exit.

CLO. I'll be revenged: 'His meanest garment!' Well. [Exit.

SCENE IV. - Rome. Philario's house.

Enter Posthumus and Philario.

Post. Fear it not, sir: I would I were so sure To win the king as I am bold her honour Will remain hers.

Phi. What means do you make to him? Post. Not any, but abide the change of time, Quake in the present winter's state and wish That warner days would come: in these search'd I barely gratify your love: they failing, [hopes, I must die much your debtor.

Phi. Your very goodness and your company O'erpays all I can do. By this, my king Hath heard of great Auguestus: Caius Lucius Will do's commission throughly: and I think He'll grant the tribute, send the carriages, Or look upon our Romans, whose remembering Is yet fresh in their grief.

Post. I do believe, Statist though I am none, nor like to be, That this will prove a war; and you shall hear The legions now in Gallia sooner landed In our not-fearing Britain than have tidings Of any penny tribute paid. Our countrymen Are men more order'd than when Julius Caesar Smiled at their lack of skill, but famed their courage Worthy his frowning at: their discipline, Now mingled with their courage, will make known To their approvers they are people such That mend upon the world.

Enter Iachimo.

Phi. See! Iachimo! Post. The swiftest harts have posted you by land; And winds of all the corners kiss'd your sails. To make your vessel nimble.

Phi. Welcome, sir. Post. I hope the briefness of your answer made The speediness of your return.

Iach. Your lady is one of the fairest that I have look'd upon, Post. And therewithal the best; or let her beauty Look through a casement to allure false hearts And be false with them. Here are letters for you. Post. Their tenour good, I trust. Tis very like.

Phi. Was Caius Lucius in the Britain court When you were there? Iach. He was expected there, But not approach'd.

Post. All is well yet. Sparkles this stone as it was wont? or is't not Too dull for your good wearing? Iach. If I had lost it, I should have lost the worth of it in gold, I'll make a journey twice as far, to enjoy A second night of such sweet shortness which Was mine in Britain, for the ring is won. Post. The stone's too hard to come by; Not a whit, Your lady being so easy.

Post. Make not, sir. Your loss your sport: I hope you know that we Must not continue friends.

Iach. Good sir, we must,
If you keep covenant. Had I not brought The knowledge of your mistress home, I grant We were to question further: but I now Profess myself the winner of her honour, Together with your ring; and not the wringer Of her for you, having proceeded but By both your wills.

Post. If you can make't apparent That you have tasted her in bed, my hand And ring is yours: if not, the foul opinion You had of her pure honour gains or loses Your sword or mine, or masterless leaves both To who shall find them.

Iach. Sir, my circumstances, Being so near the truth as I will make them, Must first induce you to believe: whose strength I will confirm with oath, which, I doubt not. You'll give me leave to spare, when you shall find You need it not.

Post. Proceed.

Iach. First, her bedchamber. Where, I confess, I slept not, but profess Had that was well worth watching—it was hang'd With tapestry of silk and silver: the story Proud Cleopatra, when she met her Roman, And Cydnus swell'd above the banks, or for The press of boats or pride: a piece of work So bravely done, so rich, that it did strive In workmanship and value: which I wonder'd Could be so rarely and exactly wrought, Since the true life on't was— This is true; And this you might have heard of here, by me, Or by some other.

Iach. More particulars Must justify my knowledge.

Post. Or do your honour suffer.

Iach. The chimney Is south the chamber, and the chimney-piece Chaste Dian bathing: never saw I figures So likely to report themselves: the cutter Was as another nature, dumb; outwent her, Motion and breath left out.

Post. This is a thing Which you might from relation likewise reap, Being, as it is, much spoke of.

Iach. The roof o' the chamber With golden cherubins is fretted: her auditors I had forgot them—were two winking Cupids Of silver, each on one foot standing, nicely Depending on their brands.

Post. This is her honour! Let be granted you have seen all this—and praise Be given to your remembrance—the description Of what is in her chamber nothing saves The wager you have laid.

Iach. Then, if you can,
[showing the bracelet. Be pale: I beg but leave to air this jewel; see! And now 'tis up again: it must be married To that your diamond; I'll keep them.

Post. Once more let me behold it: is it that Which I left with her?

Iach. Sir—I thank her—that: She stripp'd it from her arm: I see her yet; Her pretty action did outsell her gift, And yet enrich'd it too; she gave it me, and said She prized it once.

Post. May be she pleas'd it off To amuse me. She writes so to you, doth she?
Post. O, no, no, no! 'tis true. Here, take this too:
[Given the ring. It is a basilisk unto mine eye, Kills me to look on 't. Let there be no honour Where there is beauty; truth, where semblance; love, Where there's another man: the vows of women Of no more bondage be, to where they are made, Than they are to their virtues; which is nothing. O, above measure false!

Phi. Have-patience, sir, And take your ring again; 'tis not yet won: It may be probable she lost it; or Who knows if one of her women, being corrupted, Hath stol'n it from her?

Post. Very true; And so, I hope, he came by 't. Back my ring: Render to me some corporal sign about her, More evident than this: for this was stolen.

Iach. By Jupiter, I had it from her arm.

Post. Mark you, he swears; by Jupiter he swears. 'Tis true—may, keep the ring—'tis true; I am sure She would not lose it: her attendants are [fit! All sworn and honourable:—they induced to steal And by a stranger!—No, he hath enjoyed her: The cognition of her inconstancy Is this: she hath bought the name of which thus dearly. There, take thy hire; and all the fiends of hell Divide themselves between you!

Phi. Sir, be patient: This is not strong enough to be believed Of one persuaded well of— Never talk on 't;

Post. She hath been colt'd by him. If you seek For further satisfying, under her breast— Worthy the pressing—lies a mole, right proud Of that most delicate lodging: by my life, I kiss'd it; and it gave me present hunger To feed again, though full. You do remember This stain upon her?

Post. Ay, and it doth confirm Another stain, as big as hell can hold, Were there no more but it.

Iach. Will you hear more?

Post. Spare your arithmetic: never count the Once, and a million!
[turns;
Post. I'll be sworn— No swearing. If you will swear you have not done 't, you lie; And I will kill thee, if thou dost deny Thou'st made me cuckold, I'll deny nothing.

Post. O, that I had her here, to tear her limb-meal! I will go there and do 't, 't he court, before Her father. I'll do something—[Exit. Phi. Quite besides The government of patience! You have won: Let's follow him, and pervert the present wrath He hath against himself.

Iach. With all my heart.
[Exit.

SCENE V.—Another room in Philario's house.

Enter Posthumus.

Post. Is there no way for men to be but women Must be half-workers? We are all bastards; And that most venerable man which I Did call my father, was I know not where When I was stamp'd; some cinder with his tools Made me a counterfeit: yet my mother seem'd The Dian of that time: so doth my wife The nonpareil of this. O, vengeance, vengeance! Me of my lawful pleasure she restrain'd And pray'd me off forbearance; did it with A pudenzy so rosy the sweet view on 't [her Might well have warm'd old Saturn; that I thought As chaste as unsmitten snow. O, all the devils! This yellow Iachino, in an hour,—was 't not?— Or less,—at first?—perchance he spoke not, but,
ACT III.

Like a full-armed'd boar, a German one, Cries 'O!' and mounted; found no opposition But what he look'd for should oppose and she Should, from encounter guard. Could I find out The woman's part in me! For there's no motion That tends to vice in man, but I affirm It is the woman's part: be it lying, note it, The woman's: flattering, hers; deceiving, hers; Lust and rank thoughts, hers, hers; revenges, hers; Ambitions, covetings, change of pride, disdain, Nice loving, slanders, mutability, All faults that may be named, nay, that hell knows, Why, hers, in part or all; but rather, all; For even to this one vice They are not constant, but are changing still One vice, but of a minute old, for one Not half so old as that. I'll write against them, Detest them, curse them: yet 'tis greater skill In a true hate, to pray they have their will: The very devils cannot plague them better. [Exit.]

SCENE I.—Britain. A hall in Cymbeline's palace.

Enter in state, Cymbeline, Queen, Cloten, and Lords at one door, and at another, Caius Lucius and Attendants.

Cur. Now say, what would Augustus Caesar With us? [yet

Luc. When Julius Caesar, whose remembrance Lives in men's eyes and will to ears and tongues Be theme and hearing ever, was in this Britain And conquer'd it, Cymbeline, thine uncle,— Famous in Cæsar's praises, no whit less Than felt his desires deserving—it for him And his succession granted Rome a tribute, Yearly three thousand pounds, which by thee lately Is left unattended.

Que. And, to kill the marble, shall be so ever.

Cæs. There be many Cæsars, ere such another Julius. Britain is A world by itself; and we will nothing pay For wearing our own noses.

Que. That opportunity Which then they had to take from's, to resume We have again. Remember, sir, my bege, The kings your ancestors, together with The natural bravery of your isle, which stands As Neptune's park, ribbed and piled in With rocks unscaleable and roaring waters, With sands that will not bear your enemies' boats, But send them up to the topmast. A kind of conquest Cæsar made here; but made not here his brag Of 'came and saw' and 'overcame;' with shame— The first that ever touch'd him—he was carried From off our coast, twice beaten; and his shipping Poor ignorant babbles!—on our terrible seas Like egg-shells moved upon their surges, crack'd So easily, against our rocks: for joy whereof The famed Cymbeline, who was at once at— O gigolo fortune! to master Cæsar's sword, Made Luc's town with petrifying fires bright And Britons strait with courage.

Clo. Come, there's no more tribute to be paid: our kingdom is stronger than it was at that time; and, as I said, there is no moe such Cæsars: other of them may have crook'd noses, but to owe such straight arms, none.

Cur. Son, let your mother end.

Clo. We have yet many among us can grize as hard as Cymbeline: I do not say I am one; but I have a hand. Why tribute? why should we pay tribute? If Cæsar can hide the sun from us with a blanket, or put the moon in his pocket, we will pay him tribute for light; else, sir, no more tribute, pray you now. Cur. You must know, Till the injurious Romans did extort [tien, This tribute from us, we were free: Cæsar's ambition Which swelld so much that it did almost stretch The sides of the world, against all colour here Daid put the joke upon 's; which to shake off

Becomes a warlike people, whom we reckon Ourselves to be.

Clo. and Lords. We do.

Cur. Say, then, to Cæsar, Our ancestor was that Mulmutius which Ordain'd our laws, whose use the sword of Cæsar Hath too much mangled: whose repugnance and franchise Shall, by the power we hold, be our good deed, Though Rome be therefore angry; Mulmutius made our laws, Who was the first of Britain which did put His brows within a golden crown and call'd Himself a king.

Luc. I am sorry, Cymbeline, That I am to pronounce Augustus Cæsar— Cæsar, that hath more kings his servants than Thyself domestic officers—thine enemy: Receive it from me, then: war and confusion In Cæsar's name pronounce I 'gainst thee: look For fury not to be resisted. Thus defied, I thank thee for myself.

Cur. Thou art welcome, Caius. Thy Cæsar knighted me; my youth I spent Much under him; of him I gather'd honour; Which he to seek of me again, perchance, Behoves me keep at utterance. I am perfect That the Pannonians and Dalmatians for Their liberties are now in arms: a precedent Which not to read would show the Britons cold: So Cæsar shall not find them.

Luc. Let proof speak.

Clo. His majesty bids you welcome. Make pastime with us a day or two, or longer: if you seek us afterwards in other terms, you shall find us in our salt-water girdle: if you beat us out of it, it is yours; if you fall in the adventure, our cows shall fare the better for you; and there's an end.

Luc. So, sir.

Cur. I know your master's pleasure and he mine: All the remain is 'Welcome!' [Exit.

SCENE II.—Another room in the palace.

Enter Pisanio, with a letter.

Pis. How? of adultery? Wherefore write you not What monster's her accuser? Leonatus! O master! what a strange infection Is fall'n into thy ear! What false Italian, As poisonous-tongued as hand'd, hath prevail'd On thy too-ready hearing? Disloyal! No; She's punish'd for her truth, and undergoes, More goddess-like than wife-like, such assaults As would take in some virtue. O my master! Thy mind to her is now as low as were Thy fortunes. How! that I should murder her? Upon the love and truth and vows which I Have made to thy command? I, her? her blood? If it be so to do good service, never Let me be counted serviceable. How look I, That I should seem to lack humanity? [the letter So much as this fact comes to? [Reading] 'Do not:
That I have sent her, by her own command
Shall give thee opportunity.'—O damn'd paper!
Bishops are art so high's that giants may jet through,
Art thou a foecily for this act, and look'st
So virgin-like without?—Lo, here she comes.
I am ignorant in what I am commanded.

Enter Imogen.

Ino. How now, Pisanio? Pisan. Madam, here is a letter from my lord.
Ino. Who? thy lord? that is my lord, Leonatus! O, learn'd indeed were that astronomer
That knew the stars as I his characters;
He'll lay the future open. You good gods, Let what you have done in my eyes remain,
Of my lord's health, of his content, yet not
That we two are asunder; let that grieve him;
Some griefs are med'cable; that is of his content,
For it doth physic love:—of his content,
All but in that! Good wax, thy leave. Blest be
You bees that make these locks of counsel! Lovers
And men in dangerous bonds pray not alike;
Though forfeitures you cast in prison, yet
You clasp young Cupid's tables. Good news, gods! [Reeds] 'Justice, and your father's wrath, should be taken in his dominion, could not be so cruel to me, as you, O the dearest of creatures, would even appease my wrongs by your eyes.
Of that I am in Cumbria, at Milford-Haven: what your own love will out of this advise you, follow. So he wishes you all happiness, that remains loyal to his vow, and your, increasing in love...'

Leonatus Posthumus, 'O, for a horse with wings! Heart's thou, Pisanio? He is at Milford-Haven: read, and tell me
How far't is thither. If one of men affairs
May plod it in a week, why may not I
 Glide thither in a day? Then, true Pisanio,—
Who long'st, like me, to see thy lord; who long'st,—
O, let me haste,—but not like me, yet long'st,
But in a manner like—O, not like me.
For mine 's beyond beyond—say, and speak thick;
Love's counsellor should fill the lores of hearing,
To the smoothing of the sense—how far it is
To this same blessed Milford; and by the way
Tell me how Wales was made so happy as
To inherit such a haven; but first of all,
How we may seal from hence, and for the gap
That we shall make in time, from our hence-going
And our return, to excuse: but first, how get hence:
Why should excuse be born or e'er begot?
We'll talk of that hereafter. Prithee, speak,
How many score of miles may we well ride
'Twixt hour and hour? and sun, sun, sun,
Madam, 's enough for you: [Aside] and too much too.

Ino. Why, one that rode to 's execution, man,
Could never go so slow: I have hearted of riding wagers, When horses have been ridden into the sands
That run i' the clock's behalf. But this is foolery:
Go bid my woman feign a sickness; say
She 'll home to her father: and provide me presently
A riding-suit, no costlier than would it

Ino. I see before me, man; nor here, nor here,
Nor what ensues, but have a fog in them,
That I cannot look through. Away, I prithee;
Do as I bid thee: there's no more to say;
Accessible is none but Milford way.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Wales: a mountainous country with a cave.

Enter, from the cave, Belarius; Guiderius and Arrivagus following.

Bel. A goodly day not to keep house, with such Whose roof's so low as ours! Stoop, boys; this gate

Instructs you how to adore the heavens and bow you
To a morning's holy office: the gates of monarchs
Are arched so high's that giants may jet through
And keep their impious turbans on, without Good-morrow to the sun. Hail, thou fair heaven!
We house i' the rock, yet use thee not so hardly
As prouder livers do.

Gui. Hail, heaven!

Arr. Hail, heaven!

Bel. Now for our mountain sport: up to yond hill;
Your legs are young; I'll tread these flats. Come,
When you above perceive me like a crow, [sider,
That it is place whichlesson's and sets off:
And you may then revolve what tales I have told
Of courts, of princes, of the tricks in war:
You this service is not service, so were
But being so allow'd: to apprehend thus,
Draws us a profit from all things we see;
And often, to our comfort, shall we find
The sharded beetle in a safer hold.
Than is the full-wing'd eagle:—O, this life
Is milder than attending for a check,
Richer than doing nothing for a bumble,
Prouder than rustling in unpaid-for silk;
Such gain the cap of him that makes 'em fine,
Yet keeps his book uncrass'd: no life to ours.

Gui. Out of your proof you speak: we, poor un-

[not have never wing'd from view o' the nest, nor know

What air's from home. Haply this life is best,
If quiet life be best; sweeter to you
That have a sharper known: well corresponding
With your stiff age; but unto us it is
A cell of ignorance: travelling a-bed;
A prison for a debtor, that not dares
To stride a limit.

Arr. What should we speak of
When we are old as you? when we shall hear
The rain and wind beat dark December, how,
In this our pinching cave, shall we discourse
The freezing hours away? We have seen nothing;
We are beasts, subtle as the fox for prey,
Like warlike as the wolf for what we eat;
Our value is to chase what flies; our cage
We make a quire, as doth the prison'd bird,
And sing our bondage freely.

Bel. How you speak!

Did you but know the city's usuries
And felt them knowingly; the art o' the court,
As hard to leave as keep; whose top to climb
Is certain falling, or so slippery that
The feet are as well at falling: the toil o' the war;
A pain that only seems to seek out danger [search,
I the name of fame and honour; which dics i' the
And hath as oft a slanderous epithet
As record of fair act; nay, many times,
Both ill deserve by doing well; what's worse,
Must thine way at the censure:—O boys, this story
The world may read in me: my body's mark'd
With Roman swords, and my report was once
First with the best of note: Cymbeline loved me,
And when a soldier was the theme, my name
Was not far off: then was I as a tree [night,
Whose boughs did bend with fruit; but in one
A storm or robbery, call it what you will;
Shook down my nellow hangings, my, my leaves,
And left me bare to weather.

Gui. Uncertain favour!

Bel. My fault being nothing—as I have told you off—

But that two villains, whose false oaths prevailed
Before my perfect honour, swore to Cymbeline
I was confederate with the Romans: so
Follow'd my banishment, and this twenty years
This rock and these demesnes have been my world;
Where I have lived at my own expense, paid
More pious debts to Heaven than in all
ACT III.

CYMBELINE.

SCENE IV.

Enter Pisanio and Imogen.

Pis. What shall I need to draw my sword? the paper
Hath cut her throat already. No, 'tis slander,
Whose edge is sharper than the sword, whose tongue
Outvenoms all the worms of Nile, whose breath
Rides on the posting winds and doth belch
All corners of the world, disdaining earth and states,
Maidens, matrons, nay, the secrets of the grave
This vipers' slander enters. What cheer, madam?
Imo. False to his bed? What is it to be false?
To lie in watch there and to think on him?
To keep twixt clock and clock? if sleep charge naught
To break it with a fearful dream of him,
And cry myself awake? that's false to 's bed, is it?
Pis. Alas, good lady!
Imo. I false! Thy conscience witness: Iachimo,
Thou didst accuse him of incontinency;
Thou then look'st like a villain: now methinks
Thy favour's good enough. Some joy of Italy,
Whose mother was her painting, hath betray'd him:
Poor I am stale, a garment out of fashion;
And, for I am richer than to hang by the walls,
I must beripp'd:—to pieces with me!—O,
Men's vows are women's traitors! All good seeming,
In that thy redowa, thy white to be thought
Put on for villany: not born where 't grows,
But worn a baird for ladies.
Pis. Good madam, hear me.
Imo. True honest men being heard, like false
Eccles,
Wereg in his time thought false, and Simon's weeping
Did scandal many a holy tear, took pity
From most true wretchedness: so thou, Posthumus,
Wilt lay the heaven on all proper men:
Goodly and gallant shall be false and perjured
From thy great fall. Come, fellow, be thou honest:
To thon thou master's bidding: when thou seest him,
A little witness of my obedience: look!
I draw the sword myself: take it, and hit
The innocent mansion of my love, my heart;
Fear not: 'tis empty of all things but grief;
Thy master is not there, who was indeed
The riches of it: do his bidding: strike
Thou must be valiant in a better cause;
But now thou seem'st a coward.
Pis. Hence, vile instrument! Thou shalt not damn my hand.
Imo. Why, I must die;
And if I do not by thy hand, thou art
No servant of thy master's. Against self-slaughter
There is a prohibition so divine
That cravens my weak hand. Come, here's my Something 's a t'ere. Soft, soft; we'll no defence; Obedient as the scabbard. What is here?
The scriptures of the loyal Leonatus,
I'll see the truth of it. And so am I,
Corrupters of my faith! you shall no more
Be stomachers to my heart. Thus may poor fools
Believe false teachers: though these that are betray'd
Do feel the treason sharply, yet the traitor
Stands in worse case of worse;
And then, Posthumus, thou that didst set up
My disobedience 'gainst the king my father
And make me put into contempt the suits
Of princely fellows, shall hereafter find
It is no act of common passage, but
A strain of rareness: and I grieve myself
To think, when thou shalt rise in the morning
That now thou tirest on, how thy memory
Will then be pang'd by me. Prithee, dispatch:
The lamb entreats the butcher: where's thy knife?
Thou art too slow to do thy master's bidding,
Wilt thou die? I desire it too.
O gracious lady,

Pis. Since I received command to do this business
I have not slept one wink.

Imo. 'Tis not, and to bed then.

787
Pis. I'll wake mine eye-balls blind first.
Ino. Wherefore then
Didst undertake it? Why hast thou so
Abused so many miles with a pretence? This place?
Mine action and thine own? our horses' labour?
The time inviting thee? the perturb'd court,
For thy being absent? whereunto I never Purpose return. Why hast thou gone so far,
To be unkind when thou hast taken thy stand,
The elected deel before thee?

Pis. But to win time
To lose so bad employment: in which I have consider'd of a course. Good lady,
Hear me with patience.

Ino. Talk thou tongue weary; speak:
I have heard I am a strumpet; and mine ear,
Therin false struck, can take no greater wound,
Nor taut to bottom that. But speak.

Pis. Then, madam,
I thought you would not back again.

Ino. Most like;
Bringing me here to kill me.

Pis. Not so, neither;
But if I were as wise as honest, then
My purpose would prove well. It cannot be
But that my master is abused:
Some villain, ay, and singular in his art,
Hath done you both this cursed injury.

Some Roman courtezan.

Pis. No, on my life.

Pis. I'll give but notice you are dead and send him
Some bloody sign of it: for 'tis is commanded
I should do so: you shall be miss'd at court,
And that will well confirm it.

Ino. Why, good fellow,
What shall I do the while? where bide? how live?
Or in my life what comfort, when I am
Dead to my husband?

Pis. If you'll back to the court—

Ino. No court, no father; nor no more ado
With that harsh, noble, simple nothing,
That Cloten, whose love-suit hath been to me
As fearful as a siege.

Pis. If not at court,
Then not in Britain must you bide.

Ino. Where then?
Hath Britain all the sun that shines? Day, night,
Are they not but in Britain? I the world's volume
Our Britain seems as of it, but not in 't;
In a great pool a swan's nest; prithee, think
There's rivers out of Britain.

Pis. I am most glad
You think of other place. The ambassador,
Lucius the Roman, comes to Milford-Haven
To-morrow: now, if you could wear a mind
Dark as your fortune is, and but disguise
That which, to appear itself, must not yet be
But by self-danger, you should tread a course
Pretty and full of view; yea, haply, near
The residence of Posthumus; so high at least
That though his actions were not visible, yet
Report should render him hourly to your ear
As truly as he moves.

Ino. O, for such means!
Though peril to my modesty, not death on 't,
I would adventure.

Pis. What then? Well, then, here's the point:
You must forget to be a woman; change
Command into obedience; fear and nisness—
The handmaid of all women, or, more truly,
Woman her self—into a waggish courage;
Ready in glibes, quick-answer'd, saucy and
As quarrelous as the weasel; nay, you must
Forget that rarest treasure of your cheek,
Exposing it—but, O, the harder heart!
Alack, no remedy!—to the greedy touch
Of common-kissing Titan, and forget

Your laboursome and dainty trims, wherein
You made great Jove angry.

Ino. Nay, be brief:
I see into thy end, and am almost
A man already.

Pis. First, make yourself but like one.
Forethinking this, I have already said—
'Tis in my cloak-bag—doublet, hat, hose, all
That answer to them: would you in their serving,
And with what imitation you can borrow
From youth of such a season, 'fore noble Lucius
Present yourself, desire his service, tell him [know,
Therin you're happy, which you'll make him
It that his head have ear is harmless.
With joy he will embrace you, for he's honourable
And doubling that, most holy. Your means abroad,
You have me, rich; and I will never fail
Beginning nor supply.

Ino. Thou art all the comfort
The gods will diet me with. Prithee, away:
There's more to be consider'd; but we'll even
All that good time will give us: this attempt
I am soldier to, and will abide it with
A prince's courage. Away, I prithee.

Pis. Well, madam, we must take a short farewell,
Least, being miss'd, I be suspected of
Your carriage from the court. My noble mistress,
Here is a box; I had it from the queen:
What's in 't is precious; if you are sick at sea,
Or stomach-qualm'd at land, a dram of this
Will drive away distemper. To some shade,
And fit you to your manhood. May the gods
Direct you to the best!

Ino. Amen: I thank thee. [Exeunt, severally.

SCENE V. — A room in Cymbeline's palace.

Enter Cymbeline, Queen, Cloten, Lucius,
Lords, and Attendants.

Cym. Thus far; and so farewell.

Luc. Thanks, royal sir,
My emperor hath wrote, I must from hence;
And am right sorry that I must report ye
My master's enemy.

Cym. Our subjects, sir,
Will not endure his yoke; and for ourself
To show less sovereignty than they, must needs
Appear unkinglike.

Luc. So, sir: I desire of you
A conduct over-land to Milford-Haven.
Madam, all joy befall your grace!

Quee. My lords, you are appointed for that office;
The due of honour in no point omit.
So farewell, noble Lucius.

Luc. Your hand, my lord.

Clo. Receive it friendly; but from this time forth
I wear it as your enemy.

Luc. Sir, the event
Is yet to name the winner: fare you well.

Cym. Leave not the worthy Lucius, good my lords,
Till he have cross'd the Severn. Happiness!

[Exeunt Lucius and Lords,

Quee. He goes hence frowning; but it honours
That we have given him cause.

us Clo. 'Tis all the better;
Your valiant Britons have their wishes in it.

Cym. Lucius hath wrote already to the emperor
How it goes here. It fits us therefore ripely
Our chariots and our horsemen be in readiness:
The powers that he already hath in Gallia
Will soon be drawn to head, from whence he moves
His war for Britain.

Quee. 'Tis not sleepy business;
But must be look'd to speedily and strongly.

Cym. Our expectation that it would be thus Hath made us forward. But, my gentle queen,
Where is our daughter? She hath not appear'd Before the Roman, nor to us hath tender'd The duty of the day: she looks us like A thing more made of malice than of duty; We have noted it. Call her before us; or We have been too slight in sufferance.

[Exit an Attendant.]

Queen. Royal Sir, Since the exile of Posthumus, most retired Hath her life been; the cure whereof, my lord, 'Tis time must do. Beseech your majesty, Forbear sharp speeches to her: she's a lady So tender of rebukes that words are strokes And strokes death to her.

Re-enter Attendant.

Cym. Where is she, sir? How Can her contempt be answer'd? [Exit.

Queen. My lord, when last I went to visit her, She pr'yed me to excuse her keeping close, Whereeto constraint'd by her infirmity, She should that duty leave unpaid to you. Which daily she was bound to proffer: this She wish'd me to make known; but our great court Made me to blame in memory.

Cym. Her doors lock'd? Not seen of late? Grant, heavens, that which I fear Prove false! [Exit.

Queen. Son, I say, follow the king.

That man of hers, Pisanio, her old servant, I have not seen these two days.

Queen. Go, look after. [Exit Clone.

Pisanio, thou that stand'st so for Posthumus! He hath a drug of mine; I pray his absence Proceed by swallowing that, for he believes It be thing most precious. But for her, Where is she gone? Halpy, despair hath seiz'd her, Or, wing'd with fervour of her love, she's flown To her desired Posthumus: gone she is To death or to dishonour; and my end Can make good use of either: she being down, I have the placing of the British crown.

Re-enter Closen.

Clos. This certain she is fled. Go in and cheer the king: he rages; none Dares come about him.

Queen. [Aside] All the better: may This night foretell him of the coming day! [Exit. Clos. I love and hate her: for she's fair and royal, And that she hath all courtly parts more exquisite Than lady, ladies, woman: from every one The best she hath, and she, of all compounded, Out-sells them all; I love her therefore: but Disclaiming me and throwing favours on The low Posthumus slander so her judgment That what's else rare is choky; and in that point I will conclude to hate her, nay, indeed, To revenged upon her. For when fools Shall—

Enter Pisanio.

Who is here? What, are you packing, sirrah? Come hither: ah, you precious pandar! Villain, Where is thy lady? In a word: or else Thou art straightway with the fields.

Pis. O, good my lord! I will not ask again. Close villain, I'll have this secret from thy heart, or rip Thy heart to find it. Is she with Posthumus? From whose so many weights of baseness cannot A drum of worth be drawn.

Pis. Alas, my lord,
lord: would I had wings to follow it! Come, and be true. [Exit.

Pis. Thou bid'st me to my loss: for true to thee
Were to prove false, which I will never be,
To him that is most true. To Milford go,
And find not her whom thou pursuest. Flow, flow,
You heavenly blessings, on her! This fool's speed
Be cross'd with slowness; labour be his need! [Exit.

SCENE VI.—Wales. Before the cave of Belarius.

Enter Imogen, in boy's clothes.

Jno. I see a man's life is a tedious one:
I have tired myself, and for two nights together
Have made the ground my bed. I should be sick,
But that my resolution helps me. Milford,
When from the mountain-top Pisanio shew'd thee,
Then wast within a ken: O Jove! I think
Fondomations thy wereched: such, I mean, [one
Where they should be relieved. Two beggars told
I could not miss my way: will poor folks lie,
That have afflictions on them, knowing 'tis
A punishment or trial? Yes; no wonder,
When rich ones scarce tell true. To kipse in fulness
Is sorre than to lie for need, and falsehood
Is worse than lying to beggars. My dear lord: Thou art one of the false ones. Now I think on thee,
My hunger's gone; but even before, I was
At point to sink for food. But what is this? Here is a path to 't: 't is some savage hold:
I were best not call; I dare not call: yet famine,
Ere clear it o'erthrow nature, makes it valiant.
Plenty and peace breeds coward: hardness ever
Of hardness is mother. Ho! who's here?
If any thing that's civil, speak: if savage,
Take or keud. Ho! No answer? Then I'll enter.
Best draw my sword: and if mine enemy
But the sword like me, he'll scarcely look on 't.
Such a foe, good heavens! [Exit, to the cave.

Enter Belarius, Guiderid, and Arviragus.

Bel. You, Polydore, have proved best woodman
Are master of the feast: Cadwal and I
And play the cook and servant: 'tis our match:
The sweat of industry would dry and die.
But for the end it works to. Come; our stomachs
Will make what's homely savoury: weariness
Can snore upon the flint, when rusty sloth
Finds the down pillow hard. Now peace be here,
Poor house, that keep'st thyself! [Exit.

Gui. I am throughly weary. [Exit.

Arc. I am weak with toil, yet strong in appetite. [Exit.

Gui. There is cold meat in the cave: we'll browse
Whilst what we have kill'd be cook'd. [on that,

Bel. [Looking into the cave] Stay; come not in.
But that it eats out victuals, I should think
Here were a fairy. [Exit.

Gui. What's the matter, sir? [Exit

Bel. By Jupiter, an angel! or, if not,
An earthly paragon. Behold divinness
No elder than a boy!

R-e-entrant Imogen.

Jno. Good masters, harm me not:
Before I enter'd here, I call'd; and thought
To have begg'd or bought what I have took: good
Word,矫言. [floud
I have stole'n nought, nor would not, though
Gold strew'd 't o'er the floor. Here's money for my
I would have left it on the board so soon [meat;
As I had made my meal, and parted
With prayers for the provider.

Gui. Money, youth? [Exit

Arc. All gold and silver rather turn to dirt!
And 't is no better reck'n'd, but of those Who worship dirty gods.

---

Jno. I see you're angry:
Know, if you kill me for my fault, I should Have died had I not made it. [Exit

Bel. Whither bound?

Jno. To Milford-Haven. [Exit

Bel. What's your name?

Jno. Fidele, sir. I have a kinsman who Is bound for Italy; he embark'd at Milford:
To whom I'm going; almost spent with hunger,
I am fall'n in this offence. [Exit

Bel. Prithie, fair youth,
Think us no churls, nor measure our good minds
By this rude place we live in. Well encounter'd! Of almost: you shall have better cheer
 Ere you depart; and thanks to stay and eat it.
Boys, bid him welcome. [Exit.

Gui. Were you a woman, youth,
I should woe hard but he your groom. In honesty,
I bid for you as I'd buy. I'll make 't my comfort
He is a man; I'll love him as my brother:
And such a welcome as I'd give to him
After long absence, such is yours: most welcome!
Be sprightly, for you fall amongst friends.

Jno. If brothers, [Exit

Gui. 'Mongst friends, [Exit

Arc. Would it had been so, that they Had been my father's sons! then had my prize
Been less, and so more equal ballasting
To thee, Posthumus. [Exit

Bel. He wrings at some distress.

Gui. Would I could free 't! [Exit

Arc. Or I, what 'er it be,
What pain it cost, what danger. Gods! [Exit

Bel. Hark, boys. [Exit

Whispering.

Jno. Great men,
That had a court no bigger than this cave,
That did attend themselves and had the virtue
Which their own conscience seed'd them—laying by
That nothing-gift of differing multitudes—
Could not out-peep these twain. Pardon me, gods!
I'd change my sex to be companion with them,
Since Leonatus' false. [Exit

Bel. It shall be so.

Arc. We'll go dress our hunt. Fair youth, come in;
Discourse is heavy, fasting: when we have sup'd,
We'll mannerly demand thee of thy story,
So far as thou wilt speak it. [Exit

Gui. Pray, draw near. [Exit

Arc. The night to the owl and morn to the lark
Less welcome. [Exit

Jno. Thanks, sir. [Exit

Arc. I pray, draw near. [Exit

---

SCENE VII.—Rome. A public place.

Enter two Senators and Tribunes.

First Sen. This is the tenour of the emperor's writ:
That since the common men are now in action
Against the Pannonians and Dalmatians,
And that the legions now in Gallia are Full weak to undertake our wars against
The fall'n-off Britons, that we do invite
The gentry to this business. He creates
Lucius preconsul: and to you the tribunes,
For this immediate levy, he commends
His absolute commission. Long live Caesar! [Exit

First Tri. Is Lucius general of the forces? [Exit

Sec. Sen. Yes.

First Tri. Remaining now in Gallia? [Exit

First Sen. With these legions
That I have spoke of, whereunto your levy
Must be supply'd: the words of your commission
Will tie you to the numbers and the time
Of their dispatch. [Exit

First Tri. We will discharge our duty. [Exit
ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Wales; near the cave of Belarius.

Enter Cloten.

Clot. I am near to the place where they should meet, if Pisania have mapped it truly. How fit his garments serve me! Why should his mistress, who was made by him that made the tailor, not be fit too? the rather—saving reverence of the word—for 'tis said a woman's fitness comes by fits. Therein I must play the workman, and dare speak it to myself—for it is not vain-glory for a man and his glass to confer in his own chamber—I mean, the lines of my body are as well drawn as his; no less young, more strong, not beneath him in fortunes, beyond him in the advantage of the time, above him in birth, alike conversant in general services, and more remarkable in single oppositions: yet this imperceiverant thing loves him in my despite. What mortality is! Posthumus, thy head, which now is growing upon thy shoulders, shall within this hour be off; thy mistress enforced; thy garments cut to pieces before thy face; and all this done, spurn her loving to her father; who may haply be a little angry for my so rough usage; but my mother, having power of his testines, shall turn all into my commendations. My horse is tied up safe; out, sword, and to a sore purpose! Fortune, put them into my hand! This is the very description of their meeting-place; and the fellow dares not deceive me. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Before the cave of Belarius.

Enter, from the cave, Belarius, Guiderius, Arviragus, and Imogen.

Bel. [To Imogen] You are not well; remain here in We'll come to you after hunting. [the cave;

Arr. [To Imogen] Brother, stay here:

Are we not brothers?

Juno.

So man and man should be;
But clay and clay differs in dignity,
Whose dust is both alike. I am very sick.

Guil. Go you to hunting? I'll abide with him.

Juno. So sick I am not, yet I am not well;
But not so citizen a wanton as
To seem to die ere sick: so please you, leave me.
Stick to your journal course: the breach of custom
Is breach of all; I am ill, but your being by me
Cannot amend me; society is no comfort
To one not sociable: I am not very sick,
Since I can reason of it. Pray you, trust me here:
I'll rob none but myself; and let me die,
Stealing so poorly.

Guil. I love thee; I have spoke it:
How much the quantity, the weight as much,
As I do love my father.

Bel. What! how! how!

Arr. If it be sin to say so, sir, I yoke me
In my good brother's fault: I know not why
I love this youth; and I have heard you say,
Love's reason's without reason: the bier at door,
And a demand who is 't shall die, I'd say
'My father, not this youth.'

Bel. [Aside] O noble strain!
O worthiness of nature! breed of greatness!
Cowards by father cowards and base things sire base:
Nature hath meal and bran, contempt and grace.
I'm not their father; yet who this should be,
Both miracle itself, loved before me.

'Tis the ninth hour o' the morn.

Arr. Brother, farewell.

Guil. I wish ye sport.

Arr. You health. So please you, sir.

Juno. [Aside] These are kind creatures. Gods,
What lies I have heard!

Our courtiers say all's savage but at court:
Experience, O thou disprovest report!
The impertinent seas breed monsters, for the dish
Poor tributary rivers as sweet fish.
I am sick still; heart-sick. Pisania,
I'll now taste of thy drug. [Swallows some.

Guil. He said he was gentle, but unfortunat;
Dishonestly afflicted, but yet honest.

Arr. Thus did he answer me: yet said, hereafter
I might know more.

Bel. To the field, to the field!

We'll leave you for this time: go in and rest.

Arr. We'll not be long away.

Bel. Pray, be not sick.

For you must be our housewife. Well or ill,
I am bound to you.

Arr. And shalt be ever.

[Exit Imogen, to the cave.

This youth, how'er distress'd, appears he hath had Good ancestors.

Arr. How angel-like he sings!

Guil. But his next cookery! he cut our roots
In characters,
And sauced our broths, as June had been sick
And he his dieter.

Arr. Nobly he yokes
A smiling with a sigh, as if the sigh
Was that it was, for not being such a smile;
The smile mocking the sigh, that it would fly
From so divine a temple, to commix
With winds that sailors rail at.

Guil. That grief and patience, rooted in him both,
Mingle their spins together.

Arr. Grow, patience!
And let the stinking elder, grief, untwine
His perishing root with the increasing vine!

Bel. It is great morning. Come, away!—Who's there?

Enter Cloten.

Clot. I cannot find those runagates; that villain
Hath mock'd me. I am faint.

Bel. Those runagates?

Arr. Means he not us? I partly know him: 'tis
I am Cloten, the son o' the queen. I fear some ambush,
I saw him not these many years, and yet
I know 'tis he. We are held as outlaws; hence!

Guil. He is but one: you and my brother search
What companies are near: pray you, away;
Let me alone with him.

[Exeunt Belarius and Arviragus.

Clot. Soft! What are you
That fly me thus? some villain mountaineers?
I have heard of such. What slave art thou?

Guil. A thing
More skilful did I ne'er than answering
A slave without a knock.

Clot. Thou art a robber,
A law-breaker, a villain: yield thee, thief.

Guil. To who? to thee? What art thou? Have not I
An arm as big as thine? a heart as big?
Thy words, I grant, are bigger, for I wear not
My dagger in my mouth. Say what thou art,
Why I should yield to thee?

Clot. Thou villain base,
Know'st me not by my clothes?

Guil. No, nor thy tailor, rashal,
Who is thy grandfather: he made those clothes,
Which, as it seems, make thee.

Clot. Thou precious varlet,
My tailor made them not.

[Exit.
ACT IV.

GUI. Hence, then, and thank
The man that gave them thee. Thou art some fool;
I am loath to bear thee.

Clo. Thon injurious thief,
Hear but my name, and tremble.

GUI. Cloten, thou villain.

Clo. What's thy name?

GUI. Cloten, thou double villain, be thy name,
I cannot tremble at it: were it Toud, or Adder, Spig-
T would move me sooner.

Clo. To thy further fear,
Nay, to thy mere confusion, thou shalt know
I am not to the queen.

GUI. I am sorry for 't; not seeming
So worthy as thy birth.

Clo. Art not afraid?

GUI. Those that I reverence those I fear, the wise:
At fools I laugh, not fear them.

Clo. Die the death:
When I have slain thee with my proper hand,
I'll follow those that even now fed hence,
And on the gates of Lind's-town set your heads;
Yield; rustic mountaineer.

Excit. Exceed, fighting.

Re-enter Belarius and Arviragus.

Bel. No companies abroad? [sure.

Arc. None in the world: you did mistake him,
Bel. I cannot tell: long is it since I saw him,
But time hath nothing blurr'd those lines of favour
Which then he wore; the snatches in his voice,
And burst of speaking, were as his: I am absolute
'Twas very Cloten.

Arc. In this place we left them:
I wish my brother make good time with him,
You say he is so fell.

Bel. Being scarce made up,
I man, to man, he had not apprehension
Of touring terrors; for the effect of judgment
Is oft the cause of fear. But, see, thy brother.

Re-enter Guiderius, with Cloten's head.

Gui. This Cloten was a fool, an empty purse;
There was no money in 't: not Hercules
Could have knock'd out his brains, for he had none:
Yet I not doing this, the fool had borne
My head as he doth flesh.

Bel. What hast thou done?

Gui. I am perfect what: cut off one Cloten's head,
Son to the queen, after his own report;
Who call'd me traitor, mountaineer, and swore
With his own single hand he 'd take us in, [grow,
Displace our heads where — thank the gods! — they
And set them on Lind's-town.

Bel. We are all undone.

Gui. Why, worthy father, what have we to lose,
But that he swore to take, our lives? — the law
Protects not us: then why should we be tender
To let an arrogant piece of flesh threaten us,
Play judge and executioner all himself,
For we do fear the law? What company
Discover you abroad?

Bel. No single soul
Can we set eye on; but in all safe reason
Hemust have some attendants. Though his humour
Was nothing but mutation, ay, and that
From one bad thing to worse; not frenzy, not Absolute madness could so far have ravel
To bring him here alone; although perhaps
It may be heard at court that such as we
Cave here, hunt here, are outlaws, and in time
May make some stronger head; the which he hear-
As it is like him — might break out, and swear [ing —
He 'd fetch us in; yet is 't not probable
To make him here alone, either so undertaking,
Or they so suffering: then on good ground we fear,
If we do fear this body hath a tail
More perilous than the head.

792

Arc. Let ordinance
Come as the gods foresay it: howsoe'er,
My brother hath done well.

Bel. I had no mind
To hunt this day: the boy Fidele's sickness
Did make my way long forth.

Arc. With his own sword,
Which he did wave against my throat, I have ta'en
His head from him: I 'll throw 't into the creek
Behind our rock; and let it to the sea,
And tell the lasses he's the queen's son, Cloten:
That's all I reck.

Arc. I fear 't will be revenged:

Bel. Would, Polydore, thou hadst not done 't! though valour
Becomes thee well enough.

Arc. Would I had done 't,
So the revenge alone pursued me! Polydore,
I love thee brotherly, but envy much
Thou hast robb'd me of this deed: I would revenge,
That possible strength might meet, would seek us
And put us to our answer. [through

Bel. Well, 'tis done:
We'll hunt no more to-day, nor seek for danger
Where 's no profit. I priethee, to our rock;
You and Fidele play the cooks: I'll stay
Till hastily Polydore return, and bring him
To dinner presently.

Arc. Poor sick Fidele!
I 'll willingly to him: to gain his colour
I 'd let a parish of such Cloten's blood,
And praise myself for charity.

Bel. O thou goddess,
Thou divine Nature, how thyself thou blazon'st.
In these two princely boys! They are as gentle
As zephyrs blowing below the violet,
Not wagging his sweet head; and yet as rough,
Their royal blood enchanted, as the rudest wind,
That by the top doth take the mountain pine,
And make him stop to the vale. 'T is wonder
That an invisible instinct should frame them
To royalty unlearn'd, honour untaught,
Civility not seen from other, valour
That wildly grows in them, but yields a crop
As if it had been sown. Yet still 't is strange
What Cloten's being here to us portends,
Or what his death will bring us.

Re-enter Guiderius.

Gui. Where's my brother?
I have sent Cloten's clotpoll down the stream,
In embassy to his mother: his body's hostage
For his return. [Solemn music.

Bel. My ingenious instrument!
Hark, Polydora, it sounds! But what occasion
Hath Cadwal now to give it motion? Hark!

Gui. Is he at home?

Bel. He went hence even now.

Gui. What does he mean? since death of my dear's mother
It did not speak before. All solemn things
Should answer solemn accidents. The matter?
Triumphs for nothing and lamenting toys
Is jollity for apes and grief for boys.
Is Cadwal mad?

Bel. Look, here he comes,

Gui. And brings the dire occasion in his arms
Of what we blame him for.

Re-enter Arviragus, with Imogen, as dead, bearing her in his arms.

Arc. That we have made so much on. I had rather Have skipp'd from sixteen years of age to sixty,
To have turn'd my leaping-time into a crutch,
Than have seen this.

Gui. O sweetest, fairest lily!
Cymbeline.—Act IV., Scene ii.
My brother bears thee not the one half so well
As when thou grewst thyself.

Bel. O melancholy!

Who ever yet could sound thy bottom? find
The ooze, to show what coast thy sluggish crare
Might easiest harbour in? Thou bless'd thing! Jove knows what man thou might'st have made;
Thou diest, a most rare boy, of melancholy. [But I,
How found you him?]

Arr. Stark, as you see:
Thus smiling, as some thy tald did tickled slumber,
Not as death's start, being laugh'd at: his right cheek
Reposing on a cushion.

Gui. Where?

O the floor;
His arms thus leagued: I thought he slept, and put My clouted brogues from off my feet, whose readiness
Answer'd my steps too loud.

Gui. Why, he but sleeps:
If he be gone, he'll make his grave a bed;
With female fairies will his tomb be haunted,
And worms will not come to thee.

Gui. With fairest flowers
Whilst summer lasts and I live here, Fidele,
I'll sweeten thy sad grave: thou shalt not lack
The flower that's like thy face, pale primrose, nor
The azured lily, like thy veins, no, nor
The leaf of egantine, whom not to slander,
Out-sweeten'd not thy breath: the ruddle would,
With charitable bill,—O bill, sore slaming
Those rich-leaf'd heirs that let their fathers lie
Without a monument!—bring thee all this:
Yea, and furr'd moss besides, when flowers are
To winter-ground thy corse.

Gui. Prithee, have done;
And do not play in witch-like words with that
Which is so serious. Let us bury him,
And not protract with admiration what
Is now due debt. To the grave!

Arr. Say, where shall 's lay him?

Gui. By good Euriphe, our mother.

Arr. Be't so:
And let us, Polydore, though now our voices
Have got the mannish crack, sing him to the ground,
As once our mother: use like note and words,
Save that Euriphe must be Fidele.

Gui. Cadwal, I cannot sing: I'll weep, and word it with thee;
For notes of sorrow out of tune are worse
Than priests and fauces that lie.

We'll speak it, then,
Bel. Great griefs, I see, medicine the less; for Cloten Is quite forgot. He was a queen's son, boys;
And though he came our enemy, remember [ting
He was paid for that: though mean and mighty, ro-
Together, have one dust, yet reverence
That angel of the world, doth make distinction
Of place 'twixt high and low. Our foe was mankind;
And though you took his life, as being our foe,
Yet bury him as a prince.

Gui. Pray you, fetch him hither.
Thersites' body is as good as Ajax',
When neither are alive.

Arr. If you'll go fetch him, we'll say our song the whilst. Brother, begin.

Gui. Nay, Cadwal, we must lay his head to the
My father hath a reason for 't.

Gui. Come on then, and remove him.

Arr. 'Tis true.

Gui. Come on then, and remove him.

Gui. Fear no more the heat o' the sun,
Nor the furious winter's rage;
Thou worldly task hast done,
Home art gone, and ta'en thy wages:

Golden lads and girls all must,
As chimney-sweepers, come to dust.

Arr. Fear no more the frown o' the great;
Thou art past the tyrant's stroke;
Care no more to clothe and eat;
'Tis the grave and the dust is as the oak.
The sceptre, learning, plume must
All follow this, and come to dust.

Gui. Fear no more the lightning-flash,
Arr. Nor the all-treaded thunder-stone;
Gui. Fear not slander, censure rash;
Arr. To the green grass and the golden rye;
Both. All lovers young, all lovers must
Consign to thee, and come to dust.

Gui. No exorciser harm thee!
Arr. Nor no witchcraft charm thee!
Gui. Ghost unkind for thee!
Arr. Nothing ill come near thee!
Both. Quiet consumption have;
And renowned be thy grave!

Re-enter Belarius, with the body of Cloten.

Gui. We have done our obsequies: come, lay him down.

Bel. Here's a few flowers; but 'bout midnight,
The herbs that have on them cold dew o' the night
Are strewn'st fit' for graves. Upon their faces,
You were as flowers, now with'rd;—even so
These herbeds shall, which we upon you strew.
Come on, away: apart upon our knees,
The ground that gave them first has them again:
Their pleasures here are past, so is their pain.

[Exit Belarius, Cadwalers and Averius.

Ino. [Breaking] Yes, sir, to Milford-Haven: which Is the third time I ha't him so?

[Thus far.

Hither? I thank you.—By yond bush?—Pray, how far
'Its pittikins! can it he six mile yet?—
I have gone all night. 'Faith, I'll lie down and sleep.
But, soft! no bedfellow!—O gods and goddesses!

[Seeing the body of Cloten.

These flowers are like the pleasures of the world;
This bloody man, the care on't. I hope I dream;
For so I thought I was a cave-keeper,
And cook to honest creatures: but 'tis not so;
'T was but a bolt of nothing, shot at
Which the brain makes fumes: our very eyes
Are sometimes like our judgments, blind. 'Good
I tremble still with fear: but the true [faith,
Yet left in heaven as small a drop of pity
As a wren's eye, fear'd gods, a part of it!
The dream's here still: even when I wake, it is Without me, as within me; not imagined, felt.
A headless man! The garments of Posthumus!
I know the shape of a leg: this is his hand;
His foot Mercenial: his Martial thigh:
The brays of Hercules: but his Jovial face
Murther in heaven?—How!—'Tis gone. Pisanio,
All curses madded Heokha gave the Greeks,
And mine to keepe, be carted on thee! Thou,
Consipred with that irreconcil'd devill, Cloten,
Hast here cut off my lord. To write and read
Be henceforth treacherous! Damn'd! Pisanio
Hath with his forged letters,—damn'd Pisanio—
From this most bravest vessel of the world Struck the man. O Posthumus! alas, [that] Where dre thy head? where is that? Aye! where 's Pisanio might have kill'd thee at the heart,
And left this head on. How should this be? Pisanio?
'Is he and Cloten: ma'afe and lucre in them
Have laid this work here. O, 'tis pregnant, pregnant!
The drug he take the top, which he said was precious
And cordial to me, have I not paid to it
Murderers to the senses? That confirms it home:
This is Pisanio's deed, and Cloten's: O!
Give colour to my pale cheek with thy blood,
That we the tyrrider may seem to those
Which chance to find us: O, my lord, my lord!
[Falls on the body.]

Enter Lucius, a Captain and other Officers, and a Soothsayer.

Cop. To them the legions garrison'd in Gallin,
After your will, have cross'd the sea, attending
You here at Milford-Haven with your ships:
They are in readiness.
Luc. But what from Rome?
Cop. The senate hath stirr'd up the confidents
And gentlemen of Italy, most willing spirits,
That promise noble service; and they come
Under the conduct of bold Fafnion,
Syenna's brother.
Luc. When expect you them?
Cop. With the next benefit of the wind.
Luc. This forwardness
Makes our hopes fair. Command our present numbers
Be muster'd; bid the captains look to 't. Now, sir,
What have you dreamnd of late of this war's supposed purpose?
Luc. Last night the very gods show'd me a vision —
I fast and pray'd for their intelligence — thus:
I saw Jove's bird, the Roman eagle, wing'd
From the spongy south to this part of the west,
There vanish'd in the sunbeams: which portends —
Unless my sins abuse my divination —
Success to the Roman host.
Luc. Dream often so,
And never false. Soft, ho! what trunk is here
Without his top? The ruin speaks that sometime
It was a worthy building. How! a page!
Or dead, or sleeping on him? But dead rather;
For nature doth abhor to make his bed
With the defunct, or sleep upon the dead.
Let's see the boy's face.
Cop. He's alive, my lord.
Luc. He'll then instruct us of this body. Young Inform us of thy fortunes, for it seems one,
They crave to be demanded. Who is this Thou makest thy bloody pillow? Or who was he
That, otherwise than noble nature did,
Hath alter'd that good picture? What's thy interest
In this sad wreck? How came it? Who is it?
What art thou?

[Enter.
Luc. I am nothing: or if not,
Nothing to be were better. This was my master,
A very valiant Briton and a good,
That here by mountaineers lies slain. Alas!
There is no more such masters: I may wander
From east to occident, cry out for service,
Try many, all good, serve truly, never Find such another master.
Luc. 'Lack, good youth!
Thou movest no less with thy complaining than Thy master in bleeding: say his name, good friend, [Aside.] If I do lie and
No harm by it, though the gods hear, I hope
They'll pardon it. — Say you, sir?

[Enter Pisanio.

Luc. Thy name?

Pis. Fidele, sir.

Luc. Thou dost approve thyself the very same:
Thy name well fits thy faith, thy faith thy name.
Will take thy chance with me? I will not say
Thou shalt be so well master'd, but, be sure,
No less beloved. The Roman emperor's letters,
Sent by a consul to me, should not sooner
Than thine own worth prefer thee: go with me.

[Exeunt.]

And on it said a century of prayers,
Such as I can, twice o'er, I'll weep and sigh;
And leaving so his service, follow you,
So please you entertain me.
Luc. Ay, good youth;
And rather father thee than master thee.
My friends,
The boy hath taught us many duties: let us
Find out the prettiest daisied plot we can,
And make him with our pikes and partisans
A grave: come, arm him. Boy, he is prefer'd
By thee to us, and he shall be inter'd:
As soldiers can. Be cheerful: wipe thine eyes;
Some falls are means the happier to arise. [Exit.]

SCENE III.—A room in Cymbeline's palace.

Enter Cymbeline, Lords, Pisanio, and Attendants.

Cym. Again; and bring me word how 'tis with her.
[Exit an Attendant.

A fever with the absence of her son,
A madness, of which her life's in danger. Heavens,
What's 'tis will be! How doth she, since once
I saw her? The great part of my comfort, gone;
my queen
Upon a desperate bed, and in a time
When fearful wars point at me; her son gone,
So needful for this present: it strikes me, past
The hope of comfort. But for thee, fellow,
Who needs to know of her departure and
Dost seem so ignorant, we'll enforce it from thee
By a sharp torture.

Pis. Sir, my life is yours:
I humbly set it at your will; but, for my mistress,
I nothing know where she remains, why gone,
Nor when she purposes return. Beseech your high-
Hold me your loyal servant.

First Lord. Good my liege,
The day that she was missing he was here:
I dare be bound he's true and shall perform
All parts of his subjection loyally. For Cloten,
There wants no diligence in seeking him,
And will, no doubt, be found.

Cym. The time is troublesome.
[To Pisanio.] We'll slip you for a season; but our jealousy
Does yet depend.

First Lord. So please your majesty,
The Roman legions, all from Gallia drawn,
Are landed on your coast, with a supply
Of Roman gentlemen, by the senate sent.
Cym. Now for the counsel of my son and queen
I am amazed with matter.

First Lord. Good my liege,
Your preparation can afford no less
Than what you hear of: come more, for more you're ready:
The want is but to put those powers in motion
That long to move.

Cym. And meet the time as it seeks us. We fear not What can from Italy annoy us: but
We grieve at chances here. Away!
[Exeunt all but Pisanio.

Pis. I heard no letter from my master since
I wrote him; I have seen a strange;
I nor heard from my mistress, who did promise
To yield me often tidings: neither know I
What is betid to Cloten; but remain
Perplex'd in all. The heavens still must work.
Wherein I am false I am honest; not true, to be true.

These present wars shall find I love my country,
Even to the note o' the king, or I'll fall in them.
All other doubts, by time let them be clear'd:
Fortune brings in some boats that are not steer'd.

[Exit.]
ACT V.

SCENE IV.—Wales: before the cave of Belarius.

Enter Belarius, Guiderius, and Arviragus.

Bel. The noise is round about us.

Gud. Let us from it.

Arr. What pleasure, sir, find we in life, to lock it From action and adventure?-

Bel. Nay, what hope Have we in hiding us? This way, the Romans Must or for Britons slay us, or receive us For barbarous and unnatural revolts During their use, and slay us after.

Arr. Sons, We'll higher to the mountains: there secure us. To the king's party there's no going: newness Of Cloten's death—we being not known, not miss. Among the bands—may drive us to a render (fer'd Where we have lived, and so extort from 's that Which we have done, whose answer would be death Drawn on with torture.

Bel. This is, sir, a doubt In such a time nothing becoming you, Nor satisfying us.

Arr. It is not likely That when they hear the Roman horses neigh, Behold their quarter'd fires, have both their eyes And ears so 'cly'd importantly as now, That they will waste their time upon our note, To know from whence we are. O, I am known Of many in the army: many years, [him Though Cloten then but young, you see, not wore From my remembrance. And, besides, the king Hath not deserved my service nor my loves:

Who find in my exile the want of breeding, The certainty of this hard life: aye hopeless To have the courtesy your cradle promised, But to be still hot summer's sunlings and The shrinking slaves of winter. Than be so Better to cease to be. Pray, sir, to the army: I and my brother are not known; yourself So out of thought; and thereto so o'ergrown, Cannot be question'd.

Arr. By this sun that shines, I'll thither: what thing is it that I never Did see man die! scarce ever look't on blood, But that of coward haries, hot goats, and venison! Never bestrid a horse, save one that had A rider like myself. who 'er wore rowel Nor iron on his heel? I am ashamed To look upon the holy sun, to have The benefit of his best beams, remaining So long a poor unknown.

Bel. By heavens, I'll go: If you will bless me, sir, and give me leave, I'll take the better care, but if you will not, The hazard therefore due fall on me by The hands of Romans!

Arr. So say I: amen.

Bel. No reason I, since of your lives you set So slight a valution. should reserve To my crack'd one to more care. Have with you, boys! If in your country wars you chance to die, That is my bed too, lads, and there I'll lie:

Lead, lead. [Aside] The time seems long; their blood thinks scorn, Till it fly out and show them princes born. [Exit.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Britain. The Roman camp.

Enter Posthumus, with a bloody handkerchief.

Post. Ye M. bloody cloth, I'll keep thee, for I wish'd That she would be colour'd thus. You married ones, If each of you should take this course, how many Must murder wives much better than themselves For wrying but a little! O Pisania! Every good servant does not all commands: No bond but to do just ones. Gods! if you Should have 'en vengeance on my faults. I never Had lived to put on this: so had you saved The noble Imogen to repent, and struck Me, wretch more worth your vengeance. But, alack, You snatch some hence for little faults; that's love, To have them fall no more: you some permit To second ills with ills, each elder worse, And make them dread it, to the doers' thirst. But Imogen is your own: do your best wills, And make me best to obey! I am brought hither Among the Italian gentry, and to fight Against my lady's kingdom: 'tis enough That, Britain, I have kill'd thy mistress; peace! I'll give no wound to thee. Therefore, good heavens, Hear patiently my purpose: I'll disrobe me Of these Italian weeds and suit myself As does a Briton peasant: so I'll fight Against the part I come with; so I'll die For thee, O Imogen, even for whom my life Is every breath a death; and thus unknown, Pitted nor hated, to the face of peril Myself I'll dedicate. Let me make men know More valor in me than my habits show. Gods, put the strength o' the Leonati in me! To shame the guise o' the world. I will begin The fashion, less without and more within. [Exit.

Enter, from one side, Lucius, Iachimo, and the Roman Army: from the other side, the British Army; Leonatus Posthumus following; like a poor soldier. They march over and go out. Then enter again, in skirmish, Iachimo and Posthumus: he vanquisheth and disarmeth Iachimo, and then leaves him.

Iach. The heaviness and guilt within my bosom Takes off my manhood: I have belied a lady, The princess of this country, and the air on't I have revenged ills that were so deep, and could this car! A very drudge of nature's, have subdued me In my profession! Knighthoods and honours, borne As I wear mine, are titles but of scorn. If that thy gentry, Britain, go before This bout as he exceeds our lords, the odds Is that we scarce are men and you are gods. [Exit.

Iach. The battle continues: the Britons fly: Cymbeline is taken: then enter, to his rescue, Belarius, Guiderius, and Arviragus.

Bel. Stand, stand! We have the advantage of the ground: The lane is guarded: nothing routs us but The villainy of our fears.

Iach. Stand, stand, and fight! [Exit.

Re-enter Posthumus, and secends the Britons: they rescue Cymbeline, and exult. Then re-enter Lucius, and Iachimo, with Imogen.

Luc. Away, boy, from the troops, and save thyself; For friends kill friends, and the disorder 's such As war were hoodwink'd.

Iach. 'Tis their fresh supplies.

SCENE II.-Field of battle between the British and Roman camps. 795
SCENE III.—Another part of the field.

Lord. Camæst thou from where they made the Post. I did; [stand?]

Though you, it seems, come from the fliers.

Lord. Post. No blame be to you, sir; for all was lost,

But that the heavens fought: the king himself

Of his wings destitute, the army broken,

And but the backs of Britons seen, all flying

Through a strait lane: the enemy full-hearted,

Lolled the tongue with slaughter, having work

More plentiful than tools to do 't, struck down

Some mortally, some slightly touch'd, some failing

Mercely through fear; that the strait pass was damnd

With dead men hurt behind, and cowards living

To die with length'd shame.

Lord. Where was this lane?

Post. Close by the battle, ditch'd, and wall'd with

Which gave advantage to an ancient soldier, [turf;

An honest one, I warrant; who deserved

So long a breeding as his white beard came to,

In doing this for 's country: athwart the lane,

He, with two stripplings—lads more like to run

The country to commit such slaughter;

With faces fit for masks, or rather fairer

Than those for preservation cased, or shame—

Made good the passage: cried to those that fled,

'Our Britain's harts die flying, not our men:

To darkness fleet souls that fly backwards. Stand;

Or we are Romans and will give you that

Like beasts which you shun beastly, and may save,

But to look back in frown: stand, stand.'

These three thousand confident, in act as many—[three,

For these performers are the file when all

The rest do nothing—with this word 'Stand, stand,'

Accomplished by the place, more charming

With their own nobleness, which could have turn'd

A distast to a lancer, galled pale looks, [coward

Part shame, part spirit renew'd: that some, turn'd

But by example—O, a sin in war,

Damn'd in the first beginnings!—gun to look

The way they did, and to grin like lions

Upon the pikes of the hunters. Then began

A stop? the chaser, a retire, anon

A rout, confusion thick: forthwith they fly

Chickens, the way which they stoo’d eagles; slaves,

The stiles they victors made: and now our cowards,

Like allied men in hard voyages, became

The life of the need: having found the back-door open

Of the ungarded hearts, heavens, how they would!

Some slain before; some dying; some their friends

Overborne? the former wave: ten, chased by one,

Are now each one the slumber-man of twenty:

Those that would die or live resist are grown

The mortal bags of the field.

Lord. This was strange chance:

A narrow lane, an old man, and two boys.

Post. Nay, do not wonder at it: you are made

Rather to wonder at the things you hear

Than to work any. Will you rhyme upon 't,

And vent it for a mockery? Here 's one:

'Two boys, an old man: twice a boy, a hane,

Preserved the Britons, was the Romans’ bane.'

Lord. Nay, be not angry, sir.

Post. Not.

Lord. Lack, to what end?

Who dores not stand his foe, I’ll be his friend;

For if he ’ll do as he is made to do,

I know he’ll quickly fly my friendship you.

You have put me into rhyme.

Lord. Farewell; you are angry.

Post. Still going? [Exeunt Lord.] This is a lord!

O noble misery,

To be ? the field, and ask 'what news?' of me!

To-day how many would have given their honours

To have saved their carcasses? took heed to do 't,

And yet they died! I, in his own voice charm’d,

Could not find death where I did hear him groan,

Nor feel him where he struck: being an ugly monster,

'T is strange he hides him in fresh cups, soft beds,

Sweet words; or hath more ministers than we

That draw his knives i’ the war. Well, I will find

Lord for being now a flier to his Briton charm’d

[him:

No more a Briton, I have resumed again

The part I came in: fight I will no more,

But yield me to the veriest hind that shall

Once touch my shoulder. Great the slaughter is Here made by the Roman; great the answer be

Britons must take. For me, my reason’s death;

On either side I come to spend my breath;

Which neither here I’ll keep nor bear again,

But end it by some means for Imogen.

Enter two British Captains and Soldiers.

First Cap. Great Jupiter be praised! The Lieut is taken.

'T is thought the old man and his sons were angels.

Sec. Cap. There was a fourth man, in a silly habit,

That gave the affront with them.

First Cap. But none of them can be found. Stand! who’s there?

Post. A Roman,

Who had not now been drooping here, if seconds

Had answer’d him.

Sec. Cap. Lay hands on him; a dog!

A leg of Rome shall not return to tell [service

That crows have peck’d them here. He brings his As if he were of note; bring him to the king.

Enter Cymbeline, Belarius, Guiderius, Arviragus, Pisanio, Soldiers, Attendants, and Roman Captives.

The Captains present Posthumus to Cymbeline, who delivers him over to a Gaoler: then exeunt omnes.

SCENE IV.—A British prison.

Enter Posthumus and two Gaolers.

First Gaol. You shall not now be stoln, you have locks upon you;

So grace as you find pasture.

Sec. Gaol. Ay, or a stomach.

[Exeunt Gaolers.

Post. Most welcome, bondage! for thou art a way,

I think, to liberty: yet am I better

Than one that's sick of the gout; since he had rather

Grown so in perpetuity than be cured.

By the sure physician, death, who is the key

To unbar these locks. My conscience, thou art

Fetter'd

More than my shanks and wrists: you good gods,

Give me

The penent instrument to pick that bolt,

Then, free for ever! Is 't enough I am sorry?

So children temporal fathers do appease;

Gods are more full of mercy. Must I repent?

I cannot do it better than in gyves,

Desired more than constrained: to satisfy,

If of my freedom 'tis the main part, take

No stricter render of me than my all.

I know you are more element than vile men,

Who of their broken debtors take a third,

A sixth, a tenth, letting them thrive again

On their abatement: that's not my desire:

For Imogen a dear life would I hold,

Though 'tis not so dear, yet 'tis in life; you coin'd it:

'Tween man and man they weigh not every stamp;

Though light, take pieces for the figure's sake:

You rather mine, being yours: and so, great powers,

If you will take this audit, take this life,

And cancel these cold bonds. O Imogen!

I'll speak to thee in silence. [Sleeps.]
SOL. No more, thou thunder-master, show
Thy spirit on mortal flies:
With storms thou dost thy hand, with Juno childe,
That thy adulteries
Rates and revenges.
Thy heart and thine heart,
I died whilst in the womb he stay'd
Attending nature's law.
Whose father then, as men report
Thou art a poor art, Saint
That he should be, and shield him
From this earth-exeing smart.

MO. Lucina lent not me her aid,
But took me in my throes;
That from me was Posthumus ript,
Came crying 'mongst his foes.
A thing of pity!

SIC. Great nature, like his ancestry,
Moulded the stuff so fair,
That he deserved the praise o' the world,
As great Sicilis' heir.

FIRST BRO. When once he was mature for man,
In Britain where was he
That could stand up his parallel;
Or fruitful object be
In eye of Imogen, that best
Could deem his dignity?

MO. With marriage wherefore was he mock'd,
To be exiled, and thrown
From Leonati seat, and cast
From her he dearest one,
Sweet Imogen?

SIC. Why did you suffer Iachimo,
Slight thing of Italy,
To taint your nobler heart and brain
With needless jealousy;
And to become the gend and scorn
O' th' other's villainy?

SEC. BRO. For this from stiffer seats we came,
Our parents and us twain,
That striking in our country's cause fell bravely and were slain.
Our fealty and Tamentis' right
With honour to maintain.

FIRST BRO. Like hartiment Posthumus hath
To Cymbeline perform'd:
Then, Jupiter, thou king of gods,
Why hast thou thus adjourn'd
The graces for his merits due;
Being all to dolours turn'd?

SIC. Thy crystal window ope; look out;
No longer exercise
Upon a valiant race thy harsh
And potent injuries.

MO. Since, Jupiter, our son is good,
Take off his miseries.

SIC. Peep through thy marble mansion; help;
Or we poor ghosts will cry
To the shining sac'red of the rest
Against thy deity.
the sadness of parting, as the procuring of mirth; you come in taint for want of meat, depart reeling with too much drink; sorry that you have paid too much, and sorry that you are paid too much; purse and hand both: the brain the heavier for being too light, the purse too light, being drawn of heavin-ness: of this contradiction you shall now be quit.
O, the charity of a penny cord! it sums up thousands in a trice: you have no true debitor and bcredior but it; of what's past, is, and to come, the discharge: if I were one, I would, book and counters: so the acquittance follows.
Post. I am merrier to die than thou art to live.
First Goul. Indeed, sir, he that sleeps feels not the tooth-ache: but a man that were to sleep your sleep, and a haman to help him to bed, I think he would disable with his officer: for, look you, sir, you know not which way you shall go.
Post. Yes, indeed do I, fellow.
First Goul. Your death has eyes in 's head then;
I have not seen him so pictured: you must either be directed by some that take upon them to know, or do upon yourself that which I am sure you do not know, or jump the after inquiry on your own peril: and how you shall speed in your journey's end, I think you 'll never return to tell one.
Post. I tell thee, fellow, there are none want eyes to direct them the way I am going, but such as wink and will not use them.
First Goul. What an infinite mock is this, that a man should have the best use of eyes to see the way of blindness! I am sure hanging 's the way of winking.
Enter a Messenger.
Mess. Knock off his manacles; bring your prisoner to the king.
Post. Thou bring'st good news; I am called to be made free.
First Goul. I 'll hang'd then.
Post. Thou shalt be then freer than a gaoler; no bolts for the dead.
[Exeunt Posthumous and Messenger.
First Goul. Unless a man would marry a gallows and beget young gibbets, I never saw one so prone.
Yet, on my conscience, there are verier knaves desire to live, for all he be a Roman: and there be some of them too that die against their wills; so should I, if I were one. We would all of one mind, and one mind good; O, there were desolation of gallows and gallowses! I speak against my pres-cut profit, but my wish hath a preference in 't.

SCENE V. — Cymbeline's tent.

Enter Cymbeline, Belarius, Guiderius, Arvir-gus, Pisaniu, Lords, Officers, and Attendants.

Cym. Stand by my side, you whom the gods have Preservers of my throne. Woe is my heart [made
That the poor soldier that so richly fought,
Whose shamed girded arms, whose naked breast
Stepp'd before targes of proof, cannot be found:
He shall be happy that can find him, if
Our grace can make him so.

Del. I never saw
Such noble fury in so poor a thing;
Such precious deeds in one that promised nought
But beggary and poor looks.

Cym. No tidings of him?
Pis. He hath been search'd among the dead and
But no trace of him. [living,
Cym. To my grief, I am
The heir of his reward; [To Belarius, Guiderius, and Arvir-gus] which I will add
To you, the liver, heart and brain of Britain,
By whom I grant she lives. 'T is now the time
To ask of whence you are. Report it.

Del. Sir,

In Cambria are we born, and gentlemen;
Further to boast were neither true nor modest,
Unless I add, we are honest.

Cym. Bow your knees.

Arise ye knights o' the battle: I create you
Companions to our person and will fit you
With dignities becoming your estates.

Enter Cornelius and Ladies.

There a business in these faces. Why so sadly
Greet you our victory? you look like Romans,
And not of the court of Britain.

Cor. Hail, great king!

To sour your happiness, I must report
The queen is dead.

Cym. Who worse than a physician
Would this report become? But I consider,
By medicine life may be prolong'd, Yet death
Will seize the doctor too. How ended she?

Cor. With horror, madly dying, like her life,
Which, being cruel to the world, concluded
Most cruel to herself. What she confess'd
I will not report, so please you: these her women
Can trip me, if I err; who with wet checks
Were present when she finish'd.

Cym. Prithie, say.

Cor. First, she confess'd she never loved you, only
Affected greatness got by you, not you:
Carried your royalty, was wife to your place;
Abhor'd your person.

Cym. She alone knew this;
And, but she spoke it dying, I would not Believe her lips in opening it. Proceed.

Cor. Your daughter, whom she bore in hand
With such integrity, she did confess [love
Was as a score to her sight: whose life,
But that her flight prevented it, she had Tear'd off by poison.

Cym. O most delicate fiend?

Who is 'c can read a woman? Is there more?

Cor. More, sir, and worse. She did confess she had
For you a mortal mineral: which, being took;
Should by the minute feed on life and lingering
By inches waste you: in which time she purposed,
By watching, weeping, tendance, kissing, to Overcome you with her show, and in time,
When she had fitted you with her craft, to work
Her into the adoption of the crown:

But, failing of her end by his strange absence,
Grew shameless-desperate; open'd, in despite
Of heaven and men, her purposes; repented
The evils she hatch'd were not effected; so
Despairing died.

Cym. Heard you all this, her women?

First Lady. We did, so please your highness.

Cym. Mine eyes
Were not in fault, for she was beautiful;
Mine ears, that heard her flattery; nor my heart,
That thought her like her seeming; it had been
To have mistrusted her: yet, O my daughter!
That it was folly in me, thou mayst say,
And prove it in thy feeling. Heaven mend all!

Enter Lucius, Iachimo, the Soothsayer, and other Romain Prisoners, guarded; Posthumus behind, and Imogen.

Thou comest not, Caius, now for tribute; that
The Britons have razed out, though with the loss
Of many a bold one: whose kinsmen have made suit
That their good souls may be appeas'd with slaughter
Of their captives, which ourself have granted:
So think of your estate.

Luc. Consider, sir, the chance of war: the day
Was yours by accident; had it gone with us,
We should not, when the blood was cool, have threatened
Our prisoners with the sword. But since the gods
Will have it thus, that nothing but our lives
May save us, let it come so. A Roman with a Roman's heart can suffer:
Augustus lives to think on't: and so much
For my peculiar care. This one thing only
I will entreat: my boy, a Briton born,
Let him be ransomed: never master had
A page so kind, so duteous, diligent,
So tender over his occasions, true,
So neat, so nurse-like: let his virtue join
With my request, which I'll make bold your high-
Cannot deny; he hath done no Briton harm,
Though he have served a Roman: save him, sir,
And spare no blood besides.

Cym. I have surely seen him:
His favour is familiar to me. Boy,
Thus hast look'd thyself into my grace,
And art mine own. I know not why, wherefore,
To say 'tis boy; ne'er think thy master live:
And ask of Cymbeline what boon thou wilt,
Fitting my bounty and thy state, I'll give it;
Yea, though thou dost demand a prisoner,
The noblest ta'en.

I'm. I humbly thank your highness.
Loc. I do not bid thee beg my life, good lad;
And yet I know thou wilt.

I'm. No, no: slack,
There's other work in hand: I see a thing
Bitter to me as death: thy life, good master,
Must shine for itself.

Loc. The boy disdains me,
He leaves me, scorns me: briefly die their joys
That place them on the truth of girls and boys.
What stands he so perplex'd?

Cym. What wouldst thou, boy? I love thee more and more:
What's best to ask. Know'st he him who look'st on me?

I'm. Wilt have him live? Is he thy kin? thy friend?
Loc. He is a Roman; no more kin to me [sul,
Than 1 to your highness; who, being born your vas-
Am something hearer.

Cym. Wherefore cest him so?
I'm. I'll tell you, sir, in private, if you please
To give me hearing.

Are. Ay, with all my heart,
And lend my best attention.
What's thy name?

I'm. Fidele, sir.

Cym. Thou 'rt my good youth, my page;
I'll be thy master, walk with me: speak freely,
[Cymbeline and Imogen come forward.]

Pel. Is not this boy revived from death?

Are. One sand another
Not more resembles that sweet rosy lad
Who died, and was Fidele. What think you?

Cym. What's the same dead thing alive.

Pel. Peace! Peace! see further; he eyes us not;

[Aside] It is my mistress;

Cym. Since she is living, let the time run on
To good or bad.

[Aside] Cymbeline and Imogen come forward.

Cym. Come, stand thou by our side;
Make my demand aloud. [To Iachino] Sir, step
you forth;
Give answer to this boy, and do it freely;
Or, by our greatness and the grace of it,
Which is our honour, bitter torture shall [him. W

Winnow the truth from falsehood. On, speak to I'm. My boon is, that this gentleman may render
Of whom he had this ring.

Post. [Aside] What's that to him?

Cym. That diamond upon your finger, say
How came yours?

Iach. Thou 'll torture me to leave unspoken that
Which, to be spoken, would torture thee.

Cym. How's me?

Iach. I am glad to be constram'd to utter that Which torment makes me conceal. By villainy
I got this ring: 'tis Leonatus's jewel;
Whom thou didst banish, and— which more may Grieve thee.

As it doth me—a nobler sir ne'er lived lord; 'Twist sky and ground. Wilt thou hear more, my

Cym. All that belongs to this.

Iach. That paragon, thy daughter—
For whom my heart drops blood, and my false spirits
Quail to remember— Give me leave: I faint.

Cym. My daughter! what of her? Renew thy strength:
I had rather thou shouldst live while nature will Dye me ere I hear more: strive, man, and speak.

[Aside] Upon a time,—unhappy was the clock
That struck the hour!—it was in Rome.—accused
The mansion where? —'t was at a feast,—O, would
Our vizards had been poison'd, or at least
Those which I heaved to head!—the good Posthumus.

What should I say? he was too good to be
Where ill men were; and was the best of all
Amongst the rarest of good ones,—sitting sadly,
Hearing us praise our loves of Italy
For beauty that made barren the swell'd beast
Of him that best could speak, for feature, framing
The shrine of Venus, or straight-night Minerva,
Postures beyond brief nature, for condition,
A shop of all the qualities that man
Loves woman for, besides that hook of viving,
Fairness which strikes the eye—

Cym. Come to the matter.

Iach. All too soon I shall, [mus, Unless thou wouldst greet quickly. This Posthu-
Most like a noble lord in love and one
That had a royal lover, took his hint;
And, not disputing whom we praised,—therein
He was as calm as virtue—he began
[made, His mistress' picture: which by her tongue being
And then a mind put in't, either our brawns
Were crack'd of kitchen-trulls, or his description
Proved us unsparking sots.

Cym. Nay, may, to the purpose.

Iach. Your daughter's chaste virtue, where it begins.
He spake of her, as Dian had hot dreams,
And she alone were cold: whereat I, wretch,
Made scruple of his praise; and wagger'd with him
Pieces of gold against this which then he wore
Upon his honour'd finger, to attain
In suit the place of 's bed and win this ring
By hers and mine adultery. He, true knight,
No lesser of her honour confident
Than I did truly find her, staks this ring;
And would so, had it been a carbuncle
Of Phebus' wheel, and might so safely, had it
Been all the thread of 's car. Away to Britain
Post I in this design: well may you, sir,
Remember me at court; where I was taught
Of your chaste daughter the wide difference
'Twixt amorous and villainous. Being thus quench'd
Of hope, not longling, mine Italian brain

Cym. [In your deller Britain operate.

Most vilely for my sake, and yet sufficiently;
And, to be brief, my practice so prevail'd,
That I return'd with similar proof enough
To make the noble Leonatus mad,
By wounding his belief in her renown
With tokens thus, and thus; averring notes
Of chamber-lounging, pictures, this her bracelet,—
O cunning, how I got it!—nay, some marks

799
Of secret on her person, that he could not
But think her bond of chastity quite crack'd, I
Having ta'en up the forfeit. Whereupon —
Metthinks, I see him now —
Post. [Advancing] Ay, so thou dost, Italian fiend! Ay me, most credulous fool,
Egregious murderer, thief, any thing
That's due to all the villains past, in being,
To come! O, give me cord, or knife, or poison,
Some upright justice! Thou, king, send out
For torturers ingenious; it is I
That all the abhorred things o' the earth amend
By being worse than they. I am Posthumus,
That kill'd thy daughter: — villain-like, I lie —
That caused a lesser villain than myself,
A sacrilegious thief, to do 't: the temple
Of virtue was she; yea, and she herself.
Spit, and throw stones, cast naiere upon me, set
The dogs o' the street to bay me: every villain
Be call'd Posthumus Leonatus; and
Be villany less than 't was! O Imogen!
My queen, my life, my wife! 'O Imogen,
Imogen, Imogen!

I'mo. Peace, my lord; hear, hear —
Post. Shall's have a play of this? Thou scornful
page,
There lie thy part. [Striking her: she falls.
Pis. O, gentlemen, help!
Mine and your mistress! O, my lord Posthumus!
You ne'er kill'd Imogen till now. Help, help!
Mine honour'd lady!
Cym. Does the world go round?
Post. How come these staggerers on me?
Pis. Wake, my mistress!
Cym. If this be so, the gods do mean to strike me
To death with mortal joy.
Pis. How fairs my mistress?
I'mo. O, get thee from my sight;
Thou gavest me poison: dangerous fellow, hence!
Bring not the where princes are.
Cym. The tune of Imogen!
Pis. Lady,
The gods throw stones of sulphur on me, if
That box I gave you was not thought of by
A precious thing; I had it from the queen.
Cym. New matter still?
I'mo. It poison'd me.
Cor. O gods! I left out one thing which the queen confess'd,
Which must approve thee honest: 'O Pisanio
Have 't said she 'given his mistress that confection
Which I gave him for cordial, she is served
As I would serve a rat.
Cym. What's this, Cornelius?
Cor. The queen, sir, very oft importuned me
To temper poison for her, still pretending
The satisfaction of her knowledge only
In killing creatures vile, as cats and dogs,
Of no esteem: I, dreading that her purpose
Was of more danger, did compound for her
A certain stuff, which, being ta'en, would cease
The present power of life, but in short time
All offices of nature should again
Do the due functions. Have you ta'en of it?
I'mo. Most like I did, for I was dead.
Bel. [To Guiderius and Arringus] Though you did love this youth, I blame ye not;
You had a motive for't.
Cym. My tears that fall
Prove holy water on thee! Imogen,
Thy mother's dead.
I'mo. I am sorry for 't, my lord.
Cym. O, she was naught; and long of her it was
That we meet here so strangely: but her son
Is gone, we know not how nor where.
Post. My lord,
Now fear is from me, I'll speak truth. Lord Cloten,
Upon my lady's missing, came to me
With his sword drawn; found at the mouth, and swore
If I discover'd not which way she was gone,
It was my instant death. By accident,
I had a feigned letter of my master's
Then in my pocket; which directed him
To seek her on the mountains near to Milford;
Where, in a frenzy, in my master's garments,
Which he enforced from me, away he posts
With unchaste purpose and with oath to violate
My lady's honour: what became of him
I further know not.
Guin. Let me end the story:
I slew him there.
Cym. Marry, the gods forfend!
I would not thy good deeds should from my lips
Pluck a hard sentence; priethee, valiant youth,
Deny 't again.
Guin. He have spoke it, and I did it.
Cym. He was a prince.
Guin. A most inexcitable one: the wrongs he did me
Were nothing prince-like; for he did provoke me
With language that would make me spurn the sea,
If it could so roar to me: I cut off 's head;
And am right glad he is not standing here
To tell this tale of mine.
Cym. I am sorry for thee:
By thine own tongue thou art condemm'd, and must Endure our law: thou 'rt dead.
That headless man
I thought had been my lord.
Cym. Bind the offender,
And take him from our presence.
Bel. This man is better than the man he slew,
As well descended as thyself; and hath
More of thee merited than a band of Clotens
Had ever scarce. [To the Guard] Let his arms alone;
Those were not born for bondage.
Cym. Why, old soldier,
Wilt thou undo the worth thou art unpaid for,
By tasting of our wrath? How of descent
As good as we?
Arr. In that he spoke too far.
Cym. And thou shalt die for 't.
Bel. We will die all three:
But I will prove that two on 's are as good
As I have given out him. My sons, I must,
For mine own part, unfold a dangerous speech,
Though, haply, well for you.
Guin. Your danger's ours.
Cym. And our good his.
Bel. Have it at then, by leave.
Thou hast, great king, a subject who
Was call'd Belarius.
Cym. A banish'd traitor. What of him? he is
Bel. He it is that hath Assumed this age: indeed a banish'd man;
I know not how a traitor.
Cym. Take him hence:
The whole world shall not save him.
Bel. Not too hot:
First pay me for the nursing of thy sons;
ACT V.

Cymbeline.

And let it be confiscate all, so soon
As I have received it.

Cym.

Nursing of my sons!

Bel. I am too blunt and saucy; here's my knee;

Else I will write my name on thy hand.

Then spare not the old father. Mighty sir,

These two young gentlemen, that call me father

And think they are my sons, are none of mine;

They are the issue of your loins, my liege,

And blood of your begetting.

Cym.

How! my issue!

Bel. So sure as you your father's. I, old Morgan,

Am that Belarius whom you sometime banish'd:

Your pleasure was my mere offence, my punishment

Itself, and all my treason; that I suffer'd

Was all the harm I did. These gentle princes—

For such and so they are—these twenty years

Have I train'd up; those arts they have as I

Could put into them; my breeding was, sir, as

Your highness knows. Their nurse, Euriphile,

Whom for the theft I wealded, stole these children

Upon my banishment: I mov'd her to't,

Having receiv'd the punishment before.

For which that I did then; beaten for loyalty

Excited me to treason; their dear loss,

The more of you't was felt, the more it shaped

Unto my end of stealing them. But, gracious sir,

Here are your sons again; and I must lose

Two of the sweet'st companions in the world.

The beneficence of these covering heavens

Fall on their heads like dew! for they are worthy

To inlay heaven with stars.

Cym.

Thou weep'st, and speak'st.

The service that you three have done is more

Unlike than this thou tell'st. I lost my children:

If these be they, I know not how to wish

A pair of worthier sons.

Bel.

Be pleased awhile.

This gentleman, whom I call Polydore,

Most worthy prince, as yours, is true Guiderius:

This gentleman, my Cadwal, Arviragus,

Your younger princely son; he, sir, was lapp'd

In a most curious mantle, wrought by the hand

Of his queen mother, which for more probation

I can with ease produce.

Cym.

Guiderius had

Upon his neck a mole, a sanguine star;

It was a mark of wonder.

Bel.

This is he;

Who hath upon him still that natural stamp:

It was wise nature's end in the donation,

To be his evidence now.

Cym.

O, what, am I

A mother to the birth of three? Ne'er mother

Rejoiced deliverance more. Blest pray you be,

That, after this strange starting from your orbs,

You may reign in them now! O Imogen,

Thou hast lost by this a kingdom.

Imo.

No, my lord;

I have got two worlds by't. O my gentle brothers,

Have we thus met? O, never say hereafter

But I am truest speaker; you call'd me brother,

When I was but your sister; I you brothers,

When ye were so indeed.

Cym.

Are you my brothers?

Guil.

Ay, my good lord.

Cor.

And at first meeting loved;

Continued so, until we thought he died.

Cym.

O rare instinct!

What shall I hear all through? This fierce abridgment

Hath to it circumstantial branches, which Distinction should be rich in. Where? how lived

you?

And when came you to serve our Roman captive?
We term it 'mulier': 'which 'mulier' I divine
Is this most constant wife; who, even now,
Answering to you, unsought, were clipp'd about
With this most tender air.
Cyn. This hath some seeming.
Sooth. The lofty cedar, royal Cymbeline.
Personates thee: and thy lopp'd branches point
Thy two sons forth; who, by Belarius stol'n,
For many years thought dead, are now revived,
To the majestic cedar join'd, whose issue
Promises Britain peace and plenty.
Cyn. Well;
My peace we will begin. And, Caius Lucius,
Although the victor, we submit to Cæsar,
And to the Roman empire: promising
To pay our wonted tribute, from the which
We were dissuaded by our wicked queen:
Whom heavens, in justice, both on her and hers,
Have laid most heavy hand.
Sooth. The fingers of the powers above do tune
The harmony of this peace. The vision
Which I made known to Lucius, ere the stroke
Of this yet scarce-cold battle, at this instant
Is full accomplish'd; for the Roman eagle,
From south to west on wing soaring aloft,
Lessen'd herself, and in the beams of the sun
So vanish'd: which toershew'd our princely eagle,
The imperial Cæsar, should again unite
His favour with the radiant Cymbeline,
Which shines here in the west.
Cyn. Laud we the gods;
And let our crooked smokers climb to their nostrils
From our blest altars. Publish we this peace
To all our subjects. Set we forward: let
A Roman and a British ensign wave
Friendly together: so through Lud's-town march:
And in the temple of great Jupiter
Our peace we 'll ratify: seal it with feasts.
Set on there! Never was a war did cease,
Ere bloody hands were wash'd, with such a peace.

SCENE I.—Dispersion in various countries.

ACT I.

Enter Gower.

Before the palace of Antiocbus.

To sing a song that old was sung,
From ashes ancient Gower is come;
Assuming man's infirmities,
To glad your ear, and please your eyes.
It hath been sung at festivals,
On ember-eyes and holy-ales;
And lords and ladies in their lives
Have read it for restoratives:
The purchase is to make men glorious;
Et bonum quo antiquius, eo melius.
If you, born in these latter times,
When wit's more ripe, accept my rhymes,
And that to hear an old man sing
May to your wishes pleasure bring,
I life would wish, and that I might
Waste it for you, like taper-light.
This Antiocbus, then, Antiocbus the Great
Built up, this city, for his chiefest seat;
The fairest in all Syria.
I tell you what mine authors say:
This king unto him took a fere,
Who died and left a female heir,
So buxom, blithe, and full of face,
As heaven had lent her all his grace;
With whom the father liking took,
And her to incest did provoke:
Bad child! worse father! to entice his own
To evil should be done by none:
But custom what they did begin
Was with long use account no sin.
The beauty of this sinful dame
Made many princes flitter frame,
To seek her as a bed-fellow,
In marriage-pleasures play-fellow:
Which to prevent he made a law,
To keep her still, and men in awe,
That whoso ask'd her for his wife,
His riddle told not, lost his life:

So for her many a wight did die,
As you grim looks do testify.
What now ensues, to the judgment of your eye
I give, my cause who best can justify.

[Exit.

SCENE I.—Antiocbus. A room in the palace.

Enter Antiocbus, Prince Pericles, and followers.
Ant. Young prince of Tyre, you have at large re-
The danger of the task you undertake.
[Exeunt.
Gover, Antiocbus, and, with a soul
Enbolden'd with the glory of her praise,
Think death no hazard in this enterprise.
Ant. Bring in our daughter, clothed like a bride,
For the embracements even of Jove himself;
At whose conception, till Lucina reign'd,
Nature this dowry gave, to glad her presence,
The seate-house of planets all did sit,
To knit in her their best perfections.

Music. Enter the Daughter of Antiocbus.

Per. See where she comes, apparell'd like the spring.

Graces her subjects, and her thoughts the king
Of every virtue gives renown to men!
Her face the book of praises, where is read
Nothing but curious pleasures, as from thence Sorrow were ever raze'd, and petty wrath
Could never be her mild companion.
You gods that made me man, and sway in love,
That have inflamed desire in my heart
To taste the fruit of you celestial tree,
Or die in the adventure, be my help;
As I am son and servant to your will,
To compass such a boundless happiness!

Ant. Prince Pericles,—
Per. That would be son to great Antiocbus.
Ant. Before thee stands this fair Hesperides,
With golden fruit, but dangerous to be touch'd:
For death-like dragons here affright thee hard;
Her face, like heav'n, enticeth thee to view
Her countless glory, which desert must gain;
And which, without desert, because thine eye
Presumes to reach, all thy whole head must die.
You young prince, do you thus misunderstand
Drawn by report, and adventurously desire,
[pale, Tell thee, with speechless tongues and semblance
That without covering, save you field of stars,
Here stand martyrs, slain in Cupid's wars;
And with dead cheeks advise thee to desist.
For going on death's net, whom none resist.
Per. Antiochus, I thank thee, who hast taught
My frail mortality to know itself,
And by those fearful objects to prepare
This body, like to them, to what I must;
For death remember'd shou'd be like a mirror,
Who tells us life's but breath, to trust it error.
I'll 'grace this story when I meet to do
Who know the world, see heaven, but, feeling woe,
Gripe not at earthly joys as erst they did;
So I bequeath a happy peace to you
And all good men, as every prince shou'd do;
My riches to the earth from whence they came;
But my unspeckled fire of love to you. [To the daughter of Antiochus.
Thus ready for the way of life or death,
I wait the sharpest blow, Antiochus.
Ant. Scouring advice, read the conclusion, then:
Which read and not expounded, 'tis decreed,
As these before thee, which I hasten to bleed.
Daugh. Of all say'd yet, mayst thou prove pros-
Of all say'd yet, I wish thee happiness! [perous!
Per. Like a bold champion, I assume the lists,
Nor ask advice of any other thought
But faithfulness and courage.
He reads the riddle.
I am no viper, yet I feed
On mother's flesh which did me breed.
I sought a husband, in which labour
I found that kindness in a father;
He's father, son, and husband mild;
How they may be, and yet in two,
As you will live, resolve it you.
Sharp physic is the last: but, O you powers
That give heaven countless eyes to view men's acts,
Yet cloud not their sights perpetually.
If this be true, which kindred think to read it?
Fair glass of light, I loved you, and could still.
[Takes hold of the hand of the Princess.
Were not these glorious casket stored with ill:
But I must tell you, now my thoughts revolt;
For he's no man on whom perfections wait
That bowing sin within, will find you at the gate,
You are a fair violin, and you sense the strings;
Who, finger'd to make man his lawful music,
Would draw heaven down, and all the gods to.
But being play'd upon before your time, [fiearen;
Hell only danceth at so harsh a chime.
Good sooth, I care not for you. [Ant. Prince Pericles, touch not, upon thy life,
For that's an article within our law,
As dangerous as the rest. Your time's expired;
Either expound now, or receive your sentence.
Per. Great king.
Few love to hear the sins they love to act;
'Twould braiid yourself too near for me to tell it.
Who has a book of all that monarchs do,
He's more secure to keep it shut than shown:
For vice repeated is like the wandering wind,
Blows dust in others' eyes, to spread itself,
And in longations of the street,
The breath is gone, and the sore eyes see clear:
To stop the air would hurt them. The blind mole casts [throng'd COPP'd hills towards heaven, to tell the earth is
By man's oppression; and the poor worn doth die
In tears.
Kings are earth's gods; in vice their law's their will;
And if Jove stray, who dares say Jove doth ill?
It is enough you know; and it is fit,
That being more known grows worse, to smoother it.
All love the wondrous that their first being bred,
Then give my tongue like leave to love my head.
Ant. [Aside] Heaven, that I had thy head! he has
The meaning:
But I will glowe with him.— Young prince of Tyre,
Though by the tenour of our strict edict,
Your exposition misinterpreting,
We might proceed to cancel of your days;
Yet hope, succeeding from so fair a tree
As your fair self, doth tunes us otherwise:
Forty days longer we do desire you:
If by which time our secret be exploded,
And if we do not, we shall have you:
And until then your entertain shall be
As doth befit our honour and your worth.
[Exeunt all but Pericles.
Per. How couldst thou seem to cover sin,
When what is done is like an hypocrite,
The which is good in nothing but in sight!
If it be true that I interpret false,
Then were it certain you were not so bad
As with foul incest to abuse your soul;
Where now you've both a father and a son,
By your unuitely clasping with your child,
Which pleasure has an husband, not a father;
And she an enter of her mother's flesh,
By the defiling of her parent's bed:
And both like serpents are, who though they feed
On sweetest flowers, yet they poison breed.
Antioch, farewell! for wisdom sees, those men
Blush not in actions blacker than the night,
Will shun no course to keep them from the light.
One sin, I know, another doth provoke;
Murder's as near to lust as flame to smoke;
Poison and treason are the hands of sin,
Ay, and the targets, to put off the shame:
Then, lest my life be cropped to keep you clear,
By light I'll shun the danger which I fear. [Exit.
Recver Antiochus.
Ant. He hath found the meaning, for which we
To have his head, [mean
He must not fly to trumpet forth my infamy;
Nor tell the world Antiochus doth sin
In such a loathed manner;
And therefore instantly this prince must die;
For by his fall my honour must keep high.
Who attends us there?
Enter Thaliard.
Thal. Doth your highness call?
Ant. Thaliard,
You are of our chamber, and our mind partakes
Her private actions to your secrecy;
And for your faithfulness we will advance you.
Thaliard, behold, here's poison, and here's gold:
We hate the prince of Tyre, and thou must kill him:
It fits thee not to ask the reason why,
Because we bid it. Say, is it done?
Thal. It's done.
Ant. Enough.
Enter a Messenger.
Let your breath cool yourself, telling your haste.
Mess. My lord, prince Pericles is led.
Ant. [Aside] As thou
Wilt live, fly after; and like an arrow shot
From a well-experienced archer hits the mark
His eye doth level at, so thou ne'er return
Unless thou say Pericles is dead.
Thal. My lord,
I will not stir within my pistol's length, press;
I'll make him sure enough; so, farewell to your high-
Act I.

PERICLES.

Scene III.

Ant. Thaihard, adieu! [Exit Thai.] Till Pericles be dead.
My heart can lend no succour to my head. [Exit.

Enter Pericles.

Per. [To Lords without] Let none disturb us.—Why should this change of thoughts,
The sad companion, dull-eyed melancholy,
Be my so used a guest as not an hour,
In the day's glorious walk, or peaceful night,
The subject where grief should sleep, can breed me quiet?
[them, Here pleasures court mine eyes, and mine eyes shun
And danger, which I fear'd, is at Antioch,
Whose aim seems far too short to hit me here:
Yet neither pleasure's art can joy my spirits,
Nor yet the other's distance comfort me,
Then it is thus: the passions of the mind,
That have their first conception by mis-dread,
Have after-nourishment and life by care;
And what was first but fear what might be done,
Grows elder now and cares it be not done.
And on the other hand, Antiochus,
'Gainst whom I am too little to contend,
Since he's so great can make his will his act,
Will think me speaking, though I swear to silence;
Nor bolts it me to say I honour him.
If he suspect I may dishonour him:
And what may make him blush in being known,
He'll stop the course by which it might be known;
With hostile forces he'll overspread the land,
And with the ostent of war will look so huge,
Amazement shall drive courage from the state;
Our men be vanquish'd ere they do resist,
And subjects punish'd that ne'er thought offence:
Which care of them, not pity of myself,
Who am no more but as the tops of trees,
Which fence the roots they grow by and defend them,
Makes both my body pine and soul to languish,
And punish that before that he would punish.

Enter Helicanus, with other Lords.

First Lord. Joy and all comfort in your sacred breast! [to us,
See, Lord. And keep your mind, till you return
Peaceful and comfortable!]

Hel. Peace, peace, and give expression tongue.
They do abuse the king that flatter him:
For flattery is the bellows blows up sin;
The thing the which is flatter'd, but a spark,
To which that blast gives heat and stronger glow—
Whereas reproof, obdilict and in order,
Fits kings, as they are men, for they may err.
When Signior Sooth here does proclaim a peace,
He flatters you, makes war upon your life.
Prince, pardon me, or strike me, if you please;
I cannot be much less than my knees.

Per. All leave us else: but let your cares o'erlook
What shipping and what lodging's in our haven,
And then return to us. [Exeunt Lords.] Helicanus, then
Hast moved us: what seem'st thou in our looks?
Hel. An angry brow, dread lord.

Per. If there be such a dart in princes' crowns,
How dart thy tongue move anger to our face?

Hel. How dare the plants look up to heaven, from They have their nourishment?
[whence
Per. Thou know'st I have power
To take thy life from thee.

Hel. [Kneeling] I have ground the axe myself.
Do you but strike the blow.

Per. Rise, prithee, rise.
Sit down: thou art no flatterer:
I thank thee for it; and heaven forbid
That kings should let their ears hear their faults hid!

Fit counselor and servant for a prince,
Who by thy wisdom makest a prince thy servant,
What wouldst thou have me do?

Hel. To bear with patience
Such griefs as you yourself do lay upon yourself.

Per. They speak'st like a physician, Helicanus,
That minister'st a potion and a potion of
That thou wouldst tremble to receive thyself.
Attend me, then: I went to Antioch,
Where as thou know'st, against the face of death,
I sought the purchase of a glorious beauty,
From whence an issue I might propagate,
Are armed to perils, and bring joys to subjects.
Her face was to mine eye beyond all wonder:
The rest—hark in thine ear—as black as incest:
Which by my knowledge found, the sinful father
Seem'd not to strike, but smooth: but thou know'st
'Tis time to fear when tyrants seem to kiss. [this,
Which fear so grew in me, I hither fled,
Under the covering of a careful night,
Who seem'd my good protector: and, being here,
Bethought me what was past, what might succeed.
I knew him tyrannous; and tyrants' fears
Decrease not, but grow faster than the years;
And should he disturb this as's doubt he doth,
That I should open to the listening air
How many worthy princes' bloods were shed,
To keep his bed of blackness unalid ope,
To top that doubt, he'll fill this land with arms,
And make pretence of wrong that I have done him:
When all, for mine, if I may call offence.
Must feel war's blow, who spares not innocence:
Which love to all, of which thyself art one,
Who now reproves me for it.—

Alas, sir?

Per. Drew sleep out of mine eyes, blood from my cheeks,
Musings into my mind, with thousand doubts
How I might stop this tempest ere it came;
And finding little comfort to relieve them,
I thought it princely charity to grieve them.

Hel. Well, my lord, since you have given me
Leave to speak,
Freely will I speak. Antiochus you fear,
And justly too, I think, you fear the tyrant,
Who either by public war or private treason
Will take away your life.
Therefore, my lord, go travel for a while,
That his rage and anger be forgot,
Or till the Deities do cut his thread of life.
Your rule direct to any: if to me.
Day serves not light more faithfulness than I'll be.

Per. I do not doubt thy faith;
But should he wrong my liberties in my absence?

Hel. We'll mingle our bloods together in the earth,
From whence we rose, and our birth.

Per. Tyre, I now look from thee then, and to Tarsus
Intend my travel, where I'll hear from thee;
And by whose letters I'll dispose myself,
The care I had and have of subjects' good
On thee, my whose will's strength we can bear it.
I'll take thy word for faith, not ask thine oath:
Who shuns not to break one will sure crack both:
But in our orbs we'll live so round and safe,
That time of both this truth shall never convince,
Thou show'dst a subject's shine, I a true prince.

[Exeunt.]

Scene III.—Tyre. An antechamber in the palace.

Enter Thaihard.

Thal. So, this is Tyre, and this the court. Here must I kill King Pericles: and if I do it not, I am sure to be hanged at home: 'tis dangerous. Well,
I perceive he was a wise fellow, and had good discre-ption, that, being bid to ask what he would of the king, desired he might know none of his secrets; now do I see he had some reason for't; for if a king bid a man be a villain, he's bound by the indiscernere of his oath to be one. Hush! here come the lords of Tyre.

Enter Helicanus and Escanes, with other Lords of Tyre.

Hel. You shall not need, my fellow peers of Tyre, further to question me of your king's departure; His seal'd commission, left in trust with me, Both speak sufficiently he's gone to travel.

Tha. [Aside] Hel. I know not—

Hel. If further yet you will be satisfied, Why, as it were unlicensed of your loves, He would depart, I'11 give some light unto you. Being at Antioch —

Tha. [Aside] What from Antioch?

Hel. Royal Antiochus—on what cause I know not—

Took some displeasure at him; at least he judged so: And doubting lest what he had err'd or sinnd, To show his sorrow, he'd correct himself; So puts himself unto the shipman's toil, With whom such great misfortunes life or death.

Tha. [Aside] Well, I perceive, I shall not be hang'd now, although I would; But since he's gone, the king's seas must please: He's escap'd the land, to perish at the sea. I'11 present myself. Peace to the lords of Tyre! Hel. Lord Thalitiard from Antiochus is welcome.

Tha. From him I come With message unto princeley Pericles; But since my landing I have understood Your lord has betook himself to unknown travels, My message must return from whence it came. Hel. We have no reason to shun it. Commended to our master, not to us: Yet, ere you shall depart, this we desire, As friends to Antioch, we may feast in Tyre. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV. — Tarsus. A room in the Governor's hose.

Enter Cleon, the governor of Tarsus, with Dionyza, and others.

Cle. My Dionyza, shall we rest us here, And by relating tales of others' griefs, See if I'll teach us to forget our own? Dio. That were to blow at fire in hope to quench it; For who digs hills because they do aspire Throws down one mountain to cast up a higher. O my distressed lord, even such our griefs are: Here they're but felt, and seen with mischief's eyes, But like to groves, being topp'd, they higher rise.

Cle. O Dionyza, Who wanteth food, and will not say he wants it, Or can conceal his hunger till he famish? Our tongues and sorrow do sound deep Our woes into the air; our eyes do weep, Till tongues their breath that may proclaim them louder; That, if heaven slumber while their creatures want, They may awake their helps to comfort them. I'll then discourse our woes, felt several years, And wanting breath to speak help me with tears.

Dio. I'll do my best, sir.

Cle. This Tarsus, o'er which I have the government, A city on whom plenty held full hand, For riches strew'd herself even in the streets; Whose forebears bore heads so high they kiss'd the clouds, And strangers ne'er beheld but wonder'd at; These men and dames so jettied and adorn'd, Like one another's glass to trina them by;

Their tables were stored full, to glad the sight, And not so much to feed on as delight; All poverty was scorn'd, and pride so great, The name of help grew odious to repeat.

Cle. But what is heaven can do! By this our change,

These months, who but of late, earth, sea, and air, Were all too little to content and please, Although they gave their creatures in abundance, As houses are defild for want of use, They are now starved for want of exercise; These palates who, not yet two summers younger, Must have inventions to delight the taste, Would now be glad of bread, and beg for it: Those mothers who, to nurse up their babes, Thought nought so curious, are ready now To eat those little darlings whom they loved.

So sharp are hunger's teeth, that man and wife Draw lots who first shall die to lengthen life: Here stands a lord, and there a lady weeping; Here many sink, yet those which see them fall Have scarce strength left to give them burial.

Is not this true?

Dio. Our woods and hollow eyes do witness it.

Cle. O, let those cities that of plenty's cup And her prosperity so largely taste, With their superfluous riots, hear these tears! The misery of Tarsus may be theirs.

Enter a Lord.

Lord. Where's the lord governor?

Cle. Here.

Speak out thy sorrows which thou bring'st in haste, For comfit is too far for us to expect.

Lord. We have desir'd, upon our neighbouring

A portly sail of ships make hitherward. Cle. I thought as much.

One sorrow never comes but brings an hefr, That may succeed as his inheritor; And so in ours: some neighbouring nation,

Taking advantage of our misistry, Hath stuff'd these hollow vessels with their power, To beat us down, the which are down already; And make a conquest of unhappy me, Whereas no glory's got to overcome.

Lord. That's the least fear; for, by the semblance Of their whole display'd, they bring us peace, And come to us as favourers, not as foes.

Cle. Thou speakest like him's minister'd to repeat; Who makes the fairest show means most deceit. But bring they what they will and what they can, What need we fear?

The ground's the lowest, and we are half way there. Go tell their general we attend him here, To know for what he comes, and whence he comes, And what he craves.

Lord. I go, my lord. [Exit.

Cle. Welcome is peace, if he on peace consist; If wars, we are unable to resist.

Enter Pericles with Attendants.

Per. Lord governor, for so we hear you are, Let not our ships and number of our men Be like a beacon fire'd to amaze your eyes, We have heard your miseries as far as Tyre, And seen the desolation of your streets: Nor come we to add sorrow to your tears, But to relieve them of their heavy load; And these our ships, you happily may think Are like the Trojan horse was stuff'd within With bloody carcasses expected to overthrow, Are stored with corn to make your needy bread, And give them life whom hunger starved half dead. All, The gods of Greece protect you! And we'll pray for you.
ACT II.

PERICLES.

SCENE I.

Per. Arise, I pray you, rise: We do not look for reverence, but for love, And harbourage for ourself, our ships, and men. Or, The which when any shall not gratify, Or pay you with unthankfulness in thought, Be it our wives, our children, or ourselves.

The curse of heaven and men succeed their evils! Till when,—the which I hope shall ne'er be seen,— Your grace is welcome to our town and us. Per. Which welcome we'11 accept; feast here awhile, Until our stars that frown lend us a smile. [Exeunt.

ACT II.

Enter Gower.

Gow. Here have you seen a mighty king His child, I wis, to incest bring; A better prince and benign lord, That will prove awful both in deed and word. Be quiet then as men should be, Till he hath pass'd necessity, I'll show you those in troubles reign, Losing a bote, a mountain gain. The good in conversation, To whom I give my benison, Is still at Tarsus, where each man Thinks all is writ he spake can; And, to remember what he does, Build his statue to make him glorious: But tidings to the contrary Are brought your eyes; what need speak I?

Dumb Show.

Enter at one door Pericles talking with Cleon; all the trains with them. Enter at another door a Gentleman, with a letter to Pericles; Pericles shows the letter to Cleon; gives the Messenger a reward, and knights him. Exit Pericles at one door, and Cleon at another.

Exit three Fishermen.

First Fish. What, ho, Pitch!
Sec. Fish. Ha, come and bring away the nets!
First Fish. What, Patch-breath, I say!
Third Fish. What say you, master?
First Fish. Look how them stirrest now! come away, or I'll fetch thee with a wandion.
Third Fish. Faith, master, I am thinking of the poor men that were cast away before us even now.

First Fish. Alas, poor souls, it grieved my heart To hear what pitiful cries they made to us to help them, when, well-a-day, we could scarce help ourselves.

Third Fish. Nay, master, said not I as much when I saw the popus how he bonned and tumbied? they say they're half fish, half flesh: a plague on them, they ne'er come but I look to be washed. Master, I marvel how the fishes live in the sea.

First Fish. Why, as men do a-land; the great ones eat up the little ones: I can compare our rich misers to nothing so fitly as to a whale: a' plays and tumbles, driving the poor fry before him, and at last devours them all at a mouthful: such whales have I heard on o' the land, who never leave gapping till they've swallowed the whole parish, church, steeple, bells, and all.

Third Fish. But, master, if I had been the sexton, I would have been that day in the belfry.

Sec. Fish. Why, man? Third Fish. Because he should have swallowed me too: and when I had been in his belly, I would have kept such a jangling of the bells, that he should never have left till he cast bells, steeple, church, and parish, up again. But if the good King Simonides were of my mind,—

Per. [Aside] Simonides!

Third Fish. We would purge the land of these drones, that rob the bee of her honey.

Per. [Aside] How from the finny subject of the These fishes tell the infinities of men: And from their watery empire recollect All that may men approve or men detect! Peace be at your labour, honest fishermen.

Sec. Fish. Honest! good fellow, what's that? If it be a day fits you, search out of the calendar, and nobody look after it.

Per. May see the sea hath cast upon your coast.
Sec. Fish. What a drunken knave was the sea to cast thee in our way!

Per. A man whom both the waters and the wind, In that vast tennis-court, have made the ball For them to play upon, entreats you pity him; He asks of you, that never used to beg.

First Fish. No, friend, cannot you beg? Here's them in our country of Greece gets more with begging than we can do with working.
Sec. Fish. Canst thou catch any fishes, then?

Per. I never practised it.

Sec. Fish. Nay, then thou wilt starve, sure; for here's nothing to be got now-a-days, unless thou canst fish for t

Scene II.

Enter Simonides, Thaisa, Lords, and Attendants.

Sim. Are the Knights ready to begin the triumph?

First Lord. They are, my liege;

And stay your coming to present themselves.

Sim. Return them, we are ready; and our daughter,

In honour of whose birth these triumphs are,

Sits here, like beauty's child, whom nature gat

For men to see, and seeing wond'ring at.

[Exit a Lord.

That. It pleaseth you, my royal father, to express

My commendations great, whose merit's less.

Sim. It's fit it should be so; for princes are

A model, which heaven makes like to itself;

As Jewels lose their glory if neglected,

So princes their renown if not respected;

'Tis now your honour, daughter, to explain

The labour of each knight in his device.

That. Which, to preserve mine honour, I'll per-

Enter a Knight; he passes over, and his Squire presents his shield to the Princess.

Sim. Who is the first that doth prefer himself?

That. A knight of Sparta, my renowned father;

And the device he bears upon his shield

Is a black Ethiopia reaching at the sun;

The word, 'Lax tua vita nihil.'

Sim. He loves you well that holds his life of you.

Who is the second that presents himself?

That. A prince of Macedon, my royal father;

And the device he bears upon his shield

Is an arm'd knight that 's conquer'd by a lady;

The motto thus, in Spanish, 'Pin por dulzura que

por fuerza.'

[The Third Knight passes over.

Sim. And what's the third?

That. The third of Antioch;

And his device, a wreath of chivalry;

The word, 'Me pompea propectus ab.'

[The Fourth Knight passes over.

Sim. What is the fourth?

That. A burning torch that 's turned upside down;

The word, 'Quod me altum, me extinguit.'

[The Fifth Knight passes over.
ACT II.

PERICLES.

SCENE III.

That. The fifth, an hand environed with clouds, Holding out gold that's by the touchstone tried; The motto him. 'Tis spectacles fades. [The Sixth Knight, Pericles, passes over.

Sim. And what's

The sixth and last, the which the knight himself With such a graceful courtesy deliver'd.' That. He seems to be a stranger; but his present Is a winder's branch, the only green at top; The motto, "In hac spe vivo."

Sim. A pretty morit;

From the deceased state wherein he is, He hopes by you his fortunes yet may flourish. First Lord. He had need mean better than his outward show Can any way speak in his just commend; For by his rusty outside he appears To have practis'd more the whispoch past than the lance. Sec. Lord. He well may be a stranger, for he comes To an honour'd triumph strangely furnished. [rust Third Lord. And on set purpose let his armour Until this day, to scour it in the dust. Sim. Opinion's but a fool, that makes us scan The outward habit by the inward man. But stay, the knights are coming: we will withdraw Into the gallery. [Execut. [Great shows within, and all cry 'The mean knight!'

SCENE III.—The same. A hall of state: a banquet prepared.

Enter Simonides, Thaisa, Lords, Attendants, and Knights, from tilting.

Sim. Knights.

To say you're welcome were superfluous. To place upon the volume of your deeds, As in a title-page, your worth in arms, Were more than you expect, or more than's fit, Since every worth in show commends itself. Prepare for mirth, for mirth becomes a feast: You are princes and my guests.

That. But you, my knight and guest; To whom this wreath of victory I give, And crown you king of this day's happiness,

Per. Tis more by fortune, lady, than by merit,

Sim. Call it by what you will, the day is yours; And here, I hope, is none that envies it. In framing an artist, art hath thus decreed, To make some good, but others to exceed; And you are her labour's scholar. Come, queen o' the fair—

For, daughter, so you are,—here take your place: Marshal the rest, as they deserve their grace.

Knights. We are honour'd much by good Simonides. Sim. Your presence gilds our days; honour we For who hates honour hates the gods above. [love; Metath. Sir, yonder is your place.

Per. Some other is more fit. First Knight. Contend not; sir; for we are gentle- That neither in our hearts nor outward eyes [men Envy the great nor do the low despise.

Per. You are right courteous knights.

Sim. Sit, sit, sit.

Per. By Jove, I wonder, that is king of thoughts, These cates resist me, she but thought upon.

That. By Juno, that is queen of marriage, All viands that I eat do seem unsavoury, [man. Wishing him my meat. Sure, he's a gallant gentle-

Sim. He's but a knave, sir; a country gentleman; Has done no more than other knights have done; Has broken a staff or so; so let it pass.

That. To me he seems like diamond to glass.

Per. You'ring king's to me like to my father's picture, Which tells me in that glory once he was: Had princes sit, like stars, about his throne, And he the sun, for them to reverence;

None that beheld him, but, like lesser lights, Did vail their crowns to his supremacy; Whereby now his son's like a glowing worm in the night, The which hath fire in darkness, none in light: Whereby I see that Time's the king of men, He's both their parent, and he is their grave, And gives them what he will, not what they crave.

Sim. What, are you merry, knights?

Knights. Withal, that he be other in this royal presence? Sim. Here, with a cup that's stord onto the brim.— As you do love, fill to your mistress' lips.— We drink this health to you.

Knights. We thank your grace.

Sim. Yet pause awhile: You knight doth sit too melancholy, As if the entertainment in our court Had not a show might counterbalance his worth. Note it not you, Thaisa?

That. What is it

To me, my father?

Sim. O, attend, my daughter: Princes in this should live like gods above, Who freely give to every one that comes To honour them; And princes not doing so are like to gnats, Which make no sugar, but kill' th with wonder; Therefore to make his entrance more sweet. Here, say we drink this standing-bowl of wine to him. That. Ah, my father, he befits me Unto a stranger king to be so bold; He may my proffer take for an offence, Since men take women's gifts for impudence.

Sim. How! Do as I bid you, or you'll move me else.

That. [Aside] Now, by the gods, he could not please me better. [of him, Sim. And furthermore tell him, we desire to know Whence he is, his name and parentage. That. The king my father, sir, has drunk to you. Per. I thank him.

That. Wishing it so much blood unto your life, Per. I thank both him and you, and pledge him freely.

That. And further he desires to know of you, Of whence you are, your name and parentage. Per. A gentleman of Tyre: my name, Pericles; My education been in arts and arms: Who, looking for adventures in the world, Was by the rough seas reft of ships and men, And after shipwreck driven upon this shore.

That. He thanks your grace; names himself A gentleman of Tyre:

Pericles, Who only by misfortune of the seas Bereft of ships and men, cast on this shore.

Sim. Now, by the gods, I pity his misfortune, And will awake him from his melancholy. Come, gentlemen, we sit too long on tribles, And waste the time, which looks for other revels. Even in your armours, as you are address'd, Will very well become a soldier's dance. I will not have excurse, with saying this Loud music is too harsh for ladies' heads. Since they love men in arms as well as beds.

[The Knights dance. So, this was well ask'd. 't was so well perform'd. Come, sir; Here is a lady that wants breathing too; And I have heard, you knights of Tyre Are excellent in making ladies trip; And that these measures are as excellent. [lord. Per. In those that practise them they are, my Sim. O, that's as much as you would be denied Of your fair courtesy;

[The Knights and Ladies dance. [Uncasp, unclasp. Thanks, gentlemen, to all; all have done well. 809
ACT II.

PERICLES.

Scene V.

Hel. Then you love us, we you, and we'll clasp hands:
When peers thus knit, a kingdom ever stands.

[Exeunt.

Scene V.—Tentylos. A room in the palace.

Enter Simonides, reading a letter, at one door: the Knights meet him.

First Knight. Good morrow to the good Simonides. Sir, Knights, from my daughter this I let you know,
That for this twelvemonth she 'll not undertake
A married life.
Her reason to herself is only known,
Which yet from her by no means can I get. Lord? See. I am unworthy for her access to her, my Sir. 'faith, by no means; she has so strictly tied
Her to her chamber, that 'tis impossible.
One twelve moons more she 'll wear Diana's livery;
This by the eye of Cynthia hath she vow'd,
And on her virgin honour will not break it.
Third Knight. Louth to bid farewell, we take our leaves.

Enter Pericles.

Per. All fortune to the good Simonides! Sir, to you as much, sir! I am beholding to you
For your sweet music this last night; I do
Profest my ears were never better fed
With such delightful pleasing harmony.
Per. It is your grace's pleasure to command:
Not my desert.

Sim. Sir, you are music's master.
Per. The worst of all her scholars, my good lord.
Sim. Let me ask you one thing:
What do you think of my daughter, sir?
Per. A most virtuous princess.
Sim. And she is fair too, is she not?
Per. As a fair day in summer, wondrous fair.
Sim. Sir, my daughter thinks very well of you;
Ay, so well, that you must be her master,
And she will be your scholar: therefore lock to it.
Per. I am unworthy to be her schoolmaster.
Sim. She thinks not so; peruse this writing else.
Per. [Aside] What's here?
A letter, that she loves the knight of Tyre!
'T is the king's subtilty to have my life,
O, seek not to entrap me, gracious lord,
A stranger and distressed gentleman,
That never Aim'd so high to love your daughter,
But bent all offices to honour her.
Sim. Thou hast bewitch'd my daughter, and thou
A villain.

Per. By the gods, I have not:
Never did thought of mine levy offence:
Nor never did my actions yet commence
A deed might gain her love or your displeasure.
Sim. Traitor, thou liest.
Per. Traitor! Ay, traitor.
Per. Even in his throat—unless it be the king—
That calls me traitor, I return the lie.
Sim. [Aside] Now, by the gods, I do applaud his courage.
Per. My actions are as noble as my thoughts,
That never relish'd of a base descent.
ACT III.

PERICLES.

SCENE I.

I came unto your court for honour's cause,
And not to be a rebel to her state;
And he that otherwise accounts of me,
This sword shall prove he's honour's enemy.

Sim. No?
Here comes my daughter, she can witness it.

Enter Thaisia.

Per. Then, as you are as virtuous as fair,
Resolve your angry father, if my tongue
Did e'er solicit, or my hand subscribe
To any syllable that made love to you.

Tha. Why, sir, say if you had,
Who takes offence at that weart make me glad?

Sim. Yea, mistress, are you so peremptory?
[Aside] I am glad on't with all my heart.—
I'll name you; I'll bring you in subjection.
Will you, not having my consent,
Bestow your love and your affections

Enter Gower.

Gow. Now sleep shaded hath the rout;
No din but smears the house about,
Made louder by the o'er-fed breast
Of this most pompous marriage-feast.
The cat, with eye of burning coal,
Now couches fore the mouse's hole;
And crickets sing at the oven's mouth,
Ever the biter for their draught.
Myrmeces hath brought the bride to bed,
Where, by the loss of maidenhead,
A babe is moulded. Be attent,
And time that is so briefly spent
With your fine fancies quaintly echo:
What's dumb in show I'll plain with speech.

Dumb Show.

Enter, Pericles and Simonides, at one door, with Attendants; a Messenger meets them, kneels, and gives Pericles a letter; Pericles shows it Simonides; the Lords kneel to him. Then enter Thaisia with child, with Lychorida a nurse. The King shows her the letter; she rejoices; she takes the love-token of her father, and depart with Lychorida and their Attendants. Then exit Simonides and the rest.

By many a dorn and painful perch
Of Pericles the careful search,
By the four opposing cognis
Which the world together joins,
Is made with all due diligence
That horse and sail and high expense
Can stand the quest. At last from Tyre,
Fame answering the most strange inquirers,
To the court of King Simonides
Are letters brought, the tenor these:
Antiochus and his daughter dead;
The men of Tyre on the head
Of Helicamass would set on
The crown of Tyre, but he will none:
The mutiny lie there hastes 't oppress;
Says to 'em, if King Pericles
Come not home in twice six moons,
He, obedient to their domes,
Will take the crown. The sum of this,
Brought hither to Pentapolis,
Y-ravished the regions round,
And every one with claps can sound,
Our heir-apparent is a king!
Who dream'd, who thought of such a thing?
Brief, he must hence depart to Tyre:
His queen with child makes her desire—

Upon a stranger? [Aside] who, for aught I know,
May be, nor can I think the contrary,
As great in blood as I myself.—
Therefore hear you, mistress; either frame
Your will to mine,—and you, sir, hear you,
Either be ruled by me, or I will make you
Man and wife: Nay, come, your hands and lips must seal it too:
And being join'd, I'll thus your hopes destroy;
And for a further grief,—God give you joy!—

What, are you both pleased?

Tha. Yes, if you love me, sir.
Per. Even as my life, or blood that fosters it.
Sim. What, are you both agreed?

Both. Yes, if it please your majesty.
Sim. It pleaseth me so well, that I will see you
And then with what haste you can get you to bed.

PERICLES.

ACT III. SCENE II.

And snatch them straight away? We here below
Recall not what we give, and therein may Use honour with you.

Lyce. Patience, good sir,

Even for this charge.

Per. Now, mild, may be thy life!

For a more illustrious birth had never babe;
Quiet and gentle; all conditions! for
Thou art the mildest welcome to this world
That ever was prince’s child. Happy what follows!
Thou hast as chiding a nativity
As fire, air, water, earth, and heaven can make,
To herald thee from the womb: even at the first
Thy blisses is by perjury quaffed,
With all thou canst find here. Now, the good gods
Throw their best eyes upon’t!

Enter two Sailors.

First Sall. What courage, sir? God save you!
Per. Courage enough: I do not fear the flaw;
It hath done to me the worst. Yet, for the love
Of this poor infant, this fresh-new sea-farer,
I would it would be quiet.

First Sall. Slack the booms there! Thou wilt not, will thou? Blow, and split thyself.

Per. But sea-room, on the brine and cloudy bellow kiss the moon, I care not.

First Sall. Sir, your queen must overboard; the sea works high, the wind is loud, and will not lie until the ship be cleared of the dead.

Per. That’s your superstition.

First Sall. Tarnon us, sir; with us at sea it hath been still observed: and we are strong in custom.
Therefore briefly yield her; for she must overboard
straight.

Per. As you think meet. Most wretched queen!

Lyce. Here she lies, sir.

Per. A terrible childered hast thou had, my dear;
No light, no fire, the unfriendly elements
Forgot thee utterly: nor have I time
To give thee hallow’d to thy grave, but straight
Must cast thee, scarcely cown’d, in the oze;
Where, for a monument upon thy bones,
And o’er-remaining lamps, the belching whale
And bellowing sea, and jolting rocks and breakers
Lying with simple shells. O Lychorida,
Bid Nestor bring me spices, ink and paper,
My casket and my jewels; and bid Nicander
Bring me the satin coffin: lay the babe
Upon the pillow: hire thee, whiles I say
A pious farewell to her: suddenly, woman.

[Exit Lychorida.

Sec. Sall. Sir, we have a chest beneath the hatches, caulked and bitumen ready. [this!]

Per. I thank thee. Mariner, say what coast is Sec. Sall. We are near Tarso.

Per. Thither, gentle mariner. [It
After thy course for Tyre. When canst thou reach
Sec. Sall. By break of day, if the wind cease.

Per. O, make for Tyre!

There will I visit Cleon, for the babe.

Cannot hold out to Tyros: there I’ll leave it
At carefree nursing. Go the ways, good mariner:
I’ll bring the body presently. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Ephesus. A room in Cerimon’s house.

Enter Cerimon, with a Servant, and some Persons who have been shipwrecked.

Cer. Philemon, ho!

Enter Philemon.

Phil. Doth my lord call?

Cer. Get fire and meal for these poor men:
’Tis a turbulent and stormy night. [this,
Serv. I have been in many; but such a night as Till now, I ne’er endured.

Cer. Your master will be dead ere you return;
There’s no boat that can be master’d to nature
That can recover him. [To Philemon Give this to the pothecary.
And tell me how it works. [Exeunt all but Cerimon.

Enter two Gentlemen.

First Gent. Good morrow.

Sec. Gent. Good morrow to your lordship.

Cer. Gentlemen; Why do you stir so early?

First Gent. Sir, Our lodgings, standing bleak upon the sea,
Our lodgings, standing bleak upon the sea,
The weather grew so misty:
The weather grew so misty:
The very principal did seem to rend,
And all-to topple: pure surprise and fear
Made me to quit the house. [early;
Sec. Gent. That is the cause we trouble you so
’Tis not our husbandry.

Cer. O, you say well.

First Gent. But I much marvel that your lordship, having
Rich fire about you, should at these early hours
Shake off the golden slumber of repose. ’Tis most strange,
Nature should be so conversant with pain,
Being thereto notcompell’d.

Cer. I hold it ever.

Virtue and cunning were endowments greater
Than nobleness and riches: careless heirs
May the two latter darken and expend;
But immortality attends the former.
Making a man a god. ’Tis known, I ever
Have studied physic, through which secret art,
By turning o’er authorities, I have,
Together with my practice, made familiar
To me and to my aid the blest infusions
That dwell in vegetives, in metals, stones;
And I can speak of the disturbances
Give me that nature works, and of her cures; which doth
A more content in course of true delight
Than to be thirsty after totering honour,
Or tie my treasure up in silken bags,
To please the fool and death.
Sec. Gent. Your honour has through Ephesus pour’d forth
Your charity, and hundreds call themselves
Your creatures, who by you have been restored:
And not your knowledge, your personal pain, but even
Your nurse, still open, hath built Lord Cerimon
Such strong renown as time shall ne’er decay.

Enter two or three Servants with a chest.

First Serv. So; lift there.

Sec. Serv. What is that?

Cer. First Serv. Sir, even now
Did the sea topple upon our shore this chest:
’Tis of some wreck.

Sec. Serv. ’T is like a coffin, sir.

Cer. Whate’er it be,
’Tis wondrous heavy. Wrench it open straight:
If the sea’s stomach be o’ercharged with gold,
’Tis a good constraint of fortune it behoves upon us.
Sec. Serv. ’T is so, my lord.

Cer. How close ’tis caulk’d and bitumen
Did the sea cast it up?

First Serv. I never saw so huge a billow, sir,
As toss’d it upon shore.

Cer. Wrench it open;
Soft! it smells most sweetly in my sense.
Sec. Serv. A delicate odour.

Cer. As ever hit my nostril. So, up with it.
O you must potent gods! what’s here? a curse!
First Gent. Most strange! [treasured
Cer. Shrouded in cloth of state! balm’d and en-

Scene IV.

A room in Cerimon’s house.

Ester Cerimon and Thaisa.

Cle. Your shafts of fortune, though they hurt you mortally,
Yet glance full wanderingly on us.

Dion. O your sweet queen!

That the strict fates had pleased you had brought her hither,

To have bless’d mine eyes with her!

Per. We cannot but obey

The powers above us. Could I rage and roar
As doth the sea she lies in, yet the end
Must be as ’tis. My gentle babe Marina, whom,
For she was born at sea, I have named so, here
I charge your charity withal, leaving her
The infant of your care; beseeching you
To give her princely training, that she may be Manner’d as she is born.

Cle. Fear not, my lord, but think
Your grace, that fed my country with your corn,
For which the people’s prayers still fall upon you.
Must in your child be thought on. If negligence
Should therein make me vile, the common body,
By you relieved, would force me to my duty:
But if to that my nature need a spur,
The gods revenge it upon me and mine,
To the end of generation!

Per. I believe you:
Your honour and your goodness teach me to’t,
Without your vows. Till she be married, madam,
By bright Diana, whom we honour, all
Unsece’d shall this hair of mine remain,
Though I show ill in’t. So I take my leave.
Good madam, make me blessed in your care
In bringing up my child.

Dion. I have one myself,
Who shall not be more dear to my respect
Than yours, my lord.

Cer. Madam, my thanks and prayers.

Cle. We’ll bring your grace e’en to the edge of the shore,
Then give you up to the mask’d Neptune and
The gentlest winds of heaven.

Per. I will embrace
Your offer. Come, dearest madam. O, no tears,
Lychorida, no tears:
Look to your little mistress, on whose grace
You may depend hereafter. Come, my lord. [Exeunt.]

Scene III.—Ephesus. A room in Cleon’s house.

Ester Pericles, Cleon, Dionyza, and Lychorida with Marina in her arms.

Per. Most honour’d Cleon, I must needs be gone;
My twelve months are expired, and Tyrus stands
In a litigious peace. You, and your lady,
Take from my heart all thankfulness! The gods
Make up the rest upon you!

[Exeunt, carrying her away.]

[The end of the play.]
ACT IV.

Enter Gower.

Gow. Imagine Pericles arrived at Tyre, Welcome and settled to his own desire, His woeful queen we have at Ephesus, Unto Diana there a votaries, Now to Marina bend your mind, Whom our fast-growing scene must find At Tarsus, and by Cleon train'd In music, letters: who hath gain'd Of education all the grace, Which warms the heart and place Of general wonder. But, alack, That monster envy, off the wrack Of earned praise, Marina's life Seeks to take off by treason's knife, And in this kind hath our Cleon One daughter, and a wench full grown, Even ripe for marriage-rite; this maid Eight Philoten: and it is said For certain in our story, she Would ever with Marina be: Be't when she weared the sleded silk With fingers long, small, white as milks; Or when she would with sharp needle wound The cambric, which she made more sound By hurting it; or when to the hute She sung, and made the night-bird mute, That still records with moan; or when She would with rich and constant pen Vail to her mistress Dian; still This Philoten contends in skill With absolute Marina: so With the dow of Paphos might the crow Vie feathers white. Marina gets All praises, which are paid as debts, And not as given. This so darks In Philoten all graceful marks, That Cleon's wife, with envy rare, A present murderer does prepare For good Marina, that her daughter Might stand peerless by this slaughter, The sooner her vile thoughts to tend, Lychorida, our nurse, is dead: And cursed Dionyza hath The pregnant instrument of wrath Prest for this blow. The unborn event I do commend to your content: Only I carry winged time Post on the lame feet of my rhyme; Which never could I so convey, Unless your thoughts went on my way. Dionyza does appear, With Leonine, a murderer. [Exit.

SCENE I.—Tarsus. An open place near the seashore.

Enter Dionyza and Leonine.

Dion. Thy oath remember; thou hast sworn to do 't: "Tis but a blow, which never shall be known. Thou canst not do a thing in the world so soon. To yield thee so much profit. Let not conscience, Which is but cold, huffing love i' th' bosom, Imdaume too nicely: nor let pity, which Even can have cast off, melt thee, but be A soldier to thy purpose. Leou. I will do't; but yet she is a goodly creature.

Dion. The fitter, then, the gods should have her. Here she comes weeping for her only mistress' death, Thou hadst resolved. Leou. I am resolved.

ACT IV.
ACT IV.  PERICLES.  SCENE II.

I never kill'd a mouse, nor hurt a fly:  I trod upon a worm against my will,  But I went for it.  How have I offended,  Wherein my death might yield her any profit,  Or my life imply her any danger?
Leon. My commission
Is not to reason of the deed, but do it.  You will do 't for all the world, I hope.  You are well favour'd, and your looks fore-show  You have a gentle heart.  I saw you lately,  When you caught hurt in parting two that fought:  Good sooth, it show'd well in you: do so now:  Your lady seeks my life; come you between,  And spare poor me, the weaker.
Leon. I am sworn,  And will dispatch.
[He seizes her.  Enter Pirates.
First Pirate. Hold, villain!  [Leonine runs away.
Sec. Pirate. A prize! a prize!  Third Pirate. Half-part, mates, half-part.  Come, let 's have her aboard suddenly.
[Exeunt Pirates with Marina.
Re-enter Leonine.
Leon. These roguing thieves serve the great pirate Valdes;  And they have seized Marina.  Let her go; [dead,  There's no hope she will return.  'Twill swear she's  And thrown into the sea.  But I'll see further:  Perhaps they will but please themselves upon her,  Not carry her aboard.  If she remain,  Whom they have ravish'd must by me be slain.
[Exit.
SCENE II.—Mytilene.  A room in a brothel.  Enter Pandar, Bawd, and Boult.
Pand. Boult!  Boult. Sir?
Pand. Search the market narrowly: Mytilene is full of gallsants. We lost too much money this mart by being too wenchless.
Bawd. We were never so much out of creatures.  We have but poor three, and they can do no more than they can do; and they with continual action are even as good as rotten.
Pand. Therefore let 's have fresh ones, what'er we pay for them.  If there be not a conscience to be used in every trade, we shall never prosper.
Boult. Thou sayest true: 't is not our bringing up of poor bastards,—as, I think, I have brought up one—
Boult. Ay, to eleven; and brought them down again.  But shall I search the market?
Bawd. What else, man?  The stuff we have, a strong wind will blow it to pieces, they are so pitifully sodden.
Pand. Thou sayest true; they're too unwholesome, o' conscience. The poor Transylvanian is dead, that lay with the little baggage.
Boult. Ay, she quickly pooped him; she made him roast-meat for worms.  But I'll go search the market.
[Exit.
Pand. Three or four thousand cheques were as pretty a proportion to live quietly, and so give over.
Bawd. Why to give over. I pray you? is it a shame to get when we are old?
Pand. O, our credit comes not in like the commodity, nor the commodity wages not with the danger: therefore, if in our youths we could pick up some pretty estate, 't were not amiss to keep our deal scattered, Besides, the sore terms we stand upon with the gods will be strong with us for giving over.
Bawd. Come, other sorts offend as well as we.
Pand. As well as we! ay, and better too; we offend worse. Neither is our profession any trade; it's no calling. But here comes Boult.
Re-enter Boult, with the Pirates and Marina.
Boult. [To Marina] Come your ways. My masters, you say she's a wench, win she?
First Pirate. O, sir, we doubt it not.
Boult. Master, I have gone through for this piece, you see: if you like her, so; if not, I have lost my Pand. Boult, has she any qualities? [earnest.
Pand. She has a good face, speaks well, and has excellent good clothes; there's no further necessity of qualities can make her be refused.
Pand. I cannot be bated one doit of a thousand
Pand. Well, follow me, my masters, you shall have your money presently.  Wife, take her in; instruct her what she has to do, that she may not be raw in her entertainment.
[Exeunt Pandar and Pirates.
Bawd. Boult, take you the marks of her, the colour of her hair, complexion, height, age, with warrant of her virginity: and cry 'He that will give most shall have her first.' Such a maidenhead were no cheap thing, it men were as they have been.
Get this done as I command you.
Pand. Performance shall follow.
[Exit.
Pand. Mrs. Alack that Leonine was so slack, so slow!
Bawd. Why lament you, pretty one?
Mrs. That I am pretty.
Bawd. Come, the gods have done their part in Pand. I accuse them not.
Pand. You are light into my hands, where you are like to live.
Bawd. My. The more my fault
To sace his hands where I was like to die.
Pand. Ay, and you shall live in pleasure.
Mrs. No.
Pand. Yes, indeed shall you, and taste gentlemen of all fashions; you shall fare well; you shall have the difference of all complexion.
Pand. What do you stop your ears?
Mrs. Are you a woman?
Pand. What would you have me be, an I be not a woman?
Mrs. An honest woman, or not a woman.
Pand. Marry, whip thee, gosling: I think I have something to do with you.
Bawd. You're a young foolish supling, and must be boxed as I would have you.
Pand. The gods defend me!
Pand. If it please the gods to defend you by men, then men must comfort you, men must feed you, men must stir you up.
Pand. Boult's returned.
Re-enter Boult.
Now, sir, hast thou cried her through the market?
Pand. I have cried her almost to the number of her hairs: I have drawn her picture with my voice.
Pand. And I prithee tell me, how dost thou find the inclination of the people, especially of the younger sorts?
Pand. Faith, they listened to me as they would have hearkened to their father's testament. There was a Spaniard's mouth so water'd, that he went to bed to her very description.
Pand. We shall have him here to-morrow with his best ruff on.
Pand. To-night, to-night. But, mistress, do you know the French knight that cowers i' the hams?
Pand. Who, Monsieur Verolees?
Pand. Ay, he: he offered to cut a caper at the 815 proclamation; but he made a groan at it, and swore he would see her to-morrow.

Cleon. Well, well! as for him, he brought his disease hither; here he does but repair it. I know he will come in my shadow, to scatter his crowns in the sun.

Boult. Well, if we had of every nation a traveller, we should lodge them with this sign.

Bawd. Nay you, come hither awhile. You have fortunes coming upon you. Mark me: you must seem to do that fearfully which you commit willingly, despise profit where you have most gain. To weep that you live as ye do makes pity in your lovers: seldom but that pity begets you a good opinion, and that opinion a more profit.

Mar. I understand you not.

Boult. O, take her home, mistress, take her home; these blushes of hers must be quenched with some present practice.

Bawd. Thou sayest true, l'faith, so they must: for your bride goes to that with shame which is her way to go with warrant.

Boult. 'Faith, some do, and some do not. But, mistress, if I have bargained for the joint,— Bawd. Thou mayst cut a morsel off the spit.

Boult. I may so.

Bawd. Who should deny it? Come, young one. I like the manner of your garments well.

Boult. Ay, by my faith, they shall not be changed.

Bawd. Boult, spend thou that in the town: report what a sojourner we have; you'll lose nothing but custom. When nature trained this piece, she meant thee a good turn; therefore say what a paragon she is, and thou hast the harvest out of thine own report.

Boult. I warrant you, mistress, thimble shall not so awake the beds of ceds as my giving out her beauty stir up the lewdly-inclined. I'll bring home some to-night.

Bawd. Of your ways; follow me. Mar. If fires be hot, knives sharp, or waters deep, Untied I still my virgin knot will keep.

Diana, aid my purpose!

Bawd. What have we to do with Diana? Pray you, will you go with us? [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Tarsus. A room in Cleon's house.

Enter Cleon and Dionyza.

Dion. Why, are you foolish? Can it be undone?

Cleon. O Dionyza, such a piece of slaughter
That moon and moon ne'er look'd upon! I think You'll turn a child again.

Cleon. Were I chief lord of all this spacious world, I'd give it to undo the deed. O lady, Much less in blood than virtue, yet a princess To equal any single crown of the earth! I the justice of compare! O villain Leonine! Whom thou hast poison'd too;
If thou hast drunk him, 't had been a kindness
Becoming well thy fact; what canst thou say
When noble Pericles shall demand his child?

Dion. That she is dead. Nurses are not the fates,
To foster it, nor ever to preserve.
She died at night: I'll say so. Who can cross it?
Unless you play the pious innocent,
And for an honest attribute cry out
'She died by foul play.'

Cleon. O, go to. Well, well, Of all the faults beneath the heavens, the gods Do like this worst.

Dion. Be one of those that think
The petty wrens of Tarsus will fly hence,
And open this to Pericles. I do shame
To think of what a weak strain you are,
And of how coward a spirit.

SCENE VI.

LYS. That dignifies the renown of a bawd, no less than it gives a good report to a number to be chaste.

Boult. Here comes that which grows to the stalk; never plucked yet, I can assure you.

Re-enter Boult with Marina.

Is she not a fair creature?

LYS. ‘Tis fair, she would serve after a long voyage at sea. Well, there’s for you; leave us.

Boult. I bequeath your honour, give me leave: a word, and I’ll have done presently.

LYS. I beseech you, do.

Boult. [To Marina] First, I would have you note, this is an honourable man. [note him.

MAR. I desire to find him so, that I may worthily

Boult. Next, he’s the governor of this country, and a man whom I am bound to.

MAR. If he govern the country, you are bound to him indeed; but how honourable he is in that, I know not.

Boult. Pray you, without any more virginal fencing, will you use him kindly? He will line your arm with gold.

MAR. What he will do graciously, I will thank.

LYS. Ha! you done? [fully receive.

Boult. My lord, she’s not paced yet: you must take some pains to work her to your manage. Come, we will leave his honour and her together. Go thy ways.

[Exeunt. Boult, Pandar, and Boult.

LYS. Now, pretty one, how long have you been at this trade?

MAR. What trade, sir?

LYS. Why, I cannot name ‘t but I shall offend.

MAR. I cannot be offended with my trade. Please you a name.

LYS. How long have you been of this profession?

MAR. Ever since I can remember.

LYS. Did you go to ‘t so young? Were you a gamaster at five or at seven?

MAR. Earlier too, sir, if now I be one.

LYS. Why, the house you dwell in proclaims you to be a creature of sale.

MAR. Do you know this house to be a place of such resort, and will come into ‘t? I hear say you are of honourable parts, and are the governor of this place.

LYS. Why, hath your principal made known unto you who I am?

MAR. Who is my principal?

LYS. Why, your herb-woman; she that sets seeds and roots of shame and iniquity, O, you have heard something of my power, and so stand aloof for more serious woes. But I protest to thee, pretty one, my authority shall not see thee, or else look friendly upon thee. Come, bring me to some private place: come, come.

MAR. If you were born to honour, show it now; if put upon you, make the judgment good.

Thou thought you worthy of it.

LYS. How’s this? How’s this? Some more: be

MAR. For me, [sage.

That am a maid, though most ungentle fortune

Have placed me in this sty, where, since I came, Diseases have been sold dearer than physic, O, that the gods Would set me free from this unhallow’d place,

Though they did change me to the meanest bird

That flies i’ the purer air!

I did not think

Thou couldst have spoke so well; ne’er dream’d thou couldst

Had I brought hither a corrupted mind,

Thy speech had alter’d it. Hold, here’s gold for

ACT V.

PERICLES.

SCENE I.

Lys. For me, be you thoughten
That I came with no ill intent; for to me
The very doors and windows savour vilely,
Fare thee well. Thou art a piece of virtue, and
I doubt not but thy training hath been noble.
Hold, here's more gold for thee.
A curse upon him, die he like a thief,
That robs thee of thy goodness! If thou dost
Hear from me, it shall be for thy good.

Re-enter Boult.

Boult. I beseech your honour, one piece for me.
Lys. Avant, thou damned door-keeper!
Your house, but for this virgin that doth prop it,
Would sink and overwhelm you. Away! [Exit.

Boult. How's this? We must take another course with you. If your peevish chastity, which is not worth a breakfast in the cheapest country under the cope, shall undo a whole household, let me be gelded like a spaniel. Come your ways.

Mar. Whither would you have me?

Boult. I must have your maidenhead taken off, or the common hangman shall execute it. Come your ways. We'll procure to no more gentlemen driven away. Come your ways, I say.

Re-enter Bawd.

Bawd. How now! what's the matter?

Boult. Worse and worse, mistress; she has here spoken holy words to the Lord Lysimachus.

Bawd. O abominable!

Boult. She makes our profession as it were to stink afore the face of the gods.

Bawd. Marry, hang her up for ever!

Boult. The nobleman would have dealt with her like a nobleman, and she sent him away as cold as a snowball: saving his prayers too.

Boult. Take her away; use her at thy pleasure: crack the glass of her virginity, and make the rest maltieble.

Boult. An if she were a thornier piece of ground than she is, she shall be ploughed.

Mar. Hark, hark, ye gods!

Bawd. She conjures: away with her! Would she had never come within my doors! Marry, hang you! She's born to undo us. Will you not go the way of women-kind? Marry, come we, my dish of chastity with rosemary and bay!

Boult. Come, mistress; come your ways with me.

Mar. Whither wilt thou have me?

Boult. To take from you the jewel you hold so
dear.

Mar. Prithew, tell me one thing first.

Boult. Come now, your one thing.

Mar. What cause hast thou of thine enemy to be?

Boult. Why, I could wish him to be my master, or rather, my mistress.

Mar. Neither of these are so bad as thou art, since they do better thee in their command.

Boult. And place, for which the paid'st flend
Of hell would not in reputation change:
Thou art the damned doorkeeper to every
Coisrel that comes inquiring for his Tib;
To the choleric listing of every rogue
Thy car is liable; thy food is such
As hath been belch'd on by infected lungs.

Boult. What would you have me do? go to the wars, would you? where a man may serve seven years for the loss of a leg, and have not money enough in the end to buy him a wooden one?

Mar. Do any thing but this thou dost. Empty
Old receptacles, or common shires, of gilt;
Serve by the night, to the common hangman.
Any of these ways are yet better than this:
For what thou professest, a baboon, could he speak,
Would own a name too dear. O, that the gods
Would sally deliver me from this place!

Here, here's gold for thee.

Boult. But can you teach all this you speak of?

Mar. Prove that I cannot, take me home again,
And prostitute me to the basest groom.

That doth frequent your house.

Boult. Well, I will. I see what I can do for thee: if I can place thee, I will.

Boult. Faith, my acquaintance lies little amongst them. But since my master and mistress have bought you, there's no going but by their consent:
therefore I will make them acquainted with your purpose, and I doubt not but I shall find them trusty in the oath. Come, I'll do thee for what I can; come your ways.

[Exeunt.]
ACT V.  PERICLES.

SCENE I.

Enter two or three Gentlemen.

First Gent. Both your lordship call?

Hel. Gentlemen, there's some of worth would come aboard;

I pray ye, greet them fairly.

(The Gentlemen and the two Sailors descend, and go on board the barge.)

Enter, from thence, Lysimachus and Lords; with the Gentlemen and the two Sailors.

Tyr. Sail, Sir,

This is the man that can, in aught you would, Resolve you.

Lys. Hail, reverend sir! the gods preserve you!

Hel. And you, sir, to outlive the age I am,

And die as I would do.

Lys. You wish me well.

Being on shore, honouring of Neptune's triumphs,

Seeing this goodly vessel ride before us,

I made it to, to know of whence you are.

Hel. First, what is your place?

Lys. I am the governor of this place you lie be.

Hel. Sir, [fore,

Our vessel is of Tyre, in it the king;

A man who for this three months hath not spoken

To any one, nor taken sustenance

But to progrone his grief.

Lys. Upon what ground is his distemperature?

Hel. 'Tis would be too tedious to repeat;

But the main grief springs from the loss

Of a beloved daughter and a wife,

Lys. May we not see him?

Hel. You may;

But bootless is your sight: he will not speak

To any.

Lys. Yet let me obtain my wish.

Hel. Behold him. [Pericles discovered.] This was a goodly person,

Till the disaster that, one mortal night,

Drove him to this.

Lys. Sir king, all hail! the gods preserve you!

Hail, royal sir!

Hel. It is in vain; he will not speak to you.

First Lord, Sir,

We have a maid in Mytilene, I durst wager,

Would win some words of him.

Lys. 'Tis well betroth'd,

She questionless with her sweet harmony

And her chosen attractions, would allure,

And make a battery through his defunct's parts,

Which now are midway stopp'd;

She is all happy as the fairest of all.

And, with her fellow maidens, is now upon

The leaft shelter that abuts against

The island's side.

Hel. Sure, all's effectless; yet nothing we'll omit

That bears recovery's name. But, since your kind,

We have stretch'd 'thence far, let us beseech you [ness

That for our goods we may provision have,

Wherein we are not destitute for want,

But weary for the staidness.

Lys. O, sir, a courier

Which if we should deny, the most just gods

For every graud would send a caterpillar,

And so afflict our province. Yet once more

Let me entreat to know at large the cause

Of your king's sorrow.

Hel. Sit, sir, I will recon't it to you;

But, see, I am prevented.

Re-enter, from the barge. Lord, with Marina, and a young Lady.

Lys. O, here is

The lady that I sent for. Welcome, fair one!

Is't not a goodly presence?

Hel. She's a gallant lady.

Lys. She's such a one. That, were I well assured

Came of a gentle kind and noble stock,

I'd wish no better choice, and think me rarely wed.

Fair one, all goodness that consists in bounty

Expect even here, where is a kingly patient:

If that thy prosperous and artificial feat

Can draw him out to answer thee in aught,

That sacred physic shall receive such pay

As thy desires can wish.

Mar. Sir, I will use

My utmost skill in his recovery,

Provided

That none but I and my companion maid

Be suffer'd to come near him.

Lys. Come, let us leave her;

And the gods make her prosperous! [Marina sings.

Lys. Mark'd be your music.

Mar. No, nor look'd on us.

Lys. See, she will speak to him.

Mar. Hail, sir! my lord, lend ear.

Per. Hum, ha!

Mar. I am a maid,

My lord, that ne'er before invited eyes,

But have been gaz'd on like a comet: she speaks,

My lord, I seem to have been end'd a grief,

Might equal yours, if both were justly weigh'd.

Though wayward fortune did malign my state,

My derivation was from ancestors

Who stood equivalent with mighty kings:

But time hath root't out my parentage,

And to the world and awkward'st casualties

Bound me in servitude. [Sisile I will desist;

But there is something goes upon my cheek,

And whispers in mine ear 'Go not till he speak.'

Per. My fortunes—parentage—good parentage—

To equal mine!—was it not thus? what say you?

Mar. I said, my lord, if you did know my parentage,

You would not do me violence. [age.

Per. I do think so. Pray you, turn your eyes upon me.

You are like something that— What country—

Here of these shores?

Mar. No, nor of any shores:

Yet I was mortally brought forth, and am

No other than I appear.

[ing.

Per. I am great with woe, and shall deliver weep.

My dearest wife was like this maid, and such a one

My daughter might have been: my queen's square been

Her stature to an inch; as wand-like straight;

As silver-voic'd; her eyes as jewel-like

And cas'd as richly: in pace another Juno;

Who starves the ears she feeds, and makes them hungry,

[live.

The more she gives them speech. Where do you

Mar. Where I am but a stranger: from the deck

You may discern the place.

Per. Where were you bred?

And how achieved you these endowments, which

You make more rich to owe?

Mar. If I should tell my history, it would seem Like lies disdain'd in the reporting.

Per. Prithée, speak:

Falseness cannot come from thee; for thou look'st

Mostly as Justice, and thou seem'st a prince

For the crow'd Truth to dwell in: I will believe

And make my senses credit thy relation [thee,

To point out what is not; for thou look'st

Like one I loved indeed. What were thy friends?

Didst thou not say, when I did push thee back—

Which was when I perceived thee—that thou came'st

From good descending?

Mar. So indeed I did.

Per. Report thy parentage. I think thou said'st

Thou hadst been toss'd from wrong to injury,

And that thou thought'st thy griefs might equal

It both were open'd.
Some such thing
I said, and said no more but what my thoughts
Did warrant me was likely.
Per. Tell thy story;
If thine consider'd prove the thousandth part
Of my endurance, thou art a friend, and I
Have suffer'd like a girl: yet thou dost look
Like Patience gazing on kings' graves, and smiling
Extremity out of act. What were thy friends?
How lost thou them? Thy name, my most kind virgin?
Recall. I do beseech thee: come, sit by me.
Mar. My name is Marina.
Per. O, I am mock'd, and
And thou by some incensed god sent bither
To make the world to laugh at me,
Patience, good sir, O
Or else. I'll cease.
Thou little know'st how thou dost startle me,
To call thyself Marina.
Mar. The name
Was given me by one that had some power,
My father, and a king.
Per. How! a king's daughter?
Mar. You said you would believe me;
But, not to be a trouble of your peace,
I will end here.
Per. But are you flesh and blood?
Have you a working pulse? and are not fairy?
Motion! Well; speak on. Where were you born?
And wherefore call'd Marina?
Mar. Call'd Marina,
For I was born at sea.
Per. At sea! what mother?
Mar. My mother was the daughter of a king;
Who died the minute I was born,
As my good nurse Lychorida hath oft
Deliver'd weeping.
Per. O, stop there a little!
[Lead] This is the rarest dream that e'er dux sleep
Did mock sad fools withal: this cannot be:
My daughter's buried. Well: where were you bred?
I'll hear you more, to the bottom of your story,
And never interrupt you. [Give o'er.
Mar. You scorn: believe me, 't were best I did
Per. I will believe you by the syllable
Of what you shall deliver. Yet, give me leave:
How came you in these parts? where were you bred?
Mar. The king my father did in Tarsus leave me;
Till cruel Cleon, with his wicked wife,
Did seek to murder me: and having warp'd
A villain to attempt it, who having drawn to do't,
A crew of pirates came and rescued me;
Brought me to Mytilene. But, good sir,
Whither will you have me? Why do you weep?
It may be,
You think me an impostor: no good faith;
I am the daughter to King Pericles,
If good King Pericles be.
Per. No, Helicanus!
Hel. Calls my lord?
Per. Thou art a grave and noble counsellor,
Most wise in general: tell me, if thou canst,
What this maid is, or what is like to be,
That thus hath made me weep?
Hel. I know not; but Here is the regent, sir, of Mytilene
Speaks nobly of her.
Lys. She would never tell
Her parentage; being demanded that,
She would sit still and weep.
Per. O Helicanus, strike me, honour'd sir;
Give me a gash, put me to present pain;
Lest this great sea of joys rushing upon me
O'erbear the shores of my mortality,
And drown me with their sweetness. O, come hither,
Thou that beget'st him that did thee beget;
Thou that wast born at sea, buried at Tarsus,
And found at sea again! O Helicanus,
Down on thy knees, thank the holy gods so loud
As thunder threatens us: this is Marina.
What was thy mother's name? tell me but that,
For truth can never be confirmed enough,
Though doubts did ever sleep.
Mar. What is your title?
Per. I am Pericles of Tyre: but tell me now
My drown'd queen's name, as in the rest you said
Thou hast been godlike perfect,
The heir of kingdoms and another like
To Pericles thy father.
Mar. Is it no more to be your daughter than to say my mother's name was Thaisa?
Thaisa was my mother, who did end
The minute I began. [child.
Per. Now, blessing on thee! rise; thou art my Give me fresh garments. Mine own, Helicanus;
She is not dead at Tarsus, as she should have been,
By savage Cleon: she shall tell thee all:
When thou shalt kneel, and justify in knowledge
She is thy very princess. Who is this?
Hel. Sir, 'tis the governor of Mytilene,
Who, hearing of your melancholy state
Did come to see you.
Per. I embrace you.
Give me my robes. I am wild in my beholding,
O heavens bless my girl! But, hark, what music?
Tell Helicanus, my Marina, tell him
O'er, point by point, for yet he seems to doubt;
How sure you are my daughter. But, what music?
Hel. My lord, I hear none.
Per. No!
The music of the spheres! List, my Marina.
Lys. It is not good to cross him; give him way.
Per. Rarest sounds! Do ye not hear?
Lys. Most heavenly music! It
Nips me unto listening, and thick slumber
Hangs upon mine eyes: let me rest. [Sleeps.
Lys. A pillow for his head:
So, leave him all. Well, my companion friends,
If this but answer to my just belief,
I'll well remember you. [Exeunt all but Pericles.

Diana appears to Pericles as in a vision.
Dia. My temple stands in Ephesus: hee thee
And do upon mine altar sacrifice. [Uthert
There, when my maiden priests are met together,
Before the people all,
Reveal how thou at sea didst lose thy wife:
To mourn thy crosses, with thy daughter's, call
And give them repetition to the life.
Or perform my bidding, or thou livest in woe;
Do it, and happy; by my silver bow!
A wake, and tell thy dream. [Disappears.
Per. Celestial Diana, goddess argentine,
I will obey thee, Helicanus!

Re-enter Helicanus, Lysimaechus, and Marina.
Hel. Sir?
Per. My purpose was for Tarsus, there to strike
The inhospitable Cleon; but I am
For other service first: toward Ephesus
Turn our blown sails; to morrow I'll tell thee why.
[To Lysimaechus] Shall we refresh us, sir, upon your
And give you gold for such provision [shore,
As our intents will need?
Lys. Sir,
With all my heart: and, when you come ashore,
I have another suit.
Per. You shall prevail.
Were it to woo my daughter: for it seems
You have been noble towards her.
ACT V.

SCENE II. — Enter Gover, before the temple of Diana at Ephesus.

Gover. Now our sands are almost run; More a little, and then dumb. This, my last boon, give me, For such kindness must relieve me, That you apply will suppose, What pæan-solitary, what feats, what shows, What minstrelsly, and pretty din, The regent made in Mytlenoe To greet the king. So he thrived, That he is promised to be wied To fair Dana; but in no wise Till he had done his sacrifice, As Dian bade: wherefore being hound, The interim, pray you, all concomit. In feather’d breathless sails are till’d, And wishes fail out as they’re will’d. At Ephesus, the temple see, Our king and all his company, That he can hither come so soon, Is by your fancy’s thankful doom. [Exit.

SCENE III. — The temple of Diana at Ephesus:

Thaisa standing near the altar, as high priestess; a number of Virgins on each side; Cerimon and other inhabitants of Ephesus attending.

Enter Pericles, with his train:

Lysimachus, Helicanus, Marina, and a Lady.

Per. Hail, Dian! to perform thy just command, I here confess myself the king of Tyre: Who, frighted from my country, did wed At Pentapolis the fair Thaisa. At sea in childbed died she, but brought forth A maid-child call’d Marina; who, O goddess, Wears yet thy silver livery. She at Tarsus Was nursed with Cleon; who at fourteen years He sought to murder; but her better stars Brought her to Mytlenoe: ‘gainst whose shore Riding, her fortunes brought the maid abroad us, By whom, where ever most clear remembrance, she Made known herself my daughter.

Thais. Voice and favour! You are, you are — O royal Pericles! [Paints.

Per. What means the nun? she dies! help, gen-

Cer. Noble sir, [demem! If you have told Diana’s altar true,

This to your wife.

Per. Reverend appearer, no; I threw her overboard with these very arms. Cer. Upon this coast, I warrant you.

Per. 'Tis most certain.

Cer. Look to the lady; O, she’s but o’erjoy’d.

Early in bustling morn this lady was Thrown upon this shore. I oped the coffin, Found there rich jewels; recover’d her, and placed Here in Diana’s temple. [her Per. May we see them? Cer. Great sir, they shall be brought you to my Whifber I invite you. Look, Thaisa is [house, Recover’d.

Thais. O, let me look! If he be none of mine, my sanctity Will to my sense bend no licentuous ear, But curb it: spite of seeing. O, my lord. Are you Pericles? Take him you spyke, Like him you are: did you not name a tempest, A birth, and death? [Per. The voice of dear Thaisa! That Thaisa am I, supposed dead And drown’d.

Per. Immortal Dian! That. Now I know you better.

When we with tears parted Pentapolis, The king my father gave you such a ring. [Shows a ring.

Per. This, this: no more, you gods! your present kindness Makes my past miseries sports: you shall do well, That on the touching of her lips I may Melt and no more be seen. O, come, be buried A second time within these arms.

Mer. My heart Leaps to be gone into my mother’s bosom. [Kneels to Thaisa.

Per. Look, who kneels here! Flesh of thy flesh, Thy burden at the sea, and call’d Marina, [Thaisa; For she was yielded there.

Thais. Blest, and mine own! Hel. Hail, madam, and my queen!

Thais. I know you not.

Per. You have heard me say, when I did fly from I left behind an ancient substitute: [Tyre, Can you remember what I called the man? I have named him off.

Thais. That was Helicanus then.

Per. Still confirmation:

Embrace him, dear Thaisa; this is he. Now do I long to hear how you were found; How possibly preserved; and who to thank, Besides the gods, for this great miracle. Cer. Lord Cerimon, my lord: this man. Through whom the gods have shown their power; From first to last resolve you. [that can Per. Reverend sir, The gods can have no mortal officer More like a god than you. Will you deliver How this dead queen re-lives? I will, my lord.

Beseech you, first go with me to my house, Where shall be shown you all was found with her; How she came placed here in the temple; No needful thing omitted.

Per. Pure Dian, bless thee for thy vision! I Will offer night-oblations to thee. Thaisa. This prince, the fair-betrothed of your daughter, Shall marry her at Pentapolis. And now, This ornament Makes me look dismal will I clip to form: And with this fourteen years no razor touch’d, To grace the marriage-day, I’ll beautify. [sir, [Thaisa. Lord Cerimon hath letters of good credit, My father’s dead. [my queen, Per. Heaven’s make a star of him! Yet there, We’ll celebrate their nuptials, and ourselves Will in that kingdom spend our following days: Our son and daughter shall in Tyrus reign. Lord Cerimon. we do our longing stay To hear the rest untold: sir, lead’s the way. [Exeunt.

Enter Gover.

Gover. In Antiochus and his daughter you have heard Of monstrous lust the due and just reward: In Pericles, his queen and daughter, seen, Although assail’d with fortune fierce and keen, Virtue preserved from fell destruction’s blast. Led on by heaven, and crown’d with joy at last: In Helicanus you well desery A figure of truth, of faith, of loyalty: In reverend Cerimon there well appears The worth that learned charity aye wears: For wicked Cleon and his wife, when fame Had spread their cursed deed, and hon’d name Of Pericles, to rage the city turn, That him and his they in his palace burn; The gods for murder seemed so content To punish them: although not done, but meant. So, on your patience evermore attending. New joy wait on you! Here our play has ending. [Exit.
VENUS AND ADONIS.

*Vilia miretur vulgus; mild flavus Apollo

TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE HENRY WROTHESLY,

EaRL OF SOUTHWORTH, AND BARON OF TICHFIELD.

Right Honourable,

I know not how I shall offend in dedicating my unpolished lines to your lordship, nor how the world will censure me for choosing so strong a prop to support so weak a burden: only, if your honour seem but pleased, I account myself highly praised, and vow to take advantage of all idle hours, till I have honoured you with some graver labour. But if the first heer of my invention prove deformed, I shall be sorry it had so noble a godfather, and never after car so barren a land, for fear it yield me still so sad a harvest. I leave it to your honourable survey, and your honour to your heart's content; which I wish may always answer your own wish and the world's hopeful expectation.

Your honour's in all duty,

\[William Shakespear\]

Even as the sun with purple-colour'd face
Had ta'en his last leave of the weeping morn,
Rose-cheek'd Adonis hied him to the chase;
Hunting he loved, but love he laugh'd to scorn;
Sick-thoughted Venus makes amain unto him,
And like a bold-faced suitor 'gins to woo him.

'Thrice-fairer than myself,' thus she began,
The field's chief flower, sweet above compare,
Stain to all nymphs, more lovely than a man,
More white and red than doves or roses are:
Nature that made thee, with herself at strife,
Saith that the world hath ending with thy life.

'Veouchsafe, thou wonder, to alight thy steed,
And rein his proud head to the saddle-bow;
If thou wilt deign this favour, for thy need
A thousand honey secrets shalt thou know:
Here come and sit, where never serpent kisses,
And being set, I'll smother thee with kisses;
And yet not cloy thy lips with loathed satiety,
But rather famish them amid their plenty,
Making them red and palm with fresh variety,
Ten kisses short as one, one long as twenty:
A summer's day will seem an hour but short,
Being wasted in such time-begulling sport.'

With this she seizeth on his sweating palm,
The precedent of pith and livelihood,
And trembling in her passion, calls it balm:
Earth's sovereign sate to do a goddess good:
Being so enraged, desire doth lend her force
Courageously to pluck him from his horse.

Over one arm the lusty courser's rein,
Under her other was the tender boy,
Who blush'd and panted in a dull disdain,
With leaden appetite, unapt to toy;
'She red and hot as coals of glowing fire,
He red for shame, but frosty in desire.

The studded bridle on a ragged bough
Nimbly she fastens:—Oh, how quick is love!—
The steed is stalled up, and even now
To tie the rider she begins to prove:
Backward she shoves, and as she would be thrust,
And govern'd him in strength, though not in lust.

So soon was she along as he was down,
Each leaning on their elbows and their lips;
Now doth she stroke his cheek, now doth he brown,
And 'gins to chide, but soon she stops his lips;
And kissing speaks, with lustful language broken,
'If thou wilt chide, thy lips shall never open.'

He burns with bashful shame; she with her tears
Doth quench the maiden burning of his cheeks;
Then with her windy sighs and golden hairs
To fan and blow them dry again she seeks;
He saith she is immodest, blames her 'miss;
What follows more she murders with a kiss.

Even as an empty eagle, sharp by fast,
Tires with her beak on feathers, flesh and bone,
Shaking her wings, devouring all in haste,
Till either gorge be stuff'd or prey be gone:
Even so she kissed his brow, his cheek, his chin,
And where she ends she doth anew begin.

Forced to content, but never to obey,
Panting he lies and breatheth in her face;
She feedeth on the steam as on a prey,
And calls it heavenly moisture, air of grace;
Wishing her cheeks were gardens full of flowers,
So they were dew'd with such distilling showers.

Look, how a bird lies tangled in a net,
So fasten'd in her arms Adonis lies:
Pure shame and awed resistance made him fret,
Which bred more beauty in his angry eyes:
Rain added to a river that is rank
Perforce will force it overflow the bank.

Still she entreats, and prettily entreats,
For to a pretty car she times her tale;
Still is he sullen, still he lours and frets,
'Twixt crimson shame and anger ashy-pale:
Being red, she loves him best; and being white,
Her best is better'd with a more delight.

Look how he can, she cannot choose but love;
And by her fair immortal hand she swears,
From his soft bosom never to remove,
Till he take truce with her contending tears.
Which long have rain'd, making her cheeks all wet;
And one sweet kiss shall pay this countless debt,
Upon this promise did he raise his chin,
Like a dive-dapper peering through a wave,
Who, being look’d on, ducks as quickly in;
So offers he to give what she did crave:
But when her lips were ready for his pay,
He winks, and turns his lips another way.

Never did passenger in summer’s heat
More thirst for drink than she for this good turn.
Her help she sees, but help she cannot get;
She bathes in water, yet her fire must burn:
‘O, pity, ’gan she cry, ’tint-hearted boy!
’Tis but a kiss I beg; why art thou coy?

‘I have been woo’d, as I entract thee now,
Even by the stern and direful god of war,
Whose snivey neck in battle ne’er did bow,
Who conquer where he comes in every jay;
Yet hath he been my captive and my slave.
And begg’d for that which thou mask’d shalt have.

‘Over my altars hath he hung his lance,
His batter’d shield, his uncontrolled crest,
And for my sake hath learn’d to sport and dance,
To toy, to wanton, daily, smile and jest.
Scouring his churchful drum and ensign red,
Making his arms his field, his tent my bed.

‘Thus he that overruled I oversway’d,
Leading him prisoner in a red-glove chain:
Stronger tempered, steel his stronger strength obey’d,
Yet was he servile to my coy disdain.
O, be not proud, nor brag not of thy might,
For mastering her that foil’d the god of light!

‘Touch but my lips with those fair lips of thine,—
Though mine he not so fair, yet are they red—
The kiss shall be thine own as well as mine.
What seest thou in the ground? hold up thy head:
Look in mine eye-balls, there thy beauty lies;
Then why not lips on lips, since eyes in eyes?

‘Art thou ashamed to kiss? then wink again,
And I will wink; so shall the day seem night;
Love keeps his revels where there are but twain;
Be bold to play, our sport is not in sight:
These blue-vein’d violets whereon we lean
Never can blab, nor know not what we mean.

‘The tender spring upon thy tempting lip
Shows thee mirth; yet mayst thou be tast’d:
Make use of time, let not advantage slip;
Beauty within itself should not be wasted:
Fair flowers that are not gather’d in their prime
Rot and consume themselves in little time.

‘Were I hard-favour’d, foul, or wrinkled-old,
Ill-nurtur’d, crooked, churchful, harsh in voice,
O’erborn, despoil’d, rheumatic and cold,
Thick-sighted, barren, lean and lacking juice,
Then mightest thou pause, for then I was not for thee;
But having no defects, why dost abhor me?

‘Thou canst not see one wrinkle in my brow:
Mine eyes are gray and bright and quick in turning;
My beauty as the spring doth yearly grow,
My desh is soft and plump, my marrow burning;
My smooth moist hand, were it with thy hand felt,
Would in thy palm dissolve, or seem to melt.

‘Bid me discourse, I will enchant thine ear,
Or, like a fairy, trip upon the green,
Or, like a nymph, with long dishevell’d hair,
Dance on the sands, and yet no footing seen:
Love is a spirit all compact of fire,
Not gross to shak, but light, and will aspire.

‘Witness this primrose bank whereon I lie;
These forceless flowers like stubly trees support me;
Two strengthless doves will draw me through the sky,
From morn till night, even where I list to sport me:
Is love so light, sweet boy, and may it be
That thou shouldst think it heavy unto thee?

Can thy right hand seize love upon thy left?
Then woo thyself, be of thyself rejected.
Steel thine own freedom and complain on theft.
Narcissus so himself forsook,
And died to kiss his shadow in the brook.

‘Torches are made to light, jewels to wear,
Dainties to taste, fresh beauty for the use,
Herbs for their smell, and sappy plants to bear;
Things growing to themselves are growth’s abuse:
Seeds spring from seeds and beauty breedeth beauty;
Thou wast begot; to get it is thy duty.

‘Upon the earth’s increase why shouldst thou feed,
Unless in earth with thy increase fed?
By law of nature thou art bound to breed,
That thine may live when thou thyself art dead;
And so, in spite of death, thou dost survive,
In that thy likeness still is left alive.

‘By this the love-sick queen began to sweat,
For where they lay the shadow had forsaken them,
And Titan, tired in the mid-day heat,
With burning eye did hotly overlook them;
Wishing Adonis had his team to guide,
So he were like him and by Venus’ side.

And now Adonis, with a lazy spright,
And with a heavy, dark, disliking eye,
His lowers brows o’erwhelming his fair sight,
Like misty vapours when they blot the sky,
Souring his cheeks cries ‘Fie, no more of love!
The sun doth burn my face; I must remove.”

‘Ay me,’ quoth Venus, ‘young, and so unkind?
What base excuses makest thou to be gone!
I’ll sigh celestial breath, whose gentle wind
Shall cool the heat of this descending sun;
I’ll make a shadow for thee of my hairs;
If they burn too, I’ll quench them with my tears.

‘The sun that shines from heaven shines but warm,
And, lo, I lie between that sun and thee;
The heat I have from thence doth little harm,
Thine eye darts forth the fire that burneth me;
And were I not immortal, life were done
Between this heavenly and earthly sun.

‘Art thou oldmate, flinty, hard as steel,
Nay, more than flint, for stone at rain relenteth?
Art thou a woman’s son, and canst not feel
What ‘tis to love? how want of love tormenteth?
O, had thy mother borne so hard a mind,
She had not brought forth thee, but died unkind.

‘What am I, that thou shouldst contemn me this?
Or what great danger dwells upon my soul?
What were thy lips the worse for one poor kiss?
Speak, fair; but speak fair words, or else be mute:
Give me one kiss, I’ll give it thee again,
And one for interest, if thou wilt have twain.

‘Fie, lifeless picture, cold and senseless stone,
Well-pointed head, image dull and dead,
Statue contenting but the eye alone,
Like a man, but of no woman bred;
Thou art no man, though of a man’s complexion,
For men will kiss even by their own direction.”

823
Venus and Adonis.

This said, impatience chokes her pleading tongue,
And swelling passion doth provoke a pause;
Red cheeks and fiery eyes blaze forth her wrong;
Being judge in love, she cannot right her cause:
And now she weeps, and now she fain would speak,
And now her sobs do her intentions break.

Sometimes she shakes her head and then his hand,
Now gazeth she on him, now on the ground;
Sometimes her arms fold him like a band;
And when from thence he struggles to be gone,
She locks her lily fingers one in one.

'Fondling, she saith, since I have hemm'd thee here
Within the circuit of this ivory pale,
I'll be a park, and thou shalt be my deer;
Feed where thou wilt, on mountain or in Dale:
Gaze on my lips: and if those hills be dry,
Stray lower, where the pleasant fountains lie.

Within this limit is relief enough,
Sweet bottom-grass and high delightful plain,
Round rising hillocks, brakes obscure and rough,
To shelter thee from tempest and from rain:
Then be my deer, since I am such a park;
No dog shall rouse thee, though a thousand bark.'

At this Adonis smiles as in disdain,
That in each cheek appears a pretty dimple:
Love made those hollows, if himself were slain,
He might be buried in a tomb so simple;
Forknowing well, if there he came to lie,
'Why, there Love lived and there he could not die.

These lovely caves, these round enchanting pits,
Open'd their mouths to swallow Venus' liking,
Being mad before, how doth she now for wits?
Struck dead at first, what needs a second striking?
Poor queen of love, in thine own law born,
To love a cheek that smiles at thee in scorn!

Now which way shall she turn? what shall she say?
Her words are done, her woes the more increasing:
The time is spent, her object will away,
And from her twining arms doth urge releasing,
'Pity, she cries, some favor, some remorse!' Away he springs and lust to his horse.

But, lo, from forth a copse that neighbours by,
A breeding jennet, lusty, young and proud,
Adonis' trampling courser doth espay,
And forth he swings and bounds aloud:
The strong-neck'd steed, being tied unto a tree,
Breaketh his rein, and to her straight goes he.

Imperiously he leaps, he heareth, he bounds,
And now his woven girths he breaks asunder;
The bearing earth with his hard hoof he wounds,
Whose hollow woe resounds like heaven's thunder:
The iron bit he crusheth 'tween his teeth,
Controlling what he was controlled with.

His ears up-prick'd; his braided hanging mane
Upon his compass'd crest now stand on end;
His nostrils drink the air, and forth again,
As from a furnace, vapours doth he send:
His eye, which scornfully glistered like fire,
Shows his hot courage and his high desire.

Sometimes he trots, as if he told the steps,
With gentle majesty and modest pride:
Anon he rears upright, curvets and leaps,
As who should say 'Lo, thus my strength is tried,
And this I do to captivate the eye
Of the fair breeder that is standing by.'

What reketh he his rider's angry stir,
His flittering 'Holla,' or his 'Stand, I say?'
What cares he now for curb or pricking spur?
For rich comparisons or trapping gay?
He sees his love, and nothing else he sees,
For nothing else with his proud sight agrees.

Look, when a painter would surpass the life,
In limning out a well-proportion'd steed,
His art with nature's workmanship at strife,
As if the dead the living should exceed;
So did this horse excel a common one
In shape, in courage, colour, pace and bone.

Round-hoof'd, short-jointed, fetlock shag and long,
Broad breast, full eye, small head and nostril wide,
High crest, short ears, straight legs and passing strong.
Thin mane, thick tail, broad buttock, tender hide:
Look, what a horse should have he did not lack,
Save a proud rider on so proud a back.

Sometime he sends far off and there he stares;
Anon he starts at stirring of a feather;
To bid the wind a base lie now prepares,
And whether he run or fly they know not whether;
For through his mane and tail the high wind sings,
Fanning the hairs, who wave like feather'd wings.

He looks upon his love and neighs unto her;
She answers him as if she knew his mind:
Being proud, as females are, to see him woo her,
She puts on outward strangeness, seems unkind,
Spurns at his love and scorns the heat he feels,
Beating his kind embraces with her heels.

Then, like a melancholy malcontent,
He veils his tail that, like a falling plume,
Cool shadow to his melting buttock lent;
He stampes and bites the poor flies in his flame.
His love, perceiving how he was enraged,
Grew kinder, and his fury was assuaged.

His testy master goeth about to take him;
When, lo, the unback'd breeder, full of fear,
Jealous of catching, swiftly doth forsake him,
With him the horse, and left Adonis there:
As they were mad, unto the wood they hie them,
Out-stripping crows that strive to over-fly them.

All sooin with chafing, down Adonis sits,
Banning his boisterous and unruly beast;
And now he happy season once more fils.
That love-sick Love by pleading may be blee;
For lovers say, the heart hath treble wrong
When it is barr'd the alliance of the tongue.

An oven that is stopp'd, or river stay'd,
Burneth more hotly, swelleth with more rage:
So of concealed sorrow may be said;
Free vent of words love's fire doth assuage;
But when the heart's attorney once is mute,
The client breaks, as desperate in his suit.

He sees her coming, and begins to grow,
Even as a dying coal revives with wind,
And with his bonnet hides his angry brow;
Looks on the dull earth with disturbed mind,
Taking no notice that she is so nigh,
For all askanke he holds her in his eye.

O! what a sight it was, wistly to view
How she came stealing to the wayward boy!
To note the fighting conflict of her hue,
How white and red each other did destroy!
But now her cheek was pale, and by and by
It flash'd forth fire, as lightning from the sky.
VENUS AND ADONIS.

"Who wears a garment shapeless and unfinish'd
Who plucks the bud before one leaf put forth?
If springing things be any jot diminish'd,
They wither in their prime, prove nothing worth:
The colt that's back'd and burden'd being young
Loseth his pride and never wartheth strong.

"You hurt my hand with wringing; let us part,
And leave this idle theme, this bootless chat:
Remove your siege from my unyielding heart;
To love's alarms it will not ope the gate: [tory;
Dismiss your vows, your feigned tears, your flat-
For where a heart is hard they make no battery.

"What! canst thou talk? 'quoth she, 'hast thou a tongue?
O, would thou hadst not, or I had no hearing!
Thy mermaid's voice hath done me double wrong;
I had my lead before, now press'd with bearing;
Melo'dious discord, heavenly tune harsh-sounding,
Ear's deep-sweet music, and heart's deep-sore wounding.

"Had I no eyes but ears, my ears would love
That inward beauty and invisible;
Or were I deaf, thy outward parts would move
Each part in me that were but sensible:
Though neither eyes nor ears, to hear nor see,
Yet should I be in love by touching thee.

"Say, that the sense of feeling were bereft me,
And that I could not see, nor hear, nor touch,
And nothing but the very smell were left me,
Yet would my love to thee be still as much;
For from the stillitory of thy face excelling
Comes breath perfumed that breetheth love by smelling.

"But, O, what banquet wert thou to the taste,
Being nurse and feeder of the other four! Would they not wish the feast might ever last,
And bid Suspicion double-lock the door,
Lest Jealousy, that sour unwelcome guest,
Should, by his stealing in, disturb the feast?"

Once more the ruby-colour'd portal open'd,
Which to his speech did honey passage yield;
Like a red morn, that ever yet betoken'd
Wreck to the storm, tempest to the field.
Sorrow to shepherds, woe unto the birds,
Gusts and foul flaws to herdmen and to herds.

This ill presage advisedly she marketh:
Even as the wind is hush'd before it raineth,
Or as the wolf doth grin before he barketh,
Or as the berry breaks before it stameth,
Or like the deadly bullet of a gun,
His meaning struck her ear his words begun.

And at his look she flatly falleth down,
For looks killeth love and love by looks reviveth;
A smile recures the wounding of a frown; But blessed bankrupt, that by love so thriveth!
The silly boy, believing she is dead,
Claps her pale cheek, till chapping makes it red;

And all amazed brake off his late intent.
For sharply he did think to reprehend her,
Which' cunning love did Wittily prevent:
Fair fall the wit that can so well defend her!
For on the grass she lies as she were slain,
Till his breath breatheth life in her again.

He wrings her nose, he strikes her on the cheeks,
He bends her fingers, holds her pulses hard,
He chases her lips: a thousand ways he seeks
To mend the hurt that this unkindness marr'd:

Now was she just before him as he sat,
And like a lowly lover down she kneels;
With one fair hand she heaveth up his hat,
Her other tender hand his fair cheek feels;
His tenderer cheek receives her soft hand's print,
As apt as new-fall'n snow takes any dint.

O, what a war of looks was then between them!
Her eyes petitioners to his eyes suing;
His eyes saw her eyes as they had not seen them;
Her eyes woo'd still, his eyes disdain'd the wooing:
And all this dumb play had his acts made plain
With tears, which, chorus-like, her eyes did rain.

Full gently now she takes him by the hand,
A lily prison'd in a gaol of snow,
Or ivory in an alabaster band:
So white a friend engirts so white a foe:
This beauteous combat, wilful and unwilling,
Show'd like two silver doves that sit a-billing.

Once more the engine of her thoughts began:
'0 fairest mower on this mortal round,
Would thou were I, and I a man,
My heart all whole as thine, thy heart my wound;
For one sweet look thy help I would assure thee
Though nothing but my body's bane would cure thee.'

'Give me my hand,' saith he, 'why dost thou feel it?
Give me my heart,' saith she, 'and shan't have O, give it me, lest thy hard heart do sted it, hit;
And being steel'd, soft sighs can never grave it:
Then love's deep groans I never shall regard,
Because Adonis' heart hath made mine hard.'

'For shame,' he cries, 'let go, and let me go;
My day's delight is past, my horse is gone,
And 'tis your fault I am bereft him so:
I pray you hence, and leave me here alone;
For all my mind, my thought, my busy care,
Is how to get my palfrey from the mare.'

Thus she replies: 'Thy palfrey, as he should,
Welcomes the warm approach of sweet desire;
Affection is a coal that must be cool'd;
Else, suffer'd, it will set the heart on fire:
The sea hath bounds, but deep desire hath none;
Therefore no marvel though thy horse be gone.

'How like a jade he stood, tied to the tree,
Servilely master'd with a leathern rein!
But when he saw his love, his youth's fair fee,
He held such pett'ly bondage in disdain:
Throwing the base thong from his bending crest,
Enfranchising his mouth, his back, his breast.

'Who sees his true-love in her naked bed,
Teaching the sheets a whiter hue than white,
But, when his glutton eye so full hath fed,
His other agents aim at like delight?
Who is so faint, that dare not be so bold
To touch the fire, the weather being cold?'

'Let me excuse thy courser, gentle boy;
And learn of him, I heartily beseech thee,
To take advantage on presented joy:
Though I were dumb, yet his proceedings teach thee:
O, learn to love; the lesson is but plain,
And once made perfect, never lost again.'

'I know not love,' quoth he, 'nor will not know it,
Unless it be a bear, and then I chase it;
'Tis much to borrow, and I will not owe it;
My love to love is love but to disgrace it;
For I have heard it is a life in death.
That laughs and weeps, and all but with a breath,
Venus and Adonis.

He kisses her; and she, by her good will,
Will never rise, so he will kiss her still.
The night of sorrow now is turn'd to day:
Her two blue windows faintly she up-heaveth,
Like the fair sun, when in his fresh array
She cheers the morn and all the earth relieth;
And as the bright sun glorifies the sky,
So is her face illumined with her eye;
Whose beams upon his hairless face are fix'd,
As if from thence they borrow'd all their shine.
Were never four such lamps together mix'd,
Had not his clouded with his bow's repose:
But hers, which through the crystal tears gave light,
Shone like the moon in water seen by night.

'O, where am I?' quothe she, 'in earth or heaven,
Or in the ocean drench'd, or in the fire?
What hour is this? or morn or weary even?
Do I delight to die, or life desire?
But now I lived, and life was death's annoy;
But now I died, and death was lively joy.'

'O, thou diest kill me; kill me once again;
Thy eyes shall ward tutor, that hard heart of thine,
Hath taught them scornful tricks and such disdain
That they have murder'd this poor heart of mine;
And these mine eyes, true leaders to their queen,
But for thy piteous lips no more had seen.

'Long may they kiss each other, for this cure!
O, never let their crimson livers wear!
And as they last, their verdure still endure,
To drive infection from the dangerous year!
That the star-gazers, having writ on death,
May say, the plague is banish'd by thy breath.

'Pure lips, sweet seals in my soft lips imprinted,
What bargains may I make, still to be sealing?
To sell myself I can be well contented,
So thou wilt buy and pay and use good dealing;
Which purchase if thou make, for fear of slips
Set the seal-manual on my wax-red lips.

'A thousand kisses buys my heart from me;
And pay them at thy leisure, one by one,
What is ten hundred touches unto thee?
Are they not quickly told, and quickly gone?
Say, for non-payment that the debt should double,
Is twenty hundred kisses such a trouble?'

'Fair queen,' quothe he, 'if any love you owe me,
Measure my strangeness with my unripe years:
Before I know myself, seek not to know me;
No fisher but the ungrateful try forbes:
The mellow plum doth fall, the green sticks fast,
Or being early pluck'd is sour to taste.

'Look, the world's comforter, with weary gait,
His day's hot task hath ended in the west;
The owl, night's herald, shrieks, 'Tis very late;'
The sheep are gone to fold, birds to their nest,
And coal-black clouds that shadow heaven's light
Do summon us to part and bid good night.

'Now let me say, 'Good night,' and so say you;
If you will say so, you shall have a kiss.'
'Good night,' quothe she, and, ere he says 'Adieu,'
The honey fee of parting tender'd is:
Her arms do lend his neck a sweet embrace;
Incorporate then they seen; face grows to face.

Till, breathless, he disjoin'd, and backward drew
The heavenly moisture, that sweet coral mouth,
Whose precious taste her thirsty lips well knew
Where'er she the refresh, yet contains the drought:
He with her plenty press'd, she faint with dear
Their lips together glued, fall to the earth.

Now quick desire hath catch'd the yielding prey,
And glutten-like she feeds, yet never filleth;
Her lips still suction, deeper and deeper,
Paying what ransom the insuffer wileth; [thigh,
Whose vulture thought doth pitch the price so
That she will draw his lips' rich treasure dry:

And having felt the sweetness of the spoil,
With blandfold face she junces to forgive
Her face doth reek and smoke, her blood doth boil,
And careless lust stirs up a desperate courage;
Planting oblivion, beating reason back,
Forgetting shame's pure blush and honour's wreck.

Hot, faint, and weary, with her hard embracing,
Like a wild bird being tamed with too much binding,
Or as the fleet-foot roe that's tire with chasing,
On like the froward infant still'd with dandling,
He now obeys, and now no more resisteth,
While she takes all she can, not all she listeth.

What wax so frozen but dissolves with tempering,
And yields at last to every light impression?
Things out of hope are compass'd oft with venturing,
Chieflly in love, whose leave exceeds commission:
Affection faints not like a pale-faced coward,
But then wos best when most his choice is froward.

When he did frown, O, had she then gave over,
Such nectar from his lips she had not suck'd.
Foul words and frowns umbrage a lover:
What though the rose have prickles, yet's pluck'd;
Wrote beauty under twenty locks kept fast,
Yet love breaks through and picks them all at last.

For pity now she can no more detain him;
The poor fool prays her that he may depart:
She is resolved no longer to restrain him;
Bids him farewell, and look well to her heart,
The which, by Cupid's bow she doth protest,
He carries thence incaged in his breast.

'Sweet boy,' she says, 'this night I'll waste in sorrow.
For my sick heart commands mine eyes to watch,
Tell me, Love's master, shall we meet to-morrow?
Say, shall we? shall we? wilt thou make the match?
He tells her, no; to-morrow he intends
To hunt the boar with certain of his friends.

'The boar!' quothe she; whereat a sudden pale,
Like lawn being spread upon the blossing rose,
Uumps her cheek; she trembles at his tale,
And on her neck her yoking arms she throws;
She sinketh down, still hanging by a neck,
He on her belly falls, she on her back.

Now is she in the very lists of love,
Her champion mounted for the boit encounter:
All is imaginary she doth prove,
He will not manage her, although he mount her;
That worse than Tantalus is her amoy,
To clip Elysium and to lack her joy.

Even as poor birds, deceived with painted grapes,
Do surfeit by the eye and pine the nayd,
Even so she languisheth in her mishaps,
As those poor birds that helpless berries saw;
The warm effects which she in him finds missing
She seeks to kindle with continual kissing.
Venus and Adonis.

But all in vain; good queen, it will not be;
She hath assayed as much as may be proved;
Her presents have no power to subdue his foes.
She's Love, she loves, and yet she is not loved,
'Fie, fie,' he says, 'you crush me; let me go;
You have no reason to withhold me so.'

'Thou hadst been gone,' quoth she, 'sweet boy, ere
But that thou told'st me thou wouldst hunt the boar,
O, he advised! thou know'st not what it is
With javelin's point a churlish swine to gore,
Whose tushes never sheathed he wretched still,
Like to a mortal butcher bent to kill.

'On his bow-hack he hath a battle set
Of bristly pikes, that ever threat his foes;
His eyes, like glow-worms, shine when he doth fret;
His snot digp sphenicles where'er he goes;
Being moved, he strikes whate'er is in his way,
And whom he strikes his cruel tushes slay.

'His brawny sides, with hairy bristles arm'd,
Are better proof than thy spear's point can enter;
His short thick neck cannot be easily harm'd;
Being fierce, on the lion he will venture:
The thorny brambles and embrazing bushes,
As fearful of him, part, through whom he rushes.

'Alas, he sought esteem that face of thine,
To which Love's eyes pay tributary gazes;
Nor thy soft hands, sweet lips and crystal eye,
Whose full perfection all the world admires;
But having thee at vantage,—wondrous dread
Would root these beauties as he roots the mead.

'O, let him keep his loathsome cabin still;
Beauty hath ought to do with such foul fiends:
Come not with such infernal vigor still;
They that thrive well take counsel of their friends.
When thou didst name the boar, not to dissemble,
I fear'd thy fortune, and my joints did tremble.

'Didst thou not mark my face? was it not white?
Saw'st thou not signs of fear lurk in mine eye?
Grew I not faint? and fell I not downright?
Within my bosom, whereon thou dost lie;
My boiling heart pums, beats, and takes no rest,
But, like an earthquake, shakes thee on my breast.

'For where Love reigns, disturbing Jealousy
Doth call himself Affection's sentinel;
Gives false alarms, suggesteth mutiny,
And in a peaceful hour doth cry "Kill, kill!"
Distempering gentle Love in his desire,
As air and water do abate the fire.

'Tis this sour imager, this bate-breeding spy,
This canker that eats up Love's tender spring,
This carry-tale, dissentions Jealousy.
That sometime true news, sometime false doth bring.

Knout of my heart and whispers in mine ear
That if I love thee, I thy death should fear:

'And more than so, presenteth to mine eye
The picture of an angry-chasing boar,
Under whose sharp fangs on his back doth lie
An image, like myself, all stain'd with grief.
Whose blood upon the fresh flowers being shed
Doth make them droop with grief and hang the head.

'What should I do, seeing thee so indeed,
That trouble at the imagination?
The thought of it doth make my faint heart bleed,
And fear doth teach it divination:

I prophesy thy death, my living sorrow.
If thou encounter with the bear to-morrow,
But if thou needs wilt hunt, be ruled by me,
Uncouple at the timorous flying hare,
Or at the fox which lives by subdity,
Or at the roe which no conquer dare:
Pursue these fearful creatures over the downs,
And on thy well-breathed horse keep with thy bounds.

'And when thou hast on foot the purblind hare,
Mark the poor wretch, to overshot his troubles
How he outruns the wind and with what care
He cracks and crosses with a thousand doubles:
The many muses through the which he goes
Are like a labyrinth to amaze his foes.

'Sometime he runs among a flock of sheep,
To make the cunning hounds mistake their smell,
And sometime where earth-delving comes easy,
To stop the loud pursuers in their yell,
And sometime sorteth with a herd of deer:
Danger deviseth shifts; wait waits on fear.

'For there his smell with others being mingled,
The hot scent-smelling hounds are driven to doubt,
Ceasing their clamorous cry till they have singled
With much ado the cold fault cleanly out;
Then do they spend their mouths: Echo replies,
As if another chase were in the skies.

'By this, poor Wat, far off upon a hill,
Stands on his hinder legs with listening ear,
To hearken if his foes pursue him still:
Anon their loud alarms he doth hear;
And now his grief may be compared well
To one sore sick that hears the passing-hell.

'Then shall thou see the dew-bedazzled wretch
Turn, and return, indented with the way;
Each envious brier his weary legs doth scratch,
Each shadow makes him stop, each murmur stay:
For misery is trodden on by many,
And being low never relieved by any.

'Lie quietly, and hear a little more;
Nay, do not struggle, for thou shalt not rise;
To make thee hate the hunting of the boar,
Unlike myself thou hear'st me moralize,
Applying this to that, and so to so;
For love can comment upon every woe.

'Where did I leave? ' No matter where;' quoth he,
'Leave me, and then the story aptly ends:
The night is spent.' 'Why, what of that?' quoth she.
'I am, quoth he, 'expected of my friends;
And now 'tis dark, and going I shall fall.'
'In night,' quoth she, 'desire sees best of all.
'But if thou fall, O, then imagine this,
The earth, in love with thee, thy footing trips,
And all is but to rob thee of a kiss,
Rich prey's make true men thieves; so do thy lips
Make modest Dian cloudy and forlorn.
Lest she should steal a kiss and die forsworn.

'Now of this dark night I perceive the reason;
Cynthia for shame obscures her silver shine,
Till forcing Nature be condemn'd of treason,
For stealing moulds from heaven that were divine;
Wherein she framed thee in high heaven's despite,
To shame the sun by day and her by night.

'And therefore hath she bribed the Destinies
To cross the curious workmanship of nature,
VENUS AND ADONIS.

To mingle beauty with infiniteness,
And pure perfection with inmost beauty,
Making it subject to the tyranny
Of mad mischiefs and much misery;

As burning fevers, agues pale and faint,
Life-poisoning pestilence and frenzied wood,
The narrow-eating sickness, whose attendant
Disorder breeds by heating of the blood:
Surfets, imposthumes, grief, and damn'd despair,
Swear Nature's death for framing thee so fair.

And not the least of all these maladies
But in one minute's light brings beauty under:
Both favour, savour, hue and qualities,
Whereat the impartial gazer late did wonder,
Are on the sudden wasted, thaw'd and done,
As mountain-snow melts with the midday sun.

Therefore, despite of fruitless chastity,
Love-laching vestal and self-loving mus
That on the earth would breed a scarcity
And barren earth of daughters and of sons,
Be prodigal: the lamp that burns by night
Dries up his oil to lend the world his light.

What is thy body but a swelling grave,
Seeming to bury that posterity
Which by the rights of time thou needs must have,
If thou destroy them not in carie obscurity?
If so, the world will hold thee in disdain,
Sith in thy pride so fair a hope is slain.

So in thyself thyself art made away;
A mischief worse than civil home-bred strife,
Or theirs whose desperate hands themselves do slay,
Or butcher-shire that reaves his son of life.
Foul cankerling rust the hidden treasure frets,
But gold that's put to use more gold begets.

Nay, then, quoth Adon, you will fall again
Into your idle over-handled theme;
The kiss I gave you is bestow'd in vain,
And all in vain you strive against the stream:
For, by this black-faced night, desire's foul burn
Your treatise makes me like you worse and worse.

If love have lent you twenty thousand tongues,
And every tongue more moving than your own,
Bewitching like the wanton mermaid's songs,
Yet from mine ear the tender tune is blown;
For know, my heart stands armed in mine ear,
And will not let a false sound enter there;

Lest the deceiving harmony should run
Into the quiet closure of my breast;
And then my little heart were quite undone,
In his bethchamber to be barr'd of rest.
No, lady, no; my heart longs not to groan,
But soundly sleep, while now it sleeps alone.

What have you urged that I cannot reprove?
The path is smooth that leadeth on to danger:
I hate not love, but your device in love,
That lends embracements unto every stranger.
You do it for increase: 'in strange excuse,
When reason is the bawd to lust's abuse!

Call it not love, for Love to heaven is fed,
Since sweating Lust on earth usurp'd his name;
Under whose simple semblance he hath fed
Upon fresh beauty, blotting it with blame;
Which the hot tyrant stains and soon bereaves,
As caterpillars do the tender leaves.

Love comforteth like sunshine after rain,
But Lust's effect is tempest after sun;

Love's gentle spring doth always fresh remain,
Lust's winter comes ere summer half be done;
Love surflets not. Lust like a glutton dies;
Love is all truth, Lust full of forged lies.

More could I tell, but more I dare not say;
The text is old, the orator too green.
Therefore, in sadness, now I will away:
My face is full of shame, my heart of ten:
Mine ears, that to your wanton talk attended,
Do burn themselves for having so offended.

With this, he breaketh from the sweet embrace,
Of those fair arms which bound him to her breast,
And homeward through the dark land runs space;
Leaves Love upon her back deeply distress'd.
Look, how a bright star shooteth from the sky,
So glides he in the night from Venus' eye;

Which after him she darts, as one on shore
Gazing upon a late-embarred friend,
Till the wild wave will have him seen no more,
Whose ridges with the meeting clouds contend:
So did the merciless and pitchy night
Fold in the object that did feed her sight.

Whereat amazed, as one that unaware
Hath dropp'd a precious jewel in the flood,
Or stonish'd as night-wanderers often are,
Their light blown out in some mistrustful wood,
Even so confounded in the dark she lay,
Having lost the fair discovery of her way.

And now she beats her heart, whereat it groans,
That all the neighbour caves, as seeming troubled,
Make verbal repetition of her mouns;
Passion on passion deeply is redoubled:
 Ay me! 'tis cries, and twenty times 'Woe, woe!'
And twenty echoes twenty times cry so.

She marking them begins a wailing note
And sings extempore a woeful ditty:
How love makes young men thrill and old men
How love is wise in folly, foolish-witty: [note; Her heavy anthem still concludes in woe,
And still the choir of echoes answer so.

Her song was tedious and outwore the night,
For lovers' hours are long, though seeming short:
If pleased themselves, others, they think, delight
In such as they, no other but such like sport:
Their copious stories oftentimes begun
End without audience and are never done.

For who hath she to spend the night withal
But idle sounds resembling parasites,
Like shrill-tongued tabsters answering every call,
Sothing the humour of fantastic wits?
She says 'T is so,' they answer all 'T is so;
And would say after, if she said 'No.'

Lo, here the gentle lark, weary of rest,
From his moist cabinet mounts up on high,
And wakes the morning, from whose silver breast
The sun ariseth in his majesty;
Who doth the world so gloriously behold
That cedar-tops and hills seem burnish'd gold.

Venus salutes him with this fair good-morrow:
'O thou clear god, and patron of all light,
From whom each lamp and shining star doth borrow
The beautious influence that makes him bright,
There lives a son that suck'd an earthly mother,
May lend thee light, as thou dost lend to other.'

This said, she hasteth to a myrtle grove,
Musing the morning is so much o'erworn,
VENUS AND ADONIS.

And yet she bears no tidings of her love:
She hearkens for his hounds and for his horn:
Amen she bears them chant it lustily,
And all in haste she casteth to the cry.

And as she runs, the bushes in the way
Some catch her by the neck, some kiss her face,
Some twine about her thigh to make her stay:
She wildly breaketh from their strict embrace.

Like a milch doe, whose swelling udders do ache,
Hasting to feed her fawn hid in some brake.

By this, she hears the hounds are at a bay:
Whereat she starts, like one that spies an adder
Wreathed up in fatal folds just in his way,
The fear whereof doth make him shake and shudder;

Even so the timorous yelping of the hounds
Appals her senses and her spirit confounds.

For now she knows it is no gentle chase,
But the blunt boar, rough bear, or hon proud,
Because the cry remained in one place,
Where fearfully the dogs exclaim aloud:

Finding their enemy to be so curst,
They all strain courtesy who shall cope him first.

This dismal cry rings sadly in her ear,
Through which it enters to surprise her heart;
Who, overcome by doubt and bloodless fear,
With cold-pale weakness numbs each feeling part:

Like soldiers, when their captain once doth yield,
They basely fly and dare not stay the field.

Thus stands she in a trembling ecstacy:
Till, cheering up her senses all dismally,
She tells them 'tis a causeless fantasy,
And childish error, that they are afraid;
Bids then leave quaking, bids then fear no more:
And with that word she spied the hunted boar,

Whose frotthy mouth, beaptured all with red,
Like milk and blood being mingled both together,
A second fear through all her sinews spread,
Which madly hurries her she knows not whither:
This way she runs, and now she will no further,
But back retires to rate the boar for murther.

A thousand spleens bear her a thousand ways;
She treads the path that she untreated again;
Her more than haste is mated with delays,
Like the proceedings of a drunken brain.

Full of repects, yet nought at all respecting:
In hand with all things, nought at all effecting.

Here kennell'd in a brake she finds a bound,
And asks the weary culliff for his master,
And there another lickings of his wound,
'Gainst venom'd sorest the only sovereign plaster;

And here she meets another sadly scowling,
To whom she speaks, and he replies with bowing.

When he hath ceased his ill-resounding noise,
Another lip-mouth'd mourner, black and grim,
Against the welkin volleys out his voice;
Another and another answer him,
Clapping their proud tails to the ground below,
Shaking their scratch'd ears, bleeding as they go.

Look, how the world's poor people are amazed
At apparitions, signs and prodigies,
Whereon with fearful eyes they long have gazed,
Infusing them with dreadful prophecies;
So she at these sad signs draws up her breath
And sighing it again, exclaims on Death.

'Hart-favoured tyrant, ugly, meagre, lean,
Hateful divorce of love,—thus chides she Death,—

'Grim-grinning ghost, earth's worm, what dost thou mean
To stifle beauty and to steal his breath,
Who when he lived, his breath and beauty set
Gloss on the rose, smell to the violet?

'If he be dead,—O no, it cannot be,
Seeing his beauty, thou shouldst strike at it:—
O yes, it may; thou hast no eyes to see,
But hateful at random dost thou hit.

Thy mark is feeble age, but thy false dart
Mistakes that aim and cleaves an infant's heart.

'Hadst thou but bid beware, then he had spoke,
And, hearing him, thy power had lost his power.
The Destinies will cause him for this stroke;
They bid thee crop a weed, thou pluck'st a flower:
Love's golden arrow at him should have died,
And not Death's ebon dart, to strike him dead.

'Dost thou drink tears, that thou provokest such weeping?
What may a heavy groan advantage thee?
Why hast thou cast into eternal sleeping
Those eyes that taught all other eyes to see?
'Now Nature cares not for thy mortal vigour,
Since her best work is ruin'd with thy rigour.'

Here overcome, as one full of despair,
She vail'd her eyelids, who, like sluices, stopt
The crystal tide that from her two cheeks fair
In the sweet channel of her bosom drop;
But through the flood-gates breaks the silver rain,
And with his strong course opens them again.

O, how her eyes and tears did lend and borrow!
Her eyes seen in the tears, tears in her eye;
Both crystals, where they view'd each other's sorrow;
Sorrow that friendly sighs sought still to dry;
But like a stormy day, now wind, now rain,
Sighs dry her cheeks, tears make them wet again.

Variable passions throng her constant woe,
As striving who should best become her grief;
All entertain'd, each passion labours so,
That every present sorrow seemeth brief;
But none is best: then join they all together,
Like many clouds consulting for foul weather.

By this, far off she hears some huntsman holla;
A nurse's song never pleased her bare so well;
The dire imagination she did thus thrive;
This sound of hope doth labour to expel;
For now reviving joy bids her rejoice,
And flatters her it is Adonis' voice.

Whereat her tears began to turn their tide,
Being prison'd in her eye like pearels in glass;
Yet sometimes falls an orient drop beside,
Which her cheek melts, as scorning it should pass,
To wash the foul face of the sluttish ground,
Who is but drunken when she seemeth drown'd.

O hard-believing love, how strange it seems
Not to believe, and yet too credulous!
Thy weal and woe are both of them extremes
Despair and hope makes thee ridiculous:
The one doth flatter thee in thoughts unlikely,
In likely thoughts the other kills thee quickly.

Now she unwraps the web she hath wrought;
Adonis lives, and Death is not to blame;
It was not she that call'd him all to naught:
Now she adds honours to his hateful name:
She clepes him king of graves and grave for kings,
Imperious supreme of all mortal things.

829
VENUS AND ADONIS.

'No, no,' quoth she, 'sweet Death, I did but jest;
Yet pardon me I felt a kind of fear
When as I met the bear, that bloody beast,
Which knows no pity, but is still severe;
Then, gentle shadow,—truth I must confess,—
I rail'd on thee, fearing my love's decease.

'T is not my fault: the bear provoked my tongue;
Be wreak'd on him, invisible commander;
'Tis he, foul creature, that hath done thee wrong;
I did but act, he's author of thy slander;
Grief hath two tongues, and never woman yet
Could rule them both without ten women's wit.'

Thus hoping that Adonis is alive,
Her rash suspect she doth extenuate;
And that his beauty may the better thrive,
With Death she humbly doth insinuate:
Tells him of trophies, statues, tombs, and stories
His victories, his triumphs and his glories.

'O Jove, quoth she, 'how much a fool was I
To be of such a weak and silly mind
To wail his death who lives and must not die
Till mutual overthrow of mortal kind!
For he being dead, with him is beauty slain,
And, beauty dead, black chaos comes again.

'Fie, fie, fond love, thou art so full of fear
As one with treasure laden, hemm'd with thieves;
Thieves, unwitnessed with eye or ear,
Thy coward heart with false betaking grieves.'
Even at this word she bears a merry horn,
Whereat she leaps that was but late forlorn.

As falcon to the lure, away she flies;
The grass stoops not, she treads on it so light;
And in her haste unfortunately spies
The wild boar's conquest on her fair delight:
Which seen, her eyes, as bloody 'r blood'd with the view,
Like stars asham'd of day, themselves withdrew.

Or, as the snail, whose tender horns being hit,
Shrinks backward in his shelly cave with pain,
And there, all smother'd up, in shade doth sit,
Long after fearing to creep forth again;
So, at his bloody view, her eyes are deld
Into the deep dark cabins of her head:

Where they resign their office and their light
To the dissolving of his troubled brain:
Who kindles them still to consort with night,
And never wound the heart with looks again;
Who, like a king perplex'd in his throne,
By their suggestion gives a deadly groan,

Whereat each tributary subject quakes:
As when the wind, imprison'd in the ground,
Struggling for passage, earth's foundation shakes,
Which with cold terror doth men's minds confound.
This mutiny each part doth so surprise
That from their dark beds once more leap her eyes;

And, being open'd, threw unwilling light
Upon the wide wound that the boar had trench'd
In his soft flank; whose wonted lily white
With purple tears, that his wound wept, was drench'd:
No flower was nigh, no grass, herb, leaf, or weed,
But stole his blood and seem'd it with him to bleed.

This solemn sympathy poor Venus noteth;
Over one shoulder doth she hang her head;
Dumbly she passions, fruitlessly she doth;
She sighs he could not die, he is not dead:
Her voice is stopp'd, her sighs cease to bow;
Her eyes are mad that they have wept till now.

Upon his hurt she looks so steadfastly,
That her sight dazling makes the wound seem three;
And then she reproach'd her mangeling eye,
That makes more gashes where no breach should be:
His face seems twain, each several limb is doubled;
For oft the eye mistakes, the brain being troubled.

'My tongue cannot express my grief for one,
And yet, quoth she, 'tis naught, I've told both Adonis dead!
My sighs are blow'n away, my soft tears gone,
Mine eyes are turn'd to fire, my heart to lead:
Heavy heart's lead, melt at mine eyes' red fire!
So shall I die by drops of hot desire.

'Alas, poor world, what treasure hast thou lost!
What face remains alive that's worth the viewing?
Whose tongue is music now? what canst thou boast
Of things long since, or any thing ensuing?
The flowers are sweet, their colours fresh and trim;
But true sweet beauty lived and died with him.

'Bonnet nor veil henceforth no creature wear!
Nor sun nor wind will ever strive to kiss you;
Having no fair to lose, you need not fear;
The sun doth scorn you and the wind doth kiss you;
But when Adonis lived, sun and sharp air
Lurk'd like two thieves, to rob him of his fair.

'And therefore would he put his bonnet on,
Under whose brim the gaudy sun would peep;
The wind would blow it off and, being gone,
Play with his locks; then would Adonis weep;
And straight, in pity of his tender years,
They both would strive who first should dry his tears.

'To see his face the lion walk'd along
Behind some hedge, because he would not fear him;
To recreate himself when he bath sung,
The tiger would be tame and gently hear him;
If he had spoke, the wolf would leave his prey
And never fright the silly lamb that day.

'When he beheld his shadow in the brook,
The fishes spread on it their golden gills;
When he was by, the birds such pleasure look,
That some would sing, some other in their bills
Would bring him mulberries and ripe-red cherries;
He fed them with his sight, they him with berries.

'But this foul, grim, and urechinf-sounded boar,
Whose downward eye still looketh for a grave,
Ne'er saw the beauteous livery that he wore;
Witness the entertainment that he gave;
If he did see his face, why then I know
He thought to kiss him, and hath kill'd him so.

'Tis true, 'tis true; thus was Adonis slain:
He ran upon the boar with his sharp spear,
Who did not whet his teeth at him again,
But by a kiss thought to persuade him there;
And nuzzling in his flank, the loving swine
Sheathed unaware the tusk in his soft groin.

'Had I been tooth'd like him, I must confess,
With kissing him I should have kill'd him first;
But he is dead, and never did he bless
My youth with his; the more am I accurst.

With this, she falleth in the place she stood,
And stains her face with his congealed blood.

She looks upon his lips, and they are pale;
She takes him by the hand, and that is cold;
She whispers in his ears a heavy tale,
As if they heard the woeful words she told;
She lifts the cover-lids that close his eyes,
Where, lo, two lamps, burnt out, in darkness lies;
VENUS AND ADONIS.

Two glasses, where herself herself beheld
A thousand times, and now no more reflect;
Their virtue lost, wherein they late excelled;
And every beauty robbed of his effect:
'Wonder of time,' quoth she, 'this is my spite,
That, thou being dead, the day should yet be light.

'Since thou art dead, lo, here I prophesy:
Sorrow on love hereafter shall attend;
It shall be waited on with jealously.
Find sweet beginning, but unsavoury end,
Ne'er settled equally, but high or low,
That all love's pleasure shall not match his woe.

'It shall be fickle, false and full of fraud,
But be blasted in a breathing while:
The bottom poison, and the top o'erstraw'd
With sweets that shall the truest sight beguile:
The strongest body shall it make most weak,
Strike the wise dumb and teach the fool to speak.

'It shall be sparing and too full of riot,
Teaching decrepit age to tread the measures;
The staring ruddian shall it keep in quiet,
Pluck down the rich, enrich the poor with treasures:
It shall be raging mad and silly mild,
Make the young old, the old become a child.

'It shall suspect where is no cause of fear:
It shall not fear where it should most mistrust;
It shall be merciful and too severe.
And most deceiving when it seems most just;
Perverse it shall be where it shows most toward,
Put fear to valour, courage to the coward.

'It shall be cause of war and dire events,
And set dissension 'twixt the son and sire;
Subject and servile to all discontentors,
As dry combustious matter is to fire:

Sith in his prime Death doth my love destroy,
They that love best their loves shall not enjoy.

By this, the boy that by her side lay kill'd
Was melted like a vapour from her sight,
And in his blood that on the ground lay spill'd,
A purple flower sprung up, chequerd with white,
Resembling well his pale cheeks and the blood
Which in round drops upon their whiteness stood.

She bows her head, the new-sprung flower to smell,
Comparing it to her Adonis' breath,
And says, within her bosom it shall dwell,
Since he himself is rest from her by death:
She crops the stalk, and in the breach appears
Green dropping sap, which she compares to tears.

'Poor flower,' quoth she, 'this was thy father's guise —
Sweet issue of a more sweet-smelling sire —
For every little grief to wet his eyes;
To grow into himself was his desire,
And so 'tis thine: but know, it is as good
To wither in my breast as in his blood.

'Here was thy father's bed, here in my breast;
Thou art the next of blood, and 'tis thy right:
Lo, in this hollow cradle take thy rest.
My throbbing heart shall rock thee day and night:
There shall not be one minute in an hour
Wherein I will not kiss my sweet love's flower.'

Thus weary of the world, away she hies,
And yokes her silver doves: by whose swift aid
Their mistress mounted through the empty skies
In her light charriot is quickly convey'd:
Holding their course to Paphos, where their queen
Means to immure herself and not be seen.
THE RAPE OF LUCRECE.

TO THE
RIGHT HONOURABLE HENRY WROTHESLY,
EARL OF SOUTHAMPTON, AND BARON OF TICHFIELD.

The love I dedicate to your lordship is without end; whereas this pamphlet, without beginning, is but a superficial motley. The warrant I have of your honourable disposition, not the worth of my unlettered lines, makes it assured of acceptance. What I have done is yours; what I have to do is yours; being part in all I have, devoted yours. Were my worth greater, my duty would show greater; meantime, as it is, it is bound to your lordship, to whom I wish long life, still lengthened with all happiness.

Your lordship's in all duty,

William Shakespere.

THE ARGUMENT.

Lucretius Tarquinius, for his excessive pride surnamed Superbus, after he had caused his own father-in-law Servius Tullius to be cruelly murdered, and, contrary to the Roman laws and customs, not requiring or staying for the people's suffrages, had possessed himself of the kingdom, went, accompanied with his sons and other noblemen of Rome, to besiege Ardea. During which siege the principal men of the army meeting one evening at the tent of Sextus Tarquinius, the king's son, in their discourses after supper every one commended the virtues of his own wife; among whom Collatius extolled the incomparable chastity of his wife Lucretia. In that pleasant humour they all posted to Rome; and intending, by their secret and sudden arrival, to make trial of that which every one had before avouched, only Collatius finds his wife, though it were late in the night, spinning amongst her maidens; the other ladies were all found dancing and revelling, or in several disports. Whereupon the noblemen yielded Collatius the victory, and his wife the fame. At that time Sextus Tarquinius being inflamed with Lucretia's beauty, yet smothering his passions for the present, departed with the rest back to the camp; from whence he shortly after privately withdrew himself, and was, according to his estate, royally entertained and lodged by Lucretia at Collatium. The same night he treacherously stole into her chamber, violently ravished her, and early in the morning speedeth away. Lucretia, in this lamentable plight, hastily dispatcheth messengers, one to Rome for her father, another to the camp for Collatius. They came, the one accompanied with Junius Brutus, the other with Publius Valerius; and finding Lucretia in mourning habit, demanded the cause of her sorrow. She, first taking an oath of them for her revenge, revealed the actor, and whole manner of his dealing, and withal suddenly stabbed herself. Which done, with one consent they all roved to root out the whole hated family of the Tarquins; and bearing the deed body to Rome, Brutus acquainted the people with the doer and manner of the vile deed, with a bitter invective against the tyranny of the king; wherewith the people were so moved, that with one consent and a general acclamation the Tarquins were all exiled, and the state government changed from kings to consuls.

FROM the besieged Ardea all in post,
Borne by the trustless wings of false desire,
Lust-breathed Tarquin leaves the Roman host,
And to Collatium bears the lightless fire
Which, in pale embers hid, lurks to aspire
And girdle with embracing flames the waist
Of Collatine's fair love, Lucretie the chaste.

Haply that name of 'chaste' unhappily set
This baseless edge on his keen appetite;
When Collatine unwisely did not let
To praise the clear unmated red and white
Which triumph'd in that sky of his delight,
Where mortal stars, as bright as heaven's beauties,
With pure aspects did him peculiar duties.

For he the night before, in Tarquin's tent,
Unlock'd the treasure of his happy state;
What priceless wealth the heavens had him lent
In the possession of his beauteous mate;
Reckoning his fortune at such high-prond rate,
That kings might be espoused to more fame,
But king nor peer to such a peerless dame.

O happiness enjoy'd but a few!
And, if possess'd, as soon decay'd and done
As is the morning's silver-melting dew
Against the golden splendour of the sun!
An expired date, cancel'd ere well begun:
Honour and beauty, in the owner's arms,
Are weakly fortress'd from a world of harms.

Beauty itself doth of itself persuade
The eyes of men without an orator;
What needeth then apologies be made,
To set forth that which is so singular?
Or why is Collatine the publisher
Of that rich jewel he should keep unknown
From these fivish ears, because it is his own?

Percance his boast of Lucretie's sovereignty
Suggested this proud issue of a king;
For by our ears our hearts oft tainted be:
Percance that envy of so rich a thing,
Braving compare, disconsolately did sting
His high-pitch'd thoughts, that meaner men should vaunt
That golden lap which their superiors want.

But some untimely thought did instigate
His all-too-timless speed, if none of those:
His honour, his affairs, his friends, his state,
Neglected all, with swift intent he goes
To quench the coal which in his liver glows.
O rash false heat, wrapp'd in repentant cold.
Thy hasty spring still blastis, and he's grows old!

When at Collatium this false lord arrived,
Well was he welcomed by the Roman dame,
Within whose face beauty and virtue strive'd
Which of them both should underprop her fame:
When virtue brag'd, beauty would blush for shame;
When beauty boasted blushies, in despite
Virtue would stain that o'er with silver white.

S32
And every one to rest themselves betake,
Save thieves, and cares, and troubled minds,
that wake.

As one of which doth Tarquin lie revolving
The sundry dangers of his will's obtaining;
Yet ever to obtain his will resolving,
Though weak-built hopes persuade him to abstaining:

Despair to gain doth traffic off for gaining;
And when great treasure is the need proposed,
Though death be adjunct, there's no death supposed.

Those that much covet are with gain so fond,
For what they have not, that which they possess
They scatter and unloose it from their bond,
And so, by hoping more, they have but less;
Or, gaining more, the profit of excess
Is but to surfeit, and such griefs sustain,
That they prove bankrupt in this poor-rich gain.

The aim of all is but to nurse the life
With honour, wealth, and ease, in waning age;
And in this aim there is such thwarting strife,
That one for all, or all for one we gage;
As life for honour in false life's age.

Honour for wealth: and oft that wealth doth cost
The death of all, and all together lost.

So that in venturing ill we leave to be
The things we are for that which we expect;
And this ambitious fool infirmity,
In having much, torment us with defect
Of that we have: so then we do neglect
The thing we have: and, all for want of wit,
Make something nothing by augmenting it.

Such hazard now must doting Tarquin make,
Pawning his honour to obtain his lust;
And for himself himself he must forsake:
Then where is truth, if there be no self-trust?
When shall he think to find a stranger just,
When he himself himself confounds, betrays
To slanderous tongues and wretched hateful days?

Now stole upon the time the dead of night,
When heavy sleep had closed up mortal eyes:
No comfortable star did lend his light,
No noise but owls' and wolves' death-boding cries;
No nought serving the season that they may surprise
The silly lambs: pure thoughts are dead and still,
While lust and murder wake to stain and kill.

And now this lustful lord leap'd from his bed,
Throwing his mantle rudely o'er his arm;
Is madly toss'd between desire and dread;
Th' one sweetly flatters, th' other feareth harm;
But honest fear, bewitch'd with lust's foul charm,
Doth too oft betake him to retire,
Beaten away by brain-sick rude desire.

His faileon in a flint he softly smiteth,
That from the cold stone sparks of fire do fly;
Whereat a waxen torch forthwith he lighteth,
Which must be ledge-star to his lustful eye:
And to the flame thus speaks advisedly,
"As from this cold flint I enforced this fire,
So Lucrece must I force to my desire."

Here pale with fear he doth premeditate
The dangers of his loathsome enterprise,
And in his inward mind he doth debate
What following sorrow may on this arise:
Then looking sorrowfully, he doth despair
His naked armour of still-slaughter'd lust,
And justly thus controls his thoughts unjust.
'Fair torch, burn out thy light, and lend it not
To darken her whose light excelleth thine;
And die, unhallow'd thoughts, before you blot
With your uncleanness that which is divine;
Offer pure incense to so pure a shrine:
Let fair humanity abhor the deed [weed.
That spots and stains love's modest snow-white
In a moment hath confound and kill
All pure effects, and doth so far proceed,
That what is vile shows like a virtuous deed.
Quoth he, 'She took me kindly by the hand,
And gazed for tiding in my eager eyes,
Fearing she hard might from this warlike hand
Where her beloved Collatins lies.
O, how her fear did make her colour rise!

First red as roses that on lawn we lay,
Then white as lawn, the roses took away.
'And how her hand, in my hand being lock'd,
forced it to tremble with her loyal fear!
Which struck her sad, and then it faster rock'd,
Until her husband's welfare she did hear;
Whereat she smiled with so sweet a cheer,
That had Narcissus seen her as she stood,
Self-love had never drown'd him in the flood.

'Why hunt I then for colour or excesses?
All orators are dumb when beauty pleadeth;
Poor wretches have remorse in poor abuses;
Love thrives not in the heart that shadows dreadeth;
Affection is my captain, and he leadeth:
And when his gaudy banner is display'd,
The coward fights and will not be dismay'd.

'Then, childish fear, avaint! debating, die!
Respect and reason, wait on wrinkled age!
My heart shall never countermand mine eye:
Sad pause and deep regard besseem the sage;
My part is youth, and lets these from the stage:
Desire my pilot is, beauty my price;
Then who fears sinking where such treasure lies?'
As corn o'ergrown by weeds, so heedful fear
Is almost choked by unresisted lust.
Away he steals with open listening ear,
Full of foul hope and full of fond mistrust;
Both which, as servitors to the unjust;
So cross him with their opposite persuasion,
That now he vows a league, and now invasion.

Within his thought her heavenly image sits,
And in the self-same seat sits Collatine:
That eye which looks on her confounds his wits;
That eye which beholds her beauty divine,
Unto a view so false will not incline:
But with a pure appeal seeks to the heart,
Which once corrupted takes the worse part;
And therein heartens up his servile powers,
Who, flatter'd by their leader's just show,
Stuff up his lust, as minutes fill up hours;
And as their captain, so their pride doth grow,
Paying more slaveish tribute than they owe.
By reprobate desire thus madly led,
The Roman lord marcheth to Lucrece' bed.

The locks between her chamber and his will,
Each one by him enforced, retires his ward;
But, as they open, they all rate his ill,
Which drives the creeping thief to some regard;
The threshold grates the door to have him heard;
Night-wandering weasels shriek to see him there;
They fright him, yet he still pursues his fear.

As each unwilling portal yields him way,
Through little vents and crannies of the place
The wind wars with his torch to make him stay,
And blows the snare of it into his face,
Extinguishing his conduct in this case;
But his hot heart, which fond desire doth scorch,
Puffs forth another wind that fires the torch:

And being lighted, by the light he spies
Lucretia's glove, wherein her needle sticks;
He takes it from the rushes where it lies,
And gripping it, the needle his finger pricks;
As who should say 'This glove to wanton tricks
Is not inured: return again in haste;
Thou seest our mistress' ornaments are chaste.'

But all these poor forbiddings could not stay him;
He in the worst sense construes their denial:
The doors, the wind, the glove, that did delay him,
He takes for ordinary things of trial;
Or as those bars which stop the hourly dial,
Who with a lingering stay his course doth let,
Till every minute pays the hour his debt.

'So, so,' quoth he, 'these lets attend the time,
Like little frosts that sometime threat the spring,
To add a more rejoycing to the prime,
And give the snapped birds more cause to sing.

Pain pays the income of each precious thing;
Huge rocks, high winds, strong pirates, shelves
And sands,
The merchant fears, ere rich at home he lands.

Now is he come unto the chamber-door,
That shuts him from the heaven of his thought,
Which with a yielding latch, and with no more,
Hath barr'd him from the blessed thing he sought.
So from himself imploity hath wrought,
That for his prey to pray he doth begin,
As if the heavens should countenance his sin.

But in the midst of all his unfruitful prayer,
Having solicited th' eternal power
That his foul thoughts might compass his fair
And they would stand auspicious to the hour,
Even there he starts: quoth he, 'I must deliver
The powers to whom I pray abhor the fact,
How can they then assist me in the act?

Then Love and Fortune be my gods, my guide!
My will is back'd with resolution,
Thoughts are but dreams till their effects be tried;
The blackest sin is clear'd with absolution
Against love's fire's frost with the dissolution.

The eye of heaven is out, and misty night
Covers the shame that follows sweet delight.

This said, his guilty hand pluck'd up the latch,
And with his knee the door he opens wide.
The dove sleeps fast that this night-owl will catch:
Thus treason works ere traitors be espied.

Who sees the lurking serpent steps aside;
But she, sound sleeping, fearing no such thing,
Lies at the mercy of his mortal sting.

Into the chamber wickedly he stalks,
And gazeth on her yet unstained bed.
The curtains being close, about he walks,
Rolling his greedy eyeballs in his head;
By their high treason is his heart misled:
Which gives the watch-word to his hand full soon.

To draw the cloud that hides the silver moon.
Looking, as the fair and fiery-pointed sun,
Rushing from forth a cloud, hereaves our sight;
Even so, the curtain drawn, his eyes began
To wink, being blinded with a greater light:
Whether it is that she reflects so bright,
That dazzleth them, or else some shame supposed;
But blind they are, and keep themselves enclosed.

O, had they in that darksome prison died!
Then had they seen the period of their ill;
Then Collatine again, by Lucrece side,
In his clear bed might have repos'd still:
But they must ope, this blessed league to kill;
And holy-thoughted Lucrece to their sight.
Must sell her joy, her life, her world's delight.

Her oily hand her rosy cheek lies under,
Cozening the pillow of a lawful kiss;
Who, therefore angry, seems to part in sunder,
Swelling on either side to want his bliss;
Between whose hills her head entombed is:

Where, like a virtuous monarch
To be admired of lewd unhallow'd
Without the bed her other fair bower
On the green covert, whose pets

whose grim aspect sets every joint a-shaking;
What terror 'tis! but she, in worse taking,
From sleep disturbed, heedfully doth view
The sight which makes supposed terror true.

Wapp'd and confounded in a thousand fears,
Like to a new-kill'd bird she trembling lies;
LUCECE.

She dares not look; yet, winking, there appears
Quick-shifting ankles, ugly in her eyes;
Such shudderings are the worse my misery;

Who, angry that the eyes fly from their lights,
Darkness daunts them with more dreadful sights,

That yet remains upon her breast,—
d, to batter such an ivory wall!—
Her heart—poor citizen!—disquiets,
Itself to death, rise up and fall,

Bulk, that his hands shakes withal.

In him more rage and lesser pity,
The breach and enter this sweet city.

Trumpet, doth his tongue begin
Parley to his heartless foe:

The white sheet peers her whiter chin,
All of this rash alarm to know,

By dumb demeansur sees to show;

With vehement prayers urgeth still
What colour he commits this ill.

She replies: 'The colour in thy face,
Even for anger makes the lily pale,

And the red rose blush at her own disgrace.

My will that marks thee for my earth's delight,

Whose advice and counsel to my city,

But I to conquer scent with all my might;

As reproof and reason beat it dead,

By thy bright beauty was it newly bred.

I see what crosses my attempt will bring;

I know what thorns the growing rose defends;

I think the honey guarded with a sting:

All this beforehand counsel comprehends;

But will is deaf and hearkens not to friends;

Only he hath an eye to gaze on beauty,

And doth in what he looks, 'gainst law or duty.

'I have debated, even in my soul,

What wrong, what shame, what sorrow I shall breed;

But nothing can affection's course control,

Or stop the headlong tory of his speed.

I know repentant tears ensue the deed,

Reproach, disdain, and deathly cunning;

Yet strive I to embrace mine infamy.

This said, he shakes aloft his Roman blade,
Which, like a falcon towering in the skies,

Coucheth the fowl below with his wings' shade,

Whose crooked beak threats if he mount he dies:

So under his insulting falchion lies

Harmsless Lucrece, marking what he tells

With trembling fear, as fowl hear falcon's bells.

Lucrece, quothe he, 'This night I must enjoy thee:

If thou deny, then force must work my way,

For in thy bed I purpose to destroy thee:

That done, some worthless slave of thine I'll slay,

To kill thine honour with thy life's decay;

And in thy dead arms do I mean to place him,

Swearing I slew him, seeing thee embrace him.

So thy surviving husband shall remain

The scornful mark of every open eye:

Thy kinsmen hang their heads at this disdain,

Thy issue blurr'd with nameless bastardy:

And then, the author of their chagrin,

Shalt have thy trespass ced up in rhymes,

And sung by children in succeeding times.

But if thou yield, I rest thy secret friend:

The fault unknown is as a thought unacted;

A little harm done to a great good end

For lawful policy remain enacted.

The poisonous simple sometimes is compacted

In a pure compound; being so applied,

His venom in effect is purged.

Then, for thy husband and thy children's sake,

Tender my suit: beseaneth not to their lot.

The shame that from them no device can take,

The blennisht that will never be forgot;

Worse than a slaveish wife or birth-hour's blot:

For marks described in men's nativity

Are nature's faults, not their own infamy.

Here with a cockatrice dead-killing eye

He ronseth up himself and makes a pause;

While she, the picture of pure piety,

Like a white hind under the grieve's sharp claws,

Pleads, in a wilderness where are no laws,

To the rough beast that knows no gentle right,

'No aught obeys but his foul appetite.

Yet, fool night-waking cat, doth he but daily,

While in his bristle-foot the weak mouse panteth:

Her sad behaviour feeds his vulture fanny,

A swelling gulf that even in plenty wanteth;

His ear her prayers admits, but his heart grangeth

No penetrable entrance to her pleading: [ing.

Tears harden lust, though marble wear with rain-

Her pity-pleading eyes are sadly fix'd

In the remorseless wrinkles of his face;

Her modest eloquence with sighs is mix'd,

Which to her oratory adds more grace.

She puts the period often from his place;

And midst the sentence so her accent breaks,

That twice she doth begin ere once she speaks.

She conjures him by high almighty Jove,

By knighthood, gentiety, and sweet friendship's oath;

By her untimely tears, her husband's love,

By holy human laws, and common truth.

By heaven and earth, and all the power of both,

That to his bond's bend he make retire,

And stoop to honour, not to foul desire.

Quoth she, 'Reward not hospitality

With such black payment as thou hast pretended;

Mud not the fountain that gave drink to thee;

Mar not the thing that cannot be amended;

End thy ill aim before thy shoot be ended;

He is no woodman that doth bend his bow

To strike a poor unseasonable doe.

My husband is thy friend; for his sake spare me:

Thyself art mighty; for thine own sake leave me:

Myself a weakling; do not then ensnare me:

Thou look'st not like deed; do not deceive me.

My sighs, like whispering, labour hence to leave thee:

If ever man were moved with woman's means,

Be moved with my tears, my sighs, my groans:

All which together, like a troubled ocean,

Beat at thy rocky and wreck-threatening heart,

To soften it with their continual motion;

For stones dissolved to water do convert.

O, if no harder than a stone thou art,
Molt at my tears, and be compassionate!
Soft pity enters at an iron gate.

'Those usiness I did entertain thee:
Host thou put on his shape to do him shame?
To all the host of heaven I complain me, [name.
Thou wrong'st his honour, wound'st his princely
Thou art not what thou seem'st; and if the same,
Thou seem'st not what thou art, a god, a king;
For kings like gods should govern every thing.

'thow will thy shame be seced in thine age,
When thus thy vices bad before thy spring!
It in thy hope thou dar'st do such outrage,
What dar'st thou not when once thou art a king?
O, be remember'd, no outrageous thing
From vassal actors can be wiped away;
Then kings' misdeeds cannot be hid in clay.

'This deed will make thee only loved for fear;
But happy monarcs still are fear'd for love;
With foul offenders thou perferv must bear,
When they in thee the like offences prove:
If but for fear of this, they will remove;
For princes are the glass, the school, the book,
Where subjects' eyes do learn, do read, do look.

And will thou be the school where Lust shall learn?
Must he in thee read lectures of such shame?
Wilt thou be glass wherein it shall discern
Authority for sin, warrant for blame,
To privilege dishonour in thy name?
Thou back'st reproach against long-living laud,
And makest fair reputation but a bawd.

't hast command? by him that gave it thee,
From a pure heart command thy rebel will:
Draw not thy sword to guard iniquity,
For it was lent thee all that brood to kill.
Thy princely office how canst thou fulfil?
When, pattern'd by thy fault, foul sin may say,
He learn'd to sin, and thou dost teach the way?

'Think but how vile a spectacle it were,
To view thy present trespass in another.
Men's faults do seldom to themselves appear;
Their own presump'tions partake they souther;
This guilt would seem death-worthy in thy brother.
O, how are they wrapp'd in with infamies
That from their own misdeeds askance their eyes!

'To thee, to thee, my heav'd-arms hands appeal,
Not to seducing lust, thy rash reveler:
I sue for exiled majesty's repeat;
Let him return, and flattering thoughts retire;
His true respect will prison false desire,
And wipe the dim mist from thy doting eye,
That thou shalt see thy state and pity mine.

'Have done,' quoth he, 'my uncontrolled tide
Turns not, but swells the higher by this let.
Small lights are soon blown out, huge fires abide,
And with the wind in greater fury fret;
The petty streams that pay a daily debt
To their salt sovereign, with their fresh falls
Add to his bow, but alter not his taste.' [haste

'Thou art,' quoth she, 'a sea, a sovereign king;
And, lo, there falls into thy boundless flood
Black lust, dishonour, shame, misgoverning,
Who swells the ocean of our mind.
If all these petty ills shall change thy good,
Thy sea within a puddle's womb be hearsed,
And not the puddle in thy sea dispersed.

So shall these slaves be king, and thou their slave;
Thou nob y face, they basely dignified;
Thou their fair life, and they thy fouler grave;
Thou loath'd in their shame, they in thy pride:
The lesser thing should not the greater hide;
The thron steps not to the thicket shrub's foot,
But low shrubs wither at the cedar's root.

'So let thy thoughts, low vassals to thy state—
'No more,' quoth he; 'by heaven, I will not fear
Yield to my love; if not, enforced hate,
[thee: Instead of a cow tear thou to the base, tear thee:
That done, despitely I mean to bear thee
Unto the base bed of some rascal groom.
To be thy partner in this shameful doom.'

This said, he sets his foot upon the light,
Lear light and lust are deadly enemies;
Shame folded up in blind concealing night,
When most unseen, then most doth tyrannize.
The wolf hath seized his prey, the poor lamb cries;
Till with her own white fleece her voice control'd
Entombs her outcry in her lips sweet fold:

For with the nightly linen that she wears
He pens her pitious charmers in her head;
Cooling his hot face in the chastest tears
That ever modest eyes with sorrow shed.
O, that prone lust should stain so pure a bed!
The spots whereof could weeping purify,
Her tears should drop on them perpetually.

But she hath lost a dearer thing than life,
And he hath won what he would lose again:
This forced league doth force a further strife;
This momentary joy breeds months of pain;
This hot desire converts to cold disdain:
Pure Chastity is riled of her store,
And Lust, the thief, far poorer than before.

Look, as the full-fed bound or gorged hawk,
Unapt for tender smell or speedy flight,
Make slow pursuit, or altogether balk;
The prey wherein by nature they delight:
So surfeit-taking Tarquin fares this night:
His taste delicious, in digestion souring,
Devours his will, that lived by foul devouring.

O, deeper sin than bottomless conceit
Can comprehend in still imagination!
Drunkens Desire must vomit his receipt,
Ere he can see his own abomination.
While Lust is in his pride, no exclamation
Can curb his heat or rein his rash desire,
Till like a jade self-will himself doth tire.

And then with languid and lean discoulour'd cheek,
With heavy eye, knit brow, and strengthless pace,
Fecile Desire, all recreant, poor, and meek,
Like to a bankrupt beggar waifs his case;
The flesh being proud, Desire doth fight with Grace,
For there it revels; and when that decays,
The guilty rebel for remission prays.

So fares it with this faithful lord of Rome;
Who this accomplishment so hotly chas'd:
For now against himself he sounds this doom,
That through the length of times he stands dis-
Besides, his soul's fair temple is defaced; [graced:
To whose weak ruins muster troops of cares,
To ask the spotted princess how she fares.

She says, her subjects with foul insurrection
Have latt'rd down her consecrated wall,
And by their mortal fault brought in subjection
Her immortality, and made her thrall
To living death and pain perpetual:
Which in her prescience she controlled still,
But her foresight could not forestall their will.
Even in this thought through the dark night he
A captivo victor that hath lost in gain:
Scare that will, despite of care, remain;
Leaving his spoil perplex'd in greater pain.
She bears the load of lust he left behind,
And he the burden of a guilty mind.

He like a thievish dog creeps sadly thence;
She like a weariest lamb lies panting there;
He scowls and hates himself for his offence;
She, desperate, with her nails her flesh doth tear;
He faintly muses, sweating with guilty fear;
She stays, explaining on that fatal night;
He runs, and chides his vanish'd, loathed delight.

He thence departs a heavy convertible;
She there remains a hopeless castaway;
He in his speed looks for the morning light;
She prays she never may behold the day.

'For day,' quoth she, 'night's scapes doth open lay,
And my true eyes have never practised how
To cloak offences with a cunning brow.'

'They think not but that every eye can see
The same disgrace which they themselves behold;
And therefore would they still in darkness lie,
To have their unseen sin remain untold;
For they their guilt with weeping will unfold,
And grave, like water that doth eat in steel,
Upon my cheeks what helpless shame I feel.'

Here she exclaims against repose and rest,
And bids her eyes hereafter still be blind.
She wakes her heart by beating on her breast,
And bids it leep from thence, where it may find
Some purer chest to close so pure a mind.

Frantic with grief thus breathes she forth her spite
Against the unseen secrecy of night:

'O comfort-killing Night, image of hell!
Dim register and notary of shame!
Black stage for tragedies and murders fell!
Vast sin-concealing chaos! nurse of blame!
Blind mulled bawdy! dark harbour for defame!
Grim cave of death! whispering conspirator!

With close-tongued treason and the raverish!

'O hateful, vaporous, and foggy Night!
Since thou art guilty of my curseless crime,
Muster thy minds to meet the eastern light,
Make war against proportion'd course of time;
Or if thou wilt permit the sun to climb
His wonted height, yet ere he go to bed,
Knit poisonous clouds about his golden head.

'With rotten damps ravish the morning air;
Let their exhaled unwholesome breaths make sick
The life of purity, the supreme fair,
Ere he arrive his weary noon-tide prize;
And let thy misty vapours march so thick,
That in their smoky ranks his smoother'd light
May set at noon and make perpetual night.

'Were Tarquin Night, as he is but Night's child,
The silver-shining queen he would distress;
Her twinkling handmaidens too, by him defiled,
Through Night's black bosom should not pleeg again:
So should I have co-partners in my pain:
And fellowship in woes doth woes assuage,
As palmers' chat makes short their pilgrimage.

'Mingling my walk with tears, my grief with groans,
Poor wasting monuments of lasting means.

'O Night, thou furnace of foul-reeking smoke,
Let not the jealous Day behold that face
Which underneath thy black all-hiding cloak
Immodestly lies matric'd with disgrace!
Keep still possession of thy gloomy face,
That all the faults which in thy reign are made
May likewise be sepulchred in thy shade!

'Make me not object to the tell-tale Day!
The light will show, character'd by my brow,
The story of sweet chastity's decay,
The impious breach of holy wedlock vow;
Yea, the illiterate, that know not how
To cipher what is writ in learned books,
Will quote my losssome trespass in my looks.

'The nurse, to still her child, will tell my story,
And fright her crying babe with Tarquin's name:
The orator, to deck his oratory,
Will couple my reproach to Tarquin's shame;
Feast-finding minstrels, tuning my defence,
Will tie the hearers to attend each line,
How Tarquin wronged me, I Collatine.

'Let my good name, that senseless reputation,
For Collatine's dear love be kept unspotted:
If that be made a theme for dispute,
The branches of another root are rotted,
And undeserved reproach to him allotted
That is as clear from this attest of mine
As I, ere this, was pure to Collatine.

'O unseen shame! invisible disgrace!
O unfelt sore! crest-wounding, private scar!
Reproach is stamp'd in Collatine's face,
And Tarquin's eye may read the mot afar,
How he in peace is wounded, not in war,
Alas, how many hear such shameful blows,
Which not themselves, but he that gives them knows!

'I, if Collatine, thine honour lay in me,
From me by strong assault it is bereft.
My honey lost, and I, a drone-like bee,
Have no perfection of my summer left,
But robb'd and ransack'd by injurious theft:
In thy week have a wandering wasp hath crept,
And suck'd the honey which thy chaste bee kept.

'Yet am I guilty of thy honour's wrack;
Yet for thy honour did I entertain him:
Coming from thee, I could not put him back,
For it had been dishonour to disdain him:
Besides, of weariness he did complain him,
And talk'd of virtue: O unlook'd-for evil,
When virtue is profaned in such a devil!

'Why should the worm intrude the maiden bed?
Or hateful cuckoo hatch in sparrows' nests?
Or toads infect fair fountains with venom mud?
Or tyrant folly lurk in gentle breasts?
Or kings be breakers of their own behests?
But no perfection is so absolute,
That some impiety doth not pollute.

'The aged man that coopers-up his gold
Is plagued with cramps and gout and painful fits;
And scarce hath eyes his treasure to behold,
But like still-pining Tantalus he sits,
And useless burns the harvest of his wits;
Having no other pleasure of his gain
But torment that it cannot cure his pain.
LUCRECE.

O, hear me then, inquisitors, shifting Time!
Be guilty of my death, since of my crime.

Why hath thy servant, Opportunity,
Betray'd the hours thou gavest me to repose,
Cancell'd my fortunes, and enchained me
To endless date of never-ending woes?
Time's office is to fine the hate of foes;
To cat up errors by opinion bred,
Not spend the dowry of a lawful bed.

Time's glory is to calm contending kings,
To unmask falsehood and bring truth to light,
To stamp the seal of time in aged things,
To wake the morn and sentinel the night,
To wrong the wiser till he render right,
To ruin pride buildings with thy hours,
And swear with dust their glittering golden towers;

To fill with worm-holes stately monuments,
To feed oblivion with decay of things,
To blot old books and after their contents,
To pluck and quills from ancient ravens' wings,
To dry the old oak's sap and cherish springs,
To spoil antiquities of hammer'd steel,
And turn the giddy round of Fortune's wheel;

To show the beldam daughters of her daughter,
To make the child a man, the man a child,
To slay the tiger that doth live by slaughter,
To tame the unicorn and lion wild,
To mock the subtle in themselves beguil'd,
To cheer the ploughman with increaseful crops,
And waste huge stones with little water-drops.

Why work'st thou mischief in thy pilgrimage,
Unless thou couldst return to make amends?
One poor retiring minute in an age
Would purchase thee a thousand thousand friends,
Lending him wit that to bad debtors lends:
O, this dread night, wouldst thou one hour come back,
I could prevent this storm and shun thy wrack!

Thou ceaseless lackey to eternity,
With some miscroption cross Tarquin in his flight:
Devises extremes beyond extremity,
To make him curse this cursed criminal night:
Let ghastly shadows his lewd eyes affright;
And the dire thought of his committed evil:
Shape every bush a hideous shapeless devil.

Disturb his hours of rest with restless trances,
Afflict him in his bed with devilish groans;
Let there bechanche him pitiful miscarriages,
To make him moan; but pity not his moans:
Stone him with harden'd hearts, harder than stones;
And let mild women to him lose their mildness,
Wither to him than tigers in their wildness.

Let him have time to bear his curled hair,
Let him have time against himself to rave,
Let him have time of Time's help to despair,
Let him have time to live a loathed slave,
Let him have time a beggar's orts to crave,
And time to see one that by alms doth live
Disdain to him disdained scraps to give.

Let him have time to see his friends his foes,
And merry fools to mock at him resort;
Let him have time to mark how slow time goes
In time of sorrow, and how swift and short
His time of folly and his time of sport;
And ever let his unreckoning crime
Have time to wait th' abusing of his time.
LUCRECE.

O Time, thou tutor both to good and bad,
Teach me to curse him that thou taught'st this ill!
At his own shadow let the thief run mad,
Himself himself seek every hour till
Such wretched hands such wretched blood should
For who so base would such an office have
As slanderous death's man to so base a slave?

'The baser is he, coming from a king,
To shame his hope with deeds degenerate;
The mightier man, the mightier is the thing
That makes him honour'd, or begets him hate;
For greatest scandal waits on greatest state.
The moon being clouded presently is miss'd,
But little stars may hide them when they list.

'The crow may bathe his coal-black wings in mire,
And unperceived fly with the fish away;
But if the like snow-white swan desire,
The stain upon his silver down will stay.
Poor grooms are sightless night, kings glorious day:
Gnats are unnoticed where so'er they fly,
But eagles gazed upon with every eye.

Out, idle words, servants to shallow fools!
Unprofitable sounds, weak arbitrators!
Busy yourselves in skill-contending schools;
Debate where leisure serves with dull disputers;
To troubling clients be you meditators:
For me, I force not argument a straw.
Since that my case is past the help of law.

In vain I rail at Opportunity,
At Time, at Tarquin, and uncheerful Night;
In vain I cavil with mine infamy,
In vain I spur at my confirm'd despite:
This helpless smoke of words doth me no right.
The remedy indeed to do me good
Is to let forth my foul-defiled blood.

Poor hand, why quiver'st thou at this decree?
Honour thyself to rid me of this shame;
For if I die, my honour lives in thee;
But if I live, thou livest in my defame:
Since thou couldst not defend thy loyal dame,
And wast afraid to scratch her wicked foe,
Kill both thyself and her for yielding so,

This said, from her be-tumbled couch she starteth,
To find some desperate instrument of death:
But this no slaughter-house no tool imparteth
To make more vent for passage of her breath;
Which, thronging through her purple veins, vanishes
As smoke from Ætna, that in air consumes,
Or that which from discharged cannon fumes.

In vain,' quoth she, 'I live, and seek in vain
Some happy mean to end a hopeless life,
I fear'd by Tarquin's faction to be slain,
Yet for the self-same purpose seek a knife:
But when I fear'd I was a loyal wife
So am I now: O no, that cannot be;
Of that true type hath Tarquin rid me.

'0, that is gone for which I sought to live,
And therefore now I need not fear to die.
To clear this spot by death, at least I give
A badge of fame to slander's hivery;
A dying life to living infamy;
Poor helpless help, the treasure stolen away,
To burn the guiltless casket where it lay!

Well, well, dear Collatine, thou shalt not know
The stained taste of violated truth;
I will not wrong thy true affection so,
To slitter thee with an infringed oath;
This bastard graft shall never come to growth:

He shall not boast who did thy stock pollute
That thou art doting father of his fruit.

'Nor shall he smile at thee in secret thought,
Nor laugh with his companions at thy state;
But thou shalt know thy interest was not bought
Basely with gold, but stol'n from forth thy gate.
For me, I am the mistress of my fate,
And with my trespass never will dispense,
Till life to death acquit my forced offence.

'I will not poison thee with my attaint,
Nor fold my fault in cleanly-coin'd excuses;
My sable ground of sin I will not paint,
To hide the truth of this false night's abuses;
My tongue shall utter all mine eyes, like staves,
As from a mountainspring that feeds a dale,
Shall gush pure streams to purge my impure tale.'

By this, lamenting Philomel had ended
The well-tuned wrinkle of her nightly sorrow,
And solemn night with slow sad gait descended
To ugly hell; when, lo, the blushing morrow
Lends light to all fair eyes that light will borrow:
But cloudy Lucrece shames herself to see,
And therefore still in night would cloister'd be.

Revealing day through every cranney spies,
And seems to point her out where she sits weeping;
To whom she sobbing speaks: 'O eye of eyes,
Why pry'st thou through my window? leave thy peeping;
Mock with thy tickling beams eyes that are sleeping
Brand not my forehead with thy piercing light,
For day hath nought to do what's done by night.
Thus cavils she with every thing she sees;
True grief is fond and testy as a child,
Who wayward once, his mood with light agrees:
Old woes, not infant sorrows, bear them mild;
Contiinuance tames the one; the other wild,
Like an unpractised swimmer plunging still,
With too much labour drowns for want of skill.

So she, deep-drenched in a sea of care,
Holds disputations with each thing she views,
And to herself all sorrow doth compare;
No object but her passion's strength renewes;
And as one shifts, another straight ensues:
Sometime her grief is dumb and hath no words;
Sometimes 't is mad and too much talk affords.

The little birds that tune their morning's joy
Make her means mad with their sweet melody:
For mirth doth search the bottom of annoy;
Sad souls are slain in merry company;
Grief best is pleased with grief's society;
'Tis sorrow then is feelingly sufficed
When with like semblance it is sympathized.

'Tis double death to drown in ken of shore;
He ten times pines that pines beholding food;
To see the salve doth make the wound ache more;
Great grief grieves most at that would do it good;
Deep woes roll forward like a gentle flood,
Who, being stopp'd, the booming banks o'erflow;
Grief daliied with nor law nor limit knows.

'You mocking birds,' quoth she, 'your tunes entomb
Within your hollow-swelling feather'd breasts,
And in my hearing be you mute and dumb;
My restless discord loves no stops nor rests;
A woeful hostess brooks not merry guests;
Relish your nimble notes to pleasing ears;
Distress likes dumbs when time is kept with tears.
LUCRECE.

'Come, Philomel, that sing'st of ravishment,
Make thy sad grove in my dishevell'd hair,
As the dank earth weeps at thy languishment,
So let each sad strain will strain a tear,
And with deep grouns the dispasson bear:
For burden-wise I'll hunn on Tarquin still,
While thou on Tereus descant'st better skill.

'And whiles against a thorn thou bear'st thy part,
To keep belly sharp woes waking, wretched I,
To imitate thee well, against my heart
Will fix a sharp knife to affright mine eye;
Who, if it wink, shall thereon fall and die.
These means, as frets upon an instrument,
Shall tune our heart-strings to true languishment.

'And for, poor bird, thou sing'st not in the day,
As shanning any eye should thee behold,
Some dark deep desert, seated from the way,
That knows not parching heat nor freezing cold,
Will we find out; and there we will unfold
To creatures stern sad tunes, to change their kinds:
Since men prove beasts, let beasts bear gentle minds.

As the poor frightened deer, that stands at gaze,
Wildly determining which a way to fly
Or one encompass'd with a winding maze,
That cannot tread the way out readily;
So with herself is she in mutiny,
To live or die which of the twain were better,
When life is shamed, and death reproach'd debtor.

'To kill myself,' quoth she, 'alack, what were it,
But with my body my poor soul's pollution? They that lose half with greater patience bear it Than they whose whole is swallow'd in confusion. That mother tries a merciless conclusion Who, having two sweet babes, when death takes one.
Will slay the other and be nurse to none.

'My body or my soul, which was the dearer,
When the one pure, the other made divine? Whose love of either to myself was nearer, When both were kept for heaven and Collatine? Ay me! the bark peel'd from the lofty phe, His leaves will wither and his sap decay;
So must my soul, her bark being peel'd away.

'Her house is sack'd, her quiet interrupted,
Her mansion batter'd by the enemy;
Her sacred temple spotted, spoil'd, corrupted,
Grossly engirt with daring infamy; Then let it not be call'd impiety,
If in this blenish'd I fort I make some hole Through which I may convey this troubled soul.

'Yet die I will not till my Collatine
Have heard the cause of my untimely death; That he may vow, in that sad hour of mine, Revenge on him that made me stop my breath. My stained blood to Tarquin I'll bequeath,
Which by him taint'd shall for him be spent, And as his due writ in my testament.

'My honour I'll bequeath unto the knife
That wounds my body so dishonour'd.
'T is honour to deprive dishonour'd life; The one will live, the other being dead,
So of shame's ashes shall my fame be bred;
For in my death I murder shameful scorn: My shame so dead, mine honour is new-born.

'Dear lord of that dear jewel I have lost, What legacy shall I bequeath to thee? My resolution, love, shall be thy boast,
By whose example thou revenged must be. How Tarquin must be used, read it in me: Myself, thy friend, I'll keep thy self, thy foe, And for my sake serve thou false Tarquin so.

'This brief abridgment of my will I make: My soul and body to the skies and ground; My resolution, husband, do thou take: Might 'noble be the knife's that makes my wound; My shame be his that did my fame confound; And all my fame that lives disburst be to those that live, and think no shame of me.

'Thou, Collatine, shalt oversee this will: How was I overseen that thou shalt see it! My blood shall wash the slander of mine ill; My life's foul deed, my life's fair end shall free it. Faint not, faint heart, but stoutly say 'So be it:' Yield to my hand; my hand shall conquer thee; Thou dead, both die, and both shall victors be.'

This plot of death when sadly she had laid,
And wiped the brinish pearl from her bright eyes,
With untuned tongue she hoarsely calls her maid, Whose swift obedience to her mistress hies: For fleet-wing'd duty with thought's feathers flies. Poor Lucrece's looks unto her maid seem so
As winter meads when sun doth melt their snow.

Her mistress she doth give damere good-morrow, With soft-slow tongue, true mark of modesty, And sorts a sad look to her lady's sorrow; For why her face wore sorrow's liv'ry; But durst not ask of her audaciously Why her two suns were cloud-eclipsed so, Nor why her fair cheeks over-wash'd with we. But as the earth doth weep, the sun being set, Each flower moist'd like a melting eye; Even so the maid with swelling drops gan wet Her circled eye, enforced by sympathy Of those fair suns set in her mistress' sky, Who in a salt-waved ocean quench their light, Which makes the maid weep like the dewy night.

A pretty while these pretty creatures stand, Like ivory conduits coral cisterns filling: One justly weeps: the other takes in hand No cause, but company, of her drops spilling; Their gentle sex to weep are often willing; Grieving themselves to guess at others' smarts, And then they drown their eyes or break their hearts.

For men have marble, women waxen, minds, And therefore are they form'd as marble will: The weak oppress'd, the impression of strange kinds Is form'd in them by force, by trund, or skill: Then call them not the authors of their ill, No more than wax shall be accounted evil Wherein is stamp'd the semblance of a devil.

Their smoothness, like a goodly champaign plain, Lays open all the little worms that creep: In men, as in a rough-grown grove, remain Cave-keeping evils that obscurely sleep: Through crystal walls each little note will peep: Though men can cover crimes with bold stem looks, Poor women's faces are their own faults' books. No man inveigh against the wither'd flower, But chide rough winter that the flower hath kill'd: Not that devour'd, but that which doth devour, Is worthy blame. O, let it not be told Poor women's faults, that they are so fulfill'd

841
With men's abuses: those proud lords, to blame,
Make weak-made women tenants to their shame.

The precedent whereof in Lucrece view,
Assail'd by night with circumstances strong
Of present death, and shame that might ensue
By that her death, to her husband wrong;
Such danger to resistance did belong.
That day he fear through all her body spread;
And who cannot abuse a body dead?

By this, mild patience bid fair Lucrece speak
To the poor counterfeit of her complaining:
'My girl,' quothe she, 'on what occasion break
Those tears from thee, that down thy cheeks are raining?
If thou dost weep for grief of my sustaining,
Know, gentle wench, it small avails my mood:
If tears could help, mine own would do me good.

'But tell me, girl, when went — and there she stay'd
Till after a deep groan — Tarquin from hence?'
'Madam, ere I was up,' replied the maid,
'The more to blame my shaggard negligence;
Yet with the fault I thus far can dispense:
Myself was stirring ere the break of day;
And, ere I rose, was Tarquin gone away.

'But, lady, if your maid may be so bold,
She would request to know your heaviness.'
'O, peace!' quothe Lucrece: 'if it should be told,
The repetition cannot make it less;
For more it is than I can well express:
And that deep torture may be call'd a hell
When more is felt than one hath power to tell.'

'Go, get me hither paper, ink, and pen:
Yet save that labour, for I have them here.
While I say this, did one of husband's men
Bid thou be ready, by and by, to hear
A letter to my lord, my love, my dear;
Bid him with speed prepare to carry it;
The cause craves haste, and it will soon be writ.'

Her maid is gone, and she prepares to write,
First hovering o'er the paper with her quill:
 Conceit and grief an eager combat fight;
What wit sets down is blotted straight with will;
This is too curious-good, this blunt and ill:
Much like a press of people at a door,
Through her inventions, which shall go before.

At last she thus begins: 'Thou worthy lord
Of that unworthy wife that greteth thee.
Health to thy person! next vouchsafe t' afford —
If ever, love, thy Lucrece thou wilt see —
Some present speed to come and visit me.
So, I commend me from our house in grief:
My woes are tedious, though my words are brief.'

Here folds she up the tenour of her woe,
Her certain sorrow writ uncertainly.
By this short schedule Colombine may know
Her grief, but not her grief's true quality:
She dares not thereof make discovery,
Lest he should hold it her own gross abuse,
Ere she with blood had stain'd her stain'd excuse.

Besides, the life and feeling of her passion
She boards, to spend when she is by to hear her;
When sighs and groans and tears may grace the fashion
Of her disgrace, the better so to clear her
From that suspicion which the world might bear her.
To shun this blot, she would not blot the letter
With words, till action might become them better.

To see sad sights moves more than hear them told;
For then the eye interprets to the ear.
The heavy motion that it doth behold,
When every part a woro doth bear.
'Tis but a part of sorrow that we hear:
Deep sounds make lesser noise than shallow forts,
And sorrow ebbs, being blown with wind of words.

Her letter now is seal'd, and on it writ
'At Ardea my lord with more than haste.'
The post attends, and she delivers it,
Charging the sour-faced groom to lie as fast
As lagging fowls before the northern blast;
Speed more than speed but still and slow she deems:
Extremity still urges such extremes.

The homely villain court'sies to her low;
And, blushing on her, with a steadfast eye
Receives the scroll without or yea or no,
And forth with bashful innocence doth hie,
But they whose guilt within their bosoms lie
Imagine every eye beholds their blame;
For Lucrece thought he blushed to see her shame:

When, silly groom! God wot, it was defect
Of spirit, life, and bold audacity.
Such harmless creatures have a true respect
To talk in deeds, while others saucily
Promise more speed, but do it leisurely:
Even so this pattern of the worn-out age
Pawn'd honest looks, but laid no words to gage.

His kindled duty kindled her mistrust,
That two red fires in both their faces blazed;
She thought he blushed, as knowing Tarquin's lust,
And, blushing with him, wistly on him gazed;
Her curling eye did make him more amazed;
The more she saw the blood his cheeks replenish,
The more she thought he spied in her some blemish.

But long she thinks till he return again,
And yet the duteous vassal scarce is gone.
The weary time she cannot entertain,
For now 'tis stale to sigh, to weep, and groan:
So woe hath wearied woe, mean tired moan,
That she her plaints a little while doth stay,
Paying for means to mourn some newer way.

At last she calls to mind where hangs a piece
Of skilful painting, made for Priam's Troy;
Before the which is drawn the power of Greece,
For Helen's rape the city to destroy,
Threatening cloud kissing Lion with annoy;
Which the conceited painter drew so proud,
As heav'n, it seem'd, to kiss the turrets bow'd.

A thousand lamentable objects there,
In scorn of nature, art gave lifeless life:
Many a dry drop seem'd a weeping tear,
Shed for the slaughter'd husband by the wife:
The red blood reck'd, to show the painter's strife;
And dying eyes gleam'd forth their ashy lights,
Like dying coals burnt out in tedious nights.

There might you see the labouring pioneer
Beqrimed with sweat, and smeared all with dust;
And from the towers of Troy there would appear
The very eyes of men through loop-holes thrust,
Gazing upon the Greeks with little lust:
Such sweet observance in this work was had,
That one might see those far-off eyes look sad.

In great commanders grace and majesty
You might behold, triumphing in their faces;
LUCRECE.

In youth, quick bearing and dexterity; And here and there the painter interfaces Pale cowards, marching on with trembling paces; Which listless peasants did so well resemble. That one would swear he saw them quake and tremble.

In Ajax and Ulysses, O, what art Of physiognomy might one behold! The face of either ciphar'd other's heart; Their face their manners most expressly told; In Ajax' eyes blunt rage and rigour roll'd; But the mild glance that sly Ulysses lent Show'd deep regard and smiling government.

There pleading might you see grave Nestor stand, As 'twere encouraging the Greeks to fight; Making such sober action with his hand, That it beguiled attention, charm'd the sight: In speech, it seem'd, his beard, all silver white, Was d'up and down, and from his lips did fly Thin winding breath, which pur'd up to the sky. About him were a press of gaping faces, Which seem'd to swallow up his sound advice; All jointly listening, but with several graces, As if some mermaid did their ears entice. Some high, some low, the painter was so nice; The scalps of many, almost hid behind. To jump up higher seem'd, to mock the mind.

Here one man's hand lean'd on another's head, His nose being shadow'd by his neighbour's ear. Here one being throng'd bears back, all bold and red. Another smoother seem'd to pelt and swear; And in their rage such signs of rage they bear, As, but for loss of Nestor's golden words, It seem'd they would debate with angry swords.

For much imaginary work was there; Conceit deceitful, so compact, so kind; That for Achilles' image stood his spear, Gripped in an armed hand; himself, behind, Was left unseen, save to the eye of mind: A hand, a foot, a face, a leg, a head, Stood for the whole to be imagin'd.

And from the walls of strong besieged Troy When their brave hope, bold Hector, march'd to Stood many Trojan mothers, sharing joy and field, To see their youthful sons bright weapons wield; And to their hope they such odd action yield, That through their light joy seem'd to appear, Like bright things stain'd, a kind of heavy fear.

And from the strand of Dardan, where they fought, To Sinois' reedy banks the red blood ran, Whose waves to imitate the battle sought With swelling ridges: and their ranks began To break upon the galled shore, and than Retire again, till, meeting greater ranks. They join and shoot their foam at Sinois' banks.

To this well-paint'd piece is Lucrece come, To find a face where all distress is stell'd. Many she sees where cares have carv'd some, But none where all distress and dolour dwell'd, Till she despairing Hecuba beheld, Staring on Priam's wounds with her old eyes, Which bleeding under Pyrrhus' proud foot lies. In her the painter had anatomized Time's ruin, beauty's wreck, and grim care's reign: Her cheeks with chaps and wrinkles were disguis'd; Of what she was no semblance did remain: Her blue blood changed to black in every vein, Wanting the spring that those shrunk pipes had Show'd life imprison'd in a body dead. [fed.

On this sad shadow Lucrece spends her eyes, And shapes her sorrow to the belam'd woes, Who nothing wants to answer her but cries, And bitter words to ban her cruel foes; The painter was no god to lend her these; And therefore Lucrece swears he did her wrong, To give her so much grief and not a tongue.

'Poor instrument, quoth she, 'without a sound, I'll tune thy woes with my lamenting tongue; And drop sweet balm in Priam's painted wound, And call on Pyrrhus that hath done him wrong; And with my tears quench Troy that burns so long; And with my knife scratch out the angry eyes Of all the Greeks that are thine enemies.'

'Show me the trumpet that began this stir, That with my nalls her beauty I may tear; Thy heat of lust, fond Paris, did incur This head of wrath that burning Troy doth bear; Thy eye kindled the fire that burneth here; And here in Troy, for trepass of thine eye, The sire, the son, the dame, and daughter die. Why should the private pleasure of some one Become the public plague of many more? Let sin, alone committed, light alone Upon his head that hath transgressed so; Let guiltless souls be freed from guilty woe: For one's offence why should so many fall, To plague a private sin in general?'

'Lo, here weeps Icuba, here Priam dies. Here manly Hector faints, here Troilus swounds, Here friend by friend in bloody channel lies. And friend to friend gives unadvised woundes, And one man's lust these many lives confounds: Had doting Priam check'd his son's desire, Troy had been bright with fame and not with fire.'

Here feelingly she weeps Troy's painted woes: For sorrow, like a heavy-hanging bell, Once set on ringing, with his own weight goes; Then little stir with rings on the droll knell: So Lucrece, set a-work, sad tales doth tell Topencill'd pensive and colour'd sorrow; From her she lends them words, and she their looks doth borrow.

She throws her eyes about the pointing round, And whom she finds forlorn she doth lament. At last she sees a wretched image bound, That piteous looks to Phrygian sheff's lent; His face, though full of cares, yet show'd content; Onward to Troy with the blunt swains he goes, So mild, that Patience seem'd to scorn his woes.

In him the painter labour'd with his skill To hide deceit, and give the harmless show An humble gait, calm looks, eyes wailing still, A brow unbeat, that seem'd to welcome woe; Checks neither red nor pale, but mingled so That blushing red no guilty instance gave, Nor ash pale the fear that false hearts have. But, like a constant and confirmed devil, He entertain'd a show so seeming just, And therein so concealed his secret evil, That jealousy itself could not distrust False-creeping craft and perjury should trust Into so bright a day such black-faced storms, Or blot with hell-born sin such saint-like forms.

The well-skill'd workman this mild image drew For periured Simon, whose enchanting story
The credulous old Priam after slew;
Who "se words like wildfire burnt the shining glory
Of rich-built Ilion, that the skies were sorry,
And little stars shot from their fixed places,
When their glass fell wherein they view'd their faces.

This picture she advisedly perused,
And chid the painter for his wondrous skill,
Saying, some shape in Simon's was abused;
So fair a three to be disdained ill:
And still on him she gaz'd: and gazing still,
Such signs of truth in his plain face she spied,
That she concludes the picture was belied.

'lt cannot be,' quoth she, 'that so much guile —
She could have said 'can lurk in such a look.'
But Tarquin's shape came in her mind the while,
And from her tongue 'can lurk' from 'cannot' took:
'It cannot be' she in that sense forsook,
And turn'd it thus, 'It cannot be, I find,
But such a face should bear a wicked mind.'

'For even as subtle Simon here is painted,
So sober-sad, so weary, and so mild,
As if with grief or travail he had faint'd,
To me came Tarquin armed; so beguiled
With outward honesty, but yet defiled
With inward vice: as Priam him did cherish,
So did I Tarquin; so my Troy did perish.'

'Look, look, how listening Priam wets his eyes,
To see those borrow'd tears that Simon sheds!
Priam, why art thou old and yet not wise?
For every tear he falls a Trojan bleeds;
His eye bays fire, no water thence proceeds;
Those round clear pearls of his, that move thy pity,
Are balls of quenchless fire to burn thy city.

Such devils steal effects from lightless hell;
For Simon in his fire doth quake with cold,
And in that cold hot-burning fire doth dwell;
These contraries such mutual do hold,
Only to flatter fools and make them bold;
So Priam's trust false Simon's tears doth flatter,
That he finds means to burn his Troy with water.'

Here, all enraged, such passion her assail'd,
That patience is quite beaten from her breast.
She tears the senseless Simon with her nails,
Comparing him to that unhappy guest
Whose deed hath made herself herself detest:
At last she smilingly with this gives o'er;
'Fool, fool!' quoth she, 'his wounds will not be sord.

Thus ebbs and flows the current of her sorrow,
And time doth weary time with her complaining.
She looks for night, and then she longs for morrow,
And both she drinks too long with her remaining:
Short time seems long in sorrow's sharp sustaining:
Though woe be heavy, yet it seldom sleeps;
And they that watch see time how slow it creeps.

Which all this time hath oversipp'd her thought,
That she with painted images hath spent;
Being from the feeling of her own griefrought
By deep surprise of others' detriment:
Losing her woe in shows of discontent.
It caseth some, though none it ever cured,
To think their colour other's have enured.

But now the mindful messenger, come back,
Brings home his lord and other company;
Who finds his Lucrece clad in mourning black:
And round about her tear-distained eye
Blue circles stream'd, like rainbows in the sky:

These water-galls in her dim element
Foretell new storms to those already spent.

Which when her sad-beholding husband saw,
Anxiously in his sad face he stares.
Her eyes, though sad in tears, look'd red and raw,
Her lively colour kill'd with deadly cares.
He hath no power to ask her how she fares:
Both stood, like old acquaintance in a trance,
Met far from home, wondering each other's chance.

At last he takes her by the bloodless hand,
And thus begins: 'What uncoath ill event
Hath thee befell'n, that thou dost trembling stand?
Sweet love, what spite hath thy fair colour spent?
Why art thou thus attired in discontent?
I masks, dear dears, this moody heaviness,
And tell thy grief, that we may give redress.'

Three times with sighs she gives her sorrow fire,
Ere once she can discharge one word of woe:
At length address'd to answer his desire,
She modestly prepares to let them know
Her prosperity is in an envious prisoner's care:
While Collatine and his consorted lords
With sad attention long to hear her words.

And now this pale swan in her watery nest
Begins the sad dirge of her certain ending;
'Few may behold the image of this one
As I ever have beheld, so fair and pale;
Whose was the care and burden of the foe,
To know who won and lost each one.
Where no excuse can give the fault amending:
In me moe woes than words are now depending;
And my lament's would be drawn out too long,
To tell them all with one poor tired tongue.'

'Then be this all the task it hath to say
Dear husband, in the interest of thy bed
A stranger came, and on that pillow lay
Where thou wert wont to rest thy weary head;
And what wrong else may be imagined
By foul enforcement might be done to me,
From that, alas, thy Lucrece is not free.

'For in the dreadful dead of dark midnight,
With shining felion in my chamber came
A creeping creature, with a flaming light,
And softly cried - Awake, thou Roman dame,
And entertain my love: else last me shame
On thee and thine this night I will inflict,
If thou my love's desire do contradict.'

'The cosmic gird mine with thine influence,' quoth
"Unless thou woule thy liking to my will, [the,
I'll murder straight, and then I'll slaughter thee
And swear I found you where you did fulfill
The loathsome act of lust, and so did kill
The lechers in their deed: this act will be My fame and thy perpetual infamy.'

"With this, I did begin to start and cry;
And then against my heart he sets his sword,
Swearing, unless I took all patiently,
I should not live to speak another word;
So should my shame still rest upon record,
And never be forgot in mighty Rome.
Thine adulterate death of Lucrece and her grooms
'Mine enemy was strong, my poor self weak,
And far the weaker with so strong a fear:
My bloody judge forbade my tongue to speak;
No rightful plea might plead for justice there:
His scarlet lust came evidence to swear
That my poor beauty had purloin'd his eyes:
And when the judge is robb'd the prisoner dies.
"O, teach me how to make mine own excuse!
Or at the least this refuge let me find;"
LUCERE.

Though my gross blood be stain'd with this abuse, Immature and spotless is my mind; That was not forced; that never was inclined To accessory yeldings, but still pure: Dost in her poison'd closet yet endure.'

Lo, here, the hopeless merchant of this loss, With head declined, and voice daun'd up with woe, With sad set eyes, and wretched arms across, From lips new-waxen pale begins to blow The grief away, that stops his answer so: But, wretched as he is, he strives in vain: What he breathes out-his breath drinks up again.

As through an arch the violent roaring thine Outruns the eye that doth behold his haste, Yet in the eddy boundeth in his pride Back to the strait that forced him on so fast; In rage sent out, recall'd in rage, being past: Even so his sighs, his sorrows, make a saw, To push grief on, and back the same grief draw.

Which speechless woe of his poor she attendeth, And his untimely frenzy thus awaketh: 'Dear lord, thy sorrow to my sorrow lendeth Another power; no flood by raining slaketh, My woé too sensible thy passion maketh More feeling-painful: let it then suffice To draw one woe, one pair of weeping eyes.

And for my sake, when I might charm thee so For she that was thy Lucrece, now attend me: He suddenly revenged on my foe, Thine, mine, his own: suppose thou dost defend me From what is past: the help that thou shalt lend me Comes all too late, yet let the traitor die; For sparing justice feeds iniquity.

'But ere I name him, you faire lords,' quoth she, Speaking to those that came with Collatine, 'Shall plight your honourable faiths to me, With swift pursuit to venge this wrong of mine; For 't is a meritorious fair design To chase injustice with revengeful arms; Knights, by their oaths, should right poor ladies' harms.'

At this request, with noble disposition Each present lord began to promise aid, As bound in knighthood to her imposition, Longing to hear the hateful foe bewray'd. But she, that yet her sad task hath not said, The protestation stops. 'O speak,' quoth she, 'How may this forced stain be wiped from me?'

'What is the quality of mine offence, Being constrain'd with dreadful circumstance? May my pure mind with the foul act dispense? My low declined honour to advance? May any terms about me from this chance? The poison'd fountain clears itself again; And why not I from this compell'd stain?'

With this, they all at once began to say, Her body's stain her mind untainted clear; While with a joyless smile she turns away The face, that map which deep impression bears Of hard misfortune, carved in it with tears, 'No, no,' quoth she, 'no dame, hereafter living; By my excuse shall claim excuse's giving.'

Here with a sigh, as if her heart would break, She throws forth Tarquin's name: 'He, he,' she says, But more than 'he' her poor tongue could not speak; Till after many accents and delays, Untimely breathings, sick and short assays, She utters this, 'He, he, fair lords, it is he, That guides this hand to give this wound to me.'

Even here she sheathed in her helpless breast A harmful knife, that thence her soul unshackled: That blow did bail it from the deep unrest Of that polluted prison where it breathed: Her contrite sighs unto the clouds bequeath'd Her winged sprite, and through her wounds doth fly Life's lasting date from canceild's destiny.

Stone-still, astonish'd with this deadly deed, Stood Collatine and all his lordly crew; Till Lucrece's father, that beholds her bleed, Himself on her self-slaughter'd body throw; And from the purple fountain Brutus draw The murderous knife, and, as it left the place, Her blood, in poor revenge, held it in chase;

And bubbling from her breast, it doth divide In two slow rivers, that the crimson blood Circles her body in every side. Who, like a late-sack'd island, vastly stood Bare and unpeopled in this fearful flood. Some of her blood still pure and red remain'd, And some look'd black, and that false Tarquin stain'd.

About the mourning and congealed face Of that black blood a watery rigid goes, Which seems to weep upon the tainted place. And ever since, as plying Lucrece' woes. Corrupted blood some watery token shows; And blood untainted still doth red abide, Blushing at that which is so putrid.

'Daughter, dear daughter,' old Lucretius cries, 'That life was mine which thou hast here deprived. In the child the father's image lies. Where shall I live now Lucrece is unhived? Thou wast not to this end from me derived. If children pre-decease progenitors, We are their offspring, and they none of ours.

'Poor broken glass, I often did behold In thy sweet semblance may old age new born; But now that fresh fair mirror, dim and old, Shows me a bare-boned death by time outworn. O, from thy checks my image thou hast torn, And shiver'd all the beauty of my glass, That I no more can see what once I was!'

'O time, cease thou thy course and last no longer, If they surcease to be that should survive. Shall rotten death make conquest of the stronger And leave the faltering feeble souls alive? The old bees die, the young possess their hive; Then live, sweet Lucrece, live again and see Thy father die, and not thy father then!'

By this, starts Collatine as from a dream, And bids Lucretius give his sorrow place; And then in key-cold Lucrece' bleeding stream He falls, and bathes the pale fear in his face, And counterfeits to die with her a space; Till many shame him possess his breath And live to be revenged on her death.

The deep vexation of his inward soul Hath served a dumb arrest on his tongue: Who, mad that sorrow should his use control, Or keep him from heart-easing words so long, Begins to talk; but through his lips do throng Weak words, so thick come in his poor heart's aid, That no man could distinguish what he said.

845
Yet sometime ‘Tarquin’ was pronounced plain,
But through his teeth, as if the name he tore.
This windy tempest, till it blow up rain.
Held back his sorrow’s tide, to make it more;
At last it rains, and busy winds give over:
Then son and father weep with equal strife
Who should weep most, for daughter or for wife.

The one doth call her his, the other his,
Yet neither may possess the claim they lay.
The father says ‘She’s mine,’ ‘O, mine she is,’
Replies her husband: ‘do not take away
My sorrow’s interest; let no mourner say
He weeps for her, for she was only mine,
And only must be wail’d by Collatine.’

‘O,’ quoth Lucretius, ‘I did give that life
Which she too early and too late hath spill’d;
‘Woe, woe,’ quoth Collatine, ‘she was my wife,
I owed her, and ‘tis mine that she hath kill’d.’
‘My daughter’ and ‘my wife’ with clamours fill’d
The dispersed air, who, holding Lucrece’ life,
Answer’d their cries, ‘my daughter’ and ‘my wife.’

Brutus, who pluck’d the knife from Lucrece’ side,
Seeing such emulation in their woe,
Began to clothe his wit in state and pride,
Burying in Lucrece’ wound his folly’s show.
He with the Romans was esteemed so
As silly-jeering idiots are with kings,
For sportive words and uttering foolish things:

But now he throws that shallow habit by,
Wherein deep policy did him misplace;
And arm’d his long-blind wits advisedly,
To check the tears in Collatinus’ eyes.
‘Thou wronged lord of Rome,’ quoth he, ‘arise;
Let my unsounded self, supposed a fool,
Now set thy long-experienced wit to school.

Why, Collatine, is woe the cure for woe?
Do wounds help wounds, or grief help grievances?
Is it revenge to give thyself a blow
[deeds?]
For his foul act by whom thy fair wife bleeds?
Such childish humour from weak minds proceeds:
Thy wretched wife mistook the matter so.
To stay herself, that should have slain her foe.

Courteous Roman, do not steep thy heart
In such relenting dew of lamentations;
But kneel with me and help to bear thy part,
To rouse our Roman gods with invocations,
That they will suffer these abominations.
Since Rome herself in them doth stand disgraced,
By our strong arms from forth her fair streets chased.

Now, by the Capitol that we adore,
And by this chaste blood so unjustly stain’d,
By heaven’s fair sun that breeds the fair earth’s store,
By all our country rights in Rome maintain’d,
And by chaste Lucrece’ soul that late complain’d
Her wrongs to us, and by this bloody knife,
We will revenge the death of this true wife.

This said, he struck his hand upon his breast,
And kiss’d the fatal knife, to end his vow;
And to his protestation urged the rest,
Who, wondering at him, did his words allow;
Then jointly to the ground their knees they bow;
And that deep vow, which Brutus made before,
He doth again repeat, and that they swore.

When they had sworn to this advised doom,
They did conclude to bear dead Lucrece thence;
To show her bleeding body thorough Rome,
And so to publish Tarquin’s foul offence:
Which being done with speedy diligence,
The Romans plausibly did give consent
To Tarquin’s everlasting banishment.

I. From fairest creatures we desire increase,
That thereby beauty's rose might never die,
But as the riper should by time decease,
His tender heir might bear his memory:
But thou, contracted to thine own bright eyes,
Feed'st thy light's flame with self-substantial fuel,
Making a famine where abundance lies.
Thyself thy foe, to thy sweet self too cruel.
Thou art not prouerby: to be thyself
Within thine own bad husbandry:
And, tender churl, makest waste in niggarding.
Pity the world, or else this glutton be,
To eat the world's due, by the grave and thee.

II. When forty winters shall besiege thy brow,
And dig deep trenches in thy beauty's field,
Thy youth's proud livery or his ancient gown,
Will be a tatter'd coat, uncertain all:
That age's grey grace graces thou hast outlived,
Thou beauty's dye, a sullied canker bud,
Where all the treasure of thy lusty days,
To say, within thine own deep-sunken eyes,
Were an all-eating shame and thriftless praise.
How much much more praised hast thou been,
If thou couldst answer 'This fair child of mine
Shall sum my count and make my old excuse.'
Proving his beauty by succession thine.
This were to be new made when thou art old,
And see thy blood warm when thou feel'st it cold.

III. Look in thy glass, and tell the face thou viewest
Now is the time that face should form another;
Whose fresh repair if now thou not renewest,
Thou dost beguile the world, unless some mother,
For where is she so fair whose uneard womb
Disparts the tillage of thy husbandry?
Or who is he so fond will be the tomb
Of his self-love, to stop posterity?
Thou art thy mother's glass, and she in thee
Calls back the lovely April of her prime:
So thou through windows of thine age shalt see
Despite of wrinkles this thy golden time.
But if thou live, remember'd not to be,
Die single, and thine image dies with thee.

IV. Unthriftiness, why dost thou spend
Upon thyself thy beauty's legacy?
Nature's bequest gives nothing but doth lend,
And being frank she lends to those are free.
Then, beauteous niggard, why dost thou abuse
The bounteous largess given thee to give?
Profitless usurer, why dost thou use
So great a sum of suns, yet canst not live?
For having traffic with thyself alone,
Thou of thyself thy sweet self dost deceive.
Then how, when nature calls thee to be gone,
What acceptable audit canst thou leave?
Thy misused beauty must be tomb'd with thee,
Which, used, lives th' executor to be.

V. Those hours, that with gentle work did frame
The lovely gaze where every eye doth dwell,
Will play the tyrants to the very same
And that unfair which fairly doth excel;
For never-resting time leads summer on,
To hideous winter and confounds him there;
Sap check'd with frost and lusty leaves quite gone,
Beauty o'erthrown and bareness every where;
Then, were not summer's distillation left,
A liquid prisoner pent in walls of glass,
Beauty's effect with beauty were bereft,
Nor is it nor remembrance what it was:
But flowers distill'd, though they with winter meet,
Leese but their show; their substance still lives sweet.

VI. Then let not winter's ragged hand deface
In theedi thy summer, ere thou be distill'd;
Make sweet some vial; treasure thou some place
With beauty's treasure, ere it be self-killed.
That use is not forbidden usury
Which happies those that pay the willing loan;
That's for thyself to breed another thee,
Or ten times happier, be it ten for one;
Ten times thyself were happier than thou art,
If ten times ten times refigur'd thee;
Then what could death do, if thou shouldst depart,
Leaving thee living in posterity?
Be not self-will'd, for thou art much too fair
To be death's conquest and make worms thine heir.

VII.

Lo! in the orient when the gracious light
Lifts up his burning head, each under eye
Doth homage to his new-appearing sight,
Serving with looks his sacred majesty;
And having climb’d the steep-up heavenly hill,
Resembling strong youth in his middle age,
Yet mortal looks adore his beauty still,
Attending on his golden prismatic ray.
But when from highmost pitch, with weary ear,
Like feeble age, he recleth from the day,
The eyes, fore duteous, now converted are
From his low tract and look another way:
So thou, thyself out-going in thy noon,
Unlook’d on unless, then get a son.

VIII.

Music to hear, why hearest thou music sadly?
Sweets with sweets war not, joy delights in joy:
Why loveth thou that which thou receivest not gladly?
Or else receiveth with pleasure thine annoy?
If the true concord of well-toned sounds,
By unions married, do offend thine ear.
They do but sweettly chide thee, who confoundst
In singleness the parts that thou shouldst hear.
Mark how one string, sweet husband to another,
Strikes each in each by mutual ordering,
Resembling sire and child and happy mother
Who all in one, one pleasing note do sing:
Whose speechless song, being many, seeming one,
Sings this to thee: ‘thou single wilt prove none.’

IX.

Is it for fear to wet a widow’s eye
That thou consumest thyself in single life?
Ah! if thou issueless shall hap to die,
The world will wail thee, like a makeless wife;
The world will be thy widow and still weep
That thou no form of thee hast left behind,
When every private widow well may keep
By children’s eyes her husband’s shade in mind.
Look, what an unfrith in the world doth spend
Shifts but his place, for still the world enjoys it;
But beauty’s waste hath in the world an end,
And keep’d, the true, the false destroys it.
No love toward others in that bosom sits
That on himself such murderous shame commits.

X.

For shame! deny that thou hast loved to any,
Who for thyself art so unprovided.
Grant, if thou wilt, thou art beloved of many,
But that thou none loveth is most evident;
For thou art possess’d with murderers hate
That ‘gainst thyself thou stick’st not to conspire,
Seeking that beauty’s roof to ruin
Which to repair should be thy chief desire.
O, change thy thought, that I may change my mind!
Shall hate be fairer lodger than gentle love?
Be, as thy presence is, gracious and kind,
Or to thyself at least kind-hearted prove:
Make thee another self, for love of me,
That beauty still may live in thine or thee.

XI.

As fast as thou shalt wane, so fast thou growest
In one of thine, from that which thou departest;
And that fresh blood which youngly thou bestowest
Thou mayst call thine when thou from youth come.
Herein lives wisdom, beauty and increase; [verstest.
Without this, folly, age and cold decay;
If all were minded so, the times should cease
And threescore year would make the world away.
Let those whom Nature hath not made for store,
Harsh featureless and rude, barrenly perish:

Look, whom she best endow’d she gave the more:
Which bounteous gift thou shouldst in bounty cherish;
She carved thee for her seal, and meant thereby
Thou shouldst print more, not let that copy die.

XII.

When I do count the clock that tells the time,
And see the bracy day sink in hideous night;
When I behold the violet past prime,
And sable curls all silver’d o’er with white;
When lofty trees I see barren of leaves
Which erst from heat did canopy the herd,
And summer’s green all girded up in sheaves
Borne on the bier with white and bristly beard,
Then of thy beauty do I question make.
That thou among the wastes of time must go,
Since sweets and beauties do themselves forsake
And die as fast as they others grow; [fence
And nothing ‘gainst Time’s scythe can make des.
Save breed, to brave him when he taketh thee hence.

XIII.

O, that thou were yourself! but, love, you are
No longer yours than you yourself here live:
Against this coming end you should prepare,
And your sweet semblance to some other give.
So should that beauty in which you fairest hold in lease
Find no determination; then you were Yourself again after yourself’s decease,
When your sweet issue your sweet form should bear.
Who lets so fair a house fall to decay,
Which husbandry in honour might uphold
Against the stormy gusts of Winter’s day.
And barren rage of death’s eternal cold?
O, none but uninshts! Dear my love, you know
You had a father; let your son say so.

XIV.

Not from the stars do I my judgment pluck;
And yet methinks I have astronomy,
But not to tell of good or evil luck,
Of plagues, of deariaths, or seasons’ quality;
Nor can I fortune to brief minutes tell,
Pointing to each his thunder, rain and wind,
Or say with princes if it shall go well,
By eil or no, as the issue of them is:
But from thine eyes my knowledge I derive,
And, constant stars, in them I read such art
As truth and beauty shall together thrive,
If from thyself to store thou wouldst convert;
Or else of thee this I prognosticate:
Thy end is truth’s and beauty’s doom and date.

XV.

When I consider every thing that grows
Holds in perfection but a little moment,
That this huge stage presenteth nought but shows
Whereon the stars in secret influence comment;
When I perceive that men as plants increase,
Cheered and check’d even by the self-same sky,
Vain in their youthful sap, at height decrease,
And wear their brave state out of memory;
Then the conceit of this incessant stay
Sets you most rich in youth before my sight,
Where wasteful Time debating with Decay,
To change your day of youth to sullied night;
And all in war with Time for love of you,
As he takes from you, I engrave you new.

XVI.

But wherefore do not you a mightier way
Make war upon this bloody tyrant, Time?
And fortify yourself in your decay
With means more blessed than my barren rhyme?
Now stand you on the top of happy hours,
And many maiden gardens yet unset
SONNETS.

With virtuous wish would bear your living flowers, Much liker than your painted counterfeit: So should the flues of life that life repair, Which this, Time's pencil, or my pippin pen, Neither in inward worth nor outward fair, Can make you live yourself in eyes of men.

To give away yourself keeps yourself still, And you must live, drawn by your own sweet skill.

Who will believe my verse in time to come, If it were full'd with your most high deserts? Though yet, heaven knows, it is but as a tomb Which hides your life and shows not half your parts. If I could write the beauty of your eyes And in fresh numbers number all your graces, The page to come would say this poet lies; Such heavenly touches ne'er touch'd earthly faces.

So should my papers yellow'd with their age Be scorn'd like old men of less truth than tongue, And your true right be term'd a poet's rage And stretched metre of an antique song:

But were some child of yours alive that time, You should live twice; in it and in my rhyme.

Shall I compare thee to a summer's day? Thou art more lovely and more temperate: Rough winds do shake the darling buds of May, And summer's lease hath all too short a date: Sometime too hot the eye of heaven shines, And often is his gold complexion dimm'd; And every fair from fair sometime declines, By chance or nature's changing course outworn'd; But thy eternal summer shall not fade Nor lose possession of that fair thou owst; Nor shall Death brag thou wander'st in his shade, When in eternal lines to time thou growest: So long as men can breathe or eyes can see, So long lives this and this gives life to thee.

Devouring Time, blunt thou the lion's paws, And make the earth devour her own sweet brood, Pluck the keen teeth from the fierce tiger's jaws, And burn the long-lived phoenix in her blood; Make glad and sorry seasons as thou fleet'st, And do whate'er thou wilt, swift-footed Time, To the wide world and all her fading sweets; But I forbid thee one most heinous crime, O, carve not with thy hours my love's fair brow, Nor draw no lines there with thine antique pen; Him in thy course untainted do allow, For beauty's pattern to succeeding men.

Yet, do thy worst, old Time: despite thy wrong, My love shall in my verse ever live young.

A woman's face with Nature's own hand painted Hast thou, the master-mistress of my passion; A woman's gentle heart, but not accoutum'd With shifting change, as is false women's fashion; An eye more bright than theirs, less false in rolling, Gilding the object whereupon it gazeth: A man in hue, all 'hues' in his controlling, Which steals men's eyes and women's souls amazeth. And for a woman with that first created: Till Nature, as she wrought thee, tell a doting, And by addition of me thee defeated, By adding one thing to my purpose nothing. But since she prick'd thee out for women's pleasure, Mine be thy love and thy love's use be mine.

Who heaven itself for ornament doth use And every fair with his fair doth rehearse; Making a couplement of proud compare, With sun and moon, with earth and sea's rich gems, With April's first-born flowers, and all things rare That heaven's air in this huge mundane seems.

O, let me, true in love, but truly write, And then believe me, my love is as fair As my mother's child, though not so bright As those gold candles fix'd in heaven's air: Let them say more that like of hearsay well; I will not praise that purpose not to sell.

My glass shall not persuade me I am old, So long as youth and thou are of one date; But when the wise thou hast outlived I behold, Then look I death my days should expiate. For all that beauty that doth cover thee Is but the secoely raiment of my heart, Which in thy breast doth live, as thine in me: How can I then be elder than thou art? O, therefore, love, be of thyself so wary As I, nor for myself, but for thee will; Bearing thy love, which I will keep so chary As tender nurse her babe from faring ill. Presume not on thy heart when mine is slain; Thou gavest me thine, not to give back again.

As an unperfect actor on the stage Who with his fear is put besides his part, Or some fierce thing replete with too much rage, Whose strength's abundance weakens his own heart, So I, for fear of trust, forget to say The perfect cure of lovers' love's disease; And in mine own love's strength seem to decay, O'ercharg'd with burden of mine own love's might. O, let my books be then the eloquence And dumb presagers of my speaking breast, Who pleads for love and look for recompense More than that tongue that more hath more express'd.

O, learn to read what silent love hath writ: To hear with eyes belongs to love's fine wit.

Mine eye hath play'd the painter and hath stell'd Thy beauty's form in table of my heart; My body is the frame wherein 't is held, And perspective it is best painter's art. For through the painter must you see his skill, To find where your true image pictured lies; Which in my body's shape is hanging still, That hath his windows glaz'd with thine eyes. Now see what good turns eyes for eyes have done: Mine eyes have drawn thy shape, and thine for me Are windows to my breast, where-through the sun Delights to peep, to gaze therein on thee; Yet eyes this cunning want to grace their art: They draw but what they see, know not the heart.

Let those who are in favour with their stars Of public honour and proud titles boast, Whilst I, whom fortune of such triumph bars, Unlook'd for joy in that I honour most. Great princes' favourites their fair leaves spread But as the marigold at the sun's eye, And in themselves their pride lies buried, For from a crown they in their glory die. The painful warrior famoues for his fight After a thousand form'd, the victor bold Is from the book of honour razed quite, And all the rest forgot for which he toil'd; Then happy I, that love and am belove! Where I may not remove nor be removed.
SONNETS.

XXVI.

Lord of my love, to whom in vassalage
Thy merit hath my duty strongly knelt,
To thee I sent this written Augustage,
To witness duty, not to show my wit;
Duty so great, which wit so poor as mine
May make seem bare, in wanting words to show it,
But that I hope some good conceit of thine
In thy soul’s thought, all naked, will bestow it;
Thy whatsoever star that guides my moving
Points on me graciously with fair aspect
And puts apparel on my tatter’d loving.
To show me worthy of thy sweet respect;
Then may I dare to boast how I do love thee;
Till then not show my head where thou mayst prove me.

XXVII.

Weary with toil, I haste me to my bed,
The dear repose for limbs with travel tired;
But then begins a journey in my head,
To work my mind, when body’s work is expire’d;
For then my thoughts, from far where I abide,
Intend a zealous pilgrimage to thee,
And keep my drooping eyelids open wide,
Looking on darkness which the blind do see:
Save that my soul’s imaginative sight
Presents thy shadow to my sightless view,
Which, like a jewel hung in ghostly night,
Makes black night beautiful and her old face new.
Lo! thus, by day my limbs, by night my mind,
For thee and for myself no quiet find.

XXVIII.

How can I then return in happy plight,
That am debarr’d the benefit of rest?
When day’s oppression is not eased by night,
But day by night, and night by day, oppress’d?
And each, though enemies to either’s reign,
Do in consent shake hands to torture me;
The one by toil, the other to complain.
How far I toil, still farther off from thee,
And tell the day, to please him thou art bright
And dost him grace when clouds do blot the heaven;
So flatter I the swart-complexion’d night,
When sparkling stars twinkle not thou gild’st the even.
But day doth daily draw my sorrows longer
And night doth nightly make grief’s strength seem stronger.

XXIX.

When, in disgrace with fortune and men’s eyes,
I all alone beweep my outcast state
And trouble deaf heaven with my bootless cries
And look upon myself and curse my fate,
Wishing me like to one more rich in hope,
Featured like him, like him with friends press’d;
Desiring this man’s art and that man’s scope,
With what I most enjoy contented least;
Yet in these thoughts myself almost despising,
Haply I think on thee, and then my state
Like to the lark at break of day arising
From sullen earth, sings hymns at heaven’s gate;
For thy sweet love remember’d such wealth brings
That then I scorn to change my state with kings.

XXX.

When to the sessions of sweet silent thought
I summon up remembrance of things past,
I sigh the lack of many a thing I sought
And with old woe new wail my dear time’s waste;
The thoughts of love in such a company
Are not so Shot as when the poet’s eye
For precious friends hid in death’s dateless night,
And weep afresh love’s long-since cancell’d woe,
And moan the expense of many a vanished sight:
Then can I grieve at grievances foregone,
And heavily from woe to woe tell o’er
The sad account of fore-bemoaned moan,
Which I new pay as if it not paid before,
But if the while I think on thee, dear friend,
All losses are restored and sorrows end.

XXXI.

Thy bosom is endeared with all hearts,
Which I by lacking have supposed dead,
And there reigns love and all love’s loving parts,
And all those friends which I thought buried.
How many a holy and obsequious tear
Hath on my cheeks the sweetest seasons shed
As interest of the dead, which now appear
But things removed that hidden in thee lie!
Thou art the grave where buried love doth live,
Hung with the trophies of my loves gone over,
Who all their parts of me to thee did give;
That thou of now many is thine alone:
Their images I loved I view in thee,
And thou, all they, hast all the all of me.

XXXII.

If thou survive my well-contented day,
[cover,
When that clurl Death my bones with dust shall fill
And shalt by fortune once more re-survey
These poor rude lines of thy deceased lover,
Compare them with the bettering of the time,
And thou shalt see they be outstripp’d by every pen:
Reserve them for thy love, not for their rhyme,
Exceeding by the height of happier times.
O, than vouchsafe me but this loving thought:
‘Had my friend’s Muse grown with this growing age,
A dearer birth than this his love had brought,
To march in ranks of better equipage:
But since he died and poets he cloud do prove,
Theirs for their style I’ll read, his for his love.

XXXIII.

Full many a glorious morning have I seen
Platter the mountain-tops with sovereign eye,
Kissing with golden face the meadows green,
Gilding pale streams with heavenly alchemy;
Aron permit the basest clouds to ride
With ugly rack on his celestial face,
And from the forlorn world his visage hide,
Steeleling unseen to west with this disgrace:
Even so my sun one early morn did shine
With all-triumphant splendour on my brow;
But out, alas! he was but one hour mine:
The region cloud hath mask’d him from me now.
Yet him for this my love no whit disdaineth
Suns of the world may stain when heaven’s sun staineth.

XXXIV.

Why didst thou promise such a beauteous day
And make me travel forth with my cloak,
To let base clouds o’ertake me in my way,
Hiding thy bravery in their rotten smoke?
’Tis not enough that through the day thou break,
To dry the rain on my storm-ridden face,
For no man well of such a sullen can speak
That heals the wound and cures not the disgrace:
Nor can thy shame give physic to my grief;
Though thou repent, yet I have still the loss:
The offender’s sorrow leads but weak relief
To him that bears the strong offence’s cross.
Ah! but these tears are pearl which thy love sheds,
And they are rich and ransom all ill deeds.

XXXV.

No more be grieved at that which thou hast done:
Roses have thorns, and silver fountains mud;
Clouds and eclipses stain both moon and sun.
And hastsome canker lives in sweetest bud.
All men make faults, and even 1 in this,
Authorizing thy trespass with compare,
SONNETS.

Myself corrupting, salving thy amiss,
Excessing thy sins more than thy sins are;
For to thy sensual fault I bring in sense—
Thy adverse party is thy advocate—
And against myself a lawful plea commence;
Such civil war is in my love and hate
That I an necessary needs must be
To that sweet thief which sourly robs from me.

XXXVI.
Let me confess that we two must be twain,
Although our undivided love be one;
So shall those birds that do with me remain
Without thy help by me be borne alone.
In our two loves there is but one respect,
Though in our lives a separable spine,
Which though it alter not love’s sole effect,
Yet doth it steal sweet hours from love’s delight.
I may not evermore acknowledge thee,
Lesst my bewailed guilt should do thee shame,
Nor thou with public kindness honour me.
Unless thou take that honour from thy name:
But do not so; I love thee in such sort
As, thou being mine, mine is thy good report.

XXXVII.
As a decrepit father takes delight
To see his active child do deeds of youth,
So, I made lame by fortune’s dearest spite,
Take all my comfort of thy worth and truth.
For whether beauty, birth, or wealth, or wit,
Or any of these all, or all, or more,
Entitled in thy parts do crowned sit,
I make my love engraven to this store:
So then I am not lame, poor, nor despised,
Whilst that this shadow doth so much substance give
That in thy abundance am sufficed
And by a part of all thy glory live;
Look, what is best, that best I wish in thee;
This wish I have; then ten times happy me!

XXXVIII.
How can my Muse want subject to invent,
While thou dost breathe, that pour’st it into my verse
Thine own sweet argument, too excellent
For every vulgar paper to rehearse?
O, give thyself the thanks, if aught in me
Worthy perusal stand against thy sight;
For who’s so dumb that cannot write to thee,
When thou thyself dost give invention light?
Be thou the tenth Muse, ten times more in worth
Than those old ninfe which rymers invoke;
And he that calls on thee, let him bring forth
Eternal numbers to outlive long date.
If my slight Muse do please these curious days,
The pain be mine, but thine shall be the praise.

XXXIX.
O, how thy worth with manners may I sing,
When thou art all the better part of me?
What can mine own praise to mine own self bring?
And what is’t but mine own when I praise thee?
Even for this let us divided live,
And our dear love lose name of single one,
That by this separation I may give
That due to thee which thou deservest alone.
O absence, what a torment wouldst thou prove,
Were it not by sorrow long to have sweet leave
To entertain the time with thoughts of love,
Which time and thoughts so sweetly doth deceive,
And that thou teachest how to make one twain,
By praising him here who doth hence remain!

XL.
Take all my loves, my love, yea, take them all;
What last thou then more than thou hast before—
No love, my love, that thou mayst true love call;
All mine was thine before thou hadst this more.
Then if for my love thou my love receivest,
I cannot blame thee for my love thou usest;
But yet be blamed, if thou thyself deceivest
By wilful taste of what thyself refusest.
I do forgive thy robbery, gentle thief
Although thou stealst all my poverty;
And yet, love knows, it is a greater grief
To bear love’s wrong than hate’s known injury.
Lascivious grace, in whom all ill well shows,
Kill me with sipes; yet we must not be foes.

XLI.
Those petty wrongs that liberty commits,
When I am sometime absent from thy heart,
Thy beauty and thy years full well befits,
For still temptation follows where thou art.
Gentle thou art and therefore to be won.
Beauteous thou art, therefore to be assailed;
And when a woman woos, what woman’s son
Will sorely leave her till she have prevailed?
Ay me! but yet thou mightst my seat forsake,
And chide thy beauty and thy straying youth,
Who lend thee in their riot even there.
Where thou art forced to break a twofold truth,
Hers, by thy beauty tempting her to thee,
Thine, by thy beauty being false to me.

XLII.
That thou hast her, it is not all my grief,
And yet it may be said I loved her dearly;
That she hath thee, is of my wailing chief,
A loss in love that touches me more nearly.
Loving offenders, thus I will excuse ye;
Thou dost love her, because thou know’st I love her;
And for my sake even so doth she abuse me,
Suffering in me the wound that move her.
If I lose thee, my loss is my love’s gain,
And losing her, my friend hath found that loss;
Both find each other, and I lose both twain,
And both for my sake lay on me this cross;
But here’s the joy; my friend and I are one;
Sweet flattery! then she loves but me alone.

XLIII.
When most I wink, then do mine eyes best see,
For all the day they view things unrespected;
But when I sleep, in dreams they look on thee,
And dapple bright in dark desire directed.
Then thou, whose shadow shadows doth make bright,
How would thy shadow’s form form happy show
To the clear day with thy much clearer light,
When to unseeing eyes thy shade shines so?
How would, I say, mine eyes be blessed made
By looking on thee in the living day;
When in dead night thy fair imperfect shade
Through heavy sleep on sightless eyes doth stay!
All days are nights to see till I see thee,
And nights bright days when dreams do show thee

XLIV.
If the dull substance of my flesh were thought,
Injudicious distance should not stop my way;
For then despite of space I would be brought,
From limits far remote, where thou dost stay.
No matter then although my foot did stand
Upon the farthest earth removed from thee;
For nimble thought can jump both sea and land
As soon as think the place where he would be.
But, ah! thought kills me that I am not thought,
To leap large lengths of miles when thou art gone,
But that so much of earth and water wrought must attend time’s leisure with my moon,
Receiving nought by elements so slow
But heavy tears, badges of either’s woe.
SONNETS

XLIV. The other two, slight air and purging fire, Are both with thee, wherever I abide; The first my thought, the other my desire, These present-absent with swift motion slide. For where it listed might my soul amaze, And with my sense incredible make strong; That thoughts might with my wishes partake, My love, being made of four, with two alone Sinks down to death, oppress'd with melancholy; Until life's composition be recored By those swift messengers return'd from thee, Who even but now return'd again, assured Of thy fair health, recounting to me: This told, I joy; but then no longer glad, I send them back again and straight grow sad.

XLVI. Mine eye and heart are at a mortal war How to divide the conquest of thy sight; Mine eye my heart thy picture's sight would bar, My heart mine eye the freedom of that right. My heart doth plead that thou in him dost lie,— A closet never pierced with crystal eyes— But the defendant doth that plea deny And says in him thy fair appearance lies. To 'cide this title is impannead A quest of thoughts, all tenants to the heart, And by their verdict is determined The court doth render to thy heart's part: As thus; mine eye's due is thy outward grace, And my heart's right thy inward love of heart.

XLVII. Betwixt mine eye and heart a league is took, And each doth good turns now unto the other: When that mine eye is famish'd for a look, Or heart in love with sighs himself doth smother, With my love's picture then my eye doth feast And to the painted banquet bids my heart; Another time mine eye is my heart's guest And in his thoughts of love doth share a part: So, either by thy picture or my love, Thyself away art present still with me; For thou not farther than my thoughts canst move, And I am still with them and they with thee; Or, if they sleep, thy picture in my sight Awakes my heart to heart's and eye's delight.

XLVIII. How careful was I, when I took my way, Each trike under trust bars to thrust, That I might use it wisely and free From hands of falsehood, in sure wards of trust! But thou, to whom my jewels trikes are, Most worthy comfort, now my greatest grief, Thou, best of dearest and mine only care, Art left the prey of every vulgar thief. Thee have I not lock'd up in any chest, Save where thou art not, though I feel thou art, Within the gentle closure of my breast, From whence at pleasure thou mayst come and part; And even thence will they be stol'n, I fear, For truth proves thievish for a prize so dear.

XLIX. Against that time, if ever that time come, When I shall see thee frown on my defects, When as thy love hath cast his utmost sum, Call'd to that audit by advised respects; Against that time when thou shalt strangely pass And scarcely greet me with that sun, thine eye, When love, converted from the thing it was, Shall reasons find of settled gravity.— Against that time do I ensonce me here Within the guest-house of mine own desert, And this my hand against myself uprear, To guard the lawful reasons on thy part: To leave poor me thou hast the strength of laws, Since why to love I can allege no cause.

L. How heavy do I journey on the way, When what I seek, my weary travel's end, Doth foreshow by strange casest why I refuse to say 'Thus far the miles are measured from thy friend!' The beast that bears me, tired with my wo, Plods dully on, to bear that weight in me, As if by some instinct the wretch did know His rider loved not speed, being made from thee: The bloody spur cannot the neck incite On that sometimes anger thrusts into his hide; Which heavily he answers with a groan, More sharp to me than spurring to his side; For that same groan doth put this in my mind; My grief lies onward and my joy behind.

LI. Thus can my love excuse the slow offence Of my dull bener when from thee I speed; From where thou art why should I haste me thence? Till I return of meeting of pestilence. O, what excuse will my poor beast then find, When swift extremity can seem but slow? Then should I spurr, though mounted on the wind; In winged speed no motion shall I know: Then can no horse with my desire keep pace; Therefore I desire, of thy waste being made, Shall neigh not dull flesh— in his fiery race; But love, for love, thus shall excuse my jade; Since from thee going he went wilful-slow, Towards thee I'll run, and give him leave to go.

LII. So am I as the rich, whose blessed key Can bring him to his sweet up-locked treasure, The which he will not every hour survey, For blocking the fine point of self-love pleasure. Therefore are feasts so solemn and so rare, Since, seldom coming, in the long year set, Like stones of worth they thinly placed are, Or captain jewels in the carcanet. So is the time that keeps you as my chest, Or as the wardrobe which the robe doth hide, To make some special instant special blest, By new unfolding his impalpable pride. Blessed are you, whose worthiness gives scope, Being had, to triumph, being lack'd, to hope.

LIII. What is your substance, whereof are you made, That millions of strange shadows on you tend? Since ever one hath, every one, one shade, And you, but one, can every shadow lend. Describe Adonis, and the counterfeit Is poorly imitated after you: On Helen's cheek all art of beauty set, And your Grecian tires are painted new: Speak of the spring and woof of the year. The one doth shadow of your beauty show, The other as your bounty doth appear; And you in every blessed shape we know, In all external grace you have some part, But you like none, you none for constant heart.

LIV. O, how much more doth beauty beauteous seem By that sweet ornament which truth doth give! The rose looks fair, but fairer we it deem For that sweet colour which doth in it live. The canker-blooms have full as deep a dye As the perfumed tincture of the roses, Hung on such thorns and play as wantonly When summer's breath their masked hues discloses: But, for their virtue only is their show, They live unwoo'd and unrespected fade,
Sonnets.

Die to themselves. Sweet roses do not so:
Of their sweet deaths are sweetest-odours made:
And so of you, beauteous and lovely youth,
When that shall fade, my verse distills thy truth.

LV.

Not marble, nor the gilded monuments
Of princes, shall outlive this powerful rhyme;
But you shall shine more bright in these contents
Than unswept stone besmear'd with sluttish time.
When you shall be at the commands of your vassals,
And broil root out the work of masonry,
Nor Mars his sword nor war's quick fire shall burn
The living record of your memory.

*Gainst death and all-oblivious enmity
Shall you pace forth; your praise shall still find
Even in the eyes of all posterity
That wear this world out to the ending doom.
So, till the judgment that yourself arise,
You live in this, and dwell in lovers' eyes.

LVI.

Sweet love, renew thy force: be it not said
Thy edge should blunter be than appetite,
Which but to-day by feeding is allay'd,
To-morrow sharpen'd in his former might:
So, love, be thou; although to-day thou fill
Thy hungry eyes even till they sink with fullness,
To-morrow see again, and do not kill
The spirit of love with a perpetual dulness.

Let this sad interim like the ocean be
Which parts the shore, where two contracted new Come daily to the banks, that, when they see
Return of love, more blight may be the view;
Else call it winter, which being full of care
Makes summer's welcome thrice more wish'd, more rare.

LVII.

Being your slave, what should I do but tend
Upon the hours and times of your desire?
I have no precious time at all to spend,
Nor services to do, till you require.
Nor dare I chide the world-without-end hour
Whilst I, my sovereign, watch the clock for you,
Nor think the bitterness of absence sour,
When you have bid your servant once adieu;
Nor was I long in this jealous thought
Where you may be, or your affairs suppose,
But, like a sad slave, stay and think of nought
Save, where you are how happy you make those.
So true a fool is love that in your will,
Though you do any thing, he thinks no ill.

LVIII.

That god forbid that made me first your slave,
I should in thought control your times of pleasure.
Or at your hand the account of hours to crave,
Being your vassal, bound to stay your leisure!
Oh, let me be thy self-denying knight,
The imprision'd absence of your liberty:
And patience, tame to sufferance, bide each check,
Without accusing you of injury,
Be where you list, your charter is so strong
That you yourself may privilege your time
To what you will; to you it doth belong
Yourself to pardon of self-doing crime.
I am to wait, though waiting so be hell:
Not blame your pleasure, be it ill or well.

LIX.

If there be nothing new, but that which is Hath been before, how are our brains beguiled,
Which, labouring for invention, bear amiss
The second burden of a former child!
Oh, that record could with a backward look,
Even of five hundred courses of the sun,
Show me your image in some antique book,
Since mind at first in character was done!
That I might see what the old world could say
To this composed wonder of your frame:
Whether we are mended, or whether better they,
Or whether revolution be the same.
O, sure I am, the wits of former days
To subjects worse have given adorning praise.

LX.

Like as the waves make towards the pebbled shore,
So do our minutes hasten to their end;
Each changing place with that which goes before,
In sequent toll all forwards do contend.
Nativity, once in the main of light,
Travels to maturity, where being crown'd,
Crooked eclipes against his glory righ,
And Time that gave doth now his gift confound.
Time doth transfix the flourish set on youth
And dolves the parapet in beauty's brow,
Feeds on the rarities of nature's truth,
And nothing stands but for his scythe to mow;
And yet to times in hope my verse shall stand,
Praising thy worth, despite his cruel hand.

LXI.

Is it thy will thy image should keep open,
My heavy eyelids to the weary night?
If so, thou dost desire my shroud should be broken,
While shadows like to thee do mock my sight?
Is it thy spirit that thou send'st from thee
So far from home into my deeds to pry,
To find out shames and idle hours in me,
The scope and tenour of thy jealousy?
O, no! thy love, though much, is not so great:
It is my love that keeps me ever awake.
Mine own true love that doth my rest defeat,
To play the watchman ever for thy sake:
For thee watch I whilst thou dost wake elsewhere,
From me far off, with others all too near.

LXII.

Sin of self-love possesseth all mine eye
And all my soul and all my every part;
And for this sin there is no remedy,
It is so grounded inward in my heart.
Methinks no face so gracious is as mine,
Nor shape so true, nor form of such account;
And for myself mine own worth do define,
As I all other in all worths surmount.
But when my glass shows me myself indeed,
Beautied and chopped with tanned antiquity,
Mine own self-love quite contrary I read;
Self so self-loving were Iniquity.
'Tis thee, myself, that for myself I praise,
Painting my age with beauty of thy days.

LXII.

Against my love shall be, as I am now,
With Time's injuries and crush'd and o'erworn;
When hours have drain'd his blood and fill'd his brow
With lines and wrinkles; when his youthful morn
Hath travel'd on to age's steepy night,
And all those beauties whereof now he's king
Are vanishing or vanish'd out of sight,
Stealing away the treasure of his spring;
For such a time do I now fortify
Against confounding age's cruel knife,
That he shall never cut from memory
My sweet love's beauty, though my lover's life:
His beauty shall in these black lines be seen,
And they shall live, and in them still green.

LXIV.

When I have seen by Time's fell hand defaced
The rich proud cost of outworn buried age;
SONNETS.

When sometime lofty towers I see down-raised
And brass eternal slave to mortal rage;
When I have seen the hungry ocean gain
Advantage on the kingdom of the shore,
And the firm soil win of the watery main,
Innumerable roses lost their store;
When I have seen such interchange of state,
Or state itself confounded to decay;
Raim hath taught me thus to ruminate,
That Time will come and take my love away.
This thought is as a death, which cannot choose
But weep to have that which it fears to lose.

LXV.

Since brass, nor stone, nor earth, nor boundless sea,
But sad mortality o'ersways their power,
How with this rage shall beauty hold a plea,
Whose action is no stronger than a flower? O, how shall summer's honey breath hold out Against the weeful siege of battering days,
When rocks impregnable are not so stout,
Nor gates of steel so strong, but Time decays? O fearful meditation! where, ah, where, Shall Time's best jewel triumph? Time's own blood reald? Or what strong hand can hold his swift-foot back? Or who his spoil of beauty can forbid? O, none, unless this miracle have might,
That in black ink my love may still shine bright.

LXVI.

Tired with all these, for restful death I cry,
As, to behold desert a beggar born,
And needy trummed in jollity,
And purest faith unhappily forsworn,
And gallant honour shamefully misplaced,
And virtuous state in vices ill confin'd,
And right perfection wrongfully disgrac'd,
And strength by turning away disabled,
And art made tongue-tied by authority,
And folly doctor-like controlling skill,
And simple truth miscall'd simplicity,
And captive good attending captain ill:
Tired with all these, from these would I be gone,
Save that to die, I leave my love alone.

LXVII.

Ah! wherefore with infections should he live,
And with his presence grace impaire?
That sin by him advantage should achieve
And face itself with his society?
Why should false painting imitate his cheek
And steal dead seeing of his living hue?
Why should poor beauty indirectly seek Roses of shadow, since his rose is true?
Why should he live, now Nature bankrupt is,
Beggar'd of blood to blush through lively veins?
For she hath no exchequer now but his,
And, proud of many, lives upon his gains.
O, him she stores, to show what wealth she had
In days long since, before these last so bad.

LXVIII.

Thus is his cheek the map of days outworn,
When beauty lived and died as flowers do now,
Before these bastard signs of fair were born,
Or durst inhabit on a living brow;
Before the golden tresses of the dead,
The right of sepulchers, were shorn away,
To live a second life on second head;
Ere beauty's dead fleeces made another gay:
In him those holy antique hours are seen,
Without all ornament, itself and true,
Making no summer of another's green,
Robbing no old to dress his beauty new;
And him as for a map doth Nature store,
To show false Art what beauty was of yore.

LXIX.

Those parts of thee that the world's eye doth view
Want nothing that the thought of hearts can mend;
All tongues, the voice of souls, give thee that due,
Uttering bare truth, even so as foes commend.
Thy outward thus with outward paise is crown'd;
But those same tongues that give thee so thine own
In other accents do this paise confound
By seeing farther than the eye hath shown.
They look into the beauty of thy mind,
And there, I guess, they measure by thy deeds;
Then, charles, their thoughts, although their eyes were kind,
To thy fair flower add the rank smell of weeds:
But why thy odour matcheth not thy show.
The solve is this, that thou dost common grow.

LXX.

That thon art blamed shall not be thy defect,
For slander's mark was ever yet the fair;
The ornament of beauty is suspect,
A crow that flies in heaven's sweetest air.
So shun be good, slender doth not approve
Thy worth the greater, being of woe of Time;
For canker vice the sweetest buds doth love,
And thou presentst a pure sustained prime.
Thus last pass'd by the ambush of young days,
Neither assiduous nor victor being charged;
Yet this thy praise cannot be so thy praise,
To thee the envy evermore enlarged:
If some suspect of ill mask'd not thy show,
Then thou alone kingdoms of hearts shouldst owe.

LXXI.

No longer mourn for me when I am dead
Then shall you hear the surly sullen bell
Give warning to the world that I am fled
From this vile world, with vilpest worms to dwell:
Nay, if ye read this line, remember not
The hand that writ it; for I love you so
That in your sweet thoughts would be forgot
If thinking on me then should make you woe.
O, if, I say, you look upon this verse
When I perhaps compounded am with clay,
Do not so much as my poor name rehearse,
But let your love even with my life decay,
Lest the wise world should look into your moan
And mock you with me after I am gone.

LXXII.

O, lest the world should task you to recite
What merit lived in me, that you should love
After my death, dear love, forget me quite,
For you in me can nothing worthy prove;
Unless you would devise some virtuous lie,
To do more for me than mine own desert,
And hang more praise upon deceased I
Than nagard truth would willingly impart;
O, lest your true love may seem false in this,
That you for love speak well of me untrue,
My name be buried where my body is,
And live no more to shame nor me nor you.
For I am shamed by that which I bring forth,
And so should you, to love things nothing worth.

LXXIII.

That time of year thou mayst in me behold
When yellow leaves, or none, or few, do hang
Upon those boughs which shake against the cold,
 Bare ruined choirs, where late the sweet birds sang.
In me thou seest the twilight of such day
As after sunset faileth in the west.
Which by and by black night doth take away,
Death's second self, that seals up all in rest.
In me thou seest the glowing of such fire
That on the ashes of his youth doth lie,
Sonnets.

As the death-bed whereon it must expire
Consumed with that which it was nourish'd by.
This thou perceivest, which makes thy love more strong.
To love that well which thou must leave ere long.

LXIV.
But be contented: when that fell arrest
Without all bail shall carry me away,
My life hath in this line some interest,
Which for memorit still with thee shall stay.
When thou reviewest this, thou dost review
The very best way to consuetate to this:
The earth can have but earth, which is his due;
My spirit is thine, the better part of me:
So then thou hast but lost the dregs of life,
The prey of worms, my body being dead,
The coward conquest of a retch's, knife,
Too base of thee to be remembered.
The worth of that is that which it contains,
And that is this, and this with thee remains.

LXV.
So are you to my thoughts as food to life,
Or as sweet-season'd showers are to the ground;
And for the peace of you I hold such strife
As twixt a miser and his wealth is found;
Now proud as an enjoyer and anon
Doubting the itching age will steal his treasure,
Now counting best to be with you alone.
Then better'd that the world may see my pleasure;
Sometime all full with feasting on your sight
And by and by clean starved for a look;
Possessing or pursuing no delight,
Save what is had or must from you be took.
Thus do I pine and surfeit day by day,
Or glutting on all, or all away.

LXVI.
Why is my verse so barren of new pride,
So far from variation or quick change?
Why with the time do I not glance aside
To new-found methods and to compounds strange?
Why write I still all one, ever the same,
And keep invention in a noted weed,
That every word doth almost tell my name,
Showing their birth and where they did proceed?
O, know, sweet love, I always write of you,
And you and love are still my argument;
So all my best is dressing old words new,
Spending again what is already spent:
For as the sun is daily new and old,
So is my love still telling what is told.

LXVII.
Thy glass will show thee how thy beauties wear,
Thy dial how thy precious minutes waste;
The vacant leaves thy mind's imprint will bear,
And of this book this learning mayst thou taste,
The wrinkles which thy glass will truly show
Of mouth'd graves will give thee memory;
Thou by thy dial's shady steals mayst know
Time's thievish progress to eternity.
Look, what thy memory can not contain
Commit to these waste blanks, and thou shalt find
Those children nursed, deliver'd from thy brain,
To take a new acquaintance of thy mind.
Their offices, so oft as thou wilt look,
Shall proft thee and much enrich thy book.

LXVIII.
So oft have I invoked thee for my Muse,
And found such fair assistance in my verse,
As every alien pen hath got my use,
And my dull muse their poesy dispense.
Thine eyes that taught the dumb on high to sing,
And heavy ignorance aloft to fly,
Have added feathers to the learned's wing,
And given grace a double majesty.
Yet be most proud of that which I compile,
Whose influence in thine and born of thee:
In others' works thou dost but mend the style,
And arts with thy sweet graces grace be;
But thou art all my art and dost advance
As high as learning my rude ignorance.

LXIX.
Whilst I alone did call upon thy aid,
My verse alone had all thy gentle grace,
But now my gracious numbers are decay'd
And my sick Muse doth give another place.
I grant, sweet love, thy lovely argument
Deserves the travail of a wortlier pen,
Yet what of thee thy poet doth invent
He robs thee of and pays it thee again.
He leads thee virtue and he stole that word
From thy behaviour; beauty doth he give
And found it in thy check; he can afford
No praise to thee but what in thee doth live.
Then thank him not for that which he doth say,
Since what he owes thee thou thyself dost pay.

LXX.
O, how I faint when I of thee do write,
Knowing a better spirit doth use thy name,
And in the praise thereof spends all his might,
To make me tragical, speaking of thy fame!
But since thy worth, wide as the ocean is,
The humble as the proudest sail doth bear,
My saucy bark inferior far to his
On your broad main doth willfully appear.
Your shallowest help will hold me up at last,
Whilst lie upon your soundless deep doth ride;
Or, being wreck'd, I am a worthless boat,
He of tall building and of goodly pride:
Then if he thrive and I be cast away,
The worst was this; my love was my decay.

LXXI.
Or I shall live your epitaph to make,
Or you survive when I in earth am rotten;
From hence your memory death cannot take,
Although in me each part will be forgotten.
Your name from hence immortal life shall have,
Though I, once gone, to all the world must die:
My heart in earth can yield me but a common grave,
When you entomb'd in men's eyes shall lie.
Your monument shall be my gentle verse,
Which eyes yet not created shall o'er-read,
And tongues to be your being shall rehearse
When all the breather of this world are dead;
You still shall live—such virtue hath my pen—
Where breath most breathes, even in the mouths of men.

LXXII.
I grant thouwert not married to my Muse
And therefore mayst without attainatt o'erlook
The dedicated vows which writers use
Of their fair subject, blessing every book.
Thou art as fair in knowledge as in hue,
Finding thy worth a limit past my praise,
And therefore art enforced to seek anew
Some fresher stamp of the time-bettering days.
And do so, love; yet when they have devised
What strained touches rhetoric can lend,
Thou truly fair worth truly sympathized
In true plain words by thy true-telling friend;
And their gross painting might be better use
Where cheeks need blood; in thee it is abused.

LXXIII.
I never saw that you did painting need
And therefore to your fair no painting set:
LXXXV.

'Tis so, thou sayest; for whom making, not that but that, in reserve. Hearing was above. And that to myself I do, giving thee vantage, double-vantage me.

LXXXIV.

Who is it that says most? which can say more than this rich praise, that you alone are you? In whose confine immured is the store. Which should example where your equal grew. Lean penury within that pen doth dwell. That to his subject lends not some small glory; But he that writes of you, if he can tell That you are you, so dignifies his story. Let him but copy what in you is writ, Not making worse what nature made so clear, And such a copy show not so much wit, Making his style admired everywhere. You to your beauteous blessings add a curse, Being fond on praise, which makes your praises worse.

LXXXV.

My tongue-tied Muse in manners holds her still, While comments of your praise, richly compiled, Reserve their character with golden quill And precious phrase by all the Muses filed. I think good thoughts whilst other write good words, And like unletter'd clerk still cry 'Amen' To every lyric that able spirit affords In polish'd form of well-refined pen. Hearing you praised, I say 'T is so, 't is true,' And to the most of praise add something more; But that is in my thought, whose love to you, Though words come haphazard, holds his rank before. Then others for the breath of words respect, Me for my dumb thoughts, speaking in effect.

LXXXVI.

Was it the proud full sail of his great verse, Bound for the prize of all too precious you, That did my ripe thoughts in my brain inhearse. Making with me, when they tend to grow? Was it his spirit, by spirits taught to write Above a mortal pitch, that strick me dead? No, neither he, nor his companions by night Giving him aid, my verse astonished: He, nor that affable familiar glow Which nightly gulls him with intelligence, As victors of my silence cannot boast; I was not sick of any fear from thee: But when your countenance fill'd up his line, Then lack'd I matter; that enfeebled mine.

LXXXVII.

Farewell! thou art too dear for my possessing, And like enough thou know'st thy estimate; The charter of thy worth gives thee releasing; My bonds in thee are all determinate. For how do I hold thee but by thy granting? And for that riches where is my deserving? The cause of this fair gift in me is wanting, And so my patent back again is swerving. Thyself thou gavest, thy own worth then not knowing, Or me, to whom thou gavest it, else mistaking; So thy great gift, upon misquision growing, Comes home again, on better judgment making. Thus have I had thee, as a dream doth flatter, In sleep a king, but waking no such matter.

LXXXVIII.

When thou shalt be disposed to set me light And place my merit in the eye of scorn, Upon thy side against myself I'll light And prove thee virtuous, though thou art forsworn. With mine own weakness being best acquainted, Upon thy part I can set down a story Of faults conceal'd, wherein I am attainted, That thou in losing me shalt win much glory: And I by this will be a gainer too; For bearing all my loving thoughts on thee, The injuries that to myself I do, Doing thee vantage, double-vantage me. Such is my love, to thee I so belong, That for thy right myself will bear all wrong.

LXXXIX.

Say that thou didst for sake me for some fault, And I will comment upon that offence; Speak of my lameness, and I straight will halt, Against thy reasons making no defence. Then cannot, not, love, disgrace me half so ill, To set a form upon desired change. As I'll be my self disgrace thy will, I will acquaintance strange and look strange, Be absent from thy walks, and in my tongue Thy sweet beloved name no more shall dwell, Lest I, too much profane, should do it wrong And haply of our old acquaintance tell. For thee against myself I'll vow deceit, For I must ne'er love him whom thou dost hate.

XC.

Then hate me when thou wilt; if ever, now; Now, while the world is bent my deeds to cross, Join with the spite of fortune, make me bow, And do not drop in for an after-loss: Ah, do not, when my heart hath 'scaped this sorrow, Come in the rearward of a conquer'd woe; Give not a windy night a rainy morrow, To linger out a purpos'd overthrow. If thou wilt leave me, do not leave me last, When other petty griefs have done their spite, But in the onset come; so shall I taste At first the very worst of fortune's night, And other strains of woe, which now seem woeful, Compared with loss of thee will not seem so.

XCI.

Some glory in their birth, some in their skill, Some in their wealth, some in their bodies' force, Some in their garments, though new-fangled ill, Some in their hawks and hounds, some in their horse; And every humour hath his adjunct pleasure, Wherein it finds a joy above the rest: But these particulars are not my measure; All these I better in one general best. Thy love is better than high birth to me, Richer than wealth, ponder than garments' cost, Of more delight than hawks or horses be; And having thee, of all men's pride I boast: Wretched in this alone, that thou mayst take All this away and me most wretched make.

XCII.

But do thy worst to steal thyself away, For term of life then art assured mine, And life no longer than thy love will stay, For it depends upon that love of thine. Then need I not to fear the worst of wrongs, When in the least of them my life hath end. I see a better state to me belows Than that which on thy humour doth depend; Thou canst not vex me with inconstant mind, Since that my life on thy revolt doth lie.
SONNETS.

O, what a happy title do I find,
Happy to have thy love, happy to die!
But what's so blessed-fair that fears no blot?
Thou mayst be false, and yet I know it not.

XIII.

So shall I live, supposing thou art true,
Like a deceived husband; so love's face
May still seem love to me, though alter'd new;
Thy looks with me, thy heart in other place;
For there can live no hatred in thine eye,
Therefore in that I cannot know thy change,
In many's looks the false heart's history
Is writ in moods and frowns and wrinkles strange,
But heaven in thy creation did decree
That in thy face sweet love should ever dwell;
What'ere thy thoughts or thy heart's workings be,
Thy looks should nothing thence but sweetness tell,

How like Eve's apple doth thy beauty grow,
If thy sweet virtue answer not thy show!

XCV.

They that have power to hurt and will do none,
That do not do the thing they most do show,
Who, moving others, are themselves as stone,
Unmoved, cold, and to temptation slow,
They rightly do inherit heaven's graces
And husband nature's riches from expense;
They are the lords and owners of their faces,
Others but stewards of their excellence.

The summer's flower is to the summer sweet,
Though to itself it only live and die,
But if that flower with base infection meet,
The basest weed outbraves his dignity;
For sweetest things turn sourest by their deeds;
Lilies that fester smell far worse than weeds.

XCVI.

How sweet and lovely dost thou make the shame
Which, like a canker in the fragrant rose,
Doth spot the beauty of thy budding name!
O, in what sweet dost thou thy sins enclose?
That tongue that tells the story of thy days,
Making lascivious comments on thy sport,
Cannot dispaise but in a kind of praise;
Naming thy name blesses an ill report.
O, what a mansion have those vices got
Which for their habitation chose out thee,
Where beauty's veil doth ever blight every blot,
And all things turn to fair that eyes can see!
Take heed, dear heart, of this large privilege;
The hardest knife ill-used doth lose his edge.

XCVII.

Some say thy fault is youth, some wantonness;
Some say thy grace is youth and gentle sport;
Both grace and faults are loved of more and less;
Thou mak'st faults graces that to thee resort.

As on the finger of a throne'd queen
The basest jewel will be well esteem'd,
So in another's eye that in thee are seen.
To truths translated and for true things deem'd,
How many lambs might the siren wolf betray,
If like a lamb he could his looks translate!
How many gaziers mightst thou lead away,
If thou wouldst use the strength of all thy state!
But do thou not; I love thee in such sort
As, thou being mine, mine is thy good report.

XCVIII.

Bearing the wanton burden of the prime,
Like widow'd wombs after their lords' decease;
Yet this abundant issue seem'd to me
But hope of orphans and unfather'd fruit;
For summer and his pleasures wait on thee,
And, though thy way, the mead be bare;
Or, if they sing, 'tis with so droll a cheer
That leaves look pale, dreading the winter's near.

XCVII.

From you have I been absent in the spring,
When proud-pied April dress'd in all his trim
With mirth all bent to put a spirit of youth in every thing,
That heavy Saturn laugh'd and leapt with him.
Yet nor the lays of birds nor the sweet smell
Of different flowers in odour and in hue
Could make me any summer's story tell,

Grew;

Or from their proud lap pluck them where they nor did wonder at the lily's white,
Nor praise the deep vernilion in the rose;
They were but sweet, but figures of delight,
Drawn after you, you pattern of all these,
Yet seem'd it winter still, and, you away,

And with your shadow I with these did play:

XCVII.

The forward violet thus did I chide:

[smells,
Sweet thief, whence didst thou steal thy sweet
That not from my love's breath? The purple pride
Which on thy soft cheek for complexion dwells
In my love's veins thou hast too grossly dyed.
The lily I condemned for thy hand,
And buds of marigolds had stoll'n thy hair;
The roses fearfully on thorns did stand,
One blushing shame, another white despair;
A third, nor red nor white, had stoll'n of both
And to his robbery had stoll'n thy breath;
But, for his theft, in pride of all his growth
A vengeful canker eat him up to death.

More flowers I noted, yet none could see
But sweet or colour it had stoll'n from thee.

C.

Where art thou, Muse, that thou forget'st so long
To speak of that which gives thee all thy might?
Spend'st thou thy fury on some worthless song,
Darkening thy power to lend base subjects light?
Return, forgetful Muse, and straight redeem
In gentle numbers time so idly spent;
Sing to the ear that doth thy lays esteem
And gives thy pen both skill and argument.
Rise, resty Muse, my love's sweet face survey,
If Time have any wrinkle graven there;
If any, be a satire to decay,
And make Time's spoils despised every where,
Give my love time faster than Time wastes life;
So thou prevent'st his scythe and crooked knife.

CII.

O truant Muse, what shall be thy amends
For thy neglect of truth in beauty dyed?
Both truth and beauty love whose love depends;
So dost thou too, and therein dignified.
Make answer, Muse: wilt thou not happily say
'Truth needs no colour, with his colour fix'd;
Beauty no pencil, beauty's truth to lay;
But best is best, if never intermix'd?'
Because he needs no praise, wilt thou be dumb?
Excuse not silence so; for 'tis lies in thee
To make him much outlive a gilted tomb,
And to be praised of ages yet to be.
Then do thy office, Muse; I teach thee how
To make him seem long hence as he shows now.

CIII.

My love is strengthen'd, though more weak in seem-
I love not less, though less the show appear: [ing;
SONNETS.

That love is merchandized whose rich esteeming
The owner's tongue doth publish every where.
Our love was new and then but in the spring
When I was wont to greet it with my lays,
As Phoebus in summer's front doth sing
And shaw's true music like a thing divine:
Not that the summer is less pleasant now
Than when her mournful hymns did hush the night,
But that wild music burtheneth every bough
And sweets grown common lose their dear delight.
Therefore like her I sometime hold thy tongue,
Because I would not dull you with my song.

CIII.

Alack, what poverty my Muse brings forth,
That having such a scope to show her pride
The argument all here is of more worth
Than when it hath my added praise beside!
O, blame me not, if I no more can write!
Look in your glass, and there appears a face
That overgoes my blunt invention quite,
Dulling my lines and doing me disgrace.
Were it not shifflil then, striving to mend,
To mar the subject that ere was well?
For to no other pass my verses tend
Than of your graces and your gifts to tell;
And more, much more, than in my verse can sit
Your own glass shows you when you look in it.

CIV.

To me, fair friend, you never can be old,
For as you were when first your eye I eyed,
Such seems your beauty still. Three winters cold
Have from the forests shook three summers' pride,
Three beauteous springs to yellow autumn turn'd
In process of the seasons have I seen,
Three April perfumes in three hot Junes burn'd,
Since first I saw you fresh, which yet are green.
Ah! yet doth beauty, like a dial-band,
Seal from his figure and no pace perceived;
So your sweet line, which methinks still doth stand,
Hath motion and mine eye may be deceived;
For fear of which, hear this, thou age unbred!
Ere you were born was beauty's summer dead.

CV.

Let not my love be call'd idolatry,
Nor my beloved an idol show,
Since all alike my songs and praises be
To one, of one, still such, and ever so,
Kind is my love to-day, to-morrow kind,
Still constant in a wonderous excellence;
Therefore my verse to constancy confined,
One thing expressing, leaves out diversity.
'Fair, kind, and true' is all my argument,
'Fair, kind, and true' varying to other words;
And in this change is my invention spent;
Three themes in one, which wanders scope affords.
'Fair, kind, and true,' have often lived alone,
Which three till now never kept sent in one.

CVI.

When in the chronicle of wasted time
I see descriptions of the fairest sights,
And beauty making beautiful old rhyme
In praise of ladies dead and lovely knights,
Then, in the lazon of sweet beauty's best,
Of hand, of foot, of lip, of eye, of brow,
I see their antique pen would have express'd
Even such a beauty as you master now.
So all their praises are but prophecies
Of this our time, all you presaging;
And, for they look'd but with divining eyes,
They had not skill enough your worth to sing:
For we, which now behold these present days,
Have eyes to wonder, but lack tongues to praise.

CVII.

Not mine own fears, nor the prophetic soul
Of the wide world dreaming on things to come,
Can yet the lease of my true love control,
Supposing as forfeit to an unkind doom,
The mortal moon hath her eclipse endured.
And the sad angels mock their own presage;
Uncertainties now crown themselves assured
And peace proclaims olives of endless age.
Now with the drops of this most balmy time
My love looks fresh, and Death to me subscribes,
Since, spire of him, I'll live in this poor rhyme,
While he insults o'er dull and speechless tribes;
And thou in this shalt find thy monument.

When tyrants' crests and tombs of brass are spent.

CVIII.

What's in the brain that ink may character
Which hath not figured to thee my true spirit?
What's new to speak, what new to register,
That may express my love or thy dear merit?
Nothing, sweet boy; but yet, like prayers divine,
I must each day say o'er the very same.
Counting no old thing old, thou mine, I thine,
Even as when first I hollow'd thy fair name.
So that eternal love in love's fresh case
Weighs not the dust and injury of age,
Nor gives to necessary wrinkles place,
But makes antiquity for age his page.
Finding the first cement of love there bred
Where time and outward form would show it dead.

CIX.

O, never say that I was false of heart,
Though absence seem'd my fable to qualify.
As easy might I from myself depart
As from my soul, which in thy breast doth lie:
That is my home of love: if I have ranged,
Like him that travels I return again,
Just to the time, not with the time exchanged,
So that myself bring water for my stain.
Never believe, though in my nature reign'd
All frailties that besiege all kinds of blood,
That it could so preposterosely be stain'd,
To leave for nothing all thy sum of good;
For nothing this wide universe I call,
Save thou, my rose; in it thou art my all.

CX.

Alas, 'tis true I have gone here and there
And made myself a motley to the view,
Gored mine own thoughts, sold cheap what is most dear,
Made old offences of affections new;
Most true it is that I have look'd on truth
Askance and strangely: but, by all above,
These blenches gave my heart another youth,
And worse essays proved thee my best of love.
Now all is done, have what shall have no end?
Mine appetite I never more will grind
On newer proof, to try an older friend,
A god in love, to whom I am confined.
Then give me welcome, next my heaven the best,
Even to thy pure and most most loving breast.

CXI.

O, for my sake do you with Fortune chide,
The guilty goddess of my harmful deeds,
That did not better for my life provide
Than public means which public manners breeds.
Thence comes it that my name receives a brand,
And almost every privy thought on men:
To what it works in, like the dyer's hand:
Pity me then and wish I were renew'd;
Whilst, like a willing patient, I will drink
Potions of cisel 'gainst my strong infection;
SONNETS.

No bitterness that I will bitter think,
Nor double penance, to correct correction.
Pity me then, dear friend, and I assure ye
Even that your pity is enough to cure me.

CXXI.

Your love and pity doth the impression fill
Which vulgar scandal stamp’d upon my brow;
For what care I who calls me well or ill,
So you o’er-green my bad, my good allow?
Your are as all the world, and I must strive
To know my shames and praises from your tongue;
None dear to me, nor I to none alive,
That my steel’d sense or changes right or wrong.
In so profound abyss I throw all care
Of others’ voices, that my adder’s sense
To critic and to flatterer stopp’d are.
Mark how with my neglect I too dispense;
You are so strongly in my purpose bred
That all the world besides methinks are dead.

CXXII.

Since I left you, mine eye is in my mind;
And that which governs me to go about
Doth part his function and is partly blind,
Seems seeing, but effectually is blind.
For it no form delivers to the heart
Of bird, of flower, or shape, which it doth latch;
Of his quick objects hath the mind no part,
Nor his own vision holds what it doth catch;
For if it see the ne’er greas’d gentler sight,
The most sweet favour or deform’d st creature,
The mountain or the sea, the day or night,
The crow or dove, it shapes them to your feature;
Incapable of more, replicate with you.
My most true mind thus makes mine eye untrue.

CXXIII.

Or whether doth my mind, being crown’d with you,
Drink up the monarch’s plague, this flattery?
Or whether shall I say, mine eye saith true,
And that your love taught it this alchemy,
To make of monsters and things indigist
Such cherubins as your sweet self resemble,
Creating every bad a perfect best,
As fast as objects to his beams assemble?
O, ’tis the first; ’tis flattery in my seeing,
And my great mind most kindly drinks it up;
Mine eye well knows what with his gust is greeing,
And to his palate doth paste like the cup;
If it be poison’d, ’tis the lesser sin
That mine eye loves it and doth first begin.

CXXIV.

Those lines that I before have writ do lie,
Even those that said I could not love you dearer;
Yet now my judgment knew no reason why
My most full flame should afterwards burn clearer.
But reckoning time, whose million’d accidents
Creep in ’twixt vows and change decrees of kings,
Tam sacred beauty, blunt the sharpest intents,
Divern’d wrong minds to the course of altering things:
Alas, why, fearing of time’s tyranny,
Might I not then say: Now I love you best,
When I was certain o’er incertaint,
Crowning the present, doubling of the rest?
Love is a bane: then might I not so say so?
To give full growth to that which still doth grow?

CXXV.

Let me not to the marriage of true minds
Admit impediments. Love is not love
Which alters when it alteration finds,
Or bends with the remover to remove:
O, no! it is an ever-fixed mark
That looks on tempests and is never shaken;
It is the star to every wandering bark,
Whose worth’s unknown, although his height be taken.
Love’s not Time’s fool, though rosy lips and cheeks
Within his bending sickle’s compass come;
Love alters not with his brief hours and weeks,
But bears it out even to the edge of doom.
If this be error and upon me proved,
I never writ, nor no man ever loved.

CXXVI.

Accuse me thus; that I have scanted all
Wherein I should your great-deserts repay,
Forgot upon your dearest love to call,
Whereto all bonds do tie me day by day;
That I have frequent been with unknown minds
And given to time your own dear-purchased right;
That I have hoisted sail to all the winds
Which should transport me farthest from your sight.
Book both my willfulness and errors down
And on just proof surmise accumulate;
Bring me within the level of your frown,
But shoot not at me in your waken’d hate;
Since my appeal says I did strive to prove
The constancy and virtue of your love.

CXXVII.

Like as to make our appetites more keen,
With eager compounds we our palate urge,
As, to prevent our maladies unseen,
Of which though often we have cure,
Even so, being full of your ne’er-cloying sweetness,
To bitter sauces did I frame my feeding
And, sick of well, found a kind of meetness
To be diseased ere that there was true need.
Thus policy in love, to anticipate
The ills that were not, grew to faults assured
And brought to medicine a healthful state
Which, rank of goodness, would by ill be cured:
But thence I learn, and find the lesson true,
Drugs poison him that so fell sick of you.

CXXVIII.

What potions have I drunk of Siren tears,
Distill’d from timbecks foal as hell within,
Applying fears to hopes and hopes to fears,
Still losing when I saw myself to win!
What wretched errors hath my heart committed,
Whilst it hath thought itself so blessed never!
How have mine eyes so many of their spheres been fitted
In the distraction of this maddening fever!
O benefit of ill! now I find true
That better is by evil still made better;
And ruin’d love, when it is built anew,
Grows fairer than at first, more strong, far greater.
So I return trampled many a contest
And gain by ill thrice more than I have spent.

CXXIX.

That you were once unkind befriended me now,
And for that sorrow which I then did feel
Needs must I under my transgression bow,
Unless my nerves were brass or hammer’d steel.
For if you were by myankindness shaken
As I by yours, you ‘ve pass’d a hell of time,
And I, a tyrant, have no leisure taken
To weigh how once I suffer’d in your crime.
That our night of woe might have remember’d
My deepest sense, how hard true sorrow hits,
And soon to you, as you to me, then tender’d
The humble salve which wounded bosoms fits!
But that your trespass now becomes a fee;
Mine ransoms yours, and yours must ransom me.

CXXX.

'Tis better to be vile than vile esteem’d,
When not to be receive reproach of being,
And the just pleasure lost which is so deem'd
Not by our feeling but by others' seeing;
For why should others' false adulator eyes
Give salutation to my sportive blood?
Or on my faults the future tales base?
Which in their minds count what I think good?
No, I am that I am, and they that level
At my abuses reckon up their own:
I may be straight, though they themselves be beaved;
By their rank thoughts my deeds must not be shown;
Unless this general evil they maintain,
All men are bad, and in their basness reign.

Thy gift, thy tables, are within my brain
Full character'd with lasting memory,
Which shall above that idle rank remain
Beyond all date, even to eternity:
Or at the least, so long as brain and heart
Have faculty by nature to subsist;
Till each to razed oblivion yield his part
Of thee, thy record never can be miss'd,
That poor retention could not so much hold,
Nor need I tallies they my love to score;
Therefore to give them from me was I bold,
To trust those tables that receive thee more:
To keep an adjunct to remember thee
Were to import forgetfulness in me.

No, Time, thou shalt not boast that I do change;
Thy pyramids built up with newer might
To me are nothing novel, nothing strange;
They are but dressings of a former sight.
Our dates are brief, and therefore we admire
What thou hast lovest to us that is old,
And rather make them born to our desire
Than think that we before have heard them told.
Thy registers and thee I both defy,
Not wondering at the present nor the past,
For thy records and what we see doth lie,
Made more or less by thy continual haste.
This I do vow and this shall ever lie:
I will be true, despite thy scythe and thee.

If my dear love were but the child of state,
It might for Fortune's bastard be unfather'd,
As subject to Time's love or to thy hate.
Weeds among weeds, or flowers with flowers gather'd.
No, it was builded far from accident;
It suffers not in smiling pomp, nor falls
Under the blow of thrall'd discontent.
Wherefore to the invading time our fashion calls:
It fears not policy, that heretick,
Which works on leases of short-number'd hours,
But all alone stands hugely politic,
That it nor grows with heat nor drowns with showers.
To this I witness call the fools of time,
Which die for goodness, who have lived for crime.

There's fault to me I bore the canopy,
With my extrem the outward honouring,
Or laid great bases for eternity,
Which prove more short than waste or ruining?
Have I not seen dwellers on form and favour
Lose all, and more, by paying too much rent,
For compound sweet forgery simple savour,
Pitiful thrivers, in their gazing spent?
No, let me be obsequious in thy heart.
And take thou my obligation, poor but true,
Which is not mixt with seconds, knows no art,
But mutual render, only me for thee.
Hence, thou born'ed informer! a true soul
When most impeach'd stands least in thy control.

O thou, my lovely boy, who in thy power
Dost hold Time's fickle glass, his sickle, hour;
Who hast by waning grown, and therein show'st
Thy lovers withering as thy sweet self grow'st;
If Nature, sovereign mistress over wack,
As thou goest onwards, still will pluck thee back,
She keeps thee to this purpose, that her skill
May time disgrace and wretched minutes kill.
Yet fear her, O thou minion of her pleasure!
She may detain, but not still keep, her treasure:
Her audit, though delay'd, answer'd must be,
And her quietus is to render thee.

In the old age black was not count'ed fair,
Or if it were, it bore not beauty's name;
But now is black beauty's successive heir,
And beauty slander'd with a bastard shame:
For since each hand hath put on nature's power,
Fairing the soul with art's false borrow'd face,
Sweet beauty hath no name, no holy bower,
But is profan'd, if not lives in disgrace.
Therefore my mistress' brows are raven black,
Her eyes so suited, and they mourners seem
At such a moment, not born fair, not beauty lack,
Slandering creation with a false esteem:
Yet so they mourn, becoming of their woe,
That every tongue says beauty should look so.

How oft, when thou, my music, music play'st,
Upon that blessed wood whose motion sounds
With thy sweet fingers, when thou gently sway'st
The wiry concord that mine ear confounds,
Do I envy those jacks that nimble leap
To kiss the tender inward of thy hand,
Whilst my poor lips, which should that harvest reap,
At the wood's boldness by thy blushing stand!
To be so tickled, they would change their state
And situation with those dancing chips,
Over whom thy fingers walk with gentle gait,
Making dead wood more blest than living lips.
Since saucy jacks so happy are in this,
Giveth them thy fingers, me thy lips to kiss.

The expense of spirit in a waste of shame
Is lust in action; and till action, lust
Is perjured, murderous, bloody, full of blame,
Savage, extreme, rude, cruel, not to trust,
Enjoy'd no sooner but despised straight,
Past reason hunted, and no sooner had
Past reason hat'd, as a swallow'd bait
On purpose laid to make the taker mad;
Madd in pursuit and in possession so;
Had, having, and in quest to have, extreme;
A bliss in proof, and proved, a very woe;
Before, a joy proposed; behind, a dream; [well
All this the world well knows; yet none knows
To shun the heaven that leads men to this hell.

My mistress' eyes are nothing like the sun;
Coral is far more red than her lips' red;
If snow be white, why then her breasts are dun;
If hairs be wires, black wires grow on her head.
I have seen roses damask'd, red and white,
But no such roses see I in her cheeks;
And in some perfumes is there more delight
Than in the breath that from my mistress reeks.
I love to hear her speak, yet well I know
That music hath a far more pleasing sound;
SONNETS.

I grant I never saw a goddess go;
My mistress, when she walks, treads on the ground:
And yet, by heaven, I think my love as rare
As any she belied with false compare.

CXXXI.
Thou art as tyrannous, so as thou art,
As those whose beauties proudly make them cruel;
For well thou know'st to my dear doating heart
Thou art the fairest and most precious jewel.
Yet, in good faith, some say that thee behold
Thy face keels not, yet power to be his love groin:
To say they err I dare not be so bold,
Although I swear it to myself alone.
And, to be sure that is not false I swear,
A thousand groans, but thinking on thy face,
One on another's neck, do witness bear
Thy black is fairest in my judgment's place,
In nothing art thou black save in thy deeds,
And thence this slander, as I think, proceeds.

CXXXII.
Thine eyes I love, and they, as pitying me,
Knowing thy heart tormentes me with disdain,
Have put on black and loving mourners be,
Looking with pretty ruth upon my pain.
And truly not the morning sun of heaven
Better becomes the grey checks of the east,
Nor that full star that ushers in the even
Doth half that glory to the sober west,
As those two mourning eyes become thy face:
O, let it then as well beseech thy heart
To mourn for me, since mourning doth thee grace,
And suit thy pity like in every part.
Then will I swear beauty herself is black
And all they foil that thy complexion lack.

CXXXIII.
Beshrew that heart which makes that heart to groan
For that deep wound it gives my friend and me!
Is 't not enough to torture me alone,
But slave to slavery my sweet'st friend must be?
Me from myself thy cruel eye hath taken,
And my next self thou hast harder engross'd:
Of him, myself, and thee, I am forsaken;
A torment thrice threefold thus to be cross'd.
Prison my heart in thy steel bosom's ward,
But then my friend's heart let my poor heart bail;
Whereat the world will laugh, and I shall fail;
Thou canst not then use rigour in my gird;
And yet thou wilt; for I, being pent in thee,
Perforce am thine, and all that is in me.

CXXXIV.
So, now I have confess'd that he is thine,
And I myself am mortgaged to thy will,
Myself I'll forfeit, so that other mine
Thou wilt restore, to be my comfort still:
But thou wilt not, nor he will not be free,
For thou art covetous and he is kind:
He learned but surely-like to write for me
Under that bond that him as fast doth bind.
The statute of thy beauty thou wilt take,
Thou usurer, that put'st forth all to use,
And sue a friend came debtor for my sake;
So him I lose through my unkind abuse.
Him I love best; thou hast both him and me:
He pays the whole, and yet am I not free.

CXXXV.
Whoever hath her wish, thou hast thy 'Will,'
And 'Will' to boot, and 'Will' in overplus;
More than enough am I that very thee still,
To thy sweet will making addition thus:
Wilt thou, whose will is large and spacious,
Not once vouchsafe to hide my will in thine?
SONNETS.

Lest sorrow lend me words and words express
The manner of my pity-wanting pain.
If I might teach thee wit, better it were,
Though not to love, yet, love, to tell me so;
As lesty sick men; when their deaths be near,
No nurse their health from physicians know;
For if I should despair, I should grow mad.
And in my madness might speak ill of thee:
Now this ill-wrestling world is grown so bad,
Mad slanderers by mad ears believed be.
That I may not be so, nor thou belied,
Bear thine eyes straight, though thy proud heart go wide.

CXL.
In faith, I do not love thee with mine eyes,
For they in thee a thousand errors note;
But 'tis my heart that loves what they despise,
Who in despite of view is pleased to date;
Nor are mine ears with thy tongue's tyme delight;
Nor tender feeling, to base touches prone,
Nor taste, nor smell, desire to be invited
To any sensual feast with thee alone:
But my five wits nor my five senses can
Dissimile one foolish error from serving thee,
Who leaves unwav'd the likeness of a man,
The proud heart's slave and vassal wretch to be:
Only my plague thus far I count my gain,
That she that makes me sin awards me pain.

CXLII.
Love is my sin and thine virtue hate,
Hate of my sin, grounded on sinful loving:
0, but with mine compare thou thine own state,
And thou shalt find it merits not reproofing;
Or, if it do, not from those lips of thine,
That have profaned their sacred ornaments
And seal'd false bonds of love as oft as mine,
Robb'd others' beds' revenues of their rents.
Be it lawful I love thee, as thou lovest those Whom thine eyes woo as mine importune thee:
Root pity in thy heart, that when it grows
Thy pity may deserve to pitied be.
If thou dost seek to have what thou dost hide,
By self-example mayst thou be denied!

CXLIII.
Lo! as a careful housewife runs to catch
One of her feather'd creatures broke away,
Sets down her babe and makes all swift dispatch
In pursuit of the thing she would have stay,
Whilst her neglected child holds her in chase,
Cries to catch her whose busy care is bent
To follow that which flies before her face,
Not prizing her poor infant's discontent;
So run'st thou after that which flies from thee,
Whilst I thy babe chase thee afar behind;
But if thou catch thy hope, turn back to me,
And play the mother's part, kiss me, be kind:
So will I pray that thou mayst have thy 'Will,'
It thou turn back, and my loud crying still.

CXLIV.
Two loves I have of comfort and despair,
Which like two spirits do suggest me still:
The better angel is a man right fair,
The worser spirit a woman colour'd ill,
To win me soon to hell, my female evil
Tempteth my better angel from my side,
And would corrupt my saint to be a devil,
Wooing his purity with her foul pride.
And whether that my angel be 'twill find
Suspect, yet not readily tell;
But being both from me, both to each friend,
I guess one angel in another's hell:
Yet this shall I never know, but live in doubt,
Till my bad angel fire my good one out.

CXLV.
Those lips that Love's own hand did make
Breathed forth the sound that said 'I hate,'
To me that languish'd for her sake;
But when she saw my face all state,
Straight in her heart did mercy come,
Chiding that tongue that ever sweet
Was used in giving gentle doom,
And taught it thus anew to greet;
'I hate,' she alter'd with an end,
That follow'd it as gentle day
Doth follow night, who like a fiend
From heaven to hell is driven away;
'I hate' from hate away she throw,
And saved my life, saying 'not you.'

CXLVI.
Poor soul, the centre of my sinful earth,
These rebel powers that thee array,
Why dost thou pine within and suffer death,
Paining thy outward and so costly gay?
Why so large cost, having so short a lease,
Dost thou upon thy fading mansion spend?
Shall we not rather the西亚 her serve,
Eat up thy charge? is this thy body's end?
Then, soul, live thou upon thy servant's loss,
And let that pine to aggravate thy store.
Buy terms divine in selling hours of dress;
Within be fed, without be rich no more.
So shalt thou feed on Death, that feeds on men;
And Death once dead, there's no more dying then.

CXLVII.
My love is as a fever, longings still
For that which longer nurseth the disease,
Feeding on that which doth preserve the ill,
The uncertain sickly appetite to please.
My reason, the physician to my love,
Angry that his prescriptions are not kept,
Hath left me, and I desperate now approve
Desire is death, which physic did except.
Full cure I am, now reason is past care,
And frantic mad with evermore unrest;
My thoughts and my discourse as madmen's are,
At random from the truth vainly express'd;
For I have sworn thee fair and thought thee bright,
Who art as black as hell, as dark as night.

CXLVIII.
O me, what eyes hath Love put in my head,
Which have no correspondence with true sight!
Or, if they have, where is my judgment left,
That censures falsely what they see aright?
If that be fair wherein my false eyes dote,
What means the world to say it is not so?
If it be not, then love doth well denote
Love's eye is not so true as all men's. No.
How can it? O, how can Love's eye be true,
That is so vex'd with watching and with tears?
No marvel then, though I mistakes my view;
The sun itself see not till heaven clears.
[blind,]
O cunning Love! with tears thou keep'st me
Lest eyes well-seeing thy foul faults should find.

CXLIX.
Cass! thou, O cruel! say I love thee not,
When I against myself with thee partake?
Do I not think on thee, when I forgot
All of myself, all tyrant, for thy sake?
Who hath thee that I do call my friend?
Or who's shown true thou that I do swear upon?
Say, if thou know'st in me, do not spend
Revenge upon myself with present moan?
What merit do I in myself respect,
That is so proud thy service to despise,
When all my best doth worship thy defect,
Commanded by the motion of thine eyes?
But, love, hate on, for now I know thy mind;
Those that can see thou lovest, and I am blind.

CL.
O, from what power hast thou this powerful might
With insufficiency my heart to sway?
To make me give the lie to my true sight,
And swear that brightness doth not grace the day?
Whence hast thou this becoming of things ill,
That in the very refuse of thy deeds
There is such strength and warrantise of skill
That, in my mind, thy worst all best exceeds?
Who taught thee how to make me love thee more
The more I hear and see just cause of hate?
O, though I love what others do abhor.
With others thou shouldst not abhor my state:
It thy unworthiness raised love in me,
More worthy I to be beloved of thee.

CL.
Love is too young to know what conscience is;
Yet who knows not conscience is born of love?
Then, gentle cheater, urge not my amiss,
Last guilty of my faults thy sweet self prove;
For, thou betraying me, I do betray
My tender part to my gross body's treason;
My soul doth tell my body that he may
Triumph in love: flesh stays no farther reason;
But, rising at thy name, doth point out thee
As his triumphant prize. Proud of this pride,
He is contented thy poor drudge to be,
To stand in thy affairs, full by thy side.
No want of conscience hold it that I call
Her 'love' for whose dear love I rise and fall.

CLII.
In loving thee thou know'st I am forsworn,
But thou art twice forsworn, to me love swearing,
In act thy bed-vow broke and new faith torn
In vowing new hate after new love bearing;
But why of two oaths' breach do I accuse thee,
When I break twenty? I am perjuried most;
For all my vows are oaths but to misuse thee
And all my honest faith in thee is lost,
For I have sworn deep oaths of thy deep kindness,
Oaths of thy love, thy truth, thy constancy.
And, to enlighten thee, gave eyes to blindness,
Or made them swear against the thing they see;
For I have sworn thee fair; more perjuried I,
To swear against the truth so foul a lie!

CLIII.
Cupid laid by his brand, and fell asleep:
A maid of Diana's this advantage found,
And his love-kindling fire did quickly steep
In a cold valley-fountain of that ground;
Which borrow'd from this holy fire of Love
A dateless lively heat, still to endure,
And grew a seething bath, which yet men prove Against strange maladies a sovereign cure.
But at my mistress' eye love's brand new-fired,
The boy for trial needs would touch my breast;
I, sick withal, the help of bath desired,
And thither hied, a sad distemper'd guest,
But found no cure: the bath for my help lies
Where Cupid got new fire—my mistress' eyes.

CLIV.
The little Love-god lying once asleep
Laid by his side his heart-inflaming brand,
Whilst many nymphs that vow'd chaste life to keep
Came tripping by; but in her maiden hand
The fairest votary took up that fire
Which many legions of true hearts had warm'd;
And so the general of hot desire
Was sleeping by a virgin hand disarm'd.
This brand she quenched in a cool well by.
Which from Love's fire took heat perpetual,
Growing a bath and healthful remedy
For men diseased: but I, my mistress' thrall,
Came there for cure, and this by that I prove,
Love's fire heats water, water cools not love.

A LOVER'S COMPLAINT.

From off a hill whose concave womb re-worded
A plentiful story from a sistering vale,
My spirits to attend this double voice accorded,
And down I laid to list the sat-tuned tale;
Ere long espied a fickle maid full pale,
Tearing of papers, breaking rings a-twain,
Storming her world with sorrow's wind and rain.

Upon her head a platted hive of straw,
Which fortified her visage from the sun,
Whereon the thought might think sometime it saw
The caress of a beauty spent and done:
Time had not scythed all that youth began,
Nor youth all quit; but, spite of heaven's fall rage,
Some beauty peep'd through lattice of sord's age.

Oft she heave her napkin to her eye,
Which on it had conceited characters,
Laundering the silken figures in the brine
That season'd woe had pelleted in tears,
And often reading what contents it bears;
As often shrieking undistinguish'd woe,
In clamours of all size, both high and low,
Sometimes her levell'd eyes their carriage ride,
As they did battery to the spheres intend;
Sometimes diverted their poor balls are tied
To the orb'd earth; sometimes they do extend
Their view right on; anon their gaze mend
To every place at once, and, nowhere fix'd,
The mind and sight distracted commix'd.

Her hair, nor loose nor tied in formal plat,
Proclaim'd in her a careless hand of pride
For some, mituck'd, descended her sheaved hat,
Hanging her pale and pined cheek beside;
Some in her threads fillet still did bide,
And true to bondage would not break from thence,
Though slackly braided in loose negligence.

A thousand favours from a maund she drew
Of amber, crystal, and of beaded jet,
Which one by one she in a river threw,
Upon whose weeping margent she was set;
Like usury, applying wet to wet,
Or monarch's hands that let not bounty fall
Where want cries some, but where excess begs all.
A LOVER'S COMPLAINT.
Of folded schedules had she many a one,
Which she perused, sish'd, tore, and gave the flood;
Ciack'd many a ring of posied gold and bone,
Bidding them find tlieir sepulchres in mud;
Found vet moe letters sadly penn'd in blood,

Whether the horse by him became his deed.
Or he his manage by the well-doing steed.

Witli sleided silk feat and affectedly
Enswathed,andseard to curious secrecy.

A LOVER’S COMPLAINT.

If have of my suffering youth some feeling pity,
And be not of my holy vows afraid:
That’s to ye sworn to none was ever said;
For feasts of love I have been call’d unto,
Till now did ne’er invite, nor never woo.

All my offences that abroad you see
Are errors of the blood, none of the mind;
Love made them not: with acture they may be,
Where neither party is nor true nor kind;
They sought their shame that their shame did find;
And so much less of shame in me remains,
By how much of me their reproach contains.

Among the many that mine eyes have seen,
Not one whose flame my heart so much as warm’d,
Or my affection put to the smallest teen,
Or any of my pleasures ever charm’d:
Harm have I done to them, but ne’er was harm’d;
Kept hearts in liveries, but mine own was free,
And reign’d, commanding in his monarchy.

Look here, what tributes wounded fancies sent
Of paled pearls and rubies red as blood:
Figuring that they their passions likewise lent me
Of grief and blushes, aptly understood
In bloodless white and the enrison’d mood;
Effects of terror and dear modesty,
Encamp’d in hearts, but fighting outwardly.

And, lo, behold these talents of their hair,
With twisted metal amorously inpleach’d,
I have received from many a several fair,
Their kind acceptance weepingly beseech’d,
With the annexions of fair gems enrich’d,
And deep-brain’d sonnets that did amply
Each stone’s dear nature, worth, and quality.

The diamond,—why, ’t was beautiful and hard,
Where to his invised properties did tend;
The deep-green emerald, in whose fresh regard
Weak sights their sickly radiance do amend;
The heaven-hued sapphire and the opal blend
With objecks manifold: each several stone,
With wit well blazon’d, smiled or made some maon.

Lo, all these trophies of affections hot,
Of pensived and subdued desires the tender,
Nature hath charged me that I heard them not,
But yield them up where I myself must render,
That is, to you, my origin and ender;
For these, of force, must your obligations be,
Since they their altar, you enpatron me.

O, then, advance of yours that phraseless hand,
Whose white weighs down the airy scale of praise;
Take all these similes to your own command,
Hallow’d with sighs that burning lungs did raise;
What me your minister, for you obeys;
Works under you; and to your audit comes
Their distract parcels in compound sums.

Lo, this device was sent me from a nun,
Or sister sanctified, of holiest note;
Which late her noble suit in court did shun,
Whose rarest havings made the blossoms dote;
For she was sought by spirits of richest coat,
But kept cold distance, and did thence remove,
To spend her living in eternal love.

But, O my sweet, what labour is’t to leave
The thing we have not, mastering what not strives,
Playing the place which did no form receive,
Playing patient sports in unconstrained gyves?;
She that her fame so to herself contrives,
The scars of battle ‘scapeth by the flight,
And makes her absence valiant, not her might.

O, pardon me, in that my boast is true:
The accident which brought me to her eye
Upon the moment did her force subdue,
And now she would the caged cloister fly:
Religious love put forth Reck Eche’s eye:
Not to be tempted, would she be immured,
And now, to tempt, all liberty procured.

How mighty then you are, O, hear me tell!
The broken bosoms that to me belong
Have emptied all their fountains in my well,
And mine I pour your ocean all among:
I strong o’er them, and you o’er me being strong,
Must for your victory us all congest,
As compound love to physic your cold breast.

My parts had power to charm a sacred nun,
Who, disciplined, ay, dieted in grace,
Believed her eyes when they to assail began,
All vows and consecrations giving place:
O most potential love! vow, bond, nor space,
In thee hath neither sting, knot, nor confine,
For thou art all, and all things else are thine.

When thou impressest, what are precepts worth
Of stale example? When thou wilt inflame
How coldly those impediments stand forth
Of wealth, of filial fear, law, kindred, fame!
Love’s arrows are peace, ’gainst rule, ’gainst sense,
’gainst shame, and
Sweetens, in the suffering pangs it bears,
The ales of all forces, shocks, and fears.

Now all these hearts that do on mine depend,
Feeling it break, with bleeding gums they pine;
And supplicant their signs to you extend,
To leave the battery that you make ’gainst mine,
Lending soft audience to my sweet design,
And credent soul to that strong-bonded oath
That shall prefer and undertake my troth.

This said, his watery eyes he did dismount,
Whose sights till then were levell’d on my face;
Each check a river running from a fount
With brinish current downward flow’d apace:
O, how the channel to the stream gave grace!
Who glazed with crystal gate the glowing roses
That flame through water which their hue encloses.

O father, what a hell of witchcraft lies
In the small orb of one particular tear!
But with the inundation of the eyes
What rocky heart to water will not wear?
What breast so cold that is not warmed here?
O cleft effect! cold modesty, hot wrath,
Both fire from hence and chill extinguish hath.

For, lo, his passion, but an art of craft,
Even thence resolved my reason into fears;
There my white stole of chastity I daft’d,
Shook off my sober guards and civil fears;
Appeared to him, as he to me appears,
All melting; though our drops this difference bore,
His poison’d me, and mine did him restore.

In him a plenteous of subtle matter,
Applied to cautels, all strange forms receives,
Of burning blushes, or of weeping water,
Or swooning paleness; and he takes and leaves,
In either’s aptness, as it best deceives,
To blush at speeches rank, to weep at woes,
Or to turn white and swoon at tragic shows:
That not a heart which in his level came
Could ‘scape the hail of his all-hurtling aim,

805
THE PASSIONATE PILGRIM.

I.

When my love swears that she is made of truth,
I do believe her, though I know she lies,
That she might think me some untried youth,
Unskilful in the world's false forgeries.

Thus vainly thinking that she thinks me young,
Although I know my years best past the best,
I smiling credit her false-speaking tongue,
Outfacing faults in love's ill rest.

But wherefore says my love that she is young?
And wheretoe say not I that I am old?
O, love's best habit is a soothing tongue,
And age, in love, loves not to have years told.

Therefore I'll lie with love, and love with me,
Since that our faults in love thus another's be.

II.

Two loves I have, of comfort and despair,
That like two spirits do suggest me still;
My better angel is a man right fair,
My worser spirit a woman colour'd ill.

To win me soon to hell, my female evil
Tempteth my better angel from my side,
And would corrupt my saint to be a devil,
Wooing his purity with her fair pride.

And whether that my angel be turn'd fiend,
Suspict I may, yet not directly tell:
For being both to me, both to each friend,
I guess one angel in another's hell:
The truth I shall not know, but live in doubt,
Till my bad angel fire my good one out.

III.

Did not the heavenly rhetoric of thine eye,
'Gainst whom the world could not hold argument,
Persuade my heart to this false perjury?
Vows for thee broke deserve not punishment.

A woman I forswore; but I will prove,
Thou being a goddess, I forswore not thee;
My vow was earthly, thou a heavenly love;
Thy grace being gain'd, I cure all disgrace in me.

My vow was breath, and breath a vapour is;
Then, thou fair sun, that on this earth doth shine,
Exhale this vapour vow; in thee it is:
If broken, then it is no fault of mine.

If by me broke, what folly is not so wise
To break an oath to win a paradise?

IV.

Sweet Cytherea, sitting by a brook
With young Adonis, lovely, fresh, and green,
Did court the lad with many a lovely look,
Such looks as none could look but beauty's queen.

She told him stories to delight his ear;
She show'd him favours to allure his eye;
To win his heart, she touch'd him here and there,—
Touches so soft still conquer chastity.

But whether unripe years did want conceit,
Or he refused to take her figured proffer,
The tender nibbler would not touch the bait,
But smile and jest at every gentle offer:

Then fell she on her back, fair queen, and toward:
He rose and ran away; ah, fool too froward!

If love make me forsworn, how shall I swear to love?
O never faith could hold, if not to beauty vow'd;
Though to myself forsworn, to thee I'll constant prove;
Those thoughts, to me like oaks, to thee like osiers bow'd.

Study his bias leaves, and makes his book thine eyes,
Where all those pleasures live that art can comprehend.

If knowledge be the mark, to know thee shall suffice;
Well learned is that tongue that well can thee commend.

All ignorant that soul that sees thee without wonder,
Which to me some praise, that I thy parts admire:
Thine eye Jove's lightning seems, thy voice his dreadful thunder,
Which, not to anger bent, is music and sweet fire.

Celestial as thou art, O do not love that wrong,
To sing heaven's praise with such an earthly tongue.

V.

Scarce had the sun dried up the dewy morn,
And scarce the herd gone to the hedge for shade,
When Cytherea, all in love forform,
A longing tanniance for Adonis made.

Under an osier growing by a brook,
A brook where Adon used to cool his spleen:
Hot was the day; she hotter that did look
For his approach, that often there had been.

Anon he comes, and throws his mantle by,
And stood stark naked on the brook's green brim:
The sun look'd on the world with glorious eye,
Yet not so wisely as this queen on him.

He, spying her, bounced in, whereas he stood:
'O Jove,' quoth she, 'why was not I a flood?'

VI.

Fair is my love, but not so fair as fickle;
Mild as a dove, but neither true nor trusty;
THE PASSIONATE PILGRIM.

Brighter than glass, and yet, as glass is, brittle; Softer than wax, and yet, as iron, rust; A lily pale, with damask dye to grace her, None fairer, nor none fairer to deface her. Her lips to mine how often she join'd, Between each kiss her oaths of true love swearing! How many tales to please me hath she coin'd, Dreaming my love, the loss thereof still fearing! Yet in the midst of all her pure protestings, Her faith, her oaths, her tears, and all were jestings.

She burn'd with love, as straw with fire flameth; She burn'd out love, as soon as straw out-burneth; She framed the love, and yet she fôld'd the framing; She bade love last, and yet she fell a-turning. Was this a lover, or a lecher whether? Bad in the best, though excellent in neither.

If music and sweet poetry agree, As they must needs, the sister and the brother, Then must the love be great 'twixt thee and me, Because thou lovest the one, and I the other. Dowland to thee is dear, whose heavenly touch Upon the lute doth ravish human sense! Speaker to me, whose deep conceit is such, As, passing all conceit, needs no defence. Thou lovest to hear the sweet melodious sound That Phoebus' lute, the queen of music, makes; And I in deep delight am chiefly drown'd When as himself to singing he betakes. One god is god of both, as poets feign; One knight loves both, and both in thee remain.

Fair was the morn when the fair queen of love,* * * Paler for sorrow than her milk-white hood; For Adon's sake, a younger proud and wild; Her hand she takes upon a steep-up hill: Anon Adonis comes with horn and hounds; She, silly queen, with more than love's good will, Forbade the boy he should not pass those grounds: 'Once,' quoth she; 'did I see a fair sweet youth Here in these brakes deep-wounded with a boar, Deep in the thigh, a spectacle of ruth! See, in my thigh,' quoth she, 'here was the sore.' She show'd hers; he saw more wounds than one, And blushing fled, and left her all alone.

Sweet rose, fair flower, untimely pluck'd, soon vaded, Pluck'd in the bud, and vaded in the spring! Bright orient pearl, alack, too timely shadèd! Fair creature, kill'd too soon by death's sharp sting! Like a green plum that hangs upon a tree, And falls, through wind, before the fall should be, I weep for thee, and yet no cause I have; For why thou left'st me nothing in thy will: And yet thou left'st me more than I did crave; For why I craved nothing of thee still: O yes, dear friend, I pardon crave of thee, Thy discontent thou didst bequeath to me.

VENUS, with young Adonis sitting by her Under a myrtle shade, began to woo him: She told the youthful how god Mars did try her, And as he fell to her, so fell she to him. 'Even thus,' quoth she, 'the warlike god embraced me.' And then she clipp'd Adonis in her arms;

'Even thus,' quoth she, 'the warlike god unclaspèd me,' As if the boy should use like loving charms; 'Even thus,' quoth she, 'he seized on my lips;' And with her lips on his did act the seizure; And as she fetched breath, away he skips, And would not take her meaning nor her pleasure. Ah, that I had my lady at this bay, To kiss and clip me till I run away!

XII.

Crabbed age and youth cannot live together: Youth is full of pleasure, age is full of care; Youth like summer morn, age like winter weather; Youth like summer brave, age like winter bare. Youth is full of sport, age's breath is short; Youth is nimble, age is lame;

Youth is hot and bold, age is weak and cold; Youth is wild, and age is tame, Age, I do abhor thee; youth, I do adore thee; O, my love, my love is young! Age, I do defy thee: O, sweet shepherd, hie thee, For methinks thou stay'st too long.

XIII.

Beauty is but a vain and doubtful good; A shining gloss that vadedeth suddenly; A flower that dies when first it gius to bud; A brittle glass that's broken presently; A doubtful good, a glass, a glass, a flower, Lost, vaded, broken, dead within an hour.

And as goods lost are seld or never found, As vaded glass no rubbing will refresh, As flowers dead lie wither'd on the ground, As broken glass no cement can redress, So beauty blandish'd once's for ever lost, In spite of physic, painting, pain and cost.

XIV.

Good night, good rest. Ah, neither be my share: She bade good night that kept my rest away; And daff'd me to a cabin hang'd with care, To descant on the doubts of my decay, 'Farewell,' quoth she, 'and come again to-morrow.' Fare well I could not, for I snipp'd with sorrow.

Yet at my parting sweetly did she smile, In scorn or friendship, nill I construe whether: 'T may be, she joy'd to jest at my exile. 'T may be, again to make me wander thither: 'Wander,' a word for shadows like myself, As take the pain, but cannot pluck the pelf.

XV.

Lord, how mine eyes throw gazes to the east! My heart doth charge the watch; the morning rise Both cite each moving sense from idle rest. Not daring trust the office of mine eyes, While Phollomen sits and sings, I sit and mark, And wish her lars were tuned like the lark; For she doth welcome day-light with her ditty, And drives away dark dismal-dreaming night: The night so pack'd, I post unto my pretty; Heart hath his hope, and eyes their wished sight; Sorrow chang'd to solace, solace mix'd with sorrow. For why, she sigh'd and bade me come to morrow.

Were I with her, the night would post too soon; But now are minutes added to the hour: To spite me now, each minute-tuns a moon; Yet not for me, shine sun to succour flowers! Pack night, peep day; good day, of night now borrow; Short, night, to-night, and length thyself to-morrow.

Her fancy fell a-turning,
Long was the combat doubtful that love with love
did fight,
To leave the master loveless, or kill the gallant knight:
To put in practice either, alas, it was a spite
Unto the silly damsel!
But one could not be refused; more mickle was the pain
That nothing could be used to turn them both to gain,
For of the two the trusty knight was wounded with disdain;
Alas, she could not help it!
Thus art with arms contending was victor of the day,
Which by a gift of learning did bear the mail away:
Then, jollably, the learned man hath got the lady gay;
For now my song is ended.

[XVII.]
On a day, alack the day!
Love, whose mouth was ever May,
Spield a blossom passing fair,
Playing in the wanton air:
Through the velvet leaves the wind,
All unseen, gan passage find;
That the lover, sick to death,
Wish'd himself the heaven's breath,
'Air,' quoth he, 'thy cheeks may blow;
Air, would I might triumph so!'
But, alas! my hand hath sworn
Ne'er to pluck thee from thy thorn:
Yow, alack! for youth unmeet:
Youth, so apt to pluck a sweet,
Thon for whom Jove would swear
Juno but an Ethiop were;
And deny himself for Jove,
Turning mortal for thy love.'

[XVIII.]
My flocks feed not,
My ewes breed not,
My rams speed not,
All is amiss:
Love's denying,
Faith's denying,
Heart's renying,
Causer of this.
All my merry jigs are quite forgot,
All my lady's love is lost, God wot;
Where her faith was firmly fix'd in love,
There a may is placed without remove,
One silly cross
Wrought all my loss;
'O frowning Fortune, cursed, fickle dame!
For now I see
Inconstancy
More in women than in men remain.
In black mourn I,
All tears scorn I,
Love hath forlorn me,

Living in thrall:
Heart is bleeding;
All help needing;
O cruel speeding,
Franghted with gall;
My shepherd's pipe can sound no deal;
My wether's bell rings doleful knell;
My curtail dog, that wont to have play'd,
Plays not at all, but seems afraid;
My sighs so deep
Procure to weep,
In howling wise, to see my doleful plight.
How sighs resound
Through heartless ground,
Like a thousand vanquish'd men in bloody fight!

Clear wells spring not,
Sweet birds sing not,
Green plants bring not
Forth their dye;
Hers stand weeping,
Flocks all sleeping,
Nymphs back peeping
Fearfully:
All our pleasure known to us poor swains,
All our merry meetings on the plains,
All our evening sport from us is fled,
All our love is lost, for Jove is dead.
Farewell, sweet lass,
Thy like ne'er was
For a sweet content, the cause of all my moan:
Poor Corydon
Must live alone;
Other help for him I see that there is none.

[XIX.]
When as thine eye hath chose the dame,
And staid the deer that thou shouldest strike,
Let reason rule things worthy blame,
As well as fancy partial might:
Take counsel of some wiser head,
Neither too young nor yet unwed.
And when thou commest thy tale to tell,
Smooth not thy tongue with tided talk,
Lest she some subtle practice smell,—
A cripple soon can find a halt;—
But plainly say thou lov'est her well,
And set thy person forth to sell.
What though her frowning brows be bent,
Her cloudy looks will calm ere night:
And then too late she will repent
That thus dissembl'd her delight;
And twice desire, ere it be day,
That which with scorn she put away.
What though she strive to try her strength,
And ban and brawl, and say thee nay,
Her feeble force will yield at length,
When craft hath taught her thus to say,
'Had we been so strong as men,
In faith, you had not had it then.'
And to her will frame all thy ways:
Spare not to spend, and chiefly there ere thy desert may merit praise, ringing in thy lady's ear;
the strongest castle, tower, and town,
he golden bullet beats it down.

weep always with assured trust,
I in thy suit be humble true;
cess thy lady prove unjust,
ss never thou to choose anew:
When time shall serve, be thou not slack
o proffer, though she put thee back.

The wiles and guiles that women work,
Dissembled with an outward show,
The tricks and toys that in them lurk,
The cock that treads them shall not know.
Have you not heard it said full oft,
A woman's nay doth stand for nought?

Think women still to strive with men,
To sin and never for to saint:
There is no heaven, by holy then,
When time with age doth them attain.
Were kisses all the joys in bed,
One woman would another wed.

But, soft! enough, too much, I fear;
Lest that my mistress hear my song,
She will not stick to round me 't the ear,
To teach my tongue to be so long:
Yet will she blush, here be it said,
To hear her secrets so bewray'd.

[xx.]
Live with me, and be my love,
And we will all the pleasures prove
That hills and valleys, dales and fields,
And all the craggy mountains yields.

There will we sit upon the rocks,
And see the shepherds feed their flocks,
By shallow rivers, by whose falls
Melodious birds sing madrigals.

There will I make thee a bed of roses,
With a thousand fragrant posies,
A cap of flowers, and a kirtle
Embroider'd all with leaves of myrtle.

A belt of straw and ivy buds,
With coral clasps and amber studs;
And if these pleasures may thee move,
Then live with me and be my love.

LOVE'S ANSWER.
If that the world and love were young,
And truth in every shepherd's tongue,
These pretty pleasures might me move
To live with thee and be thy love.

As it fell upon a day
In the merry mouth of May,
Sitting in a pleasant shade
Which a grove of myrtles made,
Beasts did leap, and birds did sing,
Trees did grow, and plants did spring;
Every thing did banish mien,
Save the nightingale alone:
She, poor bird, as all forlorn,
Lean'd her breast upon a thorn,
And there sung the dolefull'st ditty,
That to hear it was great pity:
'Fie, fie, fie,' now would she cry;
'Tereu, tereu,' by and by:
That to hear her so complain,
Scarcely could from tears refrain;
For her griefs, so lively shown,
Made me think upon mine own.
Ah, thought I, thou mourn'st in vain!
None takes pity on thy pain:
Seneless trees they cannot hear thee:
Ruthless beasts they will not cheer thee:
Kemp Pandion he is dead;
All thy friends are lap'd in lead;
All thy fellow birds do sing,
Careless of thy sorrowing.
Even so, poor bird, like thee,
None alive will pity me.
Whilst as fickle Fortune smiled,
Thou and I were both beguiled.
Every one that flatters thee
Is no friend in misery.
Words are easy, like the wind;
Faithful friends are hard to find:
Every man will be thy friend
Whilst thou hast wherewith to spend;
But if store of crowns be scant,
No man will supply thy want.
If that one be prodigal,
Bountiful they will him call,
And with such-like flattering
'Pity but he were a king:'
If he be addict to vice,
Quickly him they will entice;
If to women he be bent,
They have at commandement:
But if Fortune once do frown,
Then farewell his great renown;
They that fawn'd on him before
Use his company no more.
He that is thy friend indeed,
He will help thee in thy need;
If thou sorrow, he will weep;
If thou wake, he cannot sleep;
Thus of every grief in heart
He with thee doth bear a part.
These are certain signs to know
Faithful friend from flattering foe.

889
THE PHŒNIX AND THE TURTLE.

Let the bird of londest lay,
On the sole Arabian tree,
Herald sad and trumpet be,
To whose sound chaste wings obey.

But thou shrieking harbinger,
Foul precursor of the fiend,
Augur of the fever's end,
To this troop come thou not near!

From this session interdict
Every fowl of tyrant wing,
Save the eagle, feather'd king:
Keep the obsequy so strict.

Let the priest in surplice white,
That defunctive music can,
Be the death-divining swan,
Lest the requiem lack his right.

And thou treble-dated crow,
That thy sable gender makest
With the breath thou givest and takest,
'Mongst our mourners shalt thou go.

Here the anthem doth commence:
Love and constancy is dead;
Phoenix and the turtle fled
In a mutual flame from hence.

So they loved, as love in twain
Had the essence but in one;
Two distincts, division none;
Number there in love was slain.

Hearts remote, yet not asunder;
Distance, and no space was seen
'Twixt the turtle and his queen;
But in them it were a wonder.

So between them love did shine,
That the turtle saw his right
Flaming in the phoenix' sight;
Either was the other's mine.

Property was thus appall'd,
That the self was not the same;
Single nature's double name
Neither two nor one was call'd.

Reason, in itself confounded,
Saw division grow together,
To themselves yet either neither,
Simple were so well compounded,

That it cried, How true a twain
Seemeth this concordant one!
Love hath reason, reason none,
If what parts can so remain.

Whereupon it made this threnos
To the phoenix and the dove,
Co-supremes and stars of love,
As chorus to their tragic scene.

THRENO"S.

Beauty, truth, and rarity,
Grace in all simplicity,
Here enclosed in cinders lie.

Death is now the phoenix' nest;
And the turtle's loyal breast
To eternity doth rest,

Leaving no posterity:
'Tw was not their infirmity,
It was married chastity.

Truth may seem, but cannot be;
Beauty brag, but 'tis not she;
Truth and beauty buried be.

To this urn let those repair
That are either true or fair;
For these dead birds sigh a prayer.
